our starting-point. The conception of place was gained when they were at rest : that of time from their motion, and points and lines and superficies, in a word extremities from the robe-like exterior which covers them. Correspondingly, then, the conception <sup>188</sup> of the intelligible world was gained from the one which our senses perceive : it is therefore a kind of gate into the former. For as those who desire to see our cities go in through gates, so all who wish to apprehend the unseen world are introduced to it by receiving the impression of the visible world. The world whose substance is discernible only by intellect apart from any sight whatever of shapes or figures, but only by means of the archetypal eternal form present in the world which was fashioned in accordance with the image beheld by him with no intervening shadow,—that world shall change its title, when all its walls and every gate has been removed and men may not catch sight of it from some outside point, but behold the unchanging beauty, as it actually is, and that sight no words can tell or express.

XXXIII. On this matter enough has been said. <sup>189</sup> There is another dream of the same type as the one we have been studying. It is the one concerning the flock whose markings varied. When he to whom it appeared has risen up <sup>a</sup> he relates it in these words : “The angel of God said unto me in sleep, ‘Jacob,’ and I said, ‘What is it?’ and he said, ‘Look up with thine eyes and see the he-goats and the rams leaping upon the sheep and the goats how they are pure white and speckled and ashy-sprinkled. For I have seen all that Laban doeth unto thee. I am God that appeared unto thee in God’s Place, where thou anointedst unto Me a pillar and vowedst unto Me

PHILO

οὖν ἀνάστηθι καὶ ἔξελθε ἐκ τῆς γῆς ταύτης καὶ ἀπελθε εἰς τὴν γῆν τῆς γενέσεώς σου, καὶ ἔσομαι 190 μετὰ σοῦ.” ὁρᾷς ὅτι θεοπέμπτους ὀνειρούς ἀνα-γράφει ὁ θεῖος λόγος οὐ μόνον τοὺς κατὰ τὸ πρεσβύτατον τῶν αἰτίων προφαινομένους, ἀλλὰ καὶ τοὺς διὰ τῶν ὑποφητῶν αὐτοῦ καὶ ὀπαδῶν ἀγγέλων, οἱ θείας καὶ εὐδαίμονος μοίρας πρὸς τοῦ 191 γεννήσαντος ἠξίωονται πατρός. σκόπει μέντοι καὶ τὸ ἀκόλουθον. ὁ ἱερὸς λόγος τοῖς μὲν ὡς βασιλεὺς ἅ χρῆ πράττειν ἐξ ἐπιτάγματος παραγ-γέλλει, τοῖς δὲ ὡς γνωρίμοις διδάσκαλος τὰ πρὸς ὠφέλειαν ὑφηγεῖται, τοῖς δὲ ὡς σύμβουλος γνώμας εἰσηγούμενος τὰς ἀρίστας τὸ συμφέρον ἐξ ἑαυτῶν οὐκ εἰδότας μεγάλα ὠφελεί, τοῖς δὲ ὡς φίλος ἐπιεικῶς καὶ μετὰ πειθοῦς πολλὰ καὶ τῶν ἀρρήτων ἀναφέρει, ὧν οὐδένα τῶν ἀτελέστων ἐπακοῦσαι 192 [650] θέμις. ἔστι | δ' ὅτε καὶ πυνθάνεται τινων, ὥσπερ τοῦ Ἀδάμ. “ πού εἶ; ” πρὸς ὃ ἀποκρίναιτ' ἄν τις οἰκείως “ οὐδαμοῦ, ” τῷ τάνθρώπεια πάντα ἐν ὁμοίῳ μὴ μένειν, ἀλλὰ κινεῖσθαι καὶ ψυχῇ καὶ σώματι καὶ τοῖς ἐκτός. ἀνίδρυτοι μὲν γὰρ οἱ λογισμοί, φαντασίας ἀπὸ τῶν αὐτῶν πραγμάτων οὐχὶ τὰς αὐτὰς ἀλλ' ἐναντίας ἔχοντες, ἀνίδρυτον δὲ καὶ τὸ σῶμα, ὡς μηνύουσιν αἱ ἐκ βρέφους ἄχρι γήρωσ τῶν ἡλικιῶν ἀπασῶν τροπαί, ἀνίδρυτα δὲ καὶ τὰ ἐκτός ἐπηωρημένα φορᾶ τύχης αἰεὶ σαλευ-

<sup>a</sup> Cf. Leg. All. iii. 53 for a somewhat different view.

ON DREAMS, I. 189-192

a vow. Now therefore arise and go forth out of this land and depart into the land of thy nativity, and I will be with thee' ” (Gen. xxxi. 11-13). You see that 190 the Divine word proclaims as dreams sent from God not only those which appear before the mind under the direct action of the Highest of Causes, but those also which are revealed through the agency of His interpreters and attendant messengers who have been held meet to receive from the Father to Whom they owe their being a divine and happy portion.

Observe also what follows. The sacred 191 word deals with some as a king, enjoining on them authoritatively what they are to do, with some as a teacher indicating to pupils what will be for their good, with some as a counsellor suggesting the best decisions, and greatly benefiting them since of themselves they do not know the advantageous course to take. Towards others it acts as a friend with winning condescension imparting to them even many secret truths which are not allowed to reach the ears of the uninitiated. Sometimes it addresses an inquiry to 192 this or that one, as it does to Adam, asking “Where art thou?” (Gen. iii. 9), an inquiry to which one might with fitness make the reply “Nowhere,”<sup>a</sup> seeing that nothing pertaining to man remains as it is, but all things are in motion, and this is true of soul, and of body, and of things external. For instability characterizes our reasonings, receiving as they do from the same objects not the same but contrary impressions. It characterizes also our body, as is shewn by the changes that occur in every period of life from infancy to old age. It characterizes too matters affecting us from without, tossed about as they are on the current of ever restless chance.

PHILO

- 193 ούσης. XXXIV. ἐπειδὴν μέντοι πρὸς τὸ τῶν φίλων ἔλθῃ συνέδριον, οὐ πρότερον ἄρχεται λέγειν ἢ ἕκαστον αὐτῶν ἀνακαλέσαι καὶ ὀνομαστί προσειπεῖν, ἵνα τὰ ὦτα ἀνορθιάσαντες, ἡσυχία καὶ προσοχῇ χρώμενοι, τῶν θεσμιωδουμένων εἰς ἄληστον μνήμην ἀκούωσιν· ἐπεὶ καὶ ἐτέρωθι λέγεται·
- 194 “ σιώπα καὶ ἄκουε.” τοῦτον τὸν τρόπον ἐπὶ μὲν τοῦ βάτου Μωϋσῆς ἀνακαλεῖται—“ ὡς γὰρ εἶδε ” φησὶν “ ὅτι προσάγει ἰδεῖν, ἐκάλεσεν αὐτὸν κύριος ἐκ τοῦ βάτου λέγων· Μωυσῆ, Μωυσῆ. ὁ δὲ εἶπε· τί ἐστίν; ”
- Ἄβραάμ δὲ ἐπὶ τῆς τοῦ ἀγαπητοῦ καὶ μόνου παιδὸς ὀλοκαυτώσεως, ἥνικα τε ἱερουργεῖν ἤρχετο καὶ ὁπότε δούς ἀπόπειραν εὐσεβείας ἐξ ἀνθρώπων ἀφανίσαι τὸ αὐτομαθὲς γένος, ἐπί-
- 195 κλησιν Ἰσαάκ, ἐκωλύθη· ἀρχομένου μὲν γὰρ φησιν, ὅτι “ ὁ θεὸς ἐπέιραζε τὸν Ἄβραάμ καὶ εἶπε πρὸς αὐτόν· Ἄβραάμ, Ἄβραάμ. ὁ δὲ εἶπεν· ἰδοὺ ἐγώ. καὶ εἶπε· λάβε τὸν υἱόν σου τὸν ἀγαπητόν, ὃν ἠγάπησας, τὸν Ἰσαάκ, καὶ ἀνένεγκε, ” ἤδη δὲ τὸ ἱερεῖον ἐπὶ τὸν βωμὸν ἀνενηνοχότος, τότε “ ἐκάλεσεν αὐτὸν ἄγγελος κυρίου ἐκ τοῦ οὐρανοῦ λέγων· Ἄβραάμ, Ἄβραάμ. ὁ δὲ εἶπεν· ἰδοὺ ἐγώ. καὶ εἶπε· μὴ ἐπιβάλης τὴν χεῖρά σου ἐπὶ τὸ παιδάριον, μηδὲ ποιήσης αὐτῷ μηδέν.”
- 196 Εἰς δὲ δὴ τοῦ φιλικοῦ θιάσου καὶ ὁ ἀσκητῆς ὢν εἰκότως προνομίας τῆς αὐτῆς ἀξιωθεὶς ἀνακαλεῖται· “ εἶπε γάρ μοι ” φησὶν “ ὁ ἄγγελος τοῦ θεοῦ καθ’

<sup>a</sup> Or “it,” i.e. the Sacred Word.

<sup>b</sup> Lit. “Council.” Though God deals with His friends separately, they may be thought of as forming an intimately associated body. Cf. φιλικοῦ θιάσου § 196.

ON DREAMS, I. 193-196

XXXIV. When, however, God <sup>a</sup> has come 193 to the company <sup>b</sup> of His friends, He does not begin to say His say before He has addressed each such friend calling him by name, in order that they may prick up their ears, and with stillness and attention so listen to the sacred precepts as to remember them for ever ; for it is also said in another place, “ Keep silence, and hearken ” (Deut. xxvii. 9). It is on this wise that 194 Moses is addressed at the Bush, for we read “ When He saw that he drew nigh to look, the Lord called him from out of the bush saying, ‘ Moses, Moses.’ And he said, ‘ What is it ? ’ ” (Ex. iii. 4). And Abraham, at the offering up of his beloved and only son as a burnt offering, is so addressed, both when he was beginning <sup>c</sup> to offer the sacrifice, and when, after giving proof of his piety, he was prevented from causing to disappear from among men the nature which learns untaught, called Isaac. For when he 195 was at the beginning we are told “ God did prove Abraham, and said unto him, ‘ Abraham, Abraham ’ ; and he said ‘ Here am I.’ And He said, ‘ Take thy beloved son, whom thou lovedst, even Isaac, and offer him up.’ ” And when he had now brought the victim to the altar, then “ an angel of the Lord called to him out of heaven, saying ‘ Abraham, Abraham.’ And he said, ‘ Here am I.’ And he said, ‘ Lay not thine hand upon the lad, neither do thou anything unto him ’ ” (Gen. xxii. 1, 2, 9-12).

The Practiser being one of the band of friends 196 of God is, as we might expect, accorded the same prerogative and addressed by name ; for we read “ The angel of God said to me in sleep, ‘ Jacob.’ And

<sup>c</sup> An odd use for “ at the opening of the story of the sacrifice.”

- 197 ὕπνον· Ἰακώβ. ἐγὼ δὲ εἶπα· τί ἐστίν;” ἀνακληθεὶς δὲ προσοχῇ χρῆται, τὰ φανέντα σημεῖα πειρώμενος ἀκριβοῦν, ἔστι δὲ τὰ σημεῖα τῶν λόγων οἷα θρεμμάτων· ὀχεῖαί τε καὶ γενέσεις· “ἀναβλέψας” γὰρ φησι “τοῖς ὀφθαλμοῖς εἶδε τοὺς τράγους καὶ τοὺς κριοὺς ἀναβαίνοντας ἐπὶ τὰ
- 198 πρόβατα καὶ τὰς αἰγας.” αἰπολίου μὲν δὴ τράγος, ποιμνῆς δὲ κριὸς ἡγεμῶν ἐστίν· τὰ δὲ ζῶα ταῦτα δεῦν λόγων σύμβολα τελείων, ὧν ὁ μὲν ἕτερος καθαίρει καὶ κενοῖ ψυχὴν ἀμαρτημάτων, ὁ δὲ ἕτερος τρέφει καὶ πλήρη κατορθωμάτων ἐργάζεται. τοιοῦτοι μὲν οἱ ἡγεμόνες ἐν ἡμῖν ἀγελάρχαι λόγοι· αἱ δὲ ἀγέλαι προβάτοις καὶ αἰξὶ φερωνύμως διατεθεῖσαι ἄπτουσι καὶ προβαίνουσι μετὰ σπουδῆς
- 199 πρὸς δικαιοσύνην. ἀναβλέψας | οὖν τὸ τέως με-[651] μυκὸς ὄμμα τῆς διανοίας εἶδε τοὺς ἀναλογούντας τράγοις καὶ κριοῖς τελείους λόγους ἡκονημένους πρὸς τε μείωσιν ἀδικημάτων καὶ ὧν χρηὶ πράττειν συναύξησιν, πῶς ἐπὶ τὰ πρόβατα καὶ τὰς αἰγας, τὰς ἔτι νέας καὶ ἀπαλὰς ψυχὰς ἄρτι ἡβώσας καὶ ἄνθει τῷ τῆς ἀκμῆς ὠραῖζομένας, ἀναβαίνουσιν οὐκ ἄλογον ἡδονὴν διώκοντες, ἀλλ’ ἀοράτῳ σπορᾷ
- 200 φρονήσεως χρώμενοι δογμάτων. εὐπαις γὰρ ὁ γάμος οὗτος οὐ σώματα συμπλέκων, ἀλλ’ εὐφύεσι ψυχαῖς τελείας ἀρετὰς ἀρμοζόμενος. ἐπιβαίνετε οὖν οἱ σοφίας ὀρθοὶ λόγοι πάντες, ὀχεύετε, σπείρετε, καὶ ἦν ἂν ἴδητε ψυχὴν βαθεῖαν, εὐγειον, παρθένον, μὴ παρέλθητε, καλέσαντες δ’ εἰς τὴν ὀμιλίαν καὶ συνουσίαν ἑαυτῶν τελειώσατε καὶ ἐγκύμονα ἀπερ-

<sup>a</sup> i.e. πρόβατον is derived from προβαίνω, αἰξ from ἀίσσω.

ON DREAMS, I. 197-200

I said, 'What is it?' (Gen. xxxi. 11). And having 197 been addressed by name he pays attention, endeavouring to note precisely the signs which appeared: and the signs are the couplings and breedings of thoughts in the guise of animals; for we read: "He lifted up his eyes and saw the he-goats and the rams mounting upon the sheep and the goats" (cf. Gen. xxxi. 12).
A he-goat is leader of a herd of goats, a ram of a flock 198 of sheep; and these animals are figures of two perfect ways of thinking, of which the one cleanses and purges a soul from sin, and the other nourishes it and renders it full of high achievements. Such are the leading thoughts at the head of the herds within us; and the herds, possessed of dispositions answering to the names of sheep and goats<sup>a</sup> which represent them, dart and go forward towards righteousness with earnestness. Having therefore opened the hitherto 199 closed eye of the understanding, Jacob saw the perfect thoughts which correspond to he-goats and rams brought to the sharpest edge both for the diminishing of sins and the increase of all that we ought to do,— saw how they mount the sheep and the goats, that is to say the souls that are still young and tender, just fresh and in the very prime and flower of youth,— saw that they do so, not in the pursuit of irrational pleasure, but using the invisible seed of the doctrines of sound sense. For rich in offspring is this wedlock, 200 seeing that it does not bring one body to the embraces of another but mates well-endowed souls with perfect virtues. Mount then, all ye right thoughts and reasonings of wisdom, impregnate, impart seed, and whenever you catch sight of a soul of deep rich virgin soil, pass it not by, but inviting it to union and intercourse with yourselves, render it pregnant and so

PHILO

- γάσασθε· τέξεται γὰρ πάντα ἀστεία, γενεὰν ἄρρενα “ διαλεύκων, ποικίλων, σποδοειδῶν ραντῶν.”
- 201 XXXV. “ Ἦν δ’ ἔχει τῶν γεννημάτων τούτων ἕκαστον δύναμιν, ἐρευνητέον. διάλευκοι μὲν τοίνυν εἰσὶν οἱ τηλαυγέστατοι καὶ ἀριδηλότατοι, τοῦ “ διὰ ” πολλάκις ἐπὶ τοῦ μεγάλου τιθεμένου, ἀφ’ οὗ διάδηλον καὶ διάσημον τὸ μέγਾਲως δῆλον καὶ 202 μέγਾਲως ἐπίσημον ἔθος ὀνομάζειν ἐστί. βούλεται οὖν τῆς τὸν ἱερὸν σπόρον παραδεξαμένης ψυχῆς τὰ πρωτότοκα γεννήματα διάλευκα εἶναι, φωτὶ εὐοκίοντα οὐκ ἀμυδρῶ, φέγγει δὲ τηλαυγεστάτω, οἷα γένοιτ’ ἂν ἀφ’ ἡλιακῶν ἀκτίνων ἄσκιος ἐν αἰθρία κατὰ μεσημβρίαν αὐγή· βούλεται δὲ καὶ ποικίλα οὐ πολυμόρφου καὶ πολυτρόπου<sup>1</sup> λέπρας ἀκαθάρτου τρόπου, διὰ γνώμης ἀβεβαιότητα χρησό-μενα ἀστάτω καὶ φορουμένῳ βίῳ, ἀλλὰ γράμμασιν ἐγκεκολαμμένα, καὶ σφραγίσιν διαφόροις δοκίμοις δὲ πάσαις τετυπωμένα, ὧν αἱ ιδιότητες ἀνα-μιχθεῖσαι καὶ ἀνακραθεῖσαι μουσικὴν συμφωνίαν 203 ἐργάσσονται. τὴν γὰρ ποικιλτικὴν<sup>2</sup> τέχνην ἐνόμισαν μὲν τινες οὕτως ἡμελημένον καὶ ἀφανὲς εἶναι πρᾶγμα, ὥστε ὑφάνταις αὐτὴν ἀνέθεσαν. ἐγὼ δ’ οὐ μόνον αὐτὴν, ἀλλὰ καὶ τοῦνομα τέθηπα, καὶ μάλισθ’ ὅταν εἰς τὰ γῆς τμήματα καὶ τὰς ἐν

<sup>1</sup> MSS. πολυμόρφω (καὶ ποικίλω) καὶ πολυτρόπω. I prefer Mangey’s ποικίλα οὐ ποικίλα πολυμόρφω καὶ πολυτρόπω.

<sup>2</sup> MSS. ποικίλην.

<sup>a</sup> See note on § 209.

<sup>b</sup> The introduction of the idea of “engraved with seals” into the description of ποικίλα is based, I suspect, on Ex. xxxvi. 15 (xxxix. 8) ff., where the λογέιον described as an ἔργον ὑφαντὸν ποικίλα is said to have stones ἐγγεγραμμένας effect its consummation ; for all that it brings forth shall be goodly, male offspring " consisting of pure white, speckled and ashy-sprinkled " <sup>a</sup> (Gen. xxxi. 10).

ON DREAMS, I. 200-203

XXXV. We must search for the force and meaning <sup>201</sup> of each of these births. Thoroughly-white, then, are the brightest and most conspicuous, " thorough " being often applied to what is great, whence has come the custom of calling what is largely evident and largely notable " thoroughly-evident " and " thoroughly-notable." His wish then is that the <sup>202</sup> firstborn progeny of the soul which has received the holy seed should be " thoroughly-white," resembling not a dim light, but a brilliant shining, such as a cloudless ray coming from the sun's beams would appear in a clear atmosphere at noontide.

It is his wish that they be also variegated, not after the fashion of foul leprosy the changeful disease, which assumes so many different forms, nor destined, owing to lack of firmness of judgement, to lead an unstable agitated life, but engraved with inscriptions, and stamped with seals differing one from another but all of them genuine,<sup>b</sup> the blending and combination of their proper marks producing a harmony like that of music.

For the art of variegation <sup>203</sup> has been looked upon by some as so obscure and paltry a matter that they have relegated it to weavers. I on the contrary regard with awe not only the art itself but its very name, and most of all when I fix my eyes upon the sections of the earth, upon the eis σφραγίδας. "Genuine" I take to be suggested by Gen. xxx. 42, where the ποικίλα of the lambs are called ἐπίσημα contrasted with the ἄσημα which Laban takes. This antithesis of ἐπίσημα )( ἄσημα naturally suggests coins, and this again δόκιμα )( ἄδόκιμα. Cf. Quis Rerum 180, De Fuga 9. The thought recurs in §§ 208, 226, 255.

PHILO

οὐρανῶ σφαίρας καὶ ζώων καὶ φυτῶν διαφορὰς καὶ τὸ παμποίκιον ὕφασμα, τουτονὶ τὸν κόσμον, 204 ἀπίδω. τὸν γὰρ τοῦ πλέγματος παντὸς τούτου δημιουργὸν εὐρετὴν τῆς ποικιλικῆς ἐπινοεῖν εὐθὺς ἐπιστήμης ἀναγκάζομαι, καὶ σέβομαι μὲν τὸν εὐρόντα, τιμῶ δὲ τὴν εὐρεθεῖσαν, τὸ δ' ἔργον κατα-πέπληγμαί, καίτοι μηδὲ πολλοστὸν μέρος αὐτοῦ δυνηθεὶς ἰδεῖν, ἀπὸ δὲ τοῦ φανέντος μοι μέρους, εἰ δὴ καὶ πέφηνεν, ἀκριβῶς τὸ ὄλον εἰκάζων ἀνα-205 λογίας ἐλπίδι. θαυμάζω μέντοι καὶ | τὸν [652] σοφίας ἐραστήν, ὅτι τὴν αὐτὴν τέχνην ἐπιτετήδευκε, πολλὰ καὶ διαφέροντα ἐκ διαφερόντων εἰς ταῦτὸ συνάγειν<sup>1</sup> καὶ συνυφαίνειν ἀξιῶν. λαβὼν γὰρ ἀπὸ μὲν τῆς παιδικῆς γραμματικῆς δύο τὰ πρῶτα, τό τε γράφειν καὶ τὸ ἀναγινώσκειν, ἀπὸ δὲ τῆς τελειότερας τὴν τε παρὰ ποιηταῖς ἐμπειρίαν καὶ τὴν ἀρχαίας ἱστορίας ἀνάληψιν, παρὰ δὲ ἀριθ-μητικῆς καὶ γεωμετρίας τὸ ἀνεξαπάτητον ἐν οἷς ἀναλογίας καὶ λογισμῶν ἐστι χρεία, παρὰ δὲ μουσικῆς ῥυθμοὺς καὶ μέτρα,<sup>2</sup> τὰ τε ἑναρμόνια καὶ χρωματικὰ καὶ διατονικὰ συνημμένα τε αὖ καὶ διεξευγμένα μέλη, παρὰ δὲ ῥητορικῆς εὐρεσιν, φράσιν, τάξιν, οἰκονομίαν, μνήμην, ὑπόκρισιν, παρὰ δὲ φιλοσοφίας ὅσα τε ἐν ταύταις παραλέλειπται καὶ ἄλλα ἐξ ὧν ἅπας ὁ ἀνθρώπων βίος συνέστηκεν, ἐν ἔργον εὐανθέστατον ἡρμόσατο, εὐμάθειαν πολυ-206 μαθεία μίξας. καὶ τὸν τούτου τοῦ πλέγ-ματος δημιουργὸν ὁ ἱερὸς λόγος Βεσελεὴλ ἐκάλεσεν, <sup>1</sup> MSS. συνάγων.

<sup>2</sup> Wend. places the commas differently. See App. pp. 603 f.

<sup>a</sup> See note on De Cong. 148.

<sup>b</sup> See App. p. 604.

spheres of heaven, the many different kinds of animals and plants, and that vast variegated piece of embroidery, this world of ours. For I am straightway 204 compelled to think of the artificer of all this texture as the inventor of the variegator's science, and I do homage to the inventor, I prize the invention, I am dumbfounded at the result, and that though I am incapable of seeing even the smallest part of it, but from the part brought within the range of my vision, if indeed it has been brought, I form in detail a conjecture about the whole on the strength of what analogy leads me to expect. Further- 205 more, I admire the lover of wisdom, for having taken up this same art, in that he sees fit, when he finds a multitude of different things, to bring them together out of difference into oneness and to weave them together. For instance, he takes from the "grammar" taught to children the two first subjects, writing and reading; from the more advanced "grammar" acquaintance with the poets and a learning of ancient history<sup>a</sup>; from arithmetic and geometry absolute accuracy in matters which require a making of calculations and noting of proportion; from music rhythms and metres and melodies enharmonic, chromatic, diatonic, conjunct too and disjunct; from rhetoric, conception, expression, arrangement, treatment, memory, delivery<sup>b</sup>; from philosophy everything that has been omitted in the items given already, and all things else that constitute the whole life of men,—and from these combined he frames a single work gay and bright to a degree, blending wide learning with readiness to learn still more.

The artificer of this fabric was 206 called by the holy word Bezaleel (Ex. xxxi. 2 ff.),

PHILO

ὅς ἐρμηνευθεὶς ἐστὶν ἐν σκιᾷ θεοῦ. τὰ γὰρ μιμήματα οὗτος, τὰ δὲ παραδείγματα ἀρχιτεκτονεῖ Μωυσῆς· διὰ τοῦθ' ὁ μὲν οἷα σκιάς ὑπεγράφετο, ὁ δ' οὐ σκιάς, αὐτὰς δὲ τὰς ἀρχετύπους ἐδη-207 μιούργει φύσεις. εἰ δὴ καὶ τὰ ἅγια ποικιλτικῇ τέχνῃ κατεσκευάσται καὶ ὁ σοφὸς ποικιλτῆς μόνος ἐν τοῖς ἱεροφαντηθείσι χρησιμοῖς ἀνείρηται XXXVI. καὶ τὸ τοῦ θεοῦ καλὸν ποικίλμα, ὃδε ὁ κόσμος, ἐπιστήμῃ πανσόφῳ τετελεσειούργηται, πῶς οὐκ ἄξιον ὡς ἐργαλεῖον<sup>1</sup> τῆς ἐπιστήμης ἀποδέχε-208 σθαι ποικιλτικὴν; ἧς<sup>2</sup> ἀφίδρυμα ἱερώτατον πᾶς ὁ σοφίας οἶκος ἀγαλματοφορήσει καὶ κατ' οὐρανὸν καὶ ἐπὶ γῆς, ἀφ' ἧς ποικίλων λόγων ἰδέας ὁ ἀσκητῆς ἐκπονεῖ· μετὰ γὰρ τοὺς διαλεύκους εὐθύς τοὺς ποικίλους εἶδε, παιδείας κόμματι χαραχθέντας.
 209 Τρίτοι δ' εἰσὶν οἱ σποδοειδεῖς ῥαντοί. καίτοι τίς οὐκ ἂν εὖ φρονῶν εἴποι τῷ γένει καὶ τούτους εἶναι ποικίλους; ἀλλὰ γὰρ οὐκ ἔστιν αὐτῷ περὶ θρεμ-μάτων διαφορᾶς ἢ τοσαύτη σπουδῆ, περὶ μέντοι 210 τῆς πρὸς καλοκάγαθίαν ἀγούσης ὁδοῦ. βούλεται γὰρ τὸν ἐπὶ ταύτην<sup>3</sup> ἰόντα σποδῶ καὶ ὕδατι περιρ<sup>1</sup> MSS. μεγαλεῖον.

<sup>2</sup> MSS. οὔ.

<sup>3</sup> MSS. ταῦτα οἱ ταύτη.

<sup>a</sup> i.e. Bezaleel is called σοφός ("filled with the spirit of wisdom" Ex. xxxi. 3), and the work is ἔργον ποικιλτοῦ (Ex. xxvi. 36 and elsewhere).

<sup>b</sup> The section is obscure, but the meaning perhaps may be something as follows. Knowledge shaped by the tool of variegation in divine hands stands like a sacred statue in the temple of the universe. And this serves as a model to the Practising Soul (=the lover of wisdom in § 205), when he creates the varieties of human knowledge described in that section. The point of the last words is that this agrees with the order of the vision in which the διάλευκοι, here standing for the higher ideal knowledge, are followed by the ποικίλοι.

ON DREAMS, I. 206-210

which is when interpreted "in the shadow of God." For it is the copies of which he is chief builder, whereas Moses builds the patterns; for this reason the one drew an outline as it were of shadows, while the other fashioned no shadows, but the existences themselves that served as archetypes.

Now if the holy tabernacle was built by the variegator's art, and the name of "variegator" or embroiderer is reserved for the sage in the oracles of revelation,<sup>a</sup> XXXVI. and the beautiful variegated fabric of God, even this world of ours, has been wrought in its completeness by a knowledge full of all wisdom, how can we do otherwise than welcome variegation as a tool for the making of knowledge? Its most holy image shall be enshrined in all the house of Wisdom both in heaven and on earth. And from it are derived the varieties of thinking which the Practiser's labour creates, for after those of thorough-white he straightway saw those that were variegated, bearing the impress of the stamp of training.<sup>b</sup>

Third come the ashy-sprinkled. And yet what man of sound sense would not say that these also are of the variegated kind? The fact is that it is not about the difference between beasts that the lawgiver shews this deep concern, but rather about the way that leads to nobility of life.<sup>c</sup> For he wishes the man who goes in quest of this to besprinkle himself with <sup>a</sup> i.e. Philo does not deny that the literal meaning of σποδοειδής παντοί is ash-coloured and spotted (or with ash-coloured spots?) and that this indicates much the same as variegated, but spiritually what is intended is "sprinkled with ashes and water," the allegorical meaning of which is explained in the next section.

PHILO

- ραίνεσθαι, διότι γῆν καὶ ὕδωρ λόγος ἔχει φυραθέντα καὶ μορφωθέντα πρὸς τοῦ ἀνθρωποπλάστου εἰς τὸ ἡμέτερον ἀποκριθῆναι σῶμα, οὐ χειρόκμητον, 211 ἀλλὰ φύσεως ἔργον ἀοράτου. σοφίας οὖν ἔστιν ἀρχὴ μὴ ἐπιλανθάνεσθαι ἑαυτοῦ, τὰ δ' ἐξ ὧν συνεκρίθη πρὸ ὀφθαλμῶν αἰὲ λαμβάνειν· οὕτως γὰρ [653] μεγαλαυχίαν, τὸ κακῶν | θεομισέστατον, ἐκνύψαιτ'
ἄν. τίς γὰρ εἰς νοῦν βαλλόμενος, ὅτι τέφρα καὶ ὕδωρ εἰσὶν αὐτῷ τῆς γενέσεως αἱ ἀρχαί, φουσηθεὶς 212 ὑπ' οἰήσεως μετέωρος ἀρθήσεται; διὰ τοῦτο καὶ τοὺς μέλλοντας ἱεουργεῖν περιρραίνεσθαι τοῖς λεχ-θεῖσιν ἐδικαίωσεν, οὐδένα θυσιῶν ἄξιον νομίσας, ὃς μὴ πρότερον ἑαυτὸν ἔγνωκε καὶ τὴν ἀνθρωπίνην οὐδένειαν κατεῖληφεν, ἐξ ὧν συνεκρίθη στοιχείων τὸ μηδενὸς ἄξιος εἶναι τεκμηράμενος.
- 213 XXXVII. Τὰ τρία ταῦτα σημεῖα, τὸ διάλευκον, τὸ ποικίλον, τὸ σποδοειδὲς ραντόν, περὶ μὲν τὸν ἀσκητὴν ἅτε μήπω τέλειον ἀτελῆ, περὶ δὲ τὸν 214 τέλειον φαίνεται καὶ αὐτὰ τέλεια. ὃν δὲ τρόπον, θεασώμεθα· τὸν μέγαν ἀρχιερέα, ὅποτε μέλλοι τὰς νόμῳ προστεταγμένας ἐπιτελεῖν λειτουργίας, ὁ ἱερός ἐδικαίωσε λόγος ὕδατι καὶ τέφρα περιρραίνεσθαι τὸ πρῶτον εἰς ὑπόμνησιν ἑαυτοῦ—καὶ γὰρ ὁ σοφὸς Ἀβραάμ, ὅτε ἐντευξόμενος ἦει τῷ θεῷ, γῆν καὶ σποδὸν εἶπεν ἑαυτόν,—ἔπειτ' ἐνδύεσθαι τὸν ποδῆρη χιτῶνα καὶ τὸ ποικίλον ὁ

* "Ashes," however, are not mentioned here. See App. p. 604.

ashes and lustral water, inasmuch as it is recorded that earth and water mixed together and shaped were by the power of the Moulder of men set apart to form this body of ours, wrought as no handiwork, but a product of nature working all unseen. It is, then, 211 the beginning of wisdom not to be forgetful of one's own self, but ever to set before one's eyes the elements of which one consists; for in this way a man would purge out of himself high vaunting, the most God-abhorred of evil things. For who, when he lays to heart that ashes and water are for him the beginnings of existence, will be puffed up by conceit and raised aloft? That is why the lawgiver required those who 212 were about to sacrifice to besprinkle themselves with the materials I have mentioned. He held no one worthy of offering sacrifices who has not first come to know himself and comprehended human nothingness, inferring from the elements of which he is composed that he is nothing worth.

XXXVII. These three signs, the thorough-white, 213 the variegated, the ashy-sprinkled, are seen to be imperfect in the Practiser inasmuch as he is not yet perfect, whereas in the perfect man they too are perfect. Let us see in what way this is true. When 214 the great High-priest was about to perform the public services enjoined by law, the holy word required that he should in the first place sprinkle himself with water and ashes (Ex. xxix. 4)<sup>a</sup> as a reminder to him of himself—for even that wise one, Abraham, when he was on his way to intercede with God, spoke of himself as earth and ashes (Gen. xviii. 27)—in the next place that he should put on the tunic reaching to the feet, and over it that which he has entitled the

PHILO

- κέκληκεν ἐπ' αὐτῷ περιστήθιον, τῶν κατ' οὐρανὸν 215 φωσφόρων ἄστρον ἀπεικόνισμα καὶ μίμημα. δύο γάρ, ὡς ἔοικεν, ἱερὰ θεοῦ, ἐν μὲν ὄδε ὁ κόσμος, ἐν ᾧ καὶ ἀρχιερεὺς ὁ πρωτόγονος αὐτοῦ θεῖος λόγος, ἕτερον δὲ λογικὴ ψυχὴ, ἧς ἱερεὺς ὁ πρὸς ἀλήθειαν ἄνθρωπος, οὗ μίμημα αἰσθητὸν ὁ τὰς πατρίους εὐχὰς καὶ θυσίας ἐπιτελῶν ἐστιν, ᾧ τὸν εἰρημένον ἐπιτέτραπται χιτῶνα ἐνδύεσθαι, τοῦ παντός ἀντί-216 ἀνθρώπῳ καὶ τῷ παντὶ ἄνθρωπος. δύο μὲν οὖν ἦδη, τὸν τε ῥαντὸν καὶ τὸν ποικίλον τύπον, ἔχων ἐπιδέδεικται· τὸν δὲ τρίτον καὶ τελειότατον, ὃς ὀνομάζεται διάλευκος, αὐτίκα σηματοῦμεν. ὅταν εἰς τὰ ἐσωτάτω τῶν ἀγίων ὁ αὐτὸς οὗτος ἀρχιερεὺς εἰσῆ, τὴν μὲν ποικίλην ἐσθῆτα ἀπαμπίσχεται, λιπῆν δὲ ἑτέραν, βύσσου τῆς καθαρωτάτης 217 πεποιημένην, ἀναλαμβάνει. ἡ δ' ἐστὶ σύμβολον εὐτονίας, ἀφθαρσίας, ἀνγοειδεστάτου φέγγους· ἀρραγῆς τε<sup>1</sup> γὰρ ἡ ὀθόνη καὶ ἐξ οὐδενὸς τῶν ἀπο-θνησκόντων γίνεται καὶ ἔτι λαμπρότατον καὶ φωτοειδέστατον ἔχει μὴ ἀμελῶς καθαρθεῖσα χρώμα.
 218 διὰ δὲ τούτων ἐκείνο αἰνίττεται, ὅτι τῶν ἀδόλως καὶ καθαρῶς θεραπευόντων τὸ ὄν οὐδεὶς ἐστὶν ὃς μὴ πρῶτον μὲν ἰσχυρογνωμοσύνην κέχρηται καταφρονήσας τῶν ἀνθρωπείων πραγμάτων, ἃ δελεά-[654] ζοντα κηραίνει καὶ ἀσθένειαν ἐργάζεται, | ἔπειτα ἀφθαρσίας ἐφίεται γελάσας ὅσα οἱ θνητοὶ τυφοπλαστοῦσι, τελευταῖον δὲ ἀληθείας ἀσκίῳ φέγγει καὶ περιαιγεῖ καταλάμπεται, μηδὲν ἔτι τῶν τῆς

<sup>1</sup> Some mss. καθαρά τε, others ἀρραγεστέρα (-έστατον).

<sup>a</sup> i.e. the twelve signs of the Zodiac, cf. De Spec. Leg. i. 87.

<sup>b</sup> i.e. not of wool, cf. De Ebr. 86.

ON DREAMS, I. 214-218

embroidered or variegated breastplate (Ex. xxix. 5), a representation and copy of the shining constellations.<sup>a</sup> For there are, as is evident, two temples of God : 215 one of them this universe, in which there is also as High Priest His First-born, the divine Word, and the other the rational soul, whose Priest is the real Man ; the outward and visible image of whom is he who offers the prayers and sacrifices handed down from our fathers, to whom it has been committed to wear the aforesaid tunic, which is a copy and replica of the whole heaven, the intention of this being that the universe may join with man in the holy rites and man with the universe.

The High Priest has 216 now been exhibited as having two characteristic marks, the sprinkled and the variegated : the third and most perfect, which is styled thorough-white, we will now proceed at once to indicate. When this same High Priest goes into the inmost part of the Holy Place, he divests himself of the variegated robe, and puts on another one of linen made from the purest kind (Lev. xvi. 4), a figure of strong fibre, 217 imperishableness, most radiant light : for fine linen is hard to tear, and is made from no mortal creature,<sup>b</sup> and moreover when carefully cleaned has a very brilliant and luminous colour. What is symbolically 218 intimated by these figures is, that among those who worship Him that is with guileless purity, there is not one that does not, in the first place, exercise strength of will and judgement by a contempt for human interests which ensnare and hurt and enfeeble us ; and, in the second place, laugh to scorn all the unsubstantial aims of mortal men, and set his heart on immortality ; and, last of all, live irradiated by the cloudless splendour of truth, no longer entertaining

PHILO

- ψευδοῦς δόξης, ἃ σκότῳ φίλα εἶναι συμβέβηκε, προσιέμενος.
- 219 XXXVIII. Ὁ μὲν δὴ μέγας ἀρχιερεὺς τρισὶ ταῖς εἰρημέναις τυπωθεῖς σφραγίσιν, τῇ διαλεύκῳ, τῇ ποικίλῃ, τῇ σποδοειδεῖ ῥαντῇ, τοιοῦτος ἡμῖν ἀναγεγράφθω· τὸν δὲ τῆς ἀνθρωπίνης πολιτείας ἐφιέμενον, Ἰωσήφ ὄνομα, τῶν μὲν ἄκρων ἰδεῖν ἔστι μὴ μεταποιούμενον χαρακτήρων, μόνου δὲ τοῦ
- 220 μέσου καὶ ποικίλου. λέγεται γὰρ ὅτι χιτῶνα ποικίλον ἔσχεν, οὔτε καθαρσίοις περιρρανάμενος ἱεροῖς, ἀφ' ὧν ἑαυτὸν ἂν ἔγνω τέφρας καὶ ὕδατος συμφόρημα, οὔτε τῆς πανλεύκου καὶ φωτοειδιστάτης ἐσθῆτος, ἀρετῆς, ψαῦσαι δυνηθεῖς, ἀλλὰ τὸ τῆς πολιτείας ἐπαμπισχόμενος ὕφασμα παμποίκιλον, ᾧ βραχύτατον μέρος ἀληθείας ἐγκαταμέμικται, πολλαὶ δὲ καὶ μεγάλαι μοῖραι ψευδῶν εὐλόγων πιθανῶν εἰκότων, ἐξ ὧν οἱ Αἰγύπτου πάντες ἀνέβλαστον σοφισταί, οἰωνομάντεις, ἐγγαστρίμυθοι, τερατοσκόποι, δεινοὶ παλεῦσαι καὶ κατεπᾶσαι καὶ γοητεῦσαι, ὧν τὰς ἐπιβούλους τέχνας
- 221 μέγα ἔργον διεκδῦναι. διὸ καὶ τὸν χιτῶνα τοῦτον εἰσάγει Μωυσῆς φυσικῶς αἵματι πεφυρμένον, ἐπειδὴ πᾶς ὁ τοῦ πολιτευομένου βίος πέφυρται, πολεμῶν τε καὶ πολεμούμενος καὶ ὑπὸ τῶν προσπιπτουσῶν ἀβουλήτων συντυχιῶν βαλλόμενος καὶ
- 222 τοξευόμενος. ἐρεῦνησον οὖν τὸν λίαν δημοτικόν, ᾧ τὰ πόλεως πράγματα ἐφορμεῖ, μὴ καταπλαγεῖς τοὺς θαυμαστικῶς ἔχοντας αὐτοῦ, καὶ πολλὰς μὲν ἐμφωλευούσας νόσους εὐρήσεις, πολλὰς δ' ἐξημμένον κῆρας καὶ βιαίως ἐκάστην τὴν ψυχὴν αὐχενίζουσαν καὶ ἀφανῶς αὐτῇ προσπαλαίουσαν καὶ any of the creations of false opinion so dear to darkness.

XXXVIII. Let this stand as my description of the 219 great High Priest marked with the three seals aforesaid, the thorough-white, the variegated, and the ashy-sprinkled. The man whose desires are set on human statecraft, Joseph by name, lays claim, as we can see, neither to the first nor to the third of these marks, but to the intervening one, the variegated, only. For we are told that he had a coat of varied 220 colours (Gen. xxxvii. 3). He did not besprinkle himself with lustral rites, from which he would have learned that he was an amalgam of ashes and water, and was incapable of touching the all-white and gleaming vestment, which is virtue, but arrayed himself in the woven robe of statecraft, a robe richly variegated, containing but a most meagre admixture of truth, but many large portions of false, probable, plausible, conjectural matter, out of which sprang up all the sophists of Egypt, augurs, ventriloquists, soothsayers, proficients in decoying, charming, and bewitching, whose insidious artifices it is no easy task to escape. So Moses shews the insight of a philosopher 221 in introducing this coat all blood-stained (Gen. xxxvii. 31), since the whole life of the statesman is stained, warring and being warred upon, receiving blows and shots from the mishaps which befall it. Search then 222 the man who is thoroughly immersed in public business, the man on whom the interests of the state depend, and do not be daunted by those who hold him in admiration. You will find many a disease lurking in him, many a baneful thing fastened upon him, each one of them violently gripping his soul and invisibly wrestling with it, striving to overthrow it

PHILO

- ζητοῦσαν ἀνατρέψαι καὶ καταβαλεῖν, ἢ τοῦ πλήθους τῇ προστασίᾳ δυσχεράναντος ἢ κατὰ ἀντεπίθεσιν 223 δυνατωτέρου ἀνδρός. ἔστι δὲ καὶ ὁ φθόνος βαρὺς καὶ δυσαπότριπτος ἐχθρός, ἐπιφυόμενος ἀεὶ ταῖς λεγομέναις εὐπραγίαις, ὃν οὐ ῥάδιον ἐκφυγεῖν.
- 224 XXXIX. τί οὖν ὡς ἐσθῆτα πολυτελεῆ τὴν ἐπηρθισμένην πολιτείαν ἀναψάμενοι γαυριῶμεν, τῷ εὐπρεπεῖ τῆς φανεράς ὄψεως ἀπατώμενοι, τὸ δ' ἀφανὲς καὶ κεκρυμμένον ἐπίβουλον καὶ σφαλερὸν 225 αἰσχος αὐτῆς οὐ κατανοοῦντες; ἀποδυσάμενοι δὴ τὸν ἀνθηρὸν τοῦτον χιτῶνα τὸν ἱερὸν ἐνδυνάμεθα ἀρετῶν ποικίλμασιν ἐνυφασμένον· οὕτως γὰρ καὶ τὰς ἐνέδρας ἀποδρασόμεθα, ἃς ἀτεχνία καὶ ἀν-επιστημοσύνη καὶ ἀπαιδευσία καθ' ἡμῶν τιθέασιν, 226 ὧν ὁ Λάβαν ἐστὶ θιασώτης. ἐπειδὴ γὰρ ἐκάθηρεν ἡμᾶς ὁ ἱερὸς λόγος τοῖς εἰς ἀγιστείαν | [655] εὐτρεπισθείσι περιρραντηρίοις καὶ τοῖς ἀπορρήτοις φιλοσοφίας ἀληθοῦς κατεποίκιλε λόγοις ἀγαγῶν εἰς τὸ δοκίμιον καὶ διασήμους καὶ ἐπιφανεῖς καὶ λαμπροὺς ἐποίησεν, αἰτιᾶται τὸ ἐπίβουλον ἦθος, πρὸς τὴν τῶν λεχθέντων ἀνηρεθισμένον λώβην.
 227 φησὶ γάρ· “ἐώρακα ὅσα σοι Λάβαν ποιεῖ,” τάναντία δῆπουθεν οἷς ἔδωρησάμην ἐγώ, τὸ δυσ-κάθαρτον καὶ τὸ ἀδόκιμον, τὸ πάντη σκοταῖον. ἀλλὰ γὰρ οὐ χρὴ κατεπτηχῆναι τὸν ἐλπίδι θείας συμμαχίας ἐφορμοῦντα, ᾧ καὶ λέγεται· “ἐγὼ εἰμι ὁ θεὸς ὁ ὀφθείς σοι ἐν τόπῳ θεοῦ.” 228 πάγκαλόν γε αὔχημα ψυχῇ, τὸ ἀξιοῦν θεὸν ἐπιφαίνεσθαι καὶ ἐνομιλεῖν αὐτῇ. μὴ παρέλθης δὲ τὸ εἰρημένον, ἀλλὰ ἀκριβῶς ἐξέτασον, εἰ τῷ ὄντι δύο and cast it down, either because the multitude are dissatisfied with his leadership, or because a more powerful rival is attacking him. Envy again is a grievous foe, difficult to shake off, a growth which always settles on what men call "doing well," and hard it is to escape from. XXXIX. Why then do we invest ourselves with the gauds of political importance, as with some costly garment, and bear ourselves proudly in it, deceived by the fairness of what meets the eye, and not perceiving its insidious and dangerous ugliness which is out of sight and hidden from observation? Come, let us cast off this showy tunic, and put on the sacred one inwoven with the varied embroidery of virtues. So shall we escape also the ambushments, which unskilfulness, ignorance and indiscipline set for our ruin, to which company Laban belongs. For when the holy word had cleansed us with the water of sprinkling made ready for our sanctification, and bringing us to the test had decked us with the varied richness of the secrets of true philosophy, and had made us clear and distinct and bright, it censures the evil-designing character stirred up to spoil the effects of the said treatment. For he says, "I have seen all that Laban doeth unto thee" (Gen. xxxi. 12), the reverse, that is, of all that I bestowed upon thee, even sore foulness and spuriousness and darkness in every part.

Yet there can be no cowering fear for the man who relies on the hope of the divine comradeship, to whom are addressed the words "I am the God who appeared to thee in the place of God" (Gen. xxxi. 13). Surely a right noble cause of vaunting it is for a soul, that God deigns to shew Himself to and converse with it. And do not fail to mark the language used, but carefully εἰσι θεοί· λέγεται γὰρ ὅτι “ ἐγὼ εἰμι ὁ θεὸς ὁ ὀφθείς σοι,” οὐκ ἐν τόπῳ ἐμῷ, ἀλλ’ “ ἐν τόπῳ 229 θεοῦ,” ὡς ἂν ἐτέρου. τί οὖν χρῆ λέγειν; ὁ μὲν ἀληθεῖα θεὸς εἰς ἔστιν, οἱ δ’ ἐν καταχρήσει λεγόμενοι πλείους. διὸ καὶ ὁ ἱερὸς λόγος ἐν τῷ παρόντι τὸν μὲν ἀληθεῖα διὰ τοῦ ἄρθρου μεμήνυκεν εἰπών· “ ἐγὼ εἰμι ὁ θεός,” τὸν δ’ ἐν καταχρήσει χωρὶς ἄρθρου φάσκων· “ ὁ ὀφθείς σοι ἐν τόπῳ,” οὐ τοῦ 230 θεοῦ, ἀλλ’ αὐτὸ μόνον “ θεοῦ.” καλεῖ δὲ θεὸν τὸν πρεσβύτατον αὐτοῦ νυνὶ λόγον, οὐ δεισιδαιμονῶν περὶ τὴν θέσιν τῶν ὀνομάτων, ἀλλ’ ἐν τέλος προ-τεθειμένος, πραγματολογῆσαι. καὶ γὰρ ἐν ἐτέροις σκεψάμενος, εἰ ἔστι τι τοῦ ὄντος ὄνομα, σαφῶς ἔγνω ὅτι κύριον μὲν οὐδέν, ὁ δ’ ἂν εἶπη τις, κατα-χρώμενος ἐρεῖ· λέγεσθαι γὰρ οὐ πέφυκεν, ἀλλὰ 231 μόνον εἶναι τὸ ὄν. XL. μαρτυρεῖ δὲ καὶ τὸ θεσπισθὲν λόγιον τῷ πυνθανομένῳ, εἰ ἔστιν ὄνομα αὐτῷ, ὅτι “ ἐγὼ εἰμι ὁ ὢν,” ἴν’ ὢν δυνατὸν ἀνθρώπῳ καταλαβεῖν μὴ ὄντων περὶ θεόν, ἐπιγνῶ 232 τὴν ὑπαρξίν.<sup>1</sup> ταῖς μὲν οὖν ἀσωμάτοις καὶ θερα-πευτρῖσιν αὐτοῦ ψυχαῖς εἰκὸς αὐτὸν οἷός ἐστιν ἐπιφαίνεσθαι διαλεγόμενον ὡς φίλον φίλαις, ταῖς

PHILO

<sup>1</sup> The construction is extremely awkward. The majority of mss. have ἀδύνατον, which coupled with Wend.’s conjecture of τῶν for μὴ would give a more tolerable sentence. Mangey’s translation, also reading ἀδύνατον, “that man may believe in the existence of those qualities in God the absence of which is incomprehensible to him,” gives a sense which is suited to the argument which follows, but how could such an inference be drawn from ἐγὼ εἰμι ὁ ὢν?

<sup>a</sup> Philo of course fails to understand that the LXX τόπος θεοῦ is a translation of the Hebrew place-name Bethel.

<sup>b</sup> If this is the right translation of the passage, Philo would seem to use δεισιδαιμονία, as the Latin superstitio

inquire whether there are two Gods ; for we read “ I am the God that appeared to thee,” not “ in my place ” but “ in the place of God,” as though it were another’s.<sup>a</sup> What, then, are we to say? He that is 229 truly God is One, but those that are improperly so called are more than one. Accordingly the holy word in the present instance has indicated Him Who is truly God by means of the articles saying “ I am the God,” while it omits the article when mentioning him who is improperly so called, saying “ Who appeared to thee in the place ” not “ of the God,” but simply “ of God.” Here it gives the title of 230 “ God ” to His chief Word, not from any superstitious nicety in applying names, but with one aim before him, to use words to express facts.<sup>b</sup> Thus in another place, when he had inquired whether He that is has any name, he came to know full well that He has no proper name,<sup>c</sup> and that whatever name anyone may use of Him he will use by licence of language ; for it is not the nature of Him that is to be spoken of, but simply to be.

XL. Testimony to this is 231 afforded also by the divine response made to Moses’ question whether He has a name, even “ I am He that is ” (Ex. iii. 14). It was given in order that, since there are not in God things which man can comprehend, man may recognize His subsistence. To the souls indeed which are incorporeal and are 232 occupied in His worship it is likely that He should reveal Himself as He is, conversing with them as friend with friends ; but to souls which are still in a sometimes is, for over-fine scrupulousness in the use of words. But is this possible? See App. pp. 604 f. for this and the connexion of thought in these sections.

<sup>a</sup> The reference is to Ex. vi. 3. See De Mut. 13 f.

PHILO

δὲ ἔτι ἐν σώματι ἀγγέλοις εἰκαζόμενον, οὐ μετα-βάλλοντα τὴν ἑαυτοῦ φύσιν—ἄτρεπτος γάρ,—ἀλλὰ δόξαν ἐντιθέντα ταῖς φαντασιουμέναις ἑτερόμορφον, ὡς τὴν εἰκόνα οὐ μίμημα, ἀλλ' αὐτὸ τὸ ἀρχέτυπον 233 ἐκεῖνο εἶδος ὑπολαμβάνειν εἶναι. παλαιὸς μὲν οὖν ἄδεται λόγος, ὅτι τὸ θεῖον ἀνθρώποις εἰ-καζόμενον ἄλλοτε ἄλλοις περιουστει τὰς πόλεις ἐν κύκλῳ, τὰς τε ἀδικίας καὶ παρανομίας ἐξετάζον· καὶ τάχα μὲν οὐκ ἀληθῶς, πάντως δὲ λυσιτελῶς 234 καὶ συμφερόντως ἄδεται. ὁ δὲ λόγος σεμνότερον καὶ ἀγιώτερον ταῖς περὶ τοῦ ὄντος ἐννοίαις αἰεὶ χρώμενος, ἅμα δὲ καὶ τὸν τῶν ἀφρόνων [656] βίον | παιδεῦσαι γλιχόμενος ἀνθρώπῳ μὲν εἰκασεν, 235 οὐ μέντοι τῶν ἐπὶ μέρους οὐδενί· πρόσωπον διὰ τοῦτο καὶ χεῖρας καὶ βάσεις καὶ στόμα καὶ φωνὴν ὀργὰς τε καὶ θυμούς, ἔτι δὲ ἀμυντήρια ὄπλα καὶ εἰσόδους μέντοι καὶ ἐξόδους καὶ τὰς ἄνω καὶ κάτω καὶ πανταχῇ κινήσεις περιέβηκεν, οὐ πρὸς ἀλήθειαν τὸ κεφάλαιον τοῦτο τῶν λόγων ἀναφέρων, ἀλλὰ 236 πρὸς τὸ λυσιτελεῖν τῶν μανθανόντων. εἰσὶ γάρ τινες ἀμβλεῖς πάνυ τὰς φύσεις, ὡς μὴ δύνασθαι θεὸν ἄνευ σώματος ἐπινοῆσαι τὸ παράπαν· οὓς ἀμήχανον ἑτέρως ἢ τρόπον τοῦτον νοουθετεῖν λέγοντας, ὅτι ὡς ἀνθρώπος ὁ θεὸς ἀφικνεῖται καὶ ἐξανα-χωρεῖ καὶ κάτεισι καὶ ἀνέρχεται καὶ φωνῇ χρῆται καὶ τοῖς ἀμαρτανομένοις δυσχεραίνει καὶ ἀπαρ-αιτήτως πρὸς τὰς ὀργὰς ἔχει καὶ βέλη μέντοι.

<sup>1</sup> Perhaps <ιερός> λόγος.

<sup>a</sup> An obvious allusion to Od. xvii. 485:

καὶ τε θεοὶ ξείνοισιν εὐκότες ἀλλοδαποῖσι, παντοῖοι τελέθοντες, ἐπιστροφῶσι πόληας, ἀνθρώπων ὕβριν τε καὶ εὐνομίην ἐφορῶντες.

ON DREAMS, I. 232-236

body, giving Himself the likeness of angels, not altering His own nature, for He is unchangeable, but conveying to those which receive the impression of His presence a semblance in a different form, such that they take the image to be not a copy, but that original form itself. Indeed an old saying 233 is still current that the deity goes the round of the cities, in the likeness now of this man now of that man, taking note of wrongs and transgressions.<sup>a</sup> The current story may not be a true one, but it is at all events good and profitable for us that it should be current. And the sacred word ever enter- 234 taining holier and more august conceptions of Him that is, yet at the same time longing to provide instruction and teaching for the life of those who lack wisdom, likened God to man, not, however, to any particular man.<sup>b</sup> For this reason it has ascribed to 235 Him face, hands, feet, mouth, voice, wrath and indignation, and, over and beyond these, weapons, entrances and exits, movements up and down and all ways, and in following this general principle<sup>c</sup> in its language it is concerned not with truth, but with the profit accruing to its pupils. For some there are 236 altogether dull in their natures, incapable of forming any conception whatever of God as without a body, people whom it is impossible to instruct otherwise than in this way, saying that as a man does so God arrives and departs, goes down and comes up, makes use of a voice, is displeased at wrongdoings, is inexorable in His anger, and in addition to all this has provided Himself with shafts and swords and all other

<sup>b</sup> For the thought in this and the following sections cf. De Sac. 94 f., Quod Deus 53 f.

<sup>c</sup> See note on Quod Deus 53.

PHILO

- καὶ ξίφη καὶ τὰ ἄλλα ὅσα πρὸς τιμωρίας ὄργανα 237 ἐπιτήδεια κατὰ τῶν ἀδίκων προευτρέπισται. ἀγα-πητὸν γάρ, ἐὰν τῷ διὰ τούτων ἐπικρεμασθέντι φόβῳ σωφρονισθῆναι δυναθῶσι. καὶ σχεδὸν δύο εἰσὶν αὐταὶ μόναι αἱ τῆς νομοθεσίας πάσης ὁδοί, μία μὲν ἢ πρὸς τὸ ἀληθὲς ἀπονεύουσα, δι' ἧς κατασκευάζεται “οὐχ ὡς ἄνθρωπος ὁ θεός,” ἑτέρα δὲ ἢ πρὸς τὰς τῶν νωθεστέρων δόξας, ἐφ' ὧν λέγεται· “παιδεύσει σε κύριος ὁ θεός, ὡς εἶ τις παιδεύσειεν ἄνθρωπος τὸν υἱὸν αὐτοῦ.”
- 238 XLI. τί οὖν ἔτι θαυμάζομεν, εἰ ἀγγέλοις, ὁπότε καὶ ἀνθρώποις ἔνεκα τῆς τῶν δεομένων ἐπικουρίας ἀπεικάζεται; ὡσθ' ὅταν φῆ· “ἐγὼ εἰμι ὁ θεός ὁ ὀφθείς σοι ἐν τόπῳ θεοῦ,” τότε νόησον, ὅτι τὸν ἀγγέλου τόπον ἐπέσχευ ὅσα τῷ δοκεῖν, οὐ μεταβάλλων, πρὸς τὴν τοῦ μήπω δυναμένου τὸν ἀληθῆ 239 θεὸν ἰδεῖν ὠφέλειαν. καθάπερ γὰρ τὴν ἀνθήλιον αὐγὴν ὡς ἥλιον οἱ μὴ δυνάμενοι τὸν ἥλιον αὐτὸν ἰδεῖν ὀρώσι καὶ τὰς περὶ σελήνην ἄλως ὡς αὐτὴν ἐκείνην, οὕτως καὶ τὴν τοῦ θεοῦ εἰκόνα, τὸν 240 ἄγγελον αὐτοῦ λόγον, ὡς αὐτὸν κατανοοῦσιν. οὐχ ὀρᾶς τὴν ἐγκύκλιον παιδείαν Ἄγαρ, ὅτι τῷ ἀγγέλῳ φησί· “σὺ ὁ θεός ὁ ἐπιδῶν με;” οὐ γὰρ ἦν ἱκανὴ τὸ πρεσβύτατον ἰδεῖν αἴτιον, γένος οὕσα τῶν ἀπ' Αἰγύπτου. νυνὶ δὲ ὁ νοῦς ἄρχεται βελτιούμενος τὸν ἡγεμόνα πασῶν τῶν τοιούτων δυνάμεων φαν-241 τασιοῦσθαι. διὸ καὶ αὐτός φησιν· “ἐγὼ εἰμι ὁ

<sup>a</sup> Or perhaps “on the present occasion,” contrasted not only with the Hagar story, but also with the Ladder Vision. The thought seems to be that while the Hagar-mind and even the Jacob-mind, in its lower stage, draw no distinction between the higher and the lower manifestations of the divine and mistake the Angel or the Logos for “the God,” instruments of vengeance against the unrighteous. For it is something to be thankful for if they can be 237 taught self-control by the terror held over them by these means. Broadly speaking the lines taken throughout the Law are these two only, one that which keeps truth in view and so provides the thought " God is not as man " (Num. xxiii. 19), the other that which keeps in view the ways of thinking of the duller folk, of whom it is said " the Lord God will chasten thee, as if a man should chasten his son " (Deut. viii. 5).

XLI. Why, then, do we wonder any 238 longer at His assuming the likeness of angels, seeing that for the succour of those that are in need He assumes that of men? Accordingly, when He says " I am the God who was seen of thee in the place of God " (Gen. xxxi. 13), understand that He occupied the place of an angel only so far as appeared, without changing, with a view to the profit of him who was not yet capable of seeing the true God. For just as those 239 who are unable to see the sun itself see the gleam of the parhelion and take it for the sun, and take the halo round the moon for that luminary itself, so some regard the image of God, His angel the Word, as His very self. Do you not see how Hagar, who is the 240 education of the schools, says to the angel " Thou art the God that didst look upon me " ? (Gen. xvi. 13) ; for being Egyptian by descent she was not qualified to see the supreme Cause. But in the passage upon which we are occupied,<sup>a</sup> the mind is beginning, as the result of improvement, to form a mental image of the sovereign Ruler of all such Potencies. Hence it is 241 the Practiser has now reached the point where he can comprehend the highest as really implicit in the lower, and this truth is revealed to him by God Himself.

PHILO

- θεός," οὐ τὴν εἰκόνα ὡς ἐμὲ πρότερον ἐθεάσω καὶ στήλην ἐπίγραμμα ἐγκολάψας ἱερώτατον ἀνέθηκας· τὸ δὲ ἐπίγραμμα ἐμήνυεν, ὅτι μόνος ἔστηκα ἐγὼ καὶ τὴν τῶν πάντων φύσιν ἰδρυσάμην, τὴν ἀταξίαν καὶ ἀκοσμίαν εἰς κόσμον καὶ τάξιν ἀγαγὼν καὶ τὸ πᾶν ἐπερείσας,<sup>1</sup> ἵνα στηριχθῆ βεβαίως τῷ κραταιῷ [657] καὶ ὑπάρχω μου | λόγῳ.
- 242 XLII. Στήλη γὰρ τριῶν πραγμάτων σύμβολον, στάσεως ἀναθέσεως ἐπιγράμματος. ἡ μὲν οὖν στάσις καὶ τὸ ἐπίγραμμα δεδήλωται, ἡ δὲ ἀνάθεσις 243 ἀναγκαῖα μνηυθῆναι· πᾶς ὁ οὐρανὸς καὶ ὁ κόσμος ἀνάθημα θεοῦ τοῦ πεποιηκότος τὸ ἀνάθημα· καὶ ὅσαι μέντοι κοσμοπολίτιδες ψυχαὶ καὶ θεοφιλεῖς, ἑαυτὰς ἀνιεροῦσιν ὑπὸ μηδενὸς ἀντισπώμεναι θνη-τοῦ, καθαγιαζούσαι δὲ καὶ καλλιεροῦσαι τὸν ἑαυτῶν 244 ἄφθαρτον βίον οὐδέποτε κάμνουσι. μάταιος δ' ὅστις μὴ θεῷ στήλην ἀνατίθῃσιν, ἀλλ' ἑαυτῷ, τὰ γενέσεως ἰστάς τῆς πάντῃ σαλευομένης καὶ ἐπι-γραμμάτων καὶ ἐπαίνων ἀξιῶν, ἃ ψόγου καὶ κατ-ηγορίας μεστὰ ὄντα καλὸν ἦν ἢ μὴ γραφῆναι τὸ 245 παράπαν ἢ γραφέντα εὐθὺς ἀπαλειφθῆναι. διὸ καὶ φησὶν ἀντικρὺς ὁ ἱερὸς λόγος· "οὐ στήσεις σεαυτῷ στήλην". ἔστηκε γὰρ τῶν ἀνθρωπίνων<sup>2</sup> πρὸς ἀλήθειαν οὐδέν, κἂν διαρραγῶσιν τινες ψευδόμενοι.
 246 ἀλλὰ γὰρ οὐκ οἴονται μόνον παγίως ἐρηρεῖσθαι, <sup>1</sup> See on § 158.

<sup>2</sup> MSS. ἀνθρώπων.

---

<sup>a</sup> There is of course no suggestion of an inscription either in Gen. xxxi. 13 or in the original story, cf. Gen. xxviii. 18. But Philo, familiar with inscriptions on dedicatory slabs, takes the phrase "he set it up as a pillar" to mean that the soul, firmly convinced of God's stability, records (cf. ἕμους ἐγχαράξεις, § 256) its conviction and dedicates itself.

that He Himself says "I am the God," whose image thou didst aforetime behold deeming it to be I Myself, and didst dedicate a pillar engraved with a most holy inscription<sup>a</sup> (Gen. xxxi. 13); and the purport of the inscription was that I alone am standing (Ex. xvii. 6) and that it was I alone that established the being of all things, bringing confusion and disorder into order and array, and sustained the universe to rest firm and sure upon the mighty Word, who is My viceroy.

XLII. For "pillar" is a symbol of three things, of standing, of dedicating, of inscription. The standing and inscription have been made clear, but the dedicating demands explanation. The whole heaven and the whole world is an offering dedicated to God, and He it is who has created the offering; and all God-beloved souls, citizens of the world, consecrate themselves, allowing no mortal attraction to draw them in the opposite direction, and they never grow weary of devoting and sanctifying their own imperishable life. Foolish is the man who dedicates a pillar not to God but to himself, erecting<sup>b</sup> what pertains to creation with its tossing this way and that, and holding worthy of laudatory inscriptions things which, richly deserving to be denounced and reprov'd, had better never have been made subjects for inscriptions at all, or if once so made have been forthwith erased. This is why the holy word says expressly "Thou shalt not erect a pillar to thyself" (Deut. xvi. 22); for in reality nothing human does stand, even though some falsely say so till they burst.<sup>c</sup> Nay, they do not only think that they are firmly established but also that

<sup>b</sup> Lit. "making to stand." See App. p. 605.

<sup>c</sup> Cf. De Corona § 21 οὐδ' ἂν σὺ διαρραγῆς ψευδόμενος and ibid. § 87.

PHILO

- ἀλλὰ καὶ τιμῶν ἀξιοὶ καὶ ἐπιγραμμαμάτων εἶναι, τοῦ μόνου τιμῆς ἀξίου καὶ ἐστῶτος ὄντως ἐπιλεησμένοι. ἀποκλίναντας γὰρ αὐτοὺς καὶ ἐκτραπομένους τὴν ἐπ' ἀρετὴν ἄγουσαν ὁδὸν ἔτι μᾶλλον ἐξέτρεψεν αἰσθησις, ἢ σύμφυτος αὐτῶν<sup>1</sup> γυνή, καὶ
- 247 ἠνάγκασεν ἐξοκεῖλαι. τοιγάρτοι περικαταχθείσα<sup>2</sup> ὡς ναῦς ἢ ὄλη ψυχὴ τρόπον στήλης ἀνετέθη. τὴν γὰρ Λῶτ γυναῖκα ἐπιστραφεῖσαν εἰς τοῦπίσω φασὶν οἱ χρησμοὶ γενέσθαι στήλην ἀλός, εἰκότως
- 248 γε καὶ προσηκόντως· εἰ γὰρ τις μὴ τὰ πρόσω, τὰ θέας καὶ ἀκοῆς ἀξια, διορᾷ—ταῦτα δ' εἰσὶν ἀρεταὶ καὶ τὰ κατὰ ἀρετὰς ἔργα,—περιβλέπεται δὲ τὰ ὀπίσω καὶ τὰ νώτια, κωφὴν δόξαν καὶ τυφλὸν πλοῦτον καὶ ἀναίσθητον εὐσαρκίαν καὶ νοῦ κενὴν εὐμορφίαν καὶ ὅσα συγγενῇ τούτοις μεταδιώκων, ἄψυχος ἀνακείσεται στήλη περὶ ἑαυτὴν καταρρυεῖσα· οἱ γὰρ ἅλες οὐ βέβαιοι.
- 249 XLIII. Παγκάλως οὖν ὁ ἀσκητῆς μελέτη συνεχεῖ μαθῶν, ὅτι γένεσις κινήτων ἐξ ἑαυτῆς, τὸ δὲ ἀγένητον ἄτρεπτόν τε καὶ ἀκίνητον, ἀνίστησι τῷ θεῷ στήλην καὶ ἀναστήσας ἀλείφει· λέγεται γάρ·
- 250 “ἠλειψάς μοι στήλην.” ἀλλὰ μὴ νομίσης ἐλαίῳ λίθον ἀλείφεσθαι, ἀλλὰ τὸ περὶ τοῦ μόνου ἐστάναι τὸν θεὸν ἐν ψυχῇ δόγμα γυμνάζεσθαι καὶ συνασκεῖσθαι πρὸς ἀλειπτικῆς ἐπιστήμης, οὐχ ἢ τὰ σώματα πιαίνεται, ἀλλ' ὑφ' ἧς διάνοια ἰσχύει
- 251 κτάται καὶ ῥώμην ἀνανταγώνιστον. φίλαθλος γὰρ

<sup>1</sup> mss. αὐτῶ.

<sup>2</sup> Wend. suggests περικαταγεῖσα. But the form κατεάχθη has sufficient authority.

<sup>a</sup> See App. p. 605.

<sup>b</sup> Or “looks round with admiration,” as elsewhere in Philo.

they deserve honours and inscriptions, being oblivious of Him Who is alone deserving of honour and really stands. For when they turn away and stray out of the course which leads to virtue, sense-perception, the woman inherent in their nature, makes them stray still more, and forces them to run aground. Wherefore shattered to pieces like a ship, the whole 247 soul is set up<sup>a</sup> after the fashion of a pillar. For the sacred records say that Lot's wife having turned to what was behind her became a pillar of salt (Gen. xix. 26). And that is fit and natural, for if one has 248 not a clear view of what is farther on, of what is worth seeing and hearing, of virtues, that is to say, and virtuous actions, but turns round to look at<sup>b</sup> what is behind and at his back ; if he pursues the deafness of glory, the blindness of wealth, the stupidity of bodily robustness, and the empty-mindedness of external beauty, and all that is akin to these, he will be set up as a soulless pillar, with its substance streaming down from it ; for salt has no firmness.

XLIII. Right well, then, does the Practiser, having 249 learned by continuous exercises that creation is of itself a thing of movement, whereas the Unoriginate is free from alteration and from movement, raise a pillar to God, and having raised it anoints it : for we read " Thou anointedst unto Me a pillar " (Gen. xxxi. 13). But imagine not that here we have a 250 stone anointed with oil ; rather that the doctrine of God as the only Being that stands is exercised and practised in a soul with the trainer's science, not that by which bodies are made stout and brawny, but that by which understanding acquires a vigour and strength which no opponent can overcome. For he 251

PHILO

- καὶ φιλογυμναστῆς ὁ πρὸς τὴν τῶν καλῶν ἐπι-[658] τηδευμάτων ὠρμημένος | θήραν· ὥστ' εἰκότως τὴν ἀδελφὴν ἰατρικῆς τέχνης ἀλειπτικὴν ἐκπονήσας, πάντα τοὺς περὶ ἀρετῆς καὶ εὐσεβείας ἀλείψας καὶ συγκροτήσας λόγους, ἀνάθημα κάλλιστον καὶ 252 ἐχυρώτατον ἀναθήσει θεῷ. διὸ καὶ μετὰ τὴν τῆς στήλης ἀνάθεσιν φησιν, ὅτι " ἠΰξω μοι εὐχὴν." εὐχὴ δέ ἐστι κυρίως εἰπεῖν ἀνάθεσις, ὅποτε μὴ μόνον τὰ ἑαυτοῦ κτήματα, ἀλλὰ καὶ τὸν κεκτημένον ἑαυτὸν ἀποδιδούς διδόναι λέγεται θεῷ 253 δῶρον. " ἅγιος " γάρ φησιν " ἐστὶν ὁ τρέφων κόμην τρίχα κεφαλῆς " ὁ εὐξάμενος<sup>1</sup>. εἰ δὲ ἅγιος, ἀνάθημα πάντως, μηδενὸς ἔτ' ἀνιέρου καὶ βεβήλου 254 προσαπτόμενος. ἐγγυᾶται δέ μου τὸν λόγον ἢ προφήτης καὶ προφητοτόκος " Ἄννα, ἥς μεταληφθὲν τοῦνομα καλεῖται χάρις. τὸν γὰρ υἱὸν διδόναι φησὶ τῷ ἀγίῳ δῶρον Σαμουήλ, οὐκ ἄνθρωπον μᾶλλον, ἀλλὰ τρόπον ἐνθουσιῶντα καὶ κατεχόμενον ἐκ μανίας θεοφορήτου. Σαμουήλ δὲ ἐρμηνεύεται τεταγμένος θεῷ.
 255 Τί οὖν ἔτι, ψυχὴ, ματαιάζεις καὶ κενὰ πονεῖς, ἀλλ' οὐ φοιτᾷς πρὸς τὸν ἀσκητὴν, τὰ κατὰ τοῦ πάθους καὶ τῆς κενῆς δόξης ἀναλαβεῖν ὄπλα καὶ παλαισμάτα μαθησομένη; τάχα γὰρ μαθοῦσα ἀγέ-λαρχήσεις, οὐκ ἀσήμου καὶ ἀλόγου καὶ ἀναγώγου, 256 δοκίμου δὲ καὶ λογικῆς καὶ ποικίλης ἀγέλης· ἥς

<sup>1</sup> Most mss. have ὁ εὐξάμενος, Wend. with some εὐξάμενος. The article is needed. The argument is that the vow involves self-dedication, because, though in itself it is merely a dedication of the hair, ἅγιος shews that the man himself is included.

that has set out for the pursuit of noble practices is a lover of contest and a lover of exercises. Hence having thoroughly mastered the sister art to that of the physician, namely that of the trainer, having put all thoughts of virtue and piety through a course of training and drill, he will dedicate to God an offering most beautiful and firmly established.

Accordingly after the dedication of the pillar he goes on to say, "Thou didst vow to me a vow" (ibid.). Now a vow is in the fullest sense a dedication, seeing that a man is said to give a gift to God when he renders to Him not only his possessions but himself the possessor of them. For the lawgiver says, "He shall be holy that letteth the locks of the hair of his head grow long" (Num. vi. 5), that is, the man who has made the vow; and if he is holy, he is nothing else than a dedicated offering, seeing that he no more comes in contact with anything unhallowed and profane. What I say is vouched for by that prophetess and mother of a prophet, Hannah, whose name is in our tongue "Grace." For she says that she is giving as a gift to the Holy One her son Samuel (1 Sam. i. 11),<sup>a</sup> not meaning a human being but rather an inspired temper possessed by a God-sent frenzy. And "Samuel" means "appointed for God."

Why then, O soul, dost thou any longer trifle and engage in profitless labours, and not rather become a pupil of the Practiser, and learn to use weapons and engage in wrestlings against passion and vainglory? For haply, when thou hast learned, thou shalt be a herdsman, not of a herd without mark, without reason, without discipline, but of one bearing the stamp of genuineness, endowed with reason, and with varied

<sup>a</sup> See App. p. 605.

PHILO

εἰ γένοιο ἡγεμών, τὸ μὲν οἰκτρὸν ἀνθρώπων γένος ὀλοφυρῆ, τὸ δὲ θεῖον οὐ παύσῃ προστρεπομένη,<sup>1</sup> τὸν δὲ θεὸν οὐκ ἐπιλείψεις εὐδαιμονίζουσα, ἀλλὰ καὶ ὕμνους ἱεροπρεπεῖς στήλαις ἐγχαράξεις, ἵνα μὴ μόνον λέγῃς εὐτρόχως, ἀλλὰ καὶ ᾄδῃς μουσικῶς τὰς τοῦ ὄντος ἀρετάς. οὕτως γὰρ δυνήσῃ καὶ εἰς τὸν πατρῶον οἶκον ἐπανελθεῖν, τὴν ἐπὶ τῆς ξένης μακρὰν καὶ ἀνήνυτον ζάλην<sup>2</sup> ἐκφυγοῦσα.

<sup>1</sup> MSS. προτρεπομένη.

<sup>2</sup> The majority of mss. have ἀλήτ(θ)ειαν. I suggest ἄλην, cf. τὸν νοῦν ἐξ ἄλης πολυχρονίου πάντη πλανηθέντα De Praem. 117.

ON DREAMS, I. 256

markings. Shouldst thou become its leader, thou wilt 256 bewail the pitiable race of men, but wilt never cease to approach the Deity with supplications ; thou wilt never tire of proclaiming the blessedness of God, nay, wilt grave on pillars holy hymns, that thou mayest not only tell in eloquent language but also sing in sweet melody the excellences of Him that is. For so shalt thou be able also to return to thy father's house, and be quit of that long endless distress which besets thee in a foreign land.

ANALYTICAL INTRODUCTION TO BOOK II

THIS long treatise, the conclusion of which has been lost, seems to me to have a poverty of thought which makes it the weakest of the whole series. And though it may be merely a coincidence, it is a curious fact that it is hardly ever quoted or referred to by later writers. Further, it has less manuscript authority than any other, except De Posteritate Caini. Only one ms. used by Wendland contains it, and even this, as the many footnotes to the text will shew, has a quite unusual number of corruptions and lacunas.<sup>a</sup>

The treatise follows at once on the preceding and deals with the third kind of dreams, the characteristic of which is that they contain no direct divine message, but something is seen by the dreamer, obscure in itself but explained by the art of dream interpretation. There are three pairs of dreams, one those of Joseph himself as a boy (1-154), another of the chief baker and chief butler in prison (155-214), another of Pharaoh (215 to the end), the two last pairs being interpreted by Joseph himself.

After the distinction between the three kinds of dreams has been noted (1-4), the subject of Joseph's <sup>a</sup> It is also contained in the ms. in Trinity College Library referred to in the Introduction to De Mutatione. I have collated it and found it to be a close representation of the A used by Wendland, with much the same corruptions and lacunas. For such results as I have obtained see App. p. 606.

PHILO

two dreams is introduced (5-7) ; but, before they are discussed, we must remember what Joseph represents. Here he is not so much the politician as the representative of the ordinary mixed character in whom the claims of the soul are constantly disputed by those of the body and external things ; and in such a character vainglory (κέννη δόξα) or vanity (τυφός) is sure to appear (8-16).

The first dream begins, "I thought we were binding sheaves." After noting that "thought" indicates the vagueness of the Joseph-mind (17-20), Philo points out that the dreamer only supposes himself and his brothers to be engaged in the inferior task of binding, not of reaping, which needs, he thinks, the skill to distinguish the good corn from the worthless (21-22). This leads to a further thought on spiritual reaping. We find the phrase, "When you reap your reaping," which he takes to mean that when the harvest of virtue is reaped there is a further stage where this very reaping is reaped away in the consciousness that it is of God and not of ourselves (23-24). Some similar duplicates are adduced, and the double cave of Machpelah and the two kinds of music are taken to indicate a similar sort of distinction between our acceptance of the good in creation and our acknowledgement of its dependence on the divine, and so "Ye shall not consummate the rest of the reaping" implies that the consummation does not belong to man (25-30).

But what are the sheaves? Evidently in some degree drawn by the similarity of sound in δράγματα and πράγματα, Philo interprets them as "doings" used in the sense of chief characteristics. He describes in much the same terms as elsewhere the leading attributes of the eleven brothers (31-41). The leading attribute of Joseph is vainglory, and this is illustrated by a few incidents in Joseph's life and by the interpretation of his name as "addition," for vainglory adds luxuries to the simple life (41-47). This leads to a long commonplace against luxury as shewn in food and drink (48-51), clothing (52-53), houses (54-55), beds (56-57), unguents (58-59), drinking-cups (60-61), and golden crowns instead of flower garlands (64). Luxury, in fact, is the beast which was supposed to have devoured Joseph and thus made Jacob mourn for him, a contrast to Nahab and Abihu in whose case Moses forbade all mourning (64-67). At this point the connexion of thought gets difficult.<sup>a</sup> Cutting off the hand of the immodest woman is treated as the duty of cutting ourselves off from absorption in lower aims and contrasted with the full handful which the priest takes and offers (68-74), and we then recur to the thought of 23 ff., though stated in a different way, that the spiritual reaping of virtues must be dedicated to God (75-77).

ON DREAMS, II.

"My sheaf rose up and stood upright and your sheaves turned round and did homage to mine." This example of the arrogance of vainglory suggests to Philo the ascendancy of the tyrant in ordinary life and the need of caution in dealing with him. In such cases frank speaking is no virtue, any more than sailing in the teeth of a storm or than facing wild beasts when unarmed (78-89). Abraham did homage to the children of Heth for the cave of Machpelah, and so must the weak propitiate the mighty (90-92). The brethren, however, do not take this line, for they reply, "Shalt thou indeed be king and lord over us?"

<sup>a</sup> See note ad loc.

PHILO

This shews us that their opposition to Joseph represents the resistance of right reason to vainglory in the soul. We may dismiss, therefore, any thoughts of the unbrotherliness of the ten, and see merely the refusal of the better part within us to acknowledge any king but God (93-100). And Philo himself, while confessing his weakness, feels that even when he is most helpless he desires to follow this better judgement (101-104). And perhaps too the Joseph in us will be converted. What else indeed is suggested by the story of Joseph, with its various signs of something higher, crowned by his final acceptance by Moses, when his bones are carried by the liberated people out of Egypt? (105-109).

The second dream was that of the sun, moon and stars bowing down to Joseph. It chiefly differs from the first in being concerned with heavenly instead of earthly phenomena (110-112). Philo, after noting apparently without actual disapprobation the theory that the divine natures of the heavenly bodies do actually contend for pre-eminence (113-114), explains the dream from one point of view as describing the arrogance of those who regard themselves as superior not only to men but to nature (115-116). Thus Xerxes turned land into sea by cutting through Mount Athos and shot his arrows at the sun (117-120). The foolish Germans try to repel the tide with armed forces (121-122), and a little before in Alexandria a tyrannous ruler, when trying to coerce the Jews into Sabbath-breaking, had argued with them that, in the event of a deluge or earthquake or thunderstorm, they would not hesitate to forgo their regular customs, and that he himself was as powerful as any of these natural forces (123-129). Such a person,

ON DREAMS, II.

Philo thinks, will consider himself aggrieved if the seasons do not conform to his expectations (130-132). But a more general interpretation is possible. We may regard the sun as right reason, the moon as discipline or education, and the stars as the thoughts engendered by these two in the soul, which the lower Joseph-like thoughts would fain bring into subjection (133-135). Thus while Jacob's answer, "What is this dream which thou hast dreamt?" implies that Joseph is describing a spiritual conflict of this nature (135-138), the words that follow, "Shall I and thy mother and thy brethren bow down before thee?" are the refusal of right reason to submit to vanity (139-140). At the same time, we are told that his father kept the saying in his heart; and from this Philo diverges to the need for caution and self-distrust. How constantly do we find examples of long success ended by disaster, of good life followed by moral decay in old age (141-149)! And this thought suggests the image of the fountain of peace which we sometimes taste and then find denied to us—a sad condition, yet better than to drink our fill of the fountain of unreason, when the unreasoning powers master the governing element in the soul and produce that anarchy which the experience both of men and animals shews to be fatal to happiness (149-154).

In the dreams of the chief butler and baker the two men represent drunkenness and gluttony (155-158). The dream of the butler is then quoted in full (159). We note that its opening words, "In my sleep," are appropriate to that deep drunken sleep in which all the wicked are plunged (160-162), and also "the vine was before me" shews the love which the wicked feel for the sources of their spiritual drunkenness (162-163). But before going further we must observe that the vine may be also a symbol of gladness of the true kind. Philo describes at some length how convivial meetings shew sometimes good feeling and at other times quarrelsomeness and hatred (164-168). We find this favourable meaning of "vine" in the story of the scouting party of Numbers xiii. Those seekers for virtue who are unable to carry the main stalk of wisdom and joy cut off and carry away at least one great cluster (169-171). And how good a thing is this gladness is shewn by the application of the word to God Who is glad when men do well (172-178), and from which we may deduce that our duty is to make Him glad (179-180). But the vine of the cup-bearer is not of this sort. He will indeed plead that it cannot be, seeing that he is cup-bearer to Pharaoh, not to God Whose cup-bearer is the Logos himself (181-183). How different are these two! Pharaoh's cup-bearer is called an eunuch: the Logos on the other hand is represented by the High Priest: and what is signified spiritually by eunuch and high priest is described at some length in Philo's usual way (184-190). If we need a further description of the vine of folly we shall find it in the text which speaks of the vine of Sodom and the branch of Gomorrah, for Sodom is blindness and Gomorrah (the measure) typifies the human mind which holds itself and not God to be the measure of all things (191-194). A few more phrases in the dream are then dealt with. As πυθμῆν may mean not only stalk but root or extremity, Philo finds a figure of the way in which folly brings the soul down to extreme misery (195-199). Again, "Pharaoh's cup was in my hand" indicates that our own hands or actions are needed to give passion full scope (199-201) ; and " I squeezed the grapes into the cup " represents how the fool glories in using every drop of the drink of folly (202-204).

PHILO

ON DREAMS, II.

The dream of the chief baker is dismissed very shortly. The three baskets which he carries are the pleasures of the past, the present and the future, while the birds which descend and devour the baked meats are the divine retributions which overtake the pleasure-seeker and leave him headless and crucified (205-214).

We now pass on to the two parallel dreams of Pharaoh in which the seven lean devour the seven fat kine, and the seven bad the seven good ears. But in what has been preserved at any rate no notice is taken of the substance of these dreams, and the discussion is confined with digressions to the opening phrases of the first dream : " I thought I stood upon the edge of the river." After quoting the two dreams (215-218), Philo takes the words " I thought I stood." Here we have the Pharaoh-mind profanely claiming the standing which belongs only to God, and this thought is supported by some familiar texts (219-222). Yet God imparts this stability primarily to the Logos which under the name of Covenant is said to be made to stand upon the just Noah, thus shewing that the just man becomes as it were the pedestal (223-225) ; secondly to the wise man, for Abraham stands before God and Moses stood " between God and you," thus shewing the sage as something intermediate between God and man (226-233) ; and thirdly to the progresser who stands midway between the full life of virtue and the death of vice

PHILO

(234-236). How vain then is the claim of the Pharaoh-mind to stand (237) !

The river is speech, which may be either good or bad (238-240). In its good sense, which includes reason, we find it in the river of Eden which divides into four heads (ἀρχαί) or virtues ; and as ἀρχαί means also rules or sovereignties, we have a hint of the thought of the sage as king (241-244). Also we find in the Psalms the phrase "the river of God," clearly indicating the divine Logos (245), and as we hear also of the river "making glad the city of God," Philo digresses to consider what the city of God is. In one sense it is the world ; in another the righteous soul ; and its name of Jerusalem, vision of peace, fits this meaning well, for God is peace and dwells in the peace-loving soul (246-258). Also Abraham is given all the land from the river of Egypt to the great river Euphrates where the latter is soul and what soul loves, and the former does not mean that the river of Egypt or body is included in the gift ; rather that river is bad and soulless speaking and thinking, and its nature is typified by its producing frogs and bringing death to the fish which represent true thoughts (259-260).

The edge or lip (χέλος) reminds us that the closing of the lips gives silence, and their opening speech, and we must remember that each has its proper season (261-263). Various texts enjoining silence are quoted (264-267), but there are also occasions which call for song, like the song of triumph of Exodus xv. or that of the well in Numbers xxi., or for oratory like that enjoined in Deut. xxii. on the bringing of firstfruits, and a short meditation on the details of this passage follows (268-273). With the wicked wrong speaking is more frequent than wrong silence, and three kinds of such speaking are distinguished (274-275). There are the pleasure-lovers represented by Pharaoh who was met by Moses at the "lip" of the river (276-278); the sophists represented by the people of Egypt, who were seen dead at the "lip" of the sea (279-282); the deniers of divine providence represented by the builders of Babel of whom it is said "the whole earth was of one lip" (283-284). The confusion which overtakes this third class, who are the advocates of anarchy, is enlarged on, and while repentance will bring forgiveness, persistence can only bring the divine punishment (285-295). This point is supported by a text from Leviticus on the soul which "distinguishes with its lips to do ill or well," which Philo understands as a presumptuous claim to knowledge of the nature of good and ill. Yet this too, by proclaiming its sin, may win forgiveness (296-299).

ON DREAMS, II.

The fragment which follows begins a discussion, why the phrase "lip of the river" is only found in connexion with the river of Egypt. Philo censures the critics who regard such points as hair-splitting, and reiterates his conviction that the Scripture does not mean to teach us geography but the realities of life. The continuation is lost (302-end).

B'

[659] I. | Τὸ τρίτον εἶδος τῶν θεοπέμπτων ὀνείρων <sup>1</sup> ἀναγράφοντες εἰκότως ἂν ἐπίμαχον Μωυσῆν καλοῖ-μεν,<sup>1</sup> ἵν', ὡς ἔμαθεν οὐκ εἰδώς, ἀγνοοῦντας καὶ ἡμᾶς ἀναδιδάξῃ περὶ τῶν σημείων, ἕκαστον αὐγάζων. συνίσταται δὲ τὸ τρίτον εἶδος, ὅποταν ἐν τοῖς ὕπνοις ἐξ ἑαυτῆς ἡ ψυχὴ κινουμένη καὶ ἀναδονοῦσα ἑαυτὴν κορυβαντιᾶ καὶ ἐνθουσιῶσα δυνάμει προγνωστικῇ <sup>2</sup> τὰ μέλλοντα θεσπίζῃ. τὸ μὲν γὰρ πρῶτον ἦν ἄρχοντος τῆς κινήσεως θεοῦ καὶ ὑπηχούντος ἀοράτως τὰ ἡμῖν μὲν ἄδηλα, γνώριμα δὲ ἑαυτῶ· τὸ δὲ δεύτερον τῆς ἡμετέρας διανοίας τῇ τῶν ὄλων συγκινουμένης ψυχῇ καὶ θεοφορήτου μανίας ἀναπιμπλαμένης, ἧ<sup>2</sup> θέμις πολλὰ τῶν ἀποβησομένων <sup>3</sup> προαγορεύειν. διὸ ὁ ἱεροφάντης τὰς μὲν κατὰ τὸ πρῶτον σημαινόμενον<sup>3</sup> φαντασίας τρανῶς πάνν καὶ ἀριδῆλως ἐμήνυσεν, ἅτε τοῦ θεοῦ χρησιμοῖς σαφέσιν εἰκότα διὰ τῶν ὀνείρων ὑποβάλλοντος, τὰς δὲ κατὰ τὸ δεύτερον οὔτε σφόδρα τηλαυγῶς οὔτε σκοτίως ἄγαν· ὧν<sup>4</sup> ὑπόδειγμα ἡ ἐπὶ<sup>5</sup> τῆς οὐρανοῦ

<sup>1</sup> MSS. καλεῖ μὲν (καλοῦμεν).

<sup>2</sup> MSS. σημαινόμενος.

<sup>4</sup> MSS. ὄν.

<sup>2</sup> MSS. εἰ.

<sup>5</sup> MSS. ὑπὸ.

<sup>a</sup> See note on De Som. i. 1-2.

BOOK II

I. In setting forth the third kind of God-sent 1 dreams we may fitly summon Moses to our assistance, that, as he learned when he did not know, he may teach us too in our ignorance regarding their tokens, by throwing light on each. This third kind of dreams arises whenever the soul in sleep, setting itself in motion and agitation of its own accord, becomes frenzied, and with the prescient power due to such inspiration foretells the future. The first kind 2 of dreams we saw to be those in which God originates the movement and invisibly suggests things obscure to us but patent to Himself: while the second kind consisted of dreams in which the understanding moves in concert with the soul of the Universe and becomes filled with a divinely induced madness, which is permitted to foretell many coming events.<sup>a</sup>

In accordance with these distinctions, the Sacred 3 Guide gave a perfectly clear and lucid interpretation of the appearances which come under the first description, inasmuch as the intimations given by God through these dreams were of the nature of plain oracles. Those which fall under the second description he interpreted neither with consummate clearness nor with excessive indistinctness. A specimen of these is the Vision that appeared on the heavenly

PHILO

κλίμακος φανείσα ὄψις. αὕτη γὰρ αἰνιγματώδης μὲν ἦν, τὸ δὲ αἰνίγμα οὐ λίαν τοῖς ὀξύ καθορᾶν 4 δυναμένοις ἀπεκρύπτετο. αἱ δὲ κατὰ τὸ τρίτον εἶδος φαντασίαι μᾶλλον τῶν προτέρων ἀδηλούμεναι<sup>1</sup> διὰ τὸ βαθὺ καὶ κατακορῆς ἔχειν τὸ αἰνίγμα ἐδεήθησαν καὶ τῆς ὄνειροκριτικῆς ἐπιστήμης. πάντες γοῦν οἱ κατ' αὐτὸ ἀναγραφέντες<sup>2</sup> ὄνειροι τῷ νομοθέτῃ διακρίνονται πρὸς σοφῶν τὴν λεχθεῖσαν | 5 τέχνην ἀνδρῶν. τίνος οὖν εἰσιν οἱ ὄνει-[660] ροι; ἢ παντί τῳ δῆλον, ὅτι οἱ τοῦ Ἰωσήφ, οἱ τοῦ βασιλέως Αἰγύπτου Φαραὼ καὶ οὗς ὁ τε<sup>3</sup> ἀρχισιτο-6 ποιὸς καὶ ἀρχιονοχόος εἶδον αὐτοί<sup>4</sup>; πρέποι δ' ἂν ἀπὸ τῶν πρώτων αἰεὶ τῆς διδασκαλίας ἀπάρχεσθαι. πρῶτοι δ' εἰσιν οὗς ἐθεάσατο Ἰωσήφ, ἀπὸ δυεῖν τῶν τοῦ κόσμου μερῶν, οὐρανοῦ τε καὶ γῆς, διττὰς φαντασίας λαβῶν· ἀπὸ μὲν γῆς τὸ περὶ τὸν ἀμητὸν ὄναρ—τοιούτου δ' ἐστίν· “ ὦμην ἡμᾶς δεσμεύειν δράγματα ἐν μέσῳ τῷ πεδίῳ, ἀνέστη δὲ τὸ ἐμὸν δράγμα,”—τὸ δὲ περὶ τὸν<sup>5</sup> ζῳδιακὸν κύκλον * * *<sup>6</sup> “ ὥσπερ ὁ ἥλιος καὶ ἡ σελήνη καὶ ἔνδεκα ἀστέρες 7 προσεκύνουν με.” διάκρισις δὲ τοῦ μὲν προτέρου μετὰ σφοδρᾶς ἐπανατάσεως τοιαύτη· “ μὴ βασι-λεύων βασιλεύσεις ἐφ' ἡμῖν; ἢ κυριεύων κυριεύσεις ἡμῶν; ” τοῦ δὲ ὑστέρου ὀργὴ πάλιν δικαία· “ ἄρα γε ἐλευσόμεθα ἐγὼ καὶ ἡ μήτηρ καὶ οἱ ἀδελφοί σου προσκυνῆσαι σοι ἐπὶ τὴν γῆν; ”

8 II. Ταῦτα μὲν δὴ θεμελίῳν τρόπον προκατα-

<sup>1</sup> MSS. δηλούμεναι.      <sup>2</sup> MSS. ἀναγραφόντες.      <sup>3</sup> MSS. οὕτε.

<sup>4</sup> So MSS.: perhaps αὐτοῦ.      <sup>5</sup> MSS. τὸ.

<sup>6</sup> Both Mangey and Wend. suppose a lacuna here, e.g. ἀπὸ τοῦ οὐράνου· λέγει γὰρ. It does not seem to me absolutely necessary.

ON DREAMS, II. 3-8

stairway. For this vision was indeed enigmatic, but the riddle was not in very high degree concealed from the quick-sighted. The appearances of the 4 third kind being more obscure than the former, owing to the deep and impenetrable<sup>a</sup> nature of the riddle involved in them, demanded a scientific skill in discerning the meaning of dreams. Accordingly all the dreams of this sort recorded by the lawgiver received their interpretation at the hands of men who were experts in the aforesaid science. Whose 5 then are the dreams? Does not everybody perceive that they are those of Joseph, those of Pharaoh king of Egypt, and those which the chief baker and chief butler themselves saw? It would seem fitting 6 always to begin our teaching with those which come first; and first to come are those which Joseph saw when from the divisions of the universe, two in number, heaven and earth, two visions were presented to him. From the earth came the dream of the reaping. It runs on this wise: "Methought that we were binding sheaves in the midst of the plain, and my sheaf rose up" (Gen. xxxvii. 7). The other has to do with the zodiac: "As it were the sun and the moon and eleven stars worshipped me" (ibid. 9). On the former dream an interpretative 7 judgement is pronounced in a tone of vehement menace to this effect: "Shalt thou indeed be king over us? or shalt thou indeed be lord over us?" (ibid. 8). The latter dream again incurs well-merited displeasure: "Shall I and thy mother and thy brethren come to bow down to the ground to worship thee?" (ibid. 10).

II. So much by way of a foundation. As we go 8

<sup>a</sup> Or "intense blackness." See note on Leg. All. ii. 67.

PHILO

βεβλήσθω, τὰ δὲ ἄλλα τοῖς σοφῆς ἀρχιτέκτονος, ἀλληγορίας, ἐπόμενοι παραγγέλμασιν ἐποικοδομῶμεν, ἐκάτερον δὴ<sup>1</sup> τῶν ὄνειράτων ἀκριβοῦντες. ἃ δὲ χρῆ πρὸ ἀμφοτέρων ἀκοῦσαι, λεκτέον· τὴν τὰγαθοῦ φύσιν οἱ μὲν ἔτειναν ἐπὶ πολλά, οἱ δὲ τῷ ἀρίστῳ προσεκλήρωσαν μόνω· καὶ οἱ μὲν ἐκέρασαν, οἱ δὲ 9 καὶ ἄκρατον εἶασαν. οἱ μὲν οὖν μόνον τὸ καλὸν ἀγαθὸν εἰπόντες, ἀμιγῆ διαφυλάξαντες αὐτήν, ἀπένειμαν τῷ κρατίστῳ τῶν ἐν ἡμῖν, λογισμῷ, οἱ δὲ μίξαντες τρισὶν ἐφήρμοσαν, ψυχῇ, σώματι, τοῖς ἐκτός. εἰσὶ δὲ οὗτοι μὲν τῆς μαλακωτέρας καὶ τρυφερᾶς διαίτης, τὸν πλείω χρόνον ἐν γυναικωνίτιδι καὶ τοῖς γυναικωνίτιδος ἐκτεθηλυμμένοις ἔθεσιν<sup>2</sup> ἀπ' αὐτῶν σπαργάνων ἀνατραφέντες· οἱ δ' ἕτεροι σκληροδίαιτοι, πρὸς μὲν ἀνδρῶν κουροτροφηθέντες, ἄνδρες δὲ καὶ αὐτοὶ τὰ φρονήματα, τὸ συμφέρον πρὸ τοῦ ἡδέος ἀσπαζόμενοι καὶ τροφαῖς ἀθλητικαῖς πρὸς ἰσχὺν καὶ ῥώμην, οὐ πρὸς ἡδονήν, 10 χρώμενοι. δυεῖν δὴ θιάσων ἡγεμόνας εἰσάγει Μωυσῆς, τοῦ μὲν γενναίου τὸν αὐτομαθῆ καὶ αὐτοδίδακτον Ἰσαάκ—ἀναγράφει γὰρ αὐτὸν (ἀπο)γαλακτιζόμενον, ἀπαλαῖς καὶ γαλακτώδεσι νηπίαῖς τε καὶ παιδικαῖς τροφαῖς οὐ δικαιοῦντα χρῆσθαι τὸ παράπαν, ἀλλ' εὐτόνοις καὶ τελείαις, ἅτε ἐκ βρέφους εὔ πρὸς ἀλκὴν πεφυκότα καὶ ἐπακμάζοντα καὶ ἀνηβῶντα αἰεί,—τοῦ δὲ εἴκοντος

<sup>1</sup> MSS. διὰ.

<sup>2</sup> MSS. ἔθνεσι.

ON DREAMS, II. 8-10

on to build the superstructure let us follow the directions of Allegory, that wise Master-builder, while we investigate the details of either dream. There are, however, in both dreams some prefatory remarks to be listened to first. Some have given the nature of that which is good a wide application, making it extend to many objects ; while others have assigned it only to that which is most excellent : the former have regarded it as mixed, while the latter have left it free from admixture. Now, those who have main- 9 tained that only the morally beautiful is good, preserving it unmixed, have attributed the good to the reasoning faculty, the noblest part in us ; while those who have regarded it as mixed have associated it with three things, soul, body, and things external to us. The latter class belong to the softer and luxurious way of life, having been reared up for the greater part of the time from their very cradle in the women's quarter and in the effeminate habits of the women's quarter. Those others are austere of life, reared by men, themselves too men in spirit, eager for what will do them good rather than for what is pleasant, and taking food suited to an athlete with an eye to strength and vigour, not to pleasure.

There are two companies as leaders of which Moses 10 introduces Isaac and Joseph. The noble company is led by Isaac who learns from no teacher but himself, for Moses represents him as weaned (Gen. xxi. 8), absolutely disdaining to make any use of soft and milky food suited to infants and little children, and using only strong nourishment fit for grown men, seeing that from a babe he was naturally stalwart, and was ever attaining fresh vigour and renewing his youth. The company which yields and is ready to

PHILO

- 11 καὶ εὐενδότου τὸν Ἰωσήφ. οὗτος γὰρ οὐκ ἀλογοῖ μὲν τῶν κατὰ ψυχὴν ἀρετῶν, προμηθεῖται δὲ καὶ [661] τῆς τοῦ σώματος εὐσταθείας, | ἐφίεται (δὲ) καὶ τῆς τῶν ἐκτὸς εὐπορίας· ἀνθέλκεται δὲ εἰκότως πολλὰ τέλη τοῦ βίου προτεθειμένους, καὶ ἀντισπώμενος ὑφ' ἐκάστου σείεται<sup>1</sup> καὶ κλονεῖται μὴ 12 δυνάμενος στηριχθῆναι. καὶ γὰρ οὐδ' ὥσπερ αἱ ἔνσπονδοὶ πόλεις εἰρήνην ἄγουσι * * *<sup>2</sup> καὶ ἀντι-επιτίθενται, ὡς ἐν μέρει κρατεῖν τε καὶ ἡττᾶσθαι· πολλὴ γὰρ ἔστιν ὅτε ῥυεῖσα πρὸς<sup>3</sup> πλοῦτον καὶ δόξαν ὁρμὴ τὰς περὶ σῶμα καὶ ψυχὴν φροντίδας ἐξενίκησεν, εἶτα ἀντιβιασθεῖσα πάλιν ὑπὸ ἀμφοῖν 13 (ἢ) ὑπὸ τῆς ἐτέρας ἐνικήθη. τὸν αὐτὸν δὲ τρόπον ἀθροαὶ καὶ αἱ σώματος ἡδοναὶ καταρραγεῖσαι πάντα ἐξῆς τὰ νοητὰ ἐπέκλυσάν τε καὶ ἡφάνισαν· εἴτ' οὐκ εἰς μακρὰν ἀντιπνεύσασα σοφία λάβρω καὶ σφοδρῶ πνεύματι τό τε ῥεῦμα τῶν ἡδονῶν ἐχάλασε καὶ συνόλως τὰς διὰ τῶν αἰσθήσεων ἀπάσας σπουδὰς 14 τε καὶ φιλοτιμίας ἐπράννε. τοιοῦτος μὲν δὴ κύκλος εἰλεῖται περὶ τὴν πολύτροπον ψυχὴν αἰδίου πολέμου· καθαιρεθέντος γὰρ ἐνὸς ἐχθροῦ φύεται πάντως δυνατώτερος ἕτερος, ὕδρας τῆς πολυκεφάλου τὸν τρόπον· καὶ γὰρ ἐπ' ἐκείνης φασὶν ἀντὶ τῆς ἐκτμη-θείσης κεφαλῆς ἀναβλαστάνειν ἄλλην, αἰνιττόμενοι τὸ πολύμορφον καὶ πολύγονον τῆς ἀθανάτου κακίας 15 δυσάλωτον γένος. μηδὲν οὖν ἐν ἀπο-

<sup>1</sup> MSS. ιέται.

<sup>2</sup> Wend. suggests the insertion of αἱ ἐπιθυμίαι, ἀλλὰ πολε-μοῦσιν ἀλλήλαις. But see note on opposite page.

<sup>3</sup> MSS. περὶ.

---

<sup>a</sup> Some more neutral word or phrase is required rather

ON DREAMS, II. 11-15

give in is led by Joseph, for he is one who does not 11 indeed take no account of the excellences of the soul, but is thoughtful for the well-being of the body also,
and has a keen desire to be well off in outward things ; and he is naturally drawn in different directions since he has set before him many ends in life, and as he experiences one counter-attraction after another, he is shaken this way and that and can never attain to fixity. For indeed our aims<sup>a</sup> do not rest in peace like 12 cities under a treaty, (but engage in war and deliver attacks) and counter-attacks, in turn winning victory and suffering defeat. For at times the appetite flows strongly to wealth and reputation and completely masters the interests of body and soul, and then again is met and driven back by an opposing force, and vanquished by both or one of them. In 13 the same way the pleasures of the body descend upon us in gathered force like a cataract deluging and obliterating one after another all the things of the mind ; and then, after no long interval, Wisdom with strong and vehement counterblast both slackens the impetus of pleasures and mitigates in general all the appetites and ambitions which the bodily senses kindle in us. Such is the cycle of unceasing warfare 14 ever revolving round the many-sided soul ; for, when one foe has been laid low, another yet mightier is sure to spring up, after the fashion of the many-headed Hydra ; for we are told that on it another head grew to take the place of that which had been cut off ; and this is a figurative way of teaching how hard it is to vanquish undying vice so varied in its form, so varied in its offspring. Do not, then, 15 than Wend.'s ἐπιθυμῖαι, ε.γ. σπουδαί. The combat is not between the lusts, but between soul, body, and external interests.

PHILO

- κρίνας ποτέ προς * * *<sup>1</sup> τῷ Ἰωσήφ, ἀλλ' ἴσθι ὅτι πολυμιγοῦς καὶ κεκραμένης<sup>2</sup> δόξης ἐστὶν εἰκῶν. ἐμφαίνεται γὰρ καὶ τὸ λογικὸν ἐγκρατείας εἶδος, ὃ τῆς ἄρρενος γενεᾶς ἐστὶ, κατὰ τὸν πατέρα Ἰακῶβ
- 16 τυπωθέν· ἐμφαίνεται καὶ τὸ ἄλογον<sup>3</sup> αἰσθήσεως, μητρῶω γένει τῷ κατὰ Ῥαχὴλ ἐξεικονισθέν· ἐμφαίνεται καὶ τὸ τῆς σωματικῆς ἡδονῆς σπέρμα, ὃ ἀρχιοινοχῶν καὶ ἀρχισιτοποιῶν καὶ ἀρχιμαγεύρων συνδιαιτήσεις ἐνεσφράγισαν· ἐμφαίνεται καὶ τὸ τῆς κενῆς<sup>4</sup> δόξης, ἐφ' ἣν ὡς ἐφ' ἄρμα διὰ τὸ κοῦφον ἀναβαίνει, φυσώμενος καὶ μετέωρον αἰωρῶν<sup>5</sup> ἑαυτὸν ἐπὶ καθαιρέσει ἰσότητος.
- 17 III. Ὁ μὲν δὴ τοῦ Ἰωσήφ χαρακτήρ διὰ τῶν εἰρημένων ὑποτυποῦται· τῶν δ' ὄνειράτων ἐκάτερον μὲν ἀκριβωτέον, πρότερον δὲ τὸ περὶ τῶν δραγμάτων ἐρευνητέον. “ ὦμην ” φησὶν “ ἡμᾶς δεσμεύειν δράγματα.” τὸ μὲν “ ὦμην ” εὐθέως ἀδηλοῦντος καὶ ἐνδοιάζοντος καὶ ἀμυδρῶς ὑπολαμβάνοντος, οὐ παγίως καὶ τηλαυγῶς ὀρῶντος,
- 18 ἀνάφθεγμα<sup>6</sup> ἐστὶ. τοῖς γὰρ ἐκ βαθέος ὕπνου διανισταμένοις καὶ ἔτι ὄνειρώττουσιν ἀρμόττον λέγειν “ ὦμην,” οὐχὶ τοῖς ἐγρηγορόσι<sup>7</sup> παντελῶς καὶ
- 19 τρανώς ἐμβλέπουσιν. ἀλλ' οὐχ ὁ ἀσκητῆς Ἰακῶβ “ ὦμην ” ἐρεῖ, ἀλλ' “ ἰδοὺ κλίμαξ ἐστηριγμένη, ἧς [662] ἡ κεφαλὴ | ἀφικνεῖτο εἰς τὸν οὐρανόν,” καὶ πάλιν·

<sup>1</sup> Here there is a lacuna in A (Wend.'s ms.) of ten to eleven letters, for which he suggests -κλήρου μόνον.

<sup>2</sup> MSS. κεκρυμμένης.

<sup>3</sup> MSS. λογικόν.

<sup>4</sup> MSS. καινῆς.

<sup>5</sup> MSS. ἑώρων.

<sup>6</sup> ἀνάφθεγμα. Wend. suspected this word, which is not noted in Stephanus, nor the old L. & S. But ἀναφθέγγομαι is well supported and ἀνάφθεγμα itself is quoted in L. & S. 1927 from Philodemus as well as from here.

<sup>7</sup> MSS. ἐγρηγόρσει.

ON DREAMS, II. 15-19

select any single thing (and regard it) as Joseph's sole portion, but be well assured that he represents Opinion with its vast medley of ingredients. For there is manifest in him, on the one hand, the rational strain of self-control, which is of the masculine family, fashioned after his father Jacob : manifest, 16 again, is the irrational strain of sense-perception, assimilated to what he derives from his mother, the part of him that is of the Rachel type : manifest also is the breed of bodily pleasure, impressed on him by association with chief butlers and chief bakers and chief cooks : manifest too is the element of vain-glory, on to which as on to a chariot his empty-headedness makes him mount up, when (Gen. xli. 43) puffed with pride he lifts himself aloft to overthrow equality from its seat.

III. In what we have said so far we have been 17 giving a rough sketch of Joseph's character. We must now consider in detail each of his dreams. And the one which must be examined first is the one concerning the sheaves. "Methought," says he, "that we were binding sheaves" (Gen. xxxvii. 7). The very first word, "methought," is the utterance of one at a loss, hesitating, dimly supposing, not seeing steadily and distinctly. For "methought" 18 is a word which becomes those waking up out of deep sleep and still in dreamland, not those who are thoroughly awake and see things clearly. You will 19 not find the Practiser Jacob saying "methought," but "behold a stairway firmly fixed, whose top reached to heaven" (Gen. xxviii. 12), and again "at

PHILO

- “ ἤνικα ἐνεκίσσων τὰ πρόβατα, εἶδον τοῖς ὀφθαλμοῖς αὐτὰ ἐν τῷ ὕπνῳ, καὶ ἰδοὺ οἱ τράγοι καὶ οἱ κριοὶ ἀνέβαινον ἐπὶ τὰ πρόβατα καὶ τὰς αἴγας, διάλευκοι καὶ ποικίλοι καὶ σποδοειδεῖς ῥαντοί.”
- 20 τῶν γὰρ τὸ καλὸν δι’ ἑαυτὸ αἰρετὸν νομιζόντων καὶ τὰς ἐν τοῖς ὕπνοις φαντασίας εἰλικρινεστέρας καὶ καθαρωτέρας ἐξ ἀνάγκης εἶναι συμβέβηκεν, ὥσπερ καὶ τὰς μεθ’ ἡμέραν δοκιμωτέρας πράξεις.
- 21 IV. “Αγαμαὶ δ’, ὅταν ἀκούω τοῦ διηγουμένου τὸ ὄναρ, ὅτι ὑπέλαβε δράγματα καταδεῖν, οὐ θερίζειν. ἐκεῖνο μὲν ἰδιωτῶν καὶ ὑπηρετῶν ἔργον, τοῦτο δ’ ἡγεμόνων καὶ γεωργίας ἐμπειροτάτων τὸ
- 22 ἐπιτήδευμα. τὸ γὰρ δύνασθαι διακρίνειν σκυβάλων ἀναγκαῖα καὶ τροφίμα μὴ τροφίμων καὶ νόθων γνήσια καὶ ἀνωφελοῦς ρίζης καρπὸν ὠφελιμώτατον, μὴ ἐν οἷς ἡ γῆ βλαστάνει μᾶλλον ἢ<sup>1</sup>
- 23 διάνοια φύει, τελειοτάτης ἀρετῆς ἐστίν. ὁ γοῦν ἱερὸς λόγος τοὺς ὀρώντας εἰσάγει θερίζοντας καί, τὸ παραδοξότατον, οὐ κριθὰς ἢ πυρούς, ἀλλὰ τὸν θερισμόν αὐτὸν ἐκθερίζοντας· λέγεται οὖν· “ ὅταν θερίζητε τὸν θερισμόν ὑμῶν, οὐ συντελέσετε τὸ
- 24 λοιπὸν τοῦ θερισμοῦ.” βούλεται γὰρ τὸν ἀστείον οὐ μόνον κριτὴν εἶναι τῶν διαφερόντων, <διακρίνοντα> καὶ διαστέλλοντα <τὰ><sup>2</sup> ἐξ ὧν γίνεται τινα καὶ τὰ γεννώμενα, ἀλλὰ καὶ αὐτὸ τὸ δύνασθαι διακρίνειν δοκεῖν ἀναιρεῖν, ἀμῶντα τὸν ἀμητὸν καὶ τὴν ἰδίαν ἐπιβολὴν<sup>3</sup> ἀποτέμνοντα διὰ τὸ καὶ πεποιθέναι καὶ Μωυσεῖ λέγοντι πιστεύειν, ὅτι “ μόνου τοῦ θεοῦ ἡ κρίσις ἐστίν,” παρ’ ὧν αἱ συγκρίσεις

<sup>1</sup> Perhaps μᾶλλον ἢ <ἢ ἢ> διάνοια.

<sup>2</sup> <τὰ> my insertion.

<sup>3</sup> So Mangey: mss. and Wend. ἐπιβουλήν. For ἰδίαν ἐπιβολὴν cf. De Som. i. 1.

ON DREAMS, II. 19-24

the time that the sheep conceived, I saw them with my eyes in my sleep, and behold the he-goats and the rams leaped upon the sheep and the goats wholly white, and streaked, and sprinkled as though with ashes " (Gen. xxxi. 10, 11). For the very visions seen 20 in their sleep are of necessity clearer and purer in the case of those who deem the morally beautiful eligible for its own sake, even as their doings by day are bound to be more worthy of approbation.

IV. Now, when I listen to him who is telling the 21 dreams I marvel at his deeming that they were tying up sheaves, not reaping them. The former is the work of unskilled underlings, the latter the business of masters and of those thoroughly well versed in farm work. For the power to distinguish necessities of 22 life from refuse, and plants which supply nourishment from those which do not, and genuine from spurious, and a highly profitable fruitage from a root that is devoid of profit, in things yielded by the understanding, not in those which the soil puts forth, is a mark of consummate excellence. So the sacred story 23 represents those whose eyes are open as reaping, and, what is most unexpected, not reaping barley or wheat but reaping out the reaping itself : accordingly it is said " When ye reap your reaping, ye shall not finish that which remains of the reaping " (Lev. xix. 9). For the lawgiver wishes the virtuous man to be not 24 only a judge of things that differ, distinguishing and separating things which produce and their productions, but to do away with the very conceit that he has the power to distinguish, mowing the very mowing and cutting away the workings of his own mind, in obedience to and belief in Moses' saying that " judgement belongs to God only " (Deut. i. 17),

PHILO

- καὶ αἱ διακρίσεις τῶν ἀπάντων· ὑφ' οὗ καλὸν ὁμολογεῖν ἠττάσθαι καὶ τῆς ἀοιδίμου νίκης εὐ-25 κλεέστερον. ὁμοίον ἐστὶ τῷ τὸν θερισμὸν θερίζειν τὸ δις περιτέμνειν, ὅπερ ὡς ὅτε<sup>1</sup> ἔκαινούργησεν ἐξευρῶν περιτομῆς περιτομήν, τὴν “ἀγνείαν ἀφαγνίζεσθαι,<sup>2</sup>” τὴν κάθαρσιν τῆς ψυχῆς αὐτὴν καθαίρεσθαι, παραχωροῦντας τῷ θεῷ τὸ φαιδρύνειν καὶ μηδέποτε νομίσαντας ἰκανοὺς εἶναι ἑαυτοὺς ἄνευ θείας ἐπιφροσύνης τὸν κηλίδων ἀνάμεστον ἐκνύσασθαι καὶ ἀπολούσασθαι<sup>3</sup> βίον.
 26 ταύτης ἐστὶ τῆς συγγενείας καὶ τὸ διπλοῦν σπήλαιον, αἱ διπλαῖ καὶ περιμάχητοι μνήμαι,<sup>4</sup> ἧ τε περὶ τοῦ γεγονότος καὶ ἧ περὶ τοῦ πεπονηκότος, αἷς ἐντρέφεται ὁ ἀστείος, θεωρῶν μὲν τὰ ἐν κόσμῳ, φιλοπευστῶν δὲ καὶ περὶ τοῦ γεννήσαντος πατρός.
 27 ἀφ' ὧν οἶμαι καὶ τὴν ἐν μουσικῇ δις διὰ πασῶν εὔρεθῆναι συμφωνίαν· ἔδει γὰρ καὶ τὸ ἔργον καὶ τὸν δημιουργὸν τελειοτάταις μελωδίαις εὐδαιμονί-28 ζεσθαι δυσίν, οὐχὶ ταῖς αὐταῖς. ἐπειδὴ γὰρ τὰ [663] ὑμνούμενα | διέφερον, ἀναγκαῖον καὶ τὰς μελωδίας καὶ συμφωνίας διακεκρίσθαι, τὴν μὲν συνημμένην ἀπονέμοντας<sup>5</sup> τῷ συνημμένῳ καὶ ἐκ διαφερόντων

<sup>1</sup> Wend. suggests ὅπερ ὡσαύτως: perhaps ὡσπερ ποτέ.

<sup>2</sup> mss. ἀφανίζεσθαι.

<sup>3</sup> mss. ἐκνύσαι καὶ ἀπολούσαι.

<sup>4</sup> So mss.: Wend. γνώμαι. See note a below.

<sup>5</sup> Mangey ἀπονέμοντα: Wend. conjectures ἀπονέμοντος <τοῦ λόγου>: or perhaps <τοῦ οντος>? I can see no construction for either -τα or -τας.

---

<sup>a</sup> Memories (μνήμαι), a quite intelligible word, though in itself less natural than judgements or opinions (γνώμαι), is, I believe, right. Cf. De Post. 62, where after speaking of the “double cave” (LXX for Machpelah) he says ἡ Χεβρών αὐτῆ, μνήμας ἐπιστήμης καὶ σοφίας θησαυροφυλακοῦσα. The thought is with Whom in all matters comparisons and distinctions rest : to acknowledge defeat at whose hands is a noble thing and more glorious than far-famed victory. Like the "reaping the reaping" is the 25 two-fold circumcision, which we meet with in such a case as that of the lawgiver devising as a new practice a circumcision of circumcision (Gen. xvii. 13), or "the consecration of a consecration" (Num. vi. 2), that is, the purification of the very purification of the soul, when we yield to God the prerogative of making bright and clean, and never entertain the thought that we ourselves are sufficient apart from the divine overseeing guidance to cleanse our life and remove from it the defilements with which it 26

ON DREAMS, II. 24-28

To this class belongs also the "double cave" (Gen. xxiii. 9), that pair of precious memories<sup>a</sup> concerned, one with all that has come into being, the other with Him who has made it. These constitute the nurture of the man of worth, for whom all things in the universe are objects of contemplation, and who loves to inquire also concerning the Father who brought them into being. I imagine 27 that the discovery of the double diapason<sup>b</sup> in music is to be traced to this same pair. For both the work and its Fashioner must needs be celebrated by two quite perfect melodies, not the same in each case. For since the themes of praise were different it was 28 necessary for the corresponding musical harmonies to be distinct also, the conjunct assigned to the conjunct universe, compacted as it is of different perhaps drawn from the word μνημεῖον applied to the cave in Gen. xxiii. 6. For the favourable way in which duality is regarded in these sections, contrasted with that in § 70, see note ad loc., App. p. 608.

<sup>b</sup> See App. pp. 606 f.

PHILO

- ἀρμοσθέντι κόσμῳ, τὴν δὲ διεζευγμένην τῷ πάσης γενέσεως διεζευγμένῃ κατὰ τὴν οὐσίαν θεῷ.
- 29 γνώμην δὲ ἀποφαίνεται πάλιν ὁ ἱεροφάντης φιλάρετον λέγων· “οὐ συντελέσετε<sup>1</sup> τὸ λοιπὸν τοῦ θερισμοῦ,” μεμνημένος τῆς ἐξ ἀρχῆς ὑποθέσεως, καθ’ ἣν ὠμολόγει “τὸ τέλος εἶναι κυρίου,” παρ’ ὃν τὸ<sup>2</sup> κῦρος καὶ ἡ τούτων βεβαίωσις ἐστίν.
- 30 ἀλλὰ γὰρ ὁ τοῦ θερίζειν ἀμύητος αὐχεῖ λέγων<sup>3</sup>. “ὦμην ἂ μὴ ἐθέρισα καταδεῖν σὺν ἑτέροις δράγματα,” καὶ οὐκ ἐλογίσατο παρ’ ἑαυτῷ, ὅτι δούλων καὶ ἀνεπιστημόνων ἦδε ἐστὶν ὑπηρεσία, καθὰ καὶ μικρῷ πρότερον εἶπον.
- 31 Δράγματα δ’ ἀλληγοροῦντές φαμεν εἶναι πράγματα, ὧν ἕκαστος ὡς οἰκείας τροφῆς ἐπιδράττεται, ἐν ἣ ἕξεισθαι καὶ βιώσεσθαι τὸν αἰῶνα ἐλπίζει.
- 32 V. μυρίαὶ μὲν οὖν τῶν δραγμάτων, λέγω δὴ τῶν ὡσανεὶ τρεφόντων πραγμάτων, διαφοραί, μυρίαὶ δὲ καὶ τῶν ἐπιδραττομένων καὶ αἰρουμένων τὰ δράγματα, ὡς ἀπάσας οὐτ’ εἰπεῖν οὐτ’ ἐπινοῆσαι δυνατόν· τινὰς δ’ οὐκ ἄτοπον δείγματος ἔνεκα ἐρμηνεῦσαι, ὧν καὶ τὸ ὄναρ διηγούμενος ἐπεμνήσθη.
- 33 φησὶ γὰρ τοῖς ἀδελφοῖς· “ὦμην ἡμᾶς δεσμεύειν δράγματα.” ἀδελφοὶ δ’ εἰσὶν ὁμοπάτριοι μὲν δέκα, ὁμογάστριος δὲ εἷς· ἐκάστου δὲ αὐτῶν τοῦνομα σύμβολον ἀναγκαιοτάτου πράγματός ἐστι, <sup>1</sup> MSS. συντελέσαι.

<sup>2</sup> MSS. παρόντος.

<sup>3</sup> MSS. λέγειν.

---

<sup>a</sup> Or perhaps better “you will not,” i.e. Philo, as elsewhere, understands the indicative (ἀποφαίνεται), to lay down a spiritual fact rather than a command. See note on De Som. i. 101, and references there given. The section has perhaps no connexion of thought with the preceding. His parts, the disjunct reserved for Him Who is in virtue of His existence disjunct from all creation, even God. There is again a statement breathing love of virtue 29 expressed in the words of the Sacred Guide, "Ye shall not<sup>a</sup> make an end of what remains of the reaping" (Lev. xix. 9), for he does not forget the principle with which he set out, acknowledging that "the end is the Lord's" (Num. xxxi. 28 ff.), with whom rests the lordship and establishment of these things.

ON DREAMS, II. 28-33

But in fact the man who has never learned the 30 mysteries of reaping vaunts him saying, "Methought I was in company with others binding sheaves which I had not reaped" (Gen. xxxvii. 7), and failed, as I pointed out a little while ago, to take into account that this is a service performed by unskilled slaves.

When we assign to words their figurative meaning 31 we say that sheaves are "doings" which each of us grasps with the hand as his proper nourishment, hoping that he will find life and occupation therein for ever. V. Now, the varieties of the sheaves, that 32 is to say of the doings which may be called our nourishment, are so countless, so countless also the various sorts of men who lay hold of and make choice of the sheaves, that it is impossible to recount or even to conceive of them all. It may not, however, be out of place to instance some of these varieties which are introduced in his story of his dream. For he says to 33 his brothers, "Methought we were binding sheaves" (l.c.). Brothers he has ten who are sons of the same father as he, one who is son of the same mother; and the name of each of them is the symbol of a most point in quoting the text lay in the first part "reap the reaping," but as usual he is drawn into making some comment on the rest of the verse.

PHILO

- Ῥουβὴν μὲν εὐφυῆς—υἱὸς γὰρ ὄρων καλεῖται, ἧ μὲν υἱός, οὐ τέλειος, ἧ δὲ ὄρατικός καὶ ὀξύ καθορῶν, 34 εὐφυῆς,—μαθήσεως δὲ Συμεῶν—εἰσακοῇ γὰρ ἐρμηνεύεται,—ἐνεργειῶν δὲ καὶ πράξεων σπουδαίων καὶ λειτουργιῶν ἁγίων Λευί, τῶν δὲ εἰς θεὸν ᾠδῶν τε καὶ ὕμνων Ἰούδας, Ἰσάαχαρ δὲ μισθῶν, οἱ ἐπ' ἔργοις καλοῖς ἀποδίδονται<sup>1</sup>—τάχα δ' αὐτὰ τὰ ἔργα ὁ τέλειος μισθὸς ἦν,—Ζαβουλῶν δὲ φωτός, ἐπειδὴ ρύσις<sup>2</sup> νυκτερίας ὀνομάζεται—ρέουσης δὲ καὶ ἀπολιπούσης νυκτὸς ἐξ ἀνάγκης φῶς ἀνίσχει,— 35 διακρίσεως δὲ καὶ τομῆς<sup>3</sup> πραγμάτων Δάν, ἐπιθέσεως δὲ καὶ ἀντεπιθέσεως πειρατικῆς Γάδ, Ἀσὴρ δὲ τοῦ φυσικοῦ<sup>4</sup> πλούτου—μακαρισμὸς γὰρ ἐρμηνεύεται, ἐπειδὴ μακάριον κτῆμα νενόμισται 36 πλοῦτος,—εἰρήνης δὲ Νεφθαλεῖμ—διανοίγεται (γὰρ) καὶ εὐρύνεται πάντα εἰρήνῃ, ὡς συγκλείεται [664] | πολέμῳ· τὸ δὲ ὄνομα μεταληφθὲν πλατυσμὸς ἢ διανεωγμένον ἐστί,—Βενιαμὴν δὲ τοῦ νέου καὶ γέροντος χρόνου· λέγεται γὰρ ἐρμηνευθεὶς υἱὸς ἡμερῶν<sup>5</sup> εἶναι, ἡμέραις δὲ καὶ νυξίν ὁ νέος ὁμοῦ καὶ γέρον αἰῶν<sup>6</sup> ἀναμετρεῖται.
 37 Ἐπιδράττεται γοῦν ἕκαστος τῶν οἰκείων καὶ ἐπιδραξάμενος τὰ μέρη πάντα συνδεῖ· ὁ μὲν εὐφυῆς εὐθιξίας, ἐπιμονῆς, μνήμης, ἐν οἷς ἡ εὐφυῆς· ὁ δὲ εὐμαθῆς ἀκροάσεως, ἡσυχίας, προσοχῆς· ὁ δὲ ἐγχειρητῆς [τῆς] θαρραλεότητος, παρα-38 κекινδυνευμένης ἐβτολμίας· ὁ δὲ εὐχάριστος ἐπαί<sup>1</sup> ἐπιδίδονται.

<sup>4</sup> MSS. ψυχικοῦ.

<sup>2</sup> MSS. φύσις.

<sup>5</sup> MSS. ἡμῶν.

<sup>3</sup> MSS. τροπῆς.

<sup>6</sup> MSS. αἰῶνα.

ON DREAMS, II. 33-38

essential "doing." "Reuben" is the symbol of good natural endowments, for "seeing son" he is called, in so far as he is a son not perfect, but in so far as he is a man with power to see and keenness of vision, well endowed by nature. Symeon, which 34 means "diligent listening," is the symbol of aptness to learn; Levi of excellent activities and practices and sacred ministries; Judah of songs and hymns addressed to God; Issachar of rewards rendered as recompense for noble deeds, the deeds themselves, it may be, constituting the perfect reward; Zabulon of light, since he is named "night's flowing," and when night fails and flows away, light of necessity dawns; of distinguishing and analysing matters Dan is the 35 symbol; Gad of piratical attack and counter-attack; Asher, whose name signifies "felicitation," symbolizes natural wealth, which has the reputation of being a possession conferring felicity; Naphthali's name 36 denotes a "broadening" or "flung wide open," and so he is a symbol of peace, by which all things are opened out and given width, just as they are shut in by war. Benjamin is a symbol of time, both that of youth and that of old age, for his name is said to mean "son of days," and youth and old age are alike measured by days and nights.

Thus each one of them grasps the sheaves that 37 are proper to him, and when he has grasped them binds all these parts together. The man well endowed by nature grasps quickness of apprehension, persistence, goodness of memory, the qualities in which excellence of natural endowment shows itself; the apt learner grasps listening, silence, attention; the enterprising man, venturesomeness and courage ready to take risks; the man of thanksgiving takes 38

PHILO

- νων, ἐγκωμίων, ὕμνων, εὐδαιμονισμῶν κατὰ τε τὸ λέγειν καὶ τὸ ἄδειν· ὁ δὲ μισθῶν ἐφιέμενος ἀόκνου συνεχείας, τλητικωτάτης καρτερίας καὶ
- 39 ἐπιμελείας σὺν εὐκαταφροντίστῳ<sup>1</sup> ταχυτήτι· ὁ δὲ φῶς ἀντὶ σκότους μεταδιώκων ἐγρηγόρσεως, ὄξυωπίας· ὁ δὲ τομῆς καὶ διακρίσεως πραγμάτων ζηλωτῆς λόγων ἠκονημένων, τοῦ μὴ ὑφ' ὁμοίων ὡς τῶν αὐτῶν ἀπατάσθαι, τοῦ μὴ πρὸς χάριν,
- 40 τοῦ ἀδεκάστου· ὁ δὲ πειρατικώτερον ἐνεδρεύων τοὺς ἀντιλοχῶντας ἀπάτης, φενακισμοῦ, γοητείας, σοφισμάτων, προσποιήσεως, ὑποκρίσεως, ἅπερ ἐξ ἑαυτῶν ψεκτὰ ὄντα κατ' ἐχθρῶν γινόμενα ἐπαινῆται· ὁ δὲ πλουτεῖν τὸν φύσεως πλοῦτον ἐπιτηδεύων ἐγκρατείας, ὀλιγοδετίας· ὁ δὲ εἰρήνης ἐρῶν εὐνομίας,
- 41 εὐδικίας,<sup>2</sup> ἀτυφίας, ἰσότητος. VI. ἐκ τούτων τὰ τῶν ὁμοπατρίων ἀδελφῶν δράγματα καταδεῖται, τὰ<sup>3</sup> δὲ τοῦ ὁμογαστρίου ἐξ ἡμερῶν καὶ χρόνου, τῶν οὐδενὸς αἰτίων ὡς ἀπάντων αἰτίων.
- 42 αὐτὸς δὲ ὁ ἐνυπνιαστής καὶ ὄνειροπόλος—ἦν γὰρ ἀμφοτέρα—τῆς κενῆς δόξης ὡς μεγίστου καὶ λαμπροτάτου καὶ βιωφελεστάτου κτήματος ἐπιδράττεται. διὸ πρῶτον μὲν ἀπ' ὄνειράτων, ἃ νυκτὶ φίλα, τῷ βασιλεῖ τῆς σωματικῆς χώρας γνωρίζεται, οὐκ ἀπὸ πραγμάτων τηλαυγῶν ἐναργείας,<sup>4</sup> ἃ πρὸς ἐπίδειξιν ἡμέρας δεῖται.
- 43 εἶτ' ἐπίτροπος ἢ κηδεμὼν Αἰγύπτου πάσης ἀνα-

<sup>1</sup> So MSS.: Wend. ἀνανταγωνίστῳ. See App. p. 607.

<sup>2</sup> MSS. εὐδοκίας.

<sup>3</sup> MSS. τοῦ.

<sup>4</sup> MSS. ἐνεργείας.

<sup>a</sup> i.e. everything happens in time, but is not caused by it. Wend.'s proposed emendation τῶν δ' οὐδενὸς αἰτίων, ὧν δ'

hold of commendations, eulogies, odes, panegyrics both in speech and song ; the man who is bent on rewards, lays his hand on unflinching assiduity, fortitude that never gives in, and the carefulness in which speed is combined with caution ; he who is in pursuit 39 of light replacing darkness grasps wakefulness and keen-sightedness ; the man who aims at analysis and accurate distinctions, lays hold of keen-edged arguments, of power to resist the delusion of confusing likeness and identity, of impartiality, of integrity ; he 40 who pirate-like counters ambush by ambush grasps trickery, quackery, sorcery, fallacies, pretence, feigning, practices which are in themselves reprehensible but when resorted to in dealing with enemies are belauded ; he that makes it his object to be rich in nature's riches, will lay his hands on self-control and parsimony ; the lover of peace on good order, just dealing, freedom from arrogance, equality. VI. These are the constituent parts of the sheaves 41 bound by the brothers of the dreamer, sons of the same father as he, while the sheaf of his uterine brother is made up of days and time, cause of nothing as cause of everything.<sup>a</sup> The dreamer 42 himself, interpreter of dreams to boot, lays hold of vainglory, deeming it a possession of highest importance and splendour and advantage to human life. Accordingly it is in the first instance from dreams, things beloved of night, that he becomes known to the sovereign of the land of the body, not from "doings" luminous with the self-evidence of manifest fact, things which need day to exhibit them. The next step is that he is proclaimed procurator or 43 οὐκ ἀνευ πάντα gives the sense, but is both arbitrary and unnecessary.

PHILO

κηρύττεται, ταῖς τιμαῖς τοῦ βασιλέως οἰσόμενος δευτερεία, ἅπερ ἤττης καὶ ἀτιμίας ἀφανέστερα καὶ καταγελαστότερα παρὰ φρονήσει γράφεται 44 δικάζουση. εἶτα “ κλοιὸν χρυσοῦν,” ἀγχόνην ἐπιφανῆ, κύκλον καὶ τροχὸν ἀνάγκης ἀτελευτήτου, περιτίθεται<sup>1</sup>—οὐκ ἀκολουθίαν καὶ τὸ ἐξῆς ἐν βίῳ καὶ τὸν εἰρμὸν τῶν τῆς φύσεως πραγ-[665] μάτων, ὡς ἡ Θάμαρ· οὐ | γὰρ κλοιός, ἀλλὰ ὀρμίσκος αὐτῆς ὁ κόσμος—καὶ δακτύλιον μέντοι βασιλικόν, δῶρον (ἄδωρον),<sup>2</sup> πίστιν ἄπιστον, ἐναν-τιούμενον τῷ δοθέντι πάλιν<sup>3</sup> τῇ Θάμαρ ὑπὸ τοῦ 45 βασιλέως τοῦ ὀρώντος, Ἰσραήλ, Ἰούδα. δίδωσι γὰρ οὗτος τῇ ψυχῇ σφραγίδα, πάγκαλον δῶρον, διδάσκων ὅτι (ὁ θεός) ἀσχημάτιστον οὖσαν τὴν τῶν πάντων οὐσίαν ἐσχημάτισε καὶ ἀτύπτωτον ἐτύπωσε καὶ ἄποιον ἐμόρφωσε καὶ τελειώσας τὸν ὅλον ἐσφράγισε κόσμον εἰκόνι καὶ ἰδέα, τῷ ἑαυτοῦ 46 λόγῳ. ἀλλ’ ἐκεῖνός γε<sup>4</sup> καὶ ἐπὶ τὸ δευτερεῖον ἄνεισιν ἄρμα [ἧ] ὑποτυφούμενος ὑπ’ αἰώρας φρενῶν καὶ κενοῦ φυσήματος καὶ σιταρχεῖ, τῷ σώματι θησαυροφυλακῶν καὶ πανταχόθεν αὐτῷ πορίζων τὰς τροφάς· ἐπιτειχισμὸς δὲ κατὰ τῆς 47 ψυχῆς βαρὺς οὗτός ἐστι. τῇ δὲ προαιρέσει καὶ ζηλώσει τοῦ βίου μαρτυρεῖ καὶ τοῦνομα οὐχ ἦκιστα· πρόσθεσις γὰρ Ἰωσήφ ἐρμηνεύεται. κενὴ δὲ δόξα προστίθησιν αἰεὶ γνησίῳ μὲν τὸ νόθον,

<sup>1</sup> MSS. περιτιθέναι.

<sup>2</sup> Cf. Soph. Ajax, 665.

<sup>3</sup> MSS. αὐτῆς: Mangey αὐτῇ.

<sup>4</sup> MSS. τε.

<sup>a</sup> Or “cord,” cf. De Fug. 150, De Mut. 135. The interpretation of the ὀρμίσκος given here combines the two different interpretations given in those passages. See note on De Fuga 150.

ON DREAMS, II. 43-47

protector of all Egypt, to stand second only to the sovereign in the signs of honour shewn to him, a position set down as more insignificant and absurd in wisdom's judgement than the infliction of indignity and defeat.

In the next place he puts 44 round his neck "a golden collar" (Gen. xli. 41 f.), a manifest halter, a circlet and hoop of unending necessity, not a life of orderly sequence, not the chain which marks Nature's doings: these are properties of Tamar, whose adornment is not a collar but a necklace<sup>a</sup> (Gen. xxxviii. 18). Yes, and he puts on his finger a royal ring (Gen. xli. 42), a gift and pledge, by which nothing is given, nothing pledged, in sharp contrast once more to that which was given to Tamar by Judah, king of the nation that sees, even Israel. For this king gives the soul a seal (Gen. 45 xxxviii. 18), a gift all-beauteous, by which he teaches it that when the substance of the universe was without shape and figure God gave it these; when it had no definite character God moulded it into definiteness, and, when He had perfected it, stamped the entire universe with His image and an ideal form, even His own Word.<sup>b</sup>

To go back to Joseph. 46 He mounts the second chariot (Gen. xli. 43), elated by mental dizziness and empty conceit, and becomes the victualler (ibid. 48) and keeper of the body's treasuries, providing food for it from all quarters: and thus threatens serious danger to the soul. Not 47 the least significant testimony to his principle and ambition for life is his name. "Joseph" means an "adding," and vainglory is always making additions. To what is genuine it adds what is counterfeit, to οἰκείῳ δὲ τὸ ἀλλότριον, ἀληθεῖ<sup>1</sup> δὲ τὸ ψεῦδος, αὐτάρκει δὲ τὸ πλεονάζον, ζωῆ δὲ θρύψιν, βίῳ δὲ τύφον.

<sup>b</sup> Cf. De Mut. 135. For the distinction between εἰκῶν and ἰδέα see App. p. 607.

PHILO

- 48 VII. Τί δ' ἐστὶν ὁ βούλομαι δηλοῦν, σκόπει. σιτίοις καὶ ποτοῖς τρεφόμεθα, κἂν ἢ εὐτελεστάτη μᾶζα καὶ ὕδωρ ναματιαῖον. τί οὖν ἡ κενὴ δόξα προσεπέθηκεν ἀμῆτων καὶ μελιπήκτων πεμμάτων γένη μυρία καὶ οἴνων ἀμυθῆτων πολυέργους καὶ παμποικίλους κράσεις πρὸς ἀπόλαυσιν ἡδονῆς μᾶλλον ἢ πρὸς μετουσίαν τροφῆς παρηρτυμένας;
- 49 πάλιν ἡδύσματα πρὸς ἐδωδὴν ἀναγκαῖα γήτεια καὶ λάχανα καὶ πολλὰ τῶν ἀκροδρῦων καὶ ἔτι τυρὸς καὶ εἴ τι ἄλλο ὁμοιότροπον· εἰ δὲ θέλεις, ἐπὶ σαρκοβόρων ἀνθρώπων ἰχθύς ἔτι καὶ κρέας πρὸς
- 50 τούτοις γράφομεν. ἄρ' οὖν οὐκ αὐταρκες ἦν ἀπανθρακίσαντας καὶ αὐτοσχεδίως ὀπτήσαντας πυρὶ τρόπον ἡρωικῶν ὄντως ἀνδρῶν προσφέρεσθαι; ἀλλ' οὐκ ἐπὶ ταῦτα<sup>2</sup> ὁ γαστρίμαργος μόνον ὄρμᾳ, σύμμαχον δὲ τὴν κενὴν δόξαν λαβὼν καὶ τὸ ἐν αὐτῷ λίχνον πάθος ἐγείρας ὀψαρτύτας καὶ τραπεζοποιούς εὐδοκίμους τὴν τέχνην ἀναζητεῖ καὶ περι-
- 51 βλέπεται. οἱ δὲ τὰ κατὰ τῆς ταλαινῆς γαστρὸς ἐκ πολλῶν χρόνων ἀνευρημένα δελέατα ἀνακινήσαντες καὶ χυλῶν ιδιότητας σκευάσαντές τε καὶ διαθέντες ἐν κόσμῳ προσσαίνουσι καὶ τιθασεύουσι γλῶτταν· εἴτ' εὐθύς ἀγκιστρεύονται τῶν αἰσθήσεων τὴν ἐπιβάθραν, γεῦσιν, δι' ἧς ἀντ' ἐλευθέρου δοῦλος ὁ δειπνοθήρας οὐκ εἰς μακρὰν ἀνεφάνη.
- 52 τίς γε μὴν οὐκ οἶδεν, ὅτι ἀμπεχόνῃ πρὸς τὰς [666] ἀπὸ κρυμοῦ | καὶ θάλπους ἐγγινομένας βλάβας τῷ

<sup>1</sup> MSS. ἀληθέσι.

<sup>2</sup> MSS. τούτων.

ON DREAMS, II. 47-52

what is appropriate what is alien, to what is true what is false, to what is sufficient what is excessive, to vitality debauchery, to life's maintenance vanity.

VII. Mark what it is that I wish to make clear. 48 Food and drink nourishes us, though it be the plainest barley-cake and water from the spring. Why then has vainglory superadded countless sorts of milk cakes and honied pastry and elaborate and diversified blends of innumerable wines highly seasoned with a view to indulgence in pleasure rather than partaking of nourishment? Again, relishes of the simplest 49 kind are onions, greens, many fruits and cheese, and anything else of that kind as well : if you like, we will put down beside these fish and meat in the case of men who are not vegetarians. Would it not, then, 50 have been quite sufficient, after broiling them on the coals or roasting them in a rough and ready way just as real heroes used to do,<sup>b</sup> to eat them? Nay, this is not all that your epicure craves for. Having procured the alliance of vainglory and stirred up the greediness within him he is on the look-out for and hunts up pastry-cooks to dress their food and serve their table, men who are famous masters of their art.
These set at work the baits that have been found out 51 ages ago to tempt our miserable belly, and make up and arrange in proper order decoctions of special flavour with which they coax the tongue into subservience : hereupon they forthwith get on to their hook the sense of taste which gives them access to the senses in general : and by means of taste the glutton is quickly revealed as no freeman but a slave. Clothing, as everybody knows, was 52 produced at first to guard against the harm done to

<sup>a</sup> See App. p. 607.

<sup>b</sup> Cf. e.g. Il. ix. 211 ff.

PHILO

- σώματι κατεσκευάσθη τὸ πρῶτον; ἀλεξάνεμος 53 μέν, ὡς οἱ ποιηταὶ πού φασι, χειμῶνι * * *.<sup>1</sup> τίς οὖν τὰς πολυτελεῖς ἀλουργίδας, τίς τὰ διαφανῆ καὶ λεπτὰ θέριστρα, τίς τὰς ἀραχνοῦφείς ἀμπεχόνας, τίς τὰ ἐπηηθισμένα ἢ βαφαῖς ἢ πλοκαῖς διὰ τῶν βάπτειν ἢ ὑφαίνειν ποικίλα ἐπισταμένων καὶ τὴν ἐν ζωγραφία μίμησιν παρενημερούντων δαιδαλεύεται; τίς; οὐχ ἢ κενὴ δόξα;
- 54 VIII. ἀλλὰ μὴν καὶ οἰκίας διὰ τὰς αὐτὰς ἐδέησεν ἡμῖν αἰτίας, καὶ ὅπως μὴ πρὸς θηρίων ἢ θηριωδεστάτων<sup>2</sup> τὰς φύσεις ἀνθρώπων ἐπιτρεχόντων βλαπτώ-μεθα. τί οὖν τὰ μὲν ἐδάφη καὶ τοὺς τοίχους πολυτελέσι λίθοις διακοσμοῦμεν; τί δὲ Ἀσίαν καὶ Λιβύην καὶ πᾶσαν Εὐρώπην καὶ τὰς νήσους ἐπερχόμεθα, κίονας ἀριστίνδην ἐπιλελεγμένους καὶ 55 ἐπιστυλίδας ἐρευνῶντες; τί δὲ περὶ Δωρίου καὶ Ἰωνικὰς καὶ Κορινθιακὰς γλυφὰς καὶ ὅσα<sup>3</sup> οἱ ἐντρυφῶντες (τοῖς καθεστῶσι<sup>4</sup> νόμοις προσεξεῦρον σπουδάζομέν τε καὶ φιλοτιμούμεθα, κιονόκρανα κοσμοῦντες; τί δὲ χρυσορόφους ἀνδρῶνας καὶ κυναικωνίτιδας κατασκευάζομεν; ἀρ' οὐ διὰ τὴν 56 γενὴν δόξαν; καὶ μὴν πρὸς γε ὕπνον μαλακὸν μὲν ἔδαφος αὐταρκές ἦν—ἐπεὶ καὶ μέχρι νῦν τοὺς Γυμνοσοφιστὰς παρ' Ἰνδοῖς χαμευνεῖν ἐκ παλαιῶν ἐθῶν κατέχει λόγος,—εἰ δὲ μή, σιτβάς γοῦν (ἦ)<sup>5</sup> ἐκ λίθων λογάδων ἢ ξύλων εὐτελῶν 57 πεποιημένη κλίνη. ἀλλὰ γὰρ ἐλεφαντόποδες τὰ ἐνήλατα καὶ κλινητῆρες ὀστράκοις πολυτελέσι καὶ

<sup>1</sup> Lacuna of one line: supply e.g. τῷ δὲ θέρει ἀναψύχουσα as Wend. (or σκιάζουσα?). <sup>2</sup> Perhaps θηριωδεστέρων.

<sup>3</sup> mss. ὄσους.

<sup>4</sup> mss. ζῶσι. See App. pp. 607 f.

<sup>5</sup> <ἦ> my insertion.

ON DREAMS, II. 52-57

the body by great cold and heat, "wind-proof," as I think the poets have it,<sup>a</sup> in winter and (cooling in summer). Who, then, is the cunning worker of those 53 costly sea-purples, those light transparent summer gauzes, those spider-web shawls, those costumes dyed or woven into gay colouring by hands expert in producing variety by either art, which outdo the painter's power of imitating nature? Who? I ask. Is it not vainglory?

VIII. Once more, we 54 felt the need of a house to live in for the same reasons, and that we may not suffer from the incursions of wild beasts or of men worse than beasts. Why then do we decorate the pavements and walls with costly marbles? Why do we scour Asia and Libya and all Europe and the islands searching for choicest columns and architraves? Why for the adornment 55 of the capitals of our columns do we vie with each other in enthusiasm over Doric and Ionic and Corinthian carvings and other embellishments devised by those who scorn to keep to the established styles? Why do we build men's and women's apartments with golden ceilings? Is it not owing to vainglory?

For sleep, all that was needed was a 56 soft piece of ground (for it is reported that to this very day the Naked Philosophers among the Indians retain their primitive custom of making earth their couch), or, if more was required, a bed of rushes<sup>b</sup> or of unhewn stones or common timber. But in fact 57 beds with ivory legs to their framework are provided, and sofas with costly mother-of-pearl and many-hued <sup>b</sup> Or "straw." If  $\eta$  is omitted as in other editions,  $\sigma\tau\iota\beta\acute{\alpha}\varsigma$  is used as an adjective, for which I have not seen any authority, nor is the meaning clear.

PHILO

ποικίλαις χελώναις ἐνδεδεμέναις μετὰ πολλῶν πόνων καὶ δαπανημάτων ἐν πολλῷ χρόνῳ κατα-σκευάζονται, τινὲς δὲ ὀλοάργυροι καὶ ὀλόχρυσοι καὶ λιθοκόλλητοι στρωμναῖς<sup>1</sup> ἀνθηροποικίλοις καὶ χρυσοπάστοις ὡς πρὸς ἐπίδειξιν καὶ πομπήν, οὐ τὴν καθ' ἡμέραν χρήσιν, διακεκοσμημένοι,<sup>1</sup> ὧν<sup>2</sup> δημι-58 ουργὸς ἢ κενὴ δόξα. τί δὲ τοῦ ἀπὸ τῆς ἐλαίας ἐκθλιβομένου καρποῦ πλέον ἔδει ζητεῖν πρὸς ἀλείμ-ματα; καὶ γὰρ λεαίνει καὶ κάματον σώματος λύει καὶ εὐσαρκίαν ἐμποιεῖ, κἂν εἴ τι κεχαλασμένον εἴη, σφίγγει πυκνότητι καὶ οὐδενὸς ἦττον ἐτέρου 59 ῥώμην καὶ εὐτονίαν ἐντίθησιν. ἀλλὰ γὰρ ἐπετειχίσθη<sup>3</sup> τοῖς ὠφελουσι τὰ ἡδέα τῆς κενῆς δόξης ἀλείμματα, εἰς ἃ καὶ μυρεψοὶ πονοῦσι καὶ χῶραι μεγάλαι συντελοῦσι, Συρία, Βαβυλών, Ἰνδοί, Σκύθαι, παρ' οἷς αἱ τῶν ἀρωμάτων γενέσεις εἰσὶ.
 60 IX. πρὸς γε μὴν τὸ πίνειν τίνος ἔδει μᾶλλον ἢ τοῦ φύσεως ἐκπώματος ἀκρότησι τέχνης εἰργασμένου; τὸ δὲ ἔκπωμα αἱ ἡμέτεραι χεῖρές | [667] εἰσιν, ἃς εἰς ταυτό τις συναγαγὼν καὶ κοιλάνας, εὐ μάλα τῷ στόματι προσθείς, ἐπιχέοντος ἐτέρου τὸ ποτὸν οὐ μόνον ἄκος τῆς<sup>4</sup> δίψης, ἀλλὰ καὶ ἄλεκτον 61 ἡδονὴν κτᾶται. εἰ δὲ ἔδει πάντως ἐτέρου, τὸ γεωργικὸν κισσύβιον οὐχ ἱκανὸν ἦν, ἀλλὰ ἄλλων ἐπιφανῶν τέχνας<sup>5</sup> ἀναζητεῖν ἔδει; τί δὲ ἀργυρῶν καὶ χρυσῶν κυλίκων ἄφθονον πλῆθος κατασκευάζεσθαι, εἰ μὴ διὰ τὸν φρναττόμενον μέγαρα τύφον καὶ τὴν ἐπ' αἰώρας φορουμένην<sup>6</sup> κενὴν δόξαν;

<sup>1</sup> MSS. στρωμναῖ and διακεκοσμημένοι: A ἀνθηροποικίλους καὶ χρυσοπάστους: Trin. -οις -οις ἔργοις. The text as here printed is by Mr. Whitaker's emendation, cf. De Som. i. 123.

<sup>2</sup> MSS. ὧς.

<sup>3</sup> MSS. ἀπετειχίσθη.

<sup>4</sup> MSS. τε.

<sup>5</sup> I should prefer to read τεχνίτας, cf. § 50.

ON DREAMS, II. 57-61

tortoiseshell inlaid with much toil and outlay of money and expenditure of time. Some are all of silver or all of gold or of mosaic work elaborately furnished with bedding of gold tissue and brocaded with flowers evidently for show and display, not for everyday use. Of these vainglory is the artist.

For unguents what need was there to 58 look for anything more than the fruit-juice pressed from the olive? For indeed it produces smoothness, and counteracts physical exhaustion, and brings about good condition. If a muscle be relaxed it braces it and renders it firm, nor is there anything surpassing it for infusing tone and vigour. But to attack the 59 position of such wholesome kinds vainglory's delicate unguents were set up. For these great countries where spices grow are laid under contribution, Syria, Babylon, the lands of the Indians and the Scythians; and on these the labour of perfumers is expended.

IX. Again, for drinking what more was 60 needed than Nature's cup, art's very masterpiece? Of that cup our hands are the material. Let a man hold them close together and hollow them; then let him carefully lift them to his mouth while someone else pours the water into them. He obtains not only the quenching of his thirst, but pleasure untold. But if a different one must needs have been 61 found, was not the rustic mazer sufficient? Was it necessary to go in search of works of art by other famous artists? Why was it necessary that a lavish quantity of gold and silver goblets should be manufactured save for the sake of vanity, so loud in its insolence, and vainglory swinging so dizzily to and fro?

---

<sup>6</sup> MSS. φορουμένης.

PHILO

- 62 ὅταν καὶ στεφανοῦσθαί τινες ἀξιῶσι μὴ δάφνης μηδὲ κιττοῦ, μὴ ἕων ἢ κρίνων ἢ ῥόδου ἢ θαλλοῦ συνόλως ἢ τινος<sup>1</sup> ἄνθους εὐώδει στεφάνω παρελθόντες τὰ θεοῦ δῶρα, ἃ διὰ τῶν ἐτησίων ὠρῶν ἀναδίδωσι, χρυσοῦς <δ'> ὑπὲρ κεφαλῆς, βαρύτατον ἄχθος, αἰωρῶσιν ἐν ἀγορᾷ μέση καὶ πληθούσῃ<sup>2</sup> χωρὶς αἰδοῦς, ἄλλο τι<sup>3</sup> νομιστέον ἢ ὅτι κενῆς δόξης εἰσὶ δούλοι, φάσκοντες οὐκ ἐλεύθεροι μόνον ἀλλὰ καὶ πολλῶν ἄλλων ἡγεμόνες εἶναι;
- 63 Ἐπιλείπει με ἡ ἡμέρα τὰς διαφθορὰς<sup>4</sup> τοῦ ἀνθρωπέου βίου διεξιόντα. καίτοι τί δεῖ μακρηγορεῖν; τίς γὰρ αὐτῶν ἀνήκοός ἐστι, τίς δὲ οὐ θεατής; τίς μὲν οὖν οὐ τρίβων καὶ ἐθάς<sup>5</sup>; ὥστε παγκάλως προσθήκη τὸν ἀτυφίας μὲν ἐχθρόν,
- 64 τύφου δ' ἐταῖρον<sup>6</sup> ὠνόμασεν ὁ ἱερός λόγος. καθάπερ γὰρ τοῖς δένδρεσιν ἐπιφύονται βλάσται περισσαί, μεγάλαι τῶν γνησίων λῶβαι, ἃς καθαίρουσι καὶ ἀποτέμνουσι προνοία τῶν ἀναγκαίων οἱ γεωργοῦντες, οὕτω τῷ ἀληθεῖ καὶ ἀτύφῳ βίῳ παρανέβλασθεν ὁ κατεψευσμένος καὶ τετυφωμένος, οὗ μέχρι ταύτης τῆς ἡμέρας οὐδεὶς εὐρηγται γεωργὸς ὃς τὴν
- 65 βλαβερὰν ἐπίφυσιν αὐταῖς ρίζαις ἀπέκοψε. τοιγαροῦν εἰδότες οἱ φρονήσεως ἀσκηταὶ τὸ κατάπλαστον<sup>7</sup> τοῦτ' αἰσθήσει πρῶτον, (εἶτα) διανοία μεταδιώκοντα ἄντικρυς ἐκβοῶσι· “θηρίον πονηρὸν ἤρπασε
- 66 καὶ κατέφαγεν Ἰωσήφ.” ἀλλ' οὐ θηρίον ἐξηγριωμένον ὢν ὁ πολυπλοκώτατος τῶν πεφυρμένων

<sup>1</sup> MSS. εἰ τινος.<sup>2</sup> MSS. πλήθους.<sup>3</sup> MSS. ἄτε.<sup>4</sup> MSS. διαφθορὰς.<sup>5</sup> MSS. ἔθος.<sup>6</sup> MSS. ἔτερον.<sup>7</sup> MSS. κατάπλειστον.

<sup>a</sup> The common phrase for the forenoon, e.g. Plat. Gorg. 469 D.

ON DREAMS, II. 62-66

When, again, we see people wanting 62 to be crowned not with a garland of laurel or ivy, not with a sweet-smelling wreath of violets or lilies or roses or olive or any flower at all, but passing by God's gifts, which He distributes as the seasons of the year run their course ; when they poise over their head golden wreaths, a grievous weight, without any shame in mid-market at the hour when it is full,<sup>a</sup> what else can we think of them than that they are slaves of vainglory, though they assert that they are not only free, but actually lords and rulers of many others ?

The day will pass before I have given the sum of 63 the corruptions of human life, and indeed why need we dwell at length upon them ? For who has not heard, who has not seen them ? Indeed who is not conversant and familiar with them ? And therefore the Holy Word did well in giving the name of Addition to one who was the enemy of simplicity and the friend of vanity. For just as we find on trees, to the 64 great damage of the genuine growth, superfluities which the husbandmen purge and cut away to provide for their necessities, so the true and simple life has for its parasite the life of falsity and vanity, for which no husbandman has hitherto been found to excise the mischievous overgrowth, root and all. And so 65 the practisers of sound sense, perceiving that Joseph first with his senses, and afterwards with his understanding, pursues this way of artificiality, cry outright, " An evil beast has seized and devoured him " <sup>b</sup> (Gen. xxxvii. 33). And indeed this life of confused 66 mankind, so full of complications, of vain inventions, <sup>b</sup> That in the history this statement is a falsehood makes no difference to Philo's exegesis. Cf. De Mig. 21 and note.

PHILO

ἀνθρώπων τυφοπλαστηθεὶς βίος, οὗ πλεονεξία καὶ πανουργία σοφαὶ δημιουργοί, τοὺς προσιόντας ἅπαντας εὐχαίεται; τοιγάρτοι καὶ ἔτι ζῶσιν αὐτοῖς ὡς νεκροῖς προτεθήσεται<sup>1</sup> πένθος, ἀξίαν ὀλοφύρσεως καὶ θρήνων καρπουμένους ζωήν· ἐπεὶ καὶ Ἰακώβ τὸν Ἰωσήφ ἔτι ζῶντα πενθεῖ.

67 ἀλλ' οὐ Μωυσῆς ἐάσει τοὺς περὶ Ναδάβ<sup>2</sup> ἱεροὺς λόγους πενθεῖσθαι· οὐ γὰρ ὑπ' ἀγρίου πονηροῦ θηρὸς ἀρπασθέντες, ἀλλ' ὑπὸ ριπῆς ἀσβέστου καὶ ἀθανάτου φέγγους ἀνελήφθησαν, ὅτι τὴν ἔνθερμον καὶ διάπυρον καὶ σαρκῶν ἀναλωτικὴν καὶ ὄξυ-
[668] κίνητον πρὸς τὴν<sup>3</sup> | εὐσέβειαν σπουδὴν, ἣ γενέσεως μὲν ἔστιν ἀλλοτρία, θεοῦ δὲ οἰκεία, τὸν μελλήτην<sup>4</sup> ὄκνον ἐκποδῶν ἀνελόντες, εὐαγῶς καθιέρωσαν, οὐ δι' ἀναβαθμῶν ἐπὶ τὸν βωμὸν ἐλθόντες—ἀπείρηται γὰρ νόμῳ,—ἀλλὰ δεξιῶ πνεύματι ἐπουρίσαντες<sup>5</sup> καὶ ἄχρι τῶν οὐρανοῦ περιόδων παραπεμφθέντες, θυσίας ὀλοκαύτου καὶ ὀλοκάρπου τρόπον εἰς αἰθερίου ἀγὰς ἀναλυθέντες.

68 X. Ἀποκοπτέον οὖν, ᾧ ψυχὴ πειθαρχοῦσα τῷ διδάσκοντι, τὴν σεαυτῆς χεῖρα καὶ δύναμιν, ἐπειδὴν ἀρξῆται τῶν γεννητικῶν ἢ γενέσεως ἢ ἀνθρωπείων

69 σπουδασμάτων ἐπιλαμβάνεσθαι. πολλάκις γὰρ ὑφ' * * *<sup>6</sup> προσαψαμένην<sup>7</sup> τῶν διδύμων χεῖρα ἀπο-

<sup>1</sup> MSS. προστεθήσεται.

<sup>2</sup> MSS. Ἀδάμ.

<sup>3</sup> MSS. τε.

<sup>4</sup> MSS. μὲν δὴ.

<sup>5</sup> MSS. ἀπουρίσαντες.

<sup>6</sup> Perhaps ὑφ<ρηγείται τὴν>.

<sup>7</sup> MSS. προσαψαμένων.

<sup>a</sup> Evidently an allusion to the "strange fire" (πῦρ ἀλλότριον) which N. and A. offered. Philo gives here a glimpse of the way in which he arrived at the strange perversion of the story which he consistently makes (De Fuga 59 and elsewhere).

<sup>b</sup> The connexion of thought seems to be drawn from the fact that δράγματα are things grasped, cf. ἐπιδράττεται § 37, and 472

ON DREAMS, II. 66-69

which has covetousness and knavery for its cunning architects, what is it but a ferocious beast which feasts on all who come near to it? And therefore such as these will be the subject of mourning, as though they were dead, even while they still live, since the life that they obtain is meet to be lamented and bewailed; for Jacob, we are told, mourned for Joseph while still alive. On the other 67 hand Moses will not suffer Nadab and his brother, those holy principles, to be mourned (Lev. x. 6). They were not seized by a savage, evil beast, but were taken up by a rush of fire unquenchable, by an undying splendour, since in sincerity they cast aside sloth and delay, and consecrated their zeal, hot and fiery, flesh-consuming and swiftly moving, to piety, a zeal which was alien<sup>a</sup> to creation, but akin to God. They did not mount by steps to the altar, which the law had forbidden (Ex. xx. 26), but wafted by a favouring breeze and carried even to the revolving heavens were there like the complete and perfect burnt offering resolved into ethereal rays of light.

X. So then, O soul, that art loyal to thy teacher, 68 thou must cut off thy hand, thy faculty, when it begins to lay hold of the genitals, whether they be the created world or the cares and aims of humanity.<sup>b</sup> For he often<sup>c</sup> bids us cut away the hand that has taken 69

we therefore have the contrast between what should and what should not be grasped. The life of luxury described in the preceding sections is here equated with the γεννητικά, and this leads on to the contrast of the true δράγμα or δράξ described in §§ 71 ff.

<sup>c</sup> If πολλάκις is retained, the meaning must be that Moses' frequent injunctions to honour God and virtue rather than man and human things is equivalent to "cutting off the hand." But I suspect that we should read πολλαχόθεν, "for many reasons."

PHILO

κόπτειν, πρῶτον μὲν ὅτι ἐδεξιώσατο ἦν ἐχθαίρειν ἐχρήν ἠδονήν, δεύτερον δὲ ὅτι παρ' ἡμᾶς τὸ σπείρειν ἐνόμισεν, εἶθ' ὅτι τῷ γενομένῳ τὴν τοῦ 70 ποιούντος ἀνέθηκε<sup>1</sup> δύναμιν. οὐχ ὄρας, ὅτι ὁ γήινος ὄγκος, Ἀδάμ, ὅταν ἄψηται τοῦ διδύμου ξύλου, θνήσκει, δυάδα τιμήσας πρὸ μονάδος καὶ τὸ γενόμενον πρὸ τοῦ πεποικηκός ἐκθαυμάσας; ἀλλὰ σύ γε τοῦ μὲν “καπνοῦ καὶ κύματος ἐκτὸς” βαῖνε καὶ τὰς καταγελάστους τοῦ θνητοῦ βίου σπουδὰς ὡς τὴν φοβερὰν ἐκείνην χάρυβδιν ἀποδίδρασκε καὶ μηδὲ ἄκρω, τὸ τοῦ λόγου τοῦτο, ποδὸς 71 δακτύλω<sup>2</sup> ψαύσης. ἐπειδὰν δὲ ταῖς ἱεραῖς ἐπαποδύσῃ λειτουργίαις, ὄλην τὴν χεῖρα καὶ δύναμιν εὐρύνασα εὖ μάλα τῶν παιδείας καὶ σοφίας θεωρημάτων ἐπίδραξαι. καὶ γὰρ πρόσταξις ἐστὶ τοιαύτη· “ἐὰν ψυχὴ προσφέρῃ δῶρον ἢ θυσίαν, σεμίδαλις ἔσται τὸ δῶρον,” εἶτ' ἐπιφέρει· “καὶ δραξάμενος πλήρη τὴν δράκα ἀπὸ τῆς σεμιδάλεως σὺν τῷ ἐλαίῳ καὶ παντὶ τῷ λιβάνῳ ἐπιθήσει<sup>3</sup> τὸ μνημόσυνον 72 ἐπὶ τὸ θυσιαστήριον.” ἄρ' οὐ παγκάλως ψυχὴν εἶπεν ἀσώματον τὴν μέλλουσαν ἱεουργεῖν,<sup>4</sup> ἀλλ' οὐ τὸν δίδυμον ἐκ θνητοῦ καὶ ἀθανάτου συνεστῶτα ὄγκον; τὸ γὰρ εὐχόμενον, τὸ εὐχάριστον, τὸ θυσίας ἀμώμους<sup>5</sup> ἀληθῶς ἀνάγον ἐν μόνον ἦν ἄρα, 73 ἢ ψυχὴ. τίς οὖν ἢ ψυχῆς ἀσωμάτου θυσία; τίς ἢ σεμίδαλις, ἐκκεκαθααρμένης<sup>6</sup> ταῖς παιδείαις<sup>7</sup> ὑποθή-

<sup>1</sup> ἐνέθηκε.

<sup>2</sup> MSS. τῷ τοῦ λόγου ποδὶ τοῦτο: Wend. δὴ τοῦτο. Perhaps omit ποδὶ as a duplicate of δακτύλω. <sup>3</sup> MSS. ἐπιτίθησι.

<sup>4</sup> MSS. ἱεουργίαν.

<sup>5</sup> MSS. ἀμώμων.

<sup>6</sup> MSS. ἐκκεκαθααρμένη.

<sup>7</sup> MSS. παιδείαις.

<sup>a</sup> So the LXX for the word which E.V. translates “secrets.”

ON DREAMS, II. 69-73

hold of the "pair" <sup>a</sup> (Deut. xxv. 11, 12), first because it has thereby given a welcome to the pleasure which it should hate, secondly because it has judged that to beget rests with ourselves, and thirdly because it has ascribed to the created the power of its maker. Observe that Adam, <sup>a</sup> that mass of earth, <sup>b</sup> is doomed to 70 die when he touches the twofold tree (Gen. ii. 9 <sup>c</sup>), thus honouring the two before the one, and revering the created rather than the maker. Not so be it with thee. Pass clear away "from the smoke and wave," <sup>d</sup> and flee fast from the silly cares and aims of mortal life as from that dread Charybdis and touch it not, as the saying goes, with the tip of thy toe.

But when thou hast stripped thyself to serve the holy 71 rites, then widen hand and power and take a right good grip of the lessons of instruction and wisdom, for there is an ordinance running thus: "If a soul bring a gift or sacrifice, the gift shall be fine flour," and then it continues, "and taking a full handful from the fine flour, with the oil and all the frankincense, he shall lay the memorial on the altar" (Lev. ii. 1, 2). This is an excellent saying, that the server 72 of the sacrifice should be an unbodied soul, not the twofold gross mass compounded of mortal and immortal. For that which prays, which gives thanks and offers sacrifice truly without blemish, must be as he says a "one" only, the soul. What then is the 73 offering of an unbodied soul? What but the fine flour, the symbol of a will, purified by the councils of τούτου (i.e. Charybdis) μὲν καπνοῦ καὶ κύματος ἐκτὸς ἔεργε νῆα.

<sup>b</sup> Cf. Gen. iii. 19, "the earth, out of which thou wast taken."

<sup>c</sup> Or better, Gen. iii. 3, see App. p. 608.

<sup>d</sup> Od. xii. 219:

PHILO

καις γνώμης σύμβολον, τροφήν ἄνοσον καὶ ζῶην 74 ἀνυπαίτιον ποιεῖν ἱκανῆς; ἀφ' ἧς δραξάμενον<sup>1</sup> τὸν ἱερέα ὅλη τῇ δρακί, τὸ δ' ἐστὶ πάσαις ταῖς διανοίαις λαβαῖς, πλήρη τὴν ὅλην ψυχὴν εἰλικρινεστάτων καὶ καθαρωτάτων δογμάτων γενομένην αὐτὴν ὡς ἱερεῖον τὸ κάλλιστον ἀνάγειν προστέτακται, πύονα καὶ λιπῶσαν, θείῳ φωτὶ χαίρουσαν<sup>2</sup> καὶ ταῖς ἀπὸ δικαιοσύνης καὶ τῶν ἄλλων ἀρετῶν ἀναδιδομέναις καταπνεομένην αὔραις, ὡς εὐωδέστατον καὶ προσ-ηνέστατον αἰεὶ καρποῦσθαι βίον· τὸ γὰρ ἔλαιον καὶ [669] ὁ | λιβανωτός, ὧν ἐπιδράττεται σὺν τοῖς λευκο-75 πύροις ὁ ἱερεύς,<sup>3</sup> ταῦτα αἰνίττεται. XI. διὰ τοῦτο καὶ Μωυσῆς ἐξαίρετον ἑορτὴν ἀνέθηκε τῷ δράγματι, πλὴν οὐ παντί, ἀλλὰ τῷ ἀπὸ τῆς ἱερᾶς γῆς. “ ὅταν ” γάρ φησιν “ εἰσέλθητε εἰς τὴν γῆν, ἣν ἐγὼ δίδωμι ὑμῖν, καὶ θερίζετε τὸν θερισμὸν αὐτῆς, οἴσετε δράγματα ἀπαρχὴν τοῦ θερισμοῦ 76 ὑμῶν πρὸς τὸν ἱερέα,” τὸ δέ ἐστιν· ὅταν εἰσέλθῃς, ὦ διάνοια, εἰς τὴν ἀρετῆς χώραν, ἣν ἐμπρεπὲς μόνῳ δωρεῖσθαι θεῷ, τὴν εὐβοτον, τὴν εὐγειον, τὴν καρποφόρον, εἶτα οἰκεία εἶ γ' ἔσπειρας<sup>4</sup> ἀγαθὰ θερίζῃς αὐξηθέντα ὑπὸ τοῦ τελεσφόρου, μὴ πρότερον οἴκαδε συγκομίσης, τουτέστι μὴ ἀναθῆς μηδ'<sup>5</sup> ἐπιγράψῃς σεαυτῇ τὴν τῶν περιγινομένων αἰτίαν, ἣ ἀπάρξασθαι τῷ πλουτάρχῳ καὶ τὰ πλουτιστήρια 77 ἔργα ἐπιτηδεύειν ἀναπεύθοντι. καὶ λέγεται<sup>6</sup> “ τὴν ἀπαρχὴν τοῦ θερισμοῦ ὑμῶν ” αὐτῶν, ἀλλ' οὐχὶ τῆς γῆς, προσφέρειν, ἵνα ἀμῶμεν καὶ θερίζωμεν

<sup>1</sup> MSS. δραξάμενος.

<sup>2</sup> MSS. χαίρουσι.

<sup>3</sup> MSS. ἱερός.

<sup>4</sup> MSS. εἶ γε σπείρας: Wend. [εἶ γε] σπείρασ'. The form adopted is my conjecture.

<sup>5</sup> MSS. ἀναθεῖς μὴ.

<sup>6</sup> MSS. λέγετε.

ON DREAMS, II. 73-77

instruction, fit to produce nourishment that gives no sickness and life that knows no guilt. From such a 74 sacrifice is the priest bidden to take his handful, take it with his whole hand, that is with all the grips of the mind, to offer the best of sacrifices, even the whole soul, brimful of truths of all sincerity and purity—a soul, too, rich with fatness, gladdened by light divine and perfumed with the breaths exhaled from justice and the other virtues, thus fitted to enjoy for ever a life of all fragrance and sweetness. For this is signified by the oil and the frankincense with which the priest fills his hand as well as with the wheaten flour.

XI. Therefore also Moses dedicated 75 a special feast for the “hand-grip of corn,” only not for all but for such as come from the holy land, for “When,” he says, “ye come into the land which I give you and ye reap its reaping, ye shall bring hand-grips of corn as a firstfruit unto the priest” (Lev. xxiii. 10). That means, “When, my mind, thou comest to 76 virtue’s land, the gift fit for God alone, the land of goodly pasturage and tilth and fruit-bearing, and then if so be that thou hast sown in accordance with it, thou reapest the good when brought to its increase by God the consummator, do not bear the harvest home, that is, do not assign or ascribe to thyself the cause of the produce until thou hast rendered the firstfruit to Him Who is the source of riches and moves thee to practise the husbandry of thy enrichment.” And we are told to bring the “firstfruit of your 77 reaping,” that is not of the land but of ourselves, that we may mow and reap ourselves, by con-

PHILO

- ἑαυτοῦς,<sup>1</sup> πάνθ' ὅσα καλὰ καὶ τροφίμα καὶ σπου-दाῖα βλαστήματα καθιεροῦντες.
- 78 XII. Ἄλλ' ὃ γε τῶν ἐνυπνίων μύστης ὁμοῦ καὶ μυσταγωγὸς θαρρεῖ λέγειν, ὅτι ἀνέστη τὸ αὐτοῦ δράγμα καὶ ὠρθώθη. τῷ γὰρ ὄντι καθάπερ οἱ γαῦροι τῶν ἵππων τὸν ἀνχένα μετέωρον ἐξάραντες, ὅσοι θιασῶται τῆς κενῆς δόξης εἰσίν, ἐπάνω πάντων 79 τῶν παρ' ἐκάστοις πραγμάτων· εἶτα ἀπὸ δημαγωγίας ἐπὶ δημαρχίαν βαδίζοντες καὶ τὰ μὲν τῶν πλησίον καταβάλλοντες, τὰ δὲ οἰκεία διανιστάντες<sup>2</sup> καὶ παγίως ὀρθοῦντες, ὅσα ἐλεύθερα καὶ ἀδούλωτα φύσει φρονήματα, καὶ ταυθ' ὑπάγεσθαι μηχανῶνται.
- 80 διὸ προστίθησι· “ περιστραφέντα δὲ τὰ δράγματα ὑμῶν προσεκύνησαν τὸ ἐμὸν δράγμα.” τέθηπε γὰρ ὁ μὲν αἰδοῦς ἐραστής τὸν σκληραύχενα, ὁ δὲ εὐλαβῆς τὸν αὐθάδη, ὁ δὲ ἰσότητα<sup>3</sup> τιμῶν τὸν ἑαυτῷ τε καὶ ἄλλοις ἄνισον,<sup>3</sup> καὶ μήποτ' εἰκότως·
- 81 ἄτε γὰρ θεωρὸς ὢν οὐ μόνον τοῦ ἀνθρωπέου βίου ἀλλὰ καὶ τῶν ἐν κόσμῳ συμπάντων ὁ ἀστείος οἶδεν ὅσον εἴωθε πνεῖν ἀνάγκη, τύχη, καιρὸς, βία, δυναστεία, καὶ ὅσας ὑποθέσεις καὶ ἡλικας εὐπρα-γίας ἀπνευστὶ δραμούσας ἄχρῃ οὐρανοῦ κατέσεισαν
- 82 καὶ κατέρραξαν. ὥστε ἀναγκαίως εὐλάβειαν ἐπ-ασπιδώσεται,<sup>4</sup> τοῦ μηδὲν ἐξ ἐπιδρομῆς δεῖνὸν παθεῖν συγγενὲς φυλακτήριον· ὃ γάρ, οἶμαι, πρὸς πόλιν
- 83 τεῖχος, τοῦτ' εὐλάβεια πρὸς ἕκαστον. ἄρ' οὖν οὐ παραπαίουσι καὶ μεμήνασιν ὅσοι παρρησίαν ἄκαιρον<sup>5</sup>

<sup>1</sup> MSS. ἑαυτοῖς.

<sup>2</sup> MSS. διαναστάντες.

<sup>3</sup> MSS. ὀσιότητα . . . ἀνίσιον.

<sup>4</sup> So Trin.: Α ἐπισπιδῶσεται which Wend. retains, conjecturing ἐπισπάσεται, but cf. ἐνασπιδώσομαι Aristophanes, Ach. 368.

<sup>5</sup> MSS. ἀπειρον.

ON DREAMS, II. 77-83

secrating every nourishing, excellent and worthy growth.

XII. But he who was both the initiated and the 78 initiator in the mysteries of dreams boldly said that his sheaf rose and stood upright (Gen. xxxvii. 7). For indeed as skittish horses rear their necks proudly on high, so all the votaries of vainglory set themselves up above everything, above cities and laws and ancestral customs and the affairs of the several citizens. Then they proceed from the leadership of 79 the people to dictatorship over the people, and while they bring low the state of their neighbours they cause their own to rise and stand upright and firm, and thus they bring into subjection even souls whose spirit is naturally free and unenslaved. That is why 80 he adds, "Your sheaves turned round and made obeisance to my sheaf" (ibid.). For the lover of modesty is overawed by the stiff-necked, and the cautious by the self-willed, and the honourer of equality by one who is unequal both in relation to himself and others. And surely that is natural, for 81 the man of worth who surveys, not only human life but all the phenomena of the world, knows how mightily blow the winds of necessity, fortune, opportunity, force, violence and pryncedom, and how many are the projects, how great the good fortunes which soar to heaven without pausing in their flight and then are shaken about and brought crashing to the ground by these blasts. And therefore he must 82 needs take caution to shield him, as an inseparable safeguard to prevent any grave disaster suddenly befalling him, for caution is to the individual man what a wall is to a city. Surely then they are all 83 lunatics and madmen who take pains to display unσπουδάζουσιν ἐπιδείκνυσθαι, βασιλευσι καὶ τυράννοις ἔστιν ὅτε λέγειν τε καὶ ποιεῖν ἐναντία τολ-μῶντες, οὐκ αἰσθανόμενοι,<sup>1</sup> ὅτι (οὐ) τοὺς ἀρχένας μόνον ὡσπερ τὰ θρέμματα ὑπεζεύχθησαν, ἀλλ' [670] ὅλα τὰ σώματα καὶ τὰς | ψυχὰς γύναιά τε καὶ τέκνα καὶ γονεῖς καὶ τὴν ἄλλων ἑταίρων<sup>2</sup> (καὶ) συγγενῶν πολυάνθρωπον οἰκειότητα καὶ κοινωνίαν ἐκδέδενται, καὶ ἕξεστι τῷ ἡνιόχῳ καὶ ἐπόχῳ<sup>3</sup> μετὰ πάσης εὐμαρείας κεντεῖν, ἐλαύνειν, ἐπέχειν, ἀνα-χαιτίζειν, ἄττ' ἂν ἐβελήσῃ μικρὰ καὶ μείζω δια-84 τιθέναι; τοιγαροῦν στιζόμενοι καὶ μαστιγούμενοι καὶ ἀκρωτηριαζόμενοι καὶ ὅσα πρὸ τοῦ θανάτου χαλεπὰ πάντα ὡμῶς καὶ ἀηλεῶς ἀθρόα ὑπο-μένοντες, ἀπαχθέντες ἐπὶ πᾶσι θνήσκουσι.

PHILO

 85 XIII. ταῦτ' ἐστὶ<sup>4</sup> τῆς ἀκαίρου παρρησίας τὰ ἐπί-χειρα, οὐ παρρησίας παρά γε εὐφρονοῦσι κριταῖς, ἀλλ' εὐθειας καὶ φρενοβλαβείας καὶ μελαγχολίας ἀνιάτου γέμοντα.<sup>5</sup> τί λέγεις; χειμῶνά τις ὄρων ἀκμάζοντα καὶ βαρὺ πνεῦμα ἐναντίον καὶ λαίλαπα καταγιγίζουσιν καὶ κυματούμενον 86 πέλαγος, ἐνορμίζεσθαι δέον, ἐξορμίζεται καὶ ἐξανάγεται; τίς ἢ κυβερνήτης ἢ ναύκληρος οὕτω ποτέ ἐμεθύσθη καὶ παρώνησεν, (ὡς) ὅσων εἶπον κατασκευσάντων ἐβελῆσαι πλεῖν, ἵνα<sup>6</sup> ὑπέραντλος ἄνωθεν ἐπιχυθείσης τῆς θαλάσσης ἢ ναῦς γενομένη πλωτῆρσιν αὐτοῖς ἐγκαταποθῇ; τῷ γὰρ βουλομένῳ πλεῖν ἀκινδύνως εὐδίων πνεῦμα οὐριόν τε 87 καὶ λείον ἀναμένειν ἐξῆν. τί δέ; ἄρκτον τις (ἢ σὺν ἄγριον ἢ)<sup>7</sup> λέοντα μετὰ συρμοῦ θεασάμενος ἐπιόντα, πρᾶνναι καὶ τιθασεῦσαι δέον, ἐξαγριαίνει <sup>1</sup> MSS. αἰσθάνονται.

<sup>3</sup> MSS. ἐπ' ὡμῳ.

<sup>2</sup> MSS. ἐτέρων.

<sup>4</sup> MSS. ἐπί.

timely frankness, and sometimes dare to oppose kings and tyrants in words and deeds. They do not perceive that not only like cattle are their necks under the yoke, but that the harness extends to their whole bodies and souls, their wives and children and parents, and the wide circle of friends and kinsfolk united to them by fellowship of feeling, and that the driver can with perfect ease spur, drive on or pull back, and mete out any treatment small or great just as he pleases. And therefore they are branded and scourged and 84 mutilated and undergo a combination of all the sufferings which merciless cruelty can inflict short of death, and finally are led away to death itself.

XIII. These are the rewards of un- 85 timely free-speaking, which in the eyes of sensible judges is not free-speaking at all; rather they are the guerdons of silliness and frenzy and incurable brain-sickness. Why? Who if he sees a storm at its height, a fierce counter-wind, a hurricane swooping down and a tempest-tossed sea, sets sail and puts out to sea when he should remain in harbour? What pilot or skipper 86 was ever so utterly intoxicated as to wish to sail with all these terrors launched upon him, only to find the ship water-logged by the down-rushing sea and swallowed up, crew and all. For he who would have a safe voyage can always wait for the sunny breeze to take him gently and smoothly on his way. Again, 87 would anyone who has seen a bear or a lion or wild boar sweeping along to attack him, instead of soothing and calming them as he should, provoke them to

---

<sup>5</sup> γέμοντα though accepted by editors is quite illogical. The rewards are not full of folly. I suggest γέρα ὄντα.

<sup>6</sup> MSS. ἵνα ὄσον εἶπον κατασκηψάντων ἐθειλήση πλύνειν.

<sup>7</sup> Lacuna in A eight to nine letters.

PHILO

καὶ ἀνερεθίζει, ὅπως θοίαν καὶ εὐωχίαν ὤμο-88 βόροις ἀνηλεεστάτοις<sup>1</sup> εὐτρεπίσῃ ἑαυτόν; εἰ μὴ καὶ φαλαγγίοις καὶ ἀσπίσι ταῖς Αἰγυπτίαις καὶ τοῖς ἄλλοις ὅσα<sup>2</sup> τὸν φθοροποιὸν ἰὸν (ἐπιφέρεται) οὐδενὶ λυσιτελὲς ἀνθίστασθαι,<sup>3</sup> θάνατον ἀπαραίτητον τοῖς ἅπαξ δηχθεῖσιν ἐπάγουσιν· ἀγαπητὸν γὰρ κατεπάδοντας καὶ χειροήθη ποιοῦντας μηδὲν 89 ἀπ' αὐτῶν δεινὸν παθεῖν. εἴτ' οὐκ εἰσω ἄνθρωποι τινες συῶν, φαλαγγίων, ἀσπίδων ἀγριώτεροι καὶ ἐπιβουλότεροι; ὧν τὸ ἐπίβουλον καὶ δυσμενὲς ἀμήχανον ἐτέρως ἢ τιθασείαις καὶ μειλίγμασι χρωμένους διεκδῦναι. τοιγάρτοι ὁ σοφὸς Ἄβραάμ τοὺς υἱοὺς τοῦ Χέτ—ἐρμηνεύονται δὲ ἐξιστάντες—προσκυνήσει, τῶν καιρῶν τοῦτο<sup>4</sup> δρᾶν 90 ἀναπειθόντων. οὐ<sup>5</sup> γὰρ τιμῶν γε τοὺς ἐκ φύσεως καὶ γένους καὶ ἔθων ἐχθροὺς λογισμοῦ, οἳ τὸ τῆς ψυχῆς νόμισμα, παιδείαν, ἐξιστάντες καὶ κατακερματίζοντες οἰκτρῶς ἀναλίσκουσιν, ἐπὶ τὸ προσκυνεῖν ἦλθεν, ἀλλὰ τὸ παρὸν κράτος αὐτῶν καὶ τὴν δυσάλωτον ἰσχὺν δεδιὼς καὶ φυλαττόμενος ἐρεθίζειν,<sup>6</sup> μέγα καὶ ἐχυρὸν κτῆμα καὶ ἀγώνισμα ἀρετῆς, σοφῶν ψυχῶν ἄριστον ἐνδιαίτημα, τὸ [671] διπλοῦν σπήλαιον, | ὃ μαχόμενον μὲν καὶ πολεμοῦντα οὐκ ἐνῆν, ὑπερχόμενον<sup>7</sup> δὲ καὶ θεραπεύοντα 91 τῷ λόγῳ κομμεῖται.<sup>8</sup> τί δέ; οὐχὶ καὶ ἡμεῖς, <sup>1</sup> mss. ἀνηλεεστάτην.

<sup>2</sup> mss. ὅσοι.

<sup>3</sup> I print Wend.'s text, but it ignores the difficulty of οὐδενί. This negative after εἰ μὴ must be wrong, unless we substitute ἀλυσιτελὲς for λυσιτελὲς or ἐξ(αφ)ίστασθαι for ἀνθίστασθαι. Mangey proposed ἐπιφέρεται ὁδοῦσι, perhaps meaning the second word to replace οὐδενί. If so ὁδόντι would be better. I think Philo is capable of having written ὁδοντοφορεῖ.

<sup>4</sup> mss. τοῦ (Trin. τὸν καιρὸν).

ON DREAMS, II. 87-91

savagery just to offer himself as a banquet to satisfy the cruel appetites of the carnivorous brutes? As well 88 might we think it advisable to fight against the stinging scorpions and asps of Egypt and all other creatures possessed of fatal poison whose single bite carries with it inevitable death—creatures whom we may well be content to tame with charms and ensure that they do us no grievous harm. Then are there not some 89 men more fierce and malicious than boars, scorpions or asps, men whose spite and malice can only be avoided by using some method of taming and soothing them?

And therefore we shall find wise Abraham doing obeisance to the sons of Cheth (Gen. xxiii. 7), whose name means “removing,” when the fitness of the circumstances prompted him to do so. For it was not out of any feeling of respect for those 90 who by nature and race and custom were the enemies of reason, who remove instruction, the true coinage of the soul, and change it into petty coins and waste it miserably, that he brought himself to do obeisance. Rather it was just because he feared their power at the time and their formidable strength and took care to give no provocation, that he will win that great and secure possession, that prize of virtue, the double cave which is the most excellent abiding-place of wise souls: the cave which could not be won by war and fighting, but with reason shewn in subservience and respectful treatment.<sup>a</sup> Again, do not we too, when 91

<sup>a</sup> In the earlier edition τῶ λόγῳ was changed to τῶ <ἀ>λόγῳ “paying court to their unreason.” But this is untenable as θεραπεύω is not found with a dative.

<sup>5</sup> MSS. ὁ.

<sup>7</sup> MSS. ὑπερμαχόμενον.

<sup>6</sup> MSS. ἐρυθριάζειν.

<sup>8</sup> MSS. κομείσθαι.

PHILO

- ὅταν ἐν ἀγορᾷ διατρίβωμεν, εἰώθαμεν ἐξίστασθαι μὲν τοῖς ἄρχουσιν, ἐξίστασθαι δὲ καὶ τοῖς ὑποζυγίοις; ἀλλ' ἀπ' ἐναντίας γνώμης καὶ οὐχὶ τῆς αὐτῆς· τοῖς μὲν γὰρ ἄρχουσιν ἐν τιμῇ, τοῖς δὲ ὑποζυγίοις διὰ φόβον τοῦ μηδὲν ἀπ' αὐτῶν εἰς
- 92 ἡμᾶς νεωτερισθῆναι. καὶ διδόντων μὲν τῶν καιρῶν ἐπιτιθεμένους τὴν τῶν ἐχθρῶν βίαν καλὸν καταλύσαι, μὴ ἐπιτρεπόντων δὲ ἀσφαλὲς ἡσυχάσαι, βουλομένοις δὲ τιν'<sup>1</sup> ὠφέλειαν εὐρίσκεσθαι παρ' αὐτῶν ἀρμόττον τιθασεῦσαι.
- 93 XIV. Διὸ καὶ νῦν ἄξιον ἐπαινεῖν τοὺς μὴ ὑποχωροῦντας τῷ τῆς κενῆς προστάτῃ δόξης, ἀλλὰ ἀνθισταμένους καὶ λέγοντας· “μὴ βασιλεύων βασιλεύσεις<sup>2</sup> ἐφ' ἡμῖν;” οὐπω γὰρ ἰσχυρότα<sup>3</sup> ὀρώσιν αὐτόν, οὐχ ὡς φλόγα ἡμμένον τε καὶ λάμποντα ἐν ἀφθόνῳ ὕλῃ νεμόμενον, ἀλλ' ἔθ' ὡς<sup>4</sup> σπινθῆρα ἐντυφόμενον, ὄνειρώττοντα δόξαν, οὐκ
- 94 ἐναργῶς ἤδη μετιόντα. χρηστάς γὰρ ἐλπίδας ὑποβάλλουσιν ἑαυτοῖς, ὡσεὶ καὶ μὴ ἀλῶναι δυνησόμενοι. παρὸ λέγουσι· “μὴ ἐφ' ἡμῖν βασιλεύσεις;” ἴσον τῷ ζώντων, ὄντων,<sup>5</sup> ἰσχυόντων, ἐμπνεόντων ἡμῶν οἷοι δυναστεύσεις; ἀσθενησάντων μὲν γὰρ ἴσως ἐπικρατήσεις, ἐρρωμένων δὲ ἐν
- 95 ὕψηλῳ μοίρᾳ τετάξῃ. καὶ πέφυκεν οὕτως ἔχειν· ἐπειδὰν μὲν γὰρ ἐν διανοίᾳ (ὁ) ὀρθὸς ἰσχύη λόγος, ἡ κενὴ καταλύεται δόξα, ῥώννυται δὲ ἀσθενήσαντος. ἕως οὖν<sup>6</sup> ἔτι σώαν ἔχει τὴν ἑαυτῆς δύναμιν ἢ ψυχὴν καὶ μηδὲν αὐτῆς μέρος ἠκρωτηρίασται, θαρρείτω βάλλειν καὶ τοξεύειν τὸν ἐναντιούμενον τύφον καὶ

<sup>1</sup> MSS. τὴν.

<sup>2</sup> MSS. βασιλεύσης.

<sup>3</sup> MSS. ἐσχηκότα.

<sup>4</sup> MSS. ἐθ' ὡς.

<sup>5</sup> Perhaps om. ὄντων or transpose with ζώντων.

<sup>6</sup> MSS. οὐ.

ON DREAMS, II. 91-95

we are spending time in the market-place, make a practice of standing out of the path of our rulers and also of beasts of carriage, though our motive in the two cases is entirely different? With the rulers it is done to shew them honour, with the animals from fear and to save us from suffering serious injury from them. And if ever occasions permit it is good to 92 subdue the violence of enemies by attack, but if they do not permit the safe course is to keep quiet, and if we wish to gain any help from them the fitting course is to soften and tame them.

XIV. Praise therefore is due to those also who are 93 here under consideration, because they did not give way to the champion of vainglory but resisted him and said: "Shalt thou indeed reign over us? Not so" (Gen. xxxvii. 8). For they see that he is not yet become strong, that he is not as a flame fully kindled and shining brightly with abundance of fuel to feed it, but is still a mere smouldering spark, one who sees glory but as in a dream and does not yet pursue it with clear waking vision. In their hearts 94 they have a comfortable hope that they may even be able to escape his clutches, and so they say: "Shalt thou indeed be king over us?" that is, "Dost thou think to lord it over us while we still have life, existence, strength, breath? When we have grown weak, thou wilt perhaps have the mastery, but while we are strong thou wilt hold but the rank of a subject." And that is but natural, for when right reason 95 is strong in the mind, vainglory is brought low, but gains strength when reason is weak. While, then, the soul still preserves its power and no part of it is amputated, let it take courage to ply the opposing vanity with missiles and arrows and use full liberty

PHILO

- ἐλευθεροστομείτω φάσκουσα· οὔτε βασιλεύσεις οὔτε κυριεύσεις οὔτε ἡμῶν οὔτε ἐφ' ἡμῶν ἐτέρων· 96 ἀλλὰ σου τὰς ἐπανατάσεις<sup>1</sup> καὶ τὰς ἀπειλὰς ἐφόδω μιᾷ καταδραμούμεθα σὺν τοῖς δορυφόροις καὶ ὑπασπισταῖς, φρονήσεως ἐγγόνοις· ἐφ' ὧν λέγεται ὅτι “ προσέθεντο μισεῖν αὐτὸν ἕνεκα τῶν ἐνυπνίων 97 αὐτοῦ καὶ ἕνεκα τῶν ῥημάτων αὐτοῦ.” ἀλλ' οὐ ῥήματα μὲν καὶ ἐνύπνια πάνθ' ὅσα ὁ τυφὸς ἂν εἰδωλοποιῆ, πράγματα δὲ καὶ σαφεῖς ἐνάργεια<sup>2</sup> τὰ ὅσα ἐπ' ὀρθὸν βίον καὶ λόγον ἀναφέρεται; καὶ τὰ μὲν μίσους ἅτε κατεψευσμένα, τὰ δὲ φιλίας ἅτε ἀληθείας τῆς ἐπεράστου γέμοντα ἐπάξια.
98 μηδεὶς οὖν ἔτι κατηγορεῖν ἐπιτολμάτων<sup>3</sup> τῶν το-σοῦτων τὰς ἀρετὰς ἀνδρῶν ὡς μισανθρώπου καὶ μισαδέλφου δείγμα ἦθους ἐκφερόντων, ἀλλὰ μαθῶν, ὅτι οὐκ ἄνθρωπος ὁ νῦν ἐπικρινόμενός ἐστιν, ἀλλὰ τῶν ἐν ἐκάστου τῇ ψυχῇ τρόπων<sup>4</sup> ὁ δοξομανῆς καὶ φιλότυφος, ἀποδεχέσθω τοὺς ἄσπονδον ἔχθραν καὶ [672] μῖσος ἀκατάλλακτον πρὸς | αὐτὸν αἰρομένους<sup>5</sup> καὶ μηδέποτε τὸν στυγηθέντα πρὸς ἐκείνων στερεξάτω, 99 γνοὺς ἀκριβῶς, ὅτι οἱ τοιοῦτοι<sup>6</sup> δικασταὶ γνώμης οὐκ ἂν ποτε ἐσφάλησαν ὑγιοῦς, ἀλλὰ μαθόντες καὶ παιδευθέντες ἐξ ἀρχῆς τὸν ὄντως βασιλέα, τὸν κύριον, προσκυνεῖν τε καὶ τιμᾶν ἀγανακτοῦσιν, εἴ τις τὴν θεοῦ τιμὴν νοσφίζεται καὶ τοὺς ἰκέτας<sup>7</sup> αὐτοῦ 100 μετακαλεῖ πρὸς τὴν ἰδίαν θεραπείαν. XV. διὸ θαρροῦντες ἐροῦσιν· “ μὴ βασιλεύων βασιλεύσεις ἐφ' ἡμῖν; ” ἢ ἀγνοεῖς, ὅτι οὐκ ἐσμεν αὐτόνομοι, ἀλλ' ὑπὸ ἀθανάτου βασιλέως, τοῦ μόνου θεοῦ,

<sup>1</sup> MSS. ἐπαναστάσεις.

<sup>3</sup> MSS. ἐπὶ τολμοσάτων.

<sup>6</sup> MSS. αὐτοῦς ἐρωμένους.

<sup>2</sup> MSS. ἐνέργειαί.

<sup>4</sup> MSS. τρόπος.

<sup>6</sup> MSS. τοσοῦτοι.

ON DREAMS, II. 95-100

of speech. "Thou shalt not lord or king it over us," it will say, "nor over others while we live, but we 96 will with a single onset bear down thy threats and menaces, with the aid of the spear and shield-bearers, the children of sound sense, of whom it is said 'they went on to hate him because of his dreams and because of his words'" (ibid.). And are not all the phantoms 97 created by vanity but dreams and words? while all things which concern right living and thinking are facts and clear realities, and the former because of their falsity deserve our hatred, while the latter because they are filled full of the loveliness of truth deserve our love.

Let no one then after 98 this dare to accuse these persons so rich in virtue as though they were displaying the marks of a misanthropic and unbrotherly character, but understanding that it is no man that is here judged but one of the traits or feelings that exist in every man's soul (in this case the mad craving for glory and love of vanity), let him give his approval to those who are moved by implacable loathing and enmity against a mind of this sort, and never tolerate the object of their abhorrence. For he knows for a certainty that 99 such judges could never have failed to give a sound verdict, but as their training from the first has taught them who is the true king, the true lord, they hate the thought of giving homage and honour to one who appropriates the honour due to God and calls away his suppliants to do service to himself. XV. Therefore they will boldly say: "Wilt thou indeed 100 be king and king it over us, or dost thou fail to know that we are not self-ruling but under the kingship of an immortal king, the one and only God? Wilt βασιλευόμεθα; τί δέ; “κυριεύων κυριεύσεις ἡμῶν;” μὴ γὰρ οὐ δεσποζόμεθα καὶ ἔχομέν τε καὶ ἔξομεν εἰς τὸν αἰεὶ χρόνον τὸν αὐτὸν κύριον; ὧ δουλεύοντες οὕτω γεγήθαμεν, ὡς οὐδεὶς ἕτερος ἐπ’ ἐλευθερίᾳ· καὶ γὰρ ἐστὶ τὸ δουλεύειν θεῷ πάντων ἄριστον, ὅσα ἐν γενέσει τετίμηται.

---

<sup>7</sup> MSS. οικέτας, which I think might be retained.

PHILO

- 101 εὐξάιμην ἂν οὖν καὶ αὐτὸς δυναθῆναι τοῖς γνωσθεῖσιν ὑπὸ τούτων ἐμμεῖναι βεβαίως· ὀπτήρες γὰρ καὶ κατάσκοποι καὶ ἔφοροι πραγμάτων, οὐ σωμάτων, εἰσὶν ἀκριβοδίκαιοι,<sup>1</sup> πάντα νήφοντες τὸν αἰῶνα, ὡς ὑπὸ μηδενὸς ἔτι τῶν εἰωθότων δελεάζειν
- 102 ἀπατάσθαι. μεθύω δὲ ἄχρι νῦν ἐγὼ καὶ ἀσαφείᾳ πολλῇ κέχρημαι καὶ βάρκτρων καὶ τῶν ποδηγετησόντων ὡσπερ οἱ τυφλοὶ δέομαι· σκηριπτομένῳ<sup>2</sup> γὰρ ἐγγένοιτ’ ἂν ἴσως μήτε προσπατεῖν μήτε
- 103 ὀλισθαίνειν. εἰ δέ τινες ἀνεξετάστους καὶ ἀπερισκέπτους εἰδότες ἑαυτοὺς οὐ σπουδάζουσι<sup>3</sup> τοῖς ἐξητακόσιον ἅ χρῆ πάντα ἀκριβῶς καὶ περισκεμμένως ἀκολουθεῖν, ἀγνοοῦντες τὴν ὁδὸν ἐπισταμένοις, ἴστωσαν ὅτι δυσαναπορεύτοις βαράθροις περιπαρέντες οὐδ’ ἐπειγόμενοι<sup>4</sup> προελθεῖν ἔτι δυνήσονται.
- 104 ἐγὼ δ’ ἐκείνοις, ὅταν μικρὸν ἀνεθῶ τῆς μέθης, οὕτως εἰμὶ ἔνσπονδος, ὡς τὸν αὐτὸν ἐχθρὸν καὶ φίλον εἶναι νομίζειν. καὶ νῦν οὐδὲν ἤττον τὸν ἐνυπνιαστήν, ὅτι γε καὶ ἐκείνοι, προβαλοῦμαι καὶ στυγήσω· καὶ οὐδεὶς εὖ φρονῶν ἐπὶ τούτῳ μέμψαιτ’ ἂν με τῷ<sup>5</sup> τὰς πλειόνων<sup>6</sup> γνώμας τε καὶ ψήφους αἰεὶ
- 105 νικᾶν. ἐπειδὴν δὲ πρὸς ἀμείνω βίον

<sup>1</sup> MSS. ἀκριβεῖς, δίκαιοι.

<sup>2</sup> Ἄ σκ(lacuna of five letters)μένω: Trin. σκίμπονος χρεῖά ἐστιν, ἠρεισμένῳ γάρ.

<sup>3</sup> Ἄ σπου(lacuna of seven letters): Trin. σπουδὴν παρέχοντες.

ON DREAMS, II. 100-105

thou indeed be lord and lord it over us? Are we not under a master, and have we not and shall we not have for ever the same lord, bondage to whom gives us more joy than his freedom does to any other?" For of all things that are held in honour in this world of creation bondage to God is the best.

So I myself would pray that I might hold firmly to 101 their judgements, for they are the scouts, the watchers, the overseers of mental facts, not of material things,<sup>a</sup> strict in censorship, never failing in soberness, thus no more misled by the lures which so commonly deceive. But hitherto I have been as a drunken man 102 beset by constant uncertainty, and like the blind I need staff and guiding hands, for had I a staff to lean on I might perhaps be saved from stumbling or slipping. But those who know themselves to be 103 lacking in self-testing and thoughtfulness and yet do not take pains to follow those who have tested and thought out everything with care, those who know the road of which they themselves are ignorant, may be sure that they are pinned amid impassable ravines and with all their efforts will be unable to advance further. And I, when the drunken fit abates a little, 104 am in such close alliance with them that I take their friends for my friends and their enemies for my enemies. Indeed, even in my present state I will reject and hate the dreamer because they hate him; and no one of sense can blame me for this because the votes and decisions of the majority must always prevail. . . . But when he changes his life 105

<sup>a</sup> See note on Quis Rerum 242.

<sup>4</sup> MSS. ἐπιγινόμενοι.

<sup>5</sup> MSS. μετὰ.

<sup>6</sup> Α πλείω (Trin. πλείους).

PHILO

μεταβάλη καὶ μηκέτ' ἐνυπνιάζεται μηδὲ ταῖς κεναῖς τῶν κενοδόξων φαντασίαις ἰλυσπώμενος κακοπαθῆ μηδὲ νύκτα καὶ σκότος καὶ πραγμάτων ἀδήλων καὶ ἀτεκμάρτων συντυχίας ὄνειροπολῆ, 106 περιαναστὰς δὲ ἐκ τοῦ βαθέος ὕπνου διατελῆ μὲν ἐγρηγορώς, ἐνάργειαν δὲ πρὸ ἀσαφείας καὶ πρὸ ψευδοῦς ὑπολήψεως ἀλήθειαν καὶ πρὸ νυκτὸς ἡμέραν καὶ φῶς πρὸ σκότους ἀποδέχεται καὶ τὴν μὲν γυναικα τοῦ Αἰγυπτίου, σώματος ἡδονήν, εἰς αὐτὴν<sup>1</sup> εἰσελθεῖν καὶ τῆς ὁμιλίας αὐτῆς ἀπολαῦσαι 107 παρακαλοῦσαν ἀποστρέφεται διὰ πόθον ἐγκρατείας [673] | καὶ ζῆλον εὐσεβείας ἀλεκτον, ὧν δὲ ἔδοξεν ἀλλο-τριωθῆναι συγγενικῶν καὶ πατρῶων ἀγαθῶν μετα-ποιῆται πάλιν τὸ ἐπιβάλλον ἀρετῆς ἑαυτῷ μέρος δικαίων ἀνακτᾶσθαι καὶ ταῖς κατὰ μικρὸν ἐπανιῶν βελτιώσεσιν ὡς ἐπὶ κορυφῆς τοῦ ἑαυτοῦ βίου καὶ τέλους ἰδρυθεῖς ἀναφθέγγεται, ὃ παθὼν ἀκριβῶς ἔμαθεν, ὅτι “ τοῦ θεοῦ ” ἔστιν, ἀλλ' οὐδενὸς ἔτι 108 τῶν εἰς γένεσιν ἠκόντων αἰσθητοῦ τὸ παράπαν, οἱ μὲν ἀδελφοὶ καταλλακτηρίους ποιήσονται συμβάσεις, τὸ μῖσος εἰς φιλίαν καὶ τὸ κακόνουν<sup>2</sup> εἰς εὖνοιαν μεταβαλόντες, ἐγὼ δ' ὁ τούτων ὀπαδὸς—πείθεσθαι γὰρ ὡς δεσπόταις οἰκέτης ἔμαθον—109 ἐπαινῶν οὐκ ἐπιλείψω τῆς μετανοίας ἐκείνων· εἶ γε καὶ Μωυσῆς ὁ ἱεροφάντης ἀξιέραστον καὶ ἀξιομνημόνευτον οὖσαν αὐτοῦ τὴν μετάνοιαν ἐκ φθορᾶς ἀνασώζει διὰ συμβόλου τῶν ὀστέων, ἃ κατορωρύχθαι μέχρι τοῦ παντὸς οὐκ ᾤετο δεῖν εἶναι (ἐν) Αἰγύπτῳ, παγχάλεπον ἠγούμενος, εἶ τι ἦνθησεν ἢ ψυχὴ καλόν, τοῦτ' εἶσαι μαρανθῆναι καὶ κατακλυσθὲν ἀφανισθῆναι πλημμύραις, ἃς ὁ

<sup>1</sup> MSS. αὐτὸν.

<sup>2</sup> MSS. κακὸν.

ON DREAMS, II. 105-109

for the better and renounces his idle visions, his troublous crawling and cringing amid the vain fantasies of the vainglorious, and the dreams of night and darkness and the chance issues of things vague and obscure ; when he rises from his deep slumbering 106 to abiding wakefulness and welcomes clearness before uncertainty, truth before false supposition, day before night, light before darkness ; when moved by a yearning for continence and a vast zeal for piety he rejects bodily pleasure, the wife of the Egyptian, as she bids him come in to her and enjoy her embraces (Gen. xxxix. 7) ; when he claims the goods of his kins- 107 men and father from which he seemed to have been disinherited and holds it his duty to recover that portion of virtue which falls to his lot ; when he passes step by step from betterment to betterment and, established firmly as it were on the crowning heights and consummation of his life, utters aloud the lesson which experience had taught him so fully, " I belong to God " (Gen. l. 19), and not any longer to any sense object that has been created,—then his brethren will 108 make with him covenants of reconciliation, changing their hatred to friendship, their ill-will to good-will, and I, their follower and their servant, who have learnt to obey them as masters, will not fail to praise him for his repentance. And with good reason too, 109 since Moses the revealer preserves from destruction the story of his repentance, so worthy of love and remembrance, under the symbol of the bones which he held should not be suffered to remain buried for ever in Egypt (Ex. xiii. 19). For he deemed it a grievous shame to suffer any fair blossom of the soul to be withered or flooded and drowned by the streams

PHILO

- τῶν παθῶν Αἰγύπτιος ποταμός, τὸ σῶμα, διὰ πασῶν τῶν αἰσθήσεων ῥέων ἐνδελεχῶς ἐκδίδωσιν.
- 110 XVI. Ἡ μὲν οὖν ἐπὶ τῶν δραγμάτων<sup>1</sup> φανείσα ὄψις ἀπὸ γῆς καὶ διάκρισις εἴρηται· τὴν δὲ ἑτέραν καιρὸς ἤδη σκοπεῖν, καὶ ὡς ὄνειροκριτικῇ τέχνῃ
- 111 διαστέλλεται. “εἶδεν” οὖν φησιν “ἐνύπνιον ἕτερον καὶ διηγήσατο τῷ πατρὶ καὶ τοῖς ἀδελφοῖς αὐτοῦ καὶ εἶπεν· ὥσπερ (ὁ) ἥλιος καὶ ἡ σελήνη καὶ ἕνδεκα ἀστέρες προσεκύνουν με. καὶ ἐπέτιμησεν αὐτῷ ὁ πατὴρ καὶ εἶπε· τί τὸ ἐνύπνιον ὃ ἐνυπνιασθῆς; ἀρά γε ἐλθόντες ἐλευσόμεθα ἐγὼ καὶ ἡ μήτηρ σου καὶ οἱ ἀδελφοί σου προσκυνῆσαι σοὶ ἐπὶ τὴν γῆν; ἐζήλωσαν δὲ αὐτὸν οἱ ἀδελφοί,
- 112 ὁ δὲ πατὴρ διετήρησε τὸ ῥῆμα.” φασὶ τοίνυν οἱ μετεωρολογικοί, τὸν ζῳδιακὸν κύκλον μέγιστον ὄντα τῶν κατ’ οὐρανὸν δυοκαίδεκα (ἕκ) ζῳδίων,<sup>2</sup> ἀφ’ ὧν καὶ τὴν ἐπωνυμίαν ἔσχε, κατηστερίσθαι, ἥλιον δὲ καὶ σελήνην αἰεὶ περὶ αὐτὸν εἰλουμένους ἕκαστον διεξέρχεσθαι τῶν ζῳδίων, οὐκ ἰσοταχεῖς,<sup>3</sup> ἀλλ’ ἐν ἀριθμοῖς καὶ χρόνοις ἀνίστοις, τὸν μὲν ἐν ἡμέραις τριάκοντα, τὴν δὲ δωδεκατημορίῳ τούτων μάλιστα, ὅπερ ἡμερῶν δυεῖν καὶ ἡμίσεος ἐστίν.
- 113 ἔδοξεν οὖν ὁ τὴν θεόπεμπτον φαντασίαν ἰδὼν ὑπ’ ἀστέρων ἕνδεκα προσκυνεῖσθαι, δωδέκατον συντάττων ἑαυτὸν εἰς τὴν τοῦ ζῳδιακοῦ συμπλήρωσιν
- 114 κύκλου. μέμνημαι<sup>4</sup> δὲ καὶ πρότερόν τινας ἀκούσας ἀνδρὸς οὐκ ἀμελῶς οὐδὲ ῥαθυμῶς τῷ μαθήματι προσενεχθέντος, ὅτι οὐκ ἀνθρωποὶ μόνου δοξομανοῦσιν, ἀλλὰ καὶ οἱ ἀστέρες καὶ περὶ πρω-

<sup>1</sup> MSS. ἀπὸ τῶν πραγμάτων.

<sup>2</sup> <ἕκ> is my insertion: Wend. ζῳδοῖς: Mangey ζῳδίων <σημείους>.

<sup>3</sup> MSS. ἰσοταχοῦς: perhaps ἰσοταχῶς.

<sup>4</sup> MSS. μέμνηται.

ON DREAMS, II. 109-114

which the Egyptian river of passion, the body, pours forth unceasingly through the channel of all the senses.<sup>a</sup>

XVI. So much for the vision drawn from earth— 110 the vision of the sheaves and the interpretation put upon it. It is now fitting to examine the other, and to see how the rules of dream-interpretation explain it. He saw, the text says, another dream and told it 111 to his father and brethren, and said "it was as though the sun and the moon and the eleven stars made obeisance to me." And his father rebuked him and said, "What is this dream that thou hast dreamt? Shall I and thy mother and thy brethren indeed come to do obeisance to thee on the earth?" And his brothers were angry with him, but his father kept the saying in memory (Gen. xxxvii. 9-11). Well, the students of the upper world tell us that the 112 Zodiac, the largest of the circles of heaven, is formed into constellations out of twelve signs, called zodia or "creatures" from which also it takes its name. The sun and the moon, they say, ever revolve along the circle and pass through each of the signs, though the two do not move at the same speed, but at unequal rates as measured in numbers, the sun taking thirty days and the moon about a twelfth of that time, that is two and a half days. He then who saw that heaven- 113 sent vision dreamt that the eleven stars made him obeisance, thus classing himself as the twelfth to complete the circle of the zodiac. Now, 114
I remember once hearing a man who had applied himself to the study in no careless or indolent manner say that it is not only men who have a mad craving for glory, but the stars too have rivalry for precedence

<sup>a</sup> For the sense of §§ 105-109 cf. De Mig. 16-25.

PHILO

- 115 τείων ἀμιλλώμενοι δικαιοῦσιν οἱ μείζους | αἰεὶ πρὸς [674] τῶν ἐλαττόνων δορυφορεῖσθαι. ταῦτα μὲν οὖν, ὅπως ἂν ἀληθείας ἢ εἰκαιολογίας ἔχῃ, παρετέον τοῖς μετεωροθήραις σκοπεῖν. λέγομεν δὲ ἡμεῖς, [ὡς] ὅτι ὁ σπουδῆς ἀκρίτου καὶ φιλονεικίας ἀλόγου καὶ κενῆς δόξης ἐραστής, αἰεὶ φυσώμενος ὑπ' ἀνοίας, οὐ μόνον ἀνθρώπους ὑπερκύπτειν ἀλλὰ 116 καὶ τὴν τῶν ὄντων φύσιν ἀξιοῖ. καὶ νομίζει μὲν ἑαυτοῦ χάριν τὰ πάντα γεγενῆσθαι, ἀναγκαῖον δ' εἶναι δασμὸν ἕκαστον ὡς βασιλεῖ φέρειν αὐτῷ, γῆν, ὕδωρ, ἀέρα, οὐρανόν· καὶ τοσαύτη τῆς εὐ-ηθείας ὑπερβολῇ χρῆται, ὥστε οὐκ ἰσχύει λογίσασθαι, ὃ κὰν παῖς ἀφρων ἐνοηθείη, ὅτι τεχνίτης οὐδεὶς ἔνεκα μέρους ποτὲ ὄλον, ἀλλ' ἔνεκα τοῦ ὄλου μέρος δημιουργεῖ· μέρος δὲ τοῦ παντὸς ἀνθρωπος, ὥστε γεγωνῶς<sup>1</sup> εἰς τὸ συμπλήρωμα τοῦ κόσμου δικαίως ἂν αὐτὸς ἐκείνῳ συντελοῖη.<sup>2</sup> 117 XVII. φλυαρίας δὲ ἄρα τοσαύτης γέμουσί τινες, ὥστε ἀγανακτοῦσιν, εἰ μὴ ὁ κόσμος τοῖς βουλήμασιν αὐτῶν ἔποιτο. διὰ τοῦτο Ξέρξης μὲν ὁ Περσῶν βασιλεὺς, βουλόμενος τοὺς ἐχθροὺς καταπληξαι, μεγαλουργίας ἐπίδειξιν ἐποιεῖτο, και-118 νουργῶν τὴν φύσιν· γῆν μὲν γὰρ μετεστοιχείου καὶ θάλατταν, ἀντιδιδούς πελάγει μὲν ἠπειρον, ἠπείρω δὲ πέλαγος, τὸν μὲν Ἑλλήσποντον ζευγνὺς γεφύραις,<sup>3</sup> ὄρος δὲ τὸν Ἄθω ρηγνὺς εἰς βαθεῖς κόλπους, οἱ πληρούμενοι θαλάττης ὁ νέος καὶ χειρόκμητος<sup>4</sup> εὐθύς πόντος ἦσαν, τὸ παλαιὸν<sup>5</sup> τῆς 119 φύσεως ἐξαλλοιωθεῖς· τὰ δὲ περίγεια, ὡς ἐδόκει, θαυματουργήσας ἀνέβαινε ταῖς τετολημμέναις ἐπι-

<sup>1</sup> MSS. γέγονεν.

<sup>2</sup> MSS. συντελώνη.

<sup>3</sup> MSS. ζευγνύσθαι φυραῖς.

ON DREAMS, II. 114-119

and consider it right that the greater should have the lesser for their squires. How far this is true or mere 115 idle talk is a question I must leave to the investigators of the upper world.

But we say that the lover of ill-considered aims, irrational contentions and vainglory is always puffed up by folly and claims to exalt himself not only above men but above the world of nature, and thinks that all things have come into 116 being for his sake and that they must each of them, earth, water, air, heaven, pay their tribute to him as king. And so extreme is the stupidity under which he labours that he has not the reasoning power to see what even a brainless child could understand, that no craftsman makes the whole for the sake of the part, but rather the part for the sake of the whole, and that a man is a part of the all, so that as he has come into being to help to complete the universe it would be only right for him to subscribe his contribution to it. XVII. But some people we see are so brimful of folly 117 that they are aggrieved if the whole world does not follow their wishes.

Thus Xerxes, the king of the Persians, wishing to strike terror into his enemies, made a display of action on a grand scale by creating a revolution in nature ; for he converted two elements, earth into sea, and sea into earth, giving 118 dry land to the ocean and ocean in exchange to the dry land, by bridging over the Hellespont and breaking up Mount Athos into deep hollows, which filled with salt water at once formed a new and artificial sea entirely transformed from its ancient nature. And having played the conjurer, as he thought, 119 with the regions of earth he proceeded in the boldness of his schemes to mount to heaven also,

---

<sup>4</sup> MSS. χειρότμητος.

<sup>5</sup> MSS. τῷ παλαιῷ.

PHILO

- νοίαις συνανάγων ἀσέβειαν ἑαυτῷ καὶ εἰς οὐρανὸν ὁ δύστηνος, ὡς τὰ ἀκίνητα κινήσων καὶ τὸν θεῖον στρατὸν καθαιρήσων, καί, τὸ λεγόμενον, ἀφ' ἱερᾶς
- 120 ἤρχετο· τὸν γὰρ ἄριστον τῶν ἐκεῖ, τὸν ἡγεμόνα ἡμέρας ἡλίον, ἐτόξευεν, ὥσπερ οὐκ αὐτὸς ἀφανεῖ βέλει φρενοβλαβείας τιτρωσκόμενος οὐ μόνον διὰ τὸ ἀδυνάτων ἀλλὰ καὶ διὰ τὸ ἀνοσιωτάτων ἔργων ἐρᾶν, ὧν καὶ θάτερον μεγάλη τῷ ἐγχειροῦντι
- 121 δύσκληια ἦν. Γερμανῶν δὲ πολυανθρωποτάτην μοῖραν—ἀμπωτίζει<sup>1</sup> δὲ παρ' αὐτοῖς ἢ θάλαττα—λόγος ἔχει κατὰ τὰς ἐκεῖ παλιρροίας ἐπιδρομὰς ὠθουμένους μετὰ σπουδῆς, ἐπανατεινόμενους γυμνὰ τὰ ξίφη, θέοντας ὡς στίφος πολεμίων
- 122 τὸ κυματούμενον πέλαγος ὑπαντιάζειν· (οὓς) ἄξιον μισεῖν μὲν, ὅτι ἐναντία ὄπλα δι' ἀθεότητα κατὰ τῶν ἀδουλώτων τῆς φύσεως αἰρεῖσθαι τολμῶσι μερῶν, χλευάζειν δέ, ὅτι ἀδυνατοῖς ἐγχειροῦσιν ὡς δυνατοῖς,<sup>2</sup> νομίζοντες ὡς ζῶον καὶ ὕδωρ κεντεῖσθαι, τιτρώσκεσθαι, κτείνεσθαι δύνασθαι, καὶ πάλιν ἀλγεῖν, δεδιέναι, φόβῳ τῶν ἐπιόντων ἀποδιδράσκειν καὶ ὅσα ψυχῆς πάθη κατὰ τε ἡδονὰς καὶ ἀλγηδόνας ἀναδέχεσθαι.
- 123 [675] XVIII. Χθές | δ' οὐ πρόην ἄνδρα τινὰ οἶδα τῶν ἡγεμονικῶν, ὅς, ἐπειδὴ<sup>3</sup> τὴν προστασίαν καὶ ἐπιμέλειαν εἶχεν Αἰγύπτου, τὰ πάτρια κινεῖν ἡμῶν διενόηθη καὶ διαφερόντως τὸν ἀγιώτατον καὶ φρικωδέστατον<sup>4</sup> περὶ τῆς ἐβδόμης ὑπάρχοντα νόμον καταλύειν καὶ ὑπηρετεῖν ἠνάγκαζεν (ἐν αὐτῇ)<sup>5</sup>

<sup>1</sup> MSS. ἀμπωτίζειν.

<sup>2</sup> MSS. δυνατόν.

<sup>3</sup> MSS. have ἐπειδὴ before τὰ πάτρια.

<sup>4</sup> MSS. ἀγιωδέστατα καὶ φρικωδέστατα (Mangey ἀγιωδέστατον).

ON DREAMS, II. 119-123

taking, unhappy wretch, impiety as his fellow climber. He thought to remove the irremovable and to overthrow the divine host, and, to quote the proverb, he began with the "sacred line."<sup>a</sup> For he aimed his 120 arrows at the best of the heavenly bodies, the sun who rules the day, and little knew that he himself was wounded by the unseen bolt of insanity, not merely because the feats he hoped to do were impossible, but because they were utterly unholy, either of which reflects great discredit on the attempter.

And the Germans of the most thickly 121 populated part, where the sea ebbs and flows, when the flood-time comes there, try eagerly, we are told, to repel its onsets, brandishing their unsheathed swords and running like a hostile band to meet the oncoming waves.<sup>b</sup> They deserve our detestation in 122 that in their godlessness they dared to take arms to oppose the parts of nature which know no servitude. They deserve our ridicule because they attempt the impossible as though it were possible, and think that water like a living creature can be speared, wounded, killed, or again can feel pain and fear,<sup>c</sup> or, in its terror at the attack, run away, and in fact feel all the sensations of the living soul, both pleasurable and painful.

XVIII. Not long ago I knew one of the ruling class<sup>c</sup> 123 who when he had Egypt in his charge and under his authority purposed to disturb our ancestral customs and especially to do away with the law of the Seventh Day which we regard with most reverence and awe. He tried to compel men to do service to him on it and

<sup>a</sup> With ιεράς, sc. γραμμῆς. See App. p. 608.

<sup>b</sup> See App. pp. 608 f.

<sup>c</sup> See App. p. 609.

---

<sup>5</sup> <έν ἀντῆ> is my insertion: Markland proposed it as substitute for ἀντῶ.

PHILO

- αὐτῷ καὶ τὰ ἄλλα ποιεῖν παρὰ τὸ καθεστῶς ἔθος, νομίζων ἀρχὴν ἔσσεσθαι καὶ τῆς περὶ τὰ ἄλλα ἐκδαιτησίως καὶ τῆς τῶν ὄλων παραβάσεως, εἰ
- 124 τὸ ἐπὶ τῇ ἑβδόμῃ πάτριον ἀνελεῖν δυνηθεῖη. καὶ μὴθ' οὓς ἐβιάζετο ὄρων εἰκοντας τοῖς ἐπιτάγμασι μῆτε τὴν ἄλλην πληθὺν ἡρεμοῦσαν, ἀλλὰ βαρέως καὶ τραχέως φέρουσαν τὸ πρᾶγμα καὶ ὡς ἐπ' ἀνδραποδισμῷ καὶ πορθήσει καὶ κατασκαφῇ πατρίδος πενθοῦντάς τε καὶ κατηφοῦντας, ἡξίου λόγῳ
- 125 διδάσκειν παρανομεῖν, φάσκων· εἰ πολεμίων ἔφοδος αἰφνίδιον γένοιτο ἢ κατακλυσμοῦ φορὰ τοῦ ποταμοῦ ταῖς πλημμύραις παραρρήξαντος τὸ χῶμα ἢ ριπή πυρὸς ἢ κεραυνία φλόξ ἢ λιμὸς ἢ λοιμὸς ἢ σεισμός ἢ ὅσα ἄλλα κακὰ χειροποίητα καὶ θεήλατα, μεθ'
- 126 ἡσυχίας πάσης οἴκοι διατρίψετε; ἢ μετὰ τοῦ συνήθους σχήματος προελεύσεσθε, τὴν μὲν δεξιὰν εἴσω χεῖρα συναγαγόντες, τὴν δὲ ἐτέραν ὑπὸ τῆς ἀμπεχόνης παρὰ ταῖς λαγόσι πῆξαντες, ἵνα μηδ'
- 127 ἄκοντές τι τῶν εἰς τὸ σωθῆναι παράσχησθε; καὶ καθεδείσθε ἐν τοῖς συναγωγίοις ὑμῶν, τὸν εἰωθότα θίασον ἀγείροντες καὶ ἀσφαλῶς τὰς<sup>1</sup> ἱερὰς βίβλους ἀναγινώσκοντες κἂν εἴ τι μὴ τρανὲς εἴη διαπτύσσοντες<sup>2</sup> καὶ τῇ πατρίῳ φιλοσοφίᾳ διὰ μακρηγορίας
- 128 ἐνευκαιροῦντές τε καὶ ἐνσχολάζοντες; ἀλλὰ γὰρ ἀποσεισάμενοι πάντα ταῦτα πρὸς τὴν ἑαυτῶν καὶ γονέων καὶ τέκνων καὶ τῶν ἄλλων οἰκειοτάτων καὶ φιλτάτων σωμάτων, εἰ δὲ δεῖ τάληθές εἰπεῖν, καὶ κτημάτων καὶ χρημάτων, ὡς μηδὲ ταῦτα ἀφα-
- 129 νισθεῖη, βοήθειαν ἀποδύσεσθε.<sup>3</sup> καὶ μὴν οὗτος αὐτὸς ἐγὼ τὰ λεχθέντα, ἔφη, πάντα εἰμί, <sup>1</sup> MSS. ἀσφαλεῖς τε.

<sup>2</sup> MSS. διαπτύοντες.

<sup>3</sup> MSS. ἀποδύεσθαι.

ON DREAMS, II. 123-129

perform other actions which contravene our established custom, thinking that if he could destroy the ancestral rule of the Sabbath it would lead the way to irregularity in all other matters, and a general backsliding. And when he saw that those on whom 124 he was exercising pressure were not submitting to his orders, and that the rest of the population instead of taking the matter calmly were intensely indignant and shewed themselves as mournful and disconsolate as they would were their native city being sacked and razed, and its citizens being sold into captivity, he thought good to try to argue them into breaking the law. "Suppose," he said, "there was a sudden 125 inroad of the enemy or an inundation caused by the river rising and breaking through the dam, or a blazing conflagration or a thunderbolt or famine, or plague or earthquake, or any other trouble either of human or divine agency, will you stay at home perfectly quiet? Or will you appear in public in 126 your usual guise, with your right hand tucked inside and the left held close to the flank under the cloak lest you should even unconsciously do anything that might help to save you? And will you sit in your 127 conventicles and assemble your regular company and read in security your holy books, expounding any obscure point and in leisurely comfort discussing at length your ancestral philosophy? No, you will 128 throw all these off and gird yourselves up for the assistance of yourselves, your parents and your children, and the other persons who are nearest and dearest to you, and indeed also your chattels and wealth to save them too from annihilation. See then," he went on, "I who stand before you am 129

PHILO

- τυφώς, πόλεμος, κατακλυσμός, κεραυνός, λιμηρὰ<sup>1</sup> καὶ λοιμώδης νόσος, ὁ τινάπτων καὶ κυκῶν τὰ παγίως ἐστῶτα σεισμός, εἰμαρμένης ἀνάγκης οὐκ 130 ὄνομα, ἀλλ' ἐμφανῆς ἐγγὺς ἐστῶσα δύναμις. τί οὖν τὸν<sup>2</sup> ταῦτα λέγοντα ἢ διανοούμενον αὐτὸ μόνον εἶναι φῶμεν; ἄρ' οὐκ ἐκτόπιον; ὑπερωκεάνιον μὲν οὖν ἢ μετακόσμιόν τι καινὸν κακόν, εἴ γε τῷ πάντα μακαρίῳ ὁ πάντα βαρυδαίμων ἑαυτὸν ἐξομοιοῦν 131 ἐτόλμησεν. ὑπερθεῖτ' ἂν<sup>3</sup> οὗτος ἥλιον καὶ σελήνην [676] καὶ τοὺς ἄλλους ἀστέρας βλασφημεῖν, | ὅποτε τι τῶν ἐλπισθέντων κατὰ τὰς ἐτησίους ὥρας ἢ<sup>4</sup> μὴ συνόλως ἢ μὴ ῥαδίως ἀποβαίνοι, φλογμὸν μὲν θέρους, κρυμὸν δὲ [καὶ] χειμῶνος βαρὺν κατασκήπτουτος, ἔαρος δὲ καὶ μετοπώρου, τοῦ μὲν πρὸς εὐκαρπίαν<sup>5</sup> ἐστειρωμένου, τοῦ δὲ πρὸς νοσημάτων 132 γενέσεις εὐτοκία χρωμένου; πάντα μὲν οὖν ἀνασείων κάλων<sup>6</sup> ἀχαλίνου στόματος καὶ κακηγόρου<sup>7</sup> γλώττης, ὥσπερ τὸν εἰωθότα δασμὸν οὐκ ἐνεγκόντας τοὺς ἀστέρας<sup>8</sup> αἰτιάσεται, τιμᾶσθαι μονοноῦ καὶ προσκυνεῖσθαι δικαίων<sup>9</sup> ὑπὸ τῶν οὐρανίων<sup>10</sup> τὰπίγεια καὶ περιττότερον ἑαυτὸν, ὅσω καὶ τῶν ἄλλων ἀνθρωπος ὢν διενηνοχέαι ζώων δοκεῖ.
 133 XIX. Τοιοῦτοι μὲν οἱ κορυφαῖοι τῆς κενῆς ἡμῖν δόξης γράφονται, τοὺς δὲ χορευτὰς ἐν μέρει κατ' αὐτοὺς<sup>11</sup> ἴδωμεν. οὗτοι μὲν ἐπιβουλεύουσιν ἀεὶ τοῖς

<sup>1</sup> MSS. λοιμύρα.

<sup>3</sup> MSS. ὑπερθ . . . αν.

<sup>5</sup> MSS. ἦρος ἀκαρπίαν.

<sup>7</sup> MSS. κατηγόρου.

<sup>9</sup> MSS. δικαίον.

<sup>11</sup> MSS. καθ' αὐτοὺς.

<sup>2</sup> MSS. ἦν.

<sup>4</sup> MSS. εἶ.

<sup>6</sup> MSS. ἀνασελεῖν καλὸν.

<sup>8</sup> MSS. δ' ἐτέρας.

<sup>10</sup> MSS. οὐρανῶν.

<sup>a</sup> Or "between the worlds." See on De Som. i. 184.

ON DREAMS, II. 129-133

all the things I have named. I am the whirlwind, the war, the deluge, the lightning, the plague of famine or disease, the earthquake which shakes and confounds what was firm and stable ; I am constraining destiny, not its name but its power, visible to your eyes and standing at your side." What shall we say 130 of one who says or even merely thinks these things ? Shall we not call him an evil thing hitherto unknown : a creature of a strange land or rather one from beyond the ocean and the universe<sup>a</sup>—he who dared to liken to the All-blessed his all-miserable self ? Would he 131 delay to utter blasphemies against the sun, moon and the other stars, if what he hoped for at each season of the year did not happen at all or only grudgingly, if the summer<sup>b</sup> visited him with scorching heat or the winter<sup>b</sup> with a terrible frost, if the spring failed in its fruit-bearing or the autumn shewed fertility in breeding diseases ? Nay, he will loose 132 every reef of his unbridled mouth and scurrilous tongue and accuse the stars of not paying their regular tribute, and scarce refrain from demanding that honour and homage be paid by the things of heaven to the things of earth, and to himself more abundantly inasmuch as being a man he conceives himself to have been made superior to other living creatures.

XIX. Such is our description of the leaders of vain- 133 glory : let us now consider separately the rank and file which follow them. They are for ever plotting <sup>b</sup> Wend. notes that Cohn wished to transpose "summer" and "winter." Though this may at first sight seem more likely, I think Wend. is right in following the mss. Railing at extremes of the natural is more impious than railing at the unnatural, and the words about spring and autumn bear this out.

PHILO

- ἀσκηταῖς ἀρετῆς· οὓς ὅταν ἴδωσι σπουδάζοντας τὸν αὐτῶν βίον ἀληθεία ἀδόλω φαιδρύνειν καὶ ὡς πρὸς σεληνιακὸν ἢ τὸ ἀφ' ἡλίου καθαρὸν φέγγος αὐγάζειν, ἀπατῶντες<sup>1</sup> ἢ βιαζόμενοι κωλύουσιν, εἰς τὸν ἀσεβῶν ἀνήλιον χῶρον εἰσελαύνοντες, ὃν ἐπέχουσι νυξ βαθεῖα καὶ σκότος ἀτελεύτητον καὶ εἰδώλων καὶ φασμάτων καὶ ὄνειράτων ἔθνη<sup>2</sup> μυρία, κακεῖ κατα-
- 134 δύσαντες προσκυνεῖν ὡς δεσπότης ἀναγκάζουσι. τὸν μὲν γὰρ φρονήσεως ἀσκητὴν ὑπολαμβάνομεν ἥλιον, ἐπειδήπερ ὁ μὲν<sup>3</sup> τοῖς σώμασιν, ὁ δὲ τοῖς κατὰ ψυχὴν πράγμασιν ἐμπαρέχει φῶς, τὴν δὲ παιδείαν, ἣ κέχρηται, σελήνην—ἐν νυκτὶ γὰρ ἡ ἑκατέρας εἰλικρινεστάτη καὶ ὠφελιμωτάτη χρῆσις ἐστίν,—ἀδελφοὺς δὲ τοὺς παιδείας καὶ ἀσκητικῆς ψυχῆς (ὡς) ἂν ἐγγόνους ἀστείους λόγους, οὓς πάντας ὀρθὴν ἀτραπὸν εὐθύνοντας τοῦ βίου παλαίσμασι πολυτρόποις καὶ πολυμηχάνοις αὐχενίζοντες ἐκτραχηλίζειν καὶ καταρράττειν ὑποσκελίζοντες<sup>4</sup> οἱ μηδὲν ὑγιὲς μήτε λέγειν μήτε φρονεῖν ἐγνωκότες
- 135 ἀξιοῦσι. διὸ καὶ ἐπιτιμᾶ τῷ τοιούτῳ τιθασῶς<sup>5</sup> ὁ πατήρ, οὐκ Ἰακώβ, ἀλλ' ὁ καὶ τούτου πρεσβύτερος ὀρθὸς λόγος φάσκων· “τί τὸ ἐνύπνιον
- 136 τοῦτο ἐνυπνιασθῆς;” ἀλλ' οὐκ ἐνύπνιον εἶδες· ἢ ὑπέλαβες, ὅτι τὰ φύσει ἐλεύθερα ἀνθρωπείων ἀνάγκη δοῦλα ἔσται καὶ ὑπήκοα τὰ ἄρχοντα καί, τὸ ἔτι παραδοξότερον, οὐκ ἄλλων ὑπήκοα ἀλλὰ

<sup>1</sup> MSS. ἀπαντῶντες.

<sup>2</sup> MSS. ἔθνη.

<sup>3</sup> MSS. ἢ . . . ἐπειδήπερ . . . μὲν <Trin. οἱ μὲν>.

<sup>4</sup> MSS. ὑποσκελίζοντας.

<sup>5</sup> MSS. τιθάσω.

<sup>a</sup> See note on Quis Rerum 242.

<sup>b</sup> Logically this should be “the stars.”

mischievous and evil against the practisers of virtue, and when they see them zealous to brighten their life with the light of guileless truth and irradiate it with moonbeams as it were and with pure sunlight, they hinder them by deceit or violence and drive them down to the sunless region of the impious where deep night reigns and endless darkness, and innumerable tribes of spectres and phantoms and dream-illusions. And when they have brought them to their setting there they compel them to do obeisance to themselves as masters. For we understand by the sun the 134 practiser of wisdom, since it provides light for material things even as the other does for the immaterial things of the soul.<sup>a</sup> And by the moon we understand the instruction which serves the wise, for both render a service most pure and useful in lightening a night, while the excellent thoughts and reasonings, the children as it were of instruction and the practising soul, are the brethren.<sup>b</sup> These it is who rule aright the straight path of life, but those who purpose to say nothing and think nothing that is wholesome deem well to ply them all with wrestling-grips of manifold turns and twists, with the throat-clutch which dislocates the neck, or the leg-fall which brings the wrestler with a thud to the ground.

And therefore one of this sort is gently 135 rebuked by his father, not Jacob, but by that right reason which is higher and greater than Jacob. "What is this dream which you dreamt?" (Gen. xxxvii. 10), he says. "You did not dream," he 136 means, "or did you suppose that the naturally free would be forced into slavery to the human, the powers which rule into subjection and, more unreasonable still, made subject not to some others but τῶν ἀρχομένων, οὐδ' ἐτέρων δοῦλα ἀλλὰ τῶν δουλευόντων; εἰ μὴ ἄρα κράτει<sup>1</sup> θεοῦ τοῦ μόνου πάντα δυνατοῦ, ᾧ καὶ τὰ ἀκίνητα κινεῖν καὶ τὰ φορούμενα θέμις ἰδρύσασθαι, μεταβολὴ τῶν καθ' 137 εστῶτων γένοιτο πρὸς τὰναντία. | ἐπεὶ τίνα ἕξει [677] λόγον τὸ ὀργίζεσθαι<sup>2</sup> καὶ ἐπιτιμᾶν τῷ τὴν καθ' ὕπνον φαντασίαν ἰδόντι; μὴ γὰρ ἐκὼν εἶδον αὐτήν; ἐρεῖ, τί μοι τὰ τῶν ἐκ προνοίας ἡδικηκότων ἐπάγεις<sup>3</sup> ἐγκλήματα; τὸ προσπεσὸν ἕξωθεν καὶ πληξάν μου 138 τὴν διάνοιαν αἰφνίδιον ἄκοντος διηγησάμην. ἀλλὰ γὰρ οὐκ ἔστι περὶ ὀνειράτος ὁ παρῶν λόγος, ἀλλὰ περὶ πραγμάτων εὐοικότων ἐνυπνίσις· ἃ τοῖς μὴ λίαν κεκαθαρμένοις μεγάλα καὶ λαμπρὰ καὶ περιμάχητα εἶναι δοκεῖ, μικρὰ ὄντα καὶ ἀμυδρὰ καὶ χλεύης ἐπάξια παρ' ἀδεκάστοις<sup>4</sup> ἀληθείας βραβευταῖς.

PHILO

139 XX. Ἄρ' οὖν, φησίν, ἐλεύσομαι μὲν <ὁ> ὀρθὸς λόγος, ἐγώ, ἀφίξεται δὲ καὶ ἡ τοῦ φιλομαθοῦς θιάσου ψυχῆς<sup>5</sup> μήτηρ ὁμοῦ καὶ τροφός, ἀρετῶσα παιδεία, συντενοῦσι δὲ καὶ οἱ ἀμφοτέρων ἡμῶν ἕγγονοι καὶ στάντες ἀντικρὺς οὕτω κατὰ στοίχον ἐν κόσμῳ τὰς χεῖρας ἐξάραντες προσ-

<sup>1</sup> MSS. κρατεῖν.

<sup>2</sup> MSS. ὀρίζεσθαι.

<sup>3</sup> MSS. ἐπάγης.

<sup>4</sup> MSS. παρὰ δὲ ἐκάστοις.

<sup>5</sup> MSS. ψύχη which Wend. brackets. Mangey on the other hand would read ψυχῆς and bracket θιάσου. But the latter is evidently needed to represent the brothers, and that the δυνάμεις should be called the θίασος ψυχῆς seems to me quite natural.

<sup>a</sup> The thought seems to be that Jacob's question means "it was no dream but a spiritual delusion." If it was a

ON DREAMS, II. 136-139

to those whom they rule, and slaves to none but those who themselves are in slavery?"<sup>a</sup> That could only be if<sup>b</sup> by the power of God who alone can do all things, whose right it is to move the immovable and to make stable the inconstant, the present state of things should be changed to its opposite. Nay, no 137 dream! for what sense would there be in rebuking or showing anger to one who has seen an illusion in his sleep? "Was it of my free will that I saw it?" he would say. "Why charge me as you charge those who have deliberately gone wrong? I did but tell you what came upon me from without and struck my mind suddenly through no action of my own." But the fact is that we are not concerned here with 138 a dream, but with things that resemble dreams: things which seem great and brilliant and desirable to those who are not very well purified, but are small and dull and ridiculous in the eyes of uncorrupted judges of truth.

XX. What he means is 139 this: "Shall I right reason come: shall fruitful instruction the mother and nurse of the soul-company that yearns for knowledge come too, shall the children of us two press forward, and shall we all standing straight opposite ranged in order with lifted hands dream no blame would attach (§ 137). I have therefore put a colon, as Mangey, after εἶδες, instead of a mark of interrogation as Wend. The question form, however, in the rest of the sentence does not fit in very well. I suggest οὐκ εἶδες <μᾶλλον> ἢ ὑπέλαβες, a favourite form with Philo for οὐκ . . . ἀλλά.

<sup>b</sup> The εἰ μή clause is connected with παραδοξότερον. "It would only fail to be paradoxical, if" etc.

PHILO

- 140 ευξώμεθα τύφον; πρότερον ύφέντες,<sup>1</sup> είτα καταβαλόντες έαυτούς είς τό έδαφος ποτινιασθαι και προσκυνείν έπιχειρήσωμεν; αλλά μή έπιλάμψαι ποτέ τούτοις γινομένοις ήλιος, έπει<sup>2</sup> βαθύ μέν σκότος κακοίς, τηλαυγές δέ φώς άγαθοίς έφαρμόζει. τί δ' αν γένοιτο μείζον κακόν ή τόν πλαστόν και φένακα τύφον αντί της άπλάστου και άψευδούς άτυφίας έπαινείσθαι τε και θαυμάζεσθαι;
- 141 Παγκάλως δέ προσδιέσταλται<sup>3</sup> τό "διετήρησεν ό πατήρ τό ρήμα". ψυχής γάρ ου νεωτέρας ουδέ άγόνου και έστερωμένης, αλλά τώ οντι πρεσβυτέρας και γεννάν έπισταμένης έργον έστι συζήν εύλαβεία και μηδενός καταφρονείν τό παράπαν, αλλά τό άδραστον και άνίκητον του θεου κράτος κατεπτηχέναι και περιαθρείν έν κύκλω, τί άρα
- 142 άποβήσεται τό τέλος αυτή. δια τουτο και την Μωυσέως αδελφήν—έλπις δέ παρ' ήμίν τοίς αλληγορικοίς ονομάζεται—φασιν άποσκοπεύν<sup>4</sup> μακρόθεν οι χρησμοί, προς τό του βίου δήπου τέλος έμβλέπουσαν, ίνα αίσιον άπαντήση, του τελεσφόρου κατα
- 143 πέμψαντος αυτό<sup>5</sup> άνωθεν άπ' ουρανοϋ. πολλοί γάρ πολλάκις πλωτά μεγάλα<sup>6</sup> διαβαλόντες<sup>7</sup> και μακρόν

<sup>1</sup> mss. άφέντες, which Wend. retains. For the punctuation and meaning see note a below.

<sup>2</sup> mss. έπί.

<sup>3</sup> mss. προδιέσταλται.

<sup>4</sup> mss. άποσκοπεύειν.

<sup>5</sup> mss. αυτώ.

<sup>6</sup> So mss.: Mangey and Wend. άπλωτα πελάγη, cf. § 180. The change seems to me unnecessary. It is true that I find no example of πλωτά as a substantive, but the sense is better. Philo is speaking of what frequently happens.

<sup>7</sup> mss. διαλαβόντες.

<sup>a</sup> Wendland and Mangey punctuate τύφον πρότερον άφ- (Mangey ύφέντες, i.e. "casting away our former pride." This seems to me impossible in view of the use of τύφος

address our prayers to vanity? Shall we first bow <sup>a</sup> 140 and then cast ourselves to the ground in supplication and obeisance?" No, may the sun never shine on these happenings, since deep darkness befits things evil and bright light the good, and what greater evil could there be than that vanity the fictitious and deceiver should receive praise and admiration, usurping the place of its opposite, simplicity in whom there is no fiction or falsity.

There is a further excellent lesson in the words, 141 "The father retained the saying" (Gen. xxxvii. 11). For surely it is the business of a soul which is no youngster nor barren nor sterile but verily an elder and skilled in parenthood, to take caution for its life-mate, to despise nothing at all but to crouch in awe before the power of God which none can evade or defeat, and to look with circumspection to see what end shall befall it. And so the oracles say that the 142 sister of Moses, to whom we who deal in allegory give the name of "Hope," "spied out from a distance" (Ex. ii. 4), looking doubtless to the consummation of life, that it may meet us with good auspice sent down from high heaven by the Consummator. For many a time and to many has it happened that 143 they have crossed wide spaces of navigable waters throughout. To cast away τῦφος in Philo's sense would be a worthy action, not as here unworthy. Moreover in § 140 it is clearly indicated as the recipient of misplaced homage. I feel no doubt that τῦφον is the object of προσευξώμεθα. As I have translated it, there are three stages: (1) standing with uplifted hands, (2) bowing, (3) falling prostrate, the last representing the LXX ἐπὶ τὴν γῆν. But I should like clearer authority for ὑφεῖναι ἑαυτούς = "to bow," and the use of πρότερον for πρώτον may seem strange, but cf. De Mos. ii. 49 and 184. Still the considerations mentioned above against the other interpretation seem to me overwhelming. See also App. p. 609.

PHILO

πλοῦν οὐρίοις πνεύμασιν ἀκίνδυνοι παραπεμφθέντες ἐν αὐτοῖς λιμέσιν ἐξαίφνης ἐναυάγησαν, μέλλοντες 144 ἤδη προσορμίζεσθαι. μυρίοι<sup>1</sup> δὲ καὶ βαρεῖς καὶ πολυετεῖς πολέμους ἀνά κράτος ἐλόντες καὶ ἄτρωτοι διατελέσαντες, ὡς μηδ' ἐπιφάνειαν ἄκραν νυχθῆναι,<sup>2</sup> [678] ἀλλ' ὥσπερ ἐκ | πανηγύρεως κοινοδήμου καὶ δημοτελοῦς ἑορτῆς<sup>3</sup> τελεῖν * * *<sup>4</sup> ὀλοκλήροις καὶ παντελέσι, μεθ' ἰλαρᾶς ἐπιστρέψαντες εὐθυμίας ἐν ταῖς ἰδίαις ὑφ' ὧν ἦκιστ' ἐχρῆν ἐπεβουλευθήσαν οἰκίαις, τὸ λεγόμενον τοῦτο, "βόες ἐπὶ φάτνῃ"<sup>5</sup> 145 σφαγέυτες. XXI. ὥσπερ δὴ ταῦτα ἀπροσδόκητοι καὶ ἀτέκμαρτοι συντυχίαι κατασκήπτειν<sup>6</sup> φιλοῦσιν, οὕτω καὶ τὰς περὶ ψυχὴν δυνάμεις ἀντρωθοῦσι πρὸς τὰναντία καὶ ἀντιμετακλίνουσιν, ἣν οἰαί τε' ὦσι, καὶ ἀνατρέψαι βιάζονται. τίς γὰρ εἰς τὸν ἀγῶνα 146 τοῦ βίου παρελθὼν ἄπτωτος ἔμεινε; τίς δ' οὐχ ὑπεσκεκίσθη; εὐδαίμων δ' ὁ μὴ πολλάκις. τίτι δ' οὐκ ἐφήδρευεν ἡ τύχη, διαπνέουσα καὶ συλλεγομένη ῥώμην, ἵνα συμπλακεῖσα εὐθὺς ἐξαρπάσῃ, 147 πρὶν φθάσαι τὸν ἀντίπαλον κονίσασθαι; οὐκ ἤδη<sup>8</sup> τινὰς ἴσμεν ἐκ παίδων εἰς γῆρας ἀφιγμένους, οἱ μηδεμιᾶς ἐπήσθοντο<sup>9</sup> ταραχῆς εἴτε δι' εὐμοιρίαν<sup>10</sup> φύσεως εἴτε διὰ τὴν τῶν τρεφόντων καὶ παιδευ-ὄντων ἐπιμέλειαν εἴτε καὶ ἀμφότερα, βαθείας δ' εἰρήνης ἀναπλησθέντας τῆς<sup>11</sup> (ἐν) ἑαυτοῖς, ἣ πρὸς ἀλήθειάν ἐστιν εἰρήνη, τῆς κατὰ τὰς πόλεις ἀρχέτυ-πον, καὶ διὰ τοῦτ' εὐδαίμονας νομισθέντας, ὅτι τὸν

<sup>1</sup> MSS. μυρίους.

<sup>2</sup> MSS. μιχθῆναι.

<sup>3</sup> MSS. ἑορτὰς.

<sup>4</sup> A lacuna of ten letters. I have translated Mangey's μέλεσιν for τελεῖν and Wendland's suggestion of ἐπανελεθεῖν for the lacuna. τελεῖν, however (intransitive), = "end up" may be genuine.

<sup>5</sup> MSS. φάτνης.

<sup>6</sup> MSS. κατασκάπτειν.

<sup>7</sup> MSS. ἐν οἰοί τε.

<sup>8</sup> MSS. εἰ δὴ.

ON DREAMS, II. 143-147

and passed a long voyage in safety escorted by favourable breezes, and then in the harbour itself have suddenly been shipwrecked just when they were on the point to cast anchor. Multitudes, too, have 144 fought manfully for years in cruel warfare and remained unwounded without even a scratch or a pinprick : they have returned in mirth and in gladness as though war were a public festival and a civic banquet, without a limb missing or unsound, and then in their own homes have been conspired against by those who should have been the last to do such a deed and slaughtered as the saying goes like " oxen at the stall." <sup>a</sup> XXI. And just as sudden and un- 145 expected evils are wont to bring these outward afflictions upon us, so too they push the soul's faculties in the opposite direction or deflect them to a side course if they can, or seek violently to overturn them. For who that has entered the arena of life remains without a fall ? Who has never been tripped up and 146 thrown ? Happy he who has fallen but seldom. Has there been any for whom fortune was not ever lying in wait, taking breath and collecting her strength, to grip him in her arms and carry him off before he can prepare to meet her ? Do we not know by 147 experience of men who have passed from childhood to old age without feeling any disturbance of soul, because nature has so blessed them, or through the care of those who rear and train them or through both—men full of the profound inward peace which is the only true peace of which the peace of cities is but a copy—men who have therefore been held

<sup>a</sup> Od. iv. 535 (of the death of Agamemnon).

<sup>9</sup> MSS. ἐπέιθοτον.

<sup>10</sup> MSS. εὐμάρειαν.

<sup>11</sup> MSS. τῆν.

PHILO

- ὑπὸ<sup>1</sup> τῶν παθῶν ἀναρριπιζόμενον ἐμφύλιον πόλεμον, ἀργαλεώτατον ὄντα πολέμων, οὐδ' ὄναρ ἐπήσθητο, εἰτ' ἐν αὐταῖς τοῦ βίου ταῖς δυσμαῖς ἐξοκείλαντάς τε καὶ ναυαγήσαντας ἢ περὶ γλώτταν ἄθυρον ἢ περὶ γαστέρα ἀπληστον ἢ περὶ τὴν τῶν ὑπογαστρίων 148 ἀκράτορα λεγνείαν; οἱ μὲν γὰρ τὸν μειρακιώδη τῶν ἀσώτων, ἄτιμον, ἀποκήρυκτον, αἰσχροὺν βίον ἐζήλωσαν “ ἐπὶ γήραος οὐδῶ,” οἱ δὲ τὸν πανοῦργον καὶ συκοφάντην καὶ ῥαδιουργόν, ἀπαρχόμενοι φιλο-πραγμοσύνης, ὅτε εἰκὸς ἦν ἤδη καὶ παλαιὰν οὖσαν 149 καταλῦσαι. διὸ χρὴ τὸν θεὸν ποτινῆσθαι καὶ λιπαρῶς ἱκετεύειν, ὅπως τὸ ἐπικηρον ἡμῶν γένος μὴ παρέλθῃ, κελεύσῃ δὲ διαιωρίζειν αὐτοῦ τὸν σωτήριον ἔλεον· χαλεπὸν γὰρ εἰρήνης ἀκράτου 150 γευσσαμένους κωλυθῆναι κορεσθῆναι. XXII. ἀλλὰ φέρε, δύψης κουφότερόν ἐστι κακὸν ὁ λιμὸς οὗτος, ἔρωτα καὶ πόθον ἔχων παρηγοροῦντας. ὅταν δὲ ἀφ' ἐτέρας πηγῆς, ἧς θολερὸν καὶ νοσερὸν τὸ νᾶμα, διὰ τὸν (τοῦ) πιεῖν ἡμερον ἐμφορεῖσθαι δέη, τότε ἀνάγκη γλυκυπίκρου πληρουμένους<sup>2</sup> ἡδονῆς ἐν ἀβιώτῳ βίῳ διαζῆν, τοῖς βλαβεροῖς ὡς ὠφελίμοις ἐπιτρέχοντας ἀγνοία τοῦ συμφέροντος.
 151 ἢ δὲ τῶν κακῶν ἀνιανοτάτη φορὰ γίνεται τούτων, ἐπειδὰν αἱ ἄλογοι δυνάμεις τῆς ψυχῆς ἐπιθέμεναι 152 ταῖς τοῦ λογισμοῦ κρατήσωσιν. ἕως μὲν γὰρ ἢ [679] βουκόλια | βουκόλοις ἢ ποιμέσι ποίμνια ἢ αἰπόλοις

<sup>1</sup> MSS. ἀπὸ.

<sup>2</sup> MSS. πληρουμένης.

<sup>a</sup> Il. xxii. 60 and elsewhere.

<sup>b</sup> The thought seems to be that the unsatisfied yearning for the peace which we have lost is a less evil than the desire for pleasure, because the very yearning has something com-

ON DREAMS, II. 147-152

happy because they have never known even in their dreams the intestine war kindled by passion, the cruellest of wars—and then at the very eventide of life they have been wrecked on the rock of an unlocked tongue or insatiate greed of belly, or in uncontrolled lasciviousness of the lower-lying parts. For some “on the threshold of old age”<sup>a</sup> affect the 148 life of prodigal youth, a life dishonoured, abandoned, shamed. Others affect a life of knavery, slander and roguery, starting on their restless course just when, were it an old habit, we should expect them to discard it.

And therefore we should earnestly 149 entreat and supplicate God that He should not pass by our perishing race but charge His saving mercy to remain with us to the end, for it is a grievous thing that when we have tasted peace in its purity we should be hindered from taking our fill of it. XXII. And yet this hunger<sup>b</sup> for peace, assuaged as it is by 150 yearning and desire, is a lighter ill than thirst; but when in our eagerness to quench our thirst we have to drink of another fountain whose water is muddy and noisome, we must needs, replete with bitter-sweet pleasure, lead the life which is not worth living, pursuing the harmful as though it were profitable in our ignorance of our own interest. And the stream of 151 these evils becomes most grievous when the unreasoning forces of the soul attack and overpower the forces of reason. Whilst the herd obeys its 152 herdsman, or the flocks of sheep or goats obey the forting in it. But it is strange that these two should be put in antithesis as “hunger” and “thirst,” particularly as ἀκράτου in the previous sentence and ἐτέρας πηγῆς in this suggest that the λιμός includes thirst as well as hunger, cf. De Ebr. 148. I suspect that διψῆς is a gloss or interpolation. If so, translate λιμός by “famine.”

PHILO

- αἰπόλια πειθαρχεῖ, τὰ περὶ τὰς ἀγέλας κατορθοῦται· ἐπειδὴν δὲ ἀσθενέστεροι τῶν θρεμμάτων οἱ ἐπιστατοῦντες ἀγέλαρχαι γίνονται, πλημμελεῖται τὰ πάντα καὶ συμβαίνει ἀταξία μὲν ἐκ τάξεως, ἀκόσμία δ' ἐξ εὐκοσμίας, ταραχὴ δ' ἐξ εὐσταθείας καὶ σύγχυσις ἐκ διακρίσεως, ἅτε μηδεμιᾶς ἔτι νομίμου καθεστῶσης ἐπιστασίας· εἰ γὰρ ἦν, ἤδη καθήρητο.
- 153 τί οὖν; οὐκ οἴομεθα καὶ ἐν ἡμῖν αὐτοῖς θρεμμάτων μὲν ἀγέλην εἶναι, παρόσον ἀποτέμνηται ψυχὴν<sup>1</sup> τὸ ἄλογον στίφος, ἀγέλαρχην δὲ τὸν ἡγεμόνα νοῦν; ἀλλ' ἕως μὲν ἔρρωταί τε καὶ ἰκανὸς ἀγελαρχεῖν ἔστιν, ἐνδίκως ἅπαντα<sup>2</sup> καὶ συμφερόντως ἐπιτελεῖται.
- 154 ὅταν δὲ ἀσθενεῖα τις ἐπιγένηται τῷ βασιλεῖ, συγκάμνει ἀνάγκη καὶ τὸ ὑπήκοον· καὶ ὅτε μάλιστα ἠλευθερώσθαι δοκεῖ, τότε μάλιστα γίνεται ἐτοιμότητον ἄθλον κείμενον τοῖς βουλομένοις αὐτὸ μόνον κοίσεισθαι. πέφυκε γὰρ ἀναρχία μὲν ἐπίβουλον, ἀρχὴ δ' εἶναι σωτήριον, καὶ μάλισθ' ἡ νόμος καὶ δίκη τετίμηται· αὕτη δ' ἐστὶν ἡ σὺν λόγῳ.
- 155 XXIII. Τὰ μὲν δὴ τῆς κενῆς δόξης ὀνειράτα ὦδε ἠκριβώσθω· τὰ δὲ τῆς γαστριμαργίας εἶδη πόσις τε καὶ βρώσις, ἀλλὰ τῇ μὲν οὐκ (ἀ)ποικίλων,<sup>3</sup> τῇ δὲ μυρίων ὄσων ἡδυσμάτων καὶ παραρτυμάτων χρεῖα. ταῦτα μέντοι δυσὶ φροντισταῖς ἐπανατίθεται, τὰ μὲν τῆς περιέργου πόσεως ἀρχαιονοχόῳ, τὰ δὲ
- 156 τῆς ἀνθηροτέρας<sup>4</sup> ἐδωδῆς ἀρχαιοποιοῦ. σφόδρα δ' ἐξήτασμένως μῖα νυκτὶ φαντασιούμενοι τοὺς

<sup>1</sup> My correction for ms. ψυχῆς. I understand ἀποτέμνομαι to be used as in De Cher. 4 ἦν ἀποτέμνηται μαθηματικῆ, and ψυχῆ, as so often, in its lower sense. Wend. retains ψυχῆς and suggests <λόγον> ἐκτέμνηται.

<sup>2</sup> mss. ἔχοντα.

<sup>3</sup> My correction: Wend. οὐ ποικίλων: mss. οὐ ποικίλα. This

shepherd or goatherd, all goes well with them ; but, when the controlling herdsmen prove weaker than their charges, everything goes awry. Arrangement gives way to disarrangement, order to disorder, steadiness to disturbance, organization to confusion, since the lawful control no longer subsists. For if it ever existed it is now destroyed. What follows ? 153 Must we not believe that, since the troop of unreason has made the soul its province, we have within ourselves a herd of brute cattle and a herdsman too, the ruling mind ? But while the mind is strong and capable of playing the herdsman, all things are managed with justice and profit ; but when weakness 154 befalls the king, the subject element must suffer also, and it is just when the victim thinks he is most at liberty that he becomes the easiest of prizes, which whoso would win needs but little preparation for the contest. For it is the nature of anarchy to plot mischief and of government to bring salvation, and chiefly so where law and justice are honoured, and that means government based on reason.

XXIII. Here we may conclude our close study of 155 the dreams of vainglory. As for gluttony it has two forms—drinking and eating, and the spicings and the flavourings needed are by no means simple in the former, but innumerable in the latter. These are entrusted to two caretakers : the liquor treated with nicety to a chief butler, the more elaborate edibles to a chief baker. There is a carefully considered mean- 156 ing in describing the dreams as appearing to both is difficult to reconcile with περιέργου below, and still more inconsistent with οἶνων . . . παμποικίλους κράσεις in § 48.

---

<sup>4</sup> So mss. : Wend. ἀναγκαιότερας, quite needlessly I think. L. & S. 1927 quote δειπναριον ἀνθηρόν from Diphilus.

PHILO

ονείρους εισάγονται· πρὸς γὰρ τὴν αὐτὴν χρεῖαν σπεύδουσιν ἀμφοτέροι, τροφήν οὐχ ἀπλήν, ἀλλὰ τὴν μεθ' ἡδονῆς καὶ τέρψεως εὐτρεπιζόμενοι. καὶ ἑκάτερος μὲν περὶ τροφῆς ἡμισυ πονεῖται, ἀμφό-157 τεροὶ δὲ περὶ πᾶσαν. ἔστι δὲ καὶ θάτερον μέρος ὄλκον θατέρου· καὶ γὰρ οἱ φαγόντες εὐθύς ὀρέγον-ται ποτοῦ καὶ αὐτίκα ἐδωδῆς οἱ πιόντες· ὥστε οὐχ ἥκιστα καὶ διὰ τοῦτο χρόνον τὸν αὐτὸν τῆς 158 φαντασίας ἀμφοτέροις ἀναγεγράφθαι. ὁ μὲν οὖν ἀρχαιονοχόος οἰνοφλυγίαν, ὁ δὲ ἀρχισιτοποιὸς λαιμαργίαν ἔλαχε. φαντασιούται δὲ ἑκάτερος τὰ οἰκεῖα, ὁ μὲν οἶνον καὶ τὸ γεννητικὸν οἴνου φυτόν, ἄμπελον, ὁ δ' ἐπὶ κανῶν διακειμένους ἐκκεκαθ-159 ἀρμένους ἄρτους καὶ κανηφοροῦντα ἑαυτόν. ἀρμότ-τον δὲ ἂν εἶη πρότερον τὸ πρότερον ἐξετάζειν ὄναρ, ἔστι δὲ τοιούδε· “ ἐν τῷ ὕπνῳ μου ἦν ἄμπελος ἐναντίον μου· ἐν δὲ τῇ ἀμπέλῳ τρεῖς πυθμένες καὶ αὐτὴ θάλλουσα ἀνενηνοχυῖα βλαστούς· πέπειροι βότρυνες σταφυλῆς. καὶ τὸ ποτήριον Φαραῶ ἐν τῇ [680] χειρί μου· | καὶ ἔλαβον τὴν σταφυλὴν καὶ ἐξέθλιψα αὐτὴν εἰς τὸ ποτήριον, καὶ ἔδωκα τὸ ποτήριον 160 εἰς τὰς χεῖρας Φαραῶ.” θαυμασίως γε προανεφθέγγετο καὶ ἀψευδῶς ἔχει τὸ “ ἐν τῷ ὕπνῳ μου.” τῷ γὰρ ὄντι ὁ μὴ τὴν δι' οἴνου μέθην μᾶλλον ἢ τὴν δι' ἀφροσύνης<sup>1</sup> ἐπιτηδεύων, ὀρθότητι καὶ ἐγρηγόρσει δυσχεραίνων, ὥσπερ οἱ κοιμώμενοι καταβέβληται καὶ παρέϊται καὶ καταμέμυκε τὰ τῆς ψυχῆς ὄμματα, οὐδὲν οὐθ' ὄραν οὐτ' ἀκούει τῶν 161 θείας καὶ ἀκοῆς ἀξίων οἰός τε ὢν· ἠττημένος δὲ τυφλὴν καὶ ἀχειραγώγητον, οὐχ ὁδόν, ἀλλ' ἀνοδίαν

<sup>1</sup> MSS. διὰ σωφροσύνης.

ON DREAMS, II. 156-161

these in a single night. They both aim at serving the same need, for it is not simple nutrition which they prepare but nutrition accompanied with pleasure and delight. And though the labour of each deals with but a half of nutrition they are both concerned with the whole : each half attracts the other, for after 157 eating men at once desire to drink and after drinking no less quickly to eat, and this is one of the chief reasons for assigning the same time to the dreams of both. Now the province of the chief butler is drunken- 158 ness and of the chief baker gluttony. Each in his vision sees what fits his trade, wine and the parent plant of wine, the vine, in the first case, in the second loaves of the finest meal disposed on baskets which the baker saw himself carrying (Gen. xl. 16, 17). It 159 would be well to examine the former dream first. It runs as follows : " In my sleep there was a vine over against me, and on the vine were three stalks,<sup>a</sup> and itself was blossoming having put forth shoots. The grapes in the cluster were ripe, and Pharaoh's cup was in my hand, and I took the cluster and squeezed it into the cup and I gave the cup into Pharaoh's hand " (Gen. xl. 9-11). The prefacing 160 with the words " in my sleep " is as striking as the words are true. For indeed he who gives way to the intoxication which is of folly rather than of wine bears a grudge against upright standing and wakefulness, and lies prostrate and sprawling like sleepers with the eyes of his soul closed, unable to see or hear aught that is worth seeing or hearing. And thus 161 brought low, as he passes through life he finds no road but a pathless tract where neither eye nor hand <sup>a</sup> Or " roots," as Philo for the purpose of his allegory takes it in § 195.

PHILO

- τοῦ βίου διεξέρχεται, βάτοις καὶ τριβόλοις περιπειρόμενος, ἔστι δ' ὅτε καὶ κατὰ κρημνῶν κυλιόμενος καὶ ἄλλοις ἐπιφερόμενος, ὡς ἐκείνους τε καὶ ἑαυτὸν 162 οἰκτρῶς διαφθείρειν. ὁ δὲ βαθὺς καὶ διωλύγιος ὑπνος, ᾧ πᾶς κατέχεται φαῦλος, τὰς μὲν ἀληθεῖς καταλήψεις ἀφαιρεῖται, ψευδῶν δὲ εἰδώλων καὶ ἀβεβαίων φαντασμάτων ἀναπίμπλησι τὴν διάνοιαν, τὰ ὑπαίτια (ὡς) ἐπαινετὰ ἀναπειθῶν ἀποδέχεσθαι. καὶ γὰρ νυκτὶ λύπην ὡς χαρὰν ὄνειροπολεῖ καὶ οὐκ αἰσθάνεται, ὅτι τὸ ἀφροσύνης καὶ τοῦ παραπαίειν 163 * * * φυτόν,<sup>1</sup> ἄμπελον, ὄρα. “ ἦν ” γάρ φησιν “ ἄμπελος ἐναντίον μου,” τὸ ποθοῦμενον τῷ ποθοῦντι, κακία κακῶ· ἦν καθ' ἑαυτῶν λελήθαμεν οἱ ἀνόητοι γεωργοῦντες, ἧς τὸν καρπὸν ἐσθίομέν τε καὶ πίνομεν εἰς ἑκάτερον τροφῆς κατατάπτοντες εἶδος, ἧς ὡς ἔοικεν οὐκ ἐφ' ἡμισείας τῆς βλάβης ἀλλ' ἀρτίου καὶ ὀλοκλήρου καὶ παντελοῦς<sup>2</sup> μεταποιούμεθα.
- 164 XXIV. Προσῆκει δὲ μὴ ἀγνοεῖν, ὅτι τὸ ἀμπέλιον μέθυσμα τοὺς χρησομένους ἅπαντας οὐχ ὁμοίως, ἀλλὰ πολλάκις ἐναντίως διατίθησιν, ὡς τοὺς μὲν ἀμείνους, τοὺς δὲ χείρους ἑαυτῶν ἐξετά-165 ζεσθαι. τῶν μὲν γὰρ τὸ σύννον καὶ σκυθρωπὸν ἐπανῆκε καὶ τὰς φροντίδας ἐχάλασεν ὀργὰς τε καὶ λύπας ἐπράυνε τά τε ἦθη πρὸς τὸ ἐπιεικὲς ἐπαιδαγώγησε καὶ τὰς ψυχὰς ἑαυταῖς ἴλεως ἐποίησε· τῶν δὲ ἔμπαλιν τοὺς θυμοὺς ἐπήλειψε καὶ τὰς ὀδύνας<sup>3</sup> ἐπέσφιγξε καὶ τοὺς ἔρωτας ἐκίνησε καὶ τὰς ἀγροικίας ἀνήγειρεν, ἄκλειστον στόμα καὶ γλωτταν ἀχαλίνωτον καὶ αἰσθήσεις ἀθύρους

<sup>1</sup> A lacuna of nine to ten letters in A. Perhaps supply γεννητικόν.

ON DREAMS, II. 161-165

can guide him. He is pierced by brambles and thorn-bushes and sometimes rolls over precipices or charges into others, bringing miserable destruction both to himself and them. And that deep and abysmal sleep 162 which holds fast all the wicked robs the mind of true apprehensions, and fills it with false phantoms and untrustworthy visions and persuades it to approve of the blameworthy as laudable : thus in the present case the dreamer treats sorrow as a joy and does not perceive that the vine of his vision is the plant which <produces> folly and madness. " There was," he said, 163 " a vine before me " (Gen. xl. 9), the wanted and the wanted, wickedness and the wicked, facing each other. That vine we fools till, little thinking that it is to our own harm, and we eat and drink its fruit, thus ranking it with both kinds of nutriment, a possession which proves to entail no half measure but a wholesale complete totality of mischief.

XXIV. But we should not fail to understand that a 164 strong drink produced by the vine does not affect all who take it in the same way ; often it acts in opposite ways so that some may be reckoned as bettered by it and others worsened. With some it relaxes 165 pensiveness and gloom, lightens the stress of cares, softens wrath and fears, tutors the temperament to reasonableness and makes the soul contented with itself. With others it lubricates anger, screws up grief, excites amorousness and rouses discourtesy. It unlocks the mouth and unbridles the tongue, unbars the senses, maddens the passions, and makes the

---

<sup>2</sup> MSS. παντελῶς. Wend. corrects βλάβης to βλάβη, and also the four adjectives to datives. The uses of ἐπί with the genitive are so wide that I do not think so general an alteration is justified.

<sup>3</sup> MSS. ὠδίναις.

PHILO

- καὶ λελυττηκότα πάθη κάζηγγιωμένον καὶ ἐπτοη-166 μένον πρὸς πάντα νοῦν<sup>1</sup> ἀποτελοῦν· ὡς δοκεῖν τὴν μὲν τῶν προτέρων κατάστασιν ἢ τῇ κατὰ τὸν ἀέρα νηνέμῳ αἰθρία ἢ τῇ κατὰ θάλατταν ἀκύμονι γαλήνῃ ἢ τῇ κατὰ τὰς πόλεις εἰρηνικωτάτῃ εὐσταθείᾳ εἰκέναι, τὴν δὲ τῶν ὑστέρων ἢ βιαίῳ καὶ συντόνῳ πνεύματι ἢ χειμαίνοντι καὶ κυμα-τουμένῳ πελάγει ἢ στάσει, ἀσπόνδου καὶ ἀκηρύκτου 167 πολέμου δυσωνυμωτέρᾳ<sup>2</sup> ταραχῇ. δυεῖν γοῦν | [681] συμποσίων τὸ μὲν πέπλησται γέλωτος, παιδιᾶς, ἐπαγγελιομένων, ἀγαθὰ<sup>3</sup> ἐλπίζόντων, χαριζομένων, εὐθυμίας, εὐφημίας, ἰλαρότητος, εὐφροσύνης, ἀδείας· 168 τὸ δὲ συννοίας, κατηφείας, προσκρουσμάτων, λαιδοριῶν, τραυμάτων, βριμουμένων, ὑποβλεπο-μένων, ὑλακτούντων, ἀγχόντων, καταπαγκρατια-ζόντων, ἀκρωτηριαζόντων ὦτα καὶ ῥίνας καὶ ἄπερ ἂν τύχη τοῦ σώματος (μέρη καὶ μέλη),<sup>4</sup> τὴν [τοῦ] παντὸς τοῦ βίου μέθην καὶ παροιμίαν ἐν ἀνιέρῳ ἀγῶνι μετὰ αἰσχροουργίας τῆς πάσης ἐπιδεικνυ-169 μένων. XXV. ἀκόλουθον οὖν (ἂν) εἶη λογίζεσθαι, ὅτι καὶ ἄμπελος δυεῖν σύμβολον πραγμάτων ἐστίν, ἀνοίας τε καὶ εὐφροσύνης. ἐκάτερον δέ, καίτοι<sup>5</sup> μνηνύμενον ἐκ πολλῶν, ἵνα μὴ μακρη-170 γορῶμεν, δι' ὀλίγων ἐπιδείξομεν. ἡνίκα ἡμᾶς διὰ τῆς τῶν παθῶν καὶ ἀδικημάτων ἐρήμης ὁδοῦ, φιλοσοφίας, ἀγαγὼν καὶ ὡσπερ εἰς ὄρος<sup>6</sup> ἀνα-βιβάσας τὸν ὀρθὸν λόγον ἔστησεν ἐπὶ σκοπῆς καὶ ἐκέλευε περιαιθεῖν τὴν ἅπασαν ἀρετῆς χώραν, εἴτε εὐγείος καὶ βαθεῖα καὶ χλοηφόρος καὶ καρπο-

<sup>1</sup> MSS. οὖν.

<sup>2</sup> MSS. δυσωνύμῳ.

<sup>3</sup> Perhaps transpose to ἀγαθὰ ἐπαγγελιομένων.

<sup>4</sup> A lacuna of ten to twelve letters in A.

ON DREAMS, II. 165-170

mind savage and wild and flustered with everything it meets. Thus the condition in the former case 166 seems to resemble still cloudless weather in the air, or unruffled calm in the sea, or undisturbed peace and tranquillity in the city ; while that of the latter resembles a fierce violent blast, a stormy billowy sea or civil faction, the turmoil of which is more hateful than even uncivilized warfare. Thus in one of two 167 convivial gatherings we may find nothing but laughter and sport, guests promising, expecting and conferring kindnesses, pleasant feelings and pleasant talk, cheerful faces, glad hearts and freedom from restraint ; in the other nothing but anxiety, depres- 168 sion, quarrellings, revilings, woundings, while the guests snort, scowl and bark, and fight it out with neck-grips, wrestling and fisticuffs, gnawing off ears and noses or any limbs or parts of the body that come handy,<sup>a</sup> and thus exhibiting their life-long inebriation and tipsiness with every kind of misconduct in this far from sacred contest. XXV. The deduction 169 follows that the vine symbolizes two things—folly and gladness. Each of them is shewn by many proofs, but to avoid prolixity I will give only a few. There was a time when he led us along the 170 way of philosophy, the way of the desert, barren of passions and of wrongdoings, and took us as to the high land and there set right reason on a peak of wide view and bade it survey the whole land of virtue, whether it is rich and deep of soil, fertile of grass and <sup>a</sup> Cf. De Plant. 160.

---

<sup>5</sup> MSS. καὶ τὸ.

<sup>6</sup> MSS. ἐμπορος. This admirable correction is Wend.'s conjecture, though not printed in the text. Cf. Num. xiii. 18 καὶ ἀναβήσεσθε εἰς τὸ ὄρος.

PHILO

- τόκος ἐστὶ καὶ ἀγαθῇ<sup>1</sup> μὲν καὶ τὰ σπειρόμενα μαθήματα συναυξῆσαι, ἀγαθῇ δὲ τὰ φυτεύόμενα καὶ δενδρούμενα δόγματα στελεχῶσαι, εἴτε καὶ τούναντίον, καὶ περὶ τῶν ὡσανεὶ πόλεων πράξεων, εἰ (εὐερκέσταται)<sup>2</sup> καὶ ὀχυρώταται ἢ γυμναὶ καὶ ἀπημφιασμένοι οἷα κύκλον<sup>3</sup> τὸ βέβαιον, καὶ περὶ οἰκητόρων, εἰ πρὸς τε πλήθος καὶ πρὸς ἀλκὴν ἐπιδεδώκασιν ἢ δι' ἀσθένειαν ὀλιγανδροῦσιν ἢ δι' 171 ὀλιγανδρίαν ἀσθενοῦσιν, τότε οὐ δυνηθέντες ὄλον τὸ σοφίας στέλεχος βαστάσαι κληματίδα μίαν καὶ βότρυν σταφυλῆς τεμόντες ἤραμεν<sup>4</sup> χαρᾶς σαφέστατον δείγμα, κουφότατον ἄχθος, βλάστημα καὶ καρπὸν ὁμοῦ καλοκαγαθίας ἐπιδειξόμενοι τοῖς διάνοιαν ὀξυδορκοῦσι τὴν εὐκληματοῦσαν καὶ 172 βοτρυηφόρον ἄμπελον. XXVI. ταύτην,<sup>5</sup> ἣς μοῖράν τινα λαβεῖν ἐδυνήθημεν, εὐσκόπως ἐξομοιοῦσιν εὐφροσύνη. μαρτυρεῖ δέ μοί τις τῶν πάλαι προφητῶν, ὃς ἐπιθειάσας εἶπεν· “ ἄμπελων 173 κυρίου παντοκράτορος οἶκος τοῦ Ἰσραήλ.” ὁ μὲν Ἰσραήλ ἐστὶ νοῦς θεωρητικὸς θεοῦ τε καὶ κόσμου —καὶ γὰρ ἐρμηνεύεται θεὸν ὁρῶν,—οἶκος δὲ διανοίας ὅλη ψυχὴ. αὕτη δ' ἐστὶν ἄμπελων ἱερώτatos, τὸ θεῖον βλάστημα καρποφορῶν, ἀρετῆν.
 174 οὕτω μέντοι τὸ φρονεῖν εὖ, τὸ εὐ-φροσύνης ἔτυμον,<sup>6</sup> μέγα καὶ λαμπρόν, ὥστε φησὶ Μωυσῆς καὶ θεὸν αὐτῷ μὴ ἀπαξιῶσαι χρῆσθαι,

<sup>1</sup> MSS. ἐπεὶ καὶ ἀπαθεῖ.

<sup>2</sup> A lacuna of ten to twelve letters in A.

<sup>3</sup> MSS. κύκλων: Wend. suggests οἷα <τειχῶν> κύκλον.

<sup>4</sup> MSS. γέμοντες ἤραν μετὰ.

<sup>5</sup> MSS. ταύτης.

<sup>6</sup> MSS. ἔτοιμον.

ON DREAMS, II. 170-174

fruit, and well fitted both to give increase to the lessons there sown and to raise the stalk of tree-like verities there planted, or the opposite of all this; survey, too, the actions which are as cities, whether they are thoroughly well fenced and secure, or uncovered and stripped of the security which is as a wall; survey the inhabitants, too, whether they have increased in number and strength, or whether they are weak through fewness, or few through weakness<sup>a</sup> (Num. xiii. 18-21). And it was then that, unable to carry 171 the whole main-stalk of wisdom, we cut a single branch and cluster of grapes and raised it up, a manifest sign of joy, as the lightest of burdens, meaning by the vine so rich in clustering grapes to shew forth to those of keen mental vision the sprouting and fruit-bearing alike of noble living (Num. xiii. 24).<sup>b</sup>

XXVI. This vine of which we could take but a part 172 men aptly liken to gladness, and in this I have the witness of one of the ancient prophets who under inspiration said, "The vineyard of the Lord Almighty is the house of Israel" (Is. v. 7). Israel is the mind 173 which contemplates God and the world, for Israel means "seeing God," while the house of the mind is the whole soul, and this is that most holy vineyard which has for its fruit that divine growth, virtue.

So great and splendid is happy thinking, for that is 174 the original meaning<sup>c</sup> of gladness or εὐφροσύνη, that Moses tells us that God does not disdain to feel and εἶσιν ἢ πολλοί. If Philo interprets the inhabitants as qualities in the individual soul, "fewness" may indicate spiritual narrowness, and "strength" want of intensity or depth of such virtue as it possesses, and by this duplication he suggests that the two defects are apt to react upon each other, cf. his treatment of μέγεθος and πλήθος De Mig. 53 f.

<sup>b</sup> Cf. De Mut. 224.

<sup>c</sup> See note on De Conf. 137.

PHILO

- [682] καὶ τότε μάλιστα, ὅποτε τὸ ἀνθρώπων | γένος ἐκτρέποιο μὲν ἁμαρτήματα,<sup>1</sup> ἐπικλῖνοι δὲ καὶ ἐπιστρέφοι<sup>2</sup> πρὸς δικαιοσύνην, ἐκουσίῳ γνώμῃ 175 φύσεως νόμοις καὶ θεσμοῖς ἐπόμενον. “ ἐπι-στρέψει ” γάρ φησι “ κύριος ὁ θεὸς σου εὐφρανθῆναι ἐπὶ σέ εἰς ἀγαθὰ, καθότι ἠυφράνθη ἐπὶ τοῖς πατράσι σου, εἰάν εἰσακούσης τῆς φωνῆς αὐτοῦ, φυλάσσειν πάσας τὰς ἐντολάς καὶ τὰ δικαιώματα καὶ τὰς κρίσεις τὰς γεγραμμένας ἐν τῷ βιβλίῳ 176 τοῦ νόμου τούτου.” τί<sup>3</sup> ἂν δύναίτο μᾶλλον ἀρετῆς ἡμερον ἢ καλοκάγαθίας ζῆλον ἐμφῦσαι; βούλει, φησὶν, ὧ διανοια, εὐφραίνεσθαι θεόν; εὐφράνθητι αὐτῇ καὶ ἀνάλωμα μὲν μὴ εἰσενέγκῃς μηδέν—τίνος γὰρ τῶν σῶν χρεῖός ἐστιν;—ἀλλ’ ἔμπαλιν 177 ὅσα σοι δίδωσιν ἀγαθὰ χαίρουσα δέξαι. διδοὺς γάρ, ὅταν ἄξιοι χάριτος ὦσιν οἱ λαμβάνοντες, εὐφραίνεται· εἰ μὴ νομίζεις, ὅτι οἱ μὲν ὑπαιτίως ζῶντες παραπικραίνειν καὶ παροργίζειν ἐνδίκως λέγουτ’ ἂν θεόν, οἱ δ’ ἐπαιετῶς οὐχὶ εὐφραίνειν.
178 ἀλλὰ πατέρας μὲν καὶ μητέρας, τοὺς θνητοὺς γονεῖς, οὐδὲν οὕτως ὡς τέκνων εὐφραίνουσιν ἀρεταί, μυρίων ὅσων ἐνδεεῖς<sup>4</sup> ὄντας· τὸν δὲ τῶν ὄλων γεννητὴν καὶ μηδενὸς ἐνδεᾶ τὸ παράπαν οὐχ 179 ἢ καλοκάγαθία τῶν γενομένων<sup>5</sup>; μα-θοῦσα οὖν, ὧ διανοια, ἡλίκον <κακὸν> μὲν ἐστιν ὄργῃ θεοῦ, ἡλίκον δὲ ἀγαθὸν εὐφροσύνη θεοῦ, μηδέν μὲν τῶν ὄργῃς ἀξίων ἐπ’ ὀλέθρῳ κίνει τῷ σεαυτῆς, μόνα δὲ δι’ ὧν εὐφρανεῖς θεὸν ἐπιτήδεε.
180 ταῦτα δὲ εὐρήσεις οὐ μακρὰς καὶ ἀτριβεῖς διεξιὼν ὁδοὺς ἢ ἄπλωτα πελάγη περαιούμενος ἢ ἐπὶ τοὺς

<sup>1</sup> MSS. ἁμαρτημάτων.

<sup>2</sup> Or perhaps τί δ’ = MSS. τίς.

<sup>3</sup> MSS. ἐπιτρέποι.

<sup>4</sup> MSS. οὐδὲ εἰς.

ON DREAMS, II. 174-180

shew it, particularly when the human race turns away from its sins and inclines and reverts to righteousness, following by a free-will choice the laws and statutes of nature. "For the Lord, thy God," he says, "will 175 turn to be glad over thee for good, as He was glad over thy fathers, if thou shalt hear His voice, to keep all His commandments and ordinances and the judgments which are written in the book of this law" (Deut. xxx. 9, 10). What could be better able to 176 implant the yearning for virtue or an ardour for noble living than this? Dost thou wish, O mind, that God should be glad? Be glad thyself, and bring Him no costly gift (for what does He need of what is thine?), but contrariwise accept rejoicing all the good things which He gives thee. For it gladdens Him to give 177 when the recipients are worthy of His bounty, since you surely must admit that if those who live a life of guilt can be rightly said to provoke and anger God, those whose life is laudable may be equally well said to gladden Him. Mortal parents, fathers and 178 mothers, vast as are their deficiencies, are gladdened by nothing so much as by the virtues of their children. And shall not the Begetter of all, in Whom is no deficiency at all, be gladdened by the noble living of His creatures? So then, my mind, having 179 learned how great an evil is the wrath of God, and how great a good is the gladness of God, stir not up to thine own destruction aught that deserves His anger, but practise those things only by which thou shalt make God glad. And these thou shalt not find 180 by traversing long roads where no foot has trodden, or by crossing seas where no ship has sailed, nor by

---

<sup>5</sup> MSS. λεγομένων, which Wend. prints, though conjecturing γεν-.

PHILO

γῆς καὶ θαλάττης ἀπνευστὶ συντείνων ὄρους· οὐ γὰρ πορρωτάτω διώκισται καὶ τῆς οἰκουμένης ἔξω πεφυγάδευται, ἀλλ', ἣ φησι Μωυσῆς, ἐγγὺς οὕτωςι τάγαθὸν παρίδρυταί σοι καὶ συμπέφυκε, τρισὶ τοῖς ἀναγκαιοτάτοις μέρεσιν ἡρμοσμένον, καρδία, στόματι, χερσί, τὸ δ' ἐστὶ διανοία, λόγῳ, πράξεσιν, ἐπειδὴ τὰ καλὰ καὶ φρονεῖν καὶ λέγειν καὶ ποιεῖν ἀναγκαῖον, συμπληρούμενον<sup>1</sup> ἔκ τε εὐβουλίας κοὶ εὐπραξίας καὶ εὐλογίας.

- 181 XXVII. Λέγωμεν οὖν τῷ θάτερον εἶδος γαστριμαργίας, πολυποσίαν, ἐπιτηδεύοντι ἀρχαιονοχῶ· τί κακοπαθεῖς, ὦ ἀνόητε; δοκεῖς μὲν γὰρ τὰ ἀγωγὰ πρὸς εὐφροσύνην εὐτρεπιζέσθαι, τὸ δ' ἀληθὲς ἀφροσύνης καὶ ἀκολασίας ἐξάπτεις φλόγα,
- 182 πολλὴν αὐτῇ καὶ ἄφθονον ἐπιφέρων ὕλην. ἀλλ', ἴσως ἂν εἴποι, μή με προπετῶς αἰτιῶ, πρὶν με σκέψασθαι. οἰνοχοεῖν ἐτάχθην, οὐ μὴν δὴ σωφροσύνην καὶ εὐσέβειαν καὶ τὰς ἄλλας ἀρετὰς ἐνεσκευασμένῳ, ἀλλ' ἀνδρὶ λαιμάρῳ<sup>2</sup> καὶ ἀκρατεῖ |
- [683] καὶ ἀδίκῳ καὶ ἐπὶ ἀσεβείᾳ μέγα φρονοῦντι, ὃς ἐτόλμησέ ποτε εἰπεῖν· “οὐκ οἶδα τὸν κύριον”· ὡς εἰκότως ἐγὼ τὰ ἐκείνῳ δι' ἡδονῆς ἐπιτετήδευκα.
- 183 μὴ θαυμάσης δέ, ὅτι τοῖς ἐναντίοις ὁ θεὸς καὶ ὁ ἀντίθεος νοῦς εὐφραίνεται, Φαραῶ. τίς οὖν οἰνοχόος θεοῦ; ὁ σπονδοφόρος, ὁ μέγας ὄντως ἀρχιερεὺς, ὃς τὰς τῶν ἀενάων χαρίτων λαβῶν πρόψεις ἀντεκτίνει, πλήρες ὅλον τὸ σπονδεῖον ἀκράτου μεθύσματος ἐπιχέων, ἑαυτόν.

<sup>1</sup> MSS. συμπληρούμενα.

<sup>2</sup> MSS. μάργω.

<sup>a</sup> i.e. the Logos; the symbolism is analogous to that in which the Logos is the εἰκὼν of God, but παράδειγμα of creation, cf. on § 45.

ON DREAMS, II. 180-183

pressing without a pause to the boundaries of land and ocean. For they do not dwell apart in the far distance, nor are they banished from the habitable world, but, as Moses says (Deut. xxx. 12-14), the good is stationed just beside thee and shares thy nature, close bound with the three most essential parts, heart, mouth and hands, that is mind, speech, actions, since to think and speak and do the morally good is the essential thing, a fullness composed of good purposing, good action and good speaking.

XXVII. Let us say then to one whose business is 181 one form of belly-gorging, namely deep-drinking, that is to the chief butler, "Why in this evil plight, thou fool? Thou thinkest that thy preparations conduce to gladness of mind, but in reality thou kindlest the flame of lack of mind and lack of continence and feedest it with fuel in lavish abundance." But he, perhaps, may answer: "Do not upbraid me 182 so rashly, without first considering how I stand. My appointed task is to be cup-bearer, not to one invested with self-control and piety and the other virtues, but to one steeped in greed, licentious, unjust, priding himself on his impiety, he who once dared to say, 'I know not the Lord' (Ex. v. 2). Naturally I, on my side, have busied myself with what gives him pleasure." And wonder not that 183 God and Pharaoh, the mind which usurps the place of God, find gladness in things opposite to each other. Who then is God's cup-bearer? He who pours the libation of peace, the truly great high priest who first receives the loving-cups of God's perennial bounties, then pays them back when he pours that potent undiluted draught, the libation of himself.<sup>a</sup>

- ὄρας οἰνοχόων διαφορὰς τοῖς θεραπευομένοις ἀνα-184 λογούσας. διὰ τοῦτο ἐγὼ μὲν ὁ τοῦ Φαραῶ κατὰ τὰς ἀνέσεις ἐπιτεινομένου τὸν σκληραύχενα καὶ πάντων ἀκράτορα λογισμὸν εὐνοῦχός εἰμι, τὰ γεννητικὰ τῆς ψυχῆς ἐκτετμημένος, μετανάστης μὲν τῆς ἀνδρωνιτίδος,<sup>1</sup> φυγὰς δὲ καὶ τῆς γυναι-κωνιτίδος, οὔτ' ἄρρεν οὔτε θῆλυ, οὔτε προέσθαι οὔθ' ὑποδέξασθαι σπορὰν δυνάμενος, ἀμφίβολος, οὐδέτερος, ἀνθρωπέου παράκομμα νομίσματος, ἄμοιρος ἀθανασίας, ἢ τέκνων ἢ ἐγγόνων διαδοχαῖς εἰς<sup>2</sup> αἰὲ ζωπυρεῖται, συλλόγου καὶ ἐκκλησίας ἱερᾶς ἀπεσχοιτισμένος· θλαδίαν γὰρ καὶ ἀποκεκομμένον ἄντικρυς διειρήθαι μὴ εἰσιέναι. XXVIII.
- 185 ὁ δὲ ἀρχιερεὺς ἄμωμός<sup>3</sup> ἐστίν, ὀλόκληρος, ἀνὴρ παρθένου, (τὸ) παραδοξότατον, οὐδέποτε γυναικουμένης, ἀλλ' ἔμπαλιν τὰ γυναικεῖα κατὰ τὴν πρὸς τὸν ἄνδρα ὀμιλίαν ἐκλιπούσης, καὶ οὐκ ἀνὴρ μόνον οὗτος, ἀμιάντους καὶ παρθένους γνῶμας
- 186 σπεῖρειν ἱκανός, ἀλλὰ καὶ πατὴρ λόγων ἱερῶν· ὧν οἱ μὲν ἐπίσκοποι καὶ ἔφοροι τῶν τῆς φύσεως πραγμάτων, Ἐλεάζαρ καὶ Ἰθάμαρ, οἱ δὲ λειτουργοὶ θεοῦ, τὴν οὐράνιον φλόγα ἀνακαίειν καὶ ζωπυρεῖν ἐπειγόμενοι· τρίβοντες γὰρ αἰὲ τοὺς περὶ ὀσιότητος λόγους καθάπερ ἐκ πυρείων τὸ θεοειδέστατον εὐ-
- 187 σεβείας γένος ποιοῦσιν ἐκλάμπειν. ὁ δὲ τούτων ὑψηλῆς ὁμοῦ καὶ πατὴρ οὐχ ἢ τυχοῦσα μοῖρα τῆς ἱερᾶς ἐκκλησίας ἐστίν, ἀλλ' οὐ χωρὶς<sup>4</sup> σύγκλητος οὐκ ἂν ἀθροισθεῖη ποτὲ τῶν τῆς ψυχῆς

<sup>1</sup> MSS. τῶν ἀνδρωνιτίδων.<sup>3</sup> MSS. ἀλώμενος.<sup>2</sup> MSS. ταῖς.<sup>4</sup> MSS. οὐ χωρεῖ.

ON DREAMS, II. 183-187

Mark how the differences between the cup-bearers correspond to those whom they serve. Thus I, the servant of that Pharaoh who 184 keeps his stubborn incontinent thinking in an intensity of looseness, am an eunuch (Gen. xl. 7), gelded of the soul's generating organs, a vagrant from the men's quarters, an exile from the women's, a thing neither male nor female, unable either to shed or receive seed, twofold yet neuter, base counterfeit of the human coin, cut off from the immortality which, through the succession of children and children's children, is kept alight for ever, roped off from the holy assembly and congregation. "For he that hath lost the organs of generation is absolutely forbidden to enter therein" (Deut. xxiii. 1).

XXVIII. But the high priest is blameless, 185 perfect, the husband of a virgin (Lev. xxi. 12, 13) who, strange paradox, never becomes a woman, but rather has forsaken that womanhood through the company of her husband (Gen. xviii. 11). And not only is he a husband, able to sow the seed of undefiled and virgin thoughts, but a father also of holy intelligences. Some of these survey and watch the 186 facts of nature as Eleazer and Ithamar (Ex. xxviii. 1). Others are God's ministers, hastening to kindle and keep alive the heavenly flame.<sup>a</sup> For rubbing together words and thoughts on holiness they cause piety, that most godlike of qualities, to flash forth as though from tinder. And he who is at once the preceptor 187 and father of these is no ordinary part of the holy congregation but one without whom the solemn council of the soul's parts could never be convened

<sup>a</sup> i.e. Nadab and Abihu, cf. § 67.

PHILO

- μερῶν βουλή τὸ παράπαν, ὁ πρόεδρος, ὁ πρύτανις, ὁ δημιουργός, ὁ καὶ χωρὶς ἄλλων μόνος ἐφ' ἑαυτοῦ 188 σκοπεῖν τε καὶ πράττειν ἕκαστα ἱκανός. οὗτος σὺν ἄλλοις μὲν ἐξεταζόμενος ὀλίγος,<sup>1</sup> πολὺς δέ, ὅταν μονωθῆ, γίνεται, δικαστήριον (ὄλον), ὄλον βουλευτήριον, ὄλος δῆμος, ὄλος ὄχλος, σύμπαν ἀνθρώπων γένος, μᾶλλον δέ, εἰ τάληθές εἰπεῖν δεῖ, 189 μεθόριός τις θεοῦ (καὶ ἀνθρώπου) φύσις, τοῦ μὲν [684] ἐλάττων, ἀνθρώπου δὲ κρείττων. “ὅταν” γάρ φησιν “εἰσὶν εἰς | τὰ ἅγια τῶν ἁγίων ὁ ἀρχιερεὺς, ἄνθρωπος οὐκ ἔσται.” τίς οὖν, εἰ μὴ ἄνθρωπος; ἀρά γε θεός; οὐκ ἂν εἴποιμι—τόν γὰρ τοῦ ὀνό-ματος τοῦδε κληρὸν ὁ ἀρχιπροφήτης ἔλαχε Μωυσῆς ἐτι ὡν ἐν Αἰγύπτῳ, προσρηθεὶς Φαραὼ θεὸς—οὐδὲ<sup>2</sup> ἄνθρωπος, ἀλλ' ἑκατέρων τῶν ἄκρων, ὡς ἂν βάσεως καὶ κεφαλῆς, ἐφαπτόμενος.
 190 XXIX. Τὸ μὲν οὖν ἕτερον εἶδος ἀμπέλου, ὅπερ εὐφροσύνη κεκλήρωται, καὶ τὸ ἐξ αὐτῆς μέθυσμα, ἢ ἄκρατος εὐβουλία, καὶ ὁ ἀρυσάμενος οἰνοχόος ἐκ τοῦ θείου κρατήρος, ὃν αὐτὸς ὁ θεὸς ἀρετῶν 191 πεπλήρωκεν ἐπὶ χεῖλη,<sup>3</sup> δεδήλωται. τὸ δὲ ἀνοίας καὶ λύπης καὶ παροινίας ἤδη μὲν τρόπῳ τινὶ τύπῳ δὲ ἑτέρῳ<sup>4</sup> ἐκτυποῦται διὰ τῶν ἑτέρωθι<sup>5</sup> λεχθέντων ἐν ᾧδῃ τῇ μείζονι. “ἐκ γὰρ - ἀμπέλου” φησὶ

<sup>1</sup> mss. ὁ λόγος.

<sup>2</sup> mss. οὐτε: perhaps, as Wend. suggests, <οὐτε οὖν θεός>, οὐτε.

<sup>3</sup> Perhaps write ἐπιχειλή.

<sup>4</sup> mss. ἕτερον. This emendation of Hoeschel, which however did not satisfy Wend., seems to me quite sufficient (or perhaps ἑτέρως). After τρόπῳ τινὶ sc. δεδήλωται.

<sup>5</sup> mss. ἑτέρων.

---

<sup>a</sup> I do not know why Mangey and Cohn should have wished to correct δημιουργός to ἱεροῦργος or δῆμαρχος. The 528

ON DREAMS, II. 187-191

at all, its chairman, its president, its chief magistrate,<sup>a</sup> who alone, and by himself, and without any other, is capable of considering and executing all things. When he is in line with others he is one of a few, but 188 when he stands alone he is a "many," a whole judgment-court, a whole senate, a whole people, a whole multitude, a whole human race, or rather, to tell the real truth, a being whose nature is midway between <man and> God, less than God, superior to man. "For when the high priest enters the Holy of Holies 189 he shall not be a man" (Lev. xvi. 17).<sup>b</sup> Who then, if he is not a man? A God? I will not say so,<sup>c</sup> for this name is a prerogative, assigned to the chief prophet, Moses, while he was still in Egypt, where he is entitled the God of Pharaoh (Ex. vii. 1). Yet not a man either, but one contiguous with both extremes, which form, as it were, one his head, the other his feet.

XXIX. We have explained one kind of vine, that 190 which is the property of gladness, and the potent drink which it gives, undiluted wise counsel, and also the cup-bearer who draws it from the divine mixing-bowl which God Himself has filled to the brim with virtues. The other kind, the vine of folly 191 and grief and wine frenzy, has already been explained in a way, but it is represented typically otherwise by the words spoken elsewhere in the Greater Song.<sup>d</sup> term, used in various Greek states, would be quite familiar to Philo through Thucydides and Demosthenes.

<sup>b</sup> For this use of the text, quoted again below, § 231, see note on Quis Rerum 84.

<sup>c</sup> i.e. in the narrative Aaron is not called θεός, though Moses is, and this symbolizes the relation of the Logos to the Existent.

<sup>d</sup> See note on De Mut. 182.

- “Σοδόμων ἢ ἄμπελος αὐτῶν, καὶ ἡ κληματὶς αὐτῶν ἐκ Γομόρρας· ἡ σταφυλὴ αὐτῶν σταφυλὴ χολῆς, βότρυς πικρίας αὐτοῖς<sup>1</sup>. θυμὸς δρακόντων 192 ὁ οἶνος αὐτῶν, καὶ θυμὸς ἀσπίδων ἀνιάτος.” ὄρας ὅσα τὸ ἀφροσύνης μέθυσμα ἐργάζεται, τὸ πικρὸν, τὸ κακότηες, τὸ ἀκρόχολον, τὸ περιθύμον, τὸ ἀτίθασον, τὸ δηκτικόν, τὸ ἐπίβουλον. ἐμφαντικώτατα δὲ ἀφροσύνης ἔρνος ἐν Σοδόμοις φησὶν εἶναι—τύφλωσις δὲ ἢ στείρωσις ἐρμηνεύεται Σόδομα, —ἐπειδὴ τυφλὸν καὶ ἄγονον καλῶν ἀφροσύνη, ὑφ’ ἧς ἀναπεισθέντες τινὲς μετρεῖν καὶ σταθμᾶσθαι καὶ ἀριθμεῖν πάντα καθ’ αὐτοὺς ἠξίωσαν· Γομόρρα 193 (γὰρ) μεταληφθέν ἐστι μέτρον. Μωυσῆς δὲ στάθμην καὶ μέτρον καὶ ἀριθμὸν τῶν ὄλων ὑπέλαβεν εἶναι τὸν θεόν, ἀλλ’ οὐ τὸν ἀνθρώπινον νοῦν. δηλοῖ δὲ διὰ τούτων φάσκων· “οὐκ ἔσται ἐν μαρσίππῳ σου στάθμιον καὶ στάθμιον, μέγα ἢ μικρόν· οὐκ ἔσται ἐν τῇ οἰκίᾳ σου (μέτρον καὶ μέτρον), μέγα ἢ μικρόν· στάθμιον ἀληθινὸν καὶ δίκαιον 194 ἔσται σοι.” ἀληθὲς δὲ καὶ δίκαιον μέτρον τὸ τὸν μόνον δίκαιον θεὸν ὑπολαβεῖν πάντα μετρεῖν καὶ σταθμᾶσθαι καὶ ἀριθμοῖς καὶ πέρασι καὶ ὅροις τῆν τῶν ὄλων περιγράψαι φύσιν, ἄδικον δὲ καὶ ψευδὲς τὸ νομίσαι κατὰ τὸν ἀνθρώπινον νοῦν ταῦτα συμβαίνειν.
 195 Ὁ δὲ εὐνοῦχος ἅμα καὶ ἀρχαιονοχόος τοῦ Φαραῶ τὸ ἀφροσύνης γεννητικὸν φυτόν, ἄμπελον, φαντασιωθεὶς προσαναζωγραφεῖ τρεῖς πυθμένας, ἵνα τὰς ἐν τῷ διαμαρτάνειν κατὰ τοὺς τρεῖς χρόνους

<sup>1</sup> MSS. αὐτῆς.

<sup>a</sup> An allusion to the saying of Protagoras, “Man is the 530

ON DREAMS, II. 191-195

“ Their vine,” he says, “ is of the vine of Sodom and their tendrils of Gomorrah, their grapes are grapes of gall, a cluster of bitterness to them. Their wine is the wrath of dragons and the incurable wrath of asps ” (Deut. xxxii. 32, 33). You see what the 192 potent wine-cup of folly produces : bitterness, evil temper, sudden passionateness, deep anger, savageness, stinging spite, maliciousness. Most forcible are his words when he says that the plant of folly is in Sodom, for Sodom means blinding or making barren, since folly is blind and unproductive of excellence, and through its persuasions some have thought good to measure and weigh and count everything by the standard of themselves, for Gomorrah by interpretation is “ measure.” But Moses held that 193 God, and not the human mind, is the measure and weighing scale and numbering of all things.<sup>a</sup> And he shews it in these words : “ There shall not be in thy pouch divers weights, great and small. There shall not be in thy house divers measures great and small. A true and a just weight thou shalt have ” (Deut. xxv. 13-15). And the true and just measure 194 is to hold that God Who alone is just measures and weighs all things and marks out the confines of universal nature with numbers and limits and boundaries, while the false and unjust measure is to think that these things come to pass as the human mind directs.

This eunuch and chief cup-bearer in one to Pharaoh, 195 after seeing in his vision the parent plant of folly, the vine, goes on to picture it with three roots, to suggest the extremes which can be reached in sinning through measure of all things.” Cf. De Post. 35 and Quis Rerum 246 (and note).

PHILO

- ἔσχατιὰς παρεμφήνη· πυθμὴν γὰρ τὸ ἔσχατον.
 196 XXX. | ἐπειδὴν οὖν ἀφροσύνη πᾶσαν ψυχὴν [685] ἐπισκιάσῃ καὶ κατασχῆ καὶ μηδὲν αὐτῆς ἄφετον μηδὲ ἐλεύθερον μέρος εἶσῃ, οὐ μόνον ὅσα τῶν ἀμαρτημάτων ἰάσιμα δρᾶν ἀναγκάζει, ἀλλὰ καὶ 197 ὅσα ἀνίατα. τὰ μὲν οὖν θεραπείαν ἐνδεχόμενα ῥᾶστα καὶ πρῶτα γράφεται, τὰ δὲ ἀθεράπευτα παγχάλεπα καὶ ὕστατα, πυθμέσιν ἀναλογοῦντα.
 198 καὶ καθάπερ, οἶμαι, ἡ φρόνησις ἄρχεται μὲν ἀπὸ τῶν ἐλαττόνων ὠφελεῖν, λήγει δὲ εἰς τὰς ὑπερ-βολὰς τῶν κατορθωμάτων, τὸν αὐτὸν τρόπον καὶ ἡ ἀφροσύνη καταβιάζουσα τὴν ψυχὴν ἄνωθεν καὶ κατ' ὀλίγον ἀφιστᾶσα παιδείας μακρὰν ὀρθοῦ λόγου διοικίζει καὶ μέχρι τῶν ἔσχατιῶν καθαιρεῖ.
 199 τὸ δ' ὄναρ ἐδήλου μετὰ τοὺς πυθμένας ἀνθοῦσαν καὶ βλαστάνουσαν καὶ καρπο-φοροῦσαν τὴν ἄμπελον—“ αὐτὴ ” γάρ φησι “ θάλλουσα ἀνενηνοχυῖα βλαστούς· πέπειροι<sup>1</sup> βότρυνες σταφυλῆς,”—ἦν εἶθε (ἦν)<sup>2</sup> ἀκαρπία χρῆσθαι καὶ μηδέποτε χλοηφορῆσαι καὶ πάντα μεμαράνθαι τὸν 200 αἰῶνα. τί γὰρ ἂν εἶη μείζον κακὸν [ἦ] θαλλούσης καὶ εὐφορούσης<sup>3</sup> ἀφροσύνης; ἀλλὰ καὶ “ τὸ ποτήριον Φαραώ,” ἡ δεξαμενὴ τῆς ἀνοίας καὶ παροιρίας καὶ τῆς παρὰ πάντα τὸν βίον ἀπαύ-στου μέθης, “ ἐν τῇ χειρὶ μου,” φησὶν, ἔστιν, ἴσον τῷ ἐν ταῖς ἐμαῖς ἐγχειρήσεσι καὶ ἐπιβολαῖς καὶ δυνάμεσιν· οὐ γὰρ ἄνευ γε τῶν ἐμῶν ἐπινοιῶν 201 εὐδοήσει τὸ πάθος ἐξ ἑαυτοῦ. ὥσπερ γὰρ ἐν μὲν ταῖς τοῦ ἡνιόχου χερσὶ τὰς ἡνίας εἶναι προσῆκεν, ἐν δὲ ταῖς τοῦ κυβερνήτου τοὺς οἶακας—μόνως

<sup>1</sup> MSS. περὶ ἦν.

ON DREAMS, II. 195-201

the three divisions of time, for the root is the extreme. XXX. When then folly overshadows and masters 196 the whole soul and suffers no part of it to go at large and in freedom, it compels him to commit, not only such sins as may be remedied, but also such as are incurable. The sins which admit of healing treat- 197 ment are described as the lightest and first in the list ; those that are beyond treatment as hard indeed and coming last, thus corresponding to roots. And 198 just as wisdom begins its benefits with the lesser of right actions and ends with them at their highest point, so folly, I think, forces the soul down from the height and little by little removes it from instruction and sets its dwelling far apart from right reason and brings it in ruin to the uttermost extremes.

After the roots the dream shewed him 199 the vine blossoming and sprouting and bearing fruit. " It was blossoming itself, having put forth shoots. The grapes of the cluster were ripe " (Gen. xl. 10). Would that fruitlessness might be its lot, that it might never put forth green shoots and remain withered for all time, for what greater evil could 200 there be than that folly should blossom and be fruitful ?

Again, the cup of Pharaoh, the receptacle of senselessness and wine-frenzy and ceaseless life-long intoxication, is, he says, " in my hand " (Gen. xl. 11), that is, in the enterprises which I take in hand, in my projects and faculties, for without the activities of my mind passion by itself will make little headway. The reins should be in the 201 hands of the driver, and the rudder in the hands of

---

<sup>2</sup> <ῆν> is my insertion: Wend. notes εἶθε as corrupt, and suggests εὐκτέον or κρείττον or εἰκός. <sup>3</sup> MSS. ἐμφορούσης.

PHILO

γὰρ οὕτως κατορθοῦται δρόμος μὲν ἄρματι, σκάφει δὲ πλοῦς,—οὕτως ἐν τῇ χειρὶ καὶ δυνάμει τοῦ θάτερον εἶδος τῆς γαστριμαργίας τεχνιτεύοντος, οἰνοφλυγίαν, ἢ τοῦ ἀκρατοῦς<sup>1</sup> ἔστιν ἐκπλήρωσις.<sup>2</sup>

202 ἀλλὰ τί παθὼν ὑπέμεινεν αὐχεῖν ἐπ' ἀρνήσεως μᾶλλον ἢ ὁμολογίας ἐπαξίῳ πράγματι; ἢ οὐκ ἄμεινον ἦν μὴ οὐχ ὁμολογεῖν διδάσκαλον ἀκρασίας εἶναι, ἀλλὰ τῷ ἀκρατεῖ τὰ ὑπεκκαύματα τοῦ πάθους ἐπαναθεῖναι<sup>3</sup> ὡς εὐρετῆ καὶ αὐτουργῶ<sup>4</sup> τεθρυμμένου καὶ κατεαγότος αἰσχίστου βίου;

203 τοιοῦτον δ' ἔστιν· ἀφροσύνη σεμννύεται ἐφ' οἷς εἰκὸς ἐγκαλύπτεσθαι· νυνὶ μὲν οὐ μόνον ἐπὶ τῷ τὴν δεξαμενὴν τῆς ἀκράτορος ψυχῆς, τὸ ποτήριον, περιφέρειν ἐν ταῖς χερσὶ καὶ ἐπιδείκνυσθαι πᾶσιν ἀγάλλεται,<sup>5</sup> ἀλλὰ καὶ ἐπὶ τῷ τὴν σταφυλὴν εἰς αὐτὸ ἐκθλίβειν· τὸ δ' ἔστι τὸ ἐκπληρωτικὸν τοῦ πάθους δημιουργεῖν καὶ κεκρυμμένον εἰς φῶς ἄγειν.

204 ὡς γὰρ τὰ βρέφη γλιχόμενα τροφῆς, ὅποτε μέλλοι σπᾶν τοῦ γάλακτος, ἐκθλίβει καὶ πιέζει τὸν μαστὸν τῆς τρεφούσης, οὕτω τὴν πηγὴν, ἀφ' ἧς τὸ οἰνο-[686] φλυγίας ὀμβρεῖ | κακόν, ὃ δημιουργὸς τῆς ἀκρασίας πιέζει κραταιῶς, ἵνα ταῖς ἐκθλιβομέναις λιβάσιν ἡδίστη τροφῆ χρῶτο.

205 XXXI. Τοιοῦτος μὲν ἡμῖν ὁ βεβακχευμένος ἀκράτῳ, παροίνιον καὶ παράληρον κακόν καὶ ἀνίατον, γραφέσθω· τὸν δὲ συγγενῆ τούτου γάστρων<sup>6</sup> καὶ αὐτὸν ὄντα, πολυφαγίας καὶ λαιμαργίας ἑταῖρον, τὰ περὶ ἔδωδῶν ἀκρατῶς τεχνιτεύοντα, 206 πάλιν ἐπισκεπτέον. καίτοι οὐ πολλῆς δεῖ πρὸς τὴν θήραν αὐτοῦ φροντίδος· ἔστι γὰρ ἐκμαγεῖον ἐμ-

<sup>1</sup> MSS. ἀκράτου.

<sup>2</sup> MSS. ἢ πλήρωσις.

<sup>3</sup> MSS. ἐπαναθεῖναι.

<sup>4</sup> MSS. αὐτογεωργοῦ.

<sup>5</sup> MSS. ἀγγέλλεται.

<sup>6</sup> MSS. γάστρων.

ON DREAMS, II. 201-206

the pilot, since only so can the chariot go aright in the race or the ship on its voyage. Even so in the hand and power of the craftsman, who produces one form of belly-gorging, namely wine-bibbing, is the task of filling the incontinent man.<sup>a</sup> But 202 what was he thinking of, that he did not shrink from boasting over an action which called for denial rather than confession? Were it not a better course, instead of confessing that he was the teacher of incontinence, to ascribe the incentives to passion to the incontinent one himself as inventor and author of his own base, unmanly, invertebrate life? But 203 the fact is that folly prides herself on matters which should make her hide her face in shame. In this case she not only glories in carrying round the cup, the receptacle of the incontinent soul, and displaying it to all, but in squeezing the grapes into it, and this means manufacturing the stuff which brings passion to its fullness and drawing it out of concealment into the light. For just as babes who want to be fed, 204 when they are going to suck the milk, squeeze and press the nurse's breast, so the maker of incontinence presses hard on the fountain from which the curse of wine-bibbing pours like rain, to find in the squeezed droppings a nourishment of delicious sweetness.

XXXI. Thus then let us describe that wine- 205 maddened, raving, incurable pest, the man frenzied by strong liquor. But his fellow, himself too a belly-slave, the friend of gross eating and gluttony, the dissolute artificer of viands, must be considered in his turn. Yet we need little thought in our quest of 206 him, for the dreamer's vision is the closest possible

<sup>a</sup> Or (ἀκρατοῦς neut.) "filling the cup (i.e. the soul) with incontinence."

PHILO

- φερέστατον αὐτοῦ τῆς εἰκόνας ὁ φανείς ὄνειρος. ἀκριβώσαντες (οὖν) αὐτὸν ἐκείνον ὡσπερ ἔμφασιν 207 ἐν κατόπτρῳ θεασόμεθα. “ ὤμην ” γάρ φησι “ τρία κανᾶ χονδριτῶν αἴρειν ἐπὶ τῆς κεφαλῆς μου.” κεφαλὴν μὲν τοίνυν ἀλληγοροῦντές φαμεν εἶναι ψυχῆς τὸν ἡγεμόνα νοῦν, ἐπικεῖσθαι δὲ τούτῳ πάντα· καὶ γὰρ ἐξεφώνησέ ποτε ἐπιτον(ῶς)<sup>1</sup>.
 208 “ ἐπ’ ἐμὲ ἐγένετο ταῦτα πάντα.” στειλάμενος οὖν πομπὴν ὧν ἐτεχνίτευσε κατὰ γαστρὸς τῆς ταλαίνης ἐπιδείκνυται, καὶ κανηφορῶν ὁ ἀνόητος οὐκ αἰδεῖται τοσοῦτῳ βαρυνόμενος τριττῷ κανῶν<sup>2</sup> ἄχθει, τοῦτο 209 δ’ ἐστὶ τρισὶ χρόνου μέρεσι. τὴν γὰρ ἡδονὴν οἱ θιασῶταί φασι αὐτῆς ἔκ τε μνήμης τῶν παρεληλυθότων τερπνῶν καὶ ἐξ ἀπολαύσεως τῶν ἐνεστηκότων 210 καὶ ἐξ ἐλπίδος τῶν μελλόντων συνεστάναι· ὥστε τὰ τρία κανᾶ τοῖς τρισὶ τοῦ χρόνου μέρεσιν ἐξομοιοῦσθαι, τὰ δ’ ἐπὶ τῶν κανῶν πέμματα τοῖς ἐκάστῳ τῶν μερῶν ἐφαρμόζουσι, παρεληλυθότων μνήμαις, ἐνεστηκότων μετουσίαις, μελλόντων προσδοκίαις, τὸν δὲ βαστάζοντα ταῦτα πάντα τῷ φιληδόνῳ, ὃς οὐκ ἀφ’ ἐνὸς γένους ἀκρασίας, ἀλλ’ ἀπὸ πάντων σχεδὸν εἰδῶν καὶ γενῶν τῆς ἀκολασίας ἄσπονδον καὶ φιλιῶν ἀλῶν ἐπιδεᾶ τράπεζαν ἐκπεπλήρωκεν.
 211 ἧς ἀπολαύει μόνος ὡσπερ ἐν δημοθουινίᾳ ὁ βασιλεὺς Φαραῶ, σπορὰν καὶ σκέδασιν καὶ φθορὰν ἐγκρα-

<sup>1</sup> My conjecture: mss. ἐπὶ τὸν. The editors have suggested ἐπ’ αὐτοῦ, περὶ τοῦδε, ἐπὶ τοῦδε or τούτου. See note a below.

<sup>2</sup> mss. κακόν.

<sup>a</sup> The various emendations of ἐπὶ τὸν mentioned in the critical note seem to me all open to the same objection, that the subject of ἐξεφώνησε is the mind itself, identified with Jacob, cf. De Som. i. 240 as well as the similar application of the text in Leg. All. i. 61. To take Moses as the subject

ON DREAMS, II. 206-211

reproduction of his image, and through careful study of the dream we shall see him reflected as it were in a mirror. "I thought," it says, "that I lifted three 207 baskets of wheaten loaves on my head" (Gen. xl. 16). "Head" we interpret allegorically to mean the ruling part of the soul, the mind on which all things lie, and once indeed that mind cried out loudly and bitterly,<sup>a</sup> "All these things have been upon me" (Gen. xlii. 36). So then he marshals the procession of all the arts 208 which he contrived against the unhappy belly, and bearing the ritual<sup>b</sup> basket himself is not ashamed, poor fool, to be burdened with a triple load of baskets, that is with the three divisions of time. For pleasure is 209 said by her votaries to consist of the memory of past, the enjoyment of present and the hope of future delights.<sup>c</sup> Thus the three baskets are likened to the 210 three divisions of time, and the baked meats in the baskets to the concomitants of each of these divisions, memories of the past, participations of the present, expectations of the future, and he who bears all these to the pleasure-lover, who has loaded the table not with one general kind of incontinence, but with practically every species and genus of licentiousness, and that board has no peace-draughts and lacks the salts of friendship. At this board there is one ban- 211 queter only, and yet to him it is as a public feast: that banqueter is King Pharaoh, who has made dispersion and scattering and the undoing of con-is hardly possible. We should therefore expect ἐφ' ἑαυτοῦ or ἑαυτόν, but this is still further away from the mss. On the other hand ἐπιτονῶς is very suitable to this peculiarly bitter cry of Jacob.

<sup>b</sup> Philo is evidently connecting the baskets of the dream with the procession of κανηφόροι at Attic festivals.

<sup>c</sup> See App. p. 609.

PHILO

- τείας ἐπιτετηδευκώς· ἐρμηνεύεται γὰρ σκεδασμός. ἔστι δὲ τὸ ὑπέρογκον καὶ βασιλικὸν αὐτῷ οὐκ ἐφ' οἷς εἰκὸς<sup>1</sup> σωφροσύνης ἀγαθοῖς ἀγάλλεσθαι, ἀλλ' ἐν οἷς ἀπεικὸς βδελυρίας ἐπιτηδεύμασι σεμνύνεσθαι, πρὸς ἀπληστίαν καὶ λαιμαργότητα καὶ τὸ ἀβρο-
- 212 δίαιτον ἐξοκείλαντι. τοιγάρτοι τὰ πτηνά, τὸ δ' ἔστιν αἱ ἐπιποτώμεναι ἕξωθεν ἀτέκμαρτοι συντυχίαι, πάντα πυρὸς τρόπον ἐπιδραμοῦνται καὶ ἀναφλέξουσι καὶ τῇ παμφάγῳ δυνάμει καταναλώσουσιν, ὡς μηδὲ λείψανον γοῦν ὑπολείπεσθαι πρὸς ἀπόλαυσιν τῷ κανηφοροῦντι, ὃς ἤλπισε τὰς εὐρέσεις καὶ τὰς ἐπινοίας αὐτοῦ<sup>2</sup> μέχρι παντὸς αἰῶνος οἷσειν
- 213 ἀναφαιρέτους ἐν | βεβαίῳ. χάρις δὲ τῷ νικηφόρῳ [687] θεῷ, ὃς ἀτελεῖς τὰς εἰς ἄκρον πεπονημένας<sup>3</sup> σπουδὰς τοῦ φιλοπαθοῦς ἐργάζεται, πτηνὰς φύσεις ἐπιπέμπων ἀοράτως πρὸς ἀναίρεσιν καὶ φθορὰν αὐτῶν. περισυληθεῖς<sup>4</sup> οὖν ὁ νοῦς ὧν ἐδημιούργησεν, ὥσπερ τὸν αὐχένα ἀποτμηθεῖς ἀκέφαλος καὶ νεκρὸς ἀνευρεθήσεται, προσηλωμένος ὥσπερ οἱ ἀνασκολοπισθέντες τῷ<sup>5</sup> ξύλῳ τῆς ἀπόρου καὶ πενιχρᾶς
- 214 ἀπαιδευσίας. ἕως μὲν γὰρ μηδὲν λυμαίνεται τῶν ἐξαπιναιῶς εἰωθότων ἀπροοράτως ἐπιφοιτᾶν, εὐδοεῖν δοκοῦσιν αἱ πρὸς ἀπόλαυσιν ἡδονῆς τέχναι· κατασκηψάντων δ' ἐκ τοῦ ἀφανοῦς ἀνατρέπονται, καὶ ὁ δημιουργὸς αὐταῖς συνδιαφθείρεται.
- 215 XXXII. Τὰ μὲν οὖν τῶν διηρημένων τὸ γεύσεως ἐργαστήριον ἐν ἑκατέρῳ τροφῆς εἶδει, πόσεώς τε καὶ βρώσεως οὐχὶ τῆς ἀναγκαίας ἀλλὰ περιττῆς καὶ ἀκράτορος, ὀνειράτα δεδήλωται· τὰ δὲ (τοῦ)

<sup>1</sup> MSS. ἐπὶ τοῖς εἰκόσι.

<sup>2</sup> MSS. τοῦ.

<sup>3</sup> Perhaps as Mangey πεπονημένας.

<sup>4</sup> MSS. περισυλληφθεῖς.

tinence his business, for his name means " scattering." And he shews his great importance and kingship not in delighting in the seemly, the good cheer of temperance, but in glorying in the unseemly, the practices of foulness, wrecked as he is on the rocks of insatiableness and greediness and luxurious living.

And therefore the birds (Gen. xl. 17), that is the 212 unforeseen chance events which swoop upon us from without, will overrun like fire all the contents and set them ablaze and consume them with their devouring force, so that not a fragment is left to be enjoyed by the basket-bearer who had hoped to carry his inventions and projects for ever as a secure and permanent possession never to be taken from him. But thanks 213 be to the victorious God who, however perfect in workmanship are the aims and efforts of the passion-lover, makes them to be of none effect by sending invisibly against them winged beings to undo and destroy them. Thus the mind stripped of the creations of its art will be found as it were a headless corpse, with severed neck nailed like the crucified to the tree of helpless and poverty-stricken indiscipline. For so long as they remain unharmed by the visitors, 214 whose way it is to arrive suddenly and unforeseen, the arts which cater for the enjoyment of pleasure seem to flourish. But when these visitors swoop down out of the unseen, these arts are turned upside-down and the craftsman perishes with them.

XXXII. We have now explained the dreams of the 215 two partners in the workshop of the palate, where both kinds of provender, drink and food, and these not of the necessary, but of the superfluous and intemperate kind, are produced. Our next im-

---

<sup>b</sup> MSS. αὐτῶ (Mangey αὐ τῶ).

PHILO

- τούτων καὶ τῶν ἄλλων, ὅσαι ψυχῆς δυνάμεις, βασιλεύειν δοκοῦντος, ὄνομα Φαραῶ, κατὰ τὸ
- 216 ἀκόλουθον αὐτίκα διερευνητέον. “ ἐν γὰρ τῷ ὕπνῳ μου ” φησὶν “ ὥμην ἐστάναι παρὰ τὸ χεῖλος τοῦ ποταμοῦ· καὶ ὡσπερ ἐκ τοῦ ποταμοῦ ἀνέβαινον βόες ἐπτὰ, ἐκλεκταὶ ταῖς σαρκί καὶ καλαὶ τῷ εἶδει, καὶ ἐνέμοντο ἐν τῷ ἄχει. καὶ ἰδοὺ ἕτεραι ἐπτὰ βόες ἀνέβαινον ὀπίσω αὐτῶν ἐκ τοῦ ποταμοῦ, πονηραὶ καὶ αἰσχραὶ τῷ εἶδει καὶ λεπταὶ ταῖς σαρκί, ἃς οὐκ εἶδον τοιαύτας ἐν ὅλῃ τῇ Αἰγύπτῳ
- 217 αἰσχροτέρας. καὶ κατέφαγον αἱ βόες αἱ λεπταὶ καὶ αἰσχραὶ τὰς ἐπτὰ βόας τὰς πρώτας· τὰς καλὰς καὶ ἐκλεκτάς, καὶ εἰσῆλθον εἰς τὰς κοιλίας αὐτῶν· (καὶ οὐ διάδηλοι ἐγένοντο ὅτι εἰσῆλθον εἰς τὰς κοιλίας αὐτῶν),<sup>1</sup> καὶ αἱ ὄψεις αὐτῶν αἰσχραὶ, καθὰ καὶ τὴν
- 218 ἀρχὴν [εἶπον]. ἐξεγερθεὶς δὲ ἐκοιμήθην, καὶ εἶδον πάλιν ἐν τῷ ὕπνῳ μου, καὶ ὡς ἐπτὰ στάχυες ἀνέβαινον ἐν πυθμένι ἐνί, πλήρεις καὶ καλοί· ἄλλοι δὲ ἐπτὰ στάχυες λεπτοὶ καὶ ἀνεμόφθοροι ἀνεφύοντο ἐχόμενοι· καὶ κατέπιον οἱ ἐπτὰ στάχυες<sup>1</sup> τοὺς
- 219 καλοὺς καὶ τοὺς πλήρεις.” ὄρας μὲν δὴ (τὸ) προοίμιον τοῦ φιλαύτου, ὃς κινητὸς καὶ στρεπτός καὶ μεταβλητὸς ὢν κατὰ τε σῶμα καὶ ψυχὴν φησιν· “ ὥμην ἐστάναι,” καὶ οὐκ ἐλογίσαστο, ὅτι μόνῳ θεῷ τὸ ἀκλινὲς καὶ πάγιόν ἐστιν οἰκείον
- 220 καὶ εἴ τις αὐτῷ φίλος. τῆς μὲν ἀκλινοῦς περὶ αὐτὸν δυνάμειωσ σαφειστάτη πίστις ὅδε ὁ κόσμος, αἰεὶ κατὰ τὰ αὐτὰ καὶ ὡσαύτως ἔχων—ὁπότε δὲ ὁ κόσμος ἀρρεπῆς, ὁ δημιουργὸς πῶς οὐ βέβαιος;—εἶτα μέντοι καὶ οἱ ἀψευδέστατοι μάρτυρες ἱεροὶ
- 221 χρησιμοί· λέγεται γὰρ ἐκ προσώπου τοῦ θεοῦ·

<sup>1</sup> καὶ . . . αὐτῶν inserted by Wend. from LXX. Similarly

ON DREAMS, II. 215-221

mediate duty is to investigate the dreams of him who believed himself to be the king of these two, and the other faculties of the soul, namely Pharaoh. "In 216 my sleep," he says, "I thought I was standing by the edge of the river, and it was as though from the river came up seven kine of choice flesh and well favoured, and they fed in the reed grass. And, lo, seven other kine came up behind them from the river, evil and ugly to look on, and lean-fleshed, such that I never saw uglier in all Egypt. And the lean and 217 ugly kine ate up the seven first kine, the choice and well favoured, and they passed into their bellies. But it could not be seen that they had passed into their bellies, and their looks remained ugly as at the first. And after I had waked I slept, and saw again 218 in my sleep that seven ears of corn came up on one stalk, full and good, and other seven ears thin and wind-blasted grew up beside them, and the seven ears swallowed up the good and full ears" (Gen. xli. 17-24).

You note the opening words of 219 the self-lover, who, in body and soul alike, is the subject of movement and turning and change. "I thought I stood," he says, and does not reflect that to be unswerving and stable belongs only to God and to such as are the friends of God. God's unswerving 220 power is proved most clearly by this world which ever remains the same unchanged, and, since the world is firmly balanced, its maker must needs be steadfast. We have other infallible witnesses in the sacred oracles, for we have these words with God as speaker : 221 in § 218 perhaps after κατέπιον οἱ ἑπτὰ στάχυνες insert οἱ λεπτοὶ καὶ ἀνεμοφθόροι τοὺς ἑπτὰ στάχυνας.

---

PHILO

[688] “ὡδε ἐγὼ ἔστηκα ἐκεῖ<sup>1</sup> πρὸ τοῦ σέ ἐπὶ τῆς πέτρας ἐν Χωρήβ,”<sup>2</sup> ἴσον τῷ | οὗτος<sup>3</sup> ἐγὼ ὁ ἐμφανῆς καὶ ἐνταῦθα ὡν ἐκεῖ τέ εἰμι καὶ πανταχοῦ, πεπληρωκὼς τὰ πάντα, ἐστὼς ἐν ὁμοίῳ καὶ μένων, ἄτρεπτος ὢν, πρὶν ἢ σέ ἢ τι<sup>4</sup> τῶν ὄντων εἰς γένεσιν ἐλθεῖν, ἐπὶ τῆς ἀκροτάτης καὶ πρεσβυτάτης ἰδρυμένος<sup>5</sup> δυνάμεως ἀρχῆς, ἀφ’ ἧς ἡ τῶν ὄντων γένεσις ὤμβρησε καὶ

222 τὸ σοφίας ἐπλήμμυρε νᾶμα. ἐγὼ γάρ εἰμι “ὁ ἐξαγαγὼν ἐκ πέτρας ἀκροτόμου πηγὴν ὕδατος” ἐν ἑτέροις εἴρηται. μαρτυρεῖ δὲ καὶ Μωυσῆς περὶ τοῦ μὴ τρέπεσθαι τὸ θεῖον φάσκων· “εἶδον τὸν τόπον οὗ εἰστήκει ὁ θεὸς τοῦ Ἰσραήλ,” τὸ μὴ μεταβάλλειν διὰ τῆς στάσεως καὶ ἰδρύσεως αἰνιττόμενος.

223 XXXIII. ἀλλὰ γὰρ τοσαύτη περὶ τὸ θεῖον ἐστὶν ὑπερβολὴ τοῦ βεβαίου, ὥστε καὶ ταῖς ἐπιλελεγμέναις φύσεσιν ἐχυρότητος, ὡς ἀρίστου κτήματος, μεταδίδωσιν. αὐτίκα γέ τοι τὴν πλήρη χαρίτων διαθήκην ἑαυτοῦ—νόμος δ’ ἐστὶ καὶ λόγος τῶν ὄντων ὁ πρεσβύτατος—ὡς ἂν ἐπὶ βάσεως τῆς τοῦ δικαίου ψυχῆς ἄγαλμα θεοειδὲς ἰδρύσεσθαι παγίως φησίν, ἐπειδὴν λέγει τῷ Νῶε· “στήσω τὴν 224 διαθήκην μου πρὸς σέ.” παρεμφαίνει δὲ καὶ δύο ἕτερα, ἐν μὲν ὅτι τὸ δίκαιον ἀδιαφορεῖ διαθήκης θεοῦ, ἕτερον δὲ ὅτι οἱ μὲν ἄλλοι χαρίζονται τὰ διαφέροντα τῶν λαμβανόντων, ὁ δὲ θεὸς οὐ μόνον ταῦτα, ἀλλὰ αὐτοὺς ἐκείνους ἑαυτοῖς· ἐμὲ γὰρ ἐμοὶ δεδώρηται καὶ ἕκαστον τῶν ὄντων ἑαυτῷ· τὸ γὰρ “στήσω τὴν διαθήκην μου πρὸς σέ” ἴσον ἐστὶ τῷ

<sup>1</sup> MSS. ἔστη καὶ ἐκέισε.      <sup>2</sup> MSS. ἐγχωρεῖν. See App. p. 609.

<sup>3</sup> MSS. οὗτως.      <sup>4</sup> MSS. σὲ ἐπὶ.      <sup>5</sup> MSS. ὀρώμενος.

<sup>a</sup> For Philo's interpretation of this text see note on Dē Sac. 67.

ON DREAMS, II. 221-224

“ Here I stand there before thou wast, on the rock in Horeb ”<sup>a</sup> (Ex. xvii. 6), which means, “ This I, the manifest, Who am here, am there also, am everywhere, for I have filled all things. I stand ever the same immutable, before thou or aught that exists came into being, established on the topmost<sup>b</sup> and most ancient source of power, whence showers forth the birth of all that is, whence streams the tide of wisdom.” For I am He “ Who brought the fountain of 222 water from out the steep rock,”<sup>c</sup> as it says elsewhere (Deut. viii. 15). And Moses too gives his testimony to the unchangeableness of the deity when he says “ they saw the place where the God of Israel stood ” (Ex. xxiv. 10), for by the standing or establishment he indicates his immutability.

XXXIII. But 223 indeed so vast in its excess is the stability of the Deity that He imparts to chosen natures a share of His steadfastness to be their richest possession. For instance, He says of His covenant filled with His bounties, the highest law and principle, that is, which rules existent things, that this God-like image shall be firmly planted with the just soul as its pedestal. For so He declares when he says to Noah, “ I will establish My covenant on thee ” (Gen. ix. 11). And 224 these words have two further meanings. First that justice and God’s covenant are identical ; secondly that while the gifts bestowed by others are not the same as the recipients’, God gives not only the gifts, but in them gives the recipients to themselves. For He has given myself to me and everything that is to itself, since “ I will establish my covenant with thee ”

<sup>b</sup> The play on ἀκροτάτης and ἀκροτόμου cannot be reproduced in the translation.

<sup>c</sup> Or as E.V. “ rock of flint.”

PHILO

- 225 “ σοί <σε><sup>1</sup> δωρήσομαι.” σπουδάζουσι δὲ καὶ πάντες οἱ θεοφιλεῖς τὸν φιλοπραγμοσύνης χειμῶνα ἀποδιδράσκοντες, ἐν ᾧ σάλος καὶ κλύδων αἰεὶ κυκᾶται, τοῖς τῆς ἀρετῆς εὐδίοις καὶ ναυλοχωτάτοις
- 226 ἐνορμίζεσθαι λιμέσιν. οὐχ ὄρας, οἶα περὶ Ἀβραὰμ λέγεται τοῦ σοφοῦ, ὡς<sup>2</sup> ἔστιν “ ἔστως ἐνώπιον κυρίου ”; πότε γὰρ εἰκὸς δύνασθαι στήναι διάνοιαν μηκέθ’ ὡς ἐπὶ τρυτάνης ταλαντεύουσαν ἢ ὅτε ἀντικρὺς ἔστι θεοῦ, ὀρώσά τε καὶ ὀρωμένη;
- 227 διχόθεν<sup>3</sup> γὰρ αὐτῇ τὸ ἀρρεπές, ἐκ μὲν τοῦ ὄραν τὸν ἀσύγκριτον, ὅτι ὑπὸ τῶν ὁμοίων πραγμάτων οὐκ ἀνθέλκεται, ἐκ δὲ τοῦ ὄρασθαι, ὅτι ἦν ἀξίαν ἔκρινεν εἰς ὄψιν ὃ ἡγεμὼν τὴν ἑαυτοῦ<sup>4</sup> (ἐλθεῖν, τῷ) ἀρίστῳ μόνῳ προσεκλήρωσεν, αὐτῷ. καὶ Μωυσεῖ μέντοι θεοπρόπιον ἐχρήσθη τοιόνδε· “ σὺ αὐτοῦ στήθι μετ’ ἐμοῦ, ” δι’ οὗ τὰ λεχθέντα ἄμφω παρίσταται, τό τε μὴ κλίνεσθαι τὸν ἀστεῖον καὶ ἡ τοῦ
- 228 ὄντος περὶ πάντα βεβαιότης. XXXIV. καὶ γὰρ τῷ ὄντι τὸ τῷ θεῷ συνεγγίζον οἰκειοῦται κατὰ τὸ ἀτρεπτον αὐτοστατοῦν, καὶ ἡρεμήσας ὁ νοῦς, ἡλίκον ἔστιν ἀγαθὸν ἡρεμία, σαφῶς ἔγνω καὶ θαυμάσας
- [689] αὐτῆς | τὸ κάλλος ὑπέλαβεν, ὅτι ἡ θεῷ μόνῳ προσκεκλήρωται ἢ τῇ μεταξὺ φύσει θνητοῦ καὶ
- 229 ἀθανάτου γένους. φησὶ γοῦν· “ καὶ γὰρ εἰστήκειν ἀνὰ μέσον κυρίου καὶ ὑμῶν, ” οὐχὶ τοῦτο δηλῶν, <sup>1</sup> <σε>. This obvious correction is given by Mangey, but is not accepted by Wend.

<sup>2</sup> MSS. ὄρα.

<sup>3</sup> MSS. διεχθέν.

<sup>4</sup> MSS. ἑαυτῷ.

---

<sup>a</sup> I understand the thought of §§ 224, 225 to be: (1) the words “ I will make my covenant to stand to (or on) thee ” give Noah the stability of the covenant and make him

544

ON DREAMS, II. 225-229

is the same as "I will give thyself to thee."<sup>a</sup> And it 225 is the earnest desire of all the God-beloved to fly from the stormy waters of engrossing business with its perpetual turmoil of surge and billow, and anchor in the calm safe shelter of virtue's roadsteads.

See what is said of wise Abraham, how 226 he was "standing in front of God" (Gen. xviii. 22), for when should we expect a mind to stand and no longer sway as on the balance save when it is opposite God, seeing and being seen? For it gets its equipoise 227 from these two sources: from seeing, because when it sees the Incomparable it does not yield to the counter-pull of things like itself; from being seen, because the mind which the Ruler judges worthy to come within His sight He claims for the solely best, that is for Himself.

To Moses, too, this divine command was given: "Stand thou here with Me" (Deut. v. 31), and this brings out both the points suggested above, namely the unswerving quality of the man of worth, and the absolute stability of Him that is. XXXIV. For that which draws near to God 228 enters into affinity with what is, and through that immutability becomes self-standing.<sup>b</sup> And when the mind is at rest it recognizes clearly how great a blessing rest is, and, struck with wonder at its beauty, has the thought that it belongs either to God alone or to that form of being which is midway between mortal and immortal kind. Thus he says: "And 229 I stood between the Lord and you" (Deut. v. 5), part of it as the pedestal of the statue; (2) as Noah is pre-eminently ὁ δίκαιος, the covenant is also τὸ δίκαιον; (3) and as by the giving of the covenant τὸ δίκαιον is given to ὁ δίκαιος, Noah is given to himself.

<sup>b</sup> Or "here-standing." Philo has perhaps coined the word to express αὐτοῦ στῆθι.

PHILO

ὅτι ἐπὶ τῶν ἑαυτοῦ ποδῶν ἠρήρειστο, ἀλλ' ἐκεῖνο βουλόμενος ἐμφῆναι, ὅτι ἢ τοῦ σοφοῦ διάνοια χειμῶνων μὲν καὶ πολέμων ἀπαλλαγείσα, νηνέμω δὲ γαλήνη καὶ βαθεῖα εἰρήνη χρωμένη κρείττων μὲν 230 ἔστιν ἀνθρώπου, θεοῦ δὲ ἐλάττων. ὁ μὲν γὰρ ἀγελαῖος ἀνθρώπειος νοῦς σείεται<sup>1</sup> καὶ κυκᾶται πρὸς τῶν ἐπιτυχόντων, ὁ δ' ἄτε μακάριος καὶ εὐδαίμων ἀμέτοχος κακῶν· μεθόριος δὲ ὁ ἀστείος, ὡς κυρίως εἰπεῖν μήτε θεὸν αὐτὸν εἶναι μήτε ἄνθρωπον, ἀλλὰ τῶν ἄκρων ἐφαπτόμενον, ἀνθρωπότητι μὲν θνητοῦ 231 γένους, ἀρετῇ δὲ ἀφθάρτου. τούτῳ παραπλήσιόν ἔστι καὶ τὸ χρησθὲν λόγιον ἐπὶ τοῦ μεγάλου ἱερέως· “ ὅταν ” γάρ φησιν “ εἰσὶν εἰς τὰ ἅγια τῶν ἁγίων, ἄνθρωπος οὐκ ἔσται, ἕως ἂν ἐξέλθῃ.” εἰ δὲ μὴ γίνεται τότε ἄνθρωπος, δῆλον ὅτι οὐδὲ θεός, ἀλλὰ λειτουργὸς θεοῦ,<sup>2</sup> κατὰ μὲν τὸ θνητὸν γενέσει, κατὰ 232 δὲ τὸ ἀθάνατον οἰκειούμενος τῷ ἀγενήτῳ. τὴν δὲ μέσσην τάξιν εἴληχεν, ἕως<sup>3</sup> ἂν ἐξέλθῃ πάλιν εἰς τὰ τοῦ σώματος καὶ τῆς σαρκὸς οἰκεία. καὶ πέφυκεν οὕτως ἔχειν· ὅταν μὲν ἐξ ἔρωτος θείου κατασχεθεῖς ὁ νοῦς, συντείνας ἑαυτὸν ἄχρι τῶν ἀδύτων, ὄρμη καὶ σπουδῇ πάσῃ χρώμενος προέρχεται, θεοφορούμενος ἐπιλέλησται μὲν τῶν ἄλλων, ἐπιλέλησται δὲ καὶ ἑαυτοῦ, μόνου (δὲ) μέμνηται καὶ ἐξήρτηται τοῦ δορυφορουμένου καὶ θεραπευομένου, ᾧ τὰς ἱεράς καὶ ἀναφείς καθαγιαζῶν ἀρετὰς ἐκθυμιᾷ.
 233 ἐπειδὴν δὲ στή (τὸ) ἐνθουσιῶδες καὶ ὁ πολὺς ἡμερος χαλάσῃ, παλινδρομήσας ἀπὸ τῶν θείων

<sup>1</sup> MSS. ἕεται.

<sup>2</sup> Wend. conjectures δῆλον <δ> ὅτι οὐδὲ θεός, τί ἄλλο ἢ λειτουργός.

<sup>3</sup> MSS. εἴληχέναι ὡς.

* The repetition of this text in the same treatise in two

ON DREAMS, II. 229-233

where he does not mean that he stood firm upon his feet, but wishes to indicate that the mind of the Sage, released from storms and wars, with calm still weather and profound peace around it, is superior to men, but less than God. For the human mind of the common 230 sort shakes and swirls under the force of chance events, while the other, in virtue of its blessedness and felicity, is exempt from evil. The good man indeed is on the border-line, so that we may say, quite properly, that he is neither God nor man, but bounded at either end by the two, by mortality because of his manhood, by incorruption because of his virtue. Similar to this is the oracle given about the high 231 priest: "When he enters," it says, "into the Holy of Holies, he will not be a man until he comes out" (Lev. xvi. 17).<sup>a</sup> And if he then becomes no man, clearly neither is he God, but God's minister, through the mortal in him in affinity with creation, through the immortal with the uncreated, and he retains this 232 midway place until he comes out again to the realm of body and flesh. That it should be so is true to nature. When the mind is mastered by the love of the divine, when it strains its powers to reach the inmost shrine, when it puts forth every effort and ardour on its forward march, under the divine impelling force it forgets all else, forgets itself, and fixes its thoughts and memories on Him alone Whose attendant and servant it is, to whom it dedicates not a palpable offering, but incense, the incense of consecrated virtues. But when the inspiration is 233 stayed, and the strong yearning abates, it hastens back from the divine and becomes a man and meets different interpretations, in § 189 of the Logos, here of the Perfect Man, is unusual, if not unprecedented.

PHILO

ἄνθρωπος γίνεται, τοῖς ἀνθρωπίνοις ἐντυχῶν, ἅπερ ἐν τοῖς προπυλαίοις ἐφήδρευεν, ἵνα αὐτὸ μόνον ἐκκύψαντα ἐνδοθεν ἐξαρπάσῃ. XXXV.

234 τὸν μὲν οὖν τέλειον οὔτε θεὸν οὔτε ἄνθρωπον ἀναγράφει Μωυσῆς, ἀλλ', ὡς ἔφην,<sup>1</sup> μεθόριον τῆς ἀγενήτου καὶ φθαρτῆς φύσεως· τὸν δὲ προκόπτοντα πάλιν ἐν τῇ μεταξύ χώρα ζώντων καὶ τεθνηκότων τάττει, ζῶντας μὲν καλῶν τοὺς συμβιοῦντας φρονήσει, τεθνηκότας δὲ τοὺς ἀφροσύνη χαίροντας.

235 λέγεται γὰρ ἐπὶ Ἀαρὼν ὅτι “ ἔστη ἀνὰ μέσον τῶν τεθνηκότων (καὶ τῶν ζώντων), καὶ ἐκόπασεν ἡ θραῦσις.” ὁ γὰρ προκόπτων οὔτε ἐν τοῖς τεθνηκόσι τὸν ἀρετῆς βίον ἐξετάζεται, πόθον καὶ ζῆλον ἔχων

[690] τοῦ καλοῦ, οὔτε ἐν τοῖς | μετὰ τῆς ἄκρας καὶ τελείας ζῶσιν εὐδαιμονίας—ἔτι γὰρ πρὸς τὸ πέρασ

236 ἐνδεῖ,—ἀλλ' ἐκατέρων ἐφάπτεται. διὸ καὶ κυρίως ἐπιλέγεται τὸ “ ἐκόπασεν ἡ θραῦσις,” ἀλλ' οὐκ ἐπαύσατο· παύεται μὲν γὰρ ἐπὶ τῶν τελείων τὰ περιθραύοντα καὶ κατακλῶντα καὶ καταγνύντα τὴν ψυχὴν, μειοῦται δὲ ἐπὶ τῶν προκοπτόντων ὡς ἂν αὐτὸ μόνον ἀνακοπτόμενα καὶ στελλόμενα.

237 XXXVI. Τῆς οὖν στάσεως καὶ ἰδρύσεως καὶ τῆς ἐν ταύτῳ κατὰ τὸ ἀμετάβλητον καὶ ἄτρεπτον εἰς αἰὲ μνηῆς πρῶτον μὲν ὑπαρχούσης περὶ τὸ ὄν, ἔπειτα δὲ περὶ τὸν τοῦ ὄντος λόγον, ὃν διαθήκην ἐκάλεσε, τρίτον δὲ περὶ τὸν σοφὸν καὶ τέταρτον περὶ τὸν προκόπτοντα, τί παθῶν ὁ φαῦλος καὶ πάσαις ἀραῖς ἔνοχος νοῦς ὠήθη μόνος ἴστασθαι δύνασθαι, φορούμενος ὥσπερ ἐν κατακλυσμῷ καὶ κατασυρόμενος ταῖς τῶν ἐπιρρεόντων διὰ τοῦ <sup>1</sup> MSS. ἔφη.

ON DREAMS, II. 233-237

the human interests which lay waiting in the vestibule ready to seize upon it, should it but shew its face for a moment from within.

XXXV. Moses 234

then describes the perfect man as neither God nor man, but, as I have said already, on the border-line between the uncreated and the perishing form of being. While, on the other hand, the man who is on the path of progress is placed by him in the region between the living and the dead, meaning by the former those who have wisdom for their life-mate and by the latter those who rejoice in folly, for we are told 235 of Aaron that "he stood between the dead and the living, and the breaking abated" (Num. xvi. 48). For the man of progress does not rank either among those dead to the life of virtue, since his desires aspire to moral excellence, nor yet among those who live in supreme and perfect happiness, since he still falls short of the consummation, but is in touch with both. And therefore he quite properly concludes with the 236 phrase "the breaking abated," not "ceased." For in perfection all the influences which break and crush and fracture the soul do cease, but in the stage of progress they diminish, being so to speak cut down and confined, but nothing more.

XXXVI. We find, then, that stability or fixity or 237 permanent immobility, in virtue of its immutable and unchangeable quality, subsists as an attribute primarily to the Existing Being, secondly to His Word which He calls His covenant, thirdly to the Sage, and fourthly to the man of gradual progress. What then could make the wicked mind, fit subject for every manner of curse, think that he could stand alone, when he is carried to and fro as in a flood and swept down by eddy after eddy of the torrent of

PHILO

- νεκροφορουμένου σώματος δίναις ἐπαλλήλοις; 238 “ ὤμην ” γάρ φησιν “ ἐστάναι ἐπὶ τὸ χεῖλος τοῦ ποταμοῦ. ” λόγον δὲ συμβολικῶς ποταμὸν εἶναι φάμεν, ἐπειδὴ ἐκάτερος ἔξω τε φέρεται καὶ ῥέων συντόνω<sup>1</sup> χρῆται τῷ τάχει καὶ τοτὲ μὲν εὐφορεῖ<sup>2</sup> πλημμύραις ὁ μὲν ὕδατος, ὁ δὲ ῥημάτων καὶ ὀνομάτων, τοτὲ<sup>3</sup> δὲ ἀφορεῖ χαλῶμενος καὶ συνίζων· 239 καὶ ὠφελουσι μέντοι ὁ μὲν ἄρδων τὰς ἀρούρας, ὁ δὲ τὰς τῶν φιληκόων ψυχάς, καὶ ἔστιν ὅτε βλάπτουσι κυμήναντες, ὁ μὲν τὴν ὄμορον γῆν ἐπικλύσας, ὁ δὲ ἀνακυκῆσας καὶ συγγέας τὸν τῶν οὐ προσ-240 ἐχόντων λογισμόν. οὗτος μὲν εἰκάζεται ποταμῶ. διττὴ δὲ λόγου φύσις, ἡ μὲν ἀμείνων, ἡ δὲ χείρων, ἀμείνων μὲν ἢ ὠφελουσα, χείρων δὲ κατὰ τὸ 241 ἀναγκαῖον ἢ βλάπτουσα. παραδείγματα δὲ ἐκατέρας τοῖς δυναμένοις ὄραν ἀνέθηκε Μωϋσῆς ἀριδηλότατα· “ ποταμὸς ” γάρ φησι “ πορεύεται ἐξ Ἐδέμ ποτίζειν τὸν παράδεισον· ἐκεῖθεν ἀφ-242 ορίζεται εἰς τέσσαρας ἀρχάς. ” καλεῖ δὲ τὴν μὲν τοῦ ὄντος σοφίαν Ἐδέμ, ἧς ἐρμηνεῖα τρυφή, διότι, οἶμαι, ἐντρυφήμα καὶ θεοῦ σοφία καὶ σοφίας θεός, ἐπεὶ καὶ ἐν ὕμνοις ἄδεται· “ κατατρυφήσον τοῦ κυρίου. ” κάτεισι δὲ ὡσπερ ἀπὸ πηγῆς τῆς σοφίας ποταμοῦ τρόπον ὁ θεῖος λόγος, ἵνα ἄρδῃ καὶ ποτίξῃ τὰ ὀλύμπια καὶ οὐράνια φιλαρέτων ψυχῶν βλα-243 στήματα καὶ φυτά, ὡσανεὶ παράδεισον. ὁ δὲ ἱερός οὗτος λόγος ἀφορίζεται εἰς τέσσαρας ἀρχάς, λέγω δὲ εἰς τὰς τέσσαρας ἀρετὰς σχίζεται, ὧν ἐκάστη βασιλὶς ἐστι· τὸ γὰρ ἀφορίζεσθαι εἰς ἀρχάς οὐ τοπικοῖς ὄροις,<sup>4</sup> ἀλλὰ βασιλεία ἔοικεν, ἢ ἐπιδείξας

<sup>1</sup> MSS. εὐτόνω.

<sup>2</sup> MSS. ἐμφορεῖ.

<sup>3</sup> MSS. ὅτε.

ON DREAMS, II. 237-243

which that dead burden the body is the channel? For "I thought," he says, "that I stood on the edge 238 of the river" (Gen. xli. 17). River, I submit, is here a symbol of speech, since both flow outward and with a swift strong current, and both are sometimes fruitful in producing inundations, water in one case, words in the other, sometimes unfruitful when they slacken or subside. And both may be beneficial by 239 irrigating, one the fields, the other the souls of docile hearers; both at times do harm, the river by flooding the adjoining land, speech by reducing the mental powers of the inattentive to chaos and confusion. In this way speech is like a river, but it has a twofold 240 nature better and worse, the better beneficial, the worse necessarily injurious. Moses has 241 provided examples of both, of the plainest kind to those who have the gift of vision. "A river," he says, "goes out of Eden to water the garden; thence it separates into four heads" (Gen. ii. 10), and he 242 gives the name of Eden, which is by interpretation "delight," to the wisdom of the Existent, because no doubt wisdom is a source of delight to God and God to wisdom, and so in the Psalms the singer bids us to "delight in the Lord" (Ps. xxxvii. (xxxvi.) 4). The Divine Word descends from the fountain of wisdom like a river to lave and water the heaven-sent celestial shoots and plants of virtue-loving souls which are as a garden. And this holy Word is 243 "separated into four heads," which means that it is split up into the four virtues, each of which is royal. For separation into heads or rules is not like separation into local regions but into kingdoms, and when he <sup>4</sup> MSS. τοπικὸὺς ἕρους. Possibly we might read the more logical οὐ <τῷ εἰς> τοπικὸὺς ἕρους ἀλλὰ βασιλείας ἔοικεν.

---

PHILO

- [691] τὰς ἀρετὰς<sup>1</sup> εὐθὺς ἀποφήνη | καὶ τὸν χρώμενον αὐταῖς σοφὸν βασιλέα, κεχειροτονημένον οὐ πρὸς ἀνθρώπων, ἀλλ' ὑπὸ τῆς ἀψευδοῦς καὶ ἀδεκάστου 244 καὶ μόνης ἐλευθέρας φύσεως. λέγουσι γὰρ τῷ Ἀβραάμ οἱ κατιδόντες αὐτοῦ τὸ ἀστείον· “ βασιλεὺς παρὰ θεοῦ εἶ σὺ ἐν ἡμῖν,” δόγμα τιθέμενοι. τοῖς περὶ φιλοσοφίαν διατρίβουσιν, ὅτι μόνος ὁ σοφὸς ἄρχων καὶ βασιλεὺς καὶ ἡ ἀρετὴ ἀνυπεύθυνος ἀρχή τε καὶ βασιλεία.
- 245 XXXVII. Τοῦτον τὸν λόγον εἰκάσας ποταμῶ τις τῶν ἐταίρων Μωυσέως ἐν ὕμνοις εἶπεν· “ ὁ ποταμὸς τοῦ θεοῦ ἐπληρώθη ὑδάτων.” καί(τοι) τινὰ τῶν ἐπὶ γῆς ρεόντων ἄλογον κυριολογεῖσθαι· ἀλλ', ὡς ἔοικε, πλήρη τοῦ σοφίας νάματος τὸν θεῖον λόγον διασυνίστησι, μηδὲν ἔρημον καὶ κενὸν ἑαυτοῦ μέρος ἔχοντα, . . .<sup>2</sup> δέ, ὡς εἶπέ τις, ὄλον δι' ὄλων ἀναχεόμενον καὶ αἰρόμενον εἰς ὕψος διὰ τὴν συνεχῆ καὶ ἐπάλληλον τῆς ἀενάου πηγῆς 246 ἐκείνης φοράν. ἔστι δὲ καὶ ἕτερον ἄσμα τοιοῦτον· “ τὸ ὄρημα τοῦ ποταμοῦ εὐφραίνει τὴν πόλιν τοῦ θεοῦ.” ποίαν πόλιν; ἢ γὰρ νῦν οὐσα ἱερὰ πόλις, ἐν ἣ καὶ ἅγιος νεὼς ἔστι, μακρὰν ὡσπερ θαλάττης καὶ ποταμῶν συνώκισται· ὡς δῆλον εἶναι, ὅτι τοῦ προφανοῦς ἕτερόν τι βούλεται 247 δι' ὑπονοιῶν παραστήσαι. τῷ γὰρ ὄντι τοῦ θεοῦ λόγου ρύμη * * *<sup>3</sup> καὶ συνεχῶς μεθ' ὀρητῆς ἐν<sup>4</sup>

<sup>1</sup> Perhaps ἀρετὰς <ἀρχὰς>, “declares the virtues to be sovereignties,” an easy correction which will bring out the sense more clearly.

<sup>2</sup> The lacuna in the mss. here was filled by Hoeschel, whom Mangey and Wend. have followed, with μᾶλλον. But ὡς εἶπέ τις is regularly used by Philo after some quoted word or phrase. See App. p. 610.

points to virtues he means thereby to declare that the Sage who possesses them is a king, a king appointed not by men but by nature, the infallible, the incorruptible, the only free elector. Thus it was 244 said to Abraham by those who saw his worthiness : " thou art a king from God with us " (Gen. xxiii. 6).<sup>a</sup> And thus they laid down the doctrine for the students of philosophy, that the Sage alone is a ruler and king, and virtue a rule and a kingship whose authority is final.<sup>b</sup>

XXXVII. It is this Word which one of Moses' 245 company compared to a river, when he said in the Psalms " the river of God is full of water " (Ps. lxv. (lxiv.) 10); where surely it were senseless to suppose that the words can properly refer to any of the rivers of earth. No, he is representing the Divine Word as full of the stream of wisdom, with no part of it empty or devoid of itself but a . . . , as it has been called, filled through and through with the influx and lifted up on high by the constant never-failing outflow from that perennial fountain.

And there is another psalm 246 which runs thus : " The strong current of the river makes glad the city of God " (Ps. xlvi. (xlv.) 4). What city ? For the existing holy city, where the sacred temple also is, does not stand in the neighbourhood of rivers any more than of the sea. Thus it is clear that he writes to shew us allegorically something different from the obvious. It is perfectly true 247 that the impetuous rush of the divine word borne along <swiftly> and ceaselessly with its strong and

<sup>a</sup> Cf. De Abr. 261.

<sup>b</sup> See De Mut. 152 and note.

<sup>3</sup> MSS. ῥύμην, then λ and lacuna of six to eight letters in A. I suggest λαιψηρῶς. See App. p. 610. <sup>4</sup> MSS. μεθορμίσαι.

PHILO

- τάξει φερομένη πάντα διὰ πάντων ἀναχεῖ τε<sup>1</sup> καὶ 248 εὐφραίνει. πόλιν γὰρ θεοῦ καθ' ἓνα μὲν τρόπον τὸν κόσμον καλεῖ, ὃς ὅλον τὸν κρατῆρα τοῦ θείου πόματος<sup>2</sup> δεξάμενος (ἡκρατί)σατο<sup>3</sup> καὶ γανωθεὶς ἀναφαιρέτου καὶ ἀσβέστου τῆς εἰς ἅπαντα τὸν [ἐπὶ τὸν] αἰῶνα εὐφροσύνης ἐπέλαχε, καθ' ἕτερον δὲ τὴν ψυχὴν τοῦ σοφοῦ, ἣ λέγεται καὶ ἐμπερι-πατεῖν ὁ θεὸς ὡς ἐν πόλει. “ περιπατήσω ” γάρ 249 φησιν “ ἐν ὑμῖν, καὶ ἔσομαι [ἐν] ὑμῶν<sup>4</sup> θεός.” καὶ ψυχῇ δ' εὐδαίμονι τὸ ἱερώτατον ἔκπωμα προτεινούσῃ<sup>5</sup> τὸν ἑαυτῆς λογισμὸν τίς ἐπιχεῖ τοὺς ἱεροὺς κυάθους τῆς πρὸς ἀλήθειαν εὐφροσύνης, ὅτι μὴ (ὁ) οἰνοχόος τοῦ θεοῦ καὶ συμποσίαρχος λόγος, οὐ διαφέρων τοῦ πόματος, ἀλλ' αὐτὸς ἄκρατος ὢν, τὸ γάνωμα, τὸ ἥδυσμα, ἡ ἀνάχυσις, ἡ εὐθυμία, τὸ χαρᾶς, τὸ εὐφροσύνης ἀμβρόσιον, ἵνα καὶ αὐτοὶ ποιητικοῖς ὀνόμασι χρῆσώμεθα, φάρμακον; 250 XXXVIII. ἡ δὲ θεοῦ πόλις ὑπὸ Ἑβραίων Ἱερουσαλήμ καλεῖται, ἧς μεταληφθὲν τοῦνομα ὄρασις [692] ἔστιν εἰρήνης. ὥστε μὴ ζήτει τὴν τοῦ | ὄντος πόλιν ἐν κλίμασι<sup>6</sup> γῆς—οὐ γὰρ ἐκ ξύλων ἢ λίθων δεδημιούργηται,—ἀλλ' ἐν ψυχῇ ἀπολέμῳ καὶ ὀξύδορκούσῃ (τέλος)<sup>7</sup> προτεθειμένη τὸν [δέ] θεω-251 ρητικὸν καὶ εἰρηναῖον βίον. ἐπεὶ καὶ τίνα σεμνό-τερον καὶ ἀγιώτερον εὗροι τις ἂν οἶκον ἐν τοῖς οὐσι θεῶ ἢ φιλοθεάμονα διάνοιαν, πάνθ' ὄραν ἐπειγομένην καὶ μηδὲ ὄναρ στάσεως ἢ ταραχῆς ἐφιεμένην; 252 ὑπηχεῖ δέ μοι πάλιν τὸ εἰωθὸς ἀφανῶς ἐνομιλεῖν <sup>1</sup> MSS. ἀναχεῖται.

<sup>2</sup> MSS. ποταμὸς.

<sup>3</sup> MSS. σατο preceded by lacuna of three to four letters: Mangey <ἡρῶ>σατο.

<sup>4</sup> MSS. ἐν ὑμῖν.

<sup>5</sup> MSS. προτείνουσι.

<sup>6</sup> MSS. κλήμασι.

<sup>7</sup> MSS.: lacuna of five to six letters in A.

ON DREAMS, II. 247-252

ordered current does overflow and gladden the whole universe through and through. For God's city is the name in one sense for the world which has received the whole bowl, wherein the divine draught is mixed, and feasted thereon and exultingly taken for its possession the gladness which remains for all time never to be removed or quenched. In another sense he uses this name for the soul of the Sage, in which God is said to walk as in a city. For "I will walk in you," he says, "and will be your God" (Lev. xxvi. 12). And, when the happy soul holds out the sacred goblet of its own reason, who is it that pours into it the holy cupfuls of true gladness, but the Word, the Cup-bearer of God and Master of the feast, who is also none other than the draught which he pours—his own self free from all dilution, the delight, the sweetening, the exhilaration, the merriment, the ambrosian drug (to take for our own use the poet's terms) whose medicine gives joy and gladness?

XXXVIII. Now the city of God is called in the Hebrew Jerusalem and its name when translated is "vision of peace." Therefore do not seek for the city of the Existing among the regions of the earth, since it is not wrought of wood or stone, but in a soul, in which there is no warring, whose sight is keen, which has set before it as its aim to live in contemplation and peace. For what grander or holier house could we find for God in the whole range of existence than the vision-seeking mind, the mind which is eager to see all things and never even in its dreams has a wish for faction or turmoil? I hear once more the voice of the invisible spirit, the familiar

PHILO

- πνεῦμα ἀόρατον καὶ φησιν· ὦ οὗτος, ἕοικας ἀνεπιστήμων εἶναι καὶ μεγάλου καὶ περιμαχίτου πράγματος, ὅπερ ἀφθόνως—πολλὰ γὰρ καὶ ἄλλα
- 253 εὐκαίρως<sup>1</sup> ὑφηγησάμην—ἀναδιδάξω. ἴσθι δὴ, (ὦ) γενναίε, ὅτι θεὸς μόνος ἢ ἀψευδестаτή καὶ πρὸς ἀλήθειάν ἐστιν εἰρήνη, ἢ δὲ γεννητὴ καὶ φθαρτὴ οὐσία πᾶσα συνεχῆς πόλεμος. καὶ γὰρ ὁ μὲν θεὸς ἐκούσιον, ἀνάγκη δὲ ἢ οὐσία· ὃς ἂν οὖν ἰσχύσῃ πόλεμον μὲν καὶ ἀνάγκην καὶ γένησιν καὶ φθορὰν καταλιπεῖν, αὐτομολῆσαι δὲ πρὸς τὸ ἀγένητον, πρὸς τὸ ἀφθαρτον, πρὸς τὸ ἐκούσιον, πρὸς εἰρήνην, λέγοιτ' ἂν ἐνδίκως ἐνδιαίτημα καὶ πόλις εἶναι θεοῦ.
- 254 μηδὲν οὖν διαφερέτω σοι ἢ ὄρασιν εἰρήνης ἢ ὄρασιν θεοῦ τὸ αὐτὸ ὑποκείμενον ὀνομάζειν, ὅτι δὲ τῶν πολυωνύμων τοῦ ὄντος δυνάμεων οὐ θιασῶτις μόνον, ἀλλὰ καὶ ἔξαρχός ἐστιν εἰρήνη.<sup>2</sup>
- 255 XXXIX. Καὶ Ἀβραὰμ μέντοι τῷ σοφῷ δώσειν φησὶ κλῆρον γῆς “ ἀπὸ τοῦ ποταμοῦ (Αἰγύπτου ἕως τοῦ ποταμοῦ) τοῦ μεγάλου Εὐφράτου,” οὐ χώρας<sup>3</sup> ἀποτομὴν μᾶλλον ἢ τὴν περὶ αὐτοὺς ἡμᾶς ἀμείνω μοῖραν. Αἰγύπτου μὲν γὰρ ἀπεικάζεται ποταμῷ τὸ ἡμέτερον σῶμα καὶ τὰ ἐν αὐτῷ καὶ δι' αὐτοῦ<sup>4</sup> ἐγγινόμενα πάθη, τῷ δὲ Εὐφράτῃ (ψυχῇ)
- 256 καὶ τὰ φίλα ταύτη. δόγμα δὴ τίθεται βιωφελέστατον καὶ συνεκτικώτατον, ὅτι ὁ σπουδαῖος κλῆρον ἔλαχε ψυχὴν καὶ τὰς ψυχῆς ἀρετάς, ὥσπερ ὁ φαῦλος ἔμπαλιν σῶμα καὶ τὰς σώματος καὶ διὰ
- 257 σώματος κακίας. τὸ δὲ ἀπὸ δύο<sup>4</sup> δηλοῖ, ἐν μὲν

<sup>1</sup> MSS. ἀκαίρως.

<sup>2</sup> MSS. θιασῶτης and εἰρήνης which Wend. prints, though suggesting the corrections here printed. The second might perhaps be taken without the first, and so Mangey.

secret tenant, saying, " Friend, it would seem that there is a matter great and precious of which thou knowest nothing, and this I will ungrudgingly shew thee, for many other well-timed lessons have I given thee. Know then, good friend, that God alone is <sup>253</sup> the real veritable peace, free from all illusion, but the whole substance of things<sup>a</sup> created only to perish is one constant war. For God is a being of free will ; the world of things is Fatality.<sup>a</sup> Whosoever then has the strength to forsake war and Fatality, creation and perishing, and cross over to the camp of the uncreated, of the imperishable, of free-will, of peace, may justly be called the dwelling-place and city of God. Let it be then a matter of indifference that <sup>254</sup> you should give to the same object two different names, vision of God and vision of peace. For indeed the Potencies of the Existent have many names, and of that company peace is not only a member but a leader."

XXXIX. Again God promises wise Abraham a <sup>255</sup> portion of land " from the river of Egypt to the great river Euphrates " (Gen. xv. 18), not meaning a section of country, but rather the better part in ourselves. For our body and the passions engendered in it or by it are likened to the river of Egypt, but the soul and what the soul loves to the Euphrates. Here he <sup>256</sup> lays down a doctrine of the greatest importance and value to life, namely, that the good man has received for his portion soul and the soul's virtues, even as the bad on the other hand has body and the vices which belong to and arise through the body. Now " from " <sup>257</sup>

<sup>a</sup> Or " our whole existence " . . . " our existence is ruled by necessity."

<sup>3</sup> MSS. οὐχ ὁρᾶς.

<sup>4</sup> MSS. αὐτὸ.

PHILO

τὸ σὺν ἐκείνῳ ἀφ' οὗ λέγεται, ἕτερον δὲ (τὸ) χωρὶς αὐτοῦ. ὅταν μὲν γὰρ λέγωμεν ἀπὸ πρώτης ἄχρι ἐσπέρας (ὥρας) εἶναι δώδεκα καὶ ἀπὸ νεομηνίας ἄχρι τριακάδος ἡμέρας τριάκοντα, συγκατατάττομεν τὴν τε πρώτην ὥραν καὶ τὴν νεομηνίαν·

[693] ὅταν δέ τις ἀπὸ τῆς πόλεως φῆ | τὸν ἀγρὸν ἀπέχειν σταδίου τρεῖς ἢ τέτταρας, δίχα τῆς πόλεως δήπου

258 φησίν. ὥστε καὶ νῦν τὸ “ἀπὸ τοῦ ποταμοῦ Αἰγύπτου” νομιστέον τὸ χωρὶς ἐκείνου παραλαμβάνεσθαι· βούλεται γὰρ διοικίσας ἡμᾶς τῶν σωματικῶν, ἅπερ ἐν ῥύσει καὶ φορᾶ<sup>1</sup> φθειρομένη καὶ φθειρούση θεωρεῖται, κλήρον ψυχῆς λαβεῖν μετὰ τῶν ἀφθάρτων καὶ ἀφθαρσίας ἀξίων ἀρετῶν.

259 οὕτω μέντοι τὸ εἰκάσθαι ποταμῶ λόγον ἐπαινετὸν ἰχνηλατοῦντες<sup>2</sup> εὐρήκαμεν. ὁ δὲ ψεκτὸς αὐτὸς ἄρα ἦν ὁ Αἰγύπτιος ποταμός, ἀνάγωγός τις καὶ ἀμαθής, ὡς ἔπος εἰπεῖν, ἀψυχος λόγος· οὗ χάριν καὶ εἰς αἷμα μεταβάλλει, τρέφειν οὐ δυνάμενος—ὁ γὰρ ἀπαιδευσίας λόγος οὐ πότιμος—καὶ εὐτοκεῖ μέντοι βατράχοις ἀναίμοις καὶ ἀψύχοις, καινὸν καὶ τραχὺν ἦχον, ἄλγημα ἀκοῆς, 260 ἀπηχοῦσι. λέγεται δέ, ὅτι καὶ οἱ ἐν αὐτῷ πάντες ἰχθύες ἐφθάρησαν, οἱ συμβολικῶς εἰσι τὰ νοήματα· ταῦτα γὰρ ἐννήχεται καὶ ἐγγίνεται ὡς ἐν ποταμῶ τῷ λόγῳ, ζῶις ἐοικότα καὶ ψυχοῦντα αὐτόν· ἐν δὲ ἀπαιδεύτῳ λόγῳ τέθνηκε τὰ ἐνθυμήματα· συνετὸν γὰρ οὐδὲν ἔστιν εὐρεῖν, ἀλλὰ κολῳῶν τινὰς ἀκόσμους καὶ ἀμετροεπεῖς, ὡς εἶπέ τις, φωνάς.

<sup>1</sup> So Mangey for mss. φθορᾶ, which Wend. retains.

<sup>2</sup> mss. ὀχνηλατοῦντες.

ON DREAMS, II. 257-260

has two meanings, one where the thing from which what we are describing starts is included, the other where it is excluded. For when we say that there are twelve hours from early morning to evening, or thirty days from the new moon to the end of the month, we take into our reckoning the first hours in the former case and the new moon itself in the latter. But when one says that the field is three or four stades distant from the city, clearly he does not include the city. So in this case we must suppose 258 that in the phrase "from the river of Egypt" "from" is used in this exclusive sense. For Moses would have us remove right away from bodily things, which present themselves amid restless flux and motion, which destroys and is destroyed, and receive the soul as our heritage with the virtues which are indestructible and worthy to be such. Thus 259 our investigation has shewn what was meant when the speech which deserves praise was compared to a river. It follows that speech which calls for censure was none other than the river of Egypt—speech, that is, which is ill-trained, ignorant and practically soulless. And therefore it changes into blood (Ex. vii. 20), since it cannot provide nourishment, for the speech of indiscipline none can drink. And further it is prolific of frogs, bloodless, soulless creatures, whose cry is a strange harsh noise, painful to the hearers. We are told, too, that all the fish in it died 260 (ibid. 21), and by fish thoughts are symbolized. For thoughts swim and are bred in speech as in a river, and like living creatures give vitality to it. But set in undisciplined speech ideas die. For in such speech there is no sense to be found, only "bawling" cries disordered and "unregulated," as the verse has it.<sup>a</sup>

PHILO

- 261 XL. Περὶ μὲν δὴ τούτων ἄλις. ἐπεὶ δὲ οὐ μόνον στάσιν καὶ ποταμόν, ἀλλὰ καὶ χεῖλη ποταμοῦ φαντασιωθῆναι ὁμολογεῖ φάσκων· “ ὤμην ἐστάναι παρὰ τὸ χεῖλος τοῦ ποταμοῦ,” ἀναγκαῖον ἂν εἶη
- 262 καὶ περὶ χεῖλους τὰ καίρια ὑπομνήσαι.<sup>1</sup> φαίνεται τοίνυν ἔνεκα δυεῖν τῶν ἀναγκαιοτάτων ἢ φύσις χεῖλη ζώοις καὶ μάλιστα ἀνθρώποις ἀρμόσασθαι· ἐνὸς μὲν ἡσυχίας—ἔρυμα γὰρ ταῦτα καὶ φραγμὸς ὀχυρώτατος φωνῆς,—ἐτέρου δὲ ἐρμηνείας· διὰ γὰρ τούτων τὸ τῶν λόγων νᾶμα φέρεται<sup>2</sup>· συναχθέντων μὲν γὰρ ἐπέχεται, φέρεσθαι δ’ ἀμήχανον
- 263 μὴ διαστάντων. ἐκ δὲ τούτου γυμνάζει καὶ συγκροτεῖ πρὸς ἄμφω, τὸ λέγειν καὶ ἡσυχάζειν, ἑκατέρου τὸν ἀρμόττοντα καιρὸν παραφυλάττοντας. οἷον ἀκοῆς ἄξιόν τι λέγεται; πρόσεχε μηδὲν ἐναντιούμενος ἐν ἡσυχίᾳ κατὰ τὸ Μωυσέως παρ-
- 264 ἀγγελμα, τὸ “ σιώπα καὶ ἄκουε.” τῶν γὰρ εἰς τὰς ἐριστικὰς γνωσιμαχίας ἀφικνουμένων οὐδ’ ἂν εἰς κυρίως οὔτε λέγειν οὔτ’ ἀκούειν νομισθεῖη, τῷ
- 265 δὲ μέλλοντι πρὸς ἀλήθειαν * * *<sup>3</sup> ὠφέλιμον. πάλιν ὅταν ἴδῃς ἐν τοῖς τοῦ βίου πολέμοις καὶ κακοῖς τὴν ἰλεω τοῦ θεοῦ χεῖρα καὶ δύναμιν ὑπερέχουσαν καὶ προασπίζουσαν, ἡρέμησον· οὐ γὰρ δεῖται |
- [694] συμμαχίας ὁ βοηθὸς οὗτος. ἔστι δὲ καὶ τούτου δεῖγμα τὸ<sup>4</sup> ἐν ταῖς ἱεραῖς ἀναγραφαῖς κατακείμενον, τὸ “ κύριος πολεμήσει ὑπὲρ ὑμῶν, καὶ ὑμεῖς
- 266 σιγήσεσθε.” εἰάν γε μὴν ἴδῃς τὰ γνήσια ἔγγωνα καὶ πρωτότοκα Αἰγύπτου φθειρόμενα, τὸ ἐπι-

<sup>1</sup> MSS. ὑπονοῆσαι.<sup>2</sup> MSS. ἀναφέρεται.<sup>3</sup> The MSS. have here a lacuna of, in A, sixteen to eighteen letters, for which Wend. suggests ἀκούειν τὸ ἡσυχάζειν. I

XL. Enough on these points ; but since in the 261 words " I thought I stood by the edge of the river " he declares that his dream contained not only a " standing " and a " river," but also the edges or " lips " of a river, I am bound to make such observations as are suitable on the subject of " lip." Nature 262 clearly has provided animals and men in particular with lips for two most necessary purposes. One is to keep silence ; for the lips form the strongest possible fence and barrier for confining sound. The other is to give expression to thought ; for the stream of words flows through the lips. When they are closed that stream is held back, and until they part it cannot take its course. In this way the lips 263 train and exercise us for both purposes, speech and silence, and they teach us to watch for the proper occasion for either. For example : Is something said worth hearing ? Oppose it not but pay attention silently according to the command of Moses, " Be still and hear " (Deut. xxvii. 9). None of those who 264 enter upon wordy controversies can be properly held either to speak or to hear ; he who would do (either) in the true sense will find (silence) useful. Again when 265 amid the wars and ills of life you see the merciful hand and power of God extended over you as a shield, be still. For that Champion needs no ally, and we have a proof of this in the words which Holy Scripture keeps amid its treasures, " The Lord shall war for you and ye shall be silent " (Ex. xiv. 14). Once more, 266 if you see the firstborn of Egypt, true children of their parents, perishing (Ex. xi. 5), even lust, pleasure, suggest (and have translated) ἐκάτερον rather than ἀκούειν as more pointed. If we wish to say anything sensible, we must listen quietly first.

---

<sup>4</sup> MSS. δείγματα.

PHILO

· θυμῆν, τὸ ἡδεσθαι, τὸ λυπεῖσθαι, τὸ φοβεῖσθαι, τὸ ἀδικεῖν, τὸ ἀφραίνειν,<sup>1</sup> τὸ ἀκολασταίνειν καὶ ὅσα τούτων ἀδελφὰ καὶ συγγενῆ, καταπλαγείς ἡσύχαζε, 267 τὸ φοβερὸν τοῦ θεοῦ κράτος ὑποπτῆξας. “ οὐ γὰρ γρύξει” φησί<sup>2</sup> “ κύων τῇ γλώσση, οὐδ’ ἀπ’ ἀνθρώπου ἕως κτήνους,” ἴσον τῷ οὔτε τὴν κυνώδη γλώσσαν ὑλακτοῦσάν τε καὶ κρίζουσαν<sup>3</sup> οὔτε τὸν ἐν ἡμῖν ἀνθρωπον, ἡγεμόνα νοῦν, οὔτε τὸ κτηνώδες θρέμμα, τὴν αἴσθησιν, προσήκει γαυριᾶν, ὅταν ἀναιρεθέντος τοῦ παρ’ ἡμᾶς ὄλον ἕξωθεν τὸ συμμαχικὸν αὐτοκέλευστον ὑπερασπιοῦν ἦκη.

268 ΧΛΙ. πολλοὶ δὲ συμβαίνουσι καιροὶ μὴ ἐφαρμόζοντες ἡσυχία, ὡδὰς δὲ καὶ<sup>4</sup> καταλογάδην ῥήσεις ἐπιζητοῦντες· ὧν πάλιν ἰδεῖν ἔστιν ἀνακειμένα ὑπομνήματα. πῶς; ἀγαθοῦ τις γέγονεν ἀπροσδόκητος μετουσία; καλὸν οὖν εὐχαριστήσαι καὶ 269 τὸν ἐπιπέμφαντα ὑμνήσαι. τί οὖν τὸ ἀγαθόν; τέθνηκε τὸ ἐπιτιθέμενον ἡμῖν πάθος καὶ πρηγὲς ἄταφον ἔρριπται; μὴ μέλλωμεν οὖν,<sup>5</sup> ἀλλὰ (χορὸν) στησάμενοι τὴν ἱεροπρεπεστάτην ἄδωμεν ὡδήν, παρακελευόμενοι λέγειν πᾶσιν· “ ἄσωμεν τῷ κυρίῳ, ἐνδόξως γὰρ δεδόξασται· ἵππον καὶ ἀναβάτην 270 ἔρριψεν εἰς θάλασσαν.” ἀλλὰ γὰρ ἡ μὲν τοῦ πάθους φθορὰ<sup>6</sup> καὶ μετανάστασις ἀγαθόν, ἀλλ’ οὐ τέλειον ἀγαθόν· ἡ δὲ σοφίας εὗρεσις ὑπερβάλλον καλόν· ἥς εὐρεθείσης ἅπας ὁ λεῶς οὐ καθ’ ἐν μέρος μουσικῆς, ἀλλὰ κατὰ πάσας αὐτῆς τὰς ἀρμονίας

<sup>1</sup> mss. εὐφραίνειν.

<sup>2</sup> mss. γρυξί φασί.

<sup>3</sup> mss. ἀράζουσαν (Mangey γρύζουσαν).

<sup>4</sup> ὡδὰς δὲ καὶ my correction: mss. τὰς δὲ. See note a on opposite page.

<sup>5</sup> mss. ὑμῖν: I should prefer (as Cohn) ὑμνεῖν.

<sup>6</sup> mss. φορὰ.

ON DREAMS, II. 266-270

grief and fear, and injustice, folly, licentiousness with all their brethren and kin, stand in awe and be silent, bending low before the tremendous power of God. "For not a dog shall make a sound," it says, 267 "with his tongue, neither from men to beast" (ibid. 7), which means that neither the dog-like tongue which barks so loud, nor the man in us, the ruling mind, nor the beast-like creature, sense, should vaunt themselves when, upon the downfall of all that is our own, assistance comes self-bidden from without to shield us.

XLI. But occasions 268

often arise which ill accord with silence and call for speech in song or prose,<sup>a</sup> and of such, too, we may find instructive examples in the same storehouse. How so? Suppose some portion of good has fallen to us unexpectedly. It is well then to give thanks and hymn the sender. And what is that good? 269 Suppose that the passion which was attacking us is dead and has been flung out headlong without burial. Let us not delay, but setting in order our choir raise the most sacred of anthems, bidding all to say "Let us sing unto the Lord, for He hath triumphed gloriously. Horse and rider he hath cast into the sea" (Ex. xv. 1). But though, no doubt, the destruction 270 and removal of passion is a good, yet it is not a perfect good, but the discovery of wisdom is a thing of transcendent excellence. And when that is discovered, all the people will sing not with one part of music only, but with all its harmonies and melodies.

<sup>a</sup> I have ventured on this correction, which textually is fairly easy, because (1) of the three examples which follow two are song and one prose; (2) in the other two passages, noted in the index, there is the same contrast: De Mut. 220 δι' ᾠδῆς καὶ τῶν κατ. ἐγκωμίων: De Abr. 23 διὰ ποιήματων καὶ τῶν κατ. συγγραμμάτων.

PHILO

- 271 καὶ μελωδίας ἄσεται. “ τότε ” γάρ φησιν “ ἦσεν Ἰσραὴλ τὸ ἄσμα τοῦτο ἐπὶ τοῦ φρέατος,” λέγω δὲ ἐπὶ τῆς πάλαι μὲν κεκρυμμένης, ἀναζητηθείσης δὲ αὖθις καὶ ἐπὶ πᾶσιν ἀνευρημένης βαθείας τὴν φύσιν ἐπιστήμης, ἢ νόμος τὰς τῶν φιλοθεαμόνων
- 272 ἄρδειν λογικὰς ἐν ψυχαῖς ἀρούρας. τί δέ; ὅταν συγκομίσωμεν τὸν γνήσιον διανοίας καρπὸν, οὐ παραγγέλλει ἡμῖν ὁ ἱερός λόγος ὥσπερ ἐν καρτάλω τῷ λογισμῷ τὰς ἀπαρχὰς τῆς εὐφορίας ὧν ἤνθησεν, ὧν ἐβλάστησεν, ὧν ἐκαρποφόρησεν ἢ ψυχὴ καλῶν, ἐπιδεικνυμένους ἄντικρυς οὕτω ῥητορεύειν, τὰ εἰς τὸν τελεσφόρον θεὸν ἐγκώμια λέγοντας· “ ἐξεκάθηρα τὰ ἅγια ἀπὸ τῆς οἰκίας
- [695] μου ” καὶ ἐταμιευσάμην | ἐν τῷ τοῦ θεοῦ οἴκῳ, ταμίας καὶ φύλακας αὐτῶν ἐπιστήσας τοὺς ἀριστίνδην ἐπιλελεγμένους πρὸς τὴν ἱερὰν νεωκορίαν.
- 273 οὗτοι δὲ εἰσι Λευῖται καὶ προσήλυτοι καὶ ὄρφανοὶ καὶ χῆραι· οἱ μὲν ἰκέται,<sup>2</sup> οἱ δὲ μετανάσται καὶ πρόσφυγες, οἱ δὲ ἀπωρφανισμένοι καὶ κεχηρευκότες γενέσεως, θεὸν δὲ τὸν τῆς ψυχῆς θεραπευτρίδος<sup>3</sup> ἄνδρα καὶ πατέρα γνήσιον ἐπιγεγραμμένοι.
- 274 XLII. Τοῦτον μὲν δὴ τὸν τρόπον καὶ λέγειν καὶ ἡσυχάζειν ἐμπρεπέστατον. τὸ δὲ ἐναντίον μεμελητήκασιν οἱ φαῦλοι· καὶ γὰρ ἡσυχίας ἐπιλήπτου καὶ ἐρμηνείας ὑπαιτίου ζηλωταὶ γεγονόασιν, ἐκάτερον ἐπ’ ὀλέθρῳ ἑαυτῶν τε καὶ ἐτέρων συγκρο-
- 275 τοῦντες. τὸ δὲ πλεόν ἐστὶν αὐτοῖς τῆς ἀσκήσεως ἐν τῷ λέγειν ἂ μὴ δεῖ· τὸ γὰρ στόμα διανοίξαντες καὶ ἑάσαντες ἀχαλίνωτον, καθάπερ ρεῦμα ἀκατά-

<sup>1</sup> MSS. ἦν.

<sup>2</sup> MSS. οἰκέται.

<sup>3</sup> So MSS.: perhaps θερ. ψυχ.

ON DREAMS, II. 271-275

For "then," says the text, "Israel sang this song upon the well" (Num. xxi. 17), and by the "well" I mean knowledge, which for long has been hidden, but in time is sought for and finally found—knowledge whose nature is so deep, knowledge which ever serves to water the fields of reason in the souls of those who desire to see.

Again when we reap the true harvest of the mind, does not the holy Word bid us bring, stored in the basket (Deut. xxvi. 2, 4) of our reasoning faculties, the firstfruits of that rich crop of things excellent, the product of the flowering, the sprouting, the fruit-bearing of ourselves, and as we display them pronounce with words of forthright oratory our laudings of God who gives fulfilment, in such words as these: "I have purged the things hallowed from my home and stored them in the house of God (ibid. 13) under the stewardship and guardianship of those who have been chosen for their high merit to the sacred temple-ministry." These are the Levites and the proselytes, the orphans and widows (ibid.); the first suppliants, the second those who have left their homes and taken refuge with God, the others those who are as orphans and widows to creation, and have adopted God as the lawful husband and father of the servant-soul.

XLII. Such is the most fitting rule for speaking and keeping silence. But the practice of the wicked is quite the contrary. For they ardently pursue a guilty silence and a reprehensible speech, and they work both as an engine for the ruin of themselves and others. Yet it is in speech—in saying what they ought not—that they exercise themselves the most. For they open their mouths and leave them unσχετον, φέρεσθαι τὸν ἀκριτόμυθον, ἧ φασιν οἱ ποιηταί, λόγον ἰᾶσι,<sup>1</sup> μυρία τῶν ἀλυσιτελῶν προσ-276 επισύροντα. τοιγαροῦν οἱ μὲν ἐπὶ συνηγορίαν ἡδονῆς καὶ ἐπιθυμίας καὶ πάσης πλεοναζούσης ὀρμῆς ἐτράποντο, ἄλογον πάθος ἐπιτειχίζοντες ἡγεμόνι λογισμῶ, (οἱ δὲ αὖ)<sup>2</sup> καὶ ταῖς ἐριστικαῖς φιλονεικίαις (ἐπ)αποδυσάμενοι συνεπλάκησαν, ἐλπίσαντες τὸ ὄρατικὸν πηρῶσαι<sup>3</sup> γένος καὶ κατὰ κρημνῶν καὶ βαράθρων,<sup>4</sup> ἐξ ὧν οὐδ' ἂν ἔτι γένοιτο 277 διαναστῆναι, δυνήσεσθαι ρίψαι. ἔνιοι δὲ οὐ μόνον ἀντιπάλους ἑαυτοὺς τῆς ἀνθρωπίνης ἀπέφηναν ἀρετῆς, ἀλλὰ καὶ τῆς θείας· ἐπὶ τοσοῦτον ἀπονοίας ἤλασαν.

PHILO

Τοῦ μὲν οὖν φιλοπαθοῦς ἕξαρχος ἀναγράφεται θιάσου τῆς Αἰγυπτίας χώρας ὁ βασιλεύς, Φαραῶ· λέγεται γὰρ τῷ προφήτῃ· “ ἰδοὺ αὐτὸς ἐκπορεύεται ἐπὶ τὸ ὕδωρ, καὶ στήσῃ συναντῶν αὐτῷ παρὰ τὸ 278 χεῖλος τοῦ ποταμοῦ.” τοῦ μὲν γὰρ ἴδιον ἐπὶ τὴν φορὰν καὶ ἀνάχυσιν αἰεὶ τοῦ ἀλόγου πάθους ἐξιέναι· τοῦ δὲ σοφοῦ πολλῶ ρέοντι τοῖς ὑπὲρ ἡδονῆς καὶ ἐπιθυμίας λόγοις ὑπαντιάσαι οὐ τοῖς ποσίν, ἀλλὰ τῇ γνώμῃ, βεβαίως καὶ ἀκλινῶς, ἐπὶ τοῦ ποταμίου χεῖλους, τοῦτο δὲ ἔστιν ἐπὶ τοῦ στόματος καὶ τῆς γλώττης, ἅπερ ἦν ὄργανα λόγου· παγίως γὰρ ἐπιβὰς αὐτοῖς δυνήσεται τὰς συνηγορούσας τῷ πάθει πιθανότητος ἀνατρέψαι καὶ καταβαλεῖν.

<sup>1</sup> MSS. ἐῶσι.

<sup>2</sup> The lacuna of five to six letters is filled up by Wend. with ἔτι δέ. For my reasons for preferring οἱ δὲ αὖ (or ἔνιοι δέ) see note b below.

<sup>3</sup> MSS. πληρῶσαι.

<sup>4</sup> MSS. βάθρων.

<sup>a</sup> Pl. ii. 246.

<sup>b</sup> That we have here the second of three classes, and not a

ON DREAMS, II. 275-278

bridled, and suffer their "promiscuous"<sup>a</sup> speech, to use the poet's term, to take its course like an unchecked torrent whirling along with its vast quantities of unprofitable stuff. And so some betake themselves to pleading the cause of pleasure and lust and of every superabundant appetite and raise up unreasoning passion to menace the ruling reason. (Others<sup>b</sup>) disencumber themselves to engage in disputatious controversies, hoping thereby to blind the race of vision and to be able to hurl them over precipices and chasms, from which they can never rise again. Some, 277 too, have set themselves up to oppose the virtue not only of men but of God; to such a pitch of madness have they advanced.

The first of these three, the company of the pleasure-lovers, are described as having for their leader the king of the country of Egypt. For God says to the prophet, "Behold he himself goeth forth to the water, and thou shalt stand meeting him by the edge (lip) of the river" (Ex. vii. 15).<sup>c</sup> It is as characteristic of 278 him, that he should ever go out to the spreading tide of unreasoning passion, as it is of the wise to meet its strong current, whose waters are the advocacy of pleasure and lust—meet it not with his feet, but with his judgement, steadfastly and unswervingly, on the "lip" of the river, that is on the mouth and tongue, the organs of speech. For firmly resting on these supports he will be able to overthrow and lay low the plausibilities which plead the cause of passion.

further denunciation of the first of two, as Wend.'s reading implies, seems clear to me from the sequel. The class here introduced are described further in §§ 279-280.

<sup>c</sup> Each of the three classes is furnished with a χελος text, in this case Ex. vii. 15. So far as philosophical schools are suggested, these are clearly the Epicureans.

PHILO

- 279 ὁ δὲ τοῦ ὄρατικοῦ γένους ἐχθρὸς ὁ τοῦ Φαραὼ λαὸς ἐστίν, ὃς ἐπιτιθέμενος καὶ διώκων καὶ δουλούμενος ἀρετὴν οὐκ ἐπαύσατο, ἕως κακὰς ὦν<sup>1</sup> διέθηκε τὰς ἀμοιβὰς εὖρατο, πελάγει<sup>2</sup> τῶν ἀδικη-μάτων καὶ τρικυμίας, ἃς τὸ λυ(ττων πάθος)<sup>3</sup> [696] ἀνήγειρε, καταποντωθεῖς, | ὡς ὑπερβάλλουσαν θεάν καὶ νίκην ἀνανταγώνιστον καὶ χαρὰν ἐλπίδος 280 μείζονα τὸν καιρὸν ἐνεγκεῖν ἐκείνον. διὸ λέγεται· “ εἶδεν Ἰσραὴλ τοὺς Αἰγυπτίους τεθνηκότας παρὰ τὸ χεῖλος τῆς θαλάσσης.” μεγάλη γε ἡ ὑπέρμαχος χεῖρ, ἀναγκάζουσα παρὰ στόματι καὶ χεῖλεσι καὶ λόγῳ πίπτειν τοὺς τὰ ὄργανα ταῦτα κατὰ τῆς ἀληθείας ἀκονησαμένους, ἵνα μὴ ὀθνεῖοις ἀλλὰ ἰδίῳις ὄπλοις οἱ καθ’ ἐτέρων ἀναλαβόντες αὐτὰ 281 θνήσκωσι. τρία δ’ εὐαγγελίζεται τῇ ψυχῇ τὰ κάλλιστα, ἐν μὲν ἀπώλειαν Αἰγυπτιακῶν παθῶν, ἕτερον δὲ τὸ μὴ παρ’ ἐτέρῳ χωρίῳ,<sup>4</sup> (ἀλλὰ) τῆς ἀλμυρᾶς καὶ πικρᾶς πηγῆς, ὡς ἂν θαλάττης, χεῖλεσι, δι’ ὧν ὁ πολέμιος ἀρετῆς σοφιστῆς λόγος ἐξεκέχυτο, τελευταῖον δὲ τὴν θεάν τοῦ πτώματος.
 282 μηδὲν γὰρ ἀόρατον εἶη καλόν, ἀλλὰ πρὸς * * *<sup>5</sup> καὶ λαμπρὸν ἥλιον ἄγοιτο· καὶ γὰρ τούναντίον εἰς βαθὺν σκότος καὶ * * *<sup>6</sup> ἄξιον τὸ κακόν. καὶ τοῦτο μὲν μηδ’ ἐκ τύχης ἰδεῖν<sup>7</sup> ποτε γένοιτο, τὸ δὲ ἀγαθὸν μείζουσιν ὀφθαλμοῖς αἰεὶ περιαθροῖτο. τί δὲ οὕτως

<sup>1</sup> I suggest κακὰς <κακῶν> ὦν. <sup>2</sup> MSS. ἐστρατοπελάγει.

<sup>3</sup> MSS. lacuna of four to five letters after λυ, which Wend. fills up as above. Why not λυττων or λυττων simply? We are not, I think, concerned with πάθος here.

<sup>4</sup> MSS. ἐτέρων χωρίων.

<sup>5</sup> The lacuna here is of six to eight letters. Wend. suggests ἄσκιον φῶς.

ON DREAMS, II. 279-282

Secondly,<sup>a</sup> we find the enemy of the race 279 that has vision in the people of Pharaoh who attacked and persecuted and enslaved virtue without ceasing, until they received the requital of evil for the evil they meted out to others, submerged in the sea of their wrongdoings and in the mighty billows, which their raving had called up, and thus that occasion brought a peerless spectacle, an undisputed victory, and a joy which transcended hope. Therefore we read: 280 " Israel saw the Egyptians dead along the lip of the sea " (Ex. xiv. 30). Mighty is that champion arm by whose constraining force mouth and lips and speech became the scene of the fall of those who had whetted them as instruments against the truth, that so their own weapons, not those of strangers, should bring death to those who had taken them against others. Three messages, the best of tidings, does this text 281 proclaim to the soul, one that the passions of Egypt have perished, a second that the scene of their death is none other than the lips of that fountain bitter and briny as the sea, those very lips through which poured forth the sophist-talk which wars against virtue, and finally that their ruin was seen. For we may pray that 282 nothing that is good and beautiful should be unseen, but rather should be brought into clear light and bright sunshine, while its opposite evil deserves only to be brought into night and profound darkness and (night). And never may even a casual glimpse of evil come our way, but may the good be surveyed with ever growing eyesight. And what is so truly good as that

<sup>a</sup> The second class, whose χείλος text is Ex. xiv. 30, are presumably the sophists in general; cf. σοφιστής λόγος § 281.

<sup>6</sup> Lacuna of six to eight letters. For various suggestions to fill it see App. p. 610.

<sup>7</sup> MSS. δείν.

PHILO

ἀγαθόν, ὡς ζῆσαι τὰ καλὰ καὶ ἀποθανεῖν τὰ φαῦλα; 283 XLIII. τρίτοι<sup>1</sup> τοῖνυν ἦσαν οἱ τῆν τῶν λόγων δεινότητα μέχρις οὐρανοῦ τείναντες. οὗτοι μελέτην κατὰ τῆς φύσεως, μᾶλλον δὲ κατὰ τῆς ἑαυτῶν ψυχῆς ἐμελέτησαν φάσκοντες, μόνον εἶναι τὸ αἰσθητὸν καὶ ὀρώμενον τοῦτο, οὔτε γενόμενόν ποτε οὔτ' αὐθις φθαρησόμενον, ἀγέννητον δὲ καὶ 284 ἀφθαρτον, ἀνεπιτρόπευτον, ἀκυβέρνητον, ἀπροστασίαστον. εἶτ' ἐπ' ἄλλοις ἄλλα συνθέντες ἐπιχειρήματα, δόγμα ἀδόκιμον οἰκοδομοῦντες εἰς ὕψος οἷα πύργον ἐξῆραν. λέγεται γὰρ ὅτι " ἦν πᾶσα ἡ γῆ χεῖλος ἓν," συμφωνία τῶν τῆς ψυχῆς μερῶν πάντων 285 ἀσύμφωνος ἐπὶ τῷ κινήσει τὸ συνεκτικώτατον ἐν τοῖς οὖσιν, ἀρχήν. τοιγαροῦν ἐλπίσαντας αὐτοὺς εἰς οὐρανὸν ταῖς ἐπινοίαις ἀναδραμεῖσθαι ἐπὶ καθαιρέσει τῆς αἰωνίου βασιλείας ἡ μεγάλη καὶ ἀκαθαίρετος καταβάλλει χεῖρ, καὶ τὸ οἰκοδομηθὲν δόγμα 286 συνανατρέψασα. κέκληται δὲ ὁ τόπος " σύγχυσις," οἰκεῖον ὄνομα τῷ καινουργηθέντι τολμήματι. τί γὰρ ἀναρχίας συγχυτικώτερον; οὐκ οἰκίαι μὲν ἀνηγεμόνευτοι προσκρουσμάτων γέμουσι καὶ ταρα-287 χῆς; ἀβασίλευτοι δ' ἐαθεῖσαι πόλεις ὑπὸ ὀχλοκρατίας, ἐναντίον καὶ μεγίστου, φθείρονται; καὶ χῶραι δὲ καὶ ἔθνη καὶ κλίματα γῆς, ὧν ἀρχαὶ 288 κατελύθησαν, οὐ παλαιὰς καὶ μεγάλας εὐδαιμονίας [697] ἀπέβαλον; καὶ τί δεῖ | τὰ ἀνθρώπινα λέγεσθαι;

<sup>1</sup> mss. and all editors τρεις. See note a below.

<sup>a</sup> I have no hesitation in reading τρίτοι for τρεις, a corruption very easily produced by the use of the same symbol for the cardinal and ordinal. For Mangey's explanation of τρεις see App. p. 610. This third class biblically represented by the Babel-builders, with Gen. xi. 1 for their χειλις text, cor-

ON DREAMS, II. 282-288

the excellent should live and the bad die ?

XLIII. Third on the list<sup>a</sup> were those who extended 283 the activities of their word-cleverness to heaven itself, men who gave themselves to studies directed against nature or rather against their own soul. They declared that nothing exists beyond this world of our sight and senses, that it neither was created nor will perish, but is uncreated, imperishable, without guardian, helmsman or protector. Then piling enter- 284 prises one upon another they raised on high like a tower their edifice of unedifying doctrine.<sup>b</sup> For we read that "all the earth was one lip" (Gen.
xi. 1), a harmony of disharmony, that is a blend of all the parts of the soul, to dislodge from its position the greatest binding force in the universe, government.
And therefore when they hoped to soar to heaven in 285 mind and thought, to destroy the eternal kingship, the mighty undestroyable hand cast them down and overturned the edifice of their doctrine. And the 286 place is called "confusion," a fitting name for wild audacious revolution. For what is more fraught with confusion than want of government ? Are not houses that have no ruler full of offences and disturbance ? Are not cities left without a king destroyed 287 by the opposite of king-rule, the greatest of evils, mob-rule ? Do not countries and nations and regions of the earth lose their old abundant happiness when their governments are dissolved ? And why should 288 we appeal to the case of mankind ? For the other responds philosophically to the Epicureans and Sceptics, so far as the denial of providence is concerned. For ἀγέννητον καὶ ἀφθαρτον see App. pp. 610 f.

<sup>b</sup> Lit. "base" or spurious doctrine. The translation given is an attempt to produce something parallel to the untranslatable oxymoron of the Greek.

PHILO

οὐδὲ γὰρ αἱ ἄλλαι τῶν ζώων ἀγέλαι, πτηνῶν, χερσαίων, ἐνύδρων, ἄνευ τινὸς ἀγελάρχου συν-εστᾶσιν, ἀλλὰ ποθοῦσι καὶ περιέπουσιν αἰεὶ τὸν οἰκεῖον ἡγεμόνα, ὡς μόνον ἀγαθῶν αἴτιον, οὐ κατὰ 289 τὴν ἀπουσίαν σκεδάννυνται καὶ διαφθείρονται. εἴτ' οἰόμεθα τοῖς μὲν περιγείοις, ἃ βραχυτάτη μοῖρα τοῦ παντός ἐστιν, ἀρχὴν μὲν ἀγαθῶν, ἀναρχίαν δὲ κακῶν εἶναι αἰτίαν, τὸν δὲ κόσμον οὐ διὰ τὴν τοῦ βασιλεύοντος θεοῦ προήγησιν εὐδαιμονίας τῆς 290 ἄκρας πεπληρῶσθαι; δίκην οὖν ἀρμόττουσαν οἷς ἐτίθεντο<sup>1</sup> διδόασιν· φύραντες γὰρ τὸ ἱερὸν (τὸ ἑαυτῶν ἀνίερρον) πρὸς<sup>2</sup> ἀναρχίας φυρόμενον ἐπέιδον, συγχυθέντες οἱ<sup>3</sup> συγγέαντες. ἕως δὲ οὐπω τιμωρίαν δεδώκασιν, ὑπὸ φρενοβλαβείας φυσώμενοι τὴν μὲν τῶν ὄλων ἀρχὴν ἀνοσίοις λόγοις καθαιροῦσιν, αὐτοὺς δὲ ἀρχοντας καὶ βασιλέας ἀναγράφουσι, τὸ ἀκαθαίρετον τοῦ θεοῦ κράτος γενέσει τῇ ἀκαταστάτῳ<sup>4</sup> ἀπολλυμένη καὶ φθειρομένη περι-291 ἄπτοντες. XLIV. ἐπιτραγωδοῦντες γοῦν καὶ ἐπικομπάζοντες<sup>5</sup> εἰώθασιν οἱ καταγέλαστοι λέγειν ταῦτα· ἡμεῖς οἱ ἡγεμόνες, ἡμεῖς οἱ δυναστεύοντες· ἐφ' ἡμῖν ὄρμει<sup>6</sup> τὰ πάντα· ἀγαθῶν καὶ τῶν ἐναντίων

<sup>1</sup> Probably read <ἐπ>ετίθεντο, or as Mangey <δι>ετίθεντο, a favourite word of Philo, but not as far as I have seen used by him in this sense in the middle. <sup>2</sup> MSS. περι.

<sup>3</sup> MSS. and all edd. οὐ. For discussion of the text of the sentence see note a below.

<sup>4</sup> So MSS.: Wend. ἀδιαστάτῳ without adequate reason, so far as I can see.

<sup>5</sup> MSS. ἐπιστομίζοντες.

<sup>6</sup> MSS. ὄρμᾳ.

---

<sup>a</sup> Wendland, who prints φύραντες γὰρ τὸ ἱερὸν περὶ . . . ἀναρχίας φυρόμενοι (so also Mangey for φυρόμενον from Trin.) ἐπέιδον, does not make any attempt how to fill up the supposed lacuna. The suggestion I have made gives, I think, a very collections of animals, whether of the air, or the land or the water, do not hold together any more than men without someone to captain them, but they always desire the presence of their proper leader and pay him honour as the sole author of their welfare, and in his absence they scatter and are destroyed. Can we then suppose that, while the creatures of the earth, who are but a tiny portion of the universe, find in government the cause of their well-being and in anarchy the cause of their ills, the world does not owe the supreme blessedness which fills it to the leadership of God its king?

ON DREAMS, II. 288-291

289

290

291

So then these aggressors against heaven suffered a penalty befitting their attempts. Having brought disorder into the holy, they saw their own unholiness disordered by anarchy; they had wrought confusion and were confounded.<sup>a</sup> But so long as they remain unpunished, puffed up by their delusion, they deal out destruction to the government of the universe with their unholy words, enroll themselves as rulers and kings, and make over the undestroyable sovereignty of God to creation which passes away and perishes and never continues in one stay.<sup>b</sup> XLIV. Thus it is their way to talk bombastic, boastful absurdities such as "We are the leaders, we are the potentates; all things are based on us. Who can cause good or its opposite, satisfactory sense, and if it is accepted the second suggestion of οἱ συγγέαντες for ὁ συγγ. producing a similar antithesis will follow almost certainly. περί will require correction, and I have hesitated between παρά and πρός. The former comes more easily from περί, and may perhaps be used in the same sense as πρός, but πρός seems to have been corrupted to περί in § 12.

<sup>b</sup> The description of the third class, though primarily an attack on philosophical creeds, passes in this and the subsequent sections into a general denunciation of human pride.

PHILO

τίνες αἴτιοι (ὅτι μὴ)<sup>1</sup> ἡμεῖς; τὸ (εὖ καὶ) κακῶς ἐργάσασθαι τίσιν ὅτι μὴ ἡμῖν ἀψευδέστατα ἀνάκειται; φλυαροῦσι δὲ ἄλλως οἱ δυνάμεως ἀοράτου τὰ πάντα φάσκοντες ἐξῆφθαι, ἣν πρυτανεύειν τῶν κατὰ τὸν κόσμον ἀνθρωπέων τε καὶ θείων νομίζουσι.

292 τοιαῦτα καταλαζονευσάμενοι, ἐὰν μὲν ὥσπερ ἐκ μέθης νήψαντες ἐν ἑαυτοῖς γένωνται καὶ τῆς παροιρίας, ἣν παρώνησαν,<sup>2</sup> εἰς αἴσθησιν ἐλθόντες αἰδεσθῶσι καὶ κακίσωσιν ἑαυτοὺς ἐφ' οἷς ὑπ' ἀγνώμονος γνώμης ἐξαμαρτάνειν προήχθησαν,<sup>3</sup> ἀκολακεύτω καὶ ἀδεκάστῳ χρησάμενοι συμβούλῳ μετανοία,<sup>4</sup> τὴν ἴλω τοῦ ὄντος δύναμιν ἐξευμενισάμενοι παλινωδαίαις ἀντὶ βεβήλων ἱεραῖς, ἀμνηστίαν

293 εὐρήσονται παντελεῆ. ἐὰν δὲ ἀφηγιασταὶ καὶ σκληραύχενες μέχρι τοῦ παντὸς γενόμενοι σκιρτῶσιν, ὡς αὐτόνομοι καὶ ἐλεύθεροι καὶ ἐτέρων ἡγεμόνες ὄντες, ἀπαραιτήτῳ ἀνάγκῃ καὶ ἀμειλίκτῳ τὴν ἑαυτῶν ἐν ἅπασι μικροῖς τε καὶ μεγάλοις οὐδένειαν

294 αἰσθήσονται. ὁ γὰρ ἐπιβεβηκῶς ἠνίοχος ὡς ἄρματι
[698] πτηνῶ τῷδε τῷ | κόσμῳ χαλινὸν ἐμβαλὼν καὶ τὸ κεχασμένον τῶν ἠνίων ὀπίσω βία τείνας καὶ τοὺς κημοὺς<sup>5</sup> ἐπισφίγξας, μᾶστιξι καὶ κέντροις ἀναμνήσει τῆς δεσποτικῆς ἐξουσίας, ἧς ἐπελάθοντο διὰ τὸ χρηστὸν καὶ ἡμερον τοῦ κρατοῦντος ὥσπερ 295 οἱ κακοὶ δούλοι. τὸ γὰρ τῶν δεσποτῶν ἐπεικὲς εἰς ἀναρχίαν ἐκτρέποντες ἐπιμορφάζουσι τὸ ἀδέσποτον, μέχρις ἂν τὴν ῥοώδη τε καὶ πολλὴν αὐτῶν νόσον, ἀντὶ φαρμάκων τὰς τιμωρίας προσφέρων, ὁ

<sup>1</sup> Lacuna of four to five letters.

<sup>2</sup> Ἄ παρανοίας ἦν παρηνώμησαν: Trin. παροιρίας ἦν παρηνώμησαν (not παρώνησαν as Mangey states).

<sup>3</sup> MSS. προήχθησαν.

<sup>4</sup> MSS. μετανοίας.

<sup>5</sup> MSS. κόσμους.

ON DREAMS, II. 291-295

save we? With whom does it really and truly rest to benefit or harm, save us? They are but idle babblers who say that all things are linked to an invisible power, and think that this power presides over everything in the world whether human or divine.”

Such is their presumptuousness. 292

Yet, if they pass from this intoxication to sobriety, and become themselves again; if realizing the sottishness of their past they feel shame and self-reproach for the sins to which their ill-judging judgement has led them; if they take repentance for their counsellor, a counsellor impervious to flattery and bribery; if they propitiate the merciful power of Him that is by recantations in which holiness replaces profanity, they will obtain full pardon. But if they 293 continue for ever to plunge and prance like stiff-necked horses disobedient to the rein, as though they were free and independent and rulers of others, necessity inexorable and implacable will make them feel that in all things great and small they are as nothing. For the charioteer who has mounted the 294 winged chariot<sup>a</sup> of this world will put his bridle upon them and pull back with force the hitherto slackened reins till they are taut, tighten the muzzles, and with whip and spur recall to them the nature of that imperious authority, which the kindness and gentleness of the ruler had caused them to forget, as bad servants do. For such misconstrue the mildness of 295 the master as failure to govern, and ape the state of those who have no master, until the owner stems the full flood of the disease, by applying punishments

<sup>a</sup> See App. p. 611.

PHILO

- 296 κεκτημένος ἐπισχῆ. διὸ λέγεται· “ ψυχὴ ἄνομος ἢ διαστέλλουσα τοῖς χεῖλεσι κακοποιῆσαι ἢ καλῶς ποιῆσαι,” εἶθ’ ὕστερον<sup>1</sup> “ ἐξαγορεύσει τὴν ἁμαρτίαν ἑαυτῆς.” τί φῆς, ὦ γέμουσα ἀλαζονείας; οἶδας γάρ, τί ἐστὶ τὸ πρὸς ἀλήθειαν ἀγαθὸν ἢ καλὸν
- 297 ἢ δίκαιον ἢ ὄσιον ἢ τίνα τίσιν ἐφαρμόττει; ἢ τούτων ἐπιστήμη τε καὶ δύναμις ἀνάκειται μόνῳ θεῷ, καὶ εἴ τις αὐτῷ φίλος. μάρτυς δὲ καὶ χρησμός, ἐν ᾧ λέγεται· “ ἐγὼ ἀποκτενῶ καὶ ζῆν ποιήσω·
- 298 πατάξω καὶ γὰρ ἰάσομαι.” ἀλλὰ γὰρ οὐδὲ ἐπιπόλαιον ἔσχεν ἢ δοκησίσοφος ψυχὴ τὴν τῶν ὑπὲρ ἑαυτὴν ὀνειρώξων, ἀλλ’ οὕτως ἢ δυστυχῆς ἐξηνεμώθη, ὡς καὶ ἐνώμοτον γενέσθαι περὶ τοῦ βεβαίως καὶ παγίως ταῦθ’ ἐστάναι, ἃ ψευδῶς
- 299 ὑπέλαβεν. εἰάν οὖν τὸ παλμῶδες καὶ παφλάζον τοῦ νοσήματος ἀρξῆται χαλᾶν, τὰ τῆς ὑγείας ἐμπυρεύματα κατ’ ὀλίγον ἐκζωπυρούμενα βιάσεται τὸ μὲν πρῶτον ἐξαγορεύσαι τὸ ἁμάρτημα, τὸ δ’ ἐστὶ κακίσαι ἑαυτὴν, εἶτα πρὸς βωμοῖς ἰκέτιν γενέσθαι, ποτνωμένην λιταῖς καὶ εὐχαῖς καὶ θυσίαις, (αἷς) ἀμνηστίας μόναις ἐπιλαχεῖν ἔστιν.
- 300 XLV. Ἐξῆς δ’ ἂν τις εἰκότως ἐπαπορήσειε, τί δὴ ποτε τὸν ἐν Αἰγύπτῳ ποταμὸν μόνον ἀνέγραψεν ἔχοντα χεῖλη, τὸν δ’ Εὐφράτην ἢ τίνα τῶν ἄλλων ἱερῶν ποταμῶν οὐκέτι. ὅπου μὲν γὰρ φησι· “ στήση συναντῶν αὐτῷ παρὰ τὸ χεῖλος τοῦ
- 301 ποταμοῦ” * * *. καίτοι τινὲς ἴσως ἐπιχλευά-

<sup>1</sup> Wend., evidently mistakenly, prints εἶθ’ ὕστερον as part of the quotation. There are twenty words in Leviticus between ποιῆσαι and ἐξαγορεύσει, cf. εἶτ’ ἐπφέρει § 71.

<sup>a</sup> E.V. “If any one swear rashly with his lips to do evil or to do good,” i.e. to do anything whatever. The real 576

ON DREAMS, II. 295-301

in the place of remedies. Thus we read 296 " the lawless soul which distinguishes with its lips to do well or do ill,"<sup>a</sup> and then later " shall proclaim its sin " (Lev. v. 4, 5). O soul, brimful of presumptuous folly, what is this which thou claimest? Knowest thou what is truly good, or excellent, or just, or holy, or what befits who? No, the knowledge and mastery 297 of these is a gift reserved for God alone, and for whoso is God's friend. And this is testified by the oracle in which we are told " I will kill and make to live : I will smite and I will heal " (Deut. xxxii. 39). But 298 indeed when the soul, wise in its own conceit, entertained this dream of things beyond its ken, it was no fleeting thought, but to its sorrow so puffed up with windy pride was it that it swore an oath<sup>b</sup> that these things stood firm and established, which were but its false imaginations. If then the throbbing fever of its 299 disease begins to abate, the embers of health will gradually kindle into a blaze and force it first to " proclaim its sin," that is reproach itself, then come to the altar as a suppliant, beseeching grace with prayers and vows and sacrifices, by which alone it can obtain forgiveness.

XLV. Next we might reasonably inquire why 300 Moses speaks of the river of Egypt alone as having " lips " and refrains from doing so in the case of the Euphrates and other holy rivers. For while we have in one place " thou shalt stand meeting him on the lip of the river " (Ex. vii. 15). . . .<sup>c</sup> Yet some perhaps 301 meaning is that any rash oath can only obtain remission by admitting the error.

<sup>b</sup> LXX (following on καλῶς ποιῆσαι) ὅσα ἐὰν διαστείλῃ ὁ ἄνθρωπος μεθ' ὄρκου.

<sup>c</sup> Some text or texts must have dropped out, illustrating the point. See App. p. 611.

PHILO

ζοντες ἐροῦσι, μὴ δεῖν τὰ τοιαῦτα εἰς τὰς ζητήσεις εἰσάγειν· γλισχρολογίαν γὰρ μᾶλλον ἢ ὠφέλειάν τινα ἐμφαίνειν. ἐγὼ δὲ τὰ τοιαῦτα ἡδυσμάτων τρόπον παρηρτύσθαι ταῖς ἱεραῖς ἀναγραφαῖς βελτιώσεως ἕνεκα τῶν ἐντυγχανόντων ὑπολαμβάνω· καὶ οὐδεμίαν τῶν ζητούντων καταγνωστέον εὐρεσι-302 λογίαν, ἀλλ' εἰ μὴ ζητοῖεν, ἔμπαλιν ἀργίαν. οὐδὲ γὰρ περὶ ποταμῶν ἐστὶν ἱστορίας ἢ παρούσα [699] σπουδὴ, περὶ δὲ βίων | τῶν εἰκαζομένων ποταμίους ρεύμασι, ἐναντιουμένων ἀλλήλοις. ὁ μὲν γὰρ τοῦ σπουδαίου βίος ἐν ἔργοις, ἐν λόγοις δὲ ὁ τοῦ φαύλου θεωρεῖται. λόγος δὲ γλώττη καὶ στόματι καὶ χεῖλεσι<sup>1</sup> καὶ τοῖς * * *.

<sup>1</sup> MSS. χεῖλη.

ON DREAMS, II. 301-302

may say scoffingly that such points should not be brought into our inquiries, as savouring of petty trifling rather than any profitable process. But I hold that such matters are like condiments set as seasoning to the Holy Scriptures, for the edification of its readers, and that the inquirers are not to be held guilty of any far-fetched hair-splitting, but on the contrary of dereliction if they fail so to inquire. For the subject which now engages our researches is 302 not the lore of rivers as such, but that of lives which are compared to the currents of rivers and are of opposite kinds. For the lives of the good and the bad are shewn, one in deeds, the other in words, and words belong to the tongue, mouth and lips . . .

APPENDIX TO DE FUGA ET INVENTIONE

§ 8. There are people who fashion, etc. Has Philo in mind Phaedo 96 b ff., where Socrates contrasts, or seems to contrast, the views of earlier philosophers, Anaximander, Anaximenes, Heracleitus, etc., with the higher thought suggested to him by Anaxagoras's dictum? Certainly there is no close resemblance between these theories, as noted there, and the views mentioned by Philo here, but he might perhaps without much difficulty have regarded the negation of a final cause implied in the former as the deification of some original ἄλη.

§§ 11-13. Jacob's expostulation with Laban is interpreted as an argument against the earlier philosophers who assumed an evolution in creation. On the contrary, he asserts, everything was made as it was to be, and had its ποῖόν from the first. The counterpart of this in the story is the protest of Jacob in Gen. xxx. 25-end, which results in his claiming the marked (ἐπίσημα) animals for himself, and leaving the ἄσημα to Laban. (In E. V. these are respectively the stronger and the feebler.)

For the Stoic equation of ποῖόν with εἶδος and the maintenance of its identity throughout cf. S. V. F. ii. 395.

§ 16. Names. Mangey, who suggested, not very helpfully, γένεσι, pointed out that there is nothing in the actual names of Leah and Rachel which suggests freedom. Possibly the thought may be that ἀσκητικαὶ δυνάμεις, with stress on ἀσκ., are essentially free, but this seems strained. Mr. Whitaker had put "their standing," probably supposing that the allusion is to the freedom they have gained from Laban's control, as expressed in their speech. Possibly again "in the terms they use," or "their language," δνόματα being sometimes used for "words" in general as well as for "names," and this would at least give a good antithesis to ἐνθυμήμασι. But both these postulate an unnatural meaning for the word. If we suppose a corruption  $\tau\alpha\iota\varsigma$   $\delta\rho\mu\alpha\iota\varsigma$  would be a possible correction.

PHILO

§§ 25 ff. Fleeing from Esau.—Philo's views on this are perplexing. We shall perhaps best understand them by remembering that he keeps passing from the internal to the external danger, from the Esau within us to the Esau without. In §24 Esau is definitely the inward enemy. In §§25 ff. he may be either or both, but the temptation to make this topic an occasion for one of those "diatribes" or "commonplaces" which he enjoys so much, though to us they may seem to be unworthy interruptions of the argument, carries him away till by § 28 it is clearly the outward  $\phi\alpha\upsilon\lambda\omicron\varsigma$ . This enemy is to be met by a judicious and benevolent use of the good things of life, and after exhausting this subject Philo returns quite clearly in § 39 to the inward conflict. The advice of Patience for this, though given in a very different style, is practically the same. He who is not yet fitted for the highest life must accommodate himself to the lower conditions and make the best possible use of them.

In De Mig. 210-212 the danger is at the start said to be "either in thyself or in another person." We then pass on to language which if literally taken seems to leave "thyself" out of the question and to inculcate a degrading subservience to another. But as stated in the footnote to that passage, I believe that the thought is really the same as here, and that the principle of accommodation to the facts of life is parabolically compared to the insincere subservience of the worldly-wise. The long diatribe in De Som. ii. 80-92 must no doubt be reckoned with. But here Philo is dealing with a very different subject,  $\epsilon\upsilon\lambda\acute{\alpha}\beta\epsilon\iota\alpha$ , and his advice can hardly be said to contain anything degrading, unless it is the description of Abraham's dealings with the children of Heth, §§ 89-90. But is not this also a parable of the same kind as I have supposed in De Mig.? Both parables may in a sense be compared to that of the Unjust Judge.

§ 26.  $\tau\hat{\omega}\nu$   $\epsilon\iota\rho\eta\mu\acute{\epsilon}\nu\omega\nu$ . The translation suggested in the footnote seems preferable, not only because  $\tau\hat{\omega}\nu$   $\epsilon\iota\rho$ . more naturally refers to something further back, though it is perhaps sometimes used of something in the immediate neighbourhood, but because Philo frequently uses  $\tau\hat{\alpha}$   $\pi\omicron\iota\eta\tau\iota\kappa\acute{\alpha}$   $\eta\varsigma$   $\eta\delta\omicron\nu\eta\varsigma$ . See e.g. Leg. All. ii. 107  $\tau\hat{\alpha}$   $\pi\omicron\iota\eta\tau\iota\kappa\acute{\alpha}$   $\alpha\upsilon\tau\eta\varsigma$  (i.e.  $\eta\delta\omicron\nu\eta\varsigma$ ),  $\chi\rho\upsilon\sigma\delta\varsigma$   $\acute{\alpha}\rho\gamma\rho\omicron\varsigma$   $\delta\acute{\omicron}\xi\alpha$   $\tau\iota\mu\alpha\iota$   $\acute{\alpha}\rho\chi\alpha\iota$ , where, however,  $\delta\acute{\omicron}\xi\alpha$  and τιμαί are ranked as ποιητικά, not as here as products. See also index to S. V. F. on ποιητικά and τελικά.

APPENDICES

§ 31. δεξιότης. L. & S. 1927 have added "kindliness, courtesy," to their earlier "cleverness," etc., and refer to Philo ii. 30, i.e. De Abr. 208. There and in the other two of the four passages where I have noted the word this is suitable. But here the usage is somewhat wider. Philo's use of the word seems to extend to gentlemanly behaviour of any kind.

§ 42. πείσμα. Wendland suspects this word. But its use in this sense, though perhaps not common, is well supported. Here Philo is evidently led to it by the desire to accumulate names in -μα in antithesis to ἀνάθημα, and having once used it here was perhaps encouraged to use it again in § 114, where it seems to have the same meaning. Elsewhere it has the commoner sense of "cable."

§ 45. δόγμασιν * * * οὔτος. Wendland, after giving Mangey's note in which, reading ἐπιμένοντα for -τι, he suggested the insertion of προτρέπονσι or some similar word to complete the sense, adds "sed plura desunt"; i.e. he considered that not only was something needed to shew what happens to the Lover of Discipline, but also an explanation of the Brother of Rebecca to lead up to οὔτος. This is perhaps the most probable view, but I do not think it is certain that there is any lacuna, or indeed any correction needed at all. If οὔτος is referred to βίος, the statement that while the resources of ordinary life are a danger to the fool, this ordinary life is to the man of discipline the testing-ground and therefore the brother of persistence, makes good enough sense. We have to set against it the distance of βίον from οὔτος, and that we should rather have expected ταῦτα.

Mangey's suggestion implies that the Lover of Discipline, who presumably is the person sent to the Brother of Persistence, is here identified with that Brother. This also, though confusing, is perhaps not impossible. But if so, the simplest emendation would be οὐχ, ὅς for οὔτος, i.e. the resources of life are a danger to the fool, but not so to the Man of Persistence, who is the Brother of Rebecca. Or perhaps οὐ, τῷ οὐ νοῦς, i.e. while the mind of the fool is the Syrian, the mind of the Lover of Discipline is the other Laban, which is not unduly elated.

§ 62. Removed . . . from the Divine Company. Wendland

PHILO

notes this and the similar phrase in § 74 as alluding to Phaedrus 247 A φθόνος γὰρ ἔξω θεῶν χοροῦ ἴσταται. The same thought has already appeared in Leg. All. i. 61, iii. 7. Philo, however, does not use it here in the sense of the original, which means that the Divine Company cannot feel envy. In Spec. Leg. ii. 249 he definitely quotes it and with the proper meaning. So also Quod Omnis Prob. 13.

§ 75. Space entirely filled by a body. This is in accordance with the Stoic definition. A τόπος must be completely filled by σῶμα; if partially filled it remains a χώρα. See S. V. F. ii. 504 f.

§ 82. This quotation from the Theaetetus follows almost immediately on the passage cited in § 68. Each of them is, I think, considerably longer than any citation from Plato to be found elsewhere, and the former is the only passage in this series of treatises in which he gives a reference to the dialogue quoted. The curious way in which in this second passage he disguises the fact that he is practically continuing an earlier quotation might suggest that he took both passages from some collection and did not know the reference for the latter, but probably it may be regarded as merely one of his mannerisms.

§ 101. Placed nearest, etc. Or "set up," ἀφιδρυμένος, in accordance with the common use of ἀφιδρυμα for an image, carrying on the thought of εἰκῶν. Drummond translates ἐγγ. ἀφ. by "the nearest model to," but if by this is meant the "closest reproduction of," the phraseology of μηδενὸς ὄντος μεθορίου διαστήματος seems strange. Wendland's ἐφιδρυμένος seems to me pointless.

§ 114. ἄθεον. To expunge this word as inappropriate seems to me rather hypercritical; that polytheism is essentially atheism is a natural remark. In fact Philo has made a very similar if not identical observation in De Ebr. 110, where the mss. have τὸ γὰρ πολύθεον ἐν ταῖς τῶν ἀφρόνων ψυχαῖς ἀθεότητα, after which Wendland supplies κατασκευάζει, but Mangey's ἀθεότης is quite possible.

§ 134. "Breath" or "spirit." It seems impossible to get any satisfactory equivalent for the Stoic πνεῦμα, "a stuff or body akin to the element of air, but associated with warmth and elasticity" (Arnold); see note on Quis Rerum 242. For the term as applied to νοῦς cf. De Som. i. 30. I have not seen other examples in Philo or elsewhere, but it is very commonly applied to ψυχή, e.g. Diog. Laert. vii. 157, where Zeno is said to define ψυχή as πνεῦμα ἐνθερμον. For the idea that πνεῦμα is ὑγρότερον καὶ ψυχρότερον in plants, ξηρότερον καὶ θερμότερον in animals, see S. V. F. ii. 787 ff.

APPENDICES

§ 150. In the shorter form of the allegory in De Mut. 134 f. the pledges are given a different meaning. This is natural because there Judah is no longer the human soul wooing virtue, but God Himself impregnating the soul. Consequently the pledges are not the attributes which constitute human virtue, but those which belong to God's working in the universe.

§ 177. The reasoning habit. Or "the acquisition of the reasoning faculty." Since in the section where Philo deals with πηγή in the sense of παιδεία this phrase does not recur, it would seem that he regards the two as more or less synonymous. This agrees with his use of λογικὴ ἔξις in Leg. All. i. 10 where it is applied to the mental condition of children when they first begin to reason. The use of it in Leg. All. iii. 210 is somewhat similar.

§ 191. ῥύσις or ῥυεὶς. The chief objection to ῥυεὶς is that it involves referring οὗτος in the next sentence to προφορικὸς λόγος, whereas it is clear that the "great deluge" is the ῥύσις of all the senses (and the mind). If ῥύσις is read, γούν would be taken, as not unfrequently, as transitional to the development of the ῥύσις of the text, which up to now has only been treated incidentally. It would be better perhaps in this case, though not necessary, to read ἀκώλυτος.

§ 200. This defective sentence seems to need something which will give a forcible contrast to the actual unretentiveness described in the next sentence. I suggest κεὶ φρενὶ . . . ταμειέσθαι ἔστι, i.e. they require the inpouring even if they can hold it (which they can't). Variants of this might be κἂν . . . ἦ or εἰ εἴη, in the latter case the εἰ clause being the protasis to ἢ γένοιτ' ἂν . . . in the sense of "which would (rather than "must") be the result, if only . . ." Dr. Rouse suggests ἄ δεῖ for καί, which will give much the same sense, but would, I think, require the omission of τά before παραδοθέντα.

APPENDIX TO DE MUTATIONE NOMINUM

§ 7. Into the darkness. Philo treats this text in much the same way in De Post. 14 ff., and follows it up in the same way with Ex. xxxiii. 13. But there he insists on a point which he does not make here, viz. that the search is not altogether fruitless, since to realize that τὸ ὄν is incomprehensible is in itself a vast boon.

§ 12. The three natural orders, etc. This favourite idea of the "educational trinity" stated by Aristotle in the form παιδεία δεῖν τριῶν, φύσεως, διδασκαλίας, ἀσκήσεως, is several times applied by Philo to Isaac, Abraham, and Jacob respectively. See note on De Sac. 5-7. But the representation of Isaac as τελειότης (Joh. Dam.) or ὁσιότης (mss.) instead of as φύσις or αὐτομαθής does not seem appropriate, and is not, as far as I have seen, paralleled elsewhere. It may be worth consideration whether Philo wrote τῶν τριῶν, φύσεως, διδασκαλίας, ἀσκήσεως, and when φύσεως had been corrupted to φύσεων the blank thus created for Isaac was variously filled up. That the things symbolized should then be given in their ordinary order and the symbols in their historical order would not, I think, be unnatural. Mangey proposed φύσεως in place of ὁσιότητος, which seems somewhat more arbitrary.

§ 13. ὄνομά τι. This reading, which, supported as it is by the mss. ὄνοματι, has almost as much authority as Joh. Dam.'s τὸ ὄνομα, seems to me decidedly preferable in sense. In the next sentence Philo seems to lay down that τὸ ὄνομά μου κύριον is not a natural way of expressing "my proper name," and it is unlikely that he would himself adopt this order of the words.

Ibid. Transposition. Hyperbaton defined as an "arrangement of words or thoughts changed from the consecutive order" (λέξεων ἢ νοήσεων ἐκ τοῦ κατ' ἀκολουθίαν κεινημένη τάξις) is a wide term of which the grammarians give several subdivisions, including tmesis and parenthesis. Quoted examples somewhat similar to the hyperbaton here as supposed by Philo are "transtra per et remos" and γέλασσε δὲ πᾶσα περὶ χθῶν (for περιεγέλασε). See Ernesti s.v. and indices to Greek and Latin Grammarians.

APPENDICES

§ 28. In a sense relative. On ὡσαυτὶ πρὸς τι Drummond writes (Philo Judaeus, vol. ii. pp. 48, 49): "When we ascribe to Him titles which are descriptive of relation, we refer only to certain aspects of His being, certain 'powers' which, because they are directed towards objects, are quasi-relative. The limitation quasi seems to imply that the dependence of the correlative terms is not mutual, but is all on one side, and that not the divine side. The powers of the self-existent are put forth into exercise without experiencing any alteration in their intrinsic character through the reaction of the objects to which they are applied; so that, although their names involve a relation, it would be truer to say that their objects are relative to them than that they are relative to their objects." It is perhaps worth noting that ὡς πρὸς τι (quasi ad aliquid) was an accepted grammatical name for exclusive opposites as "night," "day," and "life," "death," distinguished from πρὸς τι, e.g. "father," "son." See index to Grk. Gramm. Philo, however, cannot be using ὡσαυτὶ in this sense, as βασιλεὺς and εὐεργέτης are clearly πρὸς τι.

§ 32. And all that company. Compare the Stoic dogma αὐστηρὸς εἶναι πάντας τοὺς σπουδαίους, Diog. Laert. vii. 117, S. V. F. iii. 637-639. At the same time it is strange to find Philo limiting the wise entirely to this kind, in view of what he says in §§ 39 ff., and though his alternations between the Stoic strictness and the τιθασὸς καὶ ἡμερος σοφία of the Peripatetics are often startling, I think it may be worth while to consider the textually easy suggestion in the footnote: <τοῖ>οὗτος δὲ πᾶς ὁ θίσιος <ὸς>.

§ 34. Was not found. This wording of the LXX suits Philo's argument admirably, since one phrase of theirs was that the wise man μεχρὶ τοῦ νῦν ἀνεύρετός ἐστι (S. V. F. iii. 32, p. 216).

§ 36. A wise man is non-existent. Other Stoic pronouncements more or less in this sense, though not quite so absolute, are that the wise man like the Phoenix appears once in 500 years, Seneca, Ep. 42. 1; that there have been not more than one or two of them, Eusebius, Pr. Ev. vi. 8. 13; that Hercules or Ulysses may have realized the ideal, Seneca,

PHILO

De Const. 2. 1, and that Zeno, Cleanthes, and Chrysippus all fell short of it, Quintilian xii. 1.

§ 46. Because He was good. Evidently taken from Timaeus 29 D, E λέγωμεν δὴ δι' ἣν τινα αἰτίαν γένεσιν καὶ τὸ πᾶν τὸδε ὁ ξυριστὰς ξυνέστησεν. ἀγαθὸς ἦν, ἀγαθῷ δὲ οὐδεὶς περὶ οὐδενὸς οὐδέποτε ἐγγίγνεται φθόνος· τούτου δ' ἐκτὸς ὧν πάντα ὁ τι μάλιστα γενέσθαι ἐβουλήθη παραπλήσια ἑαυτῷ. But by stopping short at ἀγαθός and ignoring the last ten words Philo seems rather to miss Plato's point. See note on De Cher. 125.

§ 47. Positively righteous conduct. Philo here uses κατορθοῦ in a sense slightly different from the regular Stoic use. With them the κατορθώματα are actions done from a good motive and part of a generally virtuous course of conduct, and are opposed to καθήκοντα or common duties; here it is opposed to simple abstention from evil-doing. See note on Quod Deus 100.

§ 57. ἐνηχεῖ. The word is inadequately treated in the Lexica. L. & S. "whisper, prompt," cited from Philo (omitted in later editions) cannot be maintained in face of Quis Rerum 67, where it is coupled with ἐμβοήσαι. The six examples quoted from Philo in the index as well as in others from later writers in Stephanus suggest that, as with κατηχεῖν, the main idea is insistent or reiterated address, thus passing easily (again like κατηχεῖν) into "instruction." So perhaps here, where the thought may be that generally the teacher stands superior to the taught, but in this case treats him as an equal. Cf. also Quis Rerum 71.

§ 61. Wendland's expunging of στοιχείω περιττεῖ is rather arbitrary. Short of this there are three possibilities: (a) read as Markland στοιχείου περιττόν. This seems pointless, unless we might take it as a reference to the cacophony of a repeated α (the combination αα is certainly rare); (b) <ὡς> στοιχείω περιττεῖ<ν>, i.e. to be better off by a letter—again somewhat pointless; (c) <τὸ> στοιχείω περιττεῖ<ν> and transfer to after παρεσχῆσθαι—"a fine boon—to be better off by a letter." This would certainly be effective, if the transference is not too drastic.

For τοῦ ἐνὸς ἀλφα perhaps read ἐνός, τοῦ ἀλφα. Cf. § 77.

Need we suppose with Wendland that a clause has slipped out after παρεσχῆσθαι? Abraham's case has been dealt with; Sarah's has not. It is possible, I think, to regard τὴν <γάρ>

APPENDICES

Ἄβραμ . . . παραλαβὼν as a parenthetical explanation by Philo himself of the addition of rho.

§ 62. Misgivings of this sort. Or simply "ideas," i.e. that God actually changes names, cf. ὑπονοεῖν, § 64. In this case the insertion of τοιαύτας seems necessary. Possibly, however, ὑπονοίας is used in the regular Philonic sense of underlying or allegorical meanings, and the corruption lies in ἐκκόψαιμεν (ἐκκαλύψαιμεν?). In this case the insertion of τοιαύτας is not needed.

§ 65. Signs. The use of χαρακτήρ here, as compared with 70 and 83, all of which must stand together, is difficult. Ordinarily χαρ., if it does not mean literally a stamp, is not a type or symbol, but a trait or characteristic, and this suits § 83, for the two kinds of virtue. It may with some forcing suit § 70, for though the names are the χαρακτῆρες they represent characteristics. But here this is not so, for the χαρ. which are small, sensible, and obscure must be the names and not what they represent. I have tried to evade the difficulty by translating "signs."

§ 77. Facts. Philo here uses τυγχάνοντα more or less in the sense in which it was used in the Stoic theory of speech. They distinguished between (1) φωνή, the actual word spoken; (2) σημαινόμενον or σημαινόμενον πρᾶγμα, otherwise called λεκτόν, the meaning understood by the hearer; (3) τύχανον, the actual object spoken of. Cf. S.V.F. ii. 166. Philo seems to make this distinction in Leg. All. ii. 15 τοῦ τυγχάνοντος ἢ τοῦ σημαινομένου. Here he perhaps uses τυγχ. for σημ., and though in Plutarch Adv. Colotem 1119 E the Epicureans are censured by the Stoics for eliminating σημ. and retaining only φωνή and τύγχ., the Stoics themselves are said to do the same in S.V.F. ii. 236.

§ 106. The so-called sacred games. Cf. De Agr. 116 f, where after describing the pentathlon and other contests he says τούτων μὲν δὴ τῶν ἀγώνων πρὸς ἀλήθειαν ἱερός οὐδεὶς, κὰν πάντες ἄνθρωποι μαρτυρῶσιν . . . ὁ τοίνυν Ὀλυμπιακὸς ἀγὼν μόνος ἂν λέγοιτο ἐνδίκως ἱερός, οὐχ ὅν τιθέασιν οἱ τὴν Ἥλιω οἰκοῦντες, ἀλλ' ὁ περὶ κτήσεως τῶν θείων καὶ ὀλυμπίων ὡς ἀληθῶς ἀρετῶν.

§ 113. If Mangey's correction of φαινόμενα to ποιμαινόμενα is adopted the picture becomes clear. The shepherd-mind and its sheep "the flock of reasoning" are naturally inseparable, and if the mind is enticed out into the bodily region, the flock will be easily given over by the senses into the hands of the "shepherds of an evil herd."

PHILO

§ 114. Guidance and rule of law. In the Stoic sense of law see S. V. F. iii. 613, 614 λόγος ὀρθὸς προστακτικὸς μὲν ὦν ποιητέον, ἀπαγορευτικὸν δὲ ὦν οὐ ποιητέον, and therefore the wise man alone is νόμιμος.

§ 121. ποῖος οὗτος. Siegfried in a pamphlet, Die hebräischen Worterklärungen des Philo, pp. 21, 22, has the following note which I transcribe for the benefit of Hebraists: "τὸν Ὄση ἐμετονομάζει Μωσῆς εἰς τὸν Ἰησοῦν, indem er den irgendwie beschaffenen zu einer bestimmten Qualität umprägt. Denn Ὄση ἐστὶν = ποῖος οὗτος 'irgendwie beschaffen ist dieser' Hebräisch dachte sich Philo Ὄση ἐστὶν etwa = הַיֵּשׁוּעַ. Er mochte meinen אֵךְ bediente an sich 'irgendwie,' da אֵךְ mit הַיֵּשׁוּעַ = 'wie' ist."

However plausible this explanation may be as far as the Hebrew goes, it cannot be fitted into the Greek. ποῖος is not "irgendwie beschaffen," which would rather be ὅποιος οὖν or even ἄποιος. And even if ποῖος can mean this, it is incompatible with the use in the next sentence and in the references given in the footnote to Leg. All. Mangey makes the same mistake when he translates "salus qualiscumque."

§ 135. Chain of destiny. Though there is no real philological connexion between εἰμαρμένη and εἰρμός, it seems to have been regularly assumed. See S. V. F. ii. 915-921, e.g. 918 ἡ εἰμαρμένη εἰρμός τις οὖσα αἰτιῶν ἀπαράβατος· οὕτω γὰρ οἱ Στωικοὶ ὀρίζονται.

§ 138. Superstition, etc. It is noticeable that here also as in De Cher. 48 Philo insists on the esoteric character of the doctrine, that God was the father of the child of a human mother, as something which should not be mentioned to profane ears. See also Leg. All. iii. 219. Presumably he felt that it easily lent itself to confusion with pagan myths.

§ 144. ἀμβλισκουσαν for ἀναλίσκουσαν. In support of this conjecture and the suggestion that Philo may have in mind Theaetetus 149 D, it may be noted that Plato in the same passage speaks of the midwives regulating συνοῦσται, also that, in the parallel passage in Hannah's hymn, Quod Deus 14, we saw some reason to suspect a quotation from the Theaetetus. He alludes again to the treatise in § 212 and quotes it at some length in De Fuga 63 and 82.

It may be objected, no doubt, that ἀμβλισκειν used trans-itively would properly apply to the fruits of the συνουσία, rather than to the συνουσία itself; but this does not come out clearly from the words of the Theaetetus. I do not at any rate think that ἀναλίσκουσαν can be right.

APPENDICES

§ 146. Many and indeed infinite particulars. For this "recognized formula of the Platonic school" cf. particularly Philebus 14 c, 15 v ff.

§ 150. Perversions of art. Cf. Quintilian ii. 15. 2 "(rhetorice) quidam pravitatem quandam artis, id est κακοτεχνίαν, nominaverunt."

§ 152. The Sage alone is king. This Stoic "paradox," see S.V.F. iii. 617, has already appeared in De Sobr. 57 and De Mig. 197, and appears later in De Som. ii. 244.

§ 153. The definitions of the four virtues are those regularly accepted by the Stoics, see S.V.F. iii. 262. Cf. Leg. All. i. 63.

§ 160. Orousis. See S.V.F. iii. 169, where it is defined as φορὰ διανοίας ἐπί τι μέλλον, but (ibid. 173) the ὁρμή πρὸ ὁρμῆς is called ἐπιβολή.

§ 167. Virtue is . . . a thing for joy. Cf. Cicero, Tusc. Disp. v. 43 "semper sapiens beatus est. Atque etiam omne bonum laetabile est."

Ibid. A state of happy feeling. Who are the philosophers alluded to? Hardly the Stoics. I have found no evidence that they identified εὐπάθεια with ἀρετή, and it is prima facie unlikely. Outside Stoicism the word seems to be used rather with the suggestion of bodily welfare, or at least without the higher sense which Philo, who several times couples it with ἀρετή, often gives it. See note on De Mig. 219. I can hardly think, however, that he speaks without authority and should conjecture that there were philosophers who like him used it as = εὐδαιμονία and naturally therefore equated it with ἀρετή, perhaps also like him colouring it with the Stoic insistence on joy as "the best of the higher emotions."

The mss. reading ἀπάθειαν was retained by Mangey, and has in its favour that the Stoics definitely identified ἀπ. with ἀρ. (οἱ Στωικοὶ τὴν ἀρετὴν τίθενται ἐν τῇ ἀπαθείᾳ Ps.-Plut. Hom. 134, cf. S.V.F. iii. 201), but the context clearly makes it impossible.

§ 197. Worthy of perseverance. Though neither Mangey nor Wendland question the reading, this use of ὑπομονή seems to me strange, for ἀνδρεία consists of ὑπομονή, or at least of knowledge of ἃ δεῖ ὑπομένειν, cf. § 153, and no one could be said ὑπομένειν ἀνδρείαν. I think ἐπιμονῆς should be read, used by Philo for "persistence," e.g. Quod Det. 118. The phrase then = δεῖ ἐπιμένειν τῇ ἀνδρείᾳ. A tempting emendation would be ὑπομονῆ ὑπομονῆς ἀξίω ἢ ἀνδρεία, φυγῆ ἢ δειλία, which would be in exact accordance with the Stoic definition, but definition would be somewhat out of place here.

PHILO

§ 207. Demonstrative pronouns . . . indicate. Both δείξεις and παρεμφάλειν are technical terms in Greek grammar, the former, however, being used to describe the function performed by pronouns in general, personal as well as demonstrative. Possibly therefore "pronouns" would be a better translation here than "demonstrative pronouns," see Grk. Gramm. Part II. vol. i. p. 9. The meaning of παρεμφάλειν is best seen from the use of ἀπαρέμφατος as the regular term for the infinitive, because it does not particularize any gender, number, or person like the "paremphatic" words. See an article by myself in the Journal of Theological Studies, January 1921.

§ 217. His charge. Mangey and Wendland question ὁ ἀγομένος, proposing ὁ εἰσαγόμενος or ὁ παιδαγωγούμενος. I understand Philo to be thinking of the derivation of παιδαγωγός from παῖς and ἄγω, and probably also of the fact that one chief function of the παιδ. was to escort the boy to school.

§ 242. Freedom from disturbance. This translation is put forward as a desperate attempt to give some sense to the text as it stands. If we take ἡσυχία in the natural sense of "silence," as it clearly is used, with reference to this passage, in § 251, the whole becomes absurdly pointless. Even with Wendland's conjecture of ἐπεὶ τοι for κἄπειτα, "if a man does not keep silence he can surely be silent if he wishes" is strangely inept. I believe the passage is corrupt. The sense required is, speaking is voluntary, and therefore abstention from kind words and speaking unkind words are equally wrong. This might be obtained by correcting to ὁ μὴδ' ἐκ τύχης ἐθέλων τι τῶν ἐπιεικεστέρων φθέγγασθαι, οὐδὲ (or καὶ οὐδ') λυσιτελῆς τὴν ἀσφαλεστάτην ἡσυχίαν δεξιούσθαι, μὴ ἡσυχάζων' ἐπεὶ τοι τις κτλ. In this case εἰ μὴ . . . φωνῆν would mean "if he fails to speak kindly."

§ 243. The word is the shadow of the act. This saying is ascribed to Democritus, Diog. Laert. ix. 37, Ps.-Plut. De Lib. Educandis 14.

APPENDIX TO DE SOMNIIS, I.

§§ 1-2. Wendland calls attention to the resemblance between these sections coupled with De Som. ii. 1-2, and the classification ascribed to Posidonius in Cic. De Div. i. 64: "Tribus modis censet (sc. Posidonius) deorum adpulsu homines somniare, uno, quod provideat animus ipse per sese, quippe qui deorum cognatione teneatur, altero, quod plenus aer sit immortalium animorum, in quibus tamquam insignitae notae veritatis appareant, tertio, quod ipsi di cum hominibus colloquantur." Of these the first agrees fairly well with Philo's third: "When the soul, setting itself in motion and agitation of its own accord, becomes frenzied, and with the prescient power due to such inspiration foretells the future."

There are also distinct points of contact between Posidonius' second kind and the dreams of this book. In the first vision it is the Logos which Jacob "meets," and the Logoi are described in § 127 in words which recall the "animi immortales" of Posidonius. Also the point is made in § 241 that it was God's "image," not God Himself, which the dreamer beheld. In the second vision it is the Angel who speaks, and the point that God uses His ministers for this purpose is stressed in § 190. Whether any such connexion can have been made between Posidonius's third kind and Philo's first, i.e. the dreams treated in the lost book, seems to me more doubtful. If, as Wendland supposes, these were the warnings sent to Abimelech (Gen. xx. 3-7), and to Laban (Gen. xxxi. 24), it is true that in both these cases "God" is said to have come and spoken, but would Philo have admitted that these were real visions of the Self-existent? Moreover the main ideas underlying the two classifications are different. With Posidonius it is the distinction between the natures of the divine monitors, with Philo the presence or absence of human volition. The conclusion seems to be that while he probably had the Stoic classification in mind, he has put it into a very different shape.

PHILO

§§ 21-23. The illustrations which follow are mostly drawn primarily from Wendland's article in Sitzungsberichte der Königlich preussischen Akademie der Wissenschaften, 1897, pp. 1074-1079. Wendland refers usually to Diels's Doxographi, to which I subjoin the references as well as to the sources from which Diels took them.

§ 21. Crystal (or ice?). Empedocles said στερέμιον εἶναι τὸν οὐρανὸν ἐξ ἀέρος παγέντος ὑπὸ πυρὸς κρυσταλλοειδῶς (Stobaeus, Ecl. i. 23, p. 500 H., Diels p. 339).

Pure fire. Parmenides, Heraclitus, Strato, Zeno, said πύρινον εἶναι τὸν οὐρανόν (Stob. ib., Diels p. 340).

Fifth substance. Aristotle ἐκ πέμπτου σώματος (οὐρανόν) (Stob. i. 23, p. 502 H., Diels ib.).

§ 22. Lumps of earth. Thales γεώδη μὲν, ἔμπυρα δὲ τὰ ἄστρα (Stob. i. 24, p. 506 H., Diels p. 342).

Dells and glades. Wendland quotes from Diels p. 356 (Stob. i. 26, p. 552 H.) that Anaxagoras and Democritus said that the moon was στερέωμα διάπυρον ἔχον ἐν ἑαυτῷ πέδια καὶ ὄρη καὶ φάραγγας. But a better illustration would be that Democritus called its face an ἀποσκίασμα τῶν ὑψηλῶν ἐν αὐτῇ μερῶν. ἀγκη γὰρ αὐτὴν ἔχει καὶ νάπας (Stob. ib. p. 564 H., not in Diels). But apart from both these being said of the moon and not of the stars, the statement that they were "dells and glades" is totally different from saying that they have them. I should suggest that Philo misunderstood Democritus and supposed him to mean that the stars were fiery hollows in the plain of heaven.

Masses of fiery metal. Archelaus said that they were μύδρους διαπύρους δέ (Stob. i. 24, p. 508 H., Diels p. 342). The same was said by Anaxagoras and Democritus of the sun (Stob. i. 25, pp. 528 and 532 H., Diels p. 349). See footnote.

Unbroken and close harmony. No illustration is forthcoming for this, and I can make no clear suggestion as to the meaning. πυκνός (Lat. spissus) is a term used in music with compounds ἀ-, βαρύ-, ὀξύ-, μεσό- πυκνός, and applied to φθόγγος. Whether there can be any connexion with this, I must leave to others. Stephanus also quotes from Pollux, as epithets of a flute-player, εὐστομος, πυκνός, ξυνεχής.

APPENDICES

That the stars produced a harmony is of course a well-known Pythagorean belief.

Indissoluble compresses of ether. Anaximander called them πιλήματα αέρος τροχοειδῆ, πυρὸς ἔμπλεα (Stob. i. 24, p. 510 H., Diels p. 342). As there seems little connexion between this view and that of the "harmony" one is tempted to insert ἦ before πιλήματα.

Living and intelligent. Zeno said that each of the stars is νοερὸν καὶ φρόνιμον (Stob. i. 25, p. 538 H., Diels p. 467).

§ 23. Borrowed light. Ascribed to Thales in the first instance and held by Pythagoras, Parmenides, Empedocles, Anaxagoras and Metrodorus (Stob. i. 26, p. 558 H.). A light of its own to Anaximander, Xenophanes, Berosus (Stob. i. 26, p. 556, Diels p. 358).

§ 28. Genera . . . systems. On this section I have consulted two high musical authorities, Professor Percy Buck and Dr. Rootham, though neither of them must be considered responsible for the choice of words in these two cases. As γένη is the technical term in Greek music for the three "modifications," enharmonic, diatonic and chromatic (see Aristides Quintilianus i. 9), I have followed the Dictionary of Antiquities in translating it "genera." Other words suggested are "groupings" or "scales." Again as to στάσει (or τάσει) as applied to conjunct and disjunct tetrachords the same authorities shew that the regular term is συστήματα (A. Q. i. 8), and I have sought safety in adhering to this. Professor Buck suggests "relationships (of tetrachords)." As to the reading, while στάσις is certainly not a full equivalent for σύστημα, it seems possible here in the sense of "placing" or "setting." τάσις is a "pitch." Professor Buck notes that the word is so far appropriate that conjunct and disjunct tetrachords can be placed at any "pitch" you like, but could we say that the συνημμένον in general is one τάσις and διεξευγμένον another? I am inclined to suggest συστάσει. In σύστασις we have a fairly near synonym for σύστημα, easily corrupted into στάσις or τάσις, and perhaps preferred by Philo as avoiding the jingle with διαστήμασι. (Or again τάξει might be possible, though textually less satisfactory.)

§§ 30-32. Illustrations mostly drawn, as those on §§ 21-23, from Diels are as follows. It should be noted that, properly speaking, they apply to the ψυχῆ rather than to the νοῦς.

PHILO

§ 30. Breath. "Zeno concretum corpori spiritum (dixit animam)" (Cicero, Somn. Scip. i. 14. 19, Diels p. 213). Much the same is said of Hippocrates and Democritus, ibid.

Blood. "Empedocles et Critias sanguinem," ibid.

Boundary-line. Or "limit"? Wendland cites Iamblichus quoted in Stob. Ecl. i. 41, p. 858 H. to the effect that Aristotle reduced the properties of the soul to three, thus πέρας τῶν ἀπειρῶν ἀνευρών. But does this mean more than that the properties of the soul are really infinite? I should imagine the opinion to be Pythagorean and to embody to some extent the idea of πέρας as it appears in Philolaus's dictum that all things are composed ἐξ ἀπειρῶν τε καὶ περαιωνόντων, cf. Plato, Philebus, 16 and 23.

Form. "Posidonius ideam (animam dicit)" (Cic. ibid.). Perhaps more to the point ὡς δὲ τῶν Ἀριστοτελικῶν τινες ὑφηγοῦνται, εἰδὸς ἐστὶ τὸ (ἐπι?) περὶ τοῖς σώμασι (Stob. i. 41 from Iamblichus). See also definition of ἐντελέχεια.

Number. Pythagoras ἀριθμὸν αὐτὸν κινούντα (Stob. i. 41, p. 794 H., Diels p. 386); Cicero, Somn. Scip. i. 14. 19, Diels p. 213, "Xenocrates numerum se moventem."

Continuity. I have retained ἐνδελέχειαν in the text, as Wendland, with grave doubt. The somewhat slight arguments in its favour are (1) the unanimous authority of the mss., (2) Cic. Tusc. i. 22 "Aristoteles . . . animum ἐνδελέχειαν appellat novo nomine quasi quandam continuatam motionem et perennem." And if this is as it seems a mistake of Cicero's it is one which Philo may easily have made. On the other hand Diog. Laert. v. 32 of Aristotle is clear for ἐντελέχεια. The soul is incorporeal, ἐντελέχειαν οὔσαν τὴν πρώτην σώματος φυσικοῦ καὶ ὀργανικοῦ δυνάμει ζωῆν ἔχοντος. λέγει δ' ἐντελέχειαν, ἧς ἐστὶν εἰδὸς τι ἀσώματον. And so also Stob. i. 41, p. 796 H., Diels p. 387. If ἐντ- has to be translated I should prefer to keep "entelechy" rather than "realization" (Hicks), or "actuality" (L. & S.).

Harmony. Pythagoras and Philolaus, Cic. ibid., Diels ibid.

§ 31. Introduced . . . from without. Pythagoras, Anaxagoras, Plato, Xenocrates, Cleanthes, θύραθεν εἰσκρίνεσθαι τὸν νοῦν (Stob. i. 40, p. 790 H., Diels p. 392).

The air . . . impart hardness, etc. Cf. S.V.F. ii. 804-808, where this theory is mentioned with the use of the same verb στομοῦται and the same derivation of ψυχή from ψῦξις (originally given by Plato, Crat. 399 ε).

APPENDICES

§ 32. Head . . . heart. See note on De Sac. 136. "Citadel" from Timaeus 70 α, where Archer-Hind quotes from Galen, De Plac. Hipp. et Plat. ii. 230 καθάπερ ἐν ἀκροπόλει τῇ κεφαλῇ δίκην μεγάλου βασιλέως ὁ ἐγκέφαλος ἴδρυται.

§ 44. Sails of the sovereign mind . . . oars of sense-perception. I have retained Mr. Whitaker's translation which brings out the original meaning of the proverbial δεύτερος πλοῦς (see L. & S.). Philo's insistence on the nautical idea, as shewn in εὐπλοῆσαι, suggests that he is not using the phrase casually, as no doubt it often was used. But since πρός suggests the goal of the sailor rather than the means he employs, it may perhaps be thought better to translate "those voyagers who have failed to reach the sovereign mind can always take the 'second-best voyage' to sense." Philo again uses the phrase, which Plato had made familiar to him, in § 180 below and De Dec. 84, but with no special emphasis on the metaphor.

§ 47. Grandfather . . . of his knowledge. I take this opportunity of making good an omission in earlier volumes. The Oxyrhynchus Papyrus of Philo (P. Oxy. ix. 1173, xi. 1356), to which my attention has been called by a paper by Mr. W. G. Waddell (Études de Papyrologie, tom. i., Le Caire, 1932), had entirely escaped our notice, though published some twenty years ago. Though of about the same date as the Paris Papyrus (see Introductions to De Sac. and Quis Rerum), it appears to be exceedingly fragmentary, and I doubt whether it would have influenced our text, with the possible exception to be now mentioned. One of the pieces (Fr. 3) contains fragments of that part of De Sac. (§ 43) in which the parallel phrase πάππῳ τῆς ἑαυτοῦ παιδείας occurs, and on which, following Cohn, we threw some suspicion. It now appears from Mr. Waddell's analysis of this Papyrus that in a lacuna between μεμάθηκε δὲ ταῦτα and ἑαυτοῦ παιδείας there is room for about seven letters more than what appears in the other authorities, viz. παρὰ τῷ πάππῳ τῆς, and he suggests παρὰ τῷ πάππῳ <τῷ πατρὶ> τῆς. The fact is noticeable, and standing by itself would certainly increase the natural suspicion of this odd phrase. But, on the other hand, the recurrence here of an almost identical expression applied to the same two persons, Abraham and Jacob, points to the conclusion that "grandfather of his education" (or "knowledge") is right, and that some other explanation is needed for the phenomena of the Papyrus. Cohn himself (Hermes, 1897, p. 140) cast doubt on his own suspicions, basing himself on Quod Deus 92. But the far more conclusive evidence of this phrase in De Som. i. seems still to have escaped his notice; unless indeed, which I can hardly think possible, he took ἐπιστήμης as dependent on βρομα, as Mangey does.

PHILO

§ 53. Whether it is a foot in diameter. So Heraclitus εἶρος ποδὸς ἀνθρώπου (Stob. i. 25, p. 526 H., Diels p. 351).

Many times its size. Perhaps referring to Anaximander's opinion that the circle of the sun is 28 times that of the earth, though the visible portion which we call the sun is equal to the earth (Stob. i. 25, p. 524, Diels ibid.). Cf. Cic. Acad. ii. 82 "quem mathematici amplius duodeviginti (? duodetriginta) partibus confirmant maiorem esse quam terram. Mihi quidem pedalis videtur." For other opinions which Philo may have in mind see Reid's note in loc.

§ 54. What is above . . . close to yourself. Wendland compares with this the words ascribed by Tertullian to Epicurus (Usener, Epicurea, p. 229). Other writers assign the saying to Socrates.

§ 57. All that existeth, etc. This quotation, which has already been made by Philo in a similar context, De Mig. 195, has special appropriateness because it was said to have been applied by Socrates himself to his own inquiries (Diog. Laert. ii. 21).

Ibid. The exact meaning of § 57 is not very clear. The thought suggested in the translation is that the meteorologist is ironically told that he may mount to heaven if he will, but the only good he can do by this is to get hold of the "explorer" and bring him down to earth. Philo seems to forget that the whole speech is addressed to the κατάσκοπος, see § 53.

Again, if γνώθι σαυτὸν, or, as we should certainly expect, <τὸ> γ. σ., is the object of ἀντισπάσας, the passage has a curious resemblance to the "e caelo descendit γνώθι σεαυτὸν" of Juv. xi. 27. This phrase receives no illustration from the commentators on Juvenal, and I suspect may be founded on some proverbial line, which Philo also makes use of. If on the other hand γ. σ. is the principal verb and ἀντισπάσας governs τὸν κατάσκοπον, it will be almost necessary to omit εἶτα, as Mangey and indeed the majority of the mss. do.

APPENDICES

§ 99. ἀνείμονα. The only quotation given for this word either in Stephanus or the revised L. & S. is Od. iii. 348:

ἀνείμονος ἢ πενιχροῦ, ὣ οὐ τι χλαῖναι καὶ ῥήγεα πόλλ' ἐνὶ οἴκῳ, οὐτ' αὐτῷ μαλακῶς οὔτε ξείνοισιν ἐνεύδειν.

The fact that in both passages the word is used of sleeping with inadequate covering suggests that we have here a distinct reminiscence of Homer. Note also the appearance of πενιχρός, a rare word in Philo, just above. But he also uses the word in De Spec. i. 83 of the priests when clad ἐν μόνοις τοῖς χιτωνίσκοις, and perhaps in De Gig. 53, where I have suggested ἀνείμονι for the mss. ἀνειμένη.

§ 101. Explanatory statement. L. & S. 1927 give this passage as an example of ἀφορισμός = "a pithy sentence," "aphorism." I do not see anything pithy in it, or, if there is, how it bears on Philo's view that the form of the passage favours an allegorical rather than a literal interpretation. The argument is clearly very similar to, and I believe identical with, that of 82 above, De Fuga 171 and De Ebr. 138, where stress is laid on the use of the future indicative instead of the imperative. In all these cases the thought was that the words indicated not a personal prohibition but a fact in spiritual life. I suggest that here it is the same, though it is true that it is not a universal fact that the "taker" of "reason" will restore it before the spiritual sunset.

In the other cases the verb used is ἀποφαίνεται or ἀποφαίνεται γνωμῆν. That here we have ἀφορισμός and ἀφορίζομενος will cause little difficulty if it is remembered that ἀποφαντική and ὀριστική are convertible terms for the indicative mood. The latter word is generally used by Apollonius Dyscolus (see index to Grk. Gramm. vol. i.). Thus after mentioning that both terms are used he adds ἰδίας μέντοι ἐννοίας ἔχεται ἡ ὀριστική, διὰ γὰρ ταύτης ἀποφαίνομενοι ὀρίζομεθα (Syn. 25 b), i.e. the name ὀριστική carries with it the idea not only of a fact stated, but of a particular fact parted off from others. So too the statement itself is regularly called ὀρισμός. That we have here the prefix ἀφ- cannot weigh, I think, against the otherwise overwhelming evidence that the words are used in this grammatical sense.

PHILO

I have followed Wendland's suggestion of inserting ἀποδώσεις αὐτῷ because it seems almost impossible that Philo would have failed to make the point. But the continuation of the quotation is by no means otiose. The verbs are all in the indicative and (except the last) state facts, while in the hortatory form we have the subjunctive expressing purpose. It is a possible conjecture that in some grammatical terminology, otherwise unknown, a sentence containing several indicatives was called an ἀφορισμός instead of an ὄρισμός.

§ 126. Princely abundance of materials. As the text stands the sense is presumably that the conditions described are as good as those of royal state. But a comparison with Quod Det. 13, where Jacob is spoken of as possessing βασιλεὺς περιουσίαν, leaves the possibility that Philo is contrasting his simple living with the patriarchal wealth. If this is the meaning we might conjecture that καίτοι has fallen out after καὶ νῦν.

§ 134. First of those which are related to us (or near to us?). I do not understand what this expression, which implies two sets of κύκλοι, means, or know of any cosmological theory which would justify them. As τῶν for MSS. τοῖς or τῆς is purely conjectural, I should prefer to omit it or substitute τό. We should then get the natural statement that the moon-sphere is the last of the Eight, taking them down from the top, but first if they are taken up from the earth.

§ 138. The numbers and periods determined by nature. What is the reference in these words, called in De Plant. 14 "certain fixed periods"? Have we an allusion to the three περίοδοι χιλιετείς of Phaedrus 248 ε ff., assigned to the philosophical souls, while the unjust remain on earth for 10,000 years? Compare also Rep. x. 617, and the poem of Empedocles quoted by Thompson on the Phaedrus passage.

§ 145. Aristotle speaks of the moon as ἐν μεθορίοις ἀέρος τεταγμένην καὶ τῆς πέμπτης οὐσίας μετέχουσαν (Stob. i. 26, p. 564 H., Diels p. 356). Also μὴ εἶναι αὐτῆς ἀκήρατον τὸ σύγγραμμα διὰ τὰ πρόσγεια αερώματα τοῦ αἰθέρος, ὃν προσαγορεύει σῶμα πέμπτον (Stob. 16, Diels p. 361). For the last part compare the Stoic opinion, τοῦ ἀέρος διαμεταίνοντος ἐμφασιν γίνεσθαι μορφοειδῆ <προσώπου> S.V.F. ii. 673.

§ 153. εἶδωλον. This use of the word is very strange. The nearest parallel for its use as an "idea" or "mental conception" is Xen. Symp. 4. 21 οὕτω σαφὲς ἔχω εἶδωλον αὐτοῦ ἐν τῆ ψυχῆ, ὡς, εἰ πλαστικός ἢ ζωγραφικός ἦν, οὐδὲν ἂν ἦττον ἐκ τοῦ εἰδῶλου ἢ πρὸς αὐτὸν ὁρῶν ὁμοίον αὐτῷ ἀπειργασάμην. But both the genitive following and the context put this on a different footing. Wendland suggests ἐμφαίνει δ' ἔτι καὶ τοιοῦτον <τὸ> or ἐμφαίνεται . . . τῷ εἰδῶλι. Both these assume that εἰδῶλον can be used for a dream in general. If the word is to stand I should prefer to read τοιοῦτου εἰδῶλον, "an image or picture of the following idea."

APPENDICES

§ 158. ἐπερείδοντος. The mss. have this word in the active here and § 241, and De Plant. 7 in the sense of "support" or "establish." In each case editors have suggested ὑπερίδω (Mr. Whitaker in De Plant. 7 ἀπ-). The lexica certainly give no evidence for this meaning for ἐπ-, which would naturally mean "to make to rest upon" (something in the dative), and Philo frequently uses it so in the passive. As, however, stability is generally given in this way, it is not unnatural that the word should get this extended meaning, and it seems hardly wise to overrule the repeated evidence of the mss.

§ 164. Prompter. This is perhaps as near as we can get to the meaning of ὑπήχει. But the word, which is frequently used by Philo, seems to carry with it the thought of a voice heard inwardly and not audible in the ordinary sense. Thus it is sometimes coupled with ἐνδοθεν, and several times (e.g. De Mut. 139) applied to the divine voice which speaks to the prophet, to the memories or echoes of the lecturer's words which the student carries away with him (De Cong. 67), and to the "haunting" voice of enticing pleasure (De Post. 155). Other examples in this volume are De Som. ii. 2 and 252. This usage is entirely ignored in L. & S. Stephanus quotes some of these passages, but inadequately translates by "succinere."

§ 184. A space outside it in the interval between worlds. An allusion to the Epicurean doctrine that the gods' habitation was the μετακόσμια (intermundia). Cf. (Ἐπίκουρος φησι) καθῆσθαι τὸν θεὸν ἐν τοῖς μετακοσμίοις οὕτω καλουμένοις ὑπ' αὐτοῦ, Usener, Epicurea, p. 240 (quoted from Hippolytus); "deos induxit Epicurus . . . habitantes tamquam inter duos lucos sic inter duos mundos propter metum ruinarum," Cic. De Div. ii. 40.

§§ 186-188. The two chief difficulties are the phrases ἐν τῷ χειροτονηθέντι and ὁ κόσμος μετακληθήσεται. Mr. Whitaker's theory as to the first, that the "appointed one" is the Logos, may be tenable in so far as there is good evidence for the thought that the intelligible world is in the Logos or is itself the Logos, see De Op. 17 and 20, and it has the great merit that it takes the text as it stands. But the application of "Him who was appointed in accordance with divine bounties" (or "elections," reading χειροτονίας for χορηγίας as Mr. Whitaker proposed) to the Logos does not seem to me natural, and at any rate it does not lead up to any explanation of the difficulty in § 188.

PHILO

My alternative suggestion cannot, of course, claim to be more than a guess, but I think it has the merit that without any great change of the text it provides an explanation of the whole passage which is consistent throughout and is thoroughly after Philo's manner.

I will take § 188 first. Wendland excludes the whole of the last sentence as a Christian interpolation describing the Celestial City. I see little grounds for this. The New Jerusalem of the Revelation has walls and gates, though it is true that the latter are always open. Possibly Wendland took μετακληθήσεται as meaning "shall receive a new name" in allusion to Rev. ii. 17, and though this sense of the word has little evidence recorded in the lexica it is a quite possible and natural meaning, and has been adopted in the translation. But this carries us but a little way to Wendland's theory of Christian interpolation.

On the supposition that the passage is genuine, the general sense is clear enough that while ordinarily we can only know the intelligible world through our experience of the sensible world, there are conditions in which, or persons to whom, it is known directly. As I have said, the only difficulty is the phrase ὁ κόσμος μετακληθήσεται. If μετακ. is taken as "shall change its name" I can see no sense that Philo could have meant. If we give the word its usual sense of "summoned" we expect a person instead of ὁ κόσμος for the subject, and presumably that person will be Moses, and the higher type of soul that Moses represents. This will be quite consistent with other passages, e.g. De Mut. 7, where the darkness which Moses enters is the contemplation of the incorporeal and invisible substance, and there is a very close analogy in Leg. All. iii. 100: "There is a mind more perfect and more thoroughly cleansed which has been initiated into the great mysteries, a mind which gains its knowledge of the first cause not from created things, as one may learn the substance from the shadow, but lifting its eyes above and beyond creation obtains a clear vision of the uncreated. This mind is Moses." Here there is the difference that the thing directly seen is God Himself, not the world of mind, but otherwise the thought is the same. I propose then to correct κόσμος to κοσμολόγος, "the world explorer," whose world is that of intelligible substance or reality. That the word is not given in the lexica matters not at all; it is a perfectly natural formation which anyone might make on the analogy of μετεωρολόγος, etc., and the phrase κοσμολόγος νοητῆς ὑποστάσεως is as natural at any rate as κόσμος ν. ὑ. The only other emendation actually needed is ἐν τῷ <νῷ> διαχαραχθεῖσα for ἐν τῷ διαχαραχθέντι, though it is possible that μακρόθεν may have fallen out before or after θεαθέν, cf. Ex. xx. 21, "the people stood afar off (μακρόθεν), but Moses entered the darkness." I should explain the corruption in the first case by supposing that νῷ dropped out and that then -θείσης was altered to -θέντι for grammatical reasons.

APPENDICES

The translation of the first half of the sentence will then be: "But the world-explorer whose world is intelligible reality will need no sight of outward shapes, but only the archetypal 'idea' engraved in the mind, and by this he will be summoned to the Form (or Vision), which he sees not in shadow but in substance" (or "will be summoned with no intervening shadow to the Form which he has beheld from afar"). μετακληθήσεται will be an echo of ἐκάλεσε Κύριος τὸν Μωυσῆν, Ex. xxiv. 16, and εἶδος of εἶδος, ibid. 17.

In § 186 the only difficult words are ἐν τῷ χειροτονηθέντι. I suggest that here we have the foreshadowing of the next section, i.e. that they state the exception to the general sense of this section. This can be obtained by correcting ἐν to πλήν, an easy correction in itself, though it is a more serious difficulty that κόσμον νοητόν can hardly stand in that position and some rearrangement is required, the simplest being to transfer the words to after συσταθέντα.

§ 205. ῥυθμούς καὶ μέτρα κτλ. Wendland puts no comma after μέτρα but one after διατονικά, thus implying that enharmonic, etc., are μέτρα. This, which perhaps is a mere slip, is quite impossible. μέτρα must be used in the sense which it regularly bears in the accepted division of music into melody, rhythm, metre, viz. what we mean by metre, cf. Aristides Quintilianus i. 4, where we have μελωδία, ρυθμός, λέξις followed at once by περὶ τὴν λέξιν τὸ μέτρον, and later (i. 10) by a full discussion of μετρική. The triple division is given by Philo in De Cher. 105, De Sob. 36, and De Agr. 137, where the enharmonic, etc., are given as subdivisions of μέλος.

PHILO

Ibid. From rhetoric, etc. Here we have the fundamental divisions of rhetoric which appear in the same form in most of the rhetorical treatises, except that it is perhaps unusual to find both τάξις and οἰκονομία, the latter, which covers the management and organization of the material, either superseding the former, or including it as a subdivision. Synonyms for φράσις are λέξις, ἀπαγγελία, ἐρμῆνεια, the last named of which is used by Philo in De Cher. 105, and, I believe, in De Mig. 35. See notes on those two passages.

§ 214. Ashes. As the point is essential to Philo's illustration, one must suppose that he found, or thought he had found, some authority for the statement that ashes were used in purificatory ritual. The nearest evidence I can find is the use of the "ashes of the heifer" in Num. xix. 9, alluded to in Hebrews ix. 13. Possibly τέφρα, like κονία, may have been a name for some kind of lye or soap, but I know of no evidence for it.

§ 230. Not from any superstitious nicety, etc. The explanation I should prefer to give to this passage is that Philo feels that his distinction between θεός and ὁ θεός might subject him to the charge of giving the name of θεός to inferior beings, which would constitute δεισιδαιμονία in the ordinary sense. What then is the meaning of πραγματολογεῖν? Judging from the sequel it is not so much "to use words to express facts" as "to accommodate language to practical needs." The course of thought seems to be: (1) any name for God is a κατάχρησις permitted for the needs of men (§ 230), a point further illustrated in § 231 (the spacing should perhaps be placed at the end of that section rather than at the beginning); (2) God allows men to think that He has been really seen by them (§ 234), and this is illustrated by the pagan legend (§ 233), and the anthropomorphic language of the law (§§ 234-237); (3) He in the same way speaks here of the Angel or Logos as God, though it really was God's image which was seen, and thus πραγματολογεῖ, etc., suits His words to the capacity of His hearers.

APPENDICES

It may be thought that this strains the meaning of πραγματολογεῖν. The fact is that this word, which has been used in De Fug. 54, is rare and of uncertain meaning. Besides these two instances only two others are quoted. In Diog. Laert. ix. 52 it appears to mean "argue," or make a business of arguing, and so possibly in De Fug. 54 (see note). In Anaximenes, Rhet. ad Alex. 32 (31) ἵνα πραγματοποιοῦντες ἀπλοῦν τὸν λόγον καὶ μὴ ποικίλον ποιῶμεν, it seems to mean "speaking plainly and intelligibly," and this is not far from the sense suggested by the context here.

§ 244. Erecting. It is a pity that the impossibility of using the phrase "make to stand" prevents the translator from bringing out fully the insistence with which Philo harps on the thought of "standing" in connexion with στήλη. He finds the idea, no doubt, in the word itself, and repeats it not only in the ἔστηκα of § 241 and στάσις of § 242, but also in ιστάς § 244, στήσεις § 245, ἀνίστησι, ἀναστήσας § 249.

§ 247. Set up. Similarly the thought of ἀνάθεσις is repeated in ἀνετέθη here, and ἀνακείσεται (κείμαι as often being treated as the passive of τίθημι), though in these cases the idea of "dedication" seems to be reduced to the literal "set up," unless, as perhaps is possible, it is used in the sense of "devoted" under a curse, cf. the common use of ἀνάθεμα, or (in the first case) unless there is an allusion to models of wrecked ships or pieces of the actual wreck being dedicated as votive offerings by the saved. For votive pictures of this kind see Mayor on Juv. xii. 27.

§ 254. 1 Sam. i. 11.—Wendland erroneously gives the reference as to v. 28 ("I lend him as a loan"), as also in Quod Deus 6, on which passage, carelessly following Wendland, I suggested in a note that Philo in v. 28 had a different version of the text from the LXX. A German reviewer pointed out the mistake.

APPENDIX TO DE SOMNIIS, II.

Note on text.—The Trinity ms. which Cohn on a cursory inspection (Cohn on De Op. p. xxx) declared to be worthless as a whole, and which was therefore practically ignored in his and Wendland's reconstruction of the text, does not seem, in this treatise at least, to deserve such a wholesale condemnation. While it certainly shares with A the great majority of that ms.'s mistakes and adds a fair number of its own, there is a not negligible number of cases where it is more correct. In three cases Wendland has adopted the reading of "Mangey e codice Cantabr. Coll. S. Trin.," viz. σύγχυσις § 152, πᾶσαν § 196, ἐκατέρας § 241, as well as φυρόμενοι § 290, which Mangey had given on the authority of ms. Vat., a name apparently unidentified. But besides these there are several examples in which Wendland in correcting the text of A has actually reproduced that of Trin. Such are παρανέβλαστε § 64, ἀγείροντες § 127, εἰ δὲ δεῖ § 128, φῶς § 140, δντος § 250, κλίματα § 287.

The lacunas in Trin. are also of some interest. While they occur in the same places, except twice where the text runs on continuously, they do not by any means always occupy the same spaces, being in several cases considerably longer. This rouses a suspicion whether Wendland is justified in basing his conjectures, as he does to some extent, on the length of the spaces in A. Professor Minns indeed tells me that the tendency of scribes is to shorten the gaps, and that the greater length may point to the possibility that though Trin. (fifteenth or sixteenth century) is much later than A (thirteenth century) it may belong to a better tradition. In spite, however, of my doubts on this point, I have thought it wiser to record Wendland's notes on the length of the spaces in A.

§ 27. Double diapason. Or perhaps "the two ways of completing the scale," i.e. the conjunct tetrachords symbolize the attitude of the soul when it contemplates the universe by itself. In the disjunct tetrachords it is still concerned in the first tetrachord with creation, but breaks off and passes in the second to the contemplation of the Creator, whom it recognizes to be something different and transcending creation.

APPENDICES

§ 38. εὐκαταφροντιστώ. This is certainly an odd-looking word, but it is correctly formed, if we assume καταφροντίσω as an intensive form, like so many κατα's, of the simple verb; and though only one instance of the verb in this sense (Polybius xxviii. 11. 10) is quoted, and that is said in L. & S. 1927 to be a doubtful reading, this is not much argument in dealing with Philo. On the whole, though the word is regarded as corrupt in Stephanus, I do not see much reason to doubt its genuineness. Wendland is somewhat rash in printing ἀνανταγωνιστώ. It is not only far from the mss. but has less point. The seeker after rewards needs not only persistence but care, and though swiftness is requisite his swift actions must be "well thought out." I should say much the same of Mangey's εὐκαταφόρω.

§ 45. Image and ideal form, etc. Are εἰκῶν and ἰδέα merely synonyms? They are combined in much the same way, though without any definite mention of the Logos, in Leg. All. i. 33, 42 and 53. I should suggest that in all these cases the Logos is the εἰκῶν of God, but the ἰδέα to creation. The usage is thus parallel to the phrases in which man is said to be the εἰκῶν εἰκόνομος, and God the παράδειγμα παραδειγματός. See on De Som. i. 75.

§ 48. Barley-cake and water. Wendland refers to Aelian, Var. Hist. iv. 13 (Usener, Epicurea 602) ὁ αὐτὸς (i.e. Epicurus) ἔλεγεν ἐτοίμως ἔχειν καὶ τῷ Διὶ ὑπὲρ εὐδαιμονίας διαγωνίσεσθαι μάζαν ἔχων καὶ ὕδωρ.

§ 55. οἱ ἐντροφῶντες <τοῖς καθεστῶσι νόμοις, mss. ζῶσι νόμοις. This emendation of Mangey, accepted by Wendland, implies the use of ἐντροφάω = "scorn," a sense which the word does bear, but not apparently elsewhere in Philo, with whom it means "delight in." I am inclined to think that ζω- at any rate may be right. ζῶον, ζωωτός, ζωύφιον, ζωοφόρος are all used of sculptured or painted figures not confined to animals, and cf. ζωγραφία itself. ζωοφόροις would suit the context excellently as it is particularly used of friezes. It is, however, rather far from ζῶσι νόμοις in form. I would ask for consideration of the nearer ζωωμένοις. Though the dictionaries know nothing of any use of ζωω = to carve figures, it is more or less implied by ζωωτός.

PHILO

§ 70. Wendland by giving the reference to Gen. ii. 9 implies that the twofold tree combines the tree of life with the tree of knowledge. It is more probable, I think, that the latter only is meant, twofold because it is the knowledge of good and evil. The reference is certainly also to Gen. iii. 3, where we have οὐ μὴ ἀψησθε αὐτῆς, thus linking up the story of the tree with the prohibition against "taking hold of the pair." While in De Op. 154 Philo interprets the knowledge of good and evil as φρόνησις, i.e. the power to distinguish the two and choose the good, in Leg. All. i. 101 f. the tree is the cause of good and evil, abstinence from which is abstinence from evil. Cf. also ibid. 61. The thought comes out most clearly in Quaestiones Gen. i. 15, where speaking of the tree he says that when good and evil are mingled together, the combination contains the beginning of death ("ubi vero bonum et malum commixta sint, principium habent mixturae mortis").

On the other hand, the tree of life may be the "monad" which Adam neglects. Cf. παρελθόντες τὸ ζωῆς ἀθανάτου φυτὸν, De Op. 156.

Observe the condemnation of duality in this section contrasted with the approval of it in §§ 26-28, a contrast which Philo surely has in mind. When the soul couples its contemplation of creation with acknowledgement of the Creator, duality is blessed; when it mingles good with evil, duality is accursed.

§ 119. The "sacred line." For what little is known of the technical meaning of τὸν ἀφ' ἱερᾶς κινεῖν in the game of πεσσοί see L. & S. on γραμμῆ, and Dict. of Ant. s.v. latrunculi. In the other passages quoted it seems to be a proverbial phrase for "try the last chance." This does not fit here. Possibly we might suppose that if the piece on the sacred line was the last to be moved in defence, it would also ordinarily be the last to be attacked, whereas Xerxes attacks it first. More probably Philo, seeing an effective play of words on the sacredness of the heavens and the sacred line of the draught-board, strains the phrase to cover something especially rash and desperate.

§ 121. The Germans, etc. Wendland quotes Strabo vii. 2. 1 οὐδ' εὖ οὐδ' ὀ φήσας ἑπλα αἰρεσθαι πρὸς τὰς πλημμυρίδας τοὺς

APPENDICES

Κέλτρου. The same is said by Aelian, Hist. ii. 23, of the "Kelts," probably meaning the Germans. It is suggested that this story gave Shakespeare the idea of "taking arms against a sea of troubles."

§ 122. Speared, wounded, etc. So Aelian, ibid. ὡσπεροῦν ἢ φοβῆσαι δυνάμενοι ἢ τρῶσαι.

§ 123. One of the ruling class. Mangey positively declared that this person was Flaccus. It is as positively denied by Edersheim (Dict. of Chr. Biog., article on Philo) and by Ewald (Geschichte Volkes Israel, vol. vi. p. 253 n. 1). There is certainly nothing said in the treatise In Flaccum of an attempt to enforce Sabbath-breaking; and if it had been made, it is most unlikely that Philo would have passed it over. In fact the attempt here mentioned seems to have been unsuccessful, and the point lies in the arrogant and (in Philo's eyes) blasphemous language in which the threat was couched. The immediate predecessors of Flaccus were Iberus (not Severus as in Mangey's text, see Reiter's note on In Flaccum 2) and Vitrasius Pollio (Dion Cassius lviii. 19. 6), and either of these may have been the governor here alluded to.

§ 140. Shall we first bow, etc. Assuming, as in the footnote, that ἀφέντες may be corrected to ὑφέντες (or καθέντες, cf. De Plant. 145), and that πρότερον can be used in antithesis to εἶτα, the following alternative is possible, <δ> (i.e. χεῖρας) ὑφ(καθ)έντες, i.e. the hands are first raised in prayer, then lowered as the suppliant prostrates himself.

§ 209. Pleasure is said by her votaries, etc. The Epicurean view that present ills are mitigated by the memory of past good is several times referred to. See Usener, Epicurea 436-439. The closest parallel to this passage is Cic. Tusc. Disp. v. 34. 95 "(praecepit Epicurus) corpus gaudere tamdiu, dum praesentem sentiret voluptatem, animum et praesentem percipere pariter cum corpore et prospicere venientem nec praeteritam praeterfluere sinere: ita perpetuas et contextas voluptates in sapiente fore semper, cum expectatio speratarum voluptatum cum perceptarum memoria iungeretur."

§ 221. Mangey retained ἐγχωρεῖν ("before thou wast dwelling"), supposing that Philo read or thought he read it in the Lxx. But the argument here and elsewhere shews that he understood εἶναι.

PHILO

§ 245. The lacuna.—Mangey in proposing to fill this up with μάλλον recognized its inappropriateness to ὡς εἰπέ τις, which he wished to correct to ὡς ἂν εἴποι τις. This seems to me unnecessary. One would prefer to suppose some single poetic noun which would signify a waterspout, but I do not know of any such. The missing letters, however, may easily be some epithet applied to rushing water in general (e.g. βαθυδίνης) or adverb (e.g. ἀμβολάδην) or some longer phrase. Wendland does not state the length of the lacuna in A. In Trin. it is over twenty letters. It is a fairly likely guess, considering the number of Homeric phrases in this treatise, that this too comes from Homer. For τις applied to Homer cf. § 260 below, and De Somniis, i. 150.

§ 247. For the lacuna here Wendland suggests ἐπαλλάγως or ἀπαύστως, for example. But I do not see why the initial λ, which also appears in Trin. should be ignored in this case.

§ 282. For this lacuna the following suggestions have been proposed: νυκτός (Hoeschel), νύκτα πεσεῖν (Cohn), νύκτα αἰώνιον (Wendland), νύκτα ἀκτέον (Mangey), αἰώνιον or ἀκτέον being corrections for ἄξιον. Except for the doubtful evidence of space (in Trin. it is about fifteen letters), I see no objection to νύκτα alone. It is easy to supply ἄγεσθαι.

§ 283. Third on the list. Mangey, retaining τρῆς, suggested as possible that the three Aloeidae are meant, cf. De Conf. 4. But the Aloeidae, Otus and Ephialtes, were two, not three. Apart from this, the explanation seems to me very improbable. In De Conf. 4 the story of the Aloeidae is no doubt compared to that of the Babel-builders, but only by the scoffers. While Philo often illustrates his points from Greek myths, I know of no instance where he accepts them in the way which Mangey's suggestion involves.

Ibid. Uncreated, imperishable. Cf. De Op. 7, where the belief that the world was ἀγένητος καὶ ἀίδιος is described as an impious falsehood ascribing inactivity (ἀπραξία) to God. On this Cohn quotes the statement that Xenophanes, Parmenides, and Melissus held that it was ἀγένητος καὶ ἀίδιος καὶ ἀφθαρτος (Diels, Doxographi, p. 332), and the somewhat similar words of Epicurus (Diog. Laert. x. 39), τὸ πᾶν ἀει τοιούτων ἦν ὅλον νῦν ἔσται, καὶ ἀεὶ τοιούτων ἔσται. Philo, however, in the treatise De Aet. maintains that it is ἀφθαρτος, and indeed ascribes this belief to Moses (§ 19). May a reconciliation of these conflicting views be found in the opinion mentioned in Quis Rerum 246 φθαρτὸν μὲν εἶναι, μηδέποτε δὲ φθαρησόμενον? The Maker can destroy it, but never will. See note on that passage. Cf. also De Dec. 58.

APPENDICES

§ 294. Winged chariot. From Phaedrus 246 εὐὸ μὲν δὴ μέγας ἡγεμῶν ἐν οὐρανῷ Ζεὺς ἐλαύνων πτηνὸν ἄρμα πρῶτος πορεύεται. So also in Quis Rerum 301.

§ 300. Ex. vii. 15. It is idle to guess what text or texts followed. Though Euphrates, except in Gen. ii. 15, is only mentioned as a boundary, this and the other three rivers of that passage, as well as the "river of God" in Ps. xli., would serve his purpose. His point is that spiritually the "river of Egypt" alone is identified with mere speech. He seems in § 302 to ignore the fact that in §§ 238 f. he has identified all rivers with λόγος. Possibly the sequel went on to shew that in good rivers speech is reasonable speech which is inseparable from action.

SUPPLEMENTARY LIST OF CASES IN VOLS. I-V., NOT RECORDED IN THE FOOTNOTES, WHERE THE TEXT PRINTED IS NOT VOUCHERD FOR BY ANY MANUSCRIPT OR ANCIENT AUTHORITY

The following list has been drawn up in order to carry out, though in a belated and not very convenient manner, the principle laid down in the preface to Vol. IV., viz. that the places in which the text printed has no ms. authority should be recorded. In that preface I stated that while no consistent attempt had been made to do this in the first two volumes, it was otherwise with Vols. III. and IV. The reviewer of Vol. III., to whose criticism I was replying, rejoined in his review of Vol. IV. that this statement was not quite borne out by the facts. I am grateful to him, for on re-examination of the footnotes to these two volumes, and also of those in Vol. V. which was already in type, I was forced to the conclusion that to a great extent he was right. Not only had a few, though I think very few, of the major emendations been unnoticed in the footnotes, but the fact that while so many minor examples were recorded several others not obviously less important were omitted might justly be said to be misleading.

I hope this catalogue is fairly complete. The only exceptions which I have deliberately made are that I take no notice of (1) mistakes in accents and breathings, (2) orthographical mistakes, using the word in a stricter sense than that which I gave it in the preface to Vol. IV., i.e. for cases where the scribe intends the same word as that which is printed but has spelt it otherwise, (3) changes in the order of words, (4) wrong division of words, in which the actual letters are correct, e.g. μὲν εἰ for μένει, (5) grammatical blunders such as ἄταν with an optative or εἰ with an infinitive.

PHILO

In the heading of the list, by mss. must be stood under besides the codices, not only the Papyrus in the two treatises where it is available, but the excerpts from earlier writers adduced by Cohn and Wendland in their Apparatus Criticus.

VOL. I

DE OFFICIO MUNDI

§	TEXT	MSS.	§	TEXT	MSS.
15	εὐθυβόλω αὐτῇ	εὐθυβόλως αὐτήν	113	εἰσι	εἰσεισι (ἴησι)
50	τοῦ φύσει	τῇ φύσει	117	εἰς πέντε	πρὸς πέντε
54	ἐμπαρεῖχε	παρεῖχεν (ἐμπαρ- έχει)	135	δ γὰρ	τὸ γὰρ
56	ἐναργείας	ἐνεργείας	136	ἐκατέρων	ἐκάτερον (-α)
58	ἀποκρύψει	ἐπικρύψει	147	ἐξήρται	ἐξήρηται
72	ἀφ' ἑαυτοῦ	ὑφ' ἑαυτοῦ	151	ἐναπεματτε- το	ἀπεμάττετο
78	αἰς ἀπάσαις	αἰς ἀπάσαν (οἰς ἅπασι)	154	γνωριστικοῦ	γνωστικοῦ (ὀριστικοῦ)
80	ἀπαντᾶται	ἀπαντᾶ τε	156	προσελθὼν	προσελθεῖν (-ὼν)
81	παραγαγεῖν	παρελθεῖν	158	ἀναρριπίζου- σαι	ἀναρριπτοῦ- σαι
85	ἄροτον	ἄροτρον		ἄθρῶν	ἄθροον
104	ἀμφοτέρων	ἀμφότερα	165	κάν	καὶ (κάκ)
107	καθ' ὃν	καθ' ἣν	166	ἐρῶντα	ἔρωτα
108	ἐκ τῶν τεσ- σάρων	ἣ τῶν διὰ τεσσάρων	171	καθ' οὓς	καθὼς

LEGUM ALLEGORIA, I

§	TEXT	MSS.	§	TEXT	MSS.
1	δὴ ἀμφοτέ- ρων	δι' ἀμφοτέ- ρων	6	τῶν ἐξηκόν- των	ἐξ οὐκ ὄντων (ἐξῆς ἰόν- των)
3	διαιρετόν	διαιρετέον	15	μονάδι	μονάδος
6	περατωθέντα	περαιωθέντα	99	τότε δὲ	τὸ δὲ

SUPPLEMENT TO TEXTUAL FOOTNOTES

LEGUM ALLEGORIA, II

§	TEXT	MSS.	§	TEXT	MSS.
14	ἐστ' ἄν	ἔταν	104	ἐπιστομίζειν	ἐπιστοματί- ζειν
31	τοῦτο δ' ἐστὶ	τοῦτο δ' ἔστι	108	ἐχορήγησεν	ἐχώρησεν
39	ἐναργεῖας	ἐνεργεῖας
73	αἱ ἡλικίαι	καὶ ἡλικίαι

LEGUM ALLEGORIA, III

§	TEXT	MSS.	§	TEXT	MSS.
1	θεὸν	θεοῦ	69	νοήσης	ποιήσης (-ειε)
2	ὅτε	ὅτι	78	νομίζουσι	ὀνομάζουσι
9	ἐνώπιον	ἐν τόπῳ	81	προσφερέτω	προφερέτω
11	σύμπαντα	σύμπασα	83	Ἀβρὰμ	Ἀβραὰμ
16	λογισμῶ	λογισμῶν	84	ἄλεκτον	ἄληκτον
21	κακιῶν	κακῶν	87	ἀναχεῖ τε	ἀναχεῖται
22	συνηχοῦσαι	συνηχοῦσι	94	παθῶν	ποταμῶν
24	μηδὲν	μηδέ	96	ἐν σκιᾷ θεοῦ	ἐν σκιᾷ ὁ θεός
25	ἡμερήσιος	ἡμέριος	104	ὑπὸ θεοῦ	ἀπὸ θεοῦ
27	ἀποκρύπτει	ἐπικρύπτειν	105	ἐπεὶ	ἐπὶ
29	ὁ γὰρ	ὁ δὲ	110	ἀκακίαν	κακίαν
31	παρὰλλάττον	παράλογον	115	ἤτρον	ἦτρον
32	τετρημένῳ	τετρωμένῳ	121	σαφῶς	σοφῶς
38	ἐπίκηρον τύπτοντα ἐνώσεως	ἐπὶκαιρον τύπτον γνώσεως	123	κεκριμένον ἀσάφειαν	κεκρυμμένον σαφήνειαν
40	νοερά ἐντὸς	νεαρά ἐκτὸς	128	Μωυσῆ ἐκ- τέμνοντος	Μωσῆς ἐκ- τέμνων
45	ἀνεμαῖοι	ἀνεμοὶ (ἀναι- μοὶ)	132	μετριο- πάθειαν	μετριοπαθῶς
49	ἐπίστασιν γυμνή	ἐπίσπασιν γυμνή	133	τούτου	τοῦτο
53	οὐδαμοῦ	οὐδαμῶς	134	ἡνιόχου	ἡνιόχων
54	ἀποκρυπτό- μενοι	ἐπικρυπτό- μενοι	135	ἀπονός... ᾧ	ἀπονός . . . οὐς
57	κατέλαβε	ἀντέλαβετο (ἀντέλαβε)	137	παραχώρη- σιν	παραχώρησιν
58	ὄγκον	οἶκον	139	μετὰ ταῦτην	μετὰ ταῦτα
67	φύσιν μοχθηρὰν	φήσιν μοχθηρίαν	140	τελείος	τελείως 68	διδούς	διδούσῃ	144	προκόπτον- τος	προσπίπτον- τος

PHILO

§	TEXT	MSS.	§	TEXT	MSS.
144	ἐπλυνεν	πλύνειν	202	ἐξαδιαφορεῖν	ἐξω διαφορεῖν
149	ἐμέτοις	ἐτι αὐτοῖς	203	τὸ ἔρκω βεβαιῶσαι	τῷ ἔρκω βεβαιώσας
150	καὶ ἐκσπερματιεῖ σπέρμα	ἐκ σπερμάτων εἰς σπέρμα	206	πιστοῦν . . . πιστῶσαι	πιστεύειν . . . πιστεῦσαι 152	οἰκῶν	ὀσῶν		ἑαυτοῦ μόνος	ἑαυτοῦ μόνου
155	ἀκράτου ἀμέτρου	ἀκράτῳ ἀμέτρῳ	207	ἰσχυρότατος	εὐχάριστος
157	διορύξεις	θωρήξῃ	209	εὐσεβές	εὐθές
160	οὐκ ἔστι κινήσεως	οὐκέτι αἰκίσεως	211	ἀνιαρῶς	ἀνιαροῖς
162	ὅπως ἢ οὐ. ὀράς	ὅταν ἢ οὐχ ὀράς	215	εὐλογιστεῖτε	εὐλογιστεῖται 163	οὐ χωρήσει	οὐκ ὀνήσει	217	γεννῶντα	γεννῶσαν
164	καὶ ἀπιστίαν ἀσφάλειαν καὶ βεβαιότητα	καὶ ἀνελπιστίαν ἀσφαλῆ καὶ βεβαιότητα	220	αἰσθήσεως ἑαυτὰ	αἰσθήσεων ἑαυτῆν
174	ἀναγγεῖλη	ἀναγγεῖλωσι	226	πάντας	πάντως
178	ἐπιγράφων . . . τὸ δοκεῖν	ἐπιγράφω . . . τῷ δοκεῖν	229	διατάσεις ἀφ' ἐκατέρων τῶν τε λογισμῶν	διαστάσεις ἀφ' ἐκατέρων τε τῶν λογισμῶν
180	αὐτὴν μωμησάμενος τὰς ψυχῶν μήτρας	ἑαυτὸν μωμησάμενος τὰ ψυχῶν μέτρα	231	ἀπώλου	πῶλις
181	υἱός	υἱός	232	λαλοῦντων λόγου	λαοῦ φωνῆν
183	ὄντω ἢ ἔρωτι	ὄντων ἔρωτι	235	ὀσμῆν	ὄπως
184	εὐπρεπές	εὐπρεπές	236	ὀς πῶς πρὸ ἀλληγορίας	πρὸς ἀλληγορίαν
186	τὸ ὄρων	τῷ ὄραν	239	ἐντὸς	ἐνθεν
188	τῷ γὰρ ὀφείλεται	τῷ γὰρ ὀφείλεται	242	ἐκκεκρυμμένην θείου χοροῦ	ἐγκεκρυμμένην θείου χορῶ
190	μαχομένην	μαχομένους	243	ἕλης	ἕλης
193	κοινωνήσεις	κοινωνήσας	246	ὀς . . . ἐξ-ετάζεται	ὄς . . . ἐξ-ετάξεσθαι
195	ἀνάξιος εἶ	ἀνάξιας	247	δρῶντος	δρῶντες
199	τρυπᾶσθαι δουλεύειν	τρυπᾶσθω δουλεύῃ	248	ὀρμῇ πυρός	ὀρμῇ πρὸς

SUPPLEMENT TO TEXTUAL FOOTNOTES

VOL. II

DE CHERUBIM

§	TEXT	MSS.	§	TEXT	MSS.
4	ἀνεπάνακτος	ἀνέπακτος	91	ἀ δ' ἄν	ἀς δ'
7	γεγωνός	γεγωνός	96	καίτοι ταῖς	καὶ τοιαύταις 19	ποιήσας	ποιῆσαι	102	μνήμη	μνήμαι
23	ἐξαχῆ	ἐξ ἀρχῆς	103	μετανάστιν	μετανάστην (-στασίν) 24	ἐπιστάσιαν	ἐπίστασιν	105	πᾶσιν	πᾶσαν
48	ἐπιστήμη	ἐπιστήμης	120	ξένην	κηνὴν καινὴν
52	μεταβαλ- λούση	μεταβαλ- (λ)ούσης	121	κυρίως	κύριος
59	ἐτύγγανεν	τυγγάνει(-ῆ, -οι)	124	ἐπειδὴ	ἐπὶ δὲ
81	τι	τινί		νοῦν ὡς	νοῦν ὡς

DE SACRIFICIIS ABELIS ET CAINI

§	TEXT	MSS.	§	TEXT	MSS.
97	κέκτησαι ... προσάγης ... σαυτοῦ	κέκτηται ... προσάγη ... ἑαυτοῦ	131	ἀφ' οὐ	ὕφ' οὐ

QUOD DETERIUS POTIORI INSIDIARI SOLEAT

§	TEXT	MSS.	§	TEXT	MSS.
6	δηλῶν ὅτι	δηλῶν ὅτι (δηλον- ὅτι). So also § 114	77	ἐνεσημήναν- το	ἐσημήναντο
12	ἀφ' ὧν	ὕφ' ὧν	80	πάλιν	πάλαι
42	διεργεῖσθαι	διαιρεῖσθαι et alia	95	ἐπέξεύξαμεν μόνος	ὑπέξεύξαμεν νόμος
44	ἐπιδεικνύν- ται ψυχῆς νόσους τε	ἐπιδεικνύν- τες (-as) ψυχὰς νό- σους (ὄσ- σος) τε	96	ἀπὸ	ἐπὶ 49	κοινῶς	κοινῶν	108	τροφῆς	τροφεῖα
51	ἐνδεξαμένη	ἐνδεξαμένη	111	ἀπαθανατί- ζει	ἀπαθανατί- ζεται
58	ἐπὶ	ὑπὸ	113	ἔτι	ἐπὶ
61	ἔδοξε	δύξει	119	οὐδὲν αὐτῆν	οὐδὲ αὐτῆς
62	εἵπομ' ἄν ἀνάξιος	εἵπομεν ἀξιος	121	δικαιοσύνη ταύτης	δικαιοσύνην ταύτην
69	διὰ τὸ	διὰ τοῦ	139	ἐλπίζουσης	ἐλπίζουσα (-ιν)
			154	εἰ τὸ ἔν	εἴτ' οὐν
			161	ἀναγκαῖον	ἀναγκαίως

PHILO

DE POSTERITATE CAINI

§	TEXT	MSS.	§	TEXT	MSS.
6	τοῦ ἀπολει- πομένου ὑπ' αὐτοῦ	τὸ ἀπολει- πόμενον ἐαυτοῦ	49	μεγέθους ἐνδιαίτημα	μέγεθος διαίτημα
12	ἔχεσθαι	εἴχεσθαι	50	τειχῶν πόλει	τείχη πόλεων
14	ὄντος	οὗτος		κατὰ γῆν	καὶ γῆν
17	πῶς ἔστι	πῶς ἔτι	51	κατασκευά- ζειν ὁ Κάιν	κατασκευά- ζει δ καὶ
19	νομίζει	νομίζεις	52	ἐταῖροι	ἔτεροι
20	ἐπιβουλὰς ψαῦσαι	ἐπιβουλὰς ψεύσασθαι	53	βουλευθεὶς ἔστι λόγον	βουληθεὶς ἔστιν ἠλόγον
21	ὅς ἀφάντασ- τον τοῦ ὄντος	ὡς ἀφάντασ- τον ὄντως	54	ἄρα τῆς ἀναγκάζουσι	ἀρετῆς ἀνακράζουσι
22	χώραν ᾧρα ἐπήσθηται ταλαντεύ- ουσα	κακίαν ᾧρας ἐπήρτηται θαλαττεύ- ουσα	56	ἀποτίκτουσι τὸν	ἀποτίκτου- σιν αὐτὸν
24	ἀναπαύσει σε παρὰ	ἀναπαύσεις περὶ	60	Τάνιν φυσικώτατον	τὰ νῦν φυσικώτα- τοις
25	τῶν αὐτῶν μηδενὸς περὶ αὐτὰ	τῶν ἀστῶν μηδὲν ὡς περὶ αὐτὰς	62	διαφερόντων Τάνεως	διαφερόντως τοῖς νεωστὶ
30	τοικῶς ᾄδου	τοπικῶς ἁειδοῦς	66	ἀγειρομένης	ἐγειρομένης
33	τίνα	τί	67	εὐχόμενος	ἐχόμενος
34	ἀνοσίου εἰσηγησά- μενοι	. . . οἰσι ἡγησάμενοι	68	εἰσελεύσεται προστάτης ἐαθὲν αὐτό	ἐξελεύσεται πρὸς τὰς ἐσθὲν ἐαυτή
35	τίς φασὶ	τί φησὶ	70	ἐπιτυχόντα ἅμα	ἀποτυχόντα ἀλλὰ 36	ἀδιεξίτητος	διεξιόντος	72	τῶν τὸν . . .	τούτων . . .
37	κερασάμενος	κερασαμέ- νοις		ἀπολα- χόντων	ἀπολα- χόντα
38	καλῶ	καλῶς	73	πάθος ἄλο- γον	πάθους ἄλο- γος
41	εἶπον ἄλλων	εἶπε ἄλλων	77	Μωυσῆ	Μωυσῆς
42	ἐπιγρά- φοντες	ἀναγρά- φοντες	79	εὐθίκτους ἐπιβουλὰς	εὐθήκτους ἐπιβουλὰς 47	πολυτρόπου	πολυτρόφου	81	τὰ διάφορα ἐξαδια- φορεῖν	εὐδιαφορᾶ ἀδιάφορος ῶν
48	καρτερᾶς	καρτερίας	83	ἐπιβουλαῖς ἀνακυκλεῖν	ἐπιβουλαῖς ἀνακυκλεῖν

SUPPLEMENT TO TEXTUAL FOOTNOTES

§	TEXT	MSS.		§	TEXT	MSS.
90	ἐκείνῳ ἀνεπιστή- μονες	ἐκάστω ἀνεπιστή- μονι		110	καταλέγε- σθαι συστέλλων	κατάγεσθαι διαστέλλων
91	αὐτοῦ	αὐτῶν		112	ἔτι δ'	ὅτι δ'
93	μεταλλοῶν	μεταποιῶν		114	κτησάμενοι	στησάμενοι
94	τοσοῦτον δεῖ . . . ἐπι- τρέπειν προῖσθαι	τοσοῦτων δεῖν . . . ἐπιτρέπει προῖσθαι		116	ἀκριβῶς τού- των ἕκα- στον	ἀφθόνως οὐς ἕκαστος
95	ἐνὸς ἐν ἀντι- καταλλάτ- τεσθαι	ἐνὶ ἕνατι καταλλάτ- τειν		117	σκοπῶν κτῆσεως	σκοποῦ κτίσεως
98	ποιμένων	ποιμνῶν		119	οὐδενὸς ἄλ- λου ἀλλὰ νοημά- των	οὐδενὸς ἄλλα ἀλλ' ὀνομά- των
99	ὑπὸ τῶν	ὑπὲρ τῶν		120	λάχωσι ψυχῆς	λάβωσι ψυχῆ
100	φησι ἐπαμφοτερί- ζειν	φασι ἐπαμφοτερί- ζει		121	ἐπελάθετο μένηται	ἐπελάθου μένηται
101	παρέρχεσθαι  ἀστείως καὶ αὐστηρῶς	περιέρχε- σθαι  ἀστείῳ καὶ αὐστηρῶ		122	σοφία πιαί- νόμενοι	σοφίας πε- παινώμε- νοι
104	τῶν κύκλων διαχεομένην τὴν ἀκοήν φύσις	τὸν κύκλον διαχεομένης τῆς ἀκοῆς φωνῆ		130	βάθους ἀξιοῖ	πάθους ἀξιον
105	ὄσα φθαρτὸν γένους ᾧ τετίμη- ται	ὄσως ἀφθαρτον γένος ὡς τετίμη- ται		135	ἐπομβρήσει	ἐπιὸμβρήσει
106	κλάσει ταῖς ἐπαλλή- λοις . . . μεταβολαῖς	κλάσιν τῇ ἐπαλλή- λοις μετα- βολῇ		136	πηγὴν πλη- σαι σπουδαίου	γῆν ἀντλή- σαι σπουδαῖον
107	ἐμμελῆς πληχθεῖς	εὐμελῆς πληχθεῖς		137	τοῖς παιδεύ- μασι τοῖς ἐγκυκλίοις τῆς αἰσθή- σεως	τοὺς παιδεύ- μασι καὶ ἐγκυκλίους τῶν αἰσθή- σεως
108	συνωδὸς τις  τέκνοις	συνωδὸς ἐστίν τέχνοις		142	ἐν ἐτέροις ἐτέρων	ἐν ἐτέρῳ ἐταίρων
109	οὐδὲ τὰς τυ- χούσας	οὐδὲ τυχῆς		145	κορεσθέντας ἐξυβρίσαι	κορεσθὲν ἐξ- ύβρισε
				148	ἀπόλαυσιν ποτίσασα	ἀνάπαυσιν ποταμὸς
				150	τῶν ἂ χρῆ	τί χρῆ
				151	προχέασα	προσχέασα
				156	ἐπαγόμενα	ἐλαυνόμενα

PHILO

§ TEXT	MSS.	§ TEXT	MSS.
159 ἄ γε	ἀλλά γε	169 ἐξανέστησε	ἐξανέστησας 161 ἱεράκων	δορκάδων	171 ζῶων	ζωὴν
162 τῶν δὲ ὑπερ- βάλλουσαν	τὴν δὲ ὑπερ- βάλλου- σαν	173 Σῆμ̄ εις	ἡμεῖς 163 μέρους	μέρος	174 ἐπιδόσεις	ἐπιτάσεις ἰδρυθείη	ἰδρυνθῆναι	176 κατακλύσαι	καταλύσαι 164 λόγῳ	λόγων	178 τροφήν	τροφὴν καταλέσαν- τας	καταλύσαν- τας	179 χλεύην	χλόην 165 τυφογερόν- των	τύφων ἐρών- των	181 οὐκοῦν	οὐκ ἂν 169 εὐθυωρίαν	εὐθὺ θεωρίαν	ὠφέληθῆς	ὠφέλησαι οὐσίαν	ιδέα	ἐθῶν	ἐθῶν
αὐτῷ	αὐτοῖς	ἐκχεῖς	ἔχεις
		183 καταπαύσας	κατακαύσας
		185 καταλύσαι	καταγήσαι σχῆσει	σχῆσειν

DE GIGANTIBUS

§ TEXT	MSS.
26 γνωρίμων	γνωρίμων (-ω)

VOL. III

QUOD DEUS IMMUTABILIS SIT

§ TEXT	MSS.	§ TEXT	MSS.
49 χρησόμενον	χρησάμενον	121 εισάγει	εισάγει
62 οὐδ'	οὐτ'	150 ὄσοις	ὄσα
66 τῆς ψυχῆς	τῆ ψυχῆ	162 προῖτωσαν	προσίτωσαν (προσιέτω- σαν)
85 πρὸς	περὶ
104 ἠξιωμένον	ἠξιώμεναι

(Delete footnote on p. 56 "1 MSS. ἰδίῳ.")

DE AGRICULTURA

§ TEXT	MSS.	§ TEXT	MSS.
4 τὸ μὴ . . . εἶναι	τῷ μὴ . . . εἶναι	34 ἐξώκειλαν	ἐξοκείλουσι et alia
30 ἐξαχῆ	ἐξ ἀρχῆς	41 προτιμῶσιν	περιποιούσιν (-ειεν, -ῆσειν)

SUPPLEMENT TO TEXTUAL FOOTNOTES

§	TEXT	MSS.	§	TEXT	MSS.
43	τὰ αὐτὰ	τὰ δυνατὰ	156	ἔρχεται	εὐχεται
71	τέχνης	τέχνη	157	προκοπὰς	προτροπὰς
78	ἄλλων	δλων	158	ἐλπίζει	ἐλπίζεται
96	παντελοῦς	παντελῶς		ἐπιμελὲς	ἐπιμελῶς
97	κραταιοτά- της	κραταιοτέρας	159	μελετώντων	μελετῶν
106	τὰς τῆς	τὰ τῆς		ἢ δυσμενῆς	ἢ δυσμενεῖς
109	πάθους	πάθος		αὐτοῖς	αὐτοῦς
113	τούτων ἀγώ- νων ἄθλα	τούτων ἀ- θλων (?)	161	ἐπιστήμης	ἐπιστήμην (-η)
	ἢ ὁ κατα- παλάσας	εἰ καταπα- λάσας	162	τοῦ μὲν οὖν	τοῦτο μὲν ἢ ὁ . . .	ἢ δν (οἶον)		ἑαυτοῦ	ἑαυτῶν δυνάμενος	. . . δυνά- μενος		ἐπισταμένου	ἐπισταμέ- νους 120	περίσειν	περίσασα		ἐπιπροσθεῖ	ἐπιπροσθεν 122	συνορθιάζη- ται	συνορθιάζη		σκότος	εἰκότως διδασκαλι- κώτατον	διδασκαλι- κώτερον		τοῦ . . .	τδ... φέγγος 123	ῶ	δ		φέγγους
129	θαυμάζετε	θαυμάζειν	164	τὸν τῆς ἐπι- στήμης	τὸν τ' ἐπι- στήμης αὖ	οὐ	165	διότι	δι' δν (ὦν)
138	γεωμέτραι	γεωμετρία	167	φθειρομένοις	συμφθειρο- μένοις 141	ἔτι δ'	εἰ δ'	171	ἀργαλεώτα- τον	ἀργαλεωτά- των ἐλάττω	ἔλαττον		φύσιν	φησιν
142	προσηνῆ	πεινῆν (πεί- ναν)	176	αἰφνίδιον	αἰφνιδίως 143	τιμῆν	τιμῆ	178	ἐνδιατρίψαι	διατρίψαι
			179	τὰς τῆς	τὸ τῆς
			181	τῶν ἄκρας	τὰς ἄκρας

DE PLANTATIONE

§	TEXT	MSS.	§	TEXT	MSS.
3	δέος	δέον (δὲ)	65	τῶ... κάλλει	τοῦ . . . κάλ- λους
4	ιδρῦσθαι	ιδρύσασθαι	75	πλάτει	πλάτους
14	οὐ ταῖς	οὔσαις	83	οὐδ' ἐν νῶ	οὐδὲ νῶ
24	κούφον	κούφος	93	τε καὶ τέλος	τινα κάλλισ- τον λαμ- βάνεσθαι
42	ἀμετόχων	μετόχων		ὑπολαμβά- νεσθαι
61	ἀποσεμνύ- νων μὲν	ἀποσεμνυό- μενον

PHILO

§	TEXT	MSS.	§	TEXT	MSS.
102	ἀφθονον τοῖς	ἀφθόνως (ἀφθονον)	159	κεκλασμένοι	κεχαλασ- μένοι
133	παντοδαπάς	(ἀ)παντα ποιούσα	160	τὸν ἀκρατον	τὸ ἀκρατον 135	τράπηται	τραπή	165	ἤρτημένος	ἤρτημένον
138	τούτω	τούτο	169	ᾧ παίζειν	δς (οὐς) παί- ζειν 141	ἐξερευνή- σωμεν	ἐξερευνή- σομεν		ᾧ . . .	οὐ (οὐ) . . .
150	ὅτι ὁμωνυμία	τὴν ὁμωνυ- μίαν		παρώκη- σεν	παρώκη- σεν 155	οἰνώσεως	γνώσεως	171	κακῶ δέ	κακὰ δέ
			176	ἀλλ' οὖν	ἀρ' οὖν

DE EBRIETATE

§	TEXT	MSS.	§	TEXT	MSS.
6	ἀπαμπί- σχουσα	ἀπαν πιούση et alia	115	συντίθεντα	συντεθέντα
7	ἐπαμπί- σχεται	ἐπαμπίσεται et alia	120	δ παρέδωκε	ἀ παρέδωκε 38	παγίως	πλαγίως	143	φυρούσης . . .	φυρούσας . . .
58	εἰκότως	εἰκός		συγχεού- σης	συγχεού- σας
70	τοῦ φιλαρέ- του καὶ θείου	τῶ φιλαρέτω καὶ θείω	192	τούτων δὴ	τούτων ἤδη
71	πάντως	πάντων	193	προπιστεύ- ειν	προσπιστεύ- ειν
73	μόνου	νόμου	203	συναινέσεως	συνέσεως
76	ἄγον	ἄγων (ἀγῶνα)	218	ἀνθίμου	ἀνάιμου
80	οὔτοι τοίνυν	οὔτοι νῦν (οὐ τοίνυν)	221	τὰς ἀμύστεις	τοὺς ἀμύ- στεις
95	θρῆνοναυτοῖς	θρῆνον αὐτῶν	222	μαιμάζει	μαρμάζει (wrongly given in footnote)
			223	ἀκράτορος	ἀκρότητος (-a)

(Delete on p. 412 footnote "1 MSS. παρὰ.")

DE SOBRIETATE

§	TEXT	MSS.	§	TEXT	MSS.
1	περίεστι	περιέσται	8	πανσαμένου	πανσαμένω
6	ὀφείλοντα	ὀφειλόμενα		. . . ἐκείνου	. . . ἐκείνω

SUPPLEMENT TO TEXTUAL FOOTNOTES

§	TEXT	MSS.	§	TEXT	MSS.
11	οὐκοῦν τέκνα	οὐκοῦν τε	29	χρόνου . . .	χρόνω . . .
12	κάλλους ἀτε- λέστερα	καλῶν ἀτε- λέστερα		εὐρηγται	εὐρηται
23	ἐπαγωγό- τατα	ἀγάγοτα et alia	30	αὐτοῦ	αὐτῶ 28	ὀνόματι	ὄνομα τῶ	36	γεωργικά	γεωργεῖ καὶ 40	εὐσεβείας	εὐσέβειαν
			57	ἀφειμένος	ἀφιέμενος
			61	ὕγεία	ὕγείαις

VOL. IV

DE CONFUSIONE LINGUARUM

§	TEXT	MSS.	§	TEXT	MSS.
22	αὐτῇ νηί	αὐτὴν ἦ	126	δεκάζεσθαι	δεκ(δικ)- άσασθαι
34	ἀδοκίμων ἀψευδῶς	δοκίμων ἀψευδῶν	134	προσιέναι . . .	προσεῖναι . . .
54	ψυχῇ	ψυχῆς		ἀπιέναι	ἀπειναι
58	ποιήσωμεν καὶ ἀκου- σάμεθα	ποιήσομεν καὶ ἀκου- σόμεθα	138	ὦδε στὰς	ὀ δὲ στὰς
65	οὐκ ἄνοια δεινῇ	οἶα δεῖν ἦ (οὐ δεινόν)	141	δεκάζεσθαι εὐήθη	δικάζεσθαι εὐθῆ
66	καταπεπον- τωμένης	καταπεπον- τωμένος (-ην)	151	κατασκή- πτουσι	κατα(ε)σκευ- άκασι
67	ἀφορμῇ	ἀφροσύνη	158	πρὸς τῷ	πρὸς τὸ
78	ξένην	ξένον	162	λόγους	λόγων
118	ἀπὸ τούτων καρπωσάμε- νοι	ἀπ' αὐτῶν καρπωσαμέ- νους (-οις)	165	ἐπανατάσεως	ἐπαναστά- σεως
119	τιμωρίαι	τέχλαι	176	ἐναντίας	ἐναντίαις (-α)
			181	μόνον ὡς ἕλεως	μόνων ἕλεω 195	σύγχυσις	χύσις
			196	τὴν κακίας	τῆς κακίας

DE MIGRATIONE ABRAHAMI

§	TEXT	MSS.	§	TEXT	MSS.
15	αὐτοῦ	αὐτοῦς	59	ἐν πεφυρ- μένῳ	ἐμπεφυρ- μένῳ
46	τὰ . . . μοίρας λαχόντα	τὰς . . . μοίρας λαχόντα			(ἐμπεφορη- μένῳ)

PHILO

§ TEXT	MSS.	§ TEXT	MSS.
64 ἐν πᾶσι	ἐπὶ πᾶσι	151 ἀπελείπομεν	ἀπολει- πομεν
89 καὶ ταμείας	καὶ ταμίας (κατὰ μᾶς)		(-ομένων, -ομένην)
90 ἐαυτῆς	ἐαυτῇ (-οῦς)	155 συνίησι	σύνεισι 108 δοξαζόμενον	διδασκόμε- νον	167 γε	τε
142 δόντι	ιδόντι	ἔργων	ἔργον
150 ἐπὶ	ὑπὸ	215 εὐερέεστατον	εὐερέεστα- τον
		224 λαθεῖν	παθεῖν

QUIS RERUM DIVINARUM HERES

§ TEXT	MSS.	§ TEXT	MSS.
21 τὸν . . . νομοθέτην	τὸ (τὸν) . . . νομοθέτη- μα	113 λήψεσθε	λήψεσθαι
23 τῶν ὄλων δεσμὸς	τῶν ὄλων δεσμῶν (δεσπότης)	142 ἀκριβῶς ἂν	αγριαν
34 ἀνεγείρον	ἀνεγείρων (-ω)	143 γενητὸν	ηττον, ἴσον
71 μὴ πρὸς	τὰ πρὸς	161 ἐχθίστης	εχθιστου (αι- σχίστης)
79 καὶ τὰς οὐρανοῦ περιόδους, πεπαίδευ- ται δὲ καὶ εἰς τὸ	Omitted by Codices. Pap. καὶ τας οὐρ . . . δους πε- παίδευτοι . . . το	193 μοίραν	μοίρας
		201 διακρίναντος	διακρίναντος ἐνδεξάμενοι	ἐκδεξάμενοι
		249 εἰ δὴ	εἰ δε (ἐπειδὴ)
		251 ἱερῶν	ἱερέων

DE CONGRESSU ERUDITIONIS GRATIA

§ TEXT	MSS.	§ TEXT	MSS.
119 ἐργάσεσθαι	ἐργάασθαι	170 ἢ οὐ· καὶ ἐκάκωσε	ἢ οὐκ ἐκά- κωσε

(In § 87 correct in text and footnote κακίας to κακιῶν.)

SUPPLEMENT TO TEXTUAL FOOTNOTES

VOL. V

DE FUGA ET INVENTIONE

§	TEXT	MSS.	§	TEXT	MSS.
15	ἡ . . . ἀλ- λότριαι	καὶ . . . ἀλ- λότριαι	140	τὸ τοῦ	τούτου (τοῦ)
25	πολὺν	πολὺ	148	τῶν ἐν ἡμῖν	τῷ (τὸ) ἐν ἡμῖν
91	ἀποβαλοῦ- σης	ἀποβαλλοῦ- σης	181	μὴν περὶ	μὲν περὶ
92	διοικήσαντος	διοικήσαντος	191	παθεῖν	ἀπαθεῖν (ἀ παθεῖν)

DE MUTATIONE NOMINUM

§	TEXT	MSS.	§	TEXT	MSS.
8	τῷ θνητῶν . . . γενεῖ	τῷ θνητῶ γένει	173	τιθασεύοντα	τιθασσεύ- οντας
17	ἐφάντα- σιώθη	ἐφάντα- σιάσθη	174	τὸν μυελὸν	τῶν μυελῶν
53	συντάξεις	πράξεις	217	χρήσεσθαι	χρήσασθαι
56	πλήξειε	πλήξει	221	ἀποφανεῖ	ἀποφαίνει
63	πάν	πάντα	230	ἐστί	ἔσται
73	οὐδὲ	οὐδὲν	248	τῶν δὲ πτη- νῶν τὸ μὲν	τῶν δὲ πτη- νῶν τὰ μὲν
113	αὐτὰς	αὐτὰ	257	σοφιστῆν	σοφιστῆ
			260	αὐτομάτων	αὐτομαθῶν

DE SOMNIIS, I

§	TEXT	MSS.	§	TEXT	MSS.
82	λαμπρότη- τας ἔτι	λαμπρότητι (-τος)	131	ναρκήσειε	ναρκήσει (-οι)

DE SOMNIIS, II

§	TEXT	MSS.	§	TEXT	MSS.
25	ἐξευρῶν	ἐξεύρον	62	στεφανοῦ- σθαι . . .	στεφανοῦσι . . . ἀξιούσι
49	ἐδωδῆν . . . γήτεια	ἐπωδῆν . . . γοητεία	65	μεταδιώ- κοντα	μεταδιώ- κοντες
49	ἀνθρώπων	ἀνθρωπος	100	βασιλεύσεις	βασιλεύσης
53	βάπτειν	ῥάπτειν
61	ἀφθονόν	ἀφθόνων

PHILO

§	TEXT	MSS.		§	TEXT	MSS.
139	συντενοῦσι	συντείνουσι		194	ψευδές	ψευδῶς (Tr. ψεύδος)
147	ἀρχέτυπον	ἀρχετύπων		203	εἰς αὐτὸ	ταυτὸ
149	κελεύση	κελεύσει		206	θεασόμεθα	θεασώμεθα
154	ἀναρχία . . .	ἀναρχίαν . . .		211	ἀπολαύει	ἀπολαύειν ἀρχῆ	ἀρχὴν		223	αὐτίκα γε	αὐτίκα δὲ 158	κανῶν	κανὸν (Trin. ικανόν)		250	ὄξυδορκούση	ὄξυδορκούσι
169	ὅτι καὶ	ὅτι κἀν		258	διοκίσας	διοικήσας
172	εὐσκόπως	εὐσκόποις		259	ἀναίμοις	ἀνέμοις
181	τῷ θάτερον	τὸ θάτερον		260	ἐγγίνεται	ἐγγενεῖται εὐφροσύνην	εὐφροσύνης			κολφῶν	κωλύων 184	εὐνούχος εἰμι	εὐνούχος εἰ μὴ		278	ὑπὲρ ἡδονῆς	ἄπερ ἡδονῆς 279	ἐπιτιθέμενος	ἐπιθέμενος

PHILO

WITH AN ENGLISH TRANSLATION BY

F. H. COLSON, M.A.

LATE FELLOW OF ST. JOHN'S COLLEGE, CAMBRIDGE

IN TEN VOLUMES

(AND TWO SUPPLEMENTARY VOLUMES)

VI

CAMBRIDGE, MASSACHUSETTS
HARVARD UNIVERSITY PRESS

LONDON
WILLIAM HEINEMANN LTD

MCMLXXXIV

CONTENTS OF VOLUME VI

	PAGE
PREFACE . . . . .	vii
GENERAL INTRODUCTION . . . . .	ix
LIST OF PHILO'S WORKS . . . . .	xix
ON ABRAHAM (DE ABRAHAMO)—
Introduction . . . . .	2
Text and Translation . . . . .	4
ON JOSEPH (DE IOSEPHO)—
Introduction . . . . .	138
Text and Translation . . . . .	140
MOSES I. AND II. (DE VITA MOSIS)—
Introduction . . . . .	274
Text and Translation . . . . .	276
APPENDICES—
I. To De Abrahamo . . . . .	597
II. To De Iosepho . . . . .	600
III. To De Vita Mosis , i. . . . .	603
IV. To De Vita Mosis , ii. . . . .	605
V. Supplement to Textual Footnotes . . . . .	611

PREFACE TO VOLUME VI

MR. WHITAKER left no work of any kind bearing on the contents of this volume, and it therefore appears in my name only.

The great difference of subject matter from the five previous volumes has made the long detailed analytical introductions less necessary and where the narrative runs on continuously for a considerable length almost useless. I have accordingly retained them only in a very modified form. I have continued to divide the annotation into footnotes which seemed needed for the comprehension of the passages and appendix notes mainly for illustration, but both footnotes and appendix are considerably diminished.

One point perhaps requires apology or at least justification. What appears here as the Second Book of the Life of Moses was before the publication of Cohn's edition divided into two, a Second Book of twelve Chapters, and a Third Book of thirty-nine. Cohn who has demonstrated the erroneousness of this division,<sup>a</sup> takes the middle course of numbering the Chapters as of two books, but the sections as of one. Since Cohn originated the arrangement by sections this was probably the wiser course. But now that citation by sections is superseding the old citation by chapters this difference of arrangement between sections and chapters seemed to me confusing and I have accordingly numbered the chapters continuously from 1 to 50; and therefore in tracing a reference to a particular chapter of De Vita Mosis, iii. my readers will have to subtract twelve. I hope any inconvenience caused by this will be diminished by the fact that most, if not all, references to Philo in earlier writers cite not only the chapters of a treatise but the Mangey pages, which of course remain unchanged.

PREFACE

I may add that Dr. Rouse's help, which has been generously given throughout, has been particularly useful in this volume.

F. H. C.

April 1935.

GENERAL INTRODUCTION

In this volume we enter<sup>a</sup> upon the second main division of Philo's works. The preceding five volumes have been occupied with what is usually called the commentary or allegorical commentary. We now pass on to his Exposition of the Laws to which the biographical treatises in this volume serve as an introduction. Philo starts with the assumption that the Pentateuch as a whole is a law-book written by the lawgiver himself. But this law-book obviously opens and continues with a large amount of material which is not, strictly speaking, legislative but narrative. Hence the theory is developed that Moses began with describing the foundation of the world-commonwealth or cosmopolis which was to be governed by the laws, and followed it by describing the lives of those who had observed those laws while still unwritten and were therefore themselves "living laws," as well as <sup>a</sup> Or perhaps I shall rather say "re-enter," as De Abr. assumes that the De Opificio is the opening book of the "Exposition." And so the German translators begin with the De Op. and proceed at once to De Abr. In this translation we have followed the traditional arrangement, which is also that adopted by Cohn and Wendland, not perhaps without justification. It must be noted that if De Op. begins the Exposition, it serves the same purpose for the Commentary which begins with Gen. ii. 1, and seems to assume that the story of Creation has been adequately dealt with.

GENERAL INTRODUCTION

the rewards which obedience, and the punishments which disobedience, in the past had incurred. He has already in the De Opificio expounded Moses' story of the cosmogony. In the four treatises contained in this volume and two others which have not been preserved he deals with the rest of what he calls the historical part of the legislation.

The general plan of the first three of these six treatises, namely the extant Abraham and the lost Isaac and Jacob, was to shew that Moses set before us the history of the soul in two triads. The first triad, Enos, Enoch and Noah, represent respectively Hope, Repentance or Improvement, and Justice. These three are the imperfectly wise, for though Justice is the Queen of virtues and indeed Noah is called perfect, he is only perfect in his generation—that is, relatively only—and therefore falls below the second triad of the truly wise. This triad, Abraham, Isaac and Jacob, represent respectively Wisdom or Virtue as acquired by teaching, nature and practice. The first triad is disposed of in §§ 7-47 of De Abrahamo; the second forms the subject of the rest of that treatise, and no doubt of the two that have been lost.

The formula Nature (natural ability), Teaching, Practice as covering the necessary requirements for education is a commonplace in ancient scholastic literature. Philo is the first, so far as I know, to apply it to spiritual life, and we have met with this application frequently in the Allegorical Commentary.<sup>a</sup> But though it is one of his leading ideas, he takes little pains to show how it fits the three great Patriarchs. The chequered career of Jacob, "long trained in the athletics of adversity,"<sup>a</sup> qualifies him no doubt for the name of the Practiser so regularly applied to him, but it is difficult to see how Abraham pre-eminently represents wisdom acquired by teaching. True, he receives and obeys the Divine instructions, but so do Isaac and Jacob, though perhaps in a lesser degree, and Isaac's name of the Self-Taught does not exclude discipleship to God. What, if anything, Philo found in the life of Isaac to justify this epithet applied to him almost as often as Practiser is to Jacob he never tells us.<sup>b</sup> I imagine that the idea rests chiefly on the meaning of the name. Isaac is "laughter" and therefore "joy," and joy is the result, or as he calls it, the reward when the mind finds what it seeks instinctively and without labour.<sup>c</sup>

<sup>a</sup> Cf. De Sac. 5 f., De Cong. 35 f., De Mut. 12 and note, De Som. i. 160, 167, 173.

GENERAL INTRODUCTION

The De Abrahamo after the first 47 sections gives the main incidents of Abraham's life, not in chronological order, but to illustrate his piety, hospitality, tact and kindness, courage and self-control. In every case except the last, which describes Abraham's resignation at the death of Sarah, the narrative is followed by an allegorical interpretation. The general principles of these allegories is much the same as in the Commentary, but the method is in one respect very different. No knowledge of the Pentateuch beyond the passage under discussion is supposed to be possessed by the reader, and consequently there is

<sup>a</sup> De Ios. 26.

<sup>b</sup> Though Stanley discovered in Isaac a gentleness and meditateness which distinguishes him from the other two. See, for "the gentle Isaac," Jewish Church, i. p. 32.

<sup>c</sup> See, particularly De Praemiis 50, where also faith is said to be the "reward" of the soul which learns by teaching, since instruction requires the readiness of the instructed to believe. This passage perhaps gives us the best clue to the meaning which Philo attaches to the formula.

GENERAL INTRODUCTION

none of the rambling from text to text or of the inseting in the main allegory of minor allegories suggested by casual phrases, which constitutes the most striking characteristic and the chief difficulty of the other set of treatises.

The De Iosepho is something of an excrescence in the scheme. The qualities of the ideal "politician" or "statesman" might serve as an effective supplement to those of the contemplative and philosophical life, but they do not bear much relation to the three types of Nature, Teaching and Practice, and when Philo in the De Praemiis<sup>a</sup> gives a sort of recapitulatory survey of the historical part of the law-book, while Abraham, Isaac, Jacob and Moses are all discussed again, there is no word of Joseph. I should imagine that he felt, what of course is true, that in the Joseph chapters of Genesis he had a fine dramatic story which could not be without undue compression worked into the life of Jacob, a story rich in incidents which offer themselves for epic narrative, and in situations which gave full scope for the rhetorical exhibitions in which his age delighted. If in view of contemporary misgovernment he felt a pleasure in showing how justly Egypt had once been governed by a Jew, the feeling was only natural.

The treatment of the life of Joseph in the De Iosepho makes a startling contrast to the persistent depreciation to which his character has been subjected throughout the Allegorical Commentary. There he is the man wise in his own conceit,<sup>b</sup> the philosopher of statecraft rather than truth,<sup>c</sup> the honourer of spurious goods,<sup>d</sup> whose study is of the body and vain imaginations,<sup>e</sup>

<sup>a</sup> §§ 22-56.

<sup>b</sup> Leg. All. iii. 179.

<sup>c</sup> Quod Det. 7

<sup>d</sup> De Sob. 14.

De Agr. 56.

GENERAL INTRODUCTION

the many-sided vanity of life.<sup>a</sup> One explanation given is that the two opposing views belong to different periods and stages in Philo's life. Professor Goodenough<sup>b</sup> ascribes it to the difference of audiences addressed in the Exposition and the Commentary, or to a chronic vacillation in Philo's own temperament, or to both together. I am inclined to think that the "chronic vacillation of character" is enough in itself, though I should prefer to call it a chronic tendency to see both sides of a question alternately or even simultaneously. Philo undoubtedly looks upon the philosophical life as the highest, and the practical life which includes the political as a necessary evil. But he is as firm upon the necessity of the latter as on the superiority of the former, and further the lower may be conceived of as a discipline or stepping-stone to the higher. If this is realized, the twofold representation of Joseph will not present insuperable difficulties. The main fact in the life of Joseph was that he lived in Egypt and was Pharaoh's viceroy. Since Egypt spiritually is the body and the King of Egypt the body-loving mind, Joseph may represent the agent which that king employs for his baser purposes. He is not from this point of view a historical person, but a τρόπος or temperament<sup>c</sup> and Philo has no difficulty in finding isolated facts and passages which can be made to

<sup>a</sup> De Conf. 71. Besides these and many others note especially the sustained depreciation in De Som. ii. 10-16 and often later in the same treatise.

<sup>b</sup> "Philo's Exposition of the Law and his De Vita Mosis," Harvard Theological Review, April 1933.

<sup>c</sup> Or "one of the traits or feelings existing in every man's soul," as he is definitely stated to be in De Som. ii. 98. From this point of view we are told to forget the actual cruelty of the brothers.

GENERAL INTRODUCTION

bear this out. His coat of many colours, his name of "addition" signifying adventitious goods, his mounting the second chariot, his swearing by the health of Pharaoh, the arrogant claims of his dreams, can all be pressed into service, while anything that does not fit can, if needed, be ignored.<sup>a</sup> On the other hand, political life is also capable of bringing out higher qualities, and of those the historical Joseph is the obvious exemplar. In fact, Philo's treatment of Joseph gives us the clearest example of his belief that the spiritual truths which may "break out of the Word" are manifold, not only different, but even at first sight contradictory.<sup>b</sup>

On the whole, these two treatises proceed on the same general method, though in De Iosepho the rhetorical element is far more and the allegorical less conspicuous. But the two books on the life of Moses stand to some extent by themselves. The opening of the first book does not suggest that it is a sequel to the four that have preceded, but assigns a different reason for its composition, viz. that its object is to make the story and character of the great legislator <sup>a</sup> Not but that opposing facts are sometimes too strong and numerous to be ignored. Thus in De Mig. 16-24, when the allegory is based on the carrying of Joseph's bones to Canaan, these "bones" or memorable actions are catalogued, and even in De Som. ii., where the representation of him as the impersonation of vanity is most developed, the hope is held out that ultimately he will be reconciled with his brethren (§ 108). Again, when the allegory demands a more favourable view, as when the point is that he finds his brethren, he becomes the man who mixes in public life, but has no thirst for fame (πολιτικὸς μὲν ἦκιστα δὲ δοξομανής, De Fuga 126).

<sup>b</sup> For instance, the coat of many colours, which has served in De Som. i. 219 to represent the falseness of the mere politician, stands in De Ios. 32 for the resourcefulness in peace and war of the true statesman.

GENERAL INTRODUCTION

known to the outer world. The constitution of the book is also very different. Allegory is almost entirely banished from the narrative and confined to explanation of the priest's vestments and the form and apparatus of the Tabernacle. Regarded as biography, they are not so satisfactory as the De Abrahamo and the De Iosepho. Philo's arrangement of the life of Moses under the four heads of king, lawgiver, priest and prophet does, no doubt, serve for a logical basis to the work, but it leads him into many oddities. While the story of Moses as king or leader is carried on consistently to the end of Exodus xviii., what next to the deliverance itself is the central point of the story, the theophany on Sinai, is entirely omitted; the account of Balaam and Balak, which has little to do with Moses himself, is given at disproportionate length, while the stories of the Red Sea and the Manna and the Golden Calf are given twice over.

These and other considerations have led what is probably the great majority of scholars to think that the two books are not an integral part of the Exposition, but a work composed on a separate occasion, and (at least in the eyes of those who consider the Exposition to be intended primarily for Jewish readers) <sup>a</sup> <sup>a</sup> Any discussion of this disputed question may be left till we come to the Laws themselves in the next volume. Meanwhile I find it difficult to resist the general impression that Philo in writing the De Abrahamo and De Iosepho as well as the De Vita Mosis, in which the fact is admitted, had Gentiles rather than Jews in view. Observe, for instance (unless it is to be put down as a mere mannerism), the strict economy of names in all four books. Just as neither Balaam nor even Aaron in the third and fourth is ever mentioned by name, so too Lot in the first and the brothers in the second (even when they act or speak individually) are only indicated by their relationship to Abraham or Jacob.

GENERAL INTRODUCTION

for a different audience. While not venturing to hold the contrary I do not feel enough confidence in Philo's consistency of method to regard this as certain. Anyhow, the fact is clear that, however and for whomsoever composed, the two books effect what indeed is implied in the recapitulatory survey in the De Praemiis, where Moses is joined with Abraham, Isaac and Jacob as the recipient of the rewards of obedience which the Pentateuch in Philo's view is intended to preach. Without them his survey of the lessons of the history which is begun in the De Abrahamo and his portrait of the "Living Laws"<sup>a</sup> would be hopelessly incomplete, and their right place in the series is that which has been given them in all editions and is retained in this translation.

Taking the four books as a whole I would make two comments. One is that the separate stories are admirably told with much fire, vigour and lucidity. The "stilted and frigid"<sup>b</sup> speeches repel us, but to Greek readers living in the age of Epideictic oratory they would be congenial enough. As for the narratives themselves, none of us would wish to exchange them for the sacred simplicity of our own version. But the Gentile readers who had no such associations must have found them a pleasant contrast to the harsh Greek of the Septuagint.

<sup>a</sup> Moses is of course primarily the lawgiver, rather than himself the law, and Philo may possibly have shrunk from saying that Moses the biographer intended his own biography to serve the same purpose as the biographies of the patriarchs. Still the title of "Living Law" is applied to him in De Mos. i. 162.

<sup>b</sup> The epithets are quoted from my own judgement of them as given in the General Introduction to Vol. I. p. xxii. I am inclined now to modify them with regard to some of the speeches.

GENERAL INTRODUCTION

The second point is the essential fidelity with which Philo adheres to the narrative of Scripture. Though he professes to draw also from the Tradition of the Elders, there is little or none of the legendary accretions with which the Book of Jubilees, the so-called "Antiquities of Philo" and even Josephus, to say nothing of later Rabbinical tradition, endeavour to embellish the history of the Patriarchs and of Moses.<sup>a</sup> There is of course any amount of amplification: that is according to the practice of many if not most ancient historians, who consider it their business not merely to state but to interpret facts—to infer what the actors probably would have felt, said, or done in the given circumstances. A good example is the description of the battle of Abraham and 318 men against the four kings,<sup>b</sup> where the LXX "he came upon them by night and smote them" is expanded into "he attacked the enemy by night when they had supped and were preparing to go to sleep. Some fell helpless victims to him in their beds, others who took arms against him were completely annihilated," with a few more words about the extinction of the whole army. As Josephus, Ant. i. 177,<sup>c</sup> gives similar details, <sup>a</sup> The closest approach to this is the account of Moses' education in Mos. i. 21 ff., but even this is merely a statement of what an Egyptian prince would, in Philo's view, have naturally been taught.

<sup>b</sup> De Abr. 233 f.

<sup>c</sup> As the relation of Josephus's narrative to Philo's may be of interest to some readers, I may remark here that Cohn in the introduction to his fourth volume, p. xxv, considers that Josephus did make use of Philo, particularly of Mos. i. and ii. He quotes ten examples of similar thought and phrases, mainly the former. Thackeray, in his notes to the Loeb translation of Ant. i. and ii., cites some five instances of the kind from the De Abr. and De Ios. The resemblance of thought in Ant. i. 18 f. to the opening of De Op. is far more striking, but clearly Josephus may have read that work or

GENERAL INTRODUCTION

this is quoted as a "striking parallel," but surely it merely describes what is naturally to be expected in a successful night attack by a small force against a larger.

As for the text, we find nothing corresponding to the difficulties and corruptions which we found in the first five volumes. In the first place the mss., at least those which are used by Cohn, are far more numerous. They vary from thirteen in number to eleven, whereas in the other set of treatises the maximum was seven, and in three cases the editor was forced to rely on one or two codices, none of them remarkable for accuracy. Secondly, the straightforward narrative as opposed to the tortuous argument of the Allegorical Commentary was apparently handled by the scribes with greater ease and accuracy. Consequently, though there are plenty of the minor differences certain to be found in this larger number of mss. so that the Apparatus Criticus is no shorter, the emendations adopted by Cohn are few and in only one case has the present translator ventured to add any to the list.

its opening, without reading or at least making systematic use of the other treatises. I think this last should be regarded as somewhat uncertain, but see note on pp. 608 f.

LIST OF PHILO'S WORKS

SHOWING THEIR DIVISION INTO VOLUMES IN THIS EDITION

VOLUME

- I. On the Creation (De Opificio Mundi)
Allegorical Interpretation (Legum Allegoria)
- II. On the Cherubim (De Cherubim)
On the Sacrifices of Abel and Cain (De Sacrificiis Abelis et Caini)
The Worse attacks the Better (Quod Deterius Potiori insidiari solet)
On the Posterity and Exile of Cain (De Posteritate Caini)
- III. On the Unchangeableness of God (Quod Deus im-mutabilis sit)
On Husbandry (De Agricultura)
On Noah's Work as a Planter (De Plantatione)
On Drunkenness (De Ebrietate)
On Sobriety (De Sobrietate)
- IV. On the Confusion of Tongues (De Confusione Lin-guarum)
On the Migration of Abraham (De Migratione Abrahami)
Who is the Heir (Quis Rerum Divinarum Heres)
On the Preliminary Studies (De Congressu quaerendae Eruditionis gratia)
- V. On Flight and Finding (De Fuga et Inventione)
On the Change of Names (De Mutatione Nominum)
On Dreams (De Somniis)
- VI. On Abraham (De Abrahamo)
On Joseph (De Iosepho)
Moses (De Vita Mosis)

LIST OF PHILO'S WORKS

VOLUME

- VII. On the Decalogue (De Decalogo)
On the Special Laws Books I-III (De Specialibus Legibus)
- VIII. On the Special Laws Book IV (De Specialibus Legibus)
On the Virtues (De Virtutibus)
On Rewards and Punishments (De Praemiis et Poenis)
- IX. Every Good Man is Free (Quod Omnis Probus Liber sit) On the Contemplative Life (De Vita Contemplativa)
On the Eternity of the World (De Aeternitate Mundi)
Flaccus (In Flaccum)
Hypothetica<sup>1</sup> (Apologia pro Iudaeis)
On Providence<sup>1</sup> (De Providentia)
- X. On the Embassy to Gaius (De Legatione ad Gaium)
- GENERAL INDEX TO VOLUMES I-X

SUPPLEMENT

- I. Questions and Answers on Genesis<sup>2</sup> (Quaestiones et Solutiones in Genesin)
- II. Questions and Answers on Exodus<sup>2</sup> (Quaestiones et Solutiones in Exodum)
- GENERAL INDEX TO SUPPLEMENTS I-II

<sup>1</sup> Only two fragments extant.

<sup>2</sup> Extant only in an Armenian version.

ON ABRAHAM
(DE ABRAHAMO)

INTRODUCTION TO DE ABRAHAMO

AFTER stating his intention to follow Moses in describing the "living" before proceeding to the written Laws (1-6) Philo deals with the first and less perfect triad. First Enos the hoper, whose name equivalent to "Man" shows that hope is the first mark of a true man (7-10). Secondly repentance represented by Enoch, who was "transferred" i.e. to a better life and was "not found," for the good are rare and solitary (17-26). Thirdly, Noah, who was "just" in comparison with the wicked generation destroyed by the Flood (27-46).

The higher triad of the three great Patriarchs are not only typical of the trinity, Teaching, Nature and Practice, but are also the parents of Israel, the soul which attains to the sight of God (48-59). To come to Abraham himself, the literal story of his migrations shows his self-sacrifice (60-67); allegorically it denotes the soul's journey from godless astronomy first to self-knowledge (Haran), then to the knowledge of God (68-88). His adventures in Egypt (89-98) suggest that the tortures which plagued Pharaoh represent what the sensual mind suffers from the virtues which, while it professes to love them, are incompatible with it (99-106). Next comes the story of the three Angelic Visitors (107-118). Allegorically they represent the Self-existent and the beneficent and sovereign potencies apprehended according as the soul can rise to the full conception or is moved by hope of benefits or fear, and Philo points out that while men distrust these last motives, God does not hold them worthless (119-132). In fact the tale of the destruction of the Cities of the Plain represents the Self-existent as leaving these tasks to His subordinates

ON ABRAHAM

(133-146). This leads him to an allegory in which the five cities are the five senses, the noblest of which, sight, is figured by Zoar (147-166).

Next comes the sacrifice of Isaac (167-177). The greatness of Abraham is vindicated against hostile criticisms based on the frequency of similar stories of child immolation (178-199). Allegorically the story means that a devout soul often feels a duty of surrendering its "Isaac," Joy, which nevertheless through God's mercy it is allowed to retain (200-207).

These narratives have illustrated Abraham's piety. Next comes his kindness to men as shewn in his settlement of the dispute with Lot (208-216). This dispute may be taken to represent allegorically the incompatibility of love for the goods of the soul with love for bodily or external things (217-224). Then his courage appears in his victory over the four kings who had routed the armies of the five cities (225-235), and this conflict is allegorized as one between the four passions and the five senses, in which the intervention of reason turns the scale against the former (236-244). Philo now goes on to say something of the virtues of Sarah, particularly as shewn by her advocacy of the mating with Hagar (245-254) and this leads on to an account of the grief coupled with resignation shown by Abraham at her death (255-261). The treatise concludes with an eloquent praise of Abraham's faith and of his right to the title of "Elder" and the crowning tribute that he both did the law and was himself the Law (262-end).

ΒΙΟΣ ΣΟΦΟΥ ΤΟΥ ΚΑΤΑ ΔΙΔΑΣΚΑΛΙΑΝ ΤΕΛΕΙΩΘΕΝΤΟΣ Η ΝΟΜΩΝ ΑΓΡΑΦΩΝ (ΤΟ ΠΡΩΤΟΝ) Ο ΕΣΤΙ ΠΕΡΙ ΑΒΡΑΑΜ

- [1] I. Τῶν ἱερῶν νόμων ἐν πέντε βίβλοις ἀναγραφέν-1 των ἢ πρώτη καλεῖται καὶ ἐπιγράφεται Γένεσις ἀπὸ τῆς τοῦ κόσμου γενέσεως, ἣν ἐν ἀρχῇ περιέχει, λαβοῦσα τὴν πρόσρησιν, καίτοι μυρίων ἄλλων ἐμφερομένων πραγμάτων, ὅσα κατ' εἰρήνην ἢ πό-λεμον ἢ φορὰς καὶ ἀφορίας ἢ λιμὸν καὶ εὐθηνίαν ἢ τὰς μεγίστας τῶν ἐπὶ γῆς φθορὰς διὰ πυρὸς καὶ ὕδατος ἢ τὸνναντίον γενέσεις καὶ εὐτροφίας ζώων καὶ φυτῶν κατὰ τὴν ἀέρος καὶ τῶν ἐτησίων ὥρῶν εὐκρασίαν καὶ ἀνδρῶν τῶν μὲν ἀρετῇ τῶν δὲ κακίᾳ 2 συμβιωσάντων· ἀλλ' ἐπεὶ τούτων τὰ μὲν ἐστὶ τοῦ κόσμου μέρη, τὰ δὲ παθήματα, τελειότατον δὲ καὶ πληρέστατον ὁ κόσμος, αὐτῷ τὴν ὅλην βίβλον ἀνέθηκεν. ὃν μὲν οὖν τρόπον ἢ κοσμοποιία διατέτακται, διὰ τῆς προτέρας συντάξεως, [2] ὡς οἶόν τε | ἦν, ἠκριβώσαμεν. ἐπεὶ δὲ τοὺς νόμους 3 κατὰ τὸ ἐξῆς <καὶ> ἀκόλουθον ἀναγκαῖον διερευ-νᾶσθαι, τῶν ἐπὶ μέρους καὶ ὡς ἂν εἰκόνων ὑπέρθεσιν ποιησάμενοι τοὺς καθολικωτέρους καὶ ὡς ἂν

<sup>a</sup> i.e. the Deluge and the destruction of Sodom and Gomorrah. Philo classes these two together, ignoring the purely local character of the latter. Compare his treatment of the two in Mos. ii. 52-65, and cf. ib. 263.

ON ABRAHAM

THAT IS, THE LIFE OF THE WISE MAN MADE PERFECT THROUGH TEACHING, OR THE FIRST BOOK ON UN-WRITTEN LAWS

I. The first of the five books in which the holy laws are written bears the name and inscription of Genesis, from the genesis or creation of the world, an account of which it contains at its beginning. It has received this title in spite of its embracing numberless other matters; for it tells of peace and war, of fruitfulness and barrenness, of dearth and plenty; how fire and water wrought great destruction of what is on earth;<sup>a</sup> how on the other hand plants and animals were born and throve through the kindly tempering of the air and the yearly seasons, and so too men, some of whom lived a life of virtue, others of vice. But since some of these things are parts of the world, and others events which befall it, and the world is the complete consummation which contains them all, he dedicated the whole book to it.

The story of the order in which the world was made has been set forth in detail by us as well as was possible in the preceding treatise<sup>b</sup>; but, since it is necessary to carry out our examination of the law in regular sequence, let us postpone consideration of particular laws, which are, so to speak, copies, and examine first those which are more general and

<sup>b</sup> i.e. the De Opificio. See General Introduction to this volume, p. ix, note a.

PHILO

- 4 ἀρχετύπους προτέρους διερευνήσωμεν. οὗτοι δὲ εἰσιν ἀνδρῶν οἱ ἀνεπιλήπτως καὶ καλῶς βιώσαντες, ὧν τὰς ἀρετὰς ἐν ταῖς ἱερωτάταις ἐστηλιτεῦσθαι γραφαῖς συμβέβηκεν, οὐ πρὸς τὸν ἐκείνων ἔπαινον αὐτὸ μόνον, ἀλλὰ καὶ ὑπὲρ τοῦ τοὺς ἐντυγχάνοντας προτρέψασθαι καὶ ἐπὶ τὸν ὅμοιον ζῆλον ἀγαγεῖν.
- 5 οἱ γὰρ ἔμψυχοι καὶ λογικοὶ νόμοι ἄνδρες ἐκείνοι γεγόνασιν, οὓς δυοῖν χάριν ἐσέμνυνεν· ἐνὸς μὲν βουλόμενος ἐπιδείξει, ὅτι τὰ τεθειμένα διατάγματα τῆς φύσεως οὐκ ἀπάδει, δευτέρου δὲ ὅτι οὐ πολὺς πόνος τοῖς ἐθέλουσι κατὰ τοὺς κειμένους νόμους ζῆν, ὁπότε καὶ ἀγράφῳ τῇ νομοθεσίᾳ, πρὶν τι τὴν ἀρχὴν ἀναγραφῆναι τῶν ἐν μέρει, ῥαδίως καὶ εὐπετῶς ἐχρήσαντο οἱ πρῶτοι· ὡς δεόντως ἂν τινα φάναι, τοὺς τεθέντας νόμους μηδὲν ἄλλ' ἢ ὑπομνήματα εἶναι βίου τῶν παλαιῶν, ἀρχαιολογοῦντας
- 6 ἔργα καὶ λόγους, οἷς ἐχρήσαντο. ἐκείνοι γὰρ οὔτε γνώριμοι καὶ φοιτηταὶ γενόμενοί τινων οὔτε παρὰ διδασκάλοις ἂν χρῆ πράττειν καὶ λέγειν ἀναδιδαχθέντες, αὐτήκοοι δὲ καὶ αὐτομαθεῖς, ἀκολουθίαν φύσεως ἀσπασάμενοι, τὴν φύσιν αὐτὴν, ὅπερ ἐστὶ πρὸς ἀλήθειαν, πρεσβύτατον θεσμόν εἶναι ὑπολαβόντες ἅπαντα τὸν βίον ἠννομήθησαν, ὑπαίτιον μὲν οὐδὲν γνώμῃς ἐκουσίῳ ἐργασάμενοι, περὶ δὲ τῶν ἐκ τύχης ποτνιῶμενοι τὸν θεὸν καὶ λιταῖς καὶ ἱκεσίαις ἐξευμενιζόμενοι πρὸς ὀλοκλήρου μετουσίαν ζωῆς δι' ἀμφοτέρων κατορθουμένης τῶν τε ἐκ προνοίας καὶ τῶν ἄνευ ἐκουσίου γνώμης.
- 7 II. Ἐπειδὴ τοίνυν ἀρχὴ μετουσίᾳ ἀγαθῶν ἐστὶν ἐλπίς καὶ ταύτην οἶα λεωφόρον ὁδὸν ἢ φιλάρετος

---

* See App. p. 597.

ON ABRAHAM, 4-7

may be called the originals of those copies. These 4 are such men as lived good and blameless lives, whose virtues stand permanently recorded in the most holy scriptures, not merely to sound their praises but for the instruction of the reader and as an inducement to him to aspire to the same ; for in 5 these men we have laws endowed with life and reason,<sup>a</sup> and Moses extolled them for two reasons.
First he wished to shew that the enacted ordinances are not inconsistent with nature ; and secondly that those who wish to live in accordance with the laws as they stand have no difficult task, seeing that the first generations before any at all of the particular statutes was set in writing followed the unwritten law with perfect ease, so that one might properly say that the enacted laws are nothing else than memorials of the life of the ancients, preserving to a later generation their actual words and deeds.
For they were not scholars or pupils of others, nor 6 did they learn under teachers what was right to say or do : they listened to no voice or instruction but their own : they gladly accepted conformity with nature, holding that nature itself was, as indeed it is, the most venerable of statutes, and thus their whole life was one of happy obedience to law. They committed no guilty action of their own free will or purpose, and where chance led them wrong they besought God's mercy and propitiated Him with prayers and supplications, and thus secured a perfect life guided aright in both fields, both in their premeditated actions and in such as were not of freelywilled purpose.

II. Since, then, the first step towards the possession 7 of blessings is hope, and hope like a high road is

PHILO

ἀνατέμνει καὶ ἀνοίγει ψυχὴ σπουδάζουσα τυχεῖν τοῦ πρὸς ἀλήθειαν καλοῦ, τὸν πρῶτον ἐλπίδος ἔραστην προσεῖπεν “ἄνθρωπον” τὸ κοινὸν τοῦ γένους ὄνομα κατ’ ἐξαίρετον χάριν δωρησάμενος 8 αὐτῷ—Χαλδαῖοι γὰρ τὸν ἄνθρωπον Ἐνὼς καλοῦσιν —ὡς μόνου πρὸς ἀλήθειαν ὄντος ἀνθρώπου τοῦ τὰ ἀγαθὰ προσδοκῶντος καὶ ἐλπίσι χρησταῖς ἐφίδρυ-μένου· ἐξ οὗ δῆλον, ὅτι τὸν δύσελπιν οὐκ ἄνθρωπον ἀλλ’ ἀνθρωποειδὲς ἡγείται θηρίον τὸ οἰκειότατον 9 ἀνθρωπίνης ψυχῆς, ἐλπίδα, ἀφηρημένον. ὅθεν καὶ παγκάλως ὑμνήσαι βουλόμενος τὸν εὐέλπιν προειπὼν, ὅτι οὗτος ἠλπισεν ἐπὶ τὸν τῶν ὄλων πατέρα [3] καὶ ποιητὴν, ἐπιλέγει· “αὕτη ἡ βίβλος | γενέσεως ἀνθρώπων,” καίτοι πατέρων καὶ πάππων ἤδη γεγονότων· ἀλλὰ τοὺς μὲν ἀρχηγέτας τοῦ μικτοῦ γένους ὑπέλαβεν εἶναι, τουτονὶ δὲ τοῦ καθαρωτάτου 10 καὶ διηθημένου, ὅπερ ὄντως ἐστὶ λογικόν. καθάπερ γὰρ ποιητῆς Ὁμηρος, μυρίων ποιητῶν ὄντων, κατ’ ἔξοχὴν λέγεται, καὶ τὸ μέλαν ᾧ γράφομεν, καίτοι παντὸς ὃ μὴ λευκὸν ἐστὶ μέλανος ὄντος, καὶ ἀρχῶν Ἀθήνησιν ὃ ἐπώνυμος καὶ τῶν ἐννέα ἀρχόντων ἄριστος, ἀφ’ οὗ οἱ χρόνοι καταριθμοῦνται, τὸν αὐτὸν τρόπον καὶ τὸν ἐλπίδι χρώμενον “ἄνθρωπον” κατ’ ἔξοχὴν ὠνόμασε τὰ πλήθη τῶν ἄλλων ἀφησυχάσας

<sup>a</sup> Philo uses “Chaldaean” as a synonym for Hebrew frequently in these works, though not in the treatises contained in Vols. I.-V.

<sup>b</sup> This argument, founded on Gen. iv. 26, LXX “He called his name Enos; he hoped to call on the name of the Lord God” (E.V. “then began men to call upon the name of the Lord”) and on the fact that Enos is a poetical Hebrew term for “man,” has already been given in substantially the same form in Quod Det. 138.

ON ABRAHAM, 7-10

constructed and opened up by the virtue-loving soul in its eagerness to gain true excellence, Moses called the first lover of hope "Man," thus bestowing on him as a special favour the name which is common to the race (for the Chaldean<sup>a</sup> name for Man is Enos),<sup>8</sup> on the grounds that he alone is a true man who expects good things and rests firmly on comfortable hopes.<sup>b</sup> This plainly shows that he regards a despondent person as no man but a beast in human shape, since he has been robbed of the nearest and dearest possession of the human soul, namely hope. And, therefore, in his wish to give the highest praise<sup>9</sup> to the hoper, after first stating that he set his hope on the Father and Maker of all, he adds, "this is the book of the coming into being of men," though fathers and grandfathers had already come into being. But he held that they were the founders of the mixed race, but Enos of that from which all impurity had been strained, in fact of the race which is truly reasonable. For just as we give the title of<sup>10</sup> "the poet" to Homer in virtue of his pre-eminence, though there are multitudes of poets besides him, and "the black"<sup>c</sup> to the material with which we write, though everything is black which is not white, and "the Archon"<sup>d</sup> at Athens to the chief of the nine archons, the Archon Eponymos, from whose year of office dates are calculated, so too Moses gave the name of man in pre-eminence to him who cherished hope and left unnoticed the many others as un-

<sup>c</sup> μέλαν being the regular word for "ink."

<sup>d</sup> The 1st Archon was called simply ὁ ἀρχων, the 2nd ἀρχων βασιλεύς, the 3rd ἀρχων πολέμαρχος, the other nine θεσμοθέται. The addition of ἐπώνυμος ("who gives his name to dates," etc.) seems to be a later use.

PHILO

- ὡς οὐκ ἀξίων τῆς αὐτῆς προσήσεως ἐπιλαχεῖν.
- 11 εὖ μέντοι καὶ τὴν βίβλον γενέσεως τοῦ πρὸς ἀλήθειαν ἀνθρώπου προσεῖπεν, οὐκ ἀπὸ σκοποῦ, διότι γραφῆς καὶ μνήμης ἄξιος ὁ εὐελπις, οὐ τῆς ἐν χαρτιδίοις ὑπὸ σπητῶν διαφθαρησομένοις, ἀλλὰ τῆς ἐν ἀθανάτῳ τῇ φύσει, παρ' ἧ τὰς σπουδαίας πράξεις ἀναγράφτους εἶναι συμβέβηκεν.
- 12 εἰ μέντοι καταριθμήσειέ τις ἀπὸ τοῦ πρώτου καὶ γηγενοῦς, τὸν ὑπὸ μὲν Χαλδαίων Ἐνώς Ἑλλάδι δὲ διαλέκτῳ προσαγορευόμενον “ ἀνθρω-13 πον ” εὐρήσει τέταρτον. ἐν ἀριθμοῖς δὲ ἡ τετρὰς τετίμηται παρά τε τοῖς ἄλλοις φιλοσόφοις, ὅσοι τὰς ἀσωμάτους οὐσίας καὶ νοητὰς ἠσπάσαντο, καὶ μάλιστα παρὰ Μωυσεῖ τῷ πανσόφῳ, ὃς σεμνύνων τὸν τέταρτον ἀριθμὸν φησιν ὅτι “ ἅγιός ἐστι καὶ αἰνετός”· δι' αὐτῶν δ' αἰτίας ἐλέχθη, διὰ τῆς προτέρας 14 συντάξεως εἴρηται. ἅγιος δὲ καὶ ἐπαινετός ὁ εὐελπις, ὡς τοῦναντίον ἀναγνος καὶ ψεκτός ὁ δύσελπις, φόβῳ πρὸς ἅπαντα συμβούλῳ κακῶ χρώμενος· οὐδὲν γὰρ οὕτως ἐχθρόν ἄλλο ἄλλῳ φασίν, ὡς ἐλπίδα φόβῳ καὶ φόβον ἐλπίδι· καὶ μήποτ' εἰκότως· προσδοκία μὲν γὰρ ἐκάτερον, ἀλλ' ἢ μὲν ἀγαθῶν, ἢ δ' ἔμπαλιν κακῶν, ἀκατάλλακτοι δ' αἱ φύσεις τούτων καὶ ἀσύμβατοι.
- 15 III. τσαῦτα μὲν ἀπόχρη περὶ ἐλπίδος εἰπεῖν, ἣν

<sup>a</sup> So in Quod Det. 139 that “the hoper is written in the book of God” is deduced from “this is the book of the generation of men” following on Gen. iv. 26. Of course the phrase introduces what is coming and begins a fresh paragraph. For a similar misunderstanding cf. the treatment of Gen. ii. 4, in Leg. All. i. 19, and of Gen. vi. 9 in § 31 below.

<sup>b</sup> Enos as Adam's grandson would naturally be third, or, if Abel and Cain are reckoned, fifth. Philo may obtain the worthy to receive the same title. He did 11 well, too, in speaking of the book of the coming into being of the true man.<sup>a</sup> The word was appropriate because the hoper deserves a memorial written not on pieces of paper which moths shall destroy but in the undying book of nature where good actions are registered.

ON ABRAHAM, 11-15

Further, if we reckon the 12 generations from the first, the earth-born man, we shall find that he, who is called by the Chaldeans Enos and in our tongue Man, is fourth.<sup>b</sup> Now the 13 number four has been held in high honour by the other philosophers who devoted themselves to the study of immaterial and conceptual realities, and especially by the all-wise Moses who when glorifying that number speaks of it as "holy and for praise,"<sup>c</sup> and why he so called it has been shewn in the former treatise.<sup>d</sup> Holy, too, and praiseworthy is the hopeful 14 man, just as on the contrary the despondent is unholy and blameworthy, since in all things he takes fear for his evil counsellor; for no two things are more at enmity with each other, men say, than fear and hope, and surely that is natural, for each is an expectation, hope of good, fear on the other hand of evil, and their natures are irreconcilable and incapable of agreement.

III. No more need be said about 15

number he requires by omitting either Abel, because in Gen.
iv. 25 Seth is spoken of as a substitute for him, or Cain as accursed. See App. p. 597.

<sup>c</sup> Or "praiseworthy." See Lev. xix. 24 "In the fourth year the fruit shall be holy and alverbós to the Lord." In De Plant. 119, Philo takes alverbós (probably rightly) as meaning something for which we may praise the Lord. So, too, in De Som. i. 33, though there it is the fourth year which is alverbós. Here the adjective is applied to the number itself and, as the sequel shews, means worthy of praise.

<sup>d</sup> De Op. 47 ff.

PHILO

- ἐπὶ θύραις οἶα πυλωρὸν ἢ φύσις ἰδρύσατο βασιλίδων τῶν ἔνδον ἀρετῶν, αἷς οὐκ ἔστιν ἐντυχεῖν μὴ ταύτην
- 16 προθεραπεύσαντας. πολλὰ μὲν οὖν οἱ νομοθέται, πολλὰ δὲ οἱ πανταχοῦ νόμοι πραγματεύονται περὶ τοῦ τὰς ψυχὰς τῶν ἐλευθέρων ἐλπίδων χρηστῶν ἀναπλῆσαι· ὁ δ' ἄνευ παραιέσεως δίχα τοῦ κελευσθῆναι γενόμενος εὐελπίς ἀγράφῳ μὲν νόμῳ δὲ πάλιν αὐτομαθεῖ τὴν ἀρετὴν ταύτην πεπαίδευται, ὃν ἢ φύσις ἔθηκε.
- 17 Δευτέραν δ' ἔλαχε τάξιν μετὰ τὴν ἐλπίδα ἢ ἐπὶ τοῖς ἀμαρτανομένοις μετάνοια καὶ βελτίωσις· ὅθεν ἐξῆς ἀναγράφει τὸν ἀπὸ χείρονος βίου πρὸς τὸν ἀμείνω μεταβαλόντα, ὃς καλεῖται παρὰ μὲν Ἑβραίοις Ἐνώχ, ὡς δ' ἂν Ἕλληνες εἴποιεν “ κεχαρισμένος,” ἐφ' οὗ καὶ ταυτὶ λέλεκται, ὡς ἄρα
- [4] | “ εὐηρέστησεν Ἐνώχ τῷ θεῷ καὶ οὐχ ἠύρισκετο,
- 18 ὅτι μετέθηκεν αὐτὸν ὁ θεός.” ἢ γὰρ μετάθεσις τροπὴν ἐμφαίνει καὶ μεταβολήν· πρὸς δὲ τὸ βέλτιον ἢ μεταβολή, διότι προμηθεῖα γίνεται θεοῦ· πᾶν γὰρ τὸ σὺν θεῷ καλὸν καὶ συμφέρον πάντως, ἐπεὶ καὶ τὸ ἄνευ θείας ἐπιφροσύνης ἀλυσιτελές.
- 19 εὖ δ' εἴρηται τὸ “ οὐχ ἠύρισκετο ” ἐπὶ τοῦ μετατεθειμένου, τῷ τὸν ἀρχαῖον καὶ ἐπίληπτον ἀπαληλίφθαι βίον καὶ ἠφανίσθαι καὶ μηκέθ' εὕρισκεσθαι, καθάπερ εἰ μηδὲ τὴν ἀρχὴν ἐγένετο, ἢ τῷ τὸν μετατιθέμενον καὶ ἐν τῇ βελτίῳι ταχθέντα τάξει δυσεύρετον εἶναι φύσει· πολύχουν μὲν γὰρ ἢ κακία, διὸ καὶ πολλοῖς γνῶριμον, σπάνιον δ' ἢ ἀρετὴ, ὡς
- 20 μηδ' ὑπ' ὀλίγων καταλαμβάνεσθαι. καὶ ἄλλως ὁ

---

<sup>a</sup> Gen. v. 24. The LXX version “ Enoch was well-pleasing to God, and he was not found because God translated him ”

ON ABRAHAM, 15-20

the subject of hope, set by nature as a door-keeper at the portals of the royal virtues within, to which access cannot be gained unless we have first paid our respects to her. Great indeed are the efforts 16 expended both by lawgivers and by laws in every nation in filling the souls of free men with comfortable hopes; but he who gains this virtue of hopefulness without being led to it by exhortation or command has been educated into it by a law which nature has laid down, a law unwritten yet intuitively learnt.

The second place after hope is given to repentance 17 for sins and to improvement, and, therefore, Moses mentions next in order him who changed from the worse life to the better, called by the Hebrews Enoch but in our language "recipient of grace." We are told of him that he proved "to be pleasing to God and was not found because God transferred him,"<sup>a</sup> for 18 transference implies turning and changing, and the change is to the better because it is brought about by the forethought of God. For all that is done with God's help is excellent and truly profitable, as also all that has not His directing care is unprofitable.

And the expression used of the trans- 19 ferred person, that he was not found, is well said, either because the old reprehensible life is blotted out and disappears and is no more found, as though it had never been at all, or because he who is thus transferred and takes his place in the better class is naturally hard to find. For evil is widely spread and therefore known to many, while virtue is rare, so that even the few cannot comprehend it. Besides, 20 (E.V. "Enoch walked with God: and he was not; for God took him") is familiar from Hebrews xi. 5. See App. p. 597).

PHILO

- μὲν φαῦλος ἀγορὰν καὶ θέατρα καὶ δικαστήρια βουλευτήριά τε καὶ ἐκκλησίας καὶ πάντα σύλλογον καὶ θίασον ἀνθρώπων ἅτε φιλοπραγμοσύνη συζῶν μετατρέχει, τὴν μὲν γλῶτταν ἀνιείς πρὸς ἄμετρον καὶ ἀπέραντον καὶ ἄκριτον διήγησιν, συγχέων ἅπαντα καὶ φύρων, ἀληθέσι ψευδῇ καὶ ῥητοῖς ἄρρητα καὶ ἴδια κοινοῖς καὶ ἱεροῖς βέβηλα καὶ σπουδαίοις γελοῖα ἀναμιγνύς, διὰ τὸ μὴ πεπαι-δεῦσθαι τὸ ἐν καιρῷ κάλλιστον, ἡσυχίαν, τὰ δὲ ὦτα
- 21 ἐπουρίσας<sup>1</sup> ἔνεκα πολυπράγμονος περιεργίας· τὰ γὰρ ἑτέρων εἴτε ἀγαθὰ εἴτ' αὖ κακὰ γλίχεται μανθάνειν, ὡς αὐτίκα τοῖς μὲν φθονεῖν, ἐφ' οἷς δὲ ἠδεσθαι· βάσκανον γὰρ καὶ μισόκαλον καὶ φιλοπόνηρον ὁ
- 22 φαῦλος φύσει. IV. ὁ δ' ἀστεῖος ἔμπαλιν ἀπράγμονος ζηλωτῆς βίου γεγωνὸς ὑποχωρεῖ καὶ μόνωσιν ἀγαπᾷ, λανθάνειν τοὺς πολλοὺς ἀξίων, οὐ διὰ μισανθρωπίαν—φιλάνθρωπος γάρ, εἰ καὶ τις ἄλλος, —ἀλλὰ διὰ τὸ προβεβλησθαι κακίαν, ἣν ὁ πολὺς ὄχλος ἀσπάζεται, χαίρων μὲν ἐφ' οἷς στένειν ἀξίον,
- 23 λυπούμενος δὲ ἐφ' οἷς γεγηθέναι καλόν. ὧν ἔνεκα συγκλεισάμενος οἴκοι τὰ πολλὰ καταμένει μόλις τὰς κλισιάδας ὑπερβαίνων ἢ διὰ τοὺς ἐπιφοιτῶντας συνεχέστερον ἔξω πόλεως προελθὼν ἐν μοναγρία ποιεῖται τὰς διατριβὰς ἡδίων συμβιωταῖς χρώμενος τοῖς ἅπαντος τοῦ γένους ἀνθρώπων ἀρίστοις, ὧν τὰ μὲν σώματα διέλυσεν ὁ χρόνος, τὰς δ' ἀρετὰς αἰ ἀπολειφθεῖσαι γραφαὶ ζωπυροῦσι διὰ τε ποιημάτων καὶ τῶν καταλογάδην συγγραμμάτων, οἷς ἡ ψυχὴ

<sup>1</sup> ἐπουρίσας] so Cohn, but the text is very doubtful. Some mss. have ἐπορθιάσας εὐπορίας (with variations of order and spelling), others ἐπουριάσας or ἐπουριάς. The natural sense of ἐπουρίξω (lit. "direct with a favouring wind") seems by itself

ON ABRAHAM, 20-23

the worthless man whose life is one long restlessness haunts market-places, theatres, law-courts, council-halls, assemblies, and every group and gathering of men; his tongue he lets loose for unmeasured, endless, indiscriminate talk, bringing chaos and confusion into everything, mixing true with false, fit with unfit, public with private, holy with profane, sensible with absurd, because he has not been trained to that silence which in season is most excellent. His ears 21 he keeps alert in meddlesome curiosity, ever eager to learn his neighbour's affairs, whether good or bad, and ready with envy for the former and joy at the latter; for the worthless man is a creature naturally malicious, a hater of good and lover of evil. IV. The man of worth on the other hand, having acquired 22 a desire for a quiet life, withdraws from the public and loves solitude, and his choice is to be unnoticed by the many, not because he is misanthropical, for he is eminently a philanthropist, but because he has rejected vice which is welcomed by the multitude who rejoice at what calls for mourning and grief where it is well to be glad. And therefore he mostly 23 secludes himself at home and scarcely ever crosses his threshold, or else because of the frequency of visitors he leaves the town and spends his days in some lonely farm, finding pleasanter society in those noblest of the whole human race whose bodies time has turned into dust but the flame of their virtues is kept alive by the written records which have survived them in poetry or in prose and serve strange in this context. I should prefer to read επορθιάσας ἐπ' οὐρας ("pricked up and ready to catch any chance"). It is true that επορθιάζω is not used elsewhere with ᾠρα, but ἀνορθιάζω is several times so used by Philo. See further on Mos. i. 283.

---

PHILO

- 24 πέφυκε βελτιοῦσθαι. διὰ τοῦτο εἶπεν ὅτι ὁ μετατεθείς “οὐχ εὐρίσκετο” δυσεύρετος καὶ δυσθήρατος ὢν. μεθορμίζεται οὖν εἰς παιδείαν ἐξ ἀμαθίας καὶ ἐξ ἀφροσύνης εἰς φρόνησιν ἔκ τε δειλίας εἰς | [5] ἀνδρείαν καὶ ἐξ ἀσεβείας εἰς εὐσέβειαν, καὶ πάλιν ἔκ μὲν φιληδονίας εἰς ἐγκράτειαν, ἔκ δὲ φιλοδοξίας εἰς ἀτυφίαν· ὢν τίς ἢ πλοῦτος ἐπάξιος ἢ βασιλείας 25 καὶ δυναστείας κτήσις ὠφελιμωτέρα; εἰ γὰρ χρή τάληθές εἰπεῖν, ὁ μὴ τυφλὸς ἀλλ’ ὄξυ βλέπων πλοῦτος ἢ τῶν ἀρετῶν ἐστὶ περιουσία, ἣν εὐθὺς γνήσιον καὶ εὖνομον παρὰ τὰς νόθους καὶ ψευδωνύμους ἀρχὰς ὑποληπτέον ἡγεμονίαν ἐνδίκως ἅπαντα 26 πρυτανεύουσιν. οὐ δεῖ δὲ ἀγνοεῖν, ὅτι τὰ δευτερεῖα φέρεται μετάνοια τελειότητος, ὥσπερ καὶ ἀνόσου σώματος ἢ πρὸς ὑγίαν ἐξ ἀσθενείας μεταβολή. τὸ μὲν οὖν διηνεκές καὶ τέλειον ἐν ἀρεταῖς ἐγγυτάτω θείας ἴσεται δυνάμει, ἢ δ’ ἀπό-τινος χρόνου βελτίωσις ἴδιον ἀγαθὸν εὐφυοῦς ψυχῆς ἐστὶ μὴ τοῖς παιδικοῖς ἐπιμενούσης ἀλλ’ ἀδροτέροις καὶ ἀνδρὸς ὄντως φρονήμασιν ἐπιζητούσης εὐδίων κατάστασιν [ψυχῆς] καὶ τῇ φαντασίᾳ τῶν καλῶν ἐπιτρεχούσης.
- 27 V. “Ὅθεν εἰκότως τῷ μετανενοηκότι τάττει κατὰ τὸ ἐξῆς τὸν θεοφιλῆ καὶ φιλάρετον, ὃς Ἑβραίων μὲν τῇ γλώττῃ καλεῖται Νῶε, τῇ δὲ Ἑλλήνων “ἀνάπαυσις” ἢ “δίκαιος,” οἰκειόταται προσρήσεις σοφῶ· ἐμφανῶς μὲν ὁ δίκαιος, ἄμεινον γὰρ οὐδὲν δικαιοσύνης, τῆς ἐν ἀρεταῖς ἡγεμονίδος, ἢ καθάπερ ἐν χορῶ καλλιστεύουσα πρεσβεύει· ἢ δ’ ἀνάπαυσις, ἐπεὶ καὶ τοῦναντίον τὴν παρὰ φύσιν κίνησιν ταραχῶν <sup>a</sup> “Unnatural movement of the soul” is a phrase used by the Stoics to define πάθος S. V. F. iii. 462 and 476.

ON ABRAHAM, 24-27

to promote the growth of goodness in the soul. That 24 was why he said that the "transferred" was not found, being hard to find and hard to seek. So he passes across from ignorance to instruction, from folly to sound sense, from cowardice to courage, from impiety to piety, and again from voluptuousness to self-control, from vaingloriousness to simplicity. And what wealth is equal in worth to these, or what possession of royalty or dominion more profitable? For in very truth the wealth which is not blind 25 but keen of sight is abundance of virtues, which consequently we must needs hold to be, in contrast to the bastard governments falsely so-called, genuine and equitable sovereignty ruling in justice over all.

But we must not forget that repentance 26 holds the second place to perfection, just as a change from sickness to health is second to a body free from disease; so, then, unbroken perfection of virtues stands nearest to divine power, but improvement in the course of time is the peculiar treasure of a soul gifted by nature, which does not stay in childish thoughts but by such as are more robust and truly manly seeks to gain a condition of serenity and pursues the vision of the excellent.

V. Naturally, therefore, next to the repentant he 27 sets the lover of virtue and beloved by God, who in the Hebrew language is called Noah but in ours "rest" or "just," both very suitable titles for the Sage. "Just" is obviously so, for nothing is better than justice, the chief among the virtues, who like the fairest maiden of the dance holds the highest place. But "rest" is appropriate also, since its opposite, unnatural movement,<sup>a</sup> proves to be the cause

PHILO

- καὶ θορύβων στάσεών τε καὶ πολέμων αἰτίαν εἶναι συμβέβηκεν, ἣν μετίασιν οἱ φαῦλοι, ἡρεμαῖον δὲ καὶ ἡσυχάζοντα καὶ σταθερὸν ἔτι δὲ καὶ εἰρηνικὸν βίον
- 28 οἱ καλοκάγαθίαν τετιμηκότες. ἐπόμενος δ' αὐτὸς αὐτῷ καὶ τὴν ἐβδόμην, ἣν Ἑβραῖοι σάββατα καλοῦσιν, ἀνάπαυσιν ὀνομάζει, οὐχ, ὡς οἴονται τινες, ὅτι δι' ἐξ ἡμερῶν τῶν συνήθων ἔργων ἀπέιχετο τὸ πλῆθος, ἀλλ' ὅτι τῷ ὄντι ὁ ἑβδομος ἀριθμὸς ἐν τε τῷ κόσμῳ καὶ ἐν ἡμῖν αὐτοῖς αἰὲ ἀστασίαστος καὶ ἀπόλεμος καὶ ἀφιλόνηκος καὶ
- 29 εἰρηνικώτατος ἀπάντων ἀριθμῶν ἐστι. μάρτυρες δὲ τοῦ λεχθέντος αἱ ἐν ἡμῖν δυνάμεις· αἱ μὲν γὰρ ἐξ τὸν ἄπαυστον καὶ συνεχῆ πόλεμον ἐν γῆ καὶ θαλάττῃ συγκροτοῦσιν, αἱ τε πέντε αἰσθήσεις καὶ ὁ προφορικὸς λόγος, αἱ μὲν πόθῳ τῶν αἰσθητῶν, ὧν εἰάν μὴ τυγχάνωσιν, ἀνιῶνται, ὁ δ' ἀχαλίνῳ
- 30 στόματι μυρία τῶν ἡσυχαστέων ἐκλαλῶν· ἡ δ' ἐβδόμη δύναμις ἡ περὶ τὸν ἡγεμόνα νοῦν, ὃς ὅταν ἐπικυδέστερος γένηται τῶν ἐξ καὶ δυνατωτέρα ῥώμῃ κατακρατήσας ἀναχωρήσῃ, μόνωσιν ἀσπασάμενος καὶ ταῖς ἑαυτοῦ πρὸς ἑαυτὸν <χαίρων><sup>1</sup> ὀμιλίαις ὡς ἀπροσδεῆς ὢν ἑτέρου καὶ αὐταρκέστατος ἑαυτῷ, τηνικαῦτα φροντίδων καὶ πραγμα-
- [6] τειῶν | ἀπαλλαγείς τῶν ἐν τῷ θνητῷ γένει βίον εὐδίων καὶ γαληνὸν ἀσπάζεταιται.
- 31 VI. Οὕτως δ' ἀποσεμνύνει τὸν φιλάρετον, ὥστε καὶ γενεαλογῶν αὐτὸν οὐ, καθάπερ ἔθος ἐπὶ τῶν ἄλλων, πάππων ἢ προπάππων ἢ προγόνων ποιεῖται κατάλογον, ὅσοι πρὸς ἀνδρῶν ἢ πρὸς γυναικῶν εἰσιν, ἀλλὰ τιῶν ἀρετῶν, μόνον οὐχὶ βοῶν ἄντι<sup>1</sup> Or read τὰς . . . ὀμιλίαις omitting χαίρων.

ON ABRAHAM, 27-31

of turmoil and confusion and factions and wars. Such movement is sought by the worthless, while a life which is calm, serene, tranquil and peaceful to boot is the object of those who have valued nobility of conduct. He shews consistency, too, when he 28 gives to the seventh day, which the Hebrews call sabbath, the name of rest; not, as some think, because the multitude abstained after six days from their usual tasks, but because in truth the number seven, both in the world and in ourselves, is always free from factions and war and quarrelling and is of all numbers the most peaceful. This statement is attested by 29 the faculties within us, for six <sup>a</sup> of them wage ceaseless and continuous war on land and sea, namely the five senses and speech, the former in their craving for the objects of sense, deprivation of which is painful to them, speech because with unbridled mouth it perpetually gives utterance where silence is due. But the seventh faculty is that of the 30 dominant mind, which, after triumphing over the six and returning victorious through its superior strength, welcomes solitude and rejoices in its own society, feeling that it needs no other and is completely sufficient for itself, and then released from the cares and concerns of mortal kind gladly accepts a life of calmness and serenity.

VI. So highly does Moses extol the lover of virtue 31 that when he gives his genealogy he does not, as he usually does in other cases, make a list of his grandfathers, great-grandfathers and ancestors in the male and female line, but of certain virtues, and this is

<sup>a</sup> Elsewhere, when Philo's argument requires it, the faculties, excluding mind, are seven by the addition of reproduction (τὸ γόνιμον), De Op. 117, De Mut. 111.

PHILO

- κρυς, ὅτι οἰκία καὶ συγγένεια καὶ πατρὶς οὐδεμία ἐστὶν ἑτέρα σοφῶ ὅτι μὴ ἀρεταὶ καὶ αἱ κατ' ἀρετὰς πράξεις· “αὐταὶ” γάρ φησιν “αἱ γενέσεις Νῶε· Νῶε ἄνθρωπος δίκαιος, τέλειος ἐν τῇ γενεᾷ αὐτοῦ,
- 32 τῷ θεῷ εὐηρέστησεν.” οὐ δεῖ δὲ ἀγνοεῖν, ὅτι νῦν “ἄνθρωπον” οὐ κοινῶ τύπῳ τὸ λογικὸν θνητὸν ζῶον καλεῖ, τὸν μέντοι κατ' ἕξοχὴν, ὃς ἐπαληθεύει τοῦνομα τὰ ἀτίθασα καὶ λελυττηκότα πάθη καὶ τὰς θηριωδεστάτας κακίας τῆς ψυχῆς ἀπεληλακῶς.
- 33 σημεῖον δέ· μετὰ τὸν “ἄνθρωπον” ἐπιλέγει τὸν “δίκαιον” εἰπὼν “ἄνθρωπος δίκαιος,” ὡς ἀδίκου μὲν οὐδενὸς ὄντος ἀνθρώπου (κυριώτερον δ' εἰπεῖν ἀνθρωπομόρφου θηρίου), μόνου δὲ ὃς ἂν ζηλωτῆς ἢ
- 34 δικαιοσύνης. φησὶ δ' αὐτὸν καὶ “τέλειον” γεγενῆσθαι διὰ τούτου παριστάς, ὡς οὐ μίαν ἀρετὴν ἀλλὰ πάσας ἐκτήσατο καὶ κτησάμενος ἐκάστη κατὰ τὸ ἐπιβάλλον χρώμενος διετετέλεσεν.
- 35 ἐπιστεφανῶν δ' αὐτὸν ὡς ἀγωνιστὴν ἐκνεκρικώτα κηρύγματι λαμπροτάτῳ προσεπικοσμεῖ φάσκων, ὅτι “τῷ θεῷ εὐηρέστησεν”· οὐ τί γένοιτ' ἂν ἐν τῇ φύσει κρεῖττον; τίς καλοκάγαθίας ἐναργέστερος<sup>1</sup> ἔλεγχος; εἰ γὰρ οἱ δυσारेσθήσαντες τῷ θεῷ κακοδαίμονες, οἷς εὐαρεσθήσαι συνέβη πάντως
- 36 εὐδαίμονες. VII. οὐκ ἀπὸ σκοποῦ μέντοι ταῖς τοσαύταις ἀρεταῖς ὑμνήσας τὸν ἄνθρωπον ἐπέειπε, ὅτι “τέλειος ἦν ἐν τῇ γενεᾷ αὐτοῦ,” δηλῶν ὅτι οὐ καθάπαξ ἀλλὰ κατὰ σύγκρισιν τῶν κατ'
- 37 ἐκείνῳ τὸν χρόνον γεγονότων ἀγαθὸς ἦν. ἤδη γάρ

<sup>1</sup> MSS. τῆς κ. ἐναργέστατος.

<sup>a</sup> Gen. vi. 9, cf. Quod Deus 117.

<sup>b</sup> i.e. “a man, a just one.” As the Greek adjective needs no substantive expressed, ἄνθρωπος, which would be otherwise

ON ABRAHAM, 31-37

little less than a direct assertion that a sage has no house or kinsfolk or country save virtues and virtuous actions ; " for these," he says, " are the generations of Noah. Noah, a man just and perfect in his generation, was well-pleasing to God." <sup>a</sup> But we must not <sup>32</sup> fail to note that in this passage he gives the name of man not according to the common form of speech, to the mortal animal endowed with reason, but to the man who is man pre-eminently, who verifies the name by having expelled from the soul the untamed and frantic passions and the truly beast-like vices. Here <sup>33</sup> is a proof. After " man " he adds " just," implying by the combination <sup>b</sup> that the unjust is no man, or more properly speaking a beast in human form, and that the follower after righteousness alone is man.

He says, too, that Noah became " perfect," thereby <sup>34</sup> shewing that he acquired not one virtue but all, and having acquired them continued to exercise each as opportunities allowed. And as he crowns him <sup>35</sup> as victor in the contest, he gives him further distinction by a proclamation couched in words of splendid praise, " he was well-pleasing to God." What better thing than this has nature to give ? What clearer proof can there be of nobility of life ? For, if those who have been ill-pleasing to God are ill-fated, happy most surely are those whose lot it is to be well-pleasing to God.

VII. But Moses makes <sup>36</sup> a good point when, after praising him as possessed of all these virtues, he adds that he was perfect in his generation, thus shewing he was not good absolutely but in comparison with the men of that time. For <sup>37</sup> superfluous, must have a special emphasis. Assuming, as Philo does, that the LXX follows the usage of classical Greek, the argument has some weight.

PHILO

οὐκ εἰς μακρὰν ἐπιμνησθήσεται σοφῶν ἑτέρων, οἱ τὴν ἀρετὴν ἀνανταγώνιστον ἔσχον, οὐ πονηροῖς ἀντεξετασθέντες οὐδ' ὅτι βελτίους ἐγένοντο τῶν κατ' αὐτοὺς ἀποδοχῆς καὶ προνομίας ἀξιωθέντες, ἀλλ' ὅτι φύσιν εὐμοιρον κτησάμενοι διετήρησαν αὐτὴν ἀδιάστροφον, οὐ φυγόντες μοχθηρὰ ἐπιτηδεύματα, ἀλλ' οὐδὲ τὴν ἀρχὴν αὐτοῖς περιπεσόντες, προηγουμένως δὲ καλῶν ἔργων καὶ λόγων ἀσκηταὶ

38 γενόμενοι τὸν βίον ἐπεκόσμου. θαυμασιώτατοι μὲν οὖν ἄνδρες ἐκείνοι γεγόνασιν, οἱ ταῖς ὁρμαῖς ἐλευθέραις καὶ εὐγενέσι ἐχρήσαντο, μὴ κατὰ μίμησιν ἢ ἐναντίωσιν ἑτέρων, ἀλλ' αὐτὸ τὸ καλὸν καὶ τὸ δίκαιον ἀποδεξάμενοι, θαυμάσιος δὲ καὶ ὁ τῆς καθ' αὐτὸν γενεᾶς διεννηοχῶς καὶ μηδενὶ συνενεχθεῖς ὦν ἐζήλωσαν οἱ πολλοί· δευτερείων μὲν οὗτος ἐφίξεται, τὰ δὲ πρῶτα τῶν ἄθλων ἐκείνοις

39 ἀναδώσει ἢ φύσις. τὰ μέντοι δευτερεία καὶ αὐτὰ [7] μεγάλα· τί | δ' οὐχὶ μέγα καὶ περιμάχητον ὦν ὀρέγεται καὶ δωρεῖται θεός; σαφεστάτη δὲ πίστις αἱ τῶν χαρίτων ὑπερβολαί, ὦν οὗτος ἔτυχεν.

40 ἐπεὶ γὰρ ἀδικημάτων φορὰν ἤνεγκεν ὁ χρόνος ἐκείνος καὶ πᾶσα χώρα καὶ ἔθνος καὶ πόλις καὶ οἰκία καὶ ἕκαστος ἰδία πονηρῶν ἐπιτηδευμάτων ἀνεπέπληστο, πάντων ἐκουσίως καὶ ἐκ προνοίας ὡς ἐν ἀγῶνι περὶ τῶν ἐν τῷ διαμαρτάνειν πρωτείων ἀμιλλωμένων—μετὰ σπουδῆς γὰρ ἀπάσης ἐφιλονεῖκουσιν, ἕκαστου τὸν πλησίον μεγέθει κακίας ὑπερβαλεῖν ἐπειγομένου καὶ μηδὲν παραλείποντος τῶν

41 πρὸς ἐπίληπτον καὶ ἐπάρατον βίον. VIII. ἐφ' οἷς ὁ θεὸς εἰκότως δυσχεράνας, εἰ τὸ ζῶον τὸ ἄριστον

ON ABRAHAM, 37-41

we shall shortly find him mentioning other sages whose virtue was unchallenged, who are not contrasted with the bad, who are adjudged worthy of approval and precedence, not because they were better than their contemporaries but because they possessed a happily-gifted nature and kept it unperturbed, who did not have to shun evil courses or indeed come into contact with them at all, but attained pre-eminence in practising that excellence of words and deeds with which they adorned their lives. The highest admiration, then, is due to those 38 in whom the ruling impulses were of free and noble birth, who accepted the excellent and just for their own selves and not in imitation of or in opposition to others. But admiration is also due to him who stood apart from his own generation and conformed himself to none of the aims and aspirations of the many. He will win the second prize, though the first will be awarded by nature to those others. Yet great also is 39 the second prize in itself, for how could anything fail to be great and worthy of our efforts which God offers and gives ?

And the clearest proof of this is the exceeding magnitude of the bounties which Noah obtained. That time bore its harvest of iniquities, and 40 every country and nation and city and household and every private individual was filled with evil practices ; one and all, as though in a race, engaged in rivalry pre-willed and premeditated for the first places in sinfulness, and put all possible zeal into the contention, each one pressing on to exceed his neighbour in magnitude of vice and leaving nothing undone which could lead to a guilty and accursed life. VIII. Naturally this roused the wrath of God, to think that 41 man, who seemed the best of all living creatures,

PHILO

εἶναι δοκοῦν καὶ συγγενείας ἀξιωθὲν τῆς πρὸς αὐτὸν ἕνεκα τῆς ἐν τῷ λόγῳ κοινωνίας, δέον ἀρετὴν ἐπιτηδεύειν, ἐζήλωσε κακίαν καὶ τὰ εἶδη πάντα κακίας, δίκην ὀρίζει τὴν προσήκουσαν, ἀφανίσαι τοὺς τότε ὄντας κατακλυσμῷ διανοηθεῖς, οὐ μόνον τοὺς ἐν τῇ πεδιάδι καὶ τοῖς χθαμαλωτέροις ἀλλὰ καὶ τοὺς ἐν τοῖς ὑψηλοτάτοις ὄρεσι κατοικοῦντας.
 42 ἢ μὲν γὰρ μεγάλη θάλαττα μετέωρος ὡς οὐδέπω πρότερον ἀρθεῖσα διὰ τῶν στομάτων ἀθρόα ρύμη τοῖς καθ' ἡμᾶς εἰσερρῦη πελάγεσι, τὰ δὲ πλημ-μύραντα νήσους καὶ ἠπείρους ἐπέκλυσε, πηγῶν δ' ἀενάων καὶ ποταμῶν αὐθιγενῶν τε καὶ χειμάρρων ἐπάλληλοι φοραὶ συνῆπτον ἀλλήλαις ἀναχεόμεναι 43 καὶ πρὸς ὕψος ἐπαιρόμεναι ἐπέβαινον. οὐ μὴν οὐδὲ ὁ ἀῆρ ἠρέμει· πάντα γὰρ τὸν οὐρανὸν βαθύ καὶ συνεχὲς νέφος ἐπέιχε καὶ πνεύματα ἦν ἐξαίσια πάταγοί τε βροντῶν καὶ ἐπιλάμψεις ἀστραπῶν καὶ κεραυνῶν φοραί, καταρρηγνυμένων ὄμβρων ἀπαύσ-των, ὡς νομίσαι τὰ μέρη τοῦ παντὸς εἰς μίαν φύσιν τὴν ὕδατος ἀναστοιχειούμενα σπεύδειν, ἕως τοῦ μὲν ἀνωθεν καταράττοντος τοῦ δὲ κάτωθεν ἐπανιόντος μετάρσια ἦρθη τὰ ρεῖθρα, οἷς οὐ μόνον ἡ πεδιάς καὶ ὄση χθαμαλή κατακλυσθεῖσα ἠφανίσθη, ἀλλὰ καὶ 44 τῶν ὑψηλοτάτων ὄρων αἱ κορυφαί. πάντα γὰρ τὰ μέρη τῆς γῆς ἔδυν ὕδατος, ὡς πᾶσαν καθηρπᾶσθαι καὶ τὸν κόσμον ἀκρωτηριασθέντα μεγάλῳ τμήματι τὸν παντελῆ καὶ ὀλόκληρον, ὃ μήτε εἰπεῖν

---

* LXX Gen. vii. 11 "the fountains of the abyss were broken up." By the Hebrew word translated in the LXX by ἄβυσσος is understood the "ocean which both encircled the world, and occupied the vast hollows beneath the earth" (Driver). Philo seems to represent the first part of this conception by who had been judged worthy of kinship with Him because he shared the gift of reason, had, instead of practising virtue as he should, shewn zeal for vice and for every particular form of it. Accordingly He appointed the penalty which fitted their wickedness. He determined to destroy all those who were then alive by a deluge, not only those who dwelt in the plains and lower lands, but also the inhabitants of the highest mountains. For the great deep<sup>a</sup> rose on 42 high as it had never risen before, and gathering its force rushed through its outlets into the seas of our parts, and the rising tides of these flooded the islands and continents, while in quick succession the streams from the perennial fountains and from the rivers spring-fed or winter-torrents pressed on to join each other and mounted upwards to a vast height. Nor 43 was the air still, for a deep unbroken cloud covered the heaven, and there were monstrous blasts of wind and crashings of thunder and flashings of lightning and downfall of thunderbolts, while the rainstorms dashed down ceaselessly, so that one might think that the different parts of the universe were hurrying to be resolved into the single element of water, until, as in one form it rushed down from above and in another rose up from below, the streams were lifted on high, and thus not only the plains and lowlands were submerged and lost to sight, but even the peaks of the highest mountains. For all parts of the 44 earth sank below the water, so that it was entirely carried away as though by violence, and the world seemed mutilated by the loss of a great section, its completeness and perfection destroyed and defaced,

ON ABRAHAM, 41-44

“the great sea or deep,” and the second by the “perennial fountains.”

PHILO

μήτε νοῆσαι θέμις, λελωβῆσθαι δοκεῖν. ἀλλὰ γὰρ καὶ ὁ ἀήρ, ἕξω μέρους βραχέος τοῦ κατὰ σελήνην, ἅπας ἀνήλωτο νικηθεὶς ὑπὸ τῆς τοῦ ὕδατος φορᾶς καὶ βίας, ὅπερ ἀνὰ κράτος τὴν ἐκείνου χώραν 45 ἐπέσχε. τότε δὴ τότε εὐθύς ἐφθείρετο ὅσα σπαρτὰ καὶ δένδρα—φθείρει γὰρ ὡς ἔνδεια καὶ πλήθος ἄμετρον,—ἔθνησκον δ' αἱ μυρίαὶ τῶν ζώων ἀγέλαι ἡμέρων ὁμοῦ καὶ ἀγρίων· ἦν γὰρ εἰκός, τοῦ κρατίστου γένους ἀνθρώπων ἀφανιζομένου, μηδὲν ὑπολει-φθῆναι τῶν χειρόνων, ἐπεὶ καὶ πρὸς τὰς ἐκείνου χρείας ἐγένετο δοῦλα τρόπον τινὰ δεσποτικαῖς 46 προστάξεσιν ὑπηρετήσοντα. τοσοῦτων |

[8] δὴ καὶ τηλικούτων ἐπιρραξάντων κακῶν, ἅπερ ἐκείνος ὁ καιρὸς ὤμβρησε—πάντα γὰρ τὰ τοῦ κόσμου μέρη, δίχα τῶν κατὰ τὸν οὐρανόν, ἐκινήθη παρὰ φύσιν, ὡς ἂν βαρεῖαν καὶ θανατώδη νόσον νοσήσαντα,—μόνος δὲ εἰς οἶκος ὁ τοῦ λεχθέντος ἀνδρὸς δικαίου καὶ θεοφιλοῦς διασωρίζεται δύο λαβόντος τὰς ἀνωτάτω δωρεάς, μίαν μὲν, ἣν εἶπον, τὸ μὴ πᾶσι τούτοις συναπολέσθαι, ἑτέραν δὲ τὸ πάλιν ἀρχηγέτην αὐτὸν ὑπάρξαι νέας ἀνθρώπων σπορᾶς· ἠξίωσε γὰρ αὐτὸν ὁ θεὸς καὶ τέλος τοῦ γένους ἡμῶν καὶ ἀρχὴν γενέσθαι, τέλος μὲν τῶν πρὸ τοῦ κατακλυσμοῦ, τῶν δὲ μετὰ τὸν κατα-κλυσμὸν ἀρχήν.

47 IX. Τοιοῦτος μὲν ὁ τῶν καθ' αὐτὸν ἄριστος, τοιαῦτα δὲ καὶ τὰ τεθειμένα ἄθλα αὐτῷ, ὅποια δεδήλωκεν ὁ ἱερὸς λόγος. τῶν δ' εἰρημένων τριῶν εἴτε ἀνδρῶν εἴτε ψυχῆς τρόπων ἐναρμόνιος ἡ τάξις· ὁ μὲν γὰρ τέλειος ὀλόκληρος ἐξ ἀρχῆς, ὁ δὲ μετατεθειμένος ἡμέτερος, τοῦ βίου τὸν μὲν πρότερον χρόνον ἀναθεὶς κακία, τὸν δ' ὕστερον ἀρετῇ, πρὸς

ON ABRAHAM, 44-47

a thing too terrible for words or even for thoughts. Indeed even the air, except a small portion belonging to the moon, had been completely made away with, vanquished by the rush and violence of the water which perforce occupied its place. Then <sup>45</sup> indeed at once all crops and trees perished, for excessive quantity of water is as destructive as the lack of it, and the numberless herds of animals died, tame and wild alike ; for it was to be expected that if the highest kind, the human, was annihilated none of the inferior kinds would be left, since they were made for man's needs, as slaves in a sense meant to obey their masters' orders.

When all these <sup>46</sup> evils, so many and so vast, had burst upon the world in the downpour which that occasion brought, and the unnatural convulsion had shaken all its parts save the heavenly as with a grievous and deadly plague, one house alone, that of the man called just and dear to God, was preserved. Thus he received two gifts of the highest kind—one that, as I have said, he did not perish with the rest, the other that he should be in his turn the founder of a new race of men. For God deemed him worthy to be both the last and the first of our kind—last of those who lived before the flood and first of those who lived after it.

IX. Such was he who was best of his contemporaries, and such were the prizes awarded to him, the nature of which is made clear in holy writ. Now the three mentioned above, whether we think of them as men or types of soul, form a series of regular gradation : the perfect man is complete from the first ; the transferred stands half-way, since he devoted the earlier part of his life to vice but the latter to ἦν μετανέστη καὶ μετωκίσατο, ὁ δὲ ἐλπίζων, ὡς αὐτὸ δηλοῖ τοῦνομα, ἐλλιπής, ἐφιέμενος μὲν αἰεὶ τοῦ καλοῦ, μήπω δ' ἐφικέσθαι τούτου δεδυνημένος, ἀλλ' ἔοικώς τοῖς πλέουσιν, οἱ σπεύδοντες εἰς λιμένας καταίρειν θαλαττεύουσιν ἐνορμίσασθαι μὴ δυνάμενοι.

- 48 X. Ἡ μὲν οὖν προτέρα τριάς τῶν ἀρετῆν ἐπιποθησάντων δεδήλωται. μείζων δέ ἐστιν ἢ ἕτερα, περὶ ἧς νυνὶ λεκτέον. ἐκείνη μὲν γὰρ τοῖς ἐν ἡλικίᾳ παιδικῇ μαθήμασιν ἔοικεν, αὕτη δὲ τοῖς ἀνδρῶν ἀθλητικῶν γυμνάσμασιν ἐπὶ τοὺς ἱεροὺς ὄντως ἀλειφομένων ἀγῶνας, οἱ σωμασκίας καταφρονούντες τὴν ἐν τῇ ψυχῇ κατασκευάζουσιν εὐεξίαν ἐφιέμενοι τῆς κατὰ τῶν ἀντιπάλων παθῶν
- 49 νίκης. οἷς μὲν οὖν διενήνοχεν ἕκαστος ἐφ' ἐν καὶ τὸ αὐτὸ τέλος ἐπειγόμενος, αὐτῆς ἀκριβέστερον ἐροῦμεν· ἃ δὲ χρῆνὴ περὶ τῶν τριῶν συλλήβδην
- 50 προειπεῖν, ἀναγκαῖον μὴ παρασιωπήσαι. τούτους τοίνυν συμβέβηκε μιᾶς οἰκίας καὶ ἐνὸς γένους εἶναι—ὁ γὰρ τελευταῖος υἱὸς μὲν ἐστὶ τοῦ μέσου, υἱωνὸς δὲ τοῦ πρώτου—καὶ πάντας φιλοθέους ὁμοῦ καὶ θεοφιλεῖς, ἀγαπήσαντας τὸν ἀληθῆ θεὸν καὶ ἀνταγαπηθέντας πρὸς αὐτοῦ, ὃς ἠξίωσε, καθάπερ δηλοῦσιν οἱ χρησμοί, διὰ τὰς ὑπερβολὰς τῶν ἀρετῶν αἷς συνεβίουν κοινωνῆσαι τῆς προσρήσεως
- 51 αὐτοῖς.<sup>1</sup> τὸ γὰρ ἴδιον ὄνομα τοῖς ἐκείνων ἐναρμοσάμενος ἤνωσε, τὴν ἐκ τῶν τριῶν σύνθετον κλήσιν ἐπιφημίσας ἑαυτῷ· “ τοῦτο γάρ μου ” φησὶν “ ὄνομά ἐστιν αἰώνιον, θεὸς Ἀβραὰμ καὶ θεὸς
- [9] Ἰσαὰκ καὶ θεὸς Ἰακώβ ”—ἀντὶ τοῦ | καθάπαξ τὸ

<sup>1</sup> So most mss.: Cohn prints αὐτοῦ, but suggests the insertion of αὐτοῦς.

ON ABRAHAM, 47-51

virtue to which he passed over and migrated ; the hopper, as his very name shews, is defective inasmuch as though he always desired the excellent he has not yet been able to attain to it, but resembles sailors eager to put into port, who yet remain at sea unable to reach their haven.

X. So now we have explained the first trinity of 48 those who yearn for virtue ; but greater is the second trinity of which we have now to speak. The first we may compare to the studies of children, but the latter to the exercises of athletes who are preparing for games which are really sacred,<sup>a</sup> men who despise bodily training but foster robustness of soul in their desire for victory over their antagonists, the passions. How each of these differed from the others while 49 pressing on to one and the same goal will be described in detail later ; but there is something to be said about them taken as a whole which must not be omitted. We find that these three are all of one 50 house and one family. The last is the son of the second and grandson to the first. All alike are God-lovers and God-beloved, and their affection for the true God was returned by Him, Who deigned, as His utterances shew, in recognition of their high and life-long virtues to make them partners in the title which He took, for He united them by joining His special name 51 to theirs and calling Himself by one combined of the three. "For this," He said, "is my eternal name<sup>b</sup>—the God of Abraham, the God of Isaac and the God of Jacob," relative instead of absolute,<sup>c</sup> and surely that

<sup>a</sup> In contrast to the falsely called "holy" games of the Greeks; cf. De Agr. 116 f.

<sup>b</sup> Ex iii. 15, cf. De Mut. 12 f.

<sup>c</sup> See App. p. 597.

PHILO

- πρός τι· καὶ μήποτ' εἰκότως· ὀνόματος γὰρ ὁ θεὸς οὐ δεῖται, μὴ δεόμενος δ' ὁμως ἐχαρίζετο τῷ γένει τῶν ἀνθρώπων κλήσιν οἰκειαν, ἢ ἔχοντες καταφυγὴν πρὸς ἰκεσίας καὶ λιτὰς μὴ ἀμοιρῶσιν
- 52 ἐλπίδος χρηστῆς. XI. ταῦτα μὲν οὖν ἐπ' ἀνδρῶν ὁσίων εἰρῆσθαι δοκεῖ, μηνύματα δ' ἐστὶ φύσεως ἀδηλοτέρας καὶ πολὺ βελτίονος τῆς ἐν αἰσθητοῖς. τρόπους γὰρ ψυχῆς ἔοικεν ὁ ἱερός διερευνᾶσθαι λόγος, ἀστείους ἅπαντας, τὸν μὲν ἐκ διδασκαλίας, τὸν δ' ἐκ φύσεως, τὸν δ' ἐξ ἀσκήσεως ἐφιέμενον τοῦ καλοῦ. ὁ μὲν γὰρ πρῶτος, ἐπὶ κλήσιν Ἀβραάμ, σύμβολον διδασκαλικῆς ἀρετῆς ἐστίν, ὁ δὲ μέσος, Ἰσαάκ, φυσικῆς, ὁ δὲ τρίτος, Ἰακώβ,
- 53 ἀσκητικῆς. ἀλλὰ γὰρ οὐκ ἀγνοητέον, ὅτι μετεποιεῖτο τῶν τριῶν ἕκαστος δυνάμεων, ὠνομάσθη δὲ ἀπὸ τῆς πλεοναζούσης κατ' ἐπικράτειαν· οὔτε γὰρ διδασκαλίαν ἄνευ φύσεως ἢ ἀσκήσεως τελειωθῆναι δυνατόν οὔτε φύσις ἐπὶ πέρας ἐστὶν ἐλθεῖν ἱκανὴ δίχα τοῦ μαθεῖν καὶ ἀσκήσαι οὔτε ἀσκησις, εἰ μὴ προθεμελιωθεῖ φύσει τε καὶ διδασκαλίᾳ.
- 54 προσηκόντως οὖν καὶ τὴν τῶν τριῶν λόγῳ μὲν ἀνδρῶν ἔργῳ δ' ὡς εἶπον ἀρετῶν οἰκειότητα συνῆψε, φύσεως, μαθήσεως, ἀσκήσεως,<sup>1</sup> ἃς ἐτέρῳ ὀνόματι Χάριτας ἰσαριθμούς ἀνθρωποι καλοῦσιν, ἢ τῷ κεχαρίσθαι τὸν θεὸν τῷ ἡμετέρῳ γένει τὰς τρεῖς δυνάμεις πρὸς τελειότητα τοῦ βίου ἢ παρόσον αὐταὶ δεδώρηται ψυχῇ λογικῇ ἑαυτάς, δῶρημα τέλειον καὶ κάλλιστον, ἵνα καὶ τὸ αἰώνιον ὄνομα τὸ δηλούμενον ἐν τοῖς χρησμοῖς ἐπὶ τριῶν μὴ ἐπ' ἀνθρώπων
- 55 μᾶλλον ἢ τῶν εἰρημένων δυνάμεων λέγῃται. ἀνθρώπων μὲν γὰρ φθαρτὴ φύσις, ἀφθαρτος δ' ἡ τῶν <sup>1</sup> MSS. φύσις μάθησις ἀσκησις.

ON ABRAHAM, 51-55

is natural. God indeed needs no name ; yet, though He needed it not, He nevertheless vouchsafed to give to humankind a name of Himself suited to them, that so men might be able to take refuge in prayers and supplications and not be deprived of comforting hopes.

XI. These words do indeed appear to 52 apply to men of holy life, but they are also statements about an order of things which is not so apparent but is far superior to the order which is perceived by the senses. For the holy word seems to be searching into types of soul, all of them of high worth, one which pursues the good through teaching, one through nature and one through practice. The first called Abraham, the second Isaac and the third Jacob, are symbols of virtue acquired respectively by teaching, nature and practice. But indeed we must not fail 53 to note that each possesses the three qualities, but gets his name from that which chiefly predominates in him ; for teaching cannot be consummated without nature or practice, nor is nature capable of reaching its zenith without learning and practising, nor practice either unless the foundation of nature and teaching has first been laid. Very properly, then, 54 Moses thus associated these three together, nominally men, but really, as I have said, virtues—teaching, nature, practice. Another name is given to them by men, who call them the Graces, also three in number ; either because these values are a gift of God's grace to our kind for perfecting its life, or because they have given themselves to the reasonable soul as a perfect and most excellent gift. Thus the eternal name revealed in his words is meant to indicate the three said values rather than actual men. For the nature of man is perishable, but that of 55

PHILO

ἀρετῶν· εὐλογώτερον δὲ ἐπιφημίζεσθαι τὸ ἄιδιον ἀφθάρτοις πρὸ θνητῶν, ἐπεὶ συγγενὲς μὲν αἰδιότητος ἀφθαρσία, ἐχθρὸν δὲ θάνατος.

- 56 XII. Χρὴ μέντοι μὴδ' ἐκείνο ἀγνοεῖν, ὅτι τὸν μὲν πρῶτον ἄνθρωπον τὸν γηγενῆ πατέρα τῶν ἄχρι τοῦ κατακλυσμοῦ φύντων εἰσήγαγε, τὸν δὲ μόνον ἐκ τῆς τοσαύτης φθορᾶς ὑπολειφθέντα πανοίκιον ἔνεκα δικαιοσύνης καὶ τῆς ἄλλης καλοκαγαθίας τοῦ νεάσοντος αὐθις καινοῦ γένους ἀνθρώπων, τὴν δὲ περίσεμνον τριάδα καὶ περιμάχητον ἐνὸς εἶδους ἐπιλεγόμενον “ βασιλείον καὶ ἱεράτευμα καὶ ἔθνος
- 57 ἅγιον ” οἱ χρησιμοὶ καλοῦσι. μὴνύει δὲ τοῦνομα τὴν δύναμιν αὐτοῦ· προσονομάζεται γὰρ Ἑβραίων γλώττῃ τὸ ἔθνος Ἰσραήλ, ὅπερ ἐρμηνευθέν ἐστὶν “ ὄρων θεόν.” ὄρασις δ' ἡ μὲν δι' ὀφθαλμῶν ἐν ἀπάσαις καλλιστεύει ταῖς αἰσθήσεσιν, ἐπεὶ καὶ διὰ μόνης καταλαμβάνεται τὰ κάλλιστα τῶν ὄντων, ἥλιος καὶ σελήνη καὶ ὁ σύμπας οὐρανός τε καὶ κόσμος, ἡ δὲ διὰ τοῦ τῆς ψυχῆς ἡγεμονικοῦ προ-
- [10] φέρει τὰς ἄλλας ὅσαι περὶ αὐτὸ δυνάμεις· αὕτη | δέ
- 58 ἐστὶ φρόνησις ὅψις οὕσα διανοίας. ὅτω δὲ μὴ μόνον ἐξεγένετο τᾶλλα ὅσα ἐν τῇ φύσει δι' ἐπιστήμης καταλαμβάνειν, ἀλλὰ καὶ τὸν πατέρα καὶ ποιητὴν τῶν συμπάντων ὄραν, ἐπ' ἄκρον εὐδαιμονίας ἴστω προεληλυθώς· οὐδὲν γὰρ ἀνωτέρω θεοῦ, πρὸς ὃν εἴ τις τὸ τῆς ψυχῆς ὄμμα τείνας
- 59 ἔφθακε, μονὴν εὐχέσθω καὶ στάσιν. αἱ μὲν γὰρ ἀνάπτεαι ὁδοὶ καματηραὶ καὶ βραδεῖαι, ἡ δὲ κατὰ πρανοῦς φορά, συρμὸν ἔχουσα τὸ πλεόν ἢ κάθοδον, <sup>1</sup> MSS. τὸν αἰδιον.

<sup>a</sup> Ex. xix. 6.

<sup>b</sup> Cf. note on Quod Deus 46.

ON ABRAHAM, 55-59

virtue is imperishable. And it is more reasonable that what is eternal should be predicated of the imperishable than of the mortal, since imperishableness is akin to eternity, while death is at enmity with it.

XII. There is another thing which we must not fail <sup>56</sup> to know : while Moses represented the first man, the earth-born, as father of all that were born up to the deluge, and Noah who with all his house alone survived that great destruction because of his justice and excellent character in other ways as the father of the new race which would spring up afresh, the oracles speak of this august and precious trinity as parent of one species of that race, which species is called "royal" and "priesthood" and "holy nation."<sup>a</sup> Its high position is shewn by the name ; <sup>57</sup> for the nation is called in the Hebrew tongue Israel, which, being interpreted, is "He who sees God." Now the sight of the eyes is the most excellent of all the senses, since by it alone we apprehend the most excellent of existing things, the sun and the moon and the whole heaven and world ; but the sight of the mind, the dominant element in the soul, surpasses all the other faculties of the mind, and this is wisdom which is the sight of the understanding.<sup>b</sup> But he to <sup>58</sup> whom it is given not only to apprehend by means of knowledge all else that nature has to shew, but also to see the Father and Maker of all, may rest assured that he is advanced to the crowning point of happiness ; for nothing is higher than God, and whoso has stretched the eyesight of the soul to reach Him should pray that he may there abide and stand firm ; for <sup>59</sup> journeys uphill are toilsome and slow, but the downhill course where one is swept along rather than ταχεία καὶ ῥάστη. πολλὰ δὲ τὰ κάτω βιαζόμενα, ὧν οὐδὲν ὄφελος, ὅταν ἐκ τῶν αὐτοῦ δυνάμεων ἀνακρεμάσας τὴν ψυχὴν ὁ θεὸς ὀλκῆ δυνατωτέρα πρὸς ἑαυτὸν ἐπισπάσῃται.

PHILO

- 60 XIII. Ταῦτα μὲν οὖν κοινῇ περὶ τῶν τριῶν ἀναγκαίως προειρήσθω. λεκτέον δ' ἐξῆς, ἐν οἷς ἕκαστος ἰδίᾳ προήνεγκεν, ἀπὸ τοῦ πρώτου τὴν ἀρχὴν λαβόντας. ἐκεῖνος τοίνυν εὐσεβείας, ἀρετῆς τῆς ἀνωτάτω καὶ μεγίστης, ζηλωτῆς γενόμενος ἐσπούδασεν ἔπεισθαι θεῷ καὶ καταπειθῆς εἶναι τοῖς προσταττομένοις ὑπ' αὐτοῦ, προστάξεις ὑπολαμβάνων οὐ τὰς διὰ φωνῆς καὶ γραμμάτων μηνυμένας αὐτὸ μόνον, ἀλλὰ καὶ τὰς διὰ τῆς φύσεως τρανοτέροις σημείοις δηλουμένας, ἃς ἡ ἀληθεστάτη τῶν αἰσθήσεων πρὸ ἀκοῆς τῆς ἀπίστου καὶ ἀβεβαίου
- 61 καταλαμβάνει. θεώμενος γάρ τις τὴν ἐν τῇ φύσει τάξιν καὶ τὴν παντὸς λόγου κρείττονα πολιτείαν, ἣ χρῆται ὁ κόσμος, ἀναδιδάσκεται, φθεγγομένου μηδενός, εὖνομον καὶ εἰρηνικὸν βίον ἐπιτηδεύειν εἰς τὴν τῶν καλῶν ἐξομοίωσιν ἀποβλέποντα. ἐναργέσταται δὲ τῆς εὐσεβείας ἀποδείξεις εἰσίν, ἃς περιέχουσιν αἱ ἱεραὶ γραφαί· πρώτην δὲ λεκτέον, ἣ
- 62 καὶ πρώτη τέτακται. XIV. λογίω πληχθεῖς περὶ τοῦ πατρίδα καὶ συγγένειαν καὶ πατρῶον οἶκον καταλιπεῖν καὶ μεταναστῆναι, καθάπερ ἀπὸ τῆς ξένης εἰς τὴν οἰκείαν ἐπανιῶν ἀλλ' οὐκ ἀπὸ τῆς οἰκείας εἰς τὴν ξένην μέλλων ἀπαίρειν, ἐπέσπευδὲ συντείνων, νομίζων ἰσότημον εἶναι τῷ τελειῶσαι τὸ
- 63 ταχέως τὸ προσταχθὲν ἀνύσαι. καίτοι τίνα ἕτερον <sup>a</sup> Philo seems to assume that the command to leave country and kindred, cf. Gen. xii. 1, was given to Abraham in Chaldaea and not in Haran. So perhaps the A.V. "the descends is swift and most easy. And many are the forces which would bear us down, yet none of them avail when God sets the soul suspended to His potencies and with a mightier attraction draws it to Himself.

ON ABRAHAM, 59-63

XIII. So much for what was needed by way of 60 preliminary discussion on the three in common. We must now speak of the superior merits shewn by each separately, beginning with the first. Abraham, then, filled with zeal for piety, the highest and greatest of virtues, was eager to follow God and to be obedient to His commands ; understanding by commands not only those conveyed in speech and writing but also those made manifest by nature with clearer signs, and apprehended by the sense which is the most truthful of all and superior to hearing, on which no certain reliance can be placed. For anyone who 61 contemplates the order in nature and the constitution enjoyed by the world-city whose excellence no words can describe, needs no speaker to teach him to practise a law-abiding and peaceful life and to aim at assimilating himself to its beauties. But the clearest proofs of his piety are those which the holy scriptures contain, and the first which should be mentioned is that which comes first in order. XIV. Under the force of an oracle <sup>a</sup> which bade him leave 62 his country and kinsfolk and seek a new home, thinking that quickness in executing the command was as good as full accomplishment, he hastened eagerly to obey, not as though he were leaving home for a strange land but rather as returning from amid strangers to his home. Yet who else would be likely 63

Lord had said," as against the R.V. "the Lord said." Philo may have implied the same from Gen. xv. 7. Cf. Acts vii. 2.

PHILO

εἰκὸς οὕτως ἀκλινῇ καὶ ἄτρεπτον γενέσθαι, ὡς μὴ φίλτροις ὑπαχθῆναι καὶ ὑπενδοῦναι συγγενῶν καὶ πατρίδος, ὧν ὁ πόθος ἐκάστῳ τρόπον τινὰ συγγεγένηται καὶ συνηύξεται καὶ μᾶλλον ἢ οὐχ ἦττον

64 τῶν ἠνωμένων μερῶν συμπέφυκε; μάρτυρες δὲ οἱ νομοθέται τὴν δευτερεύουσαν θανάτου τιμωρίαν κατὰ τῶν ἐπὶ τοῖς μεγίστοις ἐαλωκότων ὀρίσαντες φυγὴν, οὐ δευτερεύουσαν, ὡς γ' ἐμοὶ δοκεῖ, παρ' ἀληθείᾳ δικαζούσῃ, πολὺ δὲ ἀργαλεωτέραν, εἴ γε πέρασ μὲν κακοπραγιῶν ὁ θάνατος, ἀρχὴ δ', οὐ πέρασ, ἢ φυγὴ καινοτέρων συμφορῶν, ἀνθ' ἑνὸς τοῦ χωρὶς ἀλγηδόνων μυρίους ἐπάγουσα θανάτους τοὺς

[11] σὺν αἰσθήσει. | κατ' ἐμπορίαν ἔνιοι πόθῳ χρηματι-65 σμοῦ πλέοντες ἢ κατὰ πρεσβειάν ἢ κατὰ θέαν τῶν ἐπὶ τῆς ἀλλοδαπῆς δι' ἔρωτα παιδείας, ὄλκους ἔχοντες δυνάμεις τῆς ἕξω μονῆς οἱ μὲν τὰς ἐπικερδείας, οἱ δὲ τὸ τὴν πόλιν ἐπὶ καιρῶν ἐν τοῖς ἀναγκαιοτάτοις καὶ μεγίστοις ὀνήσαι, οἱ δὲ ἱστορίαν ὧν πρότερον ἠγνόουν τέρψιν ἅμα καὶ ὠφέλειαν τῇ ψυχῇ παρασκευάζουσαν—τυφλοὶ γὰρ παρ' ὄξυ βλέποντας ἀναποδήμητοι παρ' ἐκδεδημηκότας—, ὁμως ἐπείγονται τὸ πατρῶον ἔδαφος ἰδεῖν καὶ προσκυνῆσαι καὶ συνήθεις ἀσπάσασθαι συγγενῶν τε καὶ φίλων ἠδίστης καὶ ποθεινοτάτης ὄψεως ἀπολαῦσαι καὶ πολλάκις τὰς πράξεις, ὧν ἕνεκα ἐξεδήμησαν, μηκυνομένας ὀρώντες κατέλιπον ἡμέρῳ τῶν

66 προσηκόντων ἐλθθέντες βιαιοτάτῳ. μετ'

ON ABRAHAM, 63-66

to be so firm and unmoved of purpose as not to yield and succumb to the charms of kinsfolk and country? The desire of these may be said to be born and grow with each of us and is a part of our nature as much as or even more than the parts which unite to make the whole. And this is attested by the 64 legislators who have appointed banishment as the penalty second only to death for those who have been convicted of the greatest crimes, though indeed, in my opinion, it is not second to death, if truth gives its verdict, but rather a far heavier punishment, since death ends our troubles but banishment is not the end but the beginning of other new misfortunes and entails in place of the one death which puts an end to pains a thousand deaths in which we do not lose sensation. Some men go on voyages for trading 65 purposes in their desire for making money or on embassies or in their love of culture to see the sights of a foreign land. These are subject to influences driving them to stay abroad, in some cases financial gains, in others the chance of benefiting their country, when occasion offers, in its most vital and important interests, in others acquiring knowledge of things which they did not know before and thus providing at once pleasure and profit to the soul, for the stay-at-home is to the travelled as the blind are to the keen-sighted. Yet all these are eager to see and salute their native soil, and to greet their familiars and to have the sweet and most desired enjoyment of beholding their kinsfolk and friends. And often when they find the business for which they left home protracting itself they abandon it, drawn by the constraining desire for their own belongings.

But Abraham, the moment he was 66

PHILO

- ὀλίγων δὲ οὗτος ἢ καὶ μόνος ἅμα τῷ κελευσθῆναι μετανίστατο καὶ τῇ ψυχῇ πρὸ τοῦ σώματος τὴν ἀποικίαν ἐστέλλετο, τὸν ἐπὶ τοῖς θνητοῖς ἕμερον 67 παρευημεροῦντος ἔρωτος οὐρανίου. οὐδενὸς οὖν φροντίσας, οὐ φυλετῶν, οὐ δημοτῶν, οὐ συμφοιτητῶν, οὐχ ἑταίρων, οὐ τῶν ἀφ' αἵματος ὅσοι πρὸς πατρὸς ἢ μητρὸς ἦσαν, οὐ πατρίδος, οὐκ ἀρχαίων ἔθῶν, οὐ συντροφίας, οὐ συνδιαιτήσεως, ὧν ἕκαστον ἀγωγόν τε καὶ δυσαπόσπαστον ὄλκον ἔχον δύναμιν, ἐλευθέραις καὶ ἀφέτοις ὀρμαῖς ἢ τάχιστα μετανίσταται, τὸ μὲν πρῶτον ἀπὸ τῆς Χαλδαίων γῆς, εὐδαίμονος χώρας καὶ κατ' ἐκείνον ἀκμαζούσης τὸν χρόνον, εἰς τὴν Χαρραίων γῆν, ἔπειτα οὐ μακρὰν ὑστερον καὶ ἀπὸ ταύτης εἰς ἕτερον τόπον, περὶ οὗ λέξομεν ἐκείνο πρότερον εἰπόντες.
- 68 XV. Αἱ δηλωθεῖσαι ἀποικίαι τῷ μὲν ῥητῷ τῆς γραφῆς ὑπ' ἀνδρὸς σοφοῦ γεγονάσι, κατὰ δὲ τοὺς ἐν ἀλληγορίᾳ νόμους ὑπὸ φιλαρέτου ψυχῆς τὸν 69 ἀληθῆ ζητούσης θεόν. Χαλδαῖοι γὰρ ἐν τοῖς μάλιστα διαπονήσαντες ἀστρονομίαν καὶ πάντα ταῖς κινήσεσι τῶν ἀστέρων ἀναθέντες ὑπέλαβον οἰκονομεῖσθαι τὰ ἐν κόσμῳ δυνάμεσιν, ἃς περιέχουσιν ἀριθμοὶ καὶ ἀριθμῶν ἀναλογίαι, <καὶ> τὴν ὀρατὴν οὐσίαν ἐσέμνυνον τῆς ἀοράτου καὶ νοητῆς οὐ λαβόντες ἔννοιαν, ἀλλὰ τὴν ἐν ἐκείνοις τάξιν διερευνώμενοι κατὰ τε τὰς ἡλίου καὶ σελήνης καὶ τῶν ἄλλων πλανήτων καὶ ἀπλανῶν περιόδους καὶ κατὰ τὰς τῶν ἐτησίων ὥρῶν μεταβολὰς καὶ κατὰ τὴν τῶν οὐρανίων πρὸς τὰ ἐπίγεια συμπάθειαν τὸν κόσμον αὐτὸν ὑπέλαβον εἶναι θεόν, οὐκ εὐαγῶς τὸ

ON ABRAHAM, 66-69

bidden, departed with a few or even alone, and his emigration was one of soul rather than body, for the heavenly love overpowered his desire for mortal things. And so taking no thought for anything, 67 either for his fellow-clansmen, or wardsmen, or schoolmates, or comrades, or blood relations on father's or mother's side, or country, or ancestral customs, or community of nurture or home life, all of them ties possessing a power to allure and attract which it is hard to throw off, he followed a free and unfettered impulse and departed with all speed first from Chaldea, a land at that time blessed by fortune and at the height of its prosperity, and migrated to Haran; then not long afterwards he left this too for another place, about which we shall speak after dealing with something else to which I now proceed.<sup>a</sup>

XV. The migrations as set forth by the literal text 68 of the scriptures are made by a man of wisdom, but according to the laws of allegory by a virtue-loving soul in its search for the true God. For the 69 Chaldeans were especially active in the elaboration of astrology and ascribed everything to the movements of the stars. They supposed that the course of the phenomena of the world is guided by influences contained in numbers and numerical proportions. Thus they glorified visible existence, leaving out of consideration the intelligible and invisible. But while exploring numerical order as applied to the revolution of the sun, moon and other planets and fixed stars, and the changes of the yearly seasons and the interdependence of phenomena in heaven and on earth, they concluded that the world itself <sup>a</sup> Gen. xi. 31 and xii. 5. For the meaning of "another place" see on § 85.

PHILO

- 70 γενόμενον ἑξομοιώσαντες τῷ πεποικηκότι. ταύτη τοι τῇ δόξῃ συντραφεῖς καὶ χαλδαῖσας μακρόν τινα [12] χρόνον, ὥσπερ ἐκ βαθέος ὕπνου | διοίξας τὸ τῆς ψυχῆς ὄμμα καὶ καθαρὰν αὐγὴν ἀντὶ σκότους βαθέος βλέπειν ἀρξάμενος ἠκολούθησε τῷ φέγγει καὶ κατείδεν, ὃ μὴ πρότερον ἐθεάσατο, τοῦ κόσμου τινὰ ἠνίοχον καὶ κυβερνήτην ἐφεστῶτα καὶ σωτη-ρίως εὐθύνοντα τὸ οἰκείον ἔργον, ἐπιμέλειάν τε καὶ προστασίαν καὶ τῶν ἐν αὐτῷ μερῶν ὅσα θείας 71 ἐπάξια φροντίδος ποιούμενον. ὅπως οὖν βεβαιώ-σηται τὴν φανείσαν ὄψιν ἐν τῇ διανοίᾳ παγιώτερον, αὐθὶς φησιν ὁ ἱερός λόγος αὐτῷ· “ τὰ μεγάλα, ὧ οὗτος, ὑποτυπώσει βραχυτέρων πολλάκις γνωρίζηται, πρὸς ἃ τις ἀπιδὼν ἠῤῥησε τὴν φαντασίαν ἀπεριγράφοις μεγέθει. παραπεμφάμενος οὖν τοὺς τε κατ’ οὐρανὸν περιπολοῦντας καὶ τὴν Χαλδαϊκὴν ἐπιστήμην μετανάστηθι πρὸς ὀλίγον χρόνον ἀπὸ τῆς μεγίστης πόλεως, τοῦδε τοῦ κόσμου, πρὸς βραχυτέραν, δι’ ἧς δυνήσῃ μᾶλλον καταλαβεῖν τὸν 72 ἔφορον τοῦ παντός.” διὰ τοῦτο τὴν πρώτην ἀποικίαν ἀπὸ τῆς Χαλδαίων γῆς εἰς τὴν Χαρραίων λέγεται ποιήσασθαι. XVI. Χαρρὰν δὲ Ἑλληνιστὶ “ τρώγλαι ” λέγονται, κατὰ σύμβολον αἱ τῶν ἡμετέρων αἰσθήσεων χῶραι, δι’ ὧν ὥσπερ ὀπῶν ἐκάστη διακύπτειν πέφυκε πρὸς τὴν τῶν 73 οἰκείων ἀντίληψιν. ἀλλὰ τί τούτων, εἶποι τις ἄν, ὄφελος ἦν, εἰ μὴ νοῦς ἀόρατος καθάπερ θαυματοποιὸς ἔνδοθεν ὑπῆχει ταῖς ἑαυτοῦ δυνάμεσιν, ἃς

---

<sup>a</sup> The allegorical meaning of Haran is given more fully and clearly in De Mig. 176 ff. and De Som. i. 41 ff. Haran was God, thus profanely likening the created to the Creator. In this creed Abraham had been reared, 70 and for a long time remained a Chaldean. Then opening the soul's eye as though after profound sleep, and beginning to see the pure beam instead of the deep darkness, he followed the ray and discerned what he had not beheld before, a charioteer and pilot presiding over the world and directing in safety his own work, assuming the charge and superintendence of that work and of all such parts of it as are worthy of the divine care. And so to establish more firmly 71 in his understanding the sight which had been revealed to him the Holy Word follows it up by saying to him, "Friend, the great is often known by its outlines as shown in the smaller, and by looking at them the observer finds the scope of his vision infinitely enlarged. Dismiss, then, the rangers of the heavens and the science of Chaldea, and depart for a short time from the greatest of cities, this world, to the lesser, and thus you will be better able to apprehend the overseer of the All."

ON ABRAHAM, 69-73

This is why he is said to emigrate first from the land of 72 Chaldea to that of Haran.<sup>a</sup> XVI. Now Haran in our language means "holes," a symbol for the seats of our senses through which each of them naturally peers as through orifices to apprehend what belongs to it. Yet what use, we might ask, would they be if 73 the invisible mind were not there like a juggler to prompt its faculties, sometimes relaxing and giving being the place of sense-perception is the bodily tenement of the mind (De Mig. 187), and therefore stands for Socratic self-knowledge as a whole in contrast to astrological speculation. It thus gives the conviction that there is a higher power than mind and thus leads to the second migration from self-knowledge to knowledge of God.

PHILO

τοτὲ μὲν ἀνιείς καὶ ἐπιχαλῶν τοτὲ δὲ ἀντισπῶν καὶ ἀνθέλκων βία κίνησιν ἐμμελῆ καὶ πάλιν ἡσυχίαν ἐμπαρεῖχε τοῖς θαυμασίοις; τοῦτο ἔχων παρὰ σεαυτῷ τὸ παράδειγμα ῥαδίως οὐ σφόδρα ποθεῖς 74 λαβεῖν τὴν ἐπιστήμην κατανοήσεις. οὐ γὰρ ἐν σοὶ μὲν νοῦς ἔστιν ἡγεμῶν ἐπιτεταγμένος, ὧ καὶ τοῦ σώματος ἅπανα κοινωνία πειθαρχεῖ καὶ ἐκάστη τῶν αἰσθήσεων ἔπεται, ὁ δὲ κόσμος, τὸ κάλλιστον καὶ μέγιστον καὶ τελεώτατον ἔργον, οὐ πάντα τὰ ἄλλα συμβέβηκεν εἶναι μέρη, βασιλέως ἰαμοιρεῖ τοῦ συνέχοντος<sup>1</sup> καὶ ἐνδίκως ἐπιτροπεύοντος. εἰ δ' ἀόρατος ὁ βασιλεύς, μὴ θαυμάσης· οὐδὲ γὰρ ὁ ἐν 75 σοὶ νοῦς ὄρατός. ταῦτά τις ἐπιλογιζόμενος καὶ οὐ πόρρωθεν ἀλλ' ἐγγύθεν ἀναδιδασκόμενος ἔκ τε ἑαυτοῦ καὶ τῶν περὶ αὐτὸν εἴσεται σαφῶς, ὅτι ὁ κόσμος οὐκ ἔστιν ὁ πρῶτος θεός, ἀλλ' ἔργον τοῦ πρώτου θεοῦ καὶ τοῦ συμπάντων πατρός, ὃς ἀειδῆς ὢν πάντα φαίνει μικρῶν τε αὐ καὶ μεγάλων δια-76 δεικνὺς τὰς φύσεις. σώματος γὰρ ὀφθαλμοῖς οὐκ ἠξίωσε καταλαμβάνεσθαι, τάχα μὲν ἐπειδὴ θνητὸν αἰδίου ψαύειν οὐχ ὅσιον ἦν, τάχα δὲ καὶ δι' ἀσθένειαν τῆς ἡμετέρας ὄψεως· οὐ γὰρ ἂν ἐχώρησε τὰς ἀπὸ τοῦ ὄντος ἐκχεομένας αὐγάς, ὅποτε οὐδὲ ταῖς ἀφ' ἡλίου προσβλέπειν ἀκτίσιν οἶα τέ ἐστι.
 [13] XVII. | τεκμήριον δὲ ἐναργέστατον τῆς ἀποικίας, 77 ἦν ἀπ' ἀστρονομίας καὶ τῆς χαλδαϊζούσης δόξης ἢ διάνοια ἐστείλατο· λέγεται γὰρ εὐθύς ἅμα τῇ μεταναστάσει τοῦ σοφοῦ· “ ὦφθη δὲ ὁ θεὸς τῷ Ἀβραάμ ” ὧ δηλον ὅτι πρότερον οὐκ ἦν ἐμφανής,

<sup>1</sup> MSS. συνέχοντος.

<sup>a</sup> Gen. xii. 7. But this “ appearance ” comes when Abraham is in Canaan. If Philo is following Genesis carefully the

ON ABRAHAM, 73-77

them a free rein, sometimes forcibly pulling and jerking them back, and thus causing its puppets at one time to move in harmony, at another to rest? With this example in yourself you will easily apprehend that which you so earnestly desire to know. For it cannot be that while in yourself there is a mind 74 appointed as your ruler which all the community of the body obeys and each of the senses follows, the world, the fairest, and greatest and most perfect work of all, of which everything else is a part, is without a king who holds it together and directs it with justice. That the king is invisible need not cause you to wonder, for neither is the mind in yourself visible. Anyone who reflects on these things and 75 learns from no distant source, but from one near at hand, namely himself and what makes him what he is, will know for certain that the world is not the primal God but a work of the primal God and Father of all Who, though invisible, yet brings all things to light, revealing the natures of great and small. For 76 He did not deem it right to be apprehended by the eyes of the body, perhaps because it was contrary to holiness that the mortal should touch the eternal, perhaps too because of the weakness of our sight. For our sight could not have borne the rays that pour from Him that is, since it is not even able to look upon the beams of the sun. XVII. We have a very 77 clear proof of the mind's migration from astrology and the Chaldean creed in the words which follow at once the story of the departure of the Sage. "God," it says, "was seen by Abraham." <sup>a</sup> This shews that God was not manifested to him before, when in his μετανάστασις must embrace both migrations. But the sequel suggests that he mistakenly assigns it to the Haran period.

PHILO

- ὅτε χαλδαῖζων τῇ τῶν ἀστέρων χορεία προσείχεν ἔξω τοῦ κόσμου καὶ τῆς αἰσθητῆς οὐσίας εὐ-ἄρμοστον καὶ νοητὴν φύσιν οὐδεμίαν ἀπλῶς κατα-78 λαμβάνων. ἐπεὶ δὲ μετεχώρησε καὶ μεθωρμίσαστο, κατὰ τὰναγκαῖον ἔγνω τὸν κόσμον ὑπήκοον ἀλλ' οὐκ αὐτοκράτορα, οὐ πρυτανεύοντα ἀλλὰ πρυτανεύομενον ὑπ' αἰτίου τοῦ πεπονηκότος, ὅπερ ἡ 79 διάνοια τότε πρῶτον ἀναβλέψασα εἶδε. πολλὴ γὰρ αὐτῆς πρότερον ἀχλὺς ὑπὸ τῶν αἰσθητῶν κατ-εκέχυτο, ἦν ἐνθέρμοις καὶ διαπύροις δόγμασιν ἀνασκεδάσασα μόλις ἴσχυσεν ὡς ἐν αἰθρία καθαρᾷ τοῦ πάλαι κρυπτομένου καὶ ἀειδοῦς φαντασίαν λαβεῖν· ὅς ἔνεκα φιλανθρωπίας ἀφικνουμένην τὴν ψυχὴν ὡς ἑαυτὸν οὐκ ἀπεστράφη, προὔπαντήσας δὲ τὴν ἑαυτοῦ φύσιν ἔδειξε, καθ' ὅσον οἶόν τε ἦν 80 ἰδεῖν τὸν βλέποντα. διὸ λέγεται, οὐχ ὅτι ὁ σοφὸς εἶδε θεόν, ἀλλ' ὅτι "ὁ θεὸς ὤφθη" τῷ σοφῷ· καὶ γὰρ ἦν ἀδύνατον καταλαβεῖν τινα δι' αὐτοῦ τὸ πρὸς ἀλήθειαν ὄν, μὴ παραφήναντος ἐκείνου ἑαυτὸν καὶ ἐπιδείξαντος.
- 81 XVIII. Μαρτυρεῖ δὲ τοῖς εἰρημένοις καὶ ἡ τοῦ ὀνόματος ὑπαλλαγὴ καὶ μετάθεσις. ἐκαλεῖτο γὰρ "Ἀβραμ τὸ ἀρχαῖον ὄνομα, προσερρήθη δ' ὕστερον
 'Αβραάμ, φωνῇ μὲν ἐνὸς στοιχείου τοῦ ἄλφα διπλασιασθέντος, δυνάμει δὲ μεγάλου πράγματος 82 καὶ δόγματος ἐνδειξαμένου τὴν μεταβολὴν. "Ἀβραμ μὲν γὰρ ἐρμηνευθὲν ἔστι "πατὴρ μετέωρος," 'Αβραάμ δὲ "πατὴρ ἐκλεκτὸς ἡχοῦς," τὸ μὲν πρότερον ἐμφαῖνον τὸν ἀστρολογικὸν καὶ μετεωρολογικὸν ἐπικαλούμενον, οὕτως τῶν Χαλδαϊκῶν

ON ABRAHAM, 77-82

Chaldean way he was fixing his thoughts on the choric movement of the stars with no apprehension at all of an harmonious and intelligible order of things outside the world and the sphere of sense. But when he had departed and changed his habitation he could not help but know that the world is not sovereign but dependent, not governing but governed by its Maker and First Cause. And this his mind then saw for the first time with its recovered sight. For before a great mist had been shed upon it by the things of sense, and only with difficulty could it dispel this mist under the warmth and fervour of higher verities and so be able as in clear open sky to receive the vision of Him Who so long lay hidden and invisible. He in His love for mankind, when the soul came into His presence, did not turn away His face, but came forward to meet him and revealed His nature, so far as the beholder's power of sight allowed. That is why we are told not that the Sage saw God, but that God was seen by him. For it were impossible that anyone should by himself apprehend the truly Existent, did not He reveal and manifest Himself.

XVIII. What has been said is attested by the alteration and change in his name, for his original name was Abram, but afterwards he was addressed as Abraham.<sup>a</sup> To the ear there was but a duplication of one letter, alpha, but in fact and in the truth conveyed this duplication shewed a change of great importance. Abram is by interpretation "uplifted father"; Abraham, "elect father of sound." The former signifies one called astrologer and meteorologist.

<sup>a</sup> Gen. xvii. 5. For the interpretation of Abram and Abraham (Greek Abraam) cf. De Cher. 4, 7, De Gig. 62, 64, De Mut. 66.

PHILO

- δογμάτων ἐπιμελούμενον, ὡς ἂν τις πατὴρ ἐγγόνων 83 ἐπιμεληθείη, τὸ δ' ὕστερον τὸν σοφόν. διὰ μὲν γὰρ τῆς ἡχῆς τὸν προφορικὸν λόγον αἰνίττεται, διὰ τοῦ πατρὸς δὲ τὸν ἡγεμόνα νοῦν—πατὴρ γὰρ ὁ ἐνδιάθετος φύσει τοῦ γεγωνοῦ πρεσβύτερός γε ὢν καὶ τὰ λεκτέα ὑποσπεύρων—, διὰ δὲ τοῦ ἐπιλέκτου τὸν ἀστείον· εἰκαῖος μὲν γὰρ καὶ πεφυρμένος ὁ φαῦλος τρόπος, ἐκλεκτὸς δὲ ὁ ἀγαθός, ἐπικριθεὶς ἐξ 84 ἀπάντων ἀριστίνδην. τῷ μὲν οὖν μετεωρολογικῶ μείζον οὐδὲν τοῦ κόσμου τὸ παράπαν εἶναι δοκεῖ, ᾧ καὶ τὰς τῶν γινομένων αἰτίας ἀνατίθησιν· ὁ δὲ σοφὸς ἀκριβεστέροις ὄμμασιν ἰδὼν τι τελεώτερον νοητὸν ἄρχον τε καὶ ἡγεμονεῦον, ὅφ' οὐ τᾶλλα | [14] δεσπόζεται καὶ κυβερνᾶται, πολλὰ κατεμύψατο τῆς προτέρας ζωῆς ἑαυτὸν ὡς τυφλὸν βίον διεξεληλυθότα, σκηριπτόμενον ἐπὶ τοῖς αἰσθητοῖς, ἀβεβαίῳ καὶ ἀνιδρῦτῳ φύσει πράγματι. δευτέραν δ' ἀποικίαν στέλλεται λογίῳ πάλιν πεισ-85 θεὶς ὁ ἀστέιος οὐκέτ' ἐκ πόλεως εἰς πόλιν, ἀλλ' εἰς χώραν ἐρήμην, ἐν ἣ πλαζόμενος διετέλει μὴ δυσαρεστῶν τῇ πλάνῃ καὶ τῷ δι' αὐτὴν ἀνιδρῦτῳ.
 86 καίτοι τίς ἕτερος οὐκ ἂν ἡχθέσθη μὴ μόνον τῆς οἰκείας ἀπανιστάμενος, ἀλλὰ καὶ ἐξ ἀπάσης πόλεως ἐλαυνόμενος εἰς δυσβάτους καὶ δυσπορεύτους ἀνοδίας; τίς δ' οὐκ ἂν μετατραπόμενος ἐπαλινδρόμησεν οἴκαδε, βραχέα μὲν φροντίσας τῶν μελλουσῶν ἐλπίδων, τὴν δὲ παροῦσαν ἀπορίαν σπεύδων ἐκφυγεῖν, εὐήθειαν ὑπολαβὼν ἀδήλων χάριν ἀγαθῶν

---

<sup>a</sup> Gen. xii. 9. LXX "And Abram departed and having journeyed encamped in the wilderness." E.V. "And Abram journeyed going on still towards the south." Philo conveniently ignores the earlier movements of Abraham in logist, one who takes care of the Chaldean tenets as a father would of his children. The latter signifies 83 the Sage, for he uses "sound" as a figure for spoken thought and "father" for the ruling mind, since the inward thought is by its nature father of the uttered, being senior to it, the secret begetter of what it has to say. "Elect" signifies the man of worth, for the worthless character is random and confused, while the good is elect, chosen out of all for his merits. Now to the meteorologist nothing at all seems 84 greater than the universe, and he credits it with the causation of what comes into being. But the wise man with more discerning eyes sees something more perfect perceived by mind, something which rules and governs, the master and pilot of all else. And therefore he blames himself severely for his former life, feeling that all his years have been passed in blindness with no staff to support him but the world of sense, which is by its nature an insecure and unstable thing.

ON ABRAHAM, 82-86

The second migration 85 which the man of worth undertakes, again in obedience to an oracle, is not as before from state to state but into a desert country in which he continued to wander, never complaining of the wandering or the insecurity which it caused.<sup>a</sup> Yet who else would not 86 have felt it a burden not only to be severed from his own country, but also to be driven out of all city life into pathless tracts where the traveller could hardly find a way? Who would not have turned his course and hurried back homeward, paying little regard to future hopes, but eager to escape his present hardships, and thinking it folly to choose admitted evil

Canaan and fastens on the ultimate goal—the wilderness, as a symbol of the solitude of the mystic.

PHILO

- 87 ὁμολογούμενα αἰρεῖσθαι κακά; μόνος δ' οὕτοσι τούναντίον πεπονημένοι φαίνεται, βίον ἡδιστον νομίζων τὸν ἄνευ συνδιαιτήσεως τῆς τῶν πολλῶν. καὶ πέφυκεν οὕτως ἔχειν· οἱ γὰρ ζητοῦντες καὶ ἐπιποθοῦντες θεὸν ἀνευρεῖν τὴν φίλην αὐτῷ μόνωσιν ἀγαπῶσι, κατ' αὐτὸ τοῦτο σπεύδοντες πρῶτον ἐξομοιοῦσθαι τῇ μακαρίᾳ καὶ εὐδαίμονι φύσει.
- 88 ἐκατέραν οὖν ἀπόδοσιν πεποιημένοι, τὴν τε ῥητὴν ὡς ἐπ' ἀνδρὸς καὶ τὴν δι' ὑπονοιῶν ὡς ἐπὶ ψυχῆς, ἀξιεράστον καὶ τὸν ἄνδρα καὶ τὸν νοῦν ἀπεφύγαμεν, τὸν μὲν πεισθέντα λογίοις ἐκ δυσασπασμάτων ἀφελκυσθέντα, τὸν δὲ νοῦν, ὅτι οὐ μέχρι παντὸς ἀπατηθεὶς ἐπὶ τῆς αἰσθητῆς οὐσίας ἔστη τὸν ὄρατὸν κόσμον ὑπολαβὼν μέγιστον καὶ πρῶτον εἶναι θεόν, ἀλλὰ ἀναδραμῶν τῷ λογισμῷ φύσιν ἑτέραν ἀμείνω τῆς ὄρατῆς νοητὴν ἐθεάσατο καὶ τὸν ἀμφοῖν ποιητὴν ὁμοῦ καὶ ἡγεμόνα.
- 89 XIX. Ταῦτα τοῦ θεοφιλοῦς τὰ προτέλεια, οἷς ἔπονται πράξεις οὐκ εὐκαταφρόνητοι. τὸ δὲ μέγεθος αὐτῶν οὐ παντὶ τῷ δήλῳ, ἀλλὰ μόνον τοῖς γευσασμένοις ἀρετῆς, οἱ τὰ θαυμαζόμενα παρὰ τοῖς πολλοῖς εἰώθασιν χλευάζειν ἕνεκα μεγέθους τῶν περὶ
- 90 ψυχῆν ἀγαθῶν. ἀποδεξάμενος οὖν ὁ θεὸς τὴν εἰρημένην πράξιν αὐτίκα τὸν ἀστείον ἀμείβεται μεγάλη δωρεᾷ, τὸν γάμον αὐτῷ κινδυνεύσαντα πρὸς δυνατοῦ καὶ ἀκρατοῦς ἀνδρὸς ἐπιβουλευθῆναι
- 91 διατηρήσας ἄψευστον τε καὶ σῶνον. ἡ δ' αἰτία τῆς ἐπιθέσεως ἀρχὴν ἔλαβε τοιάνδε. καρπῶν ἀφορίας

---

<sup>a</sup> For §§ 91-98 see Gen. xii. 10-20.

ON ABRAHAM, 87-91

for the sake of uncertain good? Yet he alone ap- 87 pears to have had feelings the opposite of these, and to have thought that no life was so pleasant as one lived without association with the multitude. And that is natural, for those who seek God and yearn to find Him love the solitude which is dear to Him, and in this way first of all hasten to make themselves like His blessed and happy nature. So in 88 both our expositions, the literal as applied to the man and the allegorical as applied to the soul, we have shewn both man and soul to be worthy of our affection. We have shewn how the man in obedience to divine commands was drawn away from the stubborn hold of his associations and how the mind did not remain for ever deceived nor stand rooted in the realm of sense, nor suppose that the visible world was the Almighty and Primal God, but using its reason sped upwards and turned its gaze upon the intelligible order which is superior to the visible and upon Him who is maker and ruler of both alike.

XIX. This is the opening of the story of the friend 89 of God, and it is followed by actions which call for anything but contempt. But their greatness is not clear to everyone, but only to those who have tasted virtue and who recognize the greatness of the good things which belong to the soul and therefore are wont to deride those which win the admiration of the multitude. God, then, approving of the action just re- 90 lated, at once rewards the man of worth with a great gift; for when his marriage was threatened through the designs of a licentious potentate, God kept it safe and unharmed. "The occasion which led up to 91 the attempted outrage originated in the following way. There had been a failure of the crops for a

PHILO

ἐπὶ συχνὸν χρόνον γενομένης, τοτὲ μὲν διὰ πολλήν καὶ ἄμετρον ἐπομβρίαν τοτὲ δὲ δι' αὐχμὸν καὶ ζάλην, αἱ κατὰ Συρίαν πόλεις συνεχεῖ λιμῶ πιεσθεῖσαι κεναὶ τῶν οἰκητόρων ἦσαν, ἄλλων ἀλλαχόσε σκιδναμένων κατὰ ζήτησιν τροφῆς καὶ πορισμὸν 92 τῶν ἀναγκαίων. πυθόμενος οὖν Ἀβραὰμ ἄφθονον εὐθηνίαν καὶ εὐετηρίαν ἐν Αἰγύπτῳ, τοῦ μὲν πο-ταμοῦ ταῖς πλημμύραις λιμνάσαντος ἐν καιρῷ τὰ πεδία, τῶν δὲ τὸν σπόρον εὔσταχυν ἐνεγκόντων καὶ [15] ἀναθρεψαμένων | εὐκρασίαις πνευμάτων, ἀπαίρει 93 πᾶσαν τὴν οἰκίαν ἐπαγόμενος. ἦν δ' αὐτῷ γυνὴ τήν τε ψυχὴν ἀρίστη καὶ τὸ σῶμα τῶν καθ' αὐτὴν περικαλ-λεστάτη· ταύτην ἰδόντες τῶν Αἰγυπτίων οἱ ἐν τέλει καὶ τῆς εὐμορφίας ἀγάμενοι—λανθάνει γὰρ τοὺς ἐν 94 ἔξοχαῖς οὐδέν—μηνύουσι τῷ βασιλεῖ. μεταπεμ-ψάμενος δὲ τὴν ἀνθρωπον καὶ θεασάμενος ἐκπρεπεστάτην ὄψιν, βραχὺ φροντίσας αἰδοῦς καὶ νόμων τῶν ἐπὶ τιμῇ ξένων ὀρισθέντων, ἐνδοὺς ἀκρασία διενοεῖτο λόγῳ μὲν αὐτὴν ἀγαγέσθαι πρὸς γάμον, τὸ 95 δ' ἄληθές αἰσχύνειν. ἦ δ' ἄτε ἐν ἀλλοτρίᾳ γῆ παρ' ἀκρατεῖ τε καὶ ὠμοθύμῳ δυνάστη τοῦ βοηθήσοντος ἀποροῦσα—οὐδὲ γὰρ ὁ ἀνὴρ ἔσθενεν ἀρήγειν τὸν ἐπικρεμάμενον ἐκ τῶν δυνατωτέρων φόβον δεδιώς —ἐπὶ τὴν τελευταίαν ἄμ' ἐκείνῳ καταφεύγει 96 συμμαχίαν τὴν ἐκ θεοῦ. λαβὼν δὲ τῶν ξένων οἰκτον ὁ εὐμενῆς καὶ ἰλεως καὶ ὑπέρμαχος τῶν ἀδικουμένων ἀλγηδόνας δυσκαρτερήτους καὶ χαλεπὰς τιμωρίας ἐπάγει τῷ βασιλεῖ, παντοίων κακῶν ἀναπλήσας αὐτοῦ σῶμα καὶ ψυχὴν δυσιάτων, ὡς τὰς μὲν ἐφ' ἡδονὴν ἀγούσας ὀρέξεις ἀπάσας ἐκκεκόφθαι, τὰς δ' ἐναντίας παρεισεληλυθῆναι φροντίδας

ON ABRAHAM, 91-96

considerable period, at one time through a great and excessive rainfall, at another through drought and stormy weather ; and the cities of Syria, hard pressed through continual famine, were stripped of their inhabitants who scattered in different directions to seek for food and to procure necessities. Abraham, then, 92 learning that there was a rich and abundant supply of corn in Egypt, where the river by its seasonal flooding had turned the plains into pools, and well-tempered winds had produced and fostered a fine growth of corn, set off thither with his whole household. He had a wife distinguished greatly for her 93 goodness of soul and beauty of body, in which she surpassed all the women of her time. When the chief people of Egypt saw her and admired her beauty, since the highly placed leave nothing unobserved, they told the king. He sent for the 94 woman, and, marking her surpassing comeliness, paid little regard to decency or the laws enacted to shew respect to strangers, but gave rein to his licence and determined nominally to take her in marriage, but in reality to bring her to shame. She who in a 95 foreign country was at the mercy of a licentious and cruel-hearted despot and had no one to protect her, for her husband was helpless, menaced as he was by the terror of stronger powers, joined him in fleeing for refuge to the last remaining championship, that of God. And God, Who is kindly and merciful and 96 shields the wronged, had pity for the strangers and plied the king with almost intolerable pains and grievous penalties. He filled him body and soul with all manner of scarce curable plagues. All appetite for pleasure was eradicated and replaced by visitations of the opposite kind, by cravings for release

PHILO

- περὶ ἀπαλλαγῆς ἀνηνύτων βασάνων, ὑφ' ὧν γυμναζόμενος μεθ' ἡμέραν καὶ νύκτωρ ἐξετραχηλίζετο.
- 97 παραπέλαυσε δὲ τῆς τιμωρίας καὶ σύμπας ὁ οἶκος αὐτῷ, μηδενὸς ἐπὶ τῇ ταρανομίᾳ δυσχεράναντος, ἀλλὰ πάντων ἕνεκα τοῦ συναινεῖν μόνον οὐ συγ-
- 98 χειρουργησάντων τὸ ἀδίκημα. τοῦτον τὸν τρόπον ἢ μὲν ἀγνεία τῆς γυναικὸς διασώζεται, τοῦ δὲ ἀνδρὸς τὴν καλοκάγαθίαν καὶ εὐσέβειαν ὁ θεὸς ἠξίωσεν ἐπιδειξάσθαι γέρας αὐτῷ μέγιστον παρασχών, ἀσινῆ καὶ ἀνύβριστον ὅσον οὐπω κινδυνεύσαντα διαφθαρῆναι τὸν γάμον, ὃς οὐκ ἔμελλεν ὀλίγων ἀριθμὸν νιῶν ἢ θυγατέρων γεννᾶν, ἀλλ' ὅλον ἔθνος καὶ ἔθνῶν τὸ θεοφιλέστατον, ὃ μοι δοκεῖ τὴν ὑπὲρ παντὸς ἀνθρώπων γένους ἱερωσύνην καὶ προφητείαν λαχεῖν.
- 99 XX. Ἦκουσα μέντοι καὶ φυσικῶν ἀνδρῶν οὐκ ἀπὸ σκοποῦ τὰ περὶ τὸν τόπον ἀλληγορούντων, οἳ τὸν μὲν ἄνδρα συμβολικῶς ἔφασκον σπουδαῖον εἶναι νοῦν ἐκ τῆς περὶ τοῦνομα ἐρμηνευθείσης δυνάμεως τεκμαιρόμενοι τρόπον ἀστείον ἐν ψυχῇ, τὴν δὲ τούτου γυναιῖκα ἀρετὴν, ἧς τοῦνομά ἐστι Χαλδαῖστὶ μὲν Σάρρα, Ἑλληνιστὶ δὲ “ ἄρχουσα,” διὰ τὸ μηδὲν ἀρετῆς ἀρχικώτερον εἶναι καὶ ἡγεμονικώτερον. γάμος δέ, ὃν μὲν ἀρμόζεται ἡδονῇ, σωματικῶν κοινωνίαν ἔλαχεν, ὃν δὲ σοφία, λογισμῶν καθάρσεως ἐφιεμένων καὶ τελείων ἀρετῶν. ἐναντιώτατοι δὲ ἀλλήλοις εἰσὶν οἱ λεχθέντες γάμοι.
- 101 κατὰ μὲν γὰρ τὸν τῶν σωματικῶν σπεῖρει μὲν τὸ

---

* Or “students of the (higher) truths of Nature,” almost in some contexts (e.g. Mos. ii. 216) = “theologians.” Nature is so closely akin to the divine (see note on De Sac. 98) that allegorical truths such as these especially belong to its study, from the endless tortures which night and day haunted and racked him almost to death. The whole 97 household, too, shared the punishment with him, since none had shewn indignation at the outrage, but all by consenting were almost accomplices in the misdeed. Thus the chastity of the woman was pre- 98 served, while the nobility and piety of the man was evidenced by God, Who deigned to grant him this signal boon, that his marriage, which would have been in almost immediate danger of violation, should remain free from harm and outrage, that marriage from which was to issue not a family of a few sons and daughters, but a whole nation, and that the nation dearest of all to God, which, as I hold, has received the gift of priesthood and prophecy on behalf of all mankind.

ON ABRAHAM, 96-101

XX. I have also heard some natural philosophers <sup>a</sup> 99 who took the passage allegorically, not without good reason. They said that the husband was a figure for the good mind, judging by the meaning given for interpretation of this name that it stood for a good disposition of soul. The wife, they said, was virtue, her name being in Chaldean Sarah but in our language a sovereign lady,<sup>b</sup> because nothing is more sovereign or dominant than virtue. Now in a marriage where 100 the union is brought about by pleasure, the partnership is between body and body, but in the marriage made by wisdom it is between thoughts which seek purification and perfect virtues. Now the two kinds of marriage are directly opposed to each other. For 101 in the bodily marriage the male sows the seed and the cf. De Post. 7 τὴν δι' ἀλληγορίας ὁδὸν φυσικοῖς φίλην ἀνδράσι, and De Mut. 62 φυσιολογούντες. See further App. p. 597.

<sup>b</sup> Cf. De Cher. 8, De Mut. 77.

PHILO

ἄρρεν, γονὴν δ' ὑποδέχεται τὸ θῆλυ, κατὰ δὲ τὴν | [16] ἐν ψυχαῖς σύνοδον ἔμπαλιν ἢ μὲν ἀρετὴ τάξιν γυναικὸς ἔχει δοκοῦσα σπεῖρειν πέφυκε βουλὰς ἀγαθὰς καὶ λόγους σπουδαίους καὶ βιωφελεστάτων εἰσηγήσεις δογμάτων, ὁ δὲ λογισμὸς εἰς τὴν ἀνδρὸς χώραν τάττεσθαι νομισθεὶς τὰς ἱεροπρεπεῖς καὶ θείας ὑποδέχεται σποράς· ἢ μήποτε τὸ λεχθὲν ἔψευσται δι' ἀπάτην ὀνομάτων, ἐπειδήπερ ὁ μὲν νοῦς ἄρρενος ἢ δ' ἀρετὴ θήλεος μετέχει χαρακτήρος 102 ἐν φωναῖς. εἰ δέ τις τὰς ἐπισκιαζούσας κλήσεις ἀπαμφιάσας γυμνὰ τὰ πράγματα βουλευθεῖη καθαρῶς ἰδεῖν εἴσεται διότι ἄρρεν μὲν ἔστιν ἢ ἀρετὴ φύσει, παρόσον κινεῖ καὶ διατίθησι καὶ καλὰς ἐννοίας καλῶν πράξεων καὶ λόγων ὑπηχεῖ, θῆλυ δὲ ὁ λογισμὸς κινούμενος καὶ παιδευόμενος καὶ ὠφελούμενος καὶ συνόλως ἐν τῷ πάσχειν ἐξεταζό-103 ριον. XXI. ἅπαντες μὲν οὖν καὶ οἱ φαυλότατοι τῷ λόγῳ τιμῶσι καὶ θαυμάζουσιν ἀρετὴν ὅσα τῷ δοκεῖν, χρῶνται δ' αὐτῆς τοῖς παραγγέλμασιν οἱ ἀστεῖοι μόνοι. διὸ καὶ ὁ τῆς Αἰγύπτου βασιλεὺς, ὅπερ ἔστι συμβολικῶς νοῦς φιλοσώματος, καθυποκρινόμενος ὡς ἐν θεάτρῳ προσποιήτον ἐπιμορφάζει κοινωνίαν, πρὸς ἐγκράτειαν ὁ ἀκρατῆς καὶ πρὸς σωφροσύνην ὁ ἀκόλαστος καὶ πρὸς δικαιοσύνην ὁ ἀδικος, καὶ καλεῖ τὴν ἀρετὴν ὡς ἑαυτὸν τῆς παρὰ 104 τοῖς πολλοῖς εὐφημίας γλιχόμενος. ὅπερ κατιδὼν ὁ ἔφορος—μόνῳ γὰρ ἔξεστι θεῷ ψυχὴν ἰδεῖν—ἐμίσησε καὶ προὔβαλετο καὶ βασάνοις ἤλεγξεν ἀργαλεωτάταις ἦθος κατεψευσμένον. αἱ δὲ βάσανοι διὰ τίνων ὀργάνων; ἢ πάντως διὰ τῶν τῆς ἀρετῆς μερῶν, ἅπερ ἐπεισιόντα χαλεπῶς αἰκίζεται καὶ

ON ABRAHAM, 101-104

female receives it ; on the other hand in the matings within the soul, though virtue seemingly ranks as wife, her natural function is to sow good counsels and excellent words and to inculcate tenets truly profitable to life, while thought, though held to take the place of the husband, receives the holy and divine sowings. Perhaps however the statement <sup>a</sup> above is a mistake due to the deceptiveness of the nouns, since in the actual words employed νοῦς has the masculine, and ἀρετή the feminine form. And if anyone is willing to divest 102 facts of the terms which obscure them and observe them in their nakedness in a clear light he will understand that virtue is male, since it causes movement and affects conditions and suggests noble conceptions of noble deeds and words, while thought is female, being moved and trained and helped, and in general belonging to the passive category, which passivity is its sole means of preservation. XXI. All men, then, 103 even the most worthless, professedly honour and admire virtue so far as outward appearance goes, but only the worthy practise its injunctions. And so the king of Egypt, under which figure is symbolized the mind which loves the body, acts a part as in a theatre and assumes a counterfeited fellowship, he, the licentious with chastity, the profligate with self-control, the unjust with justice, and in his desire to earn a good repute with the multitude invites virtue to join him. Seeing this, God the surveyor, since He alone 104 can scan the soul, hates and rejects the sham character and submits it to the test of most painful tortures. What are the instruments of these tortures ? Surely the different parts of virtue which enter in and plague <sup>a</sup> i.e. that virtue is wife, and mind husband ; but see App. pp. 597-598.

PHILO

- τιτρώσκει; βάσανος μὲν γάρ ἐστιν ἀπληστίας ὀλιγοδεΐα, βάσανος δὲ λαγνείας ἐγκράτεια· στρεβλοῦται δὲ καὶ ὁ φιλόδοξος ἀτυφίας εὐημερούσης καὶ
- 105 ὁ ἄδικος δικαιοσύνης ἐπαινουμένης. μίαν γὰρ ἀμήχανον ψυχὴν κατοικεῖν δύο τὰς ἐχθρὰς φύσεις, κακίαν καὶ ἀρετὴν· οὐ χάριν, ἐπειδὴν συνενεχθῶσιν, ἀσύμβατοι καὶ ἀκατάλλακτοι στάσεις καὶ πόλεμοι συγκροτοῦνται, καίτοι τῆς ἀρετῆς εἰρηνικωτάτην φύσιν ἐχούσης, ἣ φασιν ἐπιμελὲς εἶναι, ὅταν εἰς χειρῶν ἀμιλλαν ἰέναι μέλλῃ, τῆς ἰδίας δυνάμεως ἀποπειρᾶσθαι πρότερον, ἢ, εἰ μὲν ἰσχύοι καταγωνίσασθαι, συνιστῆται, εἰ δ' ἀσθενεστέρα χρωτο τῇ δυνάμει, μηδὲ συγκαταβῆναι τὴν ἀρχὴν εἰς τὸν
- 108 ἀγῶνα θαρρήσῃ· κακίαν μὲν γὰρ ἠττᾶσθαι οὐκ αἰσχρόν, ἣ συγγενὲς ἀδοξία, ἀρετὴν δὲ ὄνειδος, ἣ πάντων οἰκειότατον εὐκλεία, δι' ἣν πέφυκε νικᾶν ἢ διατηρεῖν αὐτὴν ἀήττητον.
- 107 XXII. Τὸ μὲν οὖν Αἰγυπτίων ἄξενον καὶ ἀκόλαστον εἶρηται. τοῦ δὲ τοιαῦτα πεπονθότος ἄξιον θαυμάσαι τὴν φιλανθρωπίαν, ὃς μεσημβρίας |
- [17] θεασάμενος τρεῖς ὡς ἄνδρας ὀδοιποροῦντας—οἱ δὲ θειότερας ὄντες φύσεως ἐλελήθεσαν—προσδραμὼν ἰκέτευε λιπαρῶς μὴ παρελθεῖν αὐτοῦ τὴν σκιηνήν, ἀλλ' ὡς πρόπον εἰσεληλυθότας ξενίων μετασχεῖν· οἱ δ' οὐκ ἐκ τῶν λεγομένων μᾶλλον ἢ τῆς διανοίας εἰδότες ἀληθεύοντα μηδὲν ἐνδοιάσαντες ἐπινεύουσι.
- 108 πληρωθεὶς δὲ τὴν ψυχὴν χαρᾶς πάντ' ἐσπούδαζεν εἰς τὸ ἀνυπέρθeton τῆς ὑποδοχῆς καὶ τῇ μὲν γυναικί φησι “σπεῦσον καὶ τρία μέτρα ποίησον ἐγκρυφῶν,” αὐτὸς δὲ εἰς τὰ βουκόλια συντείνας, ἀπαλὸν καὶ
- 109 εὐσαρκον ἀγαγὼν μόσχον, οἰκέτη παραδίδωσιν. ὁ

<sup>a</sup> For §§ 107-118 see Gen. xviii.

ON ABRAHAM, 104-109

and wound him grievously? For greediness is tortured by frugal contentment and lewdness by continence. And so the vainglorious is racked when simplicity prevails, and the unjust when justice is praised. For 105 it is impossible for the single soul to have for its tenant two hostile natures, vice and virtue, and therefore when they meet factions and wars are set on foot incapable of truce or reconciliation. And yet virtue's nature is most peaceable, and she is careful, so they say, to test her own strength before the conflict, so that if she is able to contend to the end she may take the field, but if she finds her strength too weak she may shrink from entering the contest at all. For vice 106 feels no disgrace in defeat, since ill-repute is congenital to her, but to virtue it is a reproach, for nearest and dearest to her is good fame which makes it natural for her to be victorious or at least to keep herself undefeated.

XXII. *I have described the inhospitality and 107 licentiousness of the Egyptians. Turning to the victim of this outrage, we may well admire his kindness of heart. When at noon he saw three travellers in the form of men, for their diviner nature was not apparent to him, he ran to them and earnestly begged of them not to pass his tent but to enter as was fitting and partake of hospitality. But they, knowing, not so much by his words as by the feeling he showed, that he spoke the truth, assented without hesitation. And he, his soul full of joy, was eager to carry out 108 the reception without delay, and said to his wife: "Hasten and bake three measures of cakes in the ashes." Meanwhile he himself hurried to the stalls and brought a tender and well-fed calf which he gave to the servant who killed it and dressed it with all 109

PHILO

- δὲ καταθύσας σκευάζει τάχιστα· βραδὺς γὰρ οὐδεὶς πρὸς φιλανθρωπίαν ἐν οἴκῳ σοφοῦ, ἀλλὰ καὶ γυναῖκες καὶ ἄνδρες καὶ δούλοι καὶ ἐλεύθεροι προθυμότατοι πρὸς τὰς τῶν ξενιζομένων ὑπηρεσίας.
- 110 ἔστιαθέντες δ' οὐ τοῖς εὐτρεπισθεῖσι μᾶλλον ἢ τῇ τοῦ ξενοδόχου γνώμῃ καὶ πολλῇ τινι καὶ ἀπεράντῳ φιλοτιμίᾳ παρέχουσιν ἄθλον ἐλπίδος μείζον αὐτῷ, υἱοῦ γνησίου γένεσιν εἰς νέωτα βεβαιωθησομένην ὑποσχόμενοι δι' ἐνὸς τοῦ τῶν τριῶν ἀρίστου— λέγειν γὰρ ἐν ταῦτῳ πάντα ἀθρώους ἦν ἀφιλόσοφον, ἐνὶ δὲ λέγοντι τοὺς ἄλλους συνεπινεύειν
- 111 ἐμπρεπές— ἀλλὰ γὰρ οὐδ' ὑπισχνουμένοις ἔνεκα τοῦ περὶ τὸ πρᾶγμα ἀπίστου βεβαίως προσεῖχον· ἤδη γὰρ ὑπερήλικες γεγονότες διὰ μακρὸν γῆρας
- 112 ἀπεγνώκεσαν παιδὸς σποράν. ἀκούσασαν οὖν τὴν γυναῖκα ἐν ἀρχῇ φησι γελάσαι καὶ μετὰ ταῦτα, εἰπόντων “ μὴ ἀδυνατεῖ παρὰ τῷ θεῷ πᾶν ῥῆμα; ” καταιδεσθεῖσαν ἠρνήσθαι τὸν γέλωτα· πάντα γὰρ ἤδει θεῷ δυνατὰ σχεδὸν ἐξ ἔτι σπαργάνων τουτί τὸ
- 113 δόγμα προμαθοῦσα. τότε μοι δοκεῖ πρῶτον οὐκέθ' ὁμοίαν τῶν ὀρωμένων λαβεῖν φαντασίαν, ἀλλὰ σεμνοτέραν ἢ προφητῶν ἢ ἀγγέλων μεταβαλόντων ἀπὸ πνευματικῆς καὶ ψυχοειδοῦς οὐσίας εἰς ἀνθρωπόμορφον ἰδέαν.
- 114 XXIII. Τὸ μὲν οὖν φιλόξενον τοῦ ἀνδρὸς εἴρηται, πάρεργον ὃν ἀρετῆς μείζονος· ἡ δ' ἀρετὴ θεοσέβεια, περὶ ἧς καὶ πρότερον εἵπομεν, ἧς δεῖγμα σαφέστατον τὰ νῦν λεχθέντα ἔστιν ὡς ἐπὶ ξένων ἀνδρῶν.

---

<sup>a</sup> i.e. Sarah's denial of her laughter is ascribed to a recognition that the Visitor was divine, rather than as in speed. For in a wise man's house no one is slow in showing kindness ; but women and men, slaves and free, are full of zeal to do service to their guests. After 110 feasting not so much on the viands prepared for them as on the goodwill of their host, and on this example of a great and unbounded generosity, they presented him with a reward surpassing his hopes, by promising him the birth of a son born in wedlock. And this promise, which was to be made good in the next year, was given through one, and that the highest, of the three. For wise refinement demanded that all should not speak together at once but rather that one should speak and the others shew assent. But to Abraham 111 and Sarah the thing seemed incredible, and therefore they did not pay serious regard even to the promises of the three. For as they had passed the years of parenthood their great age had made them despair of the birth of a son. So the scripture says that the 112 wife first laughed at the words and afterwards when they said, " Is anything impossible with God ? " was ashamed and denied her laughter, for she knew that all things were possible with God, a truth which she had learnt long ago, and even from the cradle. It 113 was then, I think, that she first saw in the strangers before her a different and grander aspect, that of prophets or angels, transformed from their spiritual and soul-like nature into human shape.<sup>a</sup>

ON ABRAHAM, 109-115

XXIII. We have described Abraham's hospitality 114 which was but a by-product of a greater virtue. That virtue is piety, of which we have spoken before, and it is quite clearly seen in this story, even if we think of the strangers as men. Some may feel that the 115

Genesis to fear. Otherwise Philo here gives the natural interpretation of the incident. See note on § 206.

PHILO

- 115 εἰ δ' εὐδαιμόνα καὶ μακάριον οἶκον ὑπέλαβον εἶναι τινες, ἐν ᾧ συνέβη καταχθῆναι καὶ ἐνδιατρίψαι σοφούς, οὐκ ἂν ἀξιώσαντας ἀλλ' οὐδ' ὅσον διακῦψαι μόνον, εἴ τι πάθος ἐνεώρων ταῖς ψυχαῖς τῶν ἔνδον ὄντων ἀνίατον, ἐγὼ δὲ οὐκ οἶδα, τίνα ὑπερβολὴν εὐδαιμονίας καὶ μακαριότητος εἶναι φῶ περι τὴν οἰκίαν, ἐν ἣ καταχθῆναι καὶ ξενίων λαχεῖν ὑπ-έμειναν ἄγγελοι πρὸς ἀνθρώπων,<sup>1</sup> ἱεραὶ καὶ θείαι φύσεις, ὑποδιάκονοι καὶ ὑπαρχοὶ τοῦ πρώτου θεοῦ, [18] | δι' ὧν οἶα πρεσβευτῶν ὅσα ἂν θελήσῃ τῷ γένει 116 ἡμῶν προθεσπίσαι διαγγέλλει. πῶς γὰρ ἂν τὴν ἀρχὴν εἰσελθεῖν ὑπέμειναν, εἰ μὴ καθάπερ νεὼς εὖ συντεταγμένον πλήρωμα τοὺς ἔνδον ἅπαντας ἤδεσαν ἐνὶ πειθαρχούντας κελεύσματι τῷ τοῦ προεστηκότος ὡσανεὶ κυβερνήτου; πῶς δ' ἂν ἐστιωμένων καὶ ξενιζομένων παρέσχον ὑπόληψιν, εἰ μὴ τὸν ἐστιάτορα συγγενῆ καὶ ὁμόδουλον ἡγούντο τῷ αὐτῶν προσπεφευγότα δεσπότη; νομιστέον μέντοι καὶ κατὰ τὴν εἴσοδον αὐτῶν ἔτι μᾶλλον ἐπιδούναί πάντα τὰ μέρη τῆς οἰκίας πρὸς τὸ βέλτιον αὔρα 117 τινὶ τελειοτάτης ἀρετῆς ἐπιπνευσθέντα. τὸ δὲ συμπόσιον οἶον εἰκὸς γενέσθαι, τὴν ἐν εὐωχίαις ἀφέλειαν ἐπιδεικνυμένων πρὸς τὸν ἐστιάτορα τῶν ἐστιωμένων καὶ γυμνοῖς ἤθεσι προσαγορευόντων καὶ ὁμιλίας τὰς ἀρμοττούσας τῷ καιρῷ ποιου-118 μένων. τεράστιον δὲ καὶ τὸ μὴ πίνοντας πινόντων καὶ τὸ μὴ ἐσθιόντας ἐσθιόντων παρέχειν φαντασίαν. ἀλλὰ ταυτί γε ὡς ἀκόλουθα· τὸ δὲ πρῶτον ἐκείνο τερατωδέστατον, ἀσωμάτους ὄντας [τοῦδε σώματος]

<sup>1</sup> So one ms. The others ἀνθρώπους, which Cohn prints in the text, but later declared for -ων. The accusative, however = "in relation with men" is not impossible.

ON ABRAHAM, 115-118

house must have been happy and blessed in which such an event as this took place, that wise men halted there and made a stay who would not have deigned even to look inside if they saw anything hopelessly wrong in the souls of the inmates. And, if this is so, I do not know how to express the vast happiness and blessedness of that house where angels did not shrink from halting and receiving hospitality from men—angels, those holy and divine beings, the servitors and lieutenants of the primal God whom He employs as ambassadors to announce the predictions which He wills to make to our race. For how could they have 116 brought themselves to enter at all if they had not known that all the household, like a well ordered crew, was obedient to a single call from him who steered them like a pilot? And how should they have given ground for the idea that they feasted and received hospitality unless they thought that the giver of the feast was their kinsman and fellow-servant who had sought refuge with their master? Indeed we must suppose that at their entrance all parts of the house advanced still further in goodness and felt some breath of the inspiration of perfect virtue. The 117 conduct of the meal was such as it should be. The guests showed to their entertainer the frank simplicity of a festive gathering. Their manner in addressing him was unreserved, and their converse suited to the occasion. It is a marvel indeed that 118 though they neither ate nor drank they gave the appearance of both eating and drinking.<sup>a</sup> But that is a secondary matter; the first and greatest wonder is that, though incorporeal, they assumed human <sup>a</sup> See App. p. 598.

PHILO

εἰς ἰδέαν ἀνθρώπων μεμορφῶσθαι χάριτι τῇ πρὸς τὸν ἀστέιον· τίνος γὰρ ἔνεκα ταῦτα ἐθαυματουργεῖτο ἢ τοῦ παρασχεῖν αἰσθησιν τῷ σοφῷ διὰ τρανοτέρας ὄψεως, ὅτι οὐ λέληθε τὸν πατέρα τοιοῦτος ὢν;

- 119 XXIV. Τὰ μὲν οὖν τῆς ῥήτης ἀποδόσεως ὡδὶ λελέχθω· τῆς δὲ δι' ὑπονοιῶν ἀρκτέον. σύμβολα τὰ ἐν φωναῖς τῶν διανοία μόνη καταλαμβανομένων ἐστίν· ἐπειδὰν οὖν ἡ ψυχὴ καθάπερ ἐν μεσημβρία θεῷ περιλαμφθῆ καὶ ὅλη δι' ὅλων νοητοῦ φωτὸς ἀναπλησθεῖσα ταῖς ἐν κύκλῳ κεχυμέναις αὐγαῖς<sup>1</sup> ἄσκιος γένηται, τριττὴν φαντασίαν ἐνὸς ὑποκειμένου καταλαμβάνει, τοῦ μὲν ὡς ὄντος, τῶν δ' ἄλλων δυοῖν ὡς ἂν ἀπαυγαζομένων ἀπὸ τούτου σκιῶν· ὁποῖόν τι συμβαίνει καὶ τοῖς ἐν αἰσθητῷ φωτὶ διατρίβουσιν· ἢ γὰρ ἐστῶτων ἢ κινουμένων
- 120 διτταὶ σκιαὶ πολλάκις συνεμπίπτουσι. μὴ μέντοι νομισάτω τις ἐπὶ θεοῦ τὰς σκιάς κυριολογεῖσθαι· κατάχρησις ὀνόματός ἐστι μόνον πρὸς ἐναργεστέραν ἔμφασιν τοῦ δηλουμένου πράγματος, ἐπεὶ τό γε
- 121 ἀληθὲς οὐχ ὡδε ἔχει· ἀλλ' ἔστιν, ὡς ἂν τις ἐγγύτατα τῆς ἀληθείας ἰστάμενος εἴποι, πατὴρ μὲν τῶν ὅλων
- [19] ὁ μέσος, ὃς ἐν ταῖς | ἱεραῖς γραφαῖς κυρίῳ ὀνόματι καλεῖται ὁ ὢν, αἱ δὲ παρ' ἐκάτερα αἱ πρεσβύταται καὶ ἐγγυτάτω τοῦ ὄντος δυνάμεις, ἡ μὲν ποιητικὴ, ἡ δ' αὖ βασιλικὴ· προσαγορεύεται δὲ ἡ μὲν ποιητικὴ θεός, ταύτῃ γὰρ ἔθηκέ τε καὶ διεκόσμησε τὸ πᾶν, ἡ δὲ βασιλικὴ κύριος, θέμις γὰρ ἄρχειν καὶ κρατεῖν
- 122 τὸ πεποιηκὸς τοῦ γενομένου. δορυφορούμενος οὖν

<sup>1</sup> mss. (with the exception of H<sup>2</sup>) τὰς . . κεχυμένας αὐγάς, which perhaps might be kept, as Cohn suggests, by correcting ἄσκιος γένηται to ἀσκίους δέχεται or ἀσπάσηται.

ON ABRAHAM, 118-122

form to do kindness to the man of worth. For why was this miracle worked save to cause the Sage to perceive with clearer vision that the Father did not fail to recognize his wisdom?

XXIV. Here we may leave the literal exposition 119 and begin the allegorical. Spoken words contain symbols of things apprehended by the understanding only. When, then, as at noon-tide God shines around the soul, and the light of the mind fills it through and through and the shadows are driven from it by the rays which pour all around it, the single object presents to it a triple vision, one representing the reality, the other two the shadows reflected from it. Our life in the light which our senses perceive gives us a somewhat similar experience, for objects standing or moving often cast two shadows at once. No 120 one, however, should think that the shadows can be properly spoken of as God. To call them so is loose speaking, serving merely to give a clearer view of the fact which we are explaining, since the real truth is otherwise. Rather, as anyone who has approached 121 nearest to the truth would say, the central place is held by the Father of the Universe, Who in the sacred scriptures is called He that is as His proper name, while on either side of Him are the senior potencies, the nearest to Him, the creative and the kingly. The title of the former is God,<sup>a</sup> since it made and ordered the All; the title of the latter is Lord, since it is the fundamental right of the maker to rule and control what he has brought into being. So the central Being with each of His pot- 122 <sup>a</sup> Evidently an allusion to the accepted derivation of θεός from τιθημι. Cf. De Conf. 137 δύναμις καθ' ἣν ἐθηκε καὶ διετάξατο τὰ πάντα κέκληται ἐτύμως θεός, where ἐτύμως shews that an etymology is intended (see note). Cf. also De Mut. 29.

PHILO

- ὁ μέσος ὑφ' ἑκατέρας τῶν δυνάμεων παρέχει τῇ ὁρατικῇ διανοίᾳ τοτὲ μὲν ἑνὸς τοτὲ δὲ τριῶν φαντασίαν, ἑνὸς μὲν ὅταν ἄκρως τύχη καθαρθεῖσα καὶ μὴ μόνον τὰ πλήθη τῶν ἀριθμῶν ἀλλὰ καὶ τὴν γείτονα μονάδος δυάδα ὑπερβᾶσα πρὸς τὴν ἀμιγῆ καὶ ἀσύμπλοκον καὶ καθ' αὐτὴν οὐδενὸς ἐπιδεᾶ τὸ παράπαν ἰδέαν ἐπείγεται, τριῶν δὲ ὅταν μήπω τὰς μεγάλας τελεσθεῖσα τελετὰς ἔτι ἐν ταῖς βραχυτέραις ὀργιάζηται καὶ μὴ δύνηται τὸ ὄν ἄνευ ἐτέρου τινὸς ἐξ αὐτοῦ μόνου καταλαβεῖν, ἀλλὰ διὰ τῶν
- 123 δρωμένων, ἢ κτίζον ἢ ἄρχον. δεύτερος μὲν οὖν, ὡς φασι, πλοῦς οὗτος, μετέχει δ' οὐδὲν ἥττον δόξης θεοφιλοῦς· ὁ δὲ πρότερος τρόπος οὐ μετέχει, ἀλλ' αὐτός ἐστι θεοφιλῆς δόξα, μᾶλλον δὲ καὶ δόξης πρεσβυτέρα καὶ παντὸς τιμιωτέρα τοῦ δοκεῖν ἀλήθεια. γνωριμώτερον δὲ τὸ δηλούμενον
- 124 παραστατέον. XXV. τρεῖς εἰσιν ἡθῶν ἀνθρωπίνων τάξεις, ὧν ἑκάστη διακεκλήρωται μίαν τῶν εἰρημένων φαντασιῶν ἢ μὲν ἀρίστη τὴν μέσῃν τοῦ ὄντως ὄντος, ἢ δὲ μετ' ἐκείνην τὴν ἐπὶ δεξιὰ, τὴν εὐεργέτιν, ἢ θεὸς ὄνομα, ἢ δὲ τρίτῃ τὴν ἐπὶ θάτερα,
- 125 τὴν ἀρχικὴν, ἢ καλεῖται κύριος. τὰ μὲν οὖν ἄριστα τῶν ἡθῶν τὸν καθ' αὐτὸν ἄνευ τινὸς ὄντα θεραπεύει πρὸς μηδενὸς ἐτέρου μεθελκόμενα, τῷ τετάσθαι μοναδικῶς πρὸς τὴν ἑνὸς τιμήν· τῶν δ' ἄλλων τὰ μὲν διὰ τῆς εὐεργέτιδος συνίσταται καὶ γνωρίζεται

---

<sup>a</sup> For this proverbial phrase see note on De Som. i. 44.

ON ABRAHAM, 122-125

encies as His squire presents to the mind which has vision the appearance sometimes of one, sometimes of three : of one, when that mind is highly purified and, passing beyond not merely the multiplicity of other numbers, but even the dyad which is next to the unit, presses on to the ideal form which is free from mixture and complexity, and being self-contained needs nothing more ; of three, when, as yet uninitiated into the highest mysteries, it is still a votary only of the minor rites and unable to apprehend the Existing alone by Itself and apart from all else, but only through Its actions, as either creative or ruling. This is, as they say, a "second best 123 voyage <sup>a</sup>" ; yet all the same there is in it an element of a way of thinking such as God approves. But the former state of mind has not merely an element. It is in itself the divinely-approved way, or rather it is the truth, higher than a way of thinking, more precious than anything which is merely thought. But it would be well to state the point in a more familiar guise. XXV. There are three classes of human 124 temperaments, each of them so constituted that the vision presents itself in one of the three ways above-mentioned. To the best class it presents itself in the middle form, that of the essentially existent ; to the next best, in that which stands on the right, the beneficent, which bears the name of God ; to the third, in that on the left, the governing, which is called Lord. Temperaments of the last kind 125 worship the solely Self-existent and nothing can make them swerve from this, because they are subject to the single attraction which leads them to honour the one. Of the other two types, one is introduced and made known to the Father by

PHILO

- 126 δυνάμεως τῷ πατρί, τὰ δὲ διὰ τῆς βασιλικῆς. ὁ δὲ λέγω, τοιοῦτόν ἐστιν. ἄνθρωποι μὲν ἐπειδὴν αἰσθωνται κατὰ πρόφασιν ἑταιρείας προσιόντας αὐτοῖς τινας ἐπὶ θήρα πλεονεξιῶν, ὑποβλέπονταί τε καὶ ἀποστρέφονται τὴν προσποίητον 127 σφόδρα ἐπιζήμιον· ὁ δὲ θεὸς ἅτε βλάβην οὐκ ἐπιδεχόμενος ἅπαντας τοὺς καθ' ἡντινοῦν ἰδέαν προ-αιρουμένους τιμᾶν αὐτὸν ἄσμενος προσκαλεῖται, μηδένα σκορακίζειν ἀξιῶν τὸ παράπαν, ἀλλὰ μόνον οὐκ ἄντικρυς τοῖς ἀκοῶς ἔχουσιν ἐν τῇ ψυχῇ θεο-128 πίζει τάδε· “ τὰ μὲν πρῶτα τῶν ἄθλων κείσεται τοῖς ἐμὲ θεραπεύουσι δι' ἐμὲ αὐτόν, τὰ δὲ δεύτερα τοῖς δι' ἑαυτούς, ἢ τυχεῖν ἀγαθῶν ἐλπίζουσιν ἢ τιμωριῶν ἀπαλλαγὴν εὐρήσεσθαι προσδοκῶσι· καὶ γὰρ εἰ ἔμμισθος ἢ τῶνδε θεραπεία καὶ μὴ ἀδέκα-στος, ἀλλ' οὐδὲν ἦττον ἐντὸς εἰλεῖται θείων περι-129 βόλων καὶ οὐκ ἕξω πλάζεται. τὰ δὲ ἄθλα τοῖς | [20] μὲν ἐμὲ τιμῶσι δι' ἐμὲ κείσεται φίλια, τοῖς δὲ διὰ τὰς χρείας φίλια μὲν οὐ, τὸ δὲ μὴ ἀλλοτρίοις νομίζεσθαι· δέχομαι γὰρ καὶ τὸν τῆς εὐεργετιδός μου δυνάμεως βουλόμενον μεταλαχεῖν εἰς μετουσίαν ἀγαθῶν καὶ τὸν φόβῳ τὴν ἡγεμονικὴν καὶ δεσ-ποτικὴν ἰλασκόμενον ἐξουσίαν εἰς ἀποτροπὴν κολά-σεως· οὐ γὰρ ἀγνοῶ, διότι πρὸς τῷ χεῖρους μὴ γίνεσθαι καὶ βελτίους ἔσονται τῷ συνεχεῖ τῆς 130 θεραπείας εἰλικρινῆ καὶ καθαρὰν εὐσέβειαν ἀσκήσαντες. εἰ γὰρ καὶ μάλιστα οἱ τρόποι διαφέρουσιν, ἀφ' ὧν ποιοῦνται τὰς πρὸς τὴν ἀρέσκειαν ὀρμάς, οὐκ αἰτιατέον, ὅτι σκοπὸς εἰς καὶ τέλος ἔν ἐστιν 131 αὐτοῖς, τὸ θεραπεύειν ἐμέ.” ὅτι δ' ἡ

ON ABRAHAM, 125-130

the beneficial, the other by the kingly potency.

My meaning is something as follows : 126 men, when they see others approaching them under profession of friendship, in quest of advantages to be gained from them, look askance and turn away ; they fear that counterfeited adulation and suavity which they regard as exceedingly pernicious. But 127 God cannot suffer injury, and therefore He gladly invites all who set themselves to honour Him under any form whatsoever, and in His eyes none such deserves rejection. Indeed one might almost say that to those whose souls have ears God speaks plainly as follows : “ My first prizes will be set apart 128 for those who honour Me for Myself alone, the second to those who honour Me for their own sakes, either hoping to win blessings or expecting to obtain remission of punishments, since, though their worship is for reward and not disinterested, yet all the same its range lies within the divine precincts and does not stray outside. But the prizes set aside for those 129 who honour Me for Myself will be gifts of friendship ; to those whose motive is self-interest they do not show friendship but that I do not count them as aliens. For I accept both him who wishes to enjoy My beneficial power and thus partake of blessings and him who propitiates the dominance and authority of the master to avoid chastisement. For I know well that they will not only not be worsened, but actually bettered, through the persistence of their worship and through practising piety pure and undefiled.
For, however different are the characters which pro- 130 duce in them the impulses to do My pleasure, no charge shall be brought against them, since they have one aim and object, to serve Me.”

- τριττὴ φαντασία δυνάμει<sup>1</sup> ἐνός ἐστὶν ὑποκειμένου, φανερόν οὐ μόνον ἐκ τῆς ἐν ἀλληγορίᾳ θεωρίας, ἀλλὰ καὶ τῆς ῥητῆς γραφῆς τάδε περιεχούσης·
- 132 ἡνίκα μὲν γὰρ ὁ σοφὸς ἰκετεύει τοὺς εὐκότας ὁδοιπόρους τρεῖς ξενισθῆναι παρ' αὐτῶ, διαλέγεται τούτοις οὐχ ὡς τρισίν, ἀλλ' ὡς ἐνί, καὶ φησι· “ κύριε, εἰ ἄρα εὖρον χάριν παρὰ σοί, μὴ παρέλθης τὸν παῖδά σου.” τὸ γὰρ “ κύριε ” καὶ τὸ “ παρὰ σοί ” καὶ τὸ “ μὴ παρέλθης ” καὶ ὅσα τοιαῦτα πρὸς ἓνα πέφυκεν ἀλλ' οὐ πρὸς πλείους λέγεσθαι· ἡνίκα δὲ ξενιζόμενοι φιλοφρονοῦνται τὸν ξενοδόχον, πάλιν εἰς ὑπισχνεῖται ὡς μόνος αὐτὸς παρὼν γνησίου παιδὸς σποράν διὰ τῶνδε· “ ἐπανιὼν ἦξω πρὸς σέ κατὰ τὸν καιρὸν τοῦτον εἰς νέωτα, καὶ ἔξει υἱὸν Σάρρα ἢ γυνή σου.”
- 133 XXVI. Φανερώτατα μέντοι καὶ διαπονητότατα<sup>2</sup> μηνύει διὰ τῶν ἐξῆς τὸ δηλούμενον. ἡ Σοδομιτῶν χώρα, μοῖρα τῆς Χανανίτιδος γῆς, ἦν ὕστερον ὠνόμασαν Συρίαν Παλαιστίνην, ἀδικημάτων μυρίων ὄσων γεμισθεῖσα καὶ μάλιστα τῶν ἐκ γαστριμαργίας καὶ λαγνείας ὅσα τε μεγέθη καὶ πλήθη τῶν ἄλλων ἡδονῶν ἐπιτειχίσασα ἤδη παρὰ τῷ δικαστῇ
- 134 τῶν ὄλων κατέγνωστο. αἴτιον δὲ τῆς περὶ τὸ ἀκολασταίνειν ἀμετρίας ἐγένετο τοῖς οἰκήτορσιν ἢ τῶν χορηγιῶν ἐπάλληλος ἀφθονία· βαθύγειος γὰρ καὶ εὐνδρος οὕσα ἢ χώρα παντοίων ἀνὰ πᾶν ἔτος εὐφορία καρπῶν ἐχρήτο· “ μεγίστη δ' ἀρχὴ κακῶν ”

<sup>1</sup> Cohn suspects δυνάμει, needlessly, I think. No doubt δυνάμει is properly opposed to οὐσία or ἐντελεχεία. Cf. De Op. 47, Leg. All. i. 61. But the statement here is that the vision of one is the reality which lies behind the vision of three. Actually a φαντασία can only be of that which appears.

ON ABRAHAM, 131-134

That the triple vision is in reality <sup>a</sup> a vision of a single 131 object is clear not merely from the principles of allegory but from the literal text which contains the following account. When the Sage supplicates the 132 three seeming travellers to accept his hospitality, he discourses with them as though they were one and not three. He says, "Sir, if indeed I have found favour with thee, do not thou pass thy servant by." Here "Sir" and "with thee" and "do not thou pass" and the other like phrases must be addressed to one and not to more than one; and during their entertainment, when they show courtesy to their host, we find one only, as though no other was present, promising the birth of a son born in wedlock in the following words: "I will return and come to thee at this season next year, and Sarah, thy wife, shall have a son."<sup>b</sup>

XXVI. <sup>c</sup> He brings out the point most clearly and 133 elaborately in what follows. The land of the Sodomites, a part of the land of Canaan afterwards called Palestinian Syria, was brimful of innumerable iniquities, particularly such as arise from gluttony and lewdness, and multiplied and enlarged every other possible pleasure with so formidable a menace that it had at last been condemned by the Judge of All. The inhabitants owed this extreme licence to the 134 never-failing lavishness of their sources of wealth, for, deep-soiled and well-watered as it was, the land had every year a prolific harvest of all manner of fruits, <sup>a</sup> Or "virtually." See critical note.

<sup>b</sup> See Gen. xviii. 3 and 10.

<sup>c</sup> For §§ 133-141 see Gen. xix.

---

<sup>2</sup> Some mss. ἀδιαπονητότατα or ἀδιαπόνητα: Cohn suggests ἀδιαπορητότατα.

PHILO

- ὡς εἶπέ τις οὐκ ἀπὸ σκοποῦ “ τὰ λίαν ἀγαθά.”
- 135 ὧν ἀδυνατοῦντες φέρειν τὸν κόρον ὥσπερ τὰ θρέμματα σκιρτῶντες ἀπαυχενίζουσι τὸν τῆς φύσεως νόμον, ἄκρατον πολὺν καὶ ὀψοφαγίας καὶ ὀχειάς ἐκθέστους μεταδιώκοντες· οὐ γὰρ μόνον θηλυματοῦντες ἀλλοτρίους γάμους διέφθειρον, ἀλλὰ καὶ ἄνδρες ὄντες ἄρρεσιν ἐπιβαίνοντες, τὴν κοινὴν πρὸς τοὺς πάσχοντας οἱ δρῶντες φύσιν οὐκ αἰδούμενοι, παιδοσποροῦντες ἠλέγχοντο μὲν ἀτελεῖ γονὴν σπεύροντες, ὁ δ’ ἔλεγχος πρὸς οὐδὲν ἦν ὄφελος, ὑπὸ
- 136 βιαιοτέρας νικωμένων ἐπιθυμίας. εἴτ’ ἐκ τοῦ κατ’
- [21] | ὀλίγον ἐθίζοντες τὰ γυναικῶν ὑπομένειν τοὺς ἄνδρας γεννηθέντας θήλειαν κατεσκευάσαν αὐτοῖς νόσον, κακὸν δῦσμαχον, οὐ μόνον τὰ σώματα μαλακότητι καὶ θρύψει γυναικοῦντες, ἀλλὰ καὶ τὰς ψυχὰς ἀγεννεστέρας ἀπεργαζόμενοι, καὶ τό γε ἐπ’ αὐτοὺς<sup>1</sup> ἦκον μέρος τὸ σύμπαν ἀνθρώπων γένος διέφθειρον· εἰ γοῦν Ἕλληνες ὁμοῦ καὶ βάρβαροι συμφωνήσαντες ἐζήλωσαν τὰς τοιαύτας ὁμιλίας, ἠρήμωντο ἂν ἐξῆς αἱ πόλεις ὥσπερ λοιμῶδει νόσω
- 137 κενωθεῖσαι. XXVII. λαβὼν δὲ ὁ θεὸς οἶκτον ἄτε σωτὴρ καὶ φιλόανθρωπος τὰς μὲν κατὰ φύσιν ἀνδρῶν καὶ γυναικῶν συνόδους γινομένας ἔνεκα παίδων σπορᾶς ἠϋξῆσεν ὡς ἐνὶ μάλιστα, τὰς δ’ ἐκφύλους καὶ ἐκθέστους διαμισήσας ἔσβεσε καὶ τοὺς ὀργῶντας ἐπὶ ταύτας προβαλόμενος οὐχὶ τὰς ἐν ἔθει καινουργήσας δ’ ἐκτόπους καὶ παρηλλαγμένας
- 138 τιμωρίας ἐτιμωρήσατο. κελεύει γὰρ ἐξαίφνης τὸν ἀέρα νεφωθέντα πολὺν ὄμβρον οὐχ ὕδατος ἀλλὰ

<sup>1</sup> MSS. ἐφ’ αὐτοῖς OR ἐπ’ αὐτοῖς.

<sup>a</sup> ἀρχὴ μεγίστη τῶν ἐν ἀνθρώποις κακῶν, | ὠγαθέ, τὰ λίαν ἀγαθά. Menander.

ON ABRAHAM, 134-138

and the chief beginning of evils, as one has aptly said, is goods in excess.<sup>a</sup> Incapable of bearing such satiety, 135 plunging like cattle, they threw off from their necks the law of nature and applied themselves to deep drinking of strong liquor and dainty feeding and forbidden forms of intercourse. Not only in their mad lust for women did they violate the marriages of their neighbours, but also men mounted males without respect for the sex nature which the active partner shares with the passive; and so when they tried to beget children they were discovered to be incapable of any but a sterile seed. Yet the discovery availed them not, so much stronger was the force of the lust which mastered them. Then, as little by little they accus- 136 tomed those who were by nature men to submit to play the part of women, they saddled them with the formidable curse of a female disease. For not only did they emasculate their bodies by luxury and voluptuousness but they worked a further degeneration in their souls and, as far as in them lay, were corrupting the whole of mankind. Certainly, had Greeks and barbarians joined together in affecting such unions, city after city would have become a desert, as though depopulated by a pestilential sickness. XXVII. But God, moved by pity for mankind whose 137 Saviour and Lover He was, gave increase in the greatest possible degree to the unions which men and women naturally make for begetting children, but abominated and extinguished this unnatural and forbidden intercourse, and those who lusted for such He cast forth and chastised with punishments not of the usual kind but startling and extraordinary, newly-created for this purpose. He bade the air grow sud- 138 denly overclouded and pour forth a great rain, not of

PHILO

- πυρὸς ὕειν· ἀθρόας δὲ νιφούσης ἀδιαστάτῳ καὶ ἀπαύστῳ ῥύμη φλογός, ἐκαίοντο μὲν ἀγροὶ καὶ λειμῶνες καὶ λάσια ἄλση καὶ ἔλη δασύτατα καὶ δρυμοὶ βαθεῖς, ἐκαίετο δ' ἡ πεδιάς καὶ ὁ τοῦ σίτου καὶ τῶν ἄλλων σπαρτῶν ἅπας καρπός, ἐκαίετο δὲ καὶ τῆς ὀρεινῆς ἢ δενδροφόρος, στελεχῶν ῥίζαις 139 αὐταῖς ἐμπιπραμένων· ἐπαύλεις δὲ καὶ οἰκίαι καὶ τείχη καὶ ὅσα ἐν οἰκοδομαῖς ἰδιωτικὰ καὶ δημόσια πάντα συγκατεπίμπραντο καὶ ἡμέρα μιᾷ αἱ μὲν εὐάνδρουσαι πόλεις τάφος τῶν οἰκητόρων ἐγεγένητο, αἱ δ' ἐκ λίθων καὶ ξύλων κατασκευαὶ τέφρα 140 καὶ λεπτὴ κόνις. ἐπεὶ δὲ τὰ ἐν φανερωῷ καὶ ὑπὲρ γῆς ἅπαντα κατανάλωσεν ἡ φλόξ, ἤδη καὶ τὴν γῆν αὐτὴν ἔκαιε κατωτάτῳ διαδύσα καὶ τὴν ἐνὑπάρχουσαν ζωτικὴν δύναμιν ἔφθειρεν εἰς ἀγονίαν παντελῆ, ὑπὲρ τοῦ μηδ' αὐθίς ποτε καρπὸν ἐνεγκεῖν ἢ χλοηφορῆσαι τὸ παράπαν δυνηθῆναι· καὶ μέχρι νῦν καίεται, τὸ γὰρ κεραύνιον πῦρ ἠκιστα σβεννύμενον 141 ἢ νέμεται ἢ ἐντύφεται. πίστις δὲ σαφεστάτη τὰ ὀρώμενα· τοῦ γὰρ συμβεβηκότος πάθους μνημείον ἔστιν ὃ τε ἀναδιδόμενος αἰεὶ καπνὸς καὶ ὃ μεταλλεύουσι θεῖον· τῆς δὲ περὶ τὴν χώραν παλαιᾶς εὐδαιμονίας ἐναργέστατον ὑπολείπεται δείγμα πόλις μία τῶν ὁμόρων καὶ ἡ ἐν κύκλῳ γῆ, πολυάνθρωπος μὲν ἡ πόλις, εὐχորτος δὲ καὶ εὐσταχὺς καὶ συνόλως καρποφόρος ἡ γῆ, πρὸς ἔλεγχον δίκης γνώμη θεία δικασθείσης.
- 142 XXVIII. Ἄλλὰ γὰρ οὐχ ἔνεκα τοῦ δηλῶσαί με τὰς μεγαλουργηθείσας συμφορὰς καινὰς ταῦτα διεξῆλθον, ἀλλ' ἐκεῖνο βουλόμενος παραστήσαι, ὅτι τῶν τριῶν ὡς ἀνδρῶν ἐπιφανέντων τῷ σοφῷ δύο

ON ABRAHAM, 138-142

water but fire. And when the flames streamed down massed in one constant and perpetual rush, they burnt up the fields and meadows, the leafy groves, the overgrowths of the marshland and the dense thickets. They burnt the plainland and all the fruit of the corn and other crops. They burnt the forest-land on the mountains, where trunks and roots alike were consumed. The conflagration reached to byres and 139 houses and walls and all public and private property contained in buildings; and in one day populous cities had become the grave of the inhabitants and fabrics of stone and timber had turned into ashes and fine dust. And when the flame had utterly consumed 140 all that was visible and above ground it penetrated right down into the earth itself, destroyed its inherent life-power and reduced it to complete sterility to prevent it from ever bearing fruit and herbage at all. And to this day it goes on burning, for the fire of the thunderbolt is never quenched, but either continues its ravages or else smoulders. And the clearest proof 141 is what is still visible, for a monument of the disastrous event remains in the smoke which rises ceaselessly and the brimstone which the miners obtain; while the ancient prosperity of the country is most plainly attested by the survival of one of the cities of the neighbourhood and the land round it; for the city is thickly populated and the land rich in corn and pasturage and fertile in general, thus providing a standing evidence to the sentence decreed by the divine judgement.

XXVIII. However, I have given these details not in 142 order to describe the unprecedented calamity of God's mighty working, but in my wish to shew something else. Scripture tells us that of the three who appeared

PHILO

- [22] μόνους εἰς τὴν | ἀφανισθεῖσαν χώραν τὰ λόγια φησιν ἐλθεῖν ἐπ' ὀλέθρῳ τῶν οἰκητόρων, τοῦ τρίτου μὴ 143 δικαιώσαντος ἤκειν· ὃς κατὰ γε τὴν ἐμὴν ἔννοιαν ἦν ὁ πρὸς ἀλήθειαν ὢν, ἀρμόττον ὑπολαβὼν εἶναι τὰ μὲν ἀγαθὰ παρὼν δι' αὐτοῦ χαρίζεσθαι, μόναις δ' ἐπιτρέπειν ταῖς δυνάμεσι καθ' ὑπηρεσίαν τὰ ἐναντία χειρουργεῖν, ἵνα μόνων ἀγαθῶν αἴτιος, 144 κακοῦ δὲ μηδενὸς προηγουμένως νομίζηται. τοῦτό μοι δοκοῦσι καὶ τῶν βασιλέων οἱ μιμούμενοι τὴν θείαν φύσιν πράττειν, τὰς μὲν χάριτας δι' ἑαυτῶν προτείνοντες, τὰς δὲ τιμωρίας δι' ἑτέρων βεβαιούν- 145 τες. ἀλλ' ἐπειδὴ τῶν δυεῖν δυνάμεων ἡ μὲν εὐεργέτις ἐστίν, ἡ δὲ κολαστήριος, ἑκατέρα κατὰ τὸ εἶκὸς ἐπιφαίνεται τῇ Σοδομιτῶν γῆ, διότι τῶν ἀρίστων ἐν αὐτῇ πέντε πόλεων τέτταρες μὲν ἔμελλον ἐμπίπρασθαι, μία δὲ ἀπαθῆς παντὸς κακοῦ σῶος ὑπολείπεσθαι. ἐχρῆν γὰρ διὰ μὲν τῆς κολαστηρίου γίνεσθαι τὴν φθοράν, σώζεσθαι δὲ διὰ τῆς 146 εὐεργέτιδος. ἀλλ' ἐπειδὴ καὶ τὸ σωζόμενον μέρος οὐχ ὀλοκλήρους καὶ παντελεῖς εἶχεν ἀρετάς, δυνάμει μὲν τοῦ ὄντος εὐεργετεῖτο, προηγουμένως δὲ τῆς ἐκείνου φαντασίας ἀνάξιον ἐνομίσθη τυχεῖν.
 147 XXIX. Ἡ μὲν οὖν ἐν φανερωῶ καὶ πρὸς τοὺς πολλοὺς ἀπόδοσις ἢ δ' ἐστίν· ἡ δ' ἐν ἀποκρύφῳ καὶ πρὸς ὀλίγους, ὅσοι τρόπους ψυχῆς ἐρευνῶσιν ἀλλ' οὐ σωματίων μορφάς, αὐτίκα λεχθήσεται. συμ-βολικῶς ἡ πεντάπολις αἰ ἐν ἡμῖν πέντε αἰσθήσεις εἰσί, τὰ τῶν ἡδονῶν ὄργανα, δι' ὧν ἅπασαι μικραί

<sup>a</sup> Or "primarily."

<sup>b</sup> The idea that God's direct agency appears only in doing good and that He leaves punishment to His subordinates has been already worked out in De Conf. 168 ff. on the text "let

to the Sage in the guise of men two only went on to the land whose existence was blotted out to destroy the inhabitants, but the third thought good not to accompany them. In my opinion that one was the 143 truly Existent, who held it fitting that He should be present to give good gifts by His own agency, but should leave the execution of the opposite of good entirely in the hands of His potencies acting as His ministers, that so He might appear to be the cause of good only, but not directly<sup>a</sup> the cause of anything evil.<sup>b</sup> This is the practice, I think, of kings also, who 144 imitate the divine nature. They are their own agents in granting boons, but employ others to enforce punishment. But since of the two potencies 145 one is beneficial and the other punitive it was natural that each should make his appearance in the land of the Sodomites, since of the five most flourishing cities in it four were to be burnt but one was to be left, preserved from all evil that could harm it. It was right that the punitive should be employed for destruction, but the beneficial for preservation. Yet since the 146 virtues of the part preserved were not complete and perfect, while it received benefits through a potency of the Existent, it was not thought worthy to be granted the vision of Him directly.

XXIX. Such is the natural and obvious rendering 147 of the story as suited for the multitude. We will proceed at once to the hidden and inward meaning which appeals to the few who study soul characteristics rather than bodily forms. Symbolically the group of five cities is the five senses in us, the instruments of the pleasures which, whether great or small, are us go down and confuse their tongue," and so, too, in De Fuga 68 ff. Cf. also De Op. 72 ff.

PHILO

- 148 τε αὐ καὶ μεγάλοι τελεσιουργοῦνται. ἡ γὰρ ὀρώντες χρωμάτων καὶ σχημάτων ποικιλίας ἔν τε ἀψύχοις καὶ ψυχῇ ἔχουσιν ἠδόμεθα ἢ φωνῶν ἐμμελεστάτων ἀκούοντες ἢ κατὰ γεῦσιν ἔν τοῖς περὶ ἔδωδῆν καὶ πόσιν ἢ κατ' ὄσφρησιν ἔν εὐωδίαῖς ἀτμῶν ἢ ἔν μαλακοῖς καὶ θερμοῖς ἔτι δὲ λείοις κατὰ
- 149 τὴν ἀφήν. ζωωδέσταται μὲν οὖν καὶ ἀνδραποδωδέσταται τῶν πέντε τρεῖς εἰσιν αἰσθήσεις, γεῦσις, ὄσφρησις, ἀφή, περὶ ἧς τῶν θρεμμάτων καὶ τῶν θηρίων τὰ γαστριμαργότατα καὶ συνουσιαστικώτατα μάλιστα ἐπτόηται· δι' ὅλης γὰρ ἡμέρας καὶ νυκτὸς ἢ τροφῶν ἀπλήστως ἐμφορεῖται ἢ πρὸς τὰς
- 150 ὀχείας ὀρμῆ. δύο δ' εἰσὶν ἐμφιλόσοφοι καὶ ἡγεμονίδες, ἀκοὴ καὶ ὄρασις· βραδύτερα δὲ πως καὶ θηλυτέρα ὠτα ὀφθαλμῶν ἐπὶ τὰ ὀρατὰ φθανόντων ὑπὸ εὐτολμίας καὶ οὐκ ἀναμενόντων, ἄχρῖς ἂν ἐκεῖνα κινήσῃ, προῦπαντιαζόντων δὲ καὶ ἀντικινήσαι γλιχομένων. ἀκοὴ μὲν οὖν, διότι βραδεία καὶ
- [23] θηλυτέρα, δευτερεύουσαν τάξιν τετάχθω, | προνομία δ' ἔστω τις ἐξαιρέτος ὀράσει· ταύτην γὰρ ὁ θεὸς βασιλίδα τῶν ἄλλων ἀπέφηνεν ἐπάνω θεὸς ἀπασῶν καὶ ὡσπερ ἐπ' ἀκροπόλεως ἰδρυσάμενος οἰκειοτάτην
- 151 ἀπειργάσατο ψυχῇ. τεκμηριώσαιτο δ' ἂν τις ἐκ τοῦ συμμεταβάλλειν ταῖς ἐκείνης τροπαῖς· λύπης μὲν γὰρ ἐγγινομένης, ὀφθαλμοὶ συννοίας γέμουσι καὶ κατηφείας, χαρᾶς δ' ἔμπαλιν, ὑπομειδιῶσι καὶ γεγῆθασι, φόβου δὲ κρατήσαντος, ταραχώδους γέμουσιν ἀταξίας, κινήσεις καὶ παλμοὺς
- 152 καὶ περιστροφὰς ἀτάκτους ἐνδεχόμενοι· εἰ δ' ὀργὴ κατάσχοι, τραχυτέρα πως καὶ ὑφαιμος ἢ ὄψις, καὶ ἔν μὲν τῷ λογίζεσθαι καὶ φροντίζειν τινὸς ἡρεμεῖ καὶ ἐκνένευκε, μόνον οὐ συνεκτείνουσα τῇ διανοίᾳ

ON ABRAHAM, 148-152

brought to their accomplishment by the senses. For 148 we get pleasure either by seeing varieties of colours and shapes in objects, whether possessed of physical life or not, or by hearing very melodious sounds or through taste in matters of food and drink, or through smell in fragrant perfumes or through touch in soft and warm and also in smooth substances. Now of the 149 five, the three most animal and servile are taste, smell, and touch, which cause particular excitation in the cattle and wild beasts most given to gluttony and sexual passion. For all day and night they fill themselves with food insatiably or are at rut. The other 150 two have a link with philosophy and hold the leading place—hearing and sight. But the ears are in a way more sluggish and womanish than eyes. The eyes have the courage to reach out to the visible objects and do not wait to be acted on by them, but anticipate the meeting, and seek to act upon them instead.
Hearing, then, sluggish and more womanish as it is, must be put in the second place and a special precedence must be given to sight, for God has made it the queen of the other senses and set it above them all, and, establishing it as it were on a citadel, has associated it most closely with the soul.

We may find a proof of this in the way in which it 151 changes with the soul's phases. When the soul feels grief, the eyes are full of anxiety and depression.
When on the other hand it feels joy, they smile and rejoice. When fear is supreme, they are full of turbulent confusion, and move and quiver and roll confusedly. If anger prevails, the organ of sight is 152 harsher and bloodshot, and during reflection and careful consideration of any question it has a quiet and distant appearance, almost as though it was accommo-

- 153 ἑαυτήν, ἐν δὲ ταῖς ἀναψύξεσι καὶ ἀνέσεσι συνανιέται καὶ χαλάται· καὶ προσιώντι μὲν φίλῳ προευαγ- γελίζεται τὸ τῆς εὐνοίας πάθος εὐδίῳ καὶ γαληνῷ βλέμματι, εἰ δ' ἐχθρὸς τύχοι, τὸ δυσάρεστον τῆς ψυχῆς πάθος προμηνύει· καὶ θρασύτητι μὲν προπη- δώσι καὶ προεκτρέχουσιν ὀφθαλμοί, αἰδοῖ δὲ πρῶως ἡρεμοῦσι· [καὶ] ὡς συνελόντι φράσαι ψυχῆς εἰκόνα δεδημιουργῆσθαι τὴν ὄρασιν ἀκρότητι τέχνης εὖ μεμμημένης ἐναργὲς ἐμφαίνουσιν εἰδωλον οἷα διὰ κατόπτρου τὴν φύσιν ὄρατὴν ἐξ αὐτῆς οὐκ ἐχούσης.
- 154 ἀλλὰ γὰρ οὐ ταύτη μόνον τὰς ἄλλας αἰσθήσεις ὑπερβάλλει τὸ κάλλος ὀφθαλμῶν, ἀλλὰ καὶ διότι τῶν ἄλλων ἐν ταῖς ἐγρηγόρσεσι—τὴν γὰρ καθ' ὕπνον ἀπραξίαν οὐ παραληπτέον—ἐπιλείπουσιν αἱ χρήσεις· ὅποτε γὰρ μὴ κινήσειέ τι τῶν ἐκτός, ἡσυχάζουσιν, αἱ δὲ τῶν ὀφθαλμῶν ἀναπεπταμένων ἐνέργειαι συνεχεῖς καὶ ἀδιάστατοι μηδέποτε πληρου- μένων εἰσὶ καὶ ταύτη παριστάντων, ἣν ἔχουσι πρὸς
- 155 ψυχὴν συγγένειαν. ἀλλ' ἐκείνη μὲν ἀεικίνητος οὔσα μεθ' ἡμέραν καὶ νύκτωρ διανίσταται, τοῖς δ' ἅτε σαρκὸς πλείστον μετέχουσιν αὐτάρκης ἐδόθη δωρεά, μέρος ἡμισυ τοῦ παντός χρόνου καὶ βίου διατελεῖν ἐνεργούντας τὰς ἀρμοττούσας ἐνεργείας.
- 156 XXX. ὁ δ' ἐστὶν ἀναγκαιότατον τῆς ἀπὸ τῶν ὀμμάτων ὠφελείας, ἥδη λεκτέον· μόνη γὰρ ὀράσει τῶν αἰσθήσεων ὁ θεὸς ἀνέτειλε φῶς, ὁ καὶ τῶν ὄντων ἐστὶ κάλλιστον καὶ πρῶτον ἐν ἱεραῖς
- 157 βίβλοις ὠνομάσθη καλόν. διττὴ δὲ φωτὸς φύσις· τὸ μὲν γὰρ ἀπὸ τοῦ χρειώδους πυρός, φθαρτοῦ φθαρτόν, ἐκλάμπει σβέσιν ἐνδεχόμενον, τὸ δὲ

* For the distinction between the "useful" and the "heavenly" fire cf. Quis Rerum 136 and note.

ON ABRAHAM, 152-157

dating itself to the outlook of the mind. In times of mental refreshment and relaxation it relaxes also and is at its ease. When a friend approaches, its peaceful and sunny look is the happy herald of the kindly feeling within, while in the case of an enemy it gives a warning of the soul's displeasure. Courage makes the eyes dart swiftly forward. Modesty makes them gentle and reposeful. In short, one may say that sight has been created as an image of the soul, and through the perfection of the art which has produced so faithful a copy presents a clear and mirror-like reflection of the original whose nature is in itself invisible.

But indeed it is not only in this way that the excellence of the eyes exceeds the other senses, but also because in waking moments, since we need not consider their inaction in sleep, they cease to function. For when no outward object moves them they are still, whilst the eyes when open are constant and unceasing in their activities; they have always room for more, and in this way they shew their kinship with the soul. But, while the soul is always in motion and wakeful day and night, the eyes in which the fleshly is the principal ingredient must rest satisfied with the gift of continuing to exercise the activities which befit them for half the whole span of time and human life.

XXX. But the most vital part of the benefit we gain from sight remains now to be told. God made the light to shine upon sight alone of the senses, and light is the best of existing things and was the first to be called good in the sacred books. Now light has a double nature: one is the effulgence of the fire of common use,<sup>a</sup> perishable as that which produces it and liable to extinction, the other, the

PHILO

- ἄσβεστον καὶ ἀδιάφθορόν ἐστιν, ἄνωθεν ἀπὸ τοῦ οὐρανοῦ πρὸς ἡμᾶς φερόμενον, ὡσπερ ἀπ' ἀενάων πηγῶν ἐκάστου τῶν ἀστέρων αὐγὰς ἐκχέοντος· ἐκατέρω δ' ἡ ὄψις ἐνομιλεῖ καὶ δι' ἀμφοτέρων προσβάλλει τοῖς ὄρατοῖς εἰς ἀκριβεστάτην ἀντί-
- 158 ληψίν. ἔτι τοίνυν ἐπιχειρῶμεν ὀφθαλμοὺς λόγοις ἐγκωμιάζειν, τοῦ θεοῦ τοὺς ἀληθεῖς ἐπαίνους αὐτῶν
- [24] | στηλιτεύσαντος ἐν οὐρανῷ, τοὺς ἀστέρας; ἡλίου γὰρ αὐγαὶ καὶ σελήνης καὶ τῶν ἄλλων πλανήτων καὶ ἀπλανῶν τοῦ χάριν γεγόνασιν ὅτι μὴ τῆς ὀφθαλμῶν ἐνεργείας εἰς τὴν τοῦ ὄραν ὑπηρεσίαν;
- 159 διὸ καὶ προσχρῶμενοι τῇ πασῶν ἀρίστη δωρεᾷ φωτὶ καταθεῶνται τὰ ἐν κόσμῳ, γῆν, φυτὰ, ζῶα, καρπούς, πελαγῶν ἀναχύσεις ποταμοὺς αὐθιγενεῖς τε καὶ χειμάρρους πηγῶν τε διαφοράς, ὧν αἱ μὲν ψυχρὸν αἱ δὲ θερμὸν νᾶμα προχέουσι, πάντων τῶν κατὰ τὸν ἀέρα συνισταμένων τὰς φύσεις — ἀμύθητοι δὲ εἰσιν ἰδέαι καὶ ἀπερίληπτοι λόγοι, — καὶ ἐπὶ πᾶσι τὸν οὐρανόν, ὃς ἀληθεῖα κόσμος ἐν κόσμῳ δεδημιούργηται, καὶ τὰ κατ' οὐρανόν κάλλη καὶ θεῖα ἀγάλματα. τίς οὖν τῶν ἄλλων αἰσθήσεων ἐπαυχῆσει διαβῆναί ποτε τοσοῦτον;
- 160 XXXI. ἀλλ' ἔασαντες τὰς ἐπὶ ταῖς φάτναις τὸ σύμφυτον ἡμῖν θρέμμα πλαινοῦσας, τὴν ἐπιθυμίαν, ἐξετάσωμεν τὴν λόγου μεταποιουμένην ἀκοήν· ἧς ὁ σύντονος καὶ τελειότατος δρόμος ἴσταται κατὰ ἀέρα τὸν περίγειον, ὅταν βία πνευμάτων καὶ κτύποι βροντῶν συρμὸν πολὺν καὶ χαλεπὸν πάταγον
- 161 ἐξηχώσιν. ὀφθαλμοὶ δὲ ἀπὸ γῆς ἐν ἀκαρεῖ φθάνουσιν εἰς οὐρανόν καὶ τὰ πέρατα τοῦ παντός, ἐπ' ἀνατολὰς ὁμοῦ καὶ δύσεις ἄρκτον τε καὶ μεσημβρίαν,

ON ABRAHAM, 157-161

unquenchable and imperishable, brought to us from heaven above, where each of the stars pours forth its rays as though from perennial fountains. With each of these the sight is conversant, and through both it strikes upon visible objects so as to apprehend them with all exactness. Need we still try to expend words 158 in extolling the eyes, when God has set graven in the heaven their true praises, the stars ? For with what purpose have the rays of the sun and moon and the other stars, planets or fixed, been made save to serve the action of the eyes and to minister to sight ? And 159 so it is, by using light, the best of gifts, that men contemplate the world's contents, earth, plants, living creatures, fruits, seas with their tides, rivers spring-fed or winter torrents, various kinds of fountains, some sending up a cold, others a warm, stream, and all the phenomena of the air with their several natures, the different forms of which are so countless that speech can never include them all ; above all, heaven, which in truth has been framed as a world within a world, and the divine and hallowed forms which beautify it. Which of the other senses, then, can boast that it ever traverses so great a span ? XXXI. Let us leave out of consideration those senses 160 which do but fatten in its manger the beast which shares our nature, lust, and examine the one which does lay claim to reason, hearing. When its traveling is tense and at its fullest, that is when the violent winds with their long, sweeping sound or the loud thunders with their terrific claps make themselves heard, it halts within the air that surrounds the earth. But the eyes leave earth and in an instant 161 reach heaven, and the boundaries of the universe, east, west, north and south alike, and when they

PHILO

- (καὶ) ἀφικνούμενοι πρὸς τὸ θεωρεῖν ἔλκουσιν ἐπὶ 162 τὰ φανέντα τὴν διάνοιαν. ἡ δὲ τὸ παρα-πλήσιον ἐνδεξαμένη πάθος οὐκ ἤρεμει, ἀλλ' ἄτε ἀκοίμητος καὶ ἀεικίνητος οὖσα, παρὰ τῆς ὄψεως τοῦ δύνασθαι τὰ νοητὰ θεωρεῖν τὰς ἀφορμὰς λα-βούσα, εἰς σκέψιν ἦλθε, πότερον τὰ φανέντα ταῦτ' ἐστὶν ἀγένητα ἢ γενέσεως ἔλαβεν ἀρχὴν καὶ πότερον ἄπειρα ἢ πεπερασμένα καὶ πότερον εἰς ἢ πλείονές εἰσι κόσμοι καὶ πότερον τὰ τέτταρα στοιχεῖα τῶν ἀπάντων ἐστὶν ἢ φύσιν ἐξαίρετον οὐρανόσ καὶ τὰ ἐν αὐτῷ κεκλήρωται θειοτέρας καὶ οὐχὶ τοῖς ἄλλοις 163 τῆς αὐτῆς οὐσίας ἐπιλαχόντα· εἰ δὲ δὴ καὶ γέγονεν ὁ κόσμος, ὑπὸ τίνος γέγονε καὶ τίς ὁ δημιουργὸς κατ' οὐσίαν ἢ ποιότητα καὶ τί διανοηθεὶς ἐποίησε καὶ τί νῦν πράττει καὶ τίς αὐτῷ διαγωγή καὶ βίος καὶ ὅσα ἄλλα περιττὸς νοῦς φρονήσει συμβιῶν εἴωθε 164 διερευνᾶσθαι. ταῦτα δὲ καὶ τὰ τοιαῦτα ἀνάκειται τῷ φιλοσοφεῖν· ἐξ οὗ δῆλόν ἐστιν, ὅτι σοφία καὶ φιλοσοφία τὴν ἀρχὴν ἀπ' οὐδενὸς εἴληφεν ἐτέρου τῶν ἐν ἡμῖν ἢ τῆς ἡγεμονίδος τῶν αἰσθήσεων ὀρά-σεως, ἣν καὶ μόνην ἐκ τῆς σωματικῆς χώρας διέσωσεν ὁ θεὸς τὰς τέσσαρας φθείρας, ὅτι αἱ μὲν σαρκὶ καὶ τοῖς σαρκὸς πάθεσιν ἐδούλευσαν, ἡ δὲ ἴσχυσεν ἀνατείνειν τὸν αὐχένα καὶ βλέπειν καὶ | [25] τέρψεισ ἐτέρας ἀνευρεῖν πολὺ βελτίους τῶν σωμα-τικῶν ἡδονῶν ἐκ τῆς περὶ τὸν κόσμον θεωρίας καὶ 165 τῶν ἐν αὐτῷ. μίαν οὖν ὥσπερ ἐκ πενταπόλεως τῶν πέντε αἰσθήσεων τὴν ὄρασιν ἐξαιρέτου γέρως τυχεῖν ἀρμόττον ἦν καὶ φθειρομένων τῶν ἄλλων διαμένειν,

° For the thought cf. Timaeus 47A "whence," i.e. from the knowledge which sight gives us, "we have derived 82

ON ABRAHAM, 161-165

arrive draw the understanding to the observation of what they have seen. And the understanding affected in like manner is not quiescent, but, unsleeping and constantly in motion as it is, takes the sight as the starting-point for its power of observing the things of the mind, and proceeds to investigate whether these phenomena are uncreated or had some beginning of creation, whether they are infinite or finite, whether there is one world or more than one, whether the four elements make up all things, or on the other hand heaven and its contents enjoy a special nature of their own and have been given a substance which differs from the others and is more divine. Further, if the world has been created, who is the Creator? What is His essence and quality? What was His purpose in making it? What does He do now and what is His occupation and way of life? And all the other questions which the curious mind with good sense ever at its side is wont to explore. But these and the like belong to philosophy, whence it is clear that wisdom and philosophy owe their origin to no other of our faculties but to the princess of the senses, sight.<sup>a</sup> And this alone of all the bodily region did God preserve when He destroyed the four, because they were in slavery to flesh and the passions of flesh, while the sight had the strength to stretch its neck upwards, and to look, and to find in the contemplation of the world and its contents pleasures far better than those of the body. It was fitting, then, that the one of the five senses which form, so to speak, a group of five cities, should receive a special privilege and continue to exist when the others were philosophy." A similar adaptation of the same passage was made in De Op. 54, where see note.

PHILO

- ὅτι οὐ περὶ τὰ θνητὰ εἰλεῖται μόνον ὡς ἐκεῖναι, μετανίστασθαι δὲ πρὸς τὰς ἀφθάρτους φύσεις ἀξιοῖ
- 166 χαίρουσα τῇ θεᾷ τούτων. διό και παγκάλως “ μικράν ” τε και “ οὐ μικράν ” τὴν πόλιν ταύτην οἱ χρησμοὶ διασυνιστᾶσιν αἰνιττόμενοι τὴν ὄρασιν· μικρὰ μὲν γὰρ λέγεται εἶναι, διότι βραχὺ μέρος τῶν ἐν ἡμῖν ἐστι, μεγάλη δέ, διότι μεγάλων ἐφίεται τὸν σύμπαντα οὐρανὸν και κόσμον γλιχομένη καταθεάσασθαι.
167. XXXII. Περὶ μὲν οὖν τῆς ἐπιφανείσης ὄψεως και τῶν αἰοιδίμων και παγκάλων ξενίων, ἐν οἷς δοκῶν ἐστιᾶν ὁ ξενοδόχος εἰστιᾶτο, καθ’ ὅσον ἐφικτὸν ἦν, ἀκριβοῦσιν ἡμῖν τὰ περὶ τὸν τόπον δεδηλωται. μεγίστην δὲ πρᾶξιν ἀξίαν ἀκοῆς οὐχ ἡσυχαστέον· ὀλίγου γὰρ δέω φάναι πάσας ὅσαι θεοφιλεῖς ὑπερβάλλει. λεκτέον δὲ τὰ καιρία περὶ
- 168 αὐτῆς. υἱὸς ἐκ τῆς γαμετῆς γίνεται τῷ σοφῷ γνήσιος, ἀγαπητὸς και μόνος, τό τε σῶμα κάλλιστος και τὴν ψυχὴν ἄριστος· ἤδη γὰρ τελειότερας τῆς ἡλικίας ἐξέφαιεν ἀρετάς, ὡς τὸν πατέρα μὴ πάθει μόνον εὐνοίας φυσικῆς ἀλλὰ και γνώμη καθάπερ ἡθῶν δικαστὴν ἰσχυρᾶ τινι κεχρηῆσθαι
- 169 φιλοστοργία. διακειμένῳ δ’ οὕτως ἐξαπιναιῶς θεσπίζεται λόγιον οὐποτ’ ἐλπισθέν, σφαγιαῖσαι τὸν υἱὸν ἐπὶ τινος ὑψηλοτάτου κολωνοῦ πορρωτάτω
- 170 πόλεως ἀποστάντα τριῶν ὁδὸν ἡμερῶν. ὁ δὲ καιτοι

* Gen. xix. 20 πόλις αὕτη ἐγγὺς . . . ἢ ἐστι μικρά. . . . οὐ μικρά ἐστι; R.V. “This city is near . . . and it is a little one. . . . Is it not a little one?” Philo either fails to see that the last three words are a question, or more probably thinks that the grammatical possibility of treating them as a statement is a sufficient ground for extracting an allegorical lesson.

ON ABRAHAM, 165-170

destroyed, because its range is not confined to mortal things, as theirs is, but it aspires to find a new home amid imperishable beings and rejoice in their contemplation. And therefore it is excellently said, 166 when the oracles represent this city first as small and then as not small, figuring thereby sight.<sup>a</sup> For sight is said to be small in that it is a little part of all we contain, but great in that great are its desires, since it is the whole world and heaven which it yearns to survey.

XXXII. <sup>b</sup> I have now told with all the care that lay 167 within my powers the story of the vision which was manifested to Abraham and of that splendid and magnificent exchange of hospitality, where the host who seemed to give the feast was himself the feasted. But his greatest action which deserves reporting must not be passed over in silence. For I might almost say that all the other actions which won the favour of God are surpassed by this; and on this subject I must say what is needed. The wife of the 168 Sage bore to him in full wedlock his only and dearly-cherished son, a child of great bodily beauty and excellence of soul. For already he was showing a perfection of virtues beyond his years, so that his father, moved not merely by a feeling of natural affection but also by such deliberate judgement as a censor of character might make, cherished for him a great tenderness. Such were his feelings when 169 suddenly to his surprise there came a divine message that he should sacrifice his son on a certain lofty hill at a very considerable distance,<sup>c</sup> as much as three days' journey, from the city. He, though devoted to 170

<sup>b</sup> For §§ 167-177 see Gen. xxii. 1-19.

<sup>c</sup> Strictly speaking ἀποστάνα agrees with ἰδόν. Perhaps we should read ἀποστάνος.

PHILO

- ἀλέκτω πόθῳ τοῦ παιδὸς ἐκκρεμάμενος οὔτε τὴν χρόαν μετέβαλεν οὔτε τὴν ψυχὴν ἐγνάμφθη, γνώμη δ' ἀνευδότω καὶ ἀρρεπεὶ διέμεινεν ἀκλινῆς, οἷος καὶ πρόσθεν ἦν· ἔρωτι δὲ θείῳ δεδαμασμένος ἀνὰ κράτος ἐνίκα πάντα ὅσα συγγενείας ὀνόματα καὶ φίλτρα καὶ μηδενὶ τῶν ἔνδον ἐξειπῶν τὸ λόγιον, ἐκ πολυ-ανθρώπου θεραπείας οἰκετῶν δύο μόνους τοὺς πρεσβυτάτους καὶ μάλιστα φιλοδεσπότες παραλαβὼν, ὡς ἔνεκά τινος ἱεουργίας τῶν ἐν ἔθει τέταρτος
- 171 ἐξήκει σὺν τῷ παιδί. τὸν δὲ προσταχθέντα χῶρον ὡσπερ ἀπὸ σκοπιᾶς ἰδὼν ἐκ μακροῦ τοῖς μὲν θεράπουσι κελεύει καταμένειν, τῷ δὲ παιδί πῦρ καὶ ξύλα δίδωσι κομίζειν, αὐτὸ δικαίως τὸ ἱερεῖον τὰ πρὸς τὴν θυσίαν ἐπηχθίσθαι, κουφότατον βάρος·
- 172 οὐδὲν γὰρ εὐσεβείας ἀπονώτερον. βαδίζοντες δ' ἰσοταχῶς οὐ τοῖς σώμασι μᾶλλον ἢ ταῖς διανοίαις [26] ὁδὸν τὴν ἐπίτομον, ἧς ὁσιότης τὸ τέλος, ἐπὶ τὸν |
- 173 προσταχθέντα τόπον ἀφικνοῦνται. κᾶπειθ' ὁ μὲν πατὴρ συνεκόμιζε λίθους, ἵνα δείμαιο βωμόν, ὁ δὲ υἱὸς τὰ μὲν ἄλλα ὄρων ὅσα πρὸς ἱεουργίαν εὐτρεπῆ, ζῶον δὲ μηδέν, ἀπιδὼν εἰς τὸν πατέρα “ ἰδοὺ τὸ πῦρ ” ἔφη “ καὶ τὰ ξύλα, πάτερ, ποῦ τὸ ἱερεῖον; ”
- 174 ἕτερος μὲν οὖν ἅ δρᾶν ἔμελλεν εἰδὼς καὶ τῇ ψυχῇ συσκιάζων ὑπὸ τοῦ λεχθέντος κἂν συνεχύθη καὶ δακρύων πληρωθεὶς ἔμφασιν τοῦ γενησομένου παρ-
- 175 ἔσχεν ἐκ τῆς περιπαθήσεως ἡσυχάζων. ὁ δ' οὐδεμίαν ἐνδεξάμενος τροπὴν οὔτε κατὰ τὸ σῶμα οὔτε κατὰ τὴν διάνοιαν σταθερῶ μὲν τῷ βλέμματι σταθερῶ δὲ τῷ λογισμῷ φησι πρὸς τὴν πεῦσιν ἀποκρινόμενος· “ ὦ τέκνον, ὁ θεὸς ὄψεται ἱερεῖον

<sup>a</sup> Literally “ the names and love-charms of kinship.”

<sup>b</sup> In Genesis Isaac does not carry the fire.

ON ABRAHAM, 170-175

his son with a fondness which no words can express, shewed no change of colour nor weakening of soul, but remained steadfast as ever with a judgement that never bent nor wavered. Mastered by his love for God, he mightily overcame all the fascination expressed in the fond terms of family affection,<sup>a</sup> and told the divine call to none of his household, but taking out of his numerous following two only, the oldest and most loyal, he went forth with his son, four in all, as though to perform one of the ordinary rites. But, when, like 171 a scout on some commanding point, he saw the appointed place afar off, he bade his servants stay there, but gave his son the fire <sup>b</sup> and wood to carry; for he thought it good that the victim himself should bear the load of the instruments of sacrifice, a light burden indeed, for nothing is less toilsome than piety. They walked with equal speed of mind rather 172 than body along the short straight road at the end of which is holiness and came to the appointed place.<sup>c</sup> And then, while the father was collecting stones to 173 build the altar, the son, seeing everything else ready for sacrifice but no animal, looked at his father and said: "My father, behold the fire and the wood, but where is the victim?" To anyone else who 174 knew what he was about to do, and was hiding it in his heart, these words would have brought confusion and tearfulness and he would have remained silent through extreme emotion, and thus given an indication of what was going to happen. But Abraham 175 admitted no swerving of body or mind, and with visage and thought alike unmoved he said in answer to the question, "Child, God will provide Himself a <sup>c</sup> LXX Gen. xxii. 8 καὶ ἐπορεύθησαν οἱ δύο ἄμα. Philo has gained from this phrase a fuller spiritual lesson in De Mig. 166 f.

PHILO

- ἑαυτῷ καὶ ἐν ἐρημίᾳ πολλῇ, δι' ἣν ἴσως ἀπογινώσκεις εὐρεθήσεσθαι· πάντα δ' ἴσθι θεῶν δυνατὰ καὶ ὅσα ἐν ἀμηχάνῳ καὶ ἀπόρῳ κεῖται παρ' ἀνθρώ-176 ποις." καὶ ταῦθ' ἅμα λέγων ἦ τάχιστα τὸν υἱὸν ἕξαρπάσας ἐπιτίθησι τῷ βωμῷ καὶ σπασάμενος τῇ δεξιᾷ τὸ ξίφος ἐπέφερεν ὡς ἀναιρήσων· φθάνει δ' ὁ σωτήρ θεὸς ἀπ' αἴρος φωνῇ μεσολαβήσας τὸ ἔργον, ἧ προσέταττεν ἀνέχειν καὶ μὴ ψαῦσαι τοῦ παιδός, ὀνομαστὶ καλέσας δις τὸν πατέρα, ἵν' 177 ἐπιστρέψας καὶ ἀντισπάσας διακωλύσῃ τὴν σφαγὴν ἐργάσασθαι. XXXIII. καὶ ὁ μὲν διασώζεται, τὸ δῶρον ἀντιχαρισαμένου τοῦ θεοῦ καὶ τὸν φέροντα ἐν οἷς εὐσεβεῖτο ἀντιτιμήσαντος· τῷ δ' ἤδη καὶ ἡ πρᾶξις, εἰ καὶ μὴ τὸ τέλος ἐπηκολούθησεν, ὀλόκληρος καὶ παντελής οὐ μόνον ἐν ταῖς ἱεραῖς βίβλοις ἀλλὰ καὶ ἐν ταῖς τῶν ἀναγνωσκόντων διανοίαις ἀνάγραπτος ἐστηλίτευται.
- 178 Ἄλλὰ τοῖς φιλαπεχθήμοσι καὶ πάντα διαβάλλου-λουσιν, οἱ ψόγον πρὸ ἐπαίνου τιμᾶν ἐθίζονται, τὸ πραχθὲν ἔργον οὐ δοκεῖ μέγα καὶ θαυμαστόν, ὡς 179 ἡμεῖς ὑπολαμβάνομεν εἶναι. πολλοὺς γὰρ καὶ ἄλλους φασὶ τῶν πάνυ φιλοικείων καὶ φιλοτέκνων ἐπιδουναὶ τοὺς ἑαυτῶν παῖδας, τοὺς μὲν ὑπὲρ πατρίδων σφαγιασθησομένους, λυτήρια ἢ πολέμων ἢ αὐχμῶν ἢ ἐπομβρίας ἢ νοσημάτων λοιμικῶν γενησομένους, τοὺς δ' ὑπὲρ νενομισμένης εὐσεβείας, εἰ 180 καὶ μὴ πρὸς ἀλήθειαν οὔσης· Ἑλλήνων μὲν γε τοὺς δοκιμωτάτους, οὐκ ἰδιώτας μόνον ἀλλὰ καὶ βασιλείς, ὀλίγα φροντίσαντας ὧν ἐγέννησαν διὰ τῆς τούτων ἀναιρέσεως δυνάμεις στρατευμάτων μεγάλας καὶ πολυανθρώπους ἐν μὲν τῇ συμμαχίᾳ τεταγ-

ON ABRAHAM, 175-180

victim, even in this wide desert, which perhaps makes you give up hope of finding it ; but know that to God all things are possible, including those that are impossible or insuperable to men." And, as he said 176 this, he hastily seized his son, laid him on the altar and with his drawn knife in his right hand was preparing with it to deal the death blow. But ere he did so, God the Saviour stopped the deed half-way with a voice from the air, in which He ordered him to stay and not touch the lad. And twice He called the father by name to turn him and draw him back from his purpose and thus prevent his carrying out the slaughter. XXXIII. So Isaac was saved, since 177 God returned the gift of him and used the offering which piety rendered to Him to repay the offerer, while for Abraham the action, though not followed by the intended ending, was complete and perfect, and the record of it as such stands graven not only in the sacred books but in the minds of the readers.

But quarrelsome critics who misconstrue every- 178 thing and have a way of valuing censure above praise do not think Abraham's action great or wonderful, as we suppose it to be. They say that many other 179 persons, full of love for their kinsfolk and offspring, have given their children, some to be sacrificed for their country to serve as a price to redeem it from wars or drought or excessive rainfall or pestilence, others for the sake of what was held to be piety though it is not really so. Indeed they say that 180 among the Greeks men of the highest reputation, not only private individuals but kings, have with little thought of their offspring put them to death, and thereby saved armed forces of great strength and magnitude when enlisted as their allies, and

PHILO

- μένας διασῶσαι, ἐν δὲ τῇ μερίδι τῶν ἐχθρῶν αὐτο-181 βοεὶ διαφθεῖραι· βαρβαρικὰ δὲ ἔθνη μέχρι πολλοῦ παιδοκτονίαν ὡς ὄσιον ἔργον καὶ θεοφιλὲς προσέσθαι, ὧν μεμνήσθαι τοῦ ἄγους καὶ τὸν ἱερώτατον Μωυσῆν· αἰτιώμενος γὰρ αὐτοὺς τοῦ μιάσματος 182 φάσκει, ὅτι “ τοὺς υἱοὺς αὐτῶν καὶ τὰς θυγατέρας [27] κατακαίουσι τοῖς θεοῖς αὐτῶν”. Ἰνδῶν δὲ | τοὺς γυμνοσοφιστὰς ἄχρι νῦν, ἐπειδὴν ἀρχηται καταλαμ-βάνειν ἢ μακρὰ καὶ ἀνίατος νόσος, τὸ γῆρας, πρὶν βεβαίως κρατηθῆναι, πυρὰν νήσαντας ἑαυτοὺς ἐμπιπράναι, δυναμένους ἔτι πρὸς πολυετίαν ἴσως ἀντισχεῖν· ἤδη δὲ καὶ γύναια προαποθανόντων ἀνδρῶν ὀρμησαὶ γεγηθότα πρὸς τὴν αὐτὴν πυρὰν καὶ ζῶντα τοῖς ἐκείνων σώμασιν ὑπομεῖναι συγ-183 καταφλεχθῆναι· ταῦτα μὲν εἰκότως ἂν τις τῆς εὐτολμίας θαυμάσειεν ἐκ πολλοῦ τοῦ περιόντος καταφρονητικῶς ἔχοντα θανάτου καὶ ὡς ἐπ’ ἀθανασίαν αὐτὸν ἰέμενα καὶ ἀπνευστὶ θέοντα· XXXIV. τὸν δὲ τί προσῆκεν ἐπαινεῖν ὡς ἐγχειρητὴν κεκαιουργημένης πράξεως, ἣν καὶ ἰδιῶται καὶ βασιλεῖς καὶ ὅλα ἔθνη δρῶσιν ἐν καιροῖς; 184 ἐγὼ δὲ πρὸς τὴν τούτων βασκανίαν καὶ πικρίαν ἐκεῖνα λέξω· τῶν καταθρόντων παῖδας οἱ μὲν ἔθει τοῦτο δρῶσιν, ὥσπερ ἐνίουσ ἔφασκον τῶν βαρβάρων, οἱ δὲ δι’ ἀβουλήτους καὶ μεγάλας ὑποθέσεις πόλεων τε καὶ χωρῶν ἐτέρως κατορθοῦσθαι μὴ δυναμένων, ὧν οἱ μὲν ἀνάγκη τοὺς αὐτῶν ἐπι-

---

* Philo may be thinking of Iphigeneia and Macaria in Euripides' Heracleidae, though neither exactly fits the circumstances.

<sup>b</sup> Deut. xii. 31.

ON ABRAHAM, 180-184

destroyed them without striking a blow when arrayed as enemies.<sup>a</sup> Barbarian nations, they add, have for 181 long admitted child sacrifice as a holy deed and acceptable to God, and this practice of theirs is mentioned by the holy Moses as an abomination, for, charging them with this pollution, he says that "they burn their sons and daughters to their gods."<sup>b</sup> Again they point out that in India the gymno- 182 sophists even now when the long incurable disease of old age begins to take hold of them, even before they are completely in its clutches, make up a funeral pile and burn themselves on it, though they might possibly last out many years more. And the womenfolk when the husbands die before them have been known to hasten rejoicing to share their pyre, and allow themselves to be burned alive with the corpses of the men.<sup>c</sup> These women might reasonably, 183 no doubt, be praised for their courage, so great and more than great is their contempt for death, and the breathless eagerness with which they rush to it as though it were immortality. XXXIV. Why, then, they ask, should we praise Abraham, as though the deed which he undertook was unprecedented, when private individuals and kings and whole nations do it when occasion calls? To their 184 malignity and bitterness I reply as follows. Some of those who sacrifice their children follow custom in so doing, as was the case according to the critics with some of the barbarians. Others have important and painful reasons for their action because their cities and countries cannot but fail otherwise. These give their children partly under compulsion and the

<sup>a</sup> For Philo's knowledge of the Indian custom see App. p. 598.

PHILO

διδόασιν ὑπὸ δυνατωτέρων βιασθέντες, οἱ δὲ δόξης καὶ τιμῆς ἐφιέμενοι καὶ εὐκλείας μὲν τῆς ἐν τῷ 185 παρόντι, εὐφημίας δὲ τῆς εἰς ὕστερον. οἱ μὲν οὖν ἔθει σφαγιάζοντες οὐδὲν ὡς ἔοικε μέγα δρῶσιν· ἐγχρονίζον γὰρ ἔθος ἐξισοῦται φύσει πολλάκις, ὡς καὶ τὰ δυσυπομόνητα καὶ δυσκαρτέρητα ῥαδίως ἐπελαφρίζειν, τὰς ὑπερβολὰς τῶν φοβερῶν ἐξευ-186 μαρίζον. τῶν δ' ἕνεκα δέους ἐπιδιδόντων ἔπαινος οὐδεὶς· ὁ γὰρ ἔπαινος ἐν ἔκουσίοις κατορθώμασι γράφεται, τὰ δ' ἀβούλητα ἑτέροις ἀνάκειται πράγμασι, ἢ καιροῖς ἢ τύχαις ἢ ταῖς ἀπ' ἀνθρώπων 187 ἀνάγκαις. εἰ δέ τις δόξης ὀρεγόμενος υἴὸν ἢ θυγατέρα προΐεται, ψέγοιτ' ἂν ἐνδίκως μᾶλλον ἢ ἐπαινοῖτο, θανάτῳ τῶν φιλάτων ὠνούμενος τιμῆν, ἣν καὶ κεκτημένος ὠφείλειν ὑπὲρ σωτηρίας τῶν 188 τέκνων ἀπορρίπτειν. ἐρευνητέον οὖν, εἰ ὑπὸ τίνος τῶν λεχθέντων ἠττηθεὶς ἐκεῖνος ἔμελλε σφαγιάζειν τὸν υἴον, ἔθους ἢ τιμῆς ἢ δέους. ἔθος μὲν οὖν τὸ ἐπὶ παιδοκτονίᾳ Βαβυλῶν καὶ Μεσοποταμίας καὶ τὸ Χαλδαίων ἔθνος οὐ παραδέχεται, ἐν οἷς ἐτράφη καὶ ἐπεβίωσε τὸν πλείονα χρόνον, ὡς τῇ συνεχείᾳ τῶν δρωμένων ἀμβλυτέραις ταῖς τῶν δει-189 νῶν φαντασίαις κεκρατῆσθαι<sup>1</sup> δοκεῖν. καὶ μὴν οὐδὲ φόβος τις ἦν ἀπ' ἀνθρώπων—οὐδὲ γὰρ τὸ χρησθὲν αὐτῷ μόνῳ λόγιον ἦδει τις—, οὐδέ τις συμφορὰ κοινῇ κατέληφεν, ἣς ἔδει τὴν θεραπείαν ἀναιρέσει 190 γενέσθαι τοῦ δοκιμωτάτου παιδός. ἀλλὰ θηρώ-[28] μενος | ἔπαινον τῶν πολλῶν ἐπὶ τὴν πρᾶξιν ὤρμησε;

<sup>1</sup> Perhaps, as Mangey suggests, κεχρησθαι.

ON ABRAHAM, 184-190

pressure of higher powers, partly through desire for glory and honour, to win fame at the time and a good name in the future. Now those who are led 185 by custom to make the sacrifice would not seem to be doing anything great, for long-standing custom often becomes equal to nature, so that in matters where patience and resolution are difficult to attain it gives ease and relief by reducing their terrors to moderate dimensions. Where the gift is made 186 through fear no praise is due, for praise is recorded for voluntary good deeds, while for those which are involuntary other things are responsible, favourable occasions, chances or force brought to bear by men. And if anyone throws away a son or a daughter 187 through desire for glory he will be justly blamed rather than praised, for with the life of his dearest he is purchasing an honour which he ought to cast aside, if he possessed it, to ensure the safety of his children. We must therefore examine 188 whether Abraham, when he intended to sacrifice his son, was mastered by any of these motives, custom or love of honour or fear. Now in Babylonia and Mesopotamia and with the nation of the Chaldeans with whom he was brought up and lived the greater part of his life the custom of child slaughter does not obtain, so as to suggest that his realization of its horrors was rendered less powerful by the regularity of such a practice. Surely, too, he had nothing to 189 fear from man, since no one knew of the oracular message which he alone had received ; nor was he under the pressure of any public misfortune which could be remedied only by the immolation of a child of special worth. Or was the quest of praise from the 190 multitude the motive which urged him to the deed ?

PHILO

- καὶ τίς ἔπαινος ἐν ἐρημίᾳ, μηδενὸς τοῦ μέλλοντος ἐπευφημήσειν παρόντος, ἀλλὰ καὶ τῶν δυεῖν οἰκετῶν μακρὰν ἐπίτηδες ἀπολειφθέντων, ἵνα μὴ ἐγκαλλωπίξασθαι καὶ ἐνεπιδείκνυσθαι δοκῇ μάρτυρας
- 191 ἐπαγόμενος ὧν εὐσέβει; XXXV. στόμασιν οὖν ἀχαλίνοις καὶ κακηγόροις θύρας ἐπιθέντες μετρια-ζέτωσαν τὸν ἐν αὐτοῖς μισόκαλον φθόνον καὶ ἀρετὰς ἀνδρῶν εὖ βεβιωκότων μὴ σινέσθωσαν, ἃς ἀρμόττον ἦν εὐφημίᾳ συνεπικοσμεῖν.
- ὅτι δὲ τῷ ὄντι ἐπαινετὴ καὶ ἀξιέραστος ἡ πράξις, ἐκ
- 192 πολλῶν εὐμαρὲς ἰδεῖν. πρῶτον μὲν τοίνυν τὸ πείθεσθαι θεῷ παρὰ πᾶσι τοῖς εὖ φρονούσι σεμνὸν καὶ περιμάχητον εἶναι νομιζόμενον ἐν τοῖς μάλιστα ἐπετήδευεν, ὡς μηδενὸς πώποτε τῶν προστεταγ-μένων ἀλογησαί, ἄνευ δυσκολίας καὶ ἀηδίας, κἂν πόνων τε καὶ ἀλγηδόνων μεστὸν ἦ· παρὸ καὶ τὸ χρησθὲν ἐπὶ τῷ νιῷ γενναιότατα καὶ στερρότατα
- 193 ἤνεγκεν. ἔπειτ' οὐκ ὄντος ἔθους ἐν τῇ χώρᾳ, καθάπερ ἴσως παρ' ἐνίοις ἐστίν, ἀνθρωποθυτεῖν, ὃ τῇ συνεχείᾳ τὰς τῶν δεινῶν φαντασίας εἴωθεν ἐκλύειν, αὐτὸς ἔμελλε πρῶτος ἄρχεσθαι καινοτάτου καὶ παρηλλαγμένου πράγματος, ὃ μοι δοκεῖ μηδεὶς ἂν ὑπομείναι, καὶ εἰ σιδήρου τὴν ψυχὴν ἢ ἀδάμαντος κατεσκευάσσο· “ φύσει ” γὰρ ὡς εἶπέ τις “ ἔργον
- 194 μάχεσθαι.” γνήσιόν τε υἷὸν πεποιημένος μόνον τοῦτον εὐθύς εἶχε καὶ τὸ πάθος ἐπ' αὐτῷ τῆς εὐ-νοίας γνήσιον, ὑπερβάλλον τοὺς σῶφρονας ἔρωτας
- 195 καὶ τὰς φιλίας, ὅσαι δι' ὀνόματος γεγόνασι. προσῆν

ON ABRAHAM, 190-195

What praise could there be in a solitude where no one was present to report his fame afterwards, but even the two servants had been purposely left afar off lest he should appear to be making a boastful parade by bringing witnesses to his pious conduct? XXXV. Let them, therefore, set bolt and bar to 191 their unbridled evil-speaking mouths, control their envy and hatred of excellence and not mar the virtues of men who have lived a good life, virtues which they should rather help to glorify by their good report. That the deed really deserves our praise and love can easily be seen in many ways. First, 192 then, he made a special practice of obedience to God, a duty which every right-minded person holds to be worthy of all respect and effort. Hitherto he had not neglected any of God's commands, nor ever met them with repining or discontent, however charged with toils and pains they might be, and therefore he bore the sentence pronounced on his son with all nobleness and firmness. Secondly, since 193 human sacrifice was not in that country, as it was perhaps in some, sanctioned by custom which is so apt through constant repetition to weaken the realization of the terrible, he would have been the first himself to initiate a totally new and extraordinary procedure, and this, to my mind, is a thing which no one could have brought himself to do even if his soul had been made of iron or adamant, for, as it has been said, it is hard work to fight against nature. And, 194 as he had begotten no son in the truest sense but Isaac, his feeling of affection for him was necessarily on the same high level of truth, higher even than the chaste forms of love and also the much talked-of ties of friendship. Further, he had a most potent 195

PHILO

δέ τι καὶ βιαστικώτατον φίλτρον, τὸ μὴ καθ' ἡλικίαν ἀλλ' ἐν γήρα γεγεννηκέναι τὸν παῖδα· τοῖς γὰρ ὀψιγόνοις ἐπιμεμήνασί πως οἱ τοκεῖς, ἢ τῷ μακρὸν ἐπιποθῆσαι χρόνον τὴν γένεσιν αὐτῶν ἢ τῷ μηκέθ' ἐτέρους ἐλπίζειν ἔσεσθαι, τῆς φύσεως ἐνταῦθα ἰσταμένης ὡς ἐπὶ τελευταῖον καὶ ὕστατον

196 ὄρον. ἐκ πολυπαιδίας μὲν οὖν ἓνα προέσθαι θεῷ καθάπερ ἀπαρχὴν τινα τέκνων παράδοξον οὐδέν, ἔχοντα τὰς ἐπὶ τοῖς ζῶσιν ἡδονὰς οὐ μικρὰ παραμύθια καὶ μειλίγματα τῆς ἐπὶ τῷ σφαγιασθέντι λύπης· ὃν δὲ μόνον τις ἔσχεν ἀγαπητὸν διδούς λόγου παντὸς μείζον ἔργον διαπράττεται, μηδὲν οἰκειότητι χαριζόμενος, ἀλλ' ὅλη τῇ ῥοπῇ πρὸς τὸ θεοφιλές

197 ταλαντεύων. ἐκεῖνο μὲν δὴ ἐξάαιρετον καὶ μόνῳ σχεδόν τι τούτῳ πεπραγμένον· οἱ μὲν γὰρ ἄλλοι, κἂν ὑπὲρ σωτηρίας πατρίδων ἢ στρατευμάτων ἐπιδιδῶσι σφαγιασθησομένους τοὺς ἑαυτῶν, ἢ οἴκοι καταμένουσιν ἢ μακρὰν ἀφίστανται τῶν βωμῶν ἢ, κἂν παρατυγχάνωσι, τὰς ὀψεις ἀποστρέφονται θεά-

198 σασθαι μὴ ὑπομένοντες, ἄλλων ἀναιρούντων· ὁ δ' [29] ὥσπερ ἱερεὺς | αὐτὸς κατήρχετο τῆς ἱερουργίας, ἐφ' οὗ τὰ πάντα ἀρίστῳ φιλοστοργότατος πατὴρ· ἐμέλισε δ' ἂν ἴσως καὶ νόμῳ τῶν ὀλοκαυτωμάτων κατὰ μέλη τὸν υἱὸν ἱερουργῶν. οὕτως οὐ τὸ μὲν τι μέρος ἀπέκλιε πρὸς τὸν παῖδα, τὸ δέ τι πρὸς εὐσέβειαν, ἀλλ' ὅλην τὴν ψυχὴν δι' ὅλων ὀσιότητι προσεκλήρωσεν ὀλίγα φροντίσας συγγενικοῦ αἵ-

199 ματος. τί δὴ τῶν εἰρημένων πρὸς ἐτέρους κοινόν; τί δ' οὐκ ἐξάαιρετον καὶ παντὸς λόγου κρεῖττον;

ON ABRAHAM, 195-199

incentive to love in that he had begotten the boy in his old age and not in his years of vigour. For parents somehow dote on their late-born children, either because they have longed for their birth for so many years or because they do not hope to have any more, since nature comes to a halt at this point as its final and furthestmost boundary. For a father 196 to surrender one of a numerous family as a tithe to God is nothing extraordinary, since each of the survivors continues to give him pleasure, and this is no small solace and mitigation of his grief for the one who has been sacrificed. But one who gives his only darling son performs an action for which no language is adequate, since he concedes nothing to the tie of relationship, but his whole weight is thrown into the scale on the side of acceptability with God. The following point is exceptional, and his conduct 197 in it is practically unique. Other fathers, even if they give their children to be sacrificed for the safety of their country or armies, either stay at home or stand far away from the altars, or, if they are present, turn away their eyes, since they cannot bear the sight, and leave others to kill the victim. But here 198 we have the most affectionate of fathers himself beginning the sacrificial rite as priest with the very best of sons for victim. Perhaps too, following the law of burnt offering, he would have dismembered his son and offered him limb by limb. Thus we see that he did not incline partly to the boy and partly to piety, but devoted his whole soul through and through to holiness and disregarded the claims of their common blood. Which of all the points men- 199 tioned is shared by others? Which does not stand by itself and defy description? Thus everyone who ὡς τόν γε μὴ φύσει βάσκανον καὶ φιλοπόνηρον καταπλαγῆναι καὶ θαυμάσαι τῆς περιττῆς ἄγαν εὐσεβείας, οὐχ ἅπαντα ὅσα εἶπον ἀθρόα εἰς νοῦν βαλλόμενον, ἀλλὰ κἄν ἐν τι τῶν πάντων· ἰκανὴ γὰρ καὶ ἡ ἐνὸς φαντασία τύπῳ τινὶ βραχεῖ—βραχὺ δ' οὐδὲν ἔργον σοφοῦ—μέγεθος ψυχῆς καὶ ὕψος ἐμφῆναι.

PHILO

- 200 XXXVI. Ἄλλα γὰρ οὐκ ἐπὶ τῆς ῥητῆς καὶ φανεράς ἀποδόσεως ἴσταται τὰ λεχθέντα, φύσιν δὲ τοῖς πολλοῖς ἀδηλοτέραν ἔοικε παρεμφαίνειν, ἣν οἱ τὰ νοητὰ πρὸ τῶν αἰσθητῶν ἀποδεχόμενοι καὶ ὄρᾶν 201 δυνάμενοι γνωρίζουσιν. ἔστι δὲ τοιάδε· ὁ μελλήσας σφαγιάζεσθαι καλεῖται Χαλδαῖστί μὲν Ἰσαάκ, Ἑλληνιστί δὲ μεταληφθέντος τοῦ ὀνόματος “ γέλως ”· γέλως δ' οὐχ ὁ κατὰ παιδιὰν ἐγγινόμενος σώματι παραλαμβάνεται τὰ νῦν, ἀλλ' ἡ κατὰ 202 διάνοιαν εὐπάθεια καὶ χαρά. ταύτην ὁ σοφὸς ἱερουργεῖν λέγεται δεόντως θεῷ διὰ συμβόλου παριστάς, ὅτι τὸ χαίρειν μόνῳ θεῷ οἰκειότατόν ἐστιν· ἐπίλυπον μὲν γὰρ τὸ ἀνθρώπινον γένος καὶ περιδεές, ἢ παρόντων κακῶν ἢ προσδοκωμένων, ὡς ἢ ἐπὶ τοῖς ἐν χερσὶν ἀβουλήτοις ἀνιᾶσθαι ἢ ἐπὶ τοῖς μέλλουσι ταραχῇ καὶ φόβῳ κραδαίνεσθαι· ἄλυπος δὲ καὶ ἄφοβος καὶ παντὸς πάθους ἀμέτοχος ἡ τοῦ θεοῦ φύσις εὐδαιμονίας καὶ μακαριότητος παντελοῦς 203 μόνῃ μετέχουσα. τῷ δὴ τὴν ἀληθῆ ταύτην ὁμολογίαν ὠμολογηκότι τρόπῳ χρηστὸς ὢν καὶ φιλόανθρωπος ὁ θεός, φθόνον ἐληλακῶς ἀφ' ἑαυτοῦ, προσηκόντως ἀντιχαρίζεται τὸ δῶρον, καθ' ὅσον ἔχει δυνάμειος ὁ ληψόμενος, καὶ μόνον οὐ ταῦτα θεσπίζει <sup>a</sup> In the strict Stoic sense of the word, for reasonable forms of πάθος. See note on De Mut. 1 and references there given.

ON ABRAHAM, 199-203

is not malignant or a lover of evil must be overwhelmed with admiration for his extraordinary piety ; and he need not take into consideration at once all the points which I have mentioned, for any single one of them would be enough. For to picture in the mind one of these, however small the form which the picture takes, though no action of the Sage is small, is enough to show the greatness and loftiness of his soul.

XXXVI. But the story here told is not confined to 200 the literal and obvious explanation, but seems to have in it the elements of a further suggestion, obscure to the many but recognized by those who prefer the mental to the sensible and have the power to see it. It is as follows. The proposed victim is 201 called in Chaldaean Isaac, but, if the word is translated into our language, Laughter. But the laughter here understood is not the laughter which amusement arouses in the body, but the good emotion<sup>a</sup> of the understanding, that is joy. This the Sage is 202 said to sacrifice as his duty to God, thus showing in a figure that rejoicing is most closely associated with God alone. For mankind is subject to grief and very fearful of evils either present or expected, so that men are either distressed by disagreeables close at hand or are agitated by troublous fear of those which are still to come. But the nature of God is without grief or fear and wholly exempt from passion of any kind, and alone partakes of perfect happiness and bliss. The frame of mind which has made this true 203 acknowledgement God, Who has banished jealousy from His presence in His kindness and love for mankind, fitly rewards by returning the gift in so far as the recipient's capacity allows. And indeed we may

PHILO

204 λέγων· “ τὸ μὲν τῆς χαρᾶς γένος καὶ τὸ χαίρειν ὅτι οὐκ ἔστιν ἑτέρου πλὴν ἐμοῦ τοῦ πατρὸς τῶν ὄλων κτῆμα, σαφῶς οἶδα, κεκτημένος δ’ ὅμως οὐ φθονῶ τοῖς ἀξίοις χρῆσθαι· ἄξιός δὲ τίς ἂν εἴη, πλὴν εἴ τις ἐμοὶ καὶ τοῖς ἐμοῖς βουλήμασιν ἔποιτο; τούτῳ γὰρ ἤκιστα μὲν ἀνιάσθαι ἤκιστα δὲ φοβεῖσθαι συμβήσεται πορευομένῳ ταύτην τὴν ὁδόν, ἢ πάθεισι μὲν καὶ κακίαις ἐστὶν ἄβατος, εὐπαθείαις δὲ καὶ ἀρεταῖς 205 ἐμπεριπατεῖται.” μηδεὶς δ’ ὑπολαβέτω τὴν ἄκρατον καὶ ἀμιγῆ λύπης χαρὰν ἀπ’ οὐρανοῦ

[30] καταβαίνειν ἐπὶ τὴν γῆν, ἀλλὰ | κέκραται<sup>1</sup> ἐξ ἀμφοῖν, περιττεύοντος τοῦ κρείττονος· ὄνπερ τρόπον καὶ τὸ φῶς ἐν οὐρανῷ μὲν ἄκρατον καὶ ἀμιγῆ σκοτόους ἐστίν, ἐν δὲ τοῖς ὑπὸ σελήνην ἀέρι ζοφερῷ κεκρα-

206 μένον φαίνεται. ταύτης ἔνεκα τῆς αἰτίας δοκεῖ μοι καὶ πρότερον γελάσασα ἢ ἀρετῆς ἐπώνυμος Σάρρα πρὸς τὸν πυνθανόμενον ἀρνήσασθαι τὸν γέλωτα, καταδείσασα μὴ ποτε ἄρα τὸ χαίρειν οὐδενὸς ὄν γενητοῦ, μόνου δὲ τοῦ θεοῦ, σφετερίζεται· διόπερ θαρσύνων αὐτὴν ὁ ἱερὸς λόγος φησί· μηδὲν εὐλαβη-

207 θῆς, ὄντως ἐγέλασας καὶ μέτεστί σοι χαρᾶς. οὐ γὰρ εἶασεν ὁ πατὴρ τῶν ἀνθρώπων τὸ γένος λύπαις καὶ ὀδύναις καὶ ἄχθεσιν ἀνιάτοις ἐμφέρεσθαι, παρ-ἐμίξε δὲ καὶ τῆς ἀμείνονος φύσεως, εὐδιάσαι καὶ γαληνιάσαι ποτέ τὴν ψυχὴν δικαιώσας· τὴν δὲ τῶν <sup>1</sup> MSS. ἀλλ’ ἐγκέκραται or ἀλλὰ κρέμαται et alia. Perhaps ἀλλὰ κρᾶμά τι.

<sup>a</sup> Gen. xviii. 12 and 15. Sarah’s laughter has been explained in the obvious way in § 112. Here we have a more 100

ON ABRAHAM, 204-207

almost hear His voice saying : " All joy and rejoicing 204 I know well is the possession of none other save Me alone, the Father of All. Yet I do not grudge that this My possession should be used by such as are worthy, and who should be worthy save one who should follow Me and My will, for he will prove to be most exempt from distress and fear if he travels by this road which passion and vice cannot tread, but good feelings and virtue can walk therein."

But let no one suppose that joy de- 205 scends from heaven to earth pure and free from any mixture of grief. No, it is a mixture of both, though the better element is the stronger, just as light too in heaven is pure from any mixture of darkness but in regions below the moon is clearly mixed with dusky air. This was the reason, I think, why Sarah 206 who bears the name of virtue first laughs, and then, in reply to her questioner, denies the laughter.<sup>a</sup> She feared lest she should be grasping for herself the joy which belongs not to created being but to God alone. Therefore, the holy word bids her be of good cheer and says : " Be not afraid : thou didst indeed laugh and dost participate in joy." For the 207 Father did not suffer the whole course of the human race to move amid griefs and pains and burdens which admit no remedy, but mixed with them something of the better nature and judged it well that the soul should at times dwell in sunshine and calm ; and as spiritual interpretation. That the laughter signified joy, not incredulity, has already been suggested in Leg. All. iii. 217 f. and De Mut. 166. In neither of these places, however, has the subsequent denial been dealt with. The interpretation here suggested that the soul begins to doubt whether joy is not more than humanity can expect appears again in Spec.

Leg. ii. 54.

PHILO

- σοφῶν καὶ τὸν πλείω χρόνον τοῦ βίου γήθειν καὶ εὐφραίνεσθαι τοῖς τοῦ κόσμου θεωρήμασιν ἐβουλήθη.
- 208 XXXVII. Τοσαῦτα μὲν περὶ τῆς τοῦ ἀνδρὸς εὐσεβείας, εἰ καὶ πολλῶν ἄλλων ἐστὶν ἀφθονία, λελέχθω. διερευνητέον δὲ καὶ τὴν πρὸς ἀνθρώπους αὐτοῦ δεξιότητα· τῆς γὰρ αὐτῆς φύσεώς ἐστιν εὐσεβῆ τε εἶναι καὶ φιλόανθρωπον, καὶ περὶ τὸν αὐτὸν ἐκάτερον, ὁσιότης μὲν πρὸς θεόν, δικαιοσύνη δὲ πρὸς ἀνθρώπους, θεωρεῖται. πάντα μὲν οὖν τὰ πεπραγμένα μακρὸν ἂν εἴη διεξιέναι, δυεῖν δὲ ἡ
- 209 τριῶν οὐκ ἄτοπον ἐπιμνησθῆναι. πολυάργυρος καὶ πολύχρυσος ἐν τοῖς μάλιστα ὧν καὶ θρεμμάτων πολυζώους ἔχων ἀγέλας καὶ τῶν ἐγχωρίων καὶ αὐτοχθόνων τοῖς ἱκανὰ κεκτημένοις ἐν τῷ περιουσιάζειν ἀμιλλώμενος καὶ πλουσιώτερος γεγωνῶς ἢ κατὰ μέτοικον ὑπ' οὐδενὸς ἐμέμφθη τῶν ὑποδεξαμένων, ἀλλ' ὑπὸ πάντων τῶν εἰς πείραν ἐλθόντων
- 210 ἐπαινούμενος διετελέσεν. εἰ δὲ καὶ τις, οἷα φιλεῖ πολλάκις, ἐκ θεραπόντων καὶ τῶν συνδιατριβόντων ἄμιλλα καὶ διαφορὰ πρὸς ἑτέρους ἐγένετο, ταύτην ἐπειράτο διαλύειν ἡσυχῇ βαρυτέρῳ ἢθει τὰ φιλόνευκα καὶ ταραχώδη καὶ στασιαστικὰ πάντα προβε-
- 211 βλημένος καὶ τῆς ψυχῆς ἀπεληλακῶς. καὶ θαυμαστόν οὐδέν, εἰ πρὸς τοὺς ἀλλοτρίους τοιοῦτος ἦν, οἱ βαρυτέρα καὶ δυνατωτέρα χειρὶ συμφωνήσαντες ἡμύναντο ἂν ἄρχοντα χειρῶν ἀδίκων, ὅποτε καὶ πρὸς τοὺς γένει μὲν οἰκείους, γνώμη δ' ἡλλοτριω-

<sup>a</sup> Or "kindness and courtesy." See note on De Fuga 31.

<sup>b</sup> For Abraham's wealth cf. Gen. xiii. 2 and xxiv. 35.

<sup>c</sup> Or "seriousness." But the word seems strange.

ON ABRAHAM, 207-211

for the soul of the wise He willed that it should pass the chief part of its life in glad-hearted contemplation of what the world has to show.

XXXVII. These examples must suffice for our 208 treatment of Abraham's piety, though others might be found in great plenty. But we must also examine the good and wise behaviour<sup>a</sup> shown in his dealings with men. For the nature which is pious is also kindly, and the same person will exhibit both qualities, holiness to God and justice to men. It would be too long, indeed, to describe all his actions, but it would not be out of place to mention two or three. Though he was exceedingly rich<sup>b</sup> in silver and gold 209 and possessed many herds of numerous live-stock and in abundance of wealth rivalled those of the natives and original inhabitants who possessed good means, and became more opulent than would be expected of an immigrant, he incurred no censure from those who received him into their midst but continued to be praised by all who had experience of him. But, if, as often happens, any of his ser- 210 vants or regular associates had a quarrel or difference with his neighbours, he would try to put an end to it quietly, banishing and expelling from the soul by means of his greater dignity<sup>c</sup> of character all that tended to strife and confusion and faction. And we need not wonder that he so bore himself to 211 strangers who could have united to repel him with their superior weight of strength if he was the aggressor in injustice, when we see what moderation he showed to those who, connected with him by birth but estranged from him in moral principles, stood Mangey wished to read πρῶτέρῳ. Cohn notes that the Armenian seems to have read πρῶτέρῳ τὰ βαρύτερα.

PHILO

- μένους, ἐρήμους καὶ μόνους καὶ πολλῶ καταδεέ-στερα κεκτημένους ἐμετρίαζεν, ἐλαττούμενος ἐκὼν 212 ἐν οἷς πλεονεκτεῖν ἐδύνατο. ἦν γὰρ ἀδελφιδοῦς αὐτῷ, τῆς πατρίδος ὅτε μετανίστατο, συνεξελλυθῶς, ἀβέβαιος, ὑπαμφίβολος, ἀντιρρέπων ὡδε [31] κἀκεῖσε, τοτὲ μὲν προσσαίνων | φιλικοῖς ἀσπά-σμασι, τοτὲ δὲ ἀφηνιάζων καὶ ἀπαυχενίζων διὰ τὴν 213 τῶν τρόπων ἀνωμαλίαν. ὅθεν καὶ τὸ οἰκετικὸν αὐτῷ δύσειρι καὶ ταραχῶδες ἦν σωφρονιστὴν οὐκ ἔχον καὶ μάλιστα τὸ ποιμενικὸν μακρὰν τοῦ δεσπότου διεξυγμένον· ἀπελευθεριάζοντες γοῦν ὑπ' αὐθαδείας ἀεὶ διεφέροντο τοῖς προεστηκόσι τῶν θρεμμάτων τοῦ σοφοῦ τὰ πολλὰ εἴκουσι διὰ τὴν τοῦ δεσπότου πραῦπάθειαν· ὑφ' οὗ πρὸς ἀπόνοιαν ἐπιδόντες καὶ θράσος ἀναίσχυντον ὄργων, μηνι-ῶντες ἤδη καὶ τὸ ἀκατάλλακτον ἐν αὐτοῖς ζωπυ-ροῦντες, ἕως ἀπηγάγκασαν τοὺς ἀδικουμένους εἰς 214 ἄμνηναν ὀρμησαί. μάχης δὲ ἐμβριθεστάτης γενο-μένης, ἀκούσας ὁ ἀστείος τὴν ἀντεφόρμησιν, εἰδὼς ἐπικυδεστέραν οὔσαν τὴν αὐτοῦ μερίδα πλήθει τε καὶ δυνάμει, τὴν διαφορὰν οὐκ εἴασεν ἄχρι νίκης ἐλθεῖν, ὑπὲρ τοῦ μὴ ἀνιᾶσαι τὸν ἀδελφιδοῦν ἐφ' ἤττη τῶν ιδίων, ἀλλ' ἐν μεθορίῳ στὰς συμβατηρίοις λόγοις τοὺς διαφερομένους κατήλλαξεν, οὐ πρὸς τὸ παρὸν μόνον ἀλλὰ καὶ τὸν μέλλοντα χρόνον.
 215 εἰδὼς γὰρ ὅτι συνοικοῦντες μὲν καὶ ἐν ταύτῳ δαιτώμενοι γνωσιμαχοῦντες φιλονεικήσουσι στάσεις ἀεὶ καὶ πολέμους κατ' ἀλλήλων ἐγείροντες, ἵνα

---

* For §§ 212-216 see Gen. xiii. 5-11.

ON ABRAHAM, 211-215

alone and unsupported and with possessions far inferior to his, and how he willingly accepted to be at a disadvantage when he might have taken advantage of them. <sup>a</sup> For he had a nephew who had 212 accompanied him when he migrated from his native land, an unreliable and hesitating person, ever inclining this way and that, sometimes fawning on him with loving greetings, sometimes rebellious and refractory through the inconsistency of his different moods. Therefore his servants too were quarrel- 213 some and turbulent, as they had no one to control them, and this was particularly the case with the shepherds who were stationed at a distance from their master ; thus breaking out of control in their wilfulness they were ever quarrelling with the Sage's herdsmen who many times gave way to them because of their master's gentleness. Then, advancing to a senseless audacity which knew no shame, they grew rampant and fostered in their hearts the flame of a passion beyond hope of conciliation until they compelled their opponents to begin defending themselves against the injustice. When the fight had 214 become very serious, the man of worth, hearing how the aggressors had been countered, and knowing that his own party was more distinguished in strength and number, did not allow the quarrel to be terminated by a victory, as he did not wish to distress his nephew through seeing his own party defeated. So he took up his stand between them and reconciled the disputants by proposals of agreement, good not only for the present but for the future. For he 215 knew that if they lived together and shared the same dwelling-place they would engage in obstinate contention, for ever stirring up wars and factions against

PHILO

- μή τοῦτο γένοιτο, συμφέρον ὑπέλαβεν εἶναι παραι-τήσασθαι τὸ ὁμοδίαιτον καὶ τὴν οἴκησιν διαζευῆσαι· καὶ μεταπεμφάμενος τὸν ἀδελφιδοῦν αἴρεσιν αὐτῷ δίδωσι τῆς ἀμείνονος χώρας, ἄσμενος ὁμολογῶν ἦν ἂν ἐπιλέξῃται μερίδα λήψεσθαι· κερδανεῖν γὰρ 216 κέρδος μέγιστον, τὴν εἰρήνην. καίτοι τίς ἂν ἕτερος ἀσθενεστέρω παραχωρήσειεν οὐτινοσοῦν ἰσχυρό-τερος ὢν; τίς δὲ νικᾶν δυνάμενος βούλοιτ' ἂν ἡττᾶσθαι, μὴ συγχρώμενος τῷ δύνασθαι; μόνος δὲ οὗτος τὸ ἄριστον. οὐκ ἐν ῥώμῃ καὶ πλεονεξία τιθέμενος ἀλλ' ἐν ἀστασιάστῳ βίῳ καὶ τό γε ἐπ' αὐτὸν ἦκον μέρος ἡσυχάζοντι πάντων ἔδοξεν εἶναι θαυμασιώτατος.
- 217 XXXVIII. Ἐπειδὴ τοίνυν ὡς ἐπ' ἀνθρώπου ἡ λέξις ἐγκωμιστικὴ λέλεκται, μηνύονται δὲ καὶ τρόποι ψυχῆς κατὰ τοὺς ἀπὸ τῶν ῥητῶν ἐπὶ τὰ νοητὰ μετιόντας, ἀρμόττον ἂν εἴη καὶ τούτους 218 ἀνερευνησαι. μυρίοι μὲν οὖν εἰσιν ἀπὸ μυρίων ἀφορμῶν κατὰ παντοδαπὰς ἰδέας πραγμάτων συνιστάμενοι, δύο δ' οἱ νυνὶ μέλλοντες ἐπικρίνεσθαι τρόποι, ὧν ὁ μὲν πρεσβύτερος, ὁ δὲ νεώτερος, πρεσβύτερος μὲν ὁ τὰ πρῶτα καὶ ἡγεμονικὰ τῇ φύσει τιμῶν, νεώτερος δὲ ὁ τὰ ὑπήκοα καὶ ἐν 219 ἐσχατιαῖς ἐξεταζόμενα. πρεσβύτερα μὲν οὖν καὶ ἡγεμονικὰ φρόνησις καὶ σωφροσύνη καὶ δικαιοσύνη [32] καὶ ἀνδρεία καὶ πᾶν ὃ τι περὶ ἀρετὴν | καὶ αἱ κατ' ἀρετὴν πράξεις· νεώτερα δὲ πλοῦτος καὶ δόξα καὶ ἀρχὴ καὶ εὐγένεια, οὐχ ἡ ἀληθής, ἀλλ' ἦν οἱ πολλοὶ νομίζουσι, καὶ ὅσα ἄλλα τὴν τρίτην μετὰ τὰ ψυχικὰ

ON ABRAHAM, 215-219

each other. To prevent this, he thought it expedient to refuse to continue their living together and to arrange for their dwelling at a distance from each other. So, sending for his nephew, he gave him a choice of the better district, gladly agreeing that he should take whatever part he chose ; for he considered that he would thereby get peace, the greatest of gains. And yet who else would give 216 way in any single point to the weaker if he were the stronger ? Who, when he could conquer, would be willing to be defeated and not avail himself of his power ? He alone took for his ideal not the exercise of strength and self-aggrandizement but a life free from strife and so far as lay with him of tranquillity, and thereby he showed himself the most admirable of men.

XXXVIII. The actual words of the story are an 217 encomium on Abraham as a man ; but, according to those who proceed from the literal to the spiritual, characters of soul are indicated also, and therefore it will be well to investigate them too. Such char- 218 acters are numberless, proceeding from numberless starting-points and arising from every kind and variety of circumstance ; but those now to be examined are two only, one higher and senior and one lower and junior. The senior is that character which honours things primal and dominant in their nature, the junior that which honours things subject and lowest in the list. Now the senior and dominant 219 are wisdom and temperance and justice and courage and virtue regarded as a whole and actions inspired by virtue, but the junior are wealth and reputation and office and good birth, good not in the true sense but in the sense which the multitude give to it, and everything else which coming after the things of

PHILO

- καὶ σωματικὰ τάξιν εἴληχεν, ἥτις εὐθύς ἐστι καὶ 220 τελευταία. τούτων οὖν τῶν τρόπων ἐκάτερος ἔχει καθάπερ τινὰς ποιμένας καὶ ἀγέλας, ὁ μὲν τῶν ἐκτὸς ὀρεγόμενος ἄργυρον, χρυσόν, ἐσθήτας, πάντα ὅσα τοῦ πλουτεῖν ὕλαι καὶ παρασκευαί, καὶ πάλιν ὄπλα, μηχανήματα, τριήρεις, ἵππικὴν καὶ πεζικὴν καὶ ναυτικὴν δύναμιν, τὰς πρὸς ἡγεμονίαν ἀφορμάς, ἐξ ὧν περιγίνεται τὸ βεβαίως κρατεῖν, ὁ δὲ καλο-κάγαθίας ἐραστὴς τὰ καθ' ἐκάστην ἀρετὴν δόγματα 221 καὶ τὰ σοφίας αὐτῆς θεωρήματα. προστάται δὲ καὶ ἐπιμεληταὶ τούτων ἐκατέρων εἰσὶ τινες οἷα θρεμμάτων ποιμένες, τῶν μὲν ἐκτὸς οἱ φιλο-χρήματοι καὶ φιλόδοξοι καὶ στρατηγιῶντες καὶ ὅσοι τὴν ἐπὶ τοῖς πλήθεσι δυναστείαν ἀγαπῶσι, τῶν δὲ περὶ ψυχὴν ὅσοι φιλόκαλοι καὶ φιλάρετοι, μὴ τὰ νόθα πρὸ τῶν γνησίων ἀλλὰ τὰ γνήσια πρὸ τῶν 222 νόθων ἀγαθὰ αἰρούμενοι. γίνεται οὖν φυσικὴ τις αὐτοῖς ἢ διαμάχη μὴδὲν ἐγνωκόσι τῶν αὐτῶν, ἀλλ' ἀπάδουσι καὶ διαφερομένοις αἰεὶ περὶ πράγματος συνεκτικωτάτου τῶν ἐν βίῳ, τοῦτο δ' ἐστὶν ἡ κρίσις 223 τῶν πρὸς ἀλήθειαν ἀγαθῶν. ἄχρι μὲν οὖν τινος ἐπολεμεῖτο ἡ ψυχὴ καὶ τὴν στάσιν ταύτην ἐχώρει μήπω κεκαθαυμένη παντελῶς, ἀλλ' ἔτι τῶν παθῶν καὶ νοσημάτων παρευημερούντων τοὺς ὑγιαίνοντας λόγους· ἀφ' οὗ δὲ ἤρξατο δυνατωτέρα γίνεσθαι καὶ ῥώμη κραταιοτέρα τὸν ἐπιτειχισμὸν τῶν ἐναντίων δοξῶν καθαιρεῖν, πτερυξαμένη καὶ φρονήματος ὑποπλησθεῖσα τὸν τὰς ἐκτὸς ὕλας τεθραυμάκοντα τρόπον ἐν αὐτῇ διατειχίζει καὶ διαζεύγνυσι καὶ ὡς

---

* Or " was the subject of attack, and allowed the revolt to soul and body takes the third place which is necessarily also the last. Each of the two characters possesses what we may call flocks and herds. The devotee of things external has silver, gold, raiment, all the materials of wealth and the means for procuring them, and again arms, engines, triremes, cavalry, infantry and naval forces, the foundations of sovereignty which produce security of power. The lover of moral excellence has the principles of each separate virtue and the truths discovered by wisdom itself.

ON ABRAHAM, 219-223

Now those who preside and have charge over each of these two are, as it were, herdsmen of cattle. The externals are cared for by lovers of wealth or glory, the would-be generals and all who hanker for power over multitudes, the things of the soul by lovers of moral excellence and virtue, who prefer the genuine goods to the spurious and not the spurious to the genuine. So there is a natural conflict between them since they have no common principle but are for ever jangling and quarrelling about the most important thing in life, and that is the decision what are the true goods. For a time the soul was in a state of war, and was the scene of this conflict,<sup>a</sup> for as yet it was not perfectly purified, but its passions and distempers still prevailed over its healthy principles. But from the time when it began to grow more powerful and demolish by superior strength the works with which the opposing doctrines threatened it, it spreads its wings, and, its spirit grown to fullness, sets a wall and barrier between it and that side of its character which has given its admiration to the gear of external things. And it talks with it as with proceed," i.e. the soul is here identified, as it certainly is below, with its own better side.

PHILO

- 224 ἀνθρώπῳ διαλεγομένη φησίν· ἀμήχανον ὁμοδίαιτον εἶναι σε καὶ ὁμόσπονδον ἐραστῇ σοφίας καὶ ἀρετῆς, ἴθι δὴ καὶ μετοικισάμενος μακρὰν ἀποζεύχθητι, μηδεμίαν ἔχων κοινωνίαν, ἀλλὰ μηδὲ σχεῖν δυνάμενος· ὅσα γὰρ ὑπολαμβάνεις εἶναι δεξιά, ταῦτ' οἶεται ἐκεῖνος εὐώνυμα, καὶ ὅσα τὸναντίον σκαιά, ταῦτα παρ' ἐκείνῳ νενόμισται δεξιά.
- 225 XXXIX. Οὐ τοίνυν εἰρηνικὸς καὶ φιλοδίκαιος αὐτὸ μόνον ἦν ὁ ἀστείος, ἀλλὰ καὶ ἀνδρείος καὶ πολεμικός· οὐχ ἔνεκα τοῦ πολεμεῖν—οὐ γὰρ δύσερις ἦν<sup>1</sup> καὶ φιλόνεικος,—ἀλλ' ὑπὲρ βεβαίου τῆς πρὸς τὸ
- [33] μέλλον εἰρήνης, ἣν οἱ ἀντίπαλοι καθήρουν. | σαφε-226 στάτη δὲ πίστις τὰ πραχθέντα. τὴν πρὸς ἀνατολὰς μοῖραν τῆς οἰκουμένης τέτταρες μεγάλοι βασιλεῖς εἰλήχεσαν, οἷς ὑπήκουεν ἔθνη τὰ ἐῷα, τὰ τε ἐκτὸς καὶ ἐντὸς Εὐφράτου. τὰ μὲν οὖν ἄλλα διέμενον ἀστασίαστα πειθαρχοῦντα τοῖς τῶν βασιλέων ἐπιτάγμασι καὶ τοὺς ἐτησίους δασμοὺς ἀποφασίστως εἰσφέροντα· μόνη δὲ ἡ Σοδομιτῶν χώρα, πρὶν καταφλεχθῆναι, παραλύειν ἤρξατο τὴν εἰρήνην ἀπό-
- 227 στασιν ἐκ πολλοῦ διανοουμένη. πάνυ γὰρ οὔσης εὐδαίμονος πέντε βασιλεῖς ἐπεκράτουν τὰς τε πόλεις καὶ τὴν γῆν δασάμενοι πολλὴν μὲν οὐκ οὔσαν, εὐσταχυν δὲ καὶ εὐδενδρον καὶ καρπῶν περίπλεων· ὁ γὰρ ταῖς ἄλλαις τὸ μέγεθος, τοῦθ' ἡ ἀρετὴ Σοδόμοις παρέσχεν, ὅθεν καὶ πλείους ἐραστὰς ἔσχεν
- 228 ἡγεμόνας τὸ κάλλος αὐτῆς καταπλαγέντας. οὗτοι τὸν ἄλλον χρόνον τοὺς ἐπιταχθέντας φόρους ἀπε-

<sup>1</sup> MSS. ὦν or omit.

<sup>a</sup> This evidently gives an allegorical interpretation to Gen.

ON ABRAHAM, 224-228

a man and says : " It is impossible that thou and 224 the lover of wisdom and virtue should have a common home and common ties. Away, change thy dwelling and betake thyself afar off, for thou hast not, or rather canst not have, fellowship with him. For all that thou holdest to be on the right he thinks to be on the left, and conversely what to thee is on the wrong side in his judgement stands on the right." <sup>a</sup>

XXIX. So, then, the man of worth was not merely 225 peaceable and a lover of justice but courageous and warlike, not for the sake of warring, for he was not quarrelsome or cantankerous, but to secure peace for the future, the peace which the opponents were destroying. The clearest proof of this is his actions. <sup>b</sup> 226 That part of the inhabited world which lies towards the east was in the hands of four great kings who held in subjection the nations of the Orient on both sides of the Euphrates. Now the other nations continued to be free from sedition, obeying the orders of the king, and paying their taxes without demur. Only the country of the Sodomites, before it was consumed by fire, began to undermine this peaceful condition by a long-standing plan of revolt. For, as it was 227 exceedingly prosperous, it was ruled by five kings who taxed the cities and the land, which though not large was rich in corn and well wooded and teeming with fruits, for the position which size gave to other countries, was given to Sodom by its goodness, and hence it had a plurality of rulers who loved it and were fascinated by its charm. These hitherto rendered 228 the appointed tributes to the collectors of revenue xiii. 9 " if thou wilt take the left hand, then I will go to the right; or if thou wilt take the right hand, then I will go to the left."

<sup>b</sup> For §§ 225-235 see Gen. xiv.

PHILO

- δίδοσαν τοῖς ἐκλογεῦσι τῶν χρημάτων, τοὺς δυνατωτέρους ὧν ἦσαν ὑπαρχοὶ τιμῶντες ἅμα καὶ δεδιότες· ἐπεὶ δὲ ἐκορέσθησαν ἀγαθῶν καὶ, ὅπερ φιλεῖ, κόρος ὕβριν ἐγέννησε, πλεόν τῆς δυνάμεως φρονήσαντες ἀπαυχενίζουσι τὸ πρῶτον, εἶθ' οἶα κακοὶ δούλοι δεσπόταις τοῖς ἑαυτῶν ἐπιτίθενται στάσει πιστεύ-229 σαντες ἢ ῥώμη. οἱ δὲ τῆς ἑαυτῶν εὐγενείας ὑπομνησθέντες καὶ φραζάμενοι δυνατωτέρα χειρὶ μάλα καταφρονητικῶς ἦσαν ὡς αὐτοβοεῖ περιεσόμενοι καὶ συμπλακέντες τοὺς μὲν εὐθύς εἰς φυγὴν ἀνεσκέδασαν, τοὺς δὲ ἐπιστροφάδην κτείνοντες ἠβηδὸν διαφθείρουσιν, αἰχμαλώτων δὲ πολὺν ὄχλον ἀγαγόντες μετὰ τῆς ἄλλης λείας διενέμοντο· προσπαἄγουσι μέντοι καὶ τοῦ σοφοῦ τὸν ἀδελφιδοῦν εἰς μίαν τῆς πενταπόλεως οὐκ ἐκ πολλοῦ μετωκηκότα.
- 230 XL. τοῦτο μηνυθὲν ὑπὸ τινος τῶν ἐκ τῆς τροπῆς διασωθέντων χαλεπῶς αὐτὸν ἠνίασε καὶ οὐκέτ' ἠρέμει διὰ τοῦτο συγκεχυμένος καὶ ζῶντα πενθῶν τὸ ἀργαλεώτερον ἢ εἰ τεθνεῶτα ἐπύθετο· τέλος μὲν γάρ, ὡς αὐτό που δηλοῖ τοῦνομα, τῶν κατὰ τὸν βίον ἀπάντων καὶ μάλιστα 231 ἐφεδρεύοντα τοῖς ζῶσι. διώκειν δ' εὐτρεπιζόμενος ἐπὶ τῷ ῥύσασθαι τὸν ἀδελφιδοῦν ἠπόρει συμμάχων, ἅτε ξένος ὧν καὶ μέτοικος καὶ μηδεὶνδὸς τολμῶντος ἀμάχοις δυνάμεσι τοσοῦτων βασιλέων καὶ ἄρτι 232 νενικηκότων ἐναντιοῦσθαι. καινοτάτην δ' ἐξεύρε συμμαχίαν—πόρος γὰρ ἐν ἀπόροις, ὅταν δικαίων καὶ φιλανθρώπων ἔργων ἐφιῆται τις, εὐρίσκεται—

<sup>a</sup> Or "to the strength" (which they wrongly supposed themselves to have). But this is awkward. I should like to read <μᾶλλον> ἢ.

ON ABRAHAM, 228-232

out of both respect for and fear of the higher potentes whose satraps they were. But, when they had been surfeited with good things, and as so often happens satiety had begotten insolence, they grew ambitious beyond their powers and first shook off the yoke and then, like bad slaves, attacked their masters, trusting to sedition or violence.<sup>a</sup> But these 229 masters, mindful of their higher birth and armed with more powerful force, advanced in great disdain to the attack, expecting to conquer them with the utmost ease. And, when they engaged, some they sent flying helter-skelter at once, others they mowed down in wholesale massacre, while a great number were taken prisoners and distributed with the rest of the booty. Among these they took the nephew of the Sage, who had migrated not long before into one of the five cities. XL. When 230 this was reported to Abraham by one of those who escaped from the rout, it distressed him exceedingly. He could no longer rest, so severe was the shock, and mourned for the living with greater sorrow than if he had heard of his death. For he knew that death or decease, as the name itself shows, is the end of everything in life, and particularly of its ills, while the troubles which lie in wait for the living are numberless. But, when he made ready to pursue 231 the enemy to rescue his nephew, he was at a loss for allies, since he was a stranger and an immigrant, and no one dared to oppose the invincible forces of the kings, considering their number and their recent victory. But he obtained allies in quite a new 232 quarter, for resource is found where resource is none, when one is set on deeds of justice and kindness. He συναγαγὼν γὰρ τοὺς οἰκέτας καὶ τοῖς ἀργυρωνήτοις προστάξας οἴκοι καταμένειν—ἔδεισε γὰρ ἐξ αὐτῶν αὐτομολίαν—τοὺς οἰκότριβας καταλέγει καὶ διανείμας εἰς ἑκατονταρχίας τρισὶν ἐπήει τάξι-οὺ ταύταις πεποιθώς—πολλοστὴ γὰρ ἦν μοῖρα τῶν [34] παρὰ τοῖς βασιλεῦσιν—, ἀλλὰ τῷ ὑπερμάχῳ καὶ 233 προαγωνιστῇ τοῦ | δικαίου θεῷ. συντείνων οὖν ἔσπευδε μηδὲν τάχους ἀνιείς, ἕως καιροφυλακήσας νυκτὸς ἐπιπίπτει τοῖς πολεμίοις δεδειπνοποιημένοις ἤδη καὶ πρὸς ὕπνον μέλλουσι τρέπεσθαι· καὶ τοὺς μὲν ἐν εὐναῖς ἰέρευε, τοὺς δ' ἀντιταχθέντας ἄρδην ἀνήρει, πάντων δ' ἐρρωμένως ἐπεκράτει τῷ θαρ-234 ραλέῳ τῆς ψυχῆς μᾶλλον ἢ ταῖς παρασκευαῖς. καὶ οὐ πρότερον ἀνήκεν, ἕως τὴν μὲν ἀντίπαλον στρα-τιὰν βασιλεῦσιν αὐτοῖς ἠβηδὸν ἀνελὼν πρὸ τοῦ στρατοπέδου κατεστόρεσε, τὸν δὲ ἀδελφιδοῦν ἀνἠγάγε μετὰ λαμπρᾶς καὶ ἐπιφανεστάτης νίκης ἅπασαν τὴν ἵππον καὶ τὴν τῶν ἄλλων πληθὺν ὑπο-235 ζυγίων καὶ λείαν ἀφθονωτάτην προσπαραλαβών. ὃν θεασάμενος ὁ μέγας ἱερεὺς τοῦ μεγίστου θεοῦ ἐπανιόντα καὶ τροπαιοφοροῦντα σῶον μετὰ σώου τῆς ἰδίας δυνάμεως—οὐδένα γὰρ τῶν συνόντων ἀπέβαλε—, καταπλαγεὶς τὸ μέγεθος τῆς πράξεως καὶ ὅπερ εἰκὸς ἐννοηθεῖς, ὡς οὐκ ἄνευ θείας ἐπι-φροσύνης καὶ συμμαχίας κατωρθώθη, τὰς χεῖρας ἀνατείνας εἰς τὸν οὐρανὸν εὐχαῖς αὐτὸν γεραίρει καὶ ἐπινίκια ἔθυε καὶ πάντας τοὺς συναραμένους τῷ ἀγῶνι λαμπρῶς εἰστία, γεγηθῶς καὶ συνηδόμενος ὡς ἐπ' οἰκείῳ κατορθώματι· καὶ ἦν τῷ ὄντι οἰκείον

PHILO

<sup>a</sup> So LXX (ἠρίθμῃσε). E.V. "led forth."

ON ABRAHAM, 232-235

collected his servants and, after bidding those who had been acquired by purchase to remain at home, since he feared that they might desert, he made a roll-call<sup>a</sup> of those who were home-bred, distributed them into centuries and advanced with three battalions. Yet he did not trust in these, for they were but a small fraction of the kings' forces, but in God, the champion and defender of the just. So he 233 pressed forward eagerly and never abated his speed until, watching for his chance, he attacked the enemy by night when they had supped and were preparing to go to sleep. Some fell helpless victims to him in their beds, others who took arms against him were completely annihilated, and all were mightily overcome more by his courage of soul than by the resources at his command. Nor did he stay his hand 234 until he had completely slaughtered the opposing army with their kings as well and left them lying in front of the camp. His nephew he brought back in the triumph of his brilliant and magnificent victory, taking too with him all the horses of the cavalry and the whole multitude of the other beasts and spoil in vast plenty. When the high priest of the 235 most high God saw him approaching with his trophies, leader and army alike unhurt, for he had lost none of his own company, he was astonished by the feat, and, thinking, as indeed was natural, that such success was not won without God's directing care and help to their arms, he stretched his hands to heaven and honoured him with prayers on his behalf and offered sacrifices of thanksgiving for the victory and feasted handsomely those who had taken part in the contest, rejoicing and sharing their gladness as though the success were his own; and so indeed it was, for "the αὐτῶ· “κοινὰ” γὰρ κατὰ τὴν παροιμίαν “τὰ φίλων,” πολὺ δὲ πλεόν τὰ τῶν ἀγαθῶν, οἷς ἐν τέλος εὐαρεστεῖν θεῶ.

PHILO

- 236 XLI. Ταῦτα μὲν οὖν αἱ ῥῆται γραφαὶ περιέχουσιν. ἀσώματα δὲ ὅσοι καὶ γυμνὰ θεωρεῖν τὰ πράγματα δύνανται, οἱ ψυχῇ μᾶλλον ἢ σώματι ζῶντες, φήσουσι τῶν ἐννέα βασιλέων τοὺς μὲν τέτταρας εἶναι τὰς ἐν ἡμῖν τῶν τεττάρων παθῶν δυνάμεις, ἡδονῆς, ἐπιθυμίας, φόβου, λύπης, τοὺς δὲ πέντε τὰς ἰσαριθμούς αἰσθήσεις, ὄρασιν, ἀκοήν,
- 237 γεύσιν, ὄσφρησιν, ἀφήν. τρόπον γὰρ τινα βασιλεύουσι καὶ ἄρχουσιν ἡμῶν ἀνημμέναι τὸ κράτος, ἀλλ’ οὐχ ὁμοίως· ὑπήκοοι γὰρ αἱ πέντε τῶν τεττάρων εἰσὶ καὶ φόρους αὐταῖς καὶ δασμούς ἀναγκάιους φέρουσιν ὑπὸ φύσεως ὀρισθέντας. ἐξ ὧν γὰρ ἂν ἴδωμεν ἢ ἀκούσωμεν ἢ ὀσφρανθῶμεν ἢ γευσώμεθα ἢ ἀψώμεθα, λύπαι καὶ ἡδοναὶ καὶ φόβοι καὶ ἐπιθυμίαι συνίστανται, μηδενὸς τῶν παθῶν καθ’ αὐτὸ σθένος, εἰ μὴ ἐχορηγῆτο ταῖς διὰ τῶν
- 238 αἰσθήσεων παρασκευαῖς. αὐταὶ γὰρ ἐκείνων δυνάμεις εἰσίν, ἢ διὰ χρωμάτων καὶ σχημάτων ἢ διὰ φωνῆς τῆς ἐν τῷ λέγειν ἢ ἀκούειν ἢ διὰ χυλῶν ἢ δι’ ἀτμῶν ἢ τῶν ἐν ἀπτοῖς, ἃ μαλακὰ καὶ σκληρὰ
- [35] ἢ τραχέα | καὶ λεῖα ἢ θερμὰ καὶ ψυχρὰ· ταῦτα γὰρ πάντα διὰ τῶν αἰσθήσεων ἐκάστω τῶν παθῶν
- 240 χορηγῆται. καὶ μέχρι μὲν οἱ λεχθέντες ἀποδίδονται φόροι, μένει τοῖς βασιλεῦσιν ἢ ὁμαιχμία, ὅταν δὲ μηκέθ’ ὁμοίως συντελῶνται, στάσεις εὐθύς καὶ πόλεμοι συνίστανται· τοῦτο δὲ συμβαίνειν ἔοικεν, ὅταν ἀφικνηῖται τὸ ἐπώδυνον γῆρας, ἐν ᾧ τῶν μὲν παθῶν ἀσθενέστερον οὐδὲν γίνεται, τάχα δὲ καὶ τῆς παλαιᾶς δυνάμεως κραταιότερον, ἀμυδραὶ δὲ ὄψεις belongings of friends are held in common," as the proverb says, and this is far more true of the belongings of the good whose one end is to be well-pleasing to God.

ON ABRAHAM, 235-240

XLI. This is what we find in the scriptures read 236 literally ; but those who can contemplate facts stripped of the body and in naked reality, those who live with the soul rather than with the body, will say that of these nine kings, four are the power exercised within us by the four passions, pleasure, desire, fear and grief, and that the five are the five senses, sight, hearing, taste, smell and touch. For these 237 nine are in a sense invested with sovereignty and are our kings and rulers but not all in the same way.
For the five are subject to the four, and are forced to pay them the tolls and tributes determined by nature. Grievances and pleasures and fears and desires 238 arise out of what we see or hear or smell or taste or touch, and none of the passions would have any strength of itself if it were not furnished with what the senses supply ; for these supplies constitute 239 the forces of the passions, taking the form of colours and shapes, or sounds spoken or heard, or flavours, or scents, or the qualities attached to things tangible, soft and hard or rough and smooth or warm and cold, all of which are supplied through the senses to each of the passions. And while the said tributes are 240 rendered the alliance between the kings holds good, but when they are no longer paid discord and wars at once arise, and this obviously happens when old age with its pains arrives. For then, while none of the passions is weaker, and perhaps is even stronger than of old, yet the eyes are dim and the ears dull of

PHILO

- καὶ ὧτα δυσήκοα καὶ ἐκάστη τῶν ἄλλων αἰσθήσεων ἀμβλυτέρα, μηκέθ' ὁμοίως ἕκαστα ἀκριβοῦν καὶ δικάζειν δυναμένη μηδ' ἴσα τῷ πλήθει<sup>1</sup> ὑποτελεῖν· εἰκότως οὖν ἐξασθενήσασαι πάντα τρόπον καὶ κλιθεῖσαι δι' αὐτῶν ὑπὸ τῶν ἀντιπάλων παθῶν ραδίως
- 241 ἀνατρέπονται. φυσικώτατα δὲ ἐκείνο εἶρηται, ὅτι τῶν πέντε βασιλέων δύο μὲν εἰς φρέατα ἐμπίπτουσι, τρεῖς δὲ πρὸς φυγὴν ὤρμησαν· ἀφή μὲν γὰρ καὶ γεῦσις ἄχρι τῶν τοῦ σώματος βαθυτάτων ἀφικνοῦνται σπλάγχχοις παραπέμπουσαι τὰ οἰκεία πρὸς διοίκησιν, ὀφθαλμοὶ δὲ καὶ ὧτα καὶ ὄσφρησις ἔξω τὰ πολλὰ βαίνουσαι ἀποδιδράσκουσι τὴν δου-
- 242 λείαν τοῦ σώματος. οἷς ἅπασιν ἐφ-εδρεύων ὁ ἀστείος, ἐπειδὴ κατεῖδε τὰ σύμμαχα καὶ φίλα πρὸ μικροῦ νοσοῦντα καὶ πόλεμον ἀντ' εἰρήνης ταῖς ἐννέα βασιλείαις γεγόμενον, πρὸς τὰς πέντε τῶν τεττάρων περι κράτους ἀρχῆς ἀμιλλωμένων, ἐξαπιναίως καιροφυλακήσας ἐπιτίθεται, φιλοτιμούμενος δημοκρατίαν, τὴν ἀρίστην τῶν πολιτειῶν, ἀντὶ τυραννίδων καὶ δυναστειῶν ἐν τῇ ψυχῇ καταστήσασθαι καὶ τὸ ἔννομον καὶ τὸ δίκαιον ἀντὶ παρανομίας καὶ ἀδικίας, αἱ τέως ἐπεκράτουν.
- 243 ἔστι δ' οὐ πλάσμα μύθου τὸ λεχθέν, ἀλλὰ πρᾶγμα τῶν ἀψευδεστάτων ἐν ἡμῖν αὐτοῖς θεωρούμενον· πολλάκις μὲν γὰρ ὁμόνοιαν τὴν πρὸς τὰ πάθη διατηροῦσιν αἱ αἰσθήσεις χορηγοῦσαι τὰ <sup>1</sup> I suggest πλήρει ("equal to the full quota"): Mangey πάθει or πάθεισι.

<sup>a</sup> See note on § 99 above.

<sup>b</sup> For Philo's admiration for democracy, by which he seems to mean each part of the state possessing its proper amount of power, see note on Quod Deus 176.

<sup>c</sup> The happy coincidence of the number of the kings with

ON ABRAHAM, 240-243

hearing and each of the other senses blunted, so that it cannot in the same way judge each thing with accuracy or make the same contribution in amount as before. And so, weakened all round as they are and already giving way of themselves, it is natural that they should be easily routed by the opposing passions.

There is much philosophical truth<sup>a</sup> in the saying that of the five kings two fell into the wells and three took to flight. For touch and taste descend to the lowest recesses of the body and transmit to its inward parts what may properly be dealt with by them ; but eyes and ears and smell for the most part pass outside and escape enslavement by the body.

All this the man of worth was watching from his lair, and when he saw trouble festering, where but now was alliance and friendship, and war instead of peace arising between the nine kingdoms, with the four competing against the five for the sovereign power, he seized his opportunity and suddenly made the attack, ambitious to establish in the soul democracy,<sup>b</sup> the best of constitutions, instead of the rule of tyrants and overlords, and legality and justice instead of lawlessness and injustice which hitherto prevailed.

All this is no fable of my invention, but a fact, and that one of the surest which we may observe in ourselves.<sup>c</sup> For the senses, though often they may maintain concord with the passions and provide them with the objects which they per-the accepted four passions and five senses naturally attracts Philo to this ingenious allegory. The weak point seems to be that in the story the rebellion of the five against the four is not due to the influence of Abraham, as in the allegory the refusal of the senses to minister to the passions is due to reason.

PHILO

- αἰσθητὰ αὐτοῖς, πολλάκις δὲ καὶ στασιάζουσι μηκέτ' ἀξιούσαι τὰ ἴσα τελεῖν ἢ μὴ δυνάμεναι διὰ τὸ παρ- εῖναι τὸν σωφρονιστὴν λόγον· ὃς ἐπειδὴν ἀναλάβῃ τὴν αὐτοῦ παντευχίαν, τὰς ἀρετὰς καὶ τὰ τούτων δόγματα καὶ θεωρήματα, δύναμιν ἀνανταγώνιστον, ἐρρωμενέστατα κρατεῖ· φθαρτὰ γὰρ ἀφθάρτῳ συν-244 οικεῖν οὐ θέμις. αἱ μὲν οὖν ἐννέα δυναστεῖαι τεττάρων παθῶν καὶ πέντε αἰσθήσεων φθαρταὶ τε καὶ φθορᾶς αἴτιαι, ὁ δ' ὀρμητηρίῳ χρώμενος ταῖς ἀρεταῖς λόγος ἱερός καὶ θεῖος ὄντως, ἐν ἀριθμῶ ταπτόμενος δεκάδι τῇ παντελείᾳ, πρὸς ἄμιλλαν ἔλθῶν, ἐρρωμενεστέρα δυνάμει τῇ κατὰ θεὸν χρώ- μενος ἀνὰ κράτος νικᾷ τὰς εἰρημένας δυναστείας.
- [36] XLII. | Χρόνῳ δ' ὕστερον αὐτῷ τελευτᾷ ἢ γυνῇ 245 θυμηρεστάτῃ καὶ τὰ πάντα ἀρίστη, μυρία δείγματα τῆς φιλανδρίας ἐνεγκαμένη, τὴν σὺν αὐτῷ τῶν συγγενῶν ἀπόλειψιν, τὴν ἐκ τῆς οἰκειᾶς ἀνευδοία- στον μετάστασιν, τὰς ἐπὶ τῆς ἀλλοδαπῆς συνεχεῖς καὶ ἐπαλλήλους πλάνας, τὰς κατὰ λιμὸν ἐνδείας, 246 τὰς ἐν πολέμοις συστρατείας. αἰεὶ γὰρ καὶ παν- ταχοῦ παρῆν οὐδένα τόπον ἢ καιρὸν ἀπολείπουσα, κοινωνὸς ὄντως βίου καὶ τῶν κατὰ τὸν βίον πραγ- μάτων, ἐξ ἴσου δικαιούσα μετέχειν ἀγαθῶν ὁμοῦ καὶ κακῶν· οὐ γὰρ ὥσπερ ἔναι τὰς μὲν κακο- πραγίας ἀπεδίδρασκε, ταῖς δ' εὐτυχίαις ἐφήδρευεν, ἀλλὰ τὸν ἐν ἀμφοτέραις κληῖρον ὡς ἐπιβάλλοντα καὶ ἀρμόττοντα γαμετῇ μετὰ προθυμίας πάσης ἀν-247 ἐδέχετο. XLIII. πολλὰ δὲ ἔχων ἐγκώ-

---

<sup>a</sup> For the perfection of ten as used in Scripture, cf. De Cong. 89 ff. (where Gen. xiv. is quoted among other ex- 120

ON ABRAHAM, 243-247

ceive, often too revolt and are unwilling any longer to pay the same dues or unable to do so because of the presence of reason, the chastener. For when reason puts on its panoply of the virtues and the doctrines and the lore which embody them, armed with this irresistible power it mightily overcomes. For corruptible and incorruptible may not live together. Now the nine overlords, the four passions <sup>244</sup> and the five senses, are corruptible and the sources of corruption, but the truly divine and holy Word, whose stronghold is in the virtues, whose place in the order of number is tenth, the supremely perfect number,<sup>a</sup> comes to the contest and with the help of the mightier power of God wins an easy victory over the said overlords.

XLII. After this in the course of time he lost the <sup>245</sup> wife who was the darling of his heart and gifted with every excellence. She showed her wifely love by numberless proofs, by sharing with him the severance from his kinsfolk, by bearing without hesitation the departure from her homeland, the continual and unceasing wanderings on a foreign soil and privation in famine, and by the campaigns in which she accompanied him. Everywhere and always she was at his <sup>246</sup> side, no place or occasion omitted, his true partner in life and life's events, resolved to share alike the good and ill. She did not, like some other women, run away from mishaps and lie ready to pounce on pieces of good luck, but accepted her portion of both with all alacrity as the fit and proper test of a wedded wife.

XLIII. <sup>b</sup> Many a story I could relate in <sup>247</sup>

amples). For its arithmetical virtues cf. De Dec. 20 ff. See App. p. 598.

<sup>b</sup> For §§ 247-254 see Gen. xvi. 1-6.

PHILO

- μια τῆς ἀνθρώπου διεξιέναι, ἐνὸς ὑπομνησθήσομαι, ὃ γενήσεται καὶ τῶν ἄλλων σαφεστάτη πίστις. ἄγονος γὰρ οὐσα καὶ στείρα, δείσασα μὴ κατὰ τὸ παντελὲς ἔρημος γενεᾶς ὁ θεοφιλῆς οἶκος ἀπο-248 λειφθῆ, προσελθοῦσα τῷ ἀνδρὶ φησι τάδε· “πολὺν μὲν ἤδη χρόνον συμβιοῦμεν ἀλλήλοις εὐαρεστοῦντες, οὐδὲ χάριν καὶ αὐτοὶ συνεληλύθαμεν καὶ ἡ φύσις τὴν ἀνδρὸς καὶ γυναικὸς ἡρμόσατο κοινωνίαν, τέκνων γενέσεις οὐκ ἔστιν, ἀλλ’ οὐδ’ εἰσαυθις ἐξ 249 ἐμοῦ γε ὑπερήλικος ἤδη γεγонуίας ἐλπίζεται. μὴ δὴ παραπόλαυε τῆς ἐμῆς ἀγονίας μηδ’ ἔνεκα τῆς πρὸς ἐμὲ εὐνοίας αὐτὸς δυνάμενος εἶναι πατὴρ κεκώλυσο· ζηλοτυπία γὰρ οὐκ ἂν γένοιτό μοι πρὸς ἐτέραν, ἣν οὐ δι’ ἐπιθυμίαν ἄλογον ἄξῃ, νόμον δὲ 250 φύσεως ἐκπιμπλὰς ἀναγκαῖον. οὐ χάριν οὐχ ὑπερθήσομαι νυμφοστολεῖν ὡς τὸ ἐνδέον ἐμοὶ μέλλουσιν ἐκπληροῦν· καὶ εἴ γε ἀπαντήσῃαι αἱ περὶ σπορᾶς τέκνων εὐχαί, σὰ μὲν ἔσται τὰ γεννώμενα γνήσια, 251 θέσει δὲ πάντως ἐμά. πρὸς δὲ τὸ ἀνύποπτον τῆς ζηλοτυπίας ἐμῆν, εἰ βούλει, θεράπαιναν ἀγαθοῦ, τὸ μὲν σῶμα δούλην, ἐλευθέραν δὲ καὶ εὐγενῆ τὴν διάνοιαν, ἧς ἐκ πολλῶν χρόνων πείραν ἔλαβον καὶ βάσανον, ἀφ’ ἧς ἡμέρας τὸ πρῶτον εἰς τὴν ἐμῆν οἰκίαν ἤχθη, γένος μὲν Αἰγυπτίαν, τὴν δὲ προ-252 αἶρεσιν Ἑβραίαν. ἔστι μὲν ἡμῖν οὐσία πολλή καὶ ἄφθονος πλοῦτος, οὐχ ὡς μετοίκους—ἤδη γὰρ τῶν αὐτοχθόνων τοὺς ἐν εὐτυχίαις λαμπραῖς ὑπερβάλλομεν—, κληρονόμος δ’ οὐδεὶς ἀποδέδεικται καὶ διάδοχος, καίτοι γε εἶναι δυνάμενος, ἂν ταῖς ἐμαῖς 253 παραινέσεσι πεισθῆς.” ὁ δὲ θαυμάσας τῆς γυναικὸς ἔτι μᾶλλον τὴν αἰεὶ καινουμένην φιλανδρίαν καὶ νεάζουσαν καὶ τὸ περὶ τοῦ μέλλοντος ἐξεταστικὸν

ON ABRAHAM, 247-253

praise of this woman, but one I will mention which will be the clearest proof that the others are true. Being childless and barren and fearing lest the house beloved of God should be left entirely desolate, she 248 came to her husband and said: "Long have we lived together in mutual goodwill. But the purpose for which we ourselves came together and for which nature formed the union of man and wife, the birth of children, has not been fulfilled, nor is there any future hope of it, through me at least who am now past the age. But do not let the trouble of my 249 barrenness extend to you, or kind feeling to me keep you from becoming what you can become, a father, for I shall have no jealousy of another woman, whom you will take not for unreasoning lust but in fulfillment of nature's inevitable law. And therefore I 250 shall not be backward to lead to you a bride who will supply what is lacking in myself. And if our prayers for the birth of children are answered the offspring will be yours in full parenthood, but surely mine also by adoption. But to avoid any suspicion of 251 jealousy on my part take if you will my handmaiden, outwardly a slave, inwardly of free and noble race, proved and tested by me for many years from the day when she was first brought to my house, an Egyptian by birth, but a Hebrew by her rule of life. We have 252 much substance and abundance of wealth, not on the usual scale of immigrants, for in this we now outshine those of the native inhabitants who are noted for their prosperity, but no heir or successor has appeared, though there may be if you follow my advice." Abraham with increased admiration 253 for the wifely love, which never grew old and was ever showing itself anew, and her careful forethought

PHILO

- καὶ προμηθὲς ἄγεται τὴν ὑπ' αὐτῆς δοκιμασθεῖσαν [37] ἄχρι τοῦ παιδοποιήσασθαι, | ὡς δ' οἱ σαφέστατα διηγούμενοί φασιν, ἄχρι τοῦ μόνον ἐγκύμονα γενέσθαι· γενομένης δ' οὐκ εἰς μακράν, ἀποσχέσθαι διὰ τε φυσικὴν ἐγκράτειαν καὶ τὴν τιμὴν, ἣν ἀπένεμε 254 τῇ γαμετῇ. γίνεται μὲν οὖν υἱὸς ἐκ τῆς θεραπεινίδος εὐθύς τότε, γίνεται δὲ καὶ μακροῖς χρόνοις ὕστερον γνήσιος ἀπεγνωκόσι τὴν ἐξ ἀλλήλων γένε-σιν, ἄθλον καλοκάγαθίας ἐλπίδος πάσης τελειότερον τοῦ φιλοδώρου θεοῦ παρασχόντος.
- 255 XLIV. Τοσαῦτα μὲν ἀπόχρη δείγματα περὶ τῆς γυναικὸς εἰρησθαι, πλείω δ' ἐστὶν ἐγκώμια τοῦ σοφοῦ, ὧν ὀλίγω πρότερον ἔνια διεξῆλθον. λέξω δὲ καὶ τὸ περὶ τὴν τελευταίην τῆς γυναικὸς οὐκ ἄξιον 256 ἔργον ἡσυχασθῆναι. τοιαύτην γὰρ ἀποβαλὼν κοι-νωνὸν τοῦ σύμπαντος βίου, οἷαν ἔδειξεν ὁ λόγος καὶ μηνύουσιν οἱ χρησμοί, τῆς λύπης ἐπαποδουμένης ἤδη καὶ κατὰ τῆς ψυχῆς κονιομένης ὡσπερ ἀθλητῆς ἐπεκράτησε ῥώσας καὶ θαρσύνας εὖ μάλα τὸν ἀντίπαλον φύσει τῶν παθῶν λογισμὸν, ᾧ συμβούλω παρὰ πάντα τὸν βίον χρώμενος τότε διαφερόντως ἠξίωσε πείθεσθαι τὰ βέλτιστα παραινοῦντι καὶ 257 συμφέροντα. ἦν δὲ ταυτί· μήτε πλέον τοῦ μετρίου σφαδάζειν ὡς ἐπὶ καινοτάτῃ καὶ ἀγενήτῃ συμφορᾷ μήτε ἀπαθείᾳ καθάπερ μηδενὸς ὀδυνηροῦ συμβεβηκότες χρῆσθαι, τὸ δὲ μέσον πρὸ τῶν ἄκρων ἐλόμενον μετριοπαθεῖν πειρᾶσθαι, τῇ μὲν φύσει τὸ οἰκεῖον χρέος ἀπολαβούσῃ μὴ δυσχεραίνοντα, τὸ

---

<sup>a</sup> Presumably as related in the traditions of which Philo speaks in Mos. i. 4. Naturally they credited Abraham with all the continence possible, and, indeed, it might fairly be inferred from Gen. xvi. 6.

ON ABRAHAM, 253-257

for the future, took the mate whom she had approved and kept her till she had borne a child, or, as the surest version of the story runs,<sup>a</sup> only till she became pregnant, and when this occurred not long after he abstained from her through his natural continence and the honour which he paid to his lawful spouse. So a son was born just at that time to the hand- 254 maiden, but long afterwards the wedded pair, who had despaired of the procreation of children, had a son of their own, a reward for their high excellence, a gift from God the bountiful, surpassing all their hopes.

XLIV. <sup>b</sup>We need give no further proofs of the 255 merits of this wife. More numerous are those of the Sage, some of which I have praised in detail a little earlier. But I will speak of one which concerns the death of his wife, in which his conduct should not be passed over in silence. When he had lost 256 his life-long partner, whose qualities have been described in our discourse and are related in the oracles, when sorrow was making itself ready to wrestle with his soul, he grappled with it, as in the arena, and prevailed. He gave strength and high courage to the natural antagonist of passion, reason, which he had taken as his counsellor throughout his life and now particularly was determined to obey, so excellent and profitable were its exhortations. The 257 advice was that he should not grieve over-bitterly as at an utterly new and unheard-of misfortune, nor yet assume an indifference as though nothing painful had occurred, but choose the mean rather than the extremes and aim at moderation of feeling, not resent that nature should be paid the debt which is its due, <sup>b</sup> For §§ 255-261 see Gen. xxiii.

PHILO

δὲ συμβεβηκὸς ἡσυχῇ καὶ πρῶως ἐπελαφρίζοντα.
 258 μαρτυρίαι δὲ τούτων ἐν ταῖς ἱεραῖς βίβλοις κατάκεινται, ἃς οὐ θέμις ψευδομαρτυριῶν ἀλῶναι, μηνύουσαι ὅτι βραχέα τῷ σώματι ἐπιδακρύσας θάπτον ἀπανεστή τοῦ νεκροῦ, τὸ πενθεῖν ἐπὶ πλεόν, ὡς ἔοικεν, ἀλλότριον ἡγησάμενος σοφίας, ὑφ' ἧς ἀνεδιδάχθη τὸν θάνατον νομίζειν μὴ σβέσειν ψυχῆς, ἀλλὰ χωρισμὸν καὶ διάζευξιν ἀπὸ σώματος, ὅθεν ἦλθεν ἀπιούσης· ἦλθε δέ, ὡς ἐν τῇ κοσμοποιίᾳ 259 δεδηλωται, παρὰ θεοῦ. καθάπερ δὲ οὐδεὶς ἂν ἄχθοιτο τῶν μετρίων χρέος ἢ παρακαταθήκην ἀποτίνων τῷ προεμένῳ, τὸν αὐτὸν τρόπον οὐδὲ τῆς φύσεως ἀπολαμβανούσης τὰ οἰκεία χαλεπαίνειν 260 ᾧετο δεῖν, ἀλλὰ τοῖς ἀναγκαίοις ἀσμενίζειν. ὡς δ' ἦκον οἱ ἐν τέλει τῶν κατὰ τὴν χώραν συναλγήσοντες, ἰδόντες οὐδὲν τῶν ἐν ἔθει παρ' αὐτοῖς γινομένων ἐπὶ τοῖς πενθοῦσιν,<sup>1</sup> οὐκ ὀλόφυρσιν, οὐ θρῆνον, οὐ κοπετόν, οὐκ ἀνδρῶν, οὐ γυναικῶν, ἀλλὰ τῆς συμπάσης οἰκίας εὐσταθῆ καὶ νηφάλιον κατ-ἠφειαν, ἐθαύμαζον οὐ μετρίως καὶ τὸν ἄλλον βίον 261 προκαταπεπληγμένοι τοῦ ἀνδρός. εἶτ' οὐ στέγοντες ἐν ἑαυτοῖς τὰ τῆς ἀρετῆς αὐτοῦ μεγέθη καὶ κάλλη—πάντα γὰρ ἦν ἐξαιρέτα—προσελθόντες ἐξεφώνησαν [38] | “ βασιλεὺς παρὰ θεοῦ εἶ σὺ ἐν ἡμῖν,” ἀληθέστατα λέγοντες· αἱ μὲν γὰρ ἄλλαι βασιλεῖαι πρὸς ἀν-θρώπων καθίστανται, πολέμοις καὶ στρατείαις καὶ κακοῖς ἀμυθήτοις, ἅπερ ἀντεπιφέρουσιν ἀλληλοκτονοῦντες οἱ δυνασκειῶν ἐφιέμενοι, πεζὰς καὶ ἵππικὰς καὶ ναυτικὰς δυνάμεις ἐπιτειχίζοντες· τὴν δὲ τοῦ σοφοῦ βασιλείαν ὀρέγει θεός, ἣν παραλαβὼν ὁ σπουδαῖος οὐδενὶ μὲν αἴτιος γίνεται κακοῦ, πᾶσι <sup>1</sup> Perhaps read πένθεσιν as Cohn suggests.

ON ABRAHAM, 257-261

but quietly and gently lighten the blow.<sup>a</sup> The testimonies for this are to be found in the holy 258 books which may never be convicted of false witness.
They show that after weeping for a little over the corpse he quickly rose up from it, holding further mourning, it appears, to be out of keeping with wisdom, which taught him that death is not the extinction of the soul but its separation and detachment from the body and its return to the place whence it came ; and it came, as was shown in the story of creation, from God.<sup>b</sup> And, as no reasonable 259 person would chafe at repaying a debt or deposit to him who had proffered it, so too he must not fret when nature took back her own, but accept the inevitable with equanimity. Now, when the chief 260 men of the country came to sympathize and saw nothing of the sort of mourning which was customary with themselves, no wailing, no chanting of dirges, no beating of breasts either of men or of women, but a quiet sober air of sorrow pervading the whole house, they were profoundly amazed, though indeed the rest of his life had struck them with admiration.
Then, as the greatness and glory of his virtue in all 261 its pre-eminence were more than they could keep to themselves, they approached him and exclaimed : “Thou art a king from God among us.” The words were indeed true, for other kingdoms are established among men with wars and campaigns and numberless ills which the ambitious for power inflict on each other in mutual slaughter, with forces of foot and horse and ships which they raise for the strife. But the kingdom of the Sage comes by the gift of God, and the virtuous man who receives it brings no harm

<sup>a</sup> See App. pp. 598-599.

<sup>b</sup> i.e. in De Op. 135.

PHILO

δὲ τοῖς ὑπηκόοις ἀγαθῶν κτήσεως ὁμοῦ καὶ χρή-σεως, εἰρήνην καὶ εὐνομίαν καταγγέλλων.

- 262 XLV. Ἔστι δὲ καὶ ἀνάγραφτος ἔπαινος αὐτῷ χρησιμοῖς μαρτυρηθεῖς, οὓς Μωυσῆς ἐθεσπίσθη,<sup>1</sup> δι' οὗ μηνύεται ὅτι "ἐπίστευσε τῷ θεῷ," ὅπερ λεχθῆναι μὲν βραχύτατόν ἐστιν, ἔργω δὲ βεβαιωθῆναι 263 μέγιστον. τίνι γὰρ ἄλλω πιστευτέον; ἀρά γε ἡγεμονίαις ἢ δόξαις καὶ τιμαῖς ἢ περιουσίᾳ πλούτου καὶ εὐγενείᾳ ἢ ὑγείᾳ καὶ εὐαισθησίᾳ ἢ ῥώμῃ καὶ κάλλει σώματος; ἀλλὰ ἀρχὴ μὲν πᾶσα σφαλερόν μυρίους ἔχουσα τοὺς λοχῶντας ἐφέδρους· εἰ δέ που καὶ βεβαιωθείη, μετὰ μυρίων ὄσων κακῶν, ἃ δρῶσι καὶ πάσχουσιν οἱ ἐν ταῖς ἡγεμονίαις, βεβαιούται.
264 δόξαι δὲ καὶ τιμαὶ κτῆμα σφαλερώτατον, ἐν ἀκρί-τοις ἡθεσι καὶ πτηνοῖς λόγοις ἀνεξετάστων ἀνθρώπων σαλευῖον· κἂν εἰ παραμένον, γνήσιον ἀγαθὸν 265 ἔχειν οὐ πέφυκε. πλοῦτοι δὲ καὶ εὐγένειαι προσ-ορίζονται<sup>2</sup> μὲν καὶ τοῖς φαυλοτάτοις· εἰ δὲ καὶ μόνοις σπουδαίοις, ἐγκώμια προγόνων καὶ τύχης 266 ἀλλ' οὐ τῶν ἐχόντων εἰσίν. ἀλλ' οὐδ' ἐπὶ τοῖς περὶ τὸ σῶμα μέγα φρονεῖν ἄξιον, ἐν οἷς τὰ ἄλογα ζῶα πλεονεκτεῖ· τίς γὰρ ἀνθρώπων ἰσχυ-ρότερος ἢ ῥωμαλεώτερος ταύρου μὲν ἐν ἡμέροις, ἐν δ' ἀγρίοις λέοντος; τίς δ' ὄξυωπέστερος ἰέρακος ἢ ἀετοῦ; τίς δὲ περὶ ἀκοὴν εὐτυχῆς οὕτως, ὡς τῶν ζῶων τὸ νωθέστατον, ὄνος; τίς δὲ περὶ τὰς ὀσφρήσεις κυνὸς ἀκριβέστερος, ὃν φασι οἱ κυνηγετικοὶ

<sup>1</sup> This use of θεσπίζω in the passive with the person prophesying as subject is very unusual. This passage is the only example given in L. & S. revised. I should prefer to read ἐθέσπισε.

<sup>2</sup> MSS. προσορμίζονται.

ON ABRAHAM, 261-266

to anyone, but the acquisition and enjoyment of good things to all his subjects, to whom he is the herald of peace and order.<sup>a</sup>

XLV. There is another record of praise attested 262 by words from Moses' prophetic lips. In these it is stated that he "trusted in God." Now that is a little thing if measured in words, but a very great thing if made good by action. For in what else should one 263 trust? In high offices or fame and honours or abundance of wealth and noble birth or health and efficacy of the senses or strength and beauty of body? But office is wholly precarious, beset by countless foes who lie in wait for it, and if by chance it is secured the security is accompanied by countless ills in which those in high positions are either the agents or the victims. Fame and honour are a most precarious 264 possession, tossed about on the reckless tempers and flighty words of careless men: and, when it abides, it cannot of its own nature contain genuine good. As for wealth and high birth, they attach themselves 265 even to the most worthless of men, and even if they were confined to the virtuous they would be a compliment not to the actual possessors but to their ancestors and to fortune. Again, neither 266 should we pride ourselves greatly on bodily endowments in which the unreasoning animals have the advantage over us; for what man is stronger or more muscular than the bull among domestic and the lion among wild beasts? Who has a keener sight than the hawk or the eagle? or who is so favoured in powers of hearing as that stupidest of animals, the ass? And as for smell, who has more accurate discernment than the hound, which, as the huntsmen

<sup>a</sup> See App. p. 599.

PHILO

- ῥινηλατοῦντα τοῖς μακρὰν πτώμασιν εὐσκόπως ἐπι-τρέχειν οὐ προϋδόμενον; ὅπερ γὰρ ὄψις ἐτέροις, τοῦτο μυκτῆρες κυσὶ θηρευτικοῖς καὶ ἰχνευτικοῖς.
 267 ὑγιεινότητά γε μὴν καὶ ὡς ἐνὶ μάλιστα ἄνοσα πλείστα τῶν ἀλόγων ζώων ἐστίν. ἐν δὲ τῷ περὶ κάλλους ἀγῶνι καὶ τῶν ἀψύχων ἐνὶά μοι δοκεῖ νικᾶν δύνασθαι τὰς ἀνδρῶν ὁμοῦ καὶ γυναικῶν εὐμορφίας καὶ ὑπερβάλλειν, ἀγάλματα καὶ ξόανα καὶ ζωγρα-φήματα καὶ συνόλως ὅσα γραφικῆς ἔργα καὶ πλαστικῆς ἐν ἑκατέρᾳ τέχνῃ κατορθούμενα, περὶ ἃ σπουδάζουσιν Ἕλληνες ὁμοῦ καὶ βάρβαροι πρὸς κόσμον τῶν πόλεων ἐν τοῖς ἐπιφανεστάτοις χωρίοις 268 ἀνατιθέντες. XLVI. μόνον οὖν ἀψευδὲς [39] | καὶ βέβαιον ἀγαθὸν ἢ πρὸς θεὸν πίστις, παρηγόρημα βίου, πλήρωμα χρηστῶν ἐλπίδων, ἀφορία μὲν κακῶν, ἀγαθῶν δὲ φορά, κακοδαιμονίας ἀπόγνωσις, γνώσις εὐσεβείας, κλήρος εὐδαιμονίας, ψυχῆς ἐν ἅπασι βελτίωσις ἐπερηρισμένης καὶ ἐφίδρυμένης τῷ πάντων αἰτίῳ καὶ δυναμένῳ μὲν 269 πάντα, βουλομένῳ δὲ τὰ ἄριστα. καθάπερ γὰρ οἱ μὲν δι' ὀλισθηρᾶς ὁδοῦ βαδίζοντες ὑποσκελίζονται καὶ πίπτουσιν, οἱ δὲ διὰ ξηρᾶς καὶ λεωφόρου ἀ-πταιίστω χρῶνται πορεία, οὕτως οἱ διὰ τῶν σωματικῶν μὲν καὶ τῶν ἐκτὸς τὴν ψυχὴν ἄγοντες οὐδὲν ἄλλ' ἢ πίπτειν αὐτὴν ἐθίζουσιν—ὀλισθηρὰ γὰρ ταῦτά γε καὶ πάντων ἀβεβαιότατα,—οἱ δὲ διὰ τῶν κατὰ τὰς ἀρετὰς θεωρημάτων ἐπὶ θεὸν σπεύδοντες ἀσφαλῆ καὶ ἀκράδαντον ὁδὸν εὐθύνουσιν, ὡς ἀψευδέστατα φάναι, ὅτι ὁ μὲν ἐκείνοις πεπιστευκῶς ἀπιστεῖ θεῷ, ὁ δ' ἀπιστῶν ἐκείνοις πεπίστευκε θεῷ.

<sup>a</sup> Or "plenitude."

<sup>b</sup> A somewhat inadequate rendering for ἀπόγνωσις, which

ON ABRAHAM, 266-269

tell us, led unerringly by the scent, races to the distant quarry which it has not seen ; for what sight is to other animals the nostrils are to the hounds used for hunting or tracking. Health ? Why, most of the un- 267 reasoning animals are exceedingly healthy and as far as possible free from disease. Beauty ? In the competition for this, I should say that some lifeless objects can beat and surpass the comeliness both of men and women. Such are the images and statues and pictures and in general all the creations of the painters and the sculptors which achieve success in either art and rouse the enthusiasm of Greeks and barbarians alike, who set them up in the most conspicuous places to adorn their cities.

XLVI. Faith in God, then, is the one sure and in- 268 fallible good, consolation of life, fulfilment <sup>a</sup> of bright hopes, dearth of ills, harvest of goods, inacquaintance <sup>b</sup> with misery, acquaintance with piety, heritage of happiness, all-round betterment of the soul which is firmly stayed on Him Who is the cause of all things and can do all things yet only wills the best. For, 269 just as those who walk on a slippery road are tripped up and fall, while others on a dry highway tread without stumbling, so those who set the soul travelling along the path of the bodily and the external are but learning it to fall, so slippery and utterly insecure are all such things ; while those who press onward to God along the doctrines of virtue walk straight upon a path which is safe and unshaken, so that we may say with all truth that belief in the former things is disbelief in God, and disbelief in them belief in God.

generally means "despair," and, in connexion with κακοδαιμονίας, "confidence of the absence." Philo, however, evidently intends an antithesis of form as well as of sense.

PHILO

- 270 ἄλλ' οὐ μόνον τὴν πρὸς τὸ ὄν πίστιν αὐτῷ μαρτυροῦσιν οἱ χρησμοί, τὴν βασιλίδα τῶν ἀρετῶν, ἀλλὰ καὶ πρῶτον αὐτὸν ἀπεφήναντο "πρεσβύτερον," τῶν πρὸ αὐτοῦ τριπλάσια καὶ πολλαπλάσια ἔτη βιωσάντων, ὧν οὐδένα παρειλήφαμεν ἀξιωθέντα ταύτης
- 271 τῆς προσρήσεως. καὶ μήποτ' εἰκότως· ὁ γὰρ ἀληθείᾳ πρεσβύτερος οὐκ ἐν μήκει χρόνων ἀλλ' ἐν ἐπαινετῷ καὶ τελείῳ βίῳ θεωρεῖται. τοὺς μὲν οὖν αἰῶνα πολὺν τρύψαντας ἐν τῇ μετὰ σώματος ζωῇ δίχα καλοκάγαθια πολυχρονίους παῖδας λεκτέον, μαθήματα πολιᾶς ἀξια μηδέποτε παιδευθέντας, τὸν δὲ φρονήσεως καὶ σοφίας καὶ τῆς πρὸς θεὸν πίστεως ἐρασθέντα λέγοι τις ἂν ἐνδίκως εἶναι πρεσβύτερον,
- 272 παρωνυμουῖντα τῷ πρώτῳ. τῷ γὰρ ὄντι πρῶτος ὁ σοφὸς τοῦ ἀνθρώπων γένους, ὡς κυβερνήτης μὲν ἐν νηϊ, ἄρχων δ' ἐν πόλει, στρατηγὸς δ' ἐν πολέμῳ, καὶ ψυχὴ μὲν ἐν σώματι, νοῦς δ' ἐν ψυχῇ, καὶ πάλιν οὐρανὸς μὲν ἐν κόσμῳ, θεὸς δ' ἐν οὐρανῷ.
- 273 ὃς τῆς πρὸς αὐτὸν πίστεως ἀγάμενος τὸν ἄνδρα πίστιν ἀντιιδίδωσιν αὐτῷ, τὴν δι' ὄρκου βεβαίωσιν ὧν ὑπέσχετο δωρεῶν, οὐκέτι μόνον ὡς ἀνθρώπῳ θεός, ἀλλὰ καὶ ὡς φίλος γνωρίμῳ διαλεγόμενος· φησὶ γὰρ "κατ' ἐμαυτοῦ ὥμοσα," παρ' ᾧ ὁ λόγος ὄρκος ἐστίν, ἔνεκα τοῦ τὴν διάνοιαν ἀκλινῶς καὶ
- 274 παγίως ἔτι μᾶλλον ἢ πρότερον ἐρηρεῖσθαι. πρεσβύτερος μὲν οὖν καὶ πρῶτος ἔστι τε καὶ λεγέσθω ὁ ἀστείος, νεώτερος δὲ καὶ ἔσχατος πᾶς ἀφρων, τὰ νεωτεροποιᾶ καὶ ἐν ἔσχαταῖς ταπτόμενα
- 275 μετιῶν.
- [40] Ταῦτα | μὲν οὖν ἐπὶ τοσοῦτον εἰρήσθω. τῷ δὲ πλήθει καὶ μεγέθει τῶν ἐπαίνων ἐπιτιθεὶς ὥσπερ τινὰ κεφαλὴν τοῦ σοφοῦ φησιν, ὅτι τὸν θεῖον νόμον

ON ABRAHAM, 270-275

But not only do the oracles attest his possession of 270 the queen of virtues, faith in the existent, but he is also the first whom they speak of as elder,<sup>a</sup> though those who lived before him tripled or many times multiplied his years. Yet of none of them do we hear that he was held worthy of the title and rightly, for the true elder is shown as such not by his length of days but by a laudable and perfect life. Those who have 271 passed a long span of years in the existence of the body without goodness or beauty of life must be called long-lived children who have never been schooled in the learning worthy of grey hairs; but he who is enamoured of sound sense and wisdom and faith in God may be justly called elder, a name of like significance to "first." For indeed the wise man 272 is the first of the human race, as a pilot in a ship or a ruler in a city or a general in war, or again as a soul in a body and a mind in a soul, or once more heaven in the world or God in heaven. That God 273 marvelling at Abraham's faith in Him repaid him with faithfulness by confirming with an oath the gifts which He had promised, and here He no longer talked with him as God with man but as a friend with a familiar.
For He, with Whom a word is an oath, yet says "By Myself have I sworn,"<sup>b</sup> so that his mind might be established more securely and firmly even than it was before. So, then, the man of worth is elder and first, 274 and so must he be called; but younger and last is every fool who pursues the ways which belong to rebellious youth and stand lowest in the list.

So much for all this, but to these praises of the Sage, 275 so many and so great, Moses adds this crowning saying "that this man did the divine law and the divine <sup>a</sup> Gen. xxiv. 1; LXX. πρεσβύτερος, E.V. "old."    <sup>b</sup> Gen. xxii. 16.

PHILO

καὶ τὰ θεῖα προστάγματα πάντα ἐποίησεν ὁ ἀνὴρ οὗτος, οὐ γράμμασιν ἀναδιδασκείας, ἀλλ' ἀγράφῳ τῇ φύσει σπουδάσας ὑγαινούσαις καὶ ἀνόσοις ὄρμαῖς ἐπακολουθήσαι· περὶ δὲ ὧν ὁ θεὸς ὁμολογεῖ, τί προσῆκεν ἀνθρώπου ἢ βεβαιότατα πιστεύειν; 276 τοιοῦτος ὁ βίος τοῦ πρώτου καὶ ἀρχηγέτου τοῦ ἔθνους ἐστίν, ὡς μὲν ἔνιοι φήσουσι, νόμιμος, ὡς δ' ὁ παρ' ἐμοῦ λόγος ἔδειξε, νόμος αὐτὸς ὧν καὶ θεσμὸς ἄγραφος.

ON ABRAHAM, 275-276

commands.”<sup>a</sup> He did them, not taught by written words, but unwritten nature gave him the zeal to follow where wholesome and untainted impulse led him. And when they have God’s promises before them what should men do but trust in them most firmly? Such was the life of the first, the founder 276 of the nation, one who obeyed the law, some will say, but rather, as our discourse has shown, himself a law and an unwritten statute.

<sup>a</sup> Gen. xxvi. 5.

ON JOSEPH
(DE IOSEPHO)

INTRODUCTION TO DE IOSEPHO

THE place of this treatise in the series, as well as the remarkable contrast between the character of Joseph as here represented and the Joseph of the allegorical commentary, have been discussed in the General Introduction to this volume. The treatise after a few words about the preparation given by the shepherd's craft for government tells the story of Joseph's dream, his brothers' jealousy, their sale of him to the merchants who in turn sold him to Potiphar and the false report which they made to Jacob (1-27). It contains the first two of the set speeches which are a distinguishing feature of the treatise, viz. Reuben's remonstrance (17-21) and Jacob's lamentation (23-27). The allegorization which follows treats a few scattered points and not the story as a whole. That politicians have to deal with institutions which are conventional rather than natural is indicated by Joseph's name of "Addition" (to Nature), that they must be resourceful by his coat of many colours, that they are often a prey to vanity by the false story that wild beasts had devoured him, that they are often bought and sold by the two sales (28-36); and it is to be noted that though the main purpose of the treatise is to show the ideal statesman, these mostly deal with the baser side of political life. When the story is resumed it relates his history in Potiphar's house till his imprisonment, in the course of which we have the eloquent but rather absurd remonstrance of Joseph to Potiphar's wife (37-53). The subjoined allegories are much more relevant than the earlier ones to the substance of the story and to the higher side of the politician. We may see the spiritual barrenness of the multitude and its tendency to cater for pleasure in Potiphar, the eunuch and cook, its demands on the statesman in Potiphar's wife and the refusal of the true statesman to cringe in Joseph's rejections of her overtures (54-79). In 80-124 the story is carried on through Joseph's life in prison, his interpretation of the dreams and his release and exaltation. Then from 125-147 follows what is not so much an allegory in the proper sense as a meditation on the thought that all life is a dream and the task of a true statesman is to discover and set forth the truths which lie behind this dream. After this we have a few more definitely allegorical interpretations of some of the incidents of Joseph's exaltation as illustrating the attitude of the democracy to the politician, and an attempt to show that the different treatment by Pharaoh of the cook (Potiphar), the butler and the baker represent the different ways in which the body-loving mind regards luxuries and necessities (148-156). From this point onwards to the end the story runs on continuously through the adventures of Joseph and his brethren as it appears in Genesis with, of course, much amplification both of incidents and speeches.

ON JOSEPH

ΒΙΟΣ ΠΟΛΙΤΙΚΟΥ ΟΠΕΡ ΕΣΤΙ ΠΕΡΙ ΙΩΣΗΦ

- [41] <sup>1</sup> I. Τρεῖς μὲν εἰσιν ἰδέαι, δι' ὧν τὸ ἄριστον τέλος, μάθησις, φύσις, ἄσκησις, τρεῖς δὲ καὶ σοφῶν οἱ πρεσβύτατοι κατὰ Μωυσῆν ἐπώνυμοι τούτων· ὧν τοὺς βίους ἀναγεγραφώς, τὸν τε ἐκ διδασκαλίας καὶ τὸν αὐτομαθῆ καὶ τὸν ἀσκητικόν, τέταρτον κατὰ τὸ ἐξῆς ἀναγράψω τὸν πολιτικόν, οὗ πάλιν ἐπώνυμον ἓνα τῶν φυλάρχων διασυνίστησιν ἐκ πρώτης ἡλικίας
- <sup>2</sup> συγκροτηθέντα. ἤρξατο μέντοι συγκροτεῖσθαι περὶ ἔτη γεγωνῶς ἑπτακαίδεκα τοῖς κατὰ ποιμενικὴν θεωρήμασιν, ἃ συνάδει τοῖς περὶ πόλιν· ὅθεν οἶμαι καὶ τὸ ποιητικὸν γένος “ ποιμένας λαῶν ” τοὺς βασιλεῖς εἴωθεν ὀνομάζειν· ὁ γὰρ τὴν ποιμενικὴν κατωρθωκῶς ἄριστος ἂν εἴη καὶ βασιλεύς, τῆς καλλίστης ζώων ἀγέλης, ἀνθρώπων, τὴν ἐπιμέλειαν
- 123 ἐν ταῖς ἐλάττωνος σπουδῆς ἀξίαις ἀναδιδαχθεῖς· καὶ καθάπερ τῷ μέλλοντι πολεμαρχεῖν καὶ στρατηγεῖν ἀναγκαιότατον αἰ περὶ τὰ κνηγγέσια μελέται, τὸν |
- [42] αὐτὸν τρόπον καὶ οἷς ἐλπίς ἐπιτροπεῦσαι πόλεως οἰκειότατον ποιμενικὴ προάγων τις οὔσα ἐπιστα-

<sup>a</sup> Gen. xxxvii. 2.

<sup>b</sup> Il. i. 263 and often elsewhere

ON JOSEPH

THAT IS, THE LIFE OF THE STATESMAN

I. The factors which produce consummate excellence are three in number: learning, nature, practice. And these names are represented in three of the wise men to whom Moses gives the senior place. Since I have described the lives of these three, the life which results from teaching, the life of the self-taught and the life of practice, I will carry on the series by describing a fourth life, that of the statesman. This name again has its representation in one of the patriarchs who, as Moses shews, was trained to his calling from his earliest youth. This training was first given to him at about the age 2 of seventeen by the lore of the shepherd's craft,<sup>a</sup> which corresponds closely to the lore of statesmanship. And therefore I think the order of poets often speaks of kings as shepherds of peoples,<sup>b</sup> for success in shepherding will produce the best king, since through the charge of flocks which deserve less thought and care he has been taught the charge of the noblest flock of living creatures—mankind. And, just as to the future leaders in wars, or in com- 3 manding armies, practice in the hunting-field is most necessary, so to those who hope to superintend a state nothing is so suitable as shepherding, which gives practice in the exercise of authority and

PHILO

4 σίας καὶ στρατηγίας. ἐνορῶν οὖν ὁ πατὴρ αὐτῷ φρόνημα εὐγενές καὶ μείζον ἢ κατ' ἰδιώτην ἐθαύ-μαζε καὶ περιεΐπε καὶ τῶν ἄλλων υἱῶν μᾶλλον ἔστεργεν, ἐπειδὴ ὀψίγονος ἦν, ὅπερ οὐδενὸς ἦττον ἀγωγόν ἐστὶν εἰς εὖνοιαν· καὶ ἄτε φιλόκαλος ὢν ἐζωπύρει τὴν τοῦ παιδὸς φύσιν ἐξαιρέτοις καὶ περιτταῖς ἐπιμελείαις, ἵνα μὴ ἐντύφηται μόνον, 5 ἀλλὰ καὶ θάττον ἐκλάμψη. II. φθόνος δὲ ὁ αἰεὶ ταῖς μεγάλαις εὐπραγίαις ἀντίπαλος καὶ τότε πᾶσι τοῖς μέρεσιν οἰκίαν κατορθοῦσαν ἐπιθέμενος διέστησε καθ' ἑνὸς πολλοὺς ἀδελφοὺς ἀλείψας, οἳ τῇ πρὸς ἐκεῖνον εὐνοίᾳ τοῦ πατρὸς ἰσόρροπον δύσνοιαν ἐπεδείκνυντο μισοῦντες ὅσον ἐστέργετο· τὸ δὲ μῖσος οὐκ ἐξελάουν, ἀλλ' ἐν ἑαυτοῖς ἐταμίευον, ὅθεν εἰκότως ἀργαλεώτερον ἐφύετο· τὰ γὰρ στεγόμενα πάθη μὴ διαπνέοντα τοῖς 6 ἐπισχοῦσι λόγοις βαρύτερα. χρώμενος οὖν ἀκάκοις τοῖς ἦθεσι καὶ τὴν ὑποικουροῦσαν ἔχθραν ἐκ τῶν ἀδελφῶν οὐ συνιείς, ὄναρ ἰδὼν αἰσιον, ὡς δὴ εὖνοις διηγεῖται· “ἔδοξα” γάρ φησιν “ἀμήτου καιρὸν ἐφεστάναι καὶ πάντας ἡμᾶς ἀφικομένους εἰς τὸ πεδίον ἐπὶ τὴν τοῦ καρποῦ συλλογὴν δρέπανα λαβόντας θερίζειν, αἰφνίδιον δὲ τὸ μὲν ἐμὸν δράγμα ὑπανίστασθαι καὶ μετεωρισθὲν ὀρθοῦσθαι, τὰ δὲ ὑμέτερα ὡσπερ ἀπὸ συνθήματος ἐπιδραμόντα τε-θηπέναι καὶ μετὰ τιμῆς τῆς πάσης προσκυνεῖν.”

---

<sup>a</sup> This can hardly be right: though στρατηγία is sometimes used in the civic sense of the praetorship, Philo is not likely to have used so predominantly military a word where the civic is in antithesis to the military. Two mss. have δημαγωγίας, but neither is this a very suitable word. What is wanted is ἡγεμονίας, or its equivalent. See also App. p. 600.

ON JOSEPH, 4-6

generalship.<sup>a</sup> So his father, observing in him a noble 4 spirit which rose above ordinary conditions, rendered to him high admiration and respect, while his love for this child of his later years—and nothing conduces to affection more than this—exceeded his love for his other sons. And being himself a lover of excellence, by special and exceptional attentions he fostered the fire of the boy's nature, in the hope that it would not merely smoulder but burst rapidly 5 into flame.

II. <sup>b</sup>But envy, which is ever 5 the enemy of high success, in this case too set to work and created division in a household where every part had been happily flourishing, and stirred up the many brethren against the one. They displayed ill-will to Joseph as a counterpoise to his father's goodwill, and equalled his love with their hatred.<sup>c</sup> They did not, however, proclaim that hatred aloud, but kept it a secret among themselves, and thus it naturally grew to greater bitterness. For emotions which are cooped up and find no vent become more violent because expression is stifled. Joseph in the 6 simple innocence of his nature had no notion of the enmity which was lurking in his brothers' hearts, and, believing them to be friendly, told them a significant dream which he had seen. "I thought," he said, "that harvest-time was with us, and that we had all come to the plain to gather in the crops. We had taken our sickles and were reaping, when suddenly my sheaf rose and stood bolt upright, while yours, as though at a signal, rushed up in astonishment and did homage to mine with every mark of honour."

<sup>b</sup> §§ 5-27 follow fairly closely the narrative of Gen. xxxvii.

<sup>c</sup> Literally "hating him as much as he was loved" (by his father).

PHILO

7 οἱ δὲ εἰς σύνεσιν ἀκριβεῖς καὶ δεινοὶ διὰ συμβόλων ἰχνηλατῆσαι πρᾶγμα<sup>1</sup> ἀδηλούμενον<sup>1</sup> εἰκόσι στοχασμοῖς “ μὴ νομίζεις ” ἔφασαν “ ἔσεσθαι βασιλεὺς ἡμῶν καὶ κύριος; ταῦτα γὰρ διὰ τῆς κατεψευσμένης φαντασίας ὑπαινίττη.” τὸ δὲ μῖσος ἔτι μᾶλλον ἕζωπυρεῖτο προσλαμβάνον ἀεὶ τινα καινὴν πρόφασιν

8 εἰς συναύξησιν. ὁ δὲ οὐδὲν ὑπιδόμενος ὀλίγαις ὕστερον ἡμέραις ὄναρ ἰδὼν ἕτερον καταπληκτικώτερον τοῦ προτέρου τοῖς ἀδελφοῖς ἀνέφερον· ὦτο γὰρ ἥλιον καὶ σελήνην καὶ ἔνδεκα ἀστέρας ἤκοντας προσκυνεῖν αὐτόν, ὡς τὸν πατέρα θαυμάσαντα τὸ γεγονός ἐναποθέσθαι τῇ διανοίᾳ ταμιεύοντα καὶ

9 σκοπούμενον τὸ ἐσόμενον. ἐμβριθῶς δ’ ἐνουθέτει τὸν παῖδα κατὰ δέος τοῦ μή τι διαμαρτεῖν καὶ φησιν· “ ἄρα δυνησόμεθα ἐγὼ καὶ ἡ μήτηρ καὶ οἱ ἀδελφοὶ προσκυνῆσαί σε;—διὰ μὲν γὰρ ἡλίου τὸν πατέρα, διὰ δὲ σελήνης τὴν μητέρα, διὰ δὲ

[43] τῶν ἔνδεκα ἀστέρων τοὺς | ἔνδεκα ἀδελφούς ὑποσημαίνειν ἕοικας—ὁ μὴδὲ εἰς νοῦν ποτε ἔλθοι τὸν σόν, ὦ παῖ, λαθοῦσα δὲ καὶ ἡ μνήμη τῶν φανέντων ὑπεξέλθοι· τὸ γὰρ τὴν ἐπὶ τοῖς οἰκειοῖς ἐλπίζειν καὶ παραδοκεῖν ἡγεμονίαν ἀπευκτὸν ἄγαν παρ’ ἐμοὶ κριτῆ, νομίζω δὲ καὶ παρὰ πᾶσιν, ὅσοις ἰσότητος

10 μέλει καὶ συγγενικῶν δικαίων.” εὐλαβηθεῖς δ’ ὁ πατήρ, μή τις ἐκ τῆς συνδιαιτήσεως ἐπιγένηται ταραχὴ καὶ στάσις τοῖς ἀδελφοῖς μνησικακοῦσιν ὑπὲρ τῶν ὄνειράτων τῷ θεασαμένῳ, τοὺς μὲν ἐκπέμπει ποιμανοῦντας, τὸν δὲ οἴκοι παρεφύλαττεν ἄχρι καιροῦ τοῦ προσήκοντος, εἰδὼς ὅτι τῶν τῆς

<sup>1</sup> Most mss. πρᾶγμα δηλούμενον which Cohn in his translation adopted (taking it with διὰ συμβόλων). The order of words seems to me to favour his earlier view.

ON JOSEPH, 7-10

His brothers, being men of keen intelligence, skillful at interpreting symbols and thus by probable conjectures discovering the obscure, replied: "Do you think that you will be our lord and king? For that is what you hint at in this lying vision." And their hatred, ever finding some new ground to augment it, was still more kindled against him. He, suspecting nothing, a few days after saw and told his brothers another dream even more astounding than the former. In this he dreamt that the sun and moon and eleven stars came and did him homage. This caused surprise to his father, who laid up the matter in his mind and carefully watched to see what the outcome would be. But, fearing that the boy had made a serious mistake,<sup>a</sup> he chid him severely, saying, "You seem to mean by the sun your father and by the moon your mother and by the eleven stars your eleven brothers. Can it be that I and your mother and your brothers shall do you homage? Let no such thought ever enter your mind, my son, and let the memory of what you saw insensibly fade away. For the idea of hoping and eagerly expecting to gain dominion over your family is very odious in my judgement, and I think that all who care for equality and justice between kinsfolk must agree."

Then, dreading lest continued association should breed disturbance and broils among the brothers through the grudge which they bore against the dreamer for his visions, Jacob sent them away to tend the sheep, but kept him at home for such season as should prove needed. He knew that time <sup>a</sup> Or "fearing that he himself had made a mistake" (in setting store upon the dream).

PHILO

- ψυχῆς παθῶν καὶ νοσημάτων λέγεται εἶναι χρόνος ἱατρός, ἱκανὸς καὶ πένθος ἀνελεῖν καὶ θυμὸν σβέσαι καὶ φόβον θεραπεῦσαι· πάντα γὰρ ἐξευμαρίζει καὶ
- 11 ὅσα κατὰ τὴν φύσιν δυσίατα. ὡς δ' ἐτόπασε μηδὲν ἔτι ταῖς διανοίαις αὐτῶν ἔχθος ὑποικουροῦν, ἐκπέμπει τὸν υἱὸν ἅμα μὲν τοὺς ἀδελφοὺς ἀσπασόμενον, ἅμα δὲ καὶ δηλώσοντα, πῶς ἔχουσιν αὐτοί τε καὶ αὐτῶν θρεμμάτων ἀγέλαι.
- 12 III. Ταύτην τὴν ὁδὸν ἀρχὴν συνέβη γενέσθαι μεγάλων κακῶν τε αὐτῶν καὶ ἀγαθῶν παρ' ἐλπίδας ἑκατέρων. ὁ μὲν γὰρ ταῖς ἐπισκῆψεσι πειθαρχῶν τοῦ πατρὸς ἦει πρὸς τοὺς ἀδελφούς, οἱ δὲ μακρόθεν ἀφικνούμενον ἰδόντες ἄλλος ἄλλω διελάουον οὐδὲν εὐφημον, ὁπότε οὐδ' ὄνομαστί προσαγορεύειν ἠξίουον αὐτόν, ἀλλ' ὄνειροπλήγα καὶ “ ἐνυπνιαστὴν ” καὶ τοιαῦτα ἐπεφήμιζον καὶ ἐπὶ τοσοῦτον προῆγον ὀργῆς, ὥστε καὶ τὸν ἐπ' αὐτῷ φόνον οὐ πάντες ἀλλ' οἱ πλείους ἐβούλευον καὶ ὑπὲρ τοῦ μὴ καταφωραθῆναι ρίπτειν ἀνελόντες ἐγνώκεσαν εἰς ὄρυγμα γῆς βαθύτατον· πολλαὶ δὲ εἰσι περὶ τὸν τόπον ὕδατος
- 13 ὀμβρίου δεξαμεναί. καὶ μικροῦ τὸ μέγιστον ἄγος, ἀδελφοκτονίαν, εἰργάσαντο, εἰ μὴ παρηγορίαις τοῦ πρεσβυτάτου μόλις ἐπέισθησαν, ὃς παρῆνει μὴ ἐφάψασθαι τοῦ μιάσματος, ἀλλ' αὐτὸ μόνον εἰς ἐν τῶν ὀρυγμάτων ρῖψαι, διανοούμενός τι σωτήριον, ἵνα λαβὼν μετὰ τὴν ἀναχώρησιν ἀπαθῆ παντὸς
- 14 κακοῦ παραπέμψῃ τῷ πατρί. συναινεσάντων δέ, ὁ μὲν προσιῶν ἠσπάζετο, οἱ δὲ ὡς πολέμιον συλ-

ON JOSEPH, 10-14

is said to be the physician of the distempers and ailments of the soul and is able to remove grief, to quench anger and to heal fear, for time relieves everything, even what is naturally hard to cure. But when he guessed that they would have ceased 11 to harbour enmity in their hearts, he sent him partly to salute his brothers and partly to bring him word how it fared with themselves and the flocks under their charge.

III. This journey proved to be the source of great 12 evil and great good, both exceeding anything that could have been expected. For Joseph, in obedience to his father's commands, went to his brethren, but they, when they saw him coming afar off, talked to each other, and their language was very sinister. They did not even deign to speak of him by his name, but called him the dream-driveller and the vision-monger and similar terms. Their anger reached such a pitch that they plotted by a majority, though not unanimously, to murder him, and in order to avoid detection they determined to throw his dead body into a very deep pit in the ground. In that region there are many such, made to hold the rain-water. And they were only deterred from 13 committing that most accursed of deeds, fratricide, by the exhortation of the eldest among them, to which they reluctantly yielded. He urged them to keep their souls clear from the abominable act, and merely to throw him into one of the deep pits, thinking to contrive some means for saving him and hoping when they had gone away to take him up and send him to their father quite unharmed. When 14 they had agreed to this, Joseph approached and saluted them, but they caught hold of him as though λαβόντες ἀπαμπίσχουσι τὴν ἐσθῆτα καὶ τὸν μὲν καθιμῶσι εἰς βαθεῖς βόθρους, τὴν δ' ἐρίφου αἵματι φοινίζαντες διαπέμπονται τῷ πατρὶ πρόφασιν ὡς ὑπὸ θηρίων δαπανηθέντος.

PHILO

- 15 IV. Ἐκεῖνη δὲ τῇ ἡμέρᾳ κατὰ τινα συντυχίαν ἔμποροὶ τινες ὠδοιπόρουσιν τῶν ἔθους ἐχόντων ἀπ' Ἀραβίας εἰς Αἴγυπτον κομίζουσιν φόρτον· οἷς ἀνελεύσαντες τὸν ἀδελφὸν πιπράσκουσιν, ἡγησαμένου τὴν γνώμην τοῦ καθ' ἡλικίαν τετάρτου· καὶ γὰρ οὗτός μοι δοκῶ δεῖσας, μὴ ποθ' ὑπὸ τῶν ὀργῆν ἀμείλικτον ἐπ' αὐτῷ ζωπυρούντων δολοφονηθῆ, συνεβούλευ-
- [44] σεν ἀποδόσθαι δουλείαν ὑπαλλαττόμενος | θανάτου,
- 16 κούφωτερον κακὸν μείζονος. ὁ δὲ πρεσβύτατος— οὐ γὰρ παρῆν πιπρασκομένου—διακύψας καὶ μὴ κατιδὼν, ὃν ἀπολελοίπει πρὸ μικροῦ, ἐβόα καὶ ἐκεκράγει καὶ τὰς ἐσθῆτας περιρρηξάμενος ἄνω καὶ κάτω καθάπερ ἐμμανῆς ἐφέρετο τὰς χεῖρας κροτῶν καὶ τὰς τρίχας τίλλων, “ τί πέπονθε; ” λέγων·
- 17 “ εἶπατε, ζῆ ἢ τέθνηκεν; εἰ μὲν οὐκ ἔστι, δεῖξατέ μοι τὸν νεκρὸν, ἵν' ἐπιδακρύσας τῷ πτώματι λωφήσω τῆς συμφορᾶς· ἰδὼν κείμενον παρηγορηθήσομαι. τί καὶ νεκρῷ μνησικακοῦμεν; πρὸς τοὺς ἐκποδῶν φθόνος οὐδεὶς φύεται. εἰ δὲ ζῆ, ποῖ γῆς ἀπελήλυθε; φυλάττεται παρὰ τίσιν; οὐ γὰρ δὴ κἀγὼ καθάπερ ἐκεῖνος ἐν ὑποψίαις εἰμί, ὡς ἀπι-
- 18 στείσθαι.” εἰπόντων δ' ὅτι πέπραται καὶ τὴν τιμὴν ἐπιδεικνυμένων, “ καλὴν ἔμπορίαν ” εἶπεν “ ἐστείλασθε· τὰ κέρδη διανεμώμεθα· τοῖς ἀνδραποδισταῖς περὶ κακίας ἄθλων ἀμιλλησάμενοι στεφανηφορῶμεν,

---

* Or “ a fine business you have embarked on.”

ON JOSEPH, 14-18

he were an enemy in battle and stripped him of his coat. They then let him down by ropes into the open depths. His coat they dyed red in the blood of a kid, and sent it to his father with the story that wild beasts had made away with him.

IV. Now it chanced that day that some merchants 15 belonging to a caravan which was wont to carry wares from Arabia to Egypt were travelling that way. To these they sold their brother, after hauling him up, the leader in this plan being the fourth eldest brother. He, I imagine, feared that Joseph might be treacherously murdered by the others who were inflamed with such merciless wrath against him, and therefore advised them to sell him and thus substitute the 16 lesser evil of slavery for the greater evil of death. The eldest brother had not been present at the sale. When he looked down into the pit and did not see the boy whom he had left there a short time before, he cried aloud and shouted, rent his garments and rushed up and down like a madman, beating his hands together and tearing his hair. "Tell me," he cried, "what 17 has become of him. Is he alive or dead? If he is no more, shew me his dead body, that I may weep over the corpse and thus make the calamity seem lighter. If I see him lying here I shall be comforted. Why do we still bear a grudge to the dead? Envy cannot fasten on the departed. But if he is alive where on earth has he gone? In whose charge is he kept? Tell me, for you cannot suspect me as well as him that 18 you should refuse me your confidence." When they said that he had been sold, and shewed the price that had been paid, "A fine bargain you have made,"<sup>a</sup> he said. "Let us divide the profits. We have competed with slave-dealers for the prize of wickedness ;

PHILO

- προσυπερβάλλοντες αὐτοὺς ὡμότητι σεμνυνόμεθα· κατὰ ἄλλοτρίων ἐκεῖνοι συντίθενται, κατὰ δ' οἰκειο-
- 19 τάτων καὶ φιλτάτων ἡμεῖς. κεκαινούργηται μέγα ὄνειδος, περιβόητος αἰσχύνη. μνημεῖα καλοκάγαθίας οἱ πατέρες ἡμῶν πανταχοῦ τῆς οἰκουμένης ἀπέλιπον, ἀπολείψομεν καὶ ἡμεῖς ἀπιστίας καὶ μισανθρωπίας ἀθεραπεύτους διαβολάς· φθάνουσι γὰρ αἱ τῶν μεγαλουργηθέντων φῆμαι πανταχόσε, τῶν μὲν ἐπαινετῶν θαυμαζόμεναι, τῶν δ' ὑπαιτίων
- 20 ψόγου καὶ κατηγορίας τυγχάνουσαι. τίνα ἄρα τρόπον ὁ πατήρ ἡμῶν τὴν περὶ τῶν συμβεβηκότων ἀκοὴν δέξεται; τρισμακαρίῳ καὶ τρισευδαίμονι τὸν καθ' ἡμᾶς βίον ἀβίωτον παρέσχησθε. τὸν πραθέντα τῆς δουλείας ἢ τοὺς πεπρακότας τῆς ὡμότητος οἰκτιεῖται; πολὺ μᾶλλον εὖ οἶδα ἡμᾶς, ἐπεὶ καὶ τοῦ ἀδικεῖσθαι τὸ ἀδικεῖν χαλεπώτερον· τὸ μὲν γὰρ δυσὶ βοηθεῖται τοῖς μεγίστοις, ἐλέω καὶ ἐλπίδι, τὸ δ' οὐδετέρου μετέχον ἅπασιν ἠτᾶται
- 21 τοῖς κριταῖς. ἀλλὰ τί ταῦτα θρηνῶν ἀπηχῶ; βέλτιον ἡσυχάζειν, μὴ καὶ αὐτὸς παραπολαύσω τινὸς ἀπευκτοῦ· τραχύτατοι γὰρ <ἐστε> εἰς ὄργην καὶ ἀπαραίτητοι καὶ πνεῖ λαμπρὸς ἔτι ὁ ἐν ἐκάστῳ θυμός."
- 22 V. Ὡς δ' ἤκουσεν ὁ πατήρ οὐ τάληθές, ὅτι πέπραται ὁ υἱὸς αὐτοῦ, τὸ δὲ ψεῦδος, ὅτι τέθηκε καὶ ὡς ὑπὸ θηρίων ἐξανάλωται, πληχθεὶς τὰ μὲν ὦτα διὰ τῶν λεγομένων, τοὺς δ' ὀφθαλμοὺς διὰ τοῦ φανέντος—ὁ γὰρ χιτῶν αὐτοῦ κατεσχισμένος | [45] καὶ κατηκισμένος καὶ πολλῶ αἵματι πεφοινιγμένος ἐκεκόμιστο—, συγχυθεὶς ὑπὸ τῆς περιπαθήσεως

<sup>a</sup> Or " his life under the conditions which we have created."

ON JOSEPH, 18-22

let us wear the crown, and glory that we surpass them in cruelty, for their designs are aimed against aliens, ours against our nearest and dearest. A great and 19 novel reproach has been brought about, a far-famed disgrace. Our fathers left behind in every part of the world records of their noble conduct ; we shall leave behind us beyond all retrieving the scandal of our faithlessness and inhumanity. For, when deeds of grave import are done, the rumours of them reach everywhere, causing admiration where they are praiseworthy, censure and contumely when they are guilty. How will our father receive the report of the 20 event ? Thrice blessed he was and thrice happy, and ye have made his life with us<sup>a</sup> intolerable. Which will he pity most, the sold for his enslavement or the sellers for their cruelty ? Surely us far more than him, since it is less grievous to suffer wrong than to do it.<sup>b</sup> The former is assisted by two mighty forces, pity and hope ; the latter has no part in either, and in the judgement of all comes off the worst. But why 21 do I lament thus wildly ? It were better to hold my peace, lest I too come in for a share in some horrible fate. For ye are exceedingly savage of temper and merciless, and the fierceness in each heart is still in full blast."

V. When his father heard, not the truth that his 22 son had been sold, but the lie that he was dead and had seemingly been devoured by wild beasts, the words that he heard and the sight that he saw fell like a blow on his ears and eyes. For Joseph's tunic had been brought to him rent and marred and stained scarlet with much blood. Collapsing under his great

But I should prefer to read as Mangey suggests τὸ καθ' ἡμᾶς =" as far as we can do it." <sup>b</sup> See App. p. 600.

PHILO

ἀχανῆς ἐπὶ πλείστον χρόνον ἔκειτο, μηδ' ὅσον τὴν κεφαλὴν ἐπᾶραι δυνάμενος, θλιβούσης καὶ ἐκτραχη-23 λιζούσης τῆς συμφορᾶς. εἶθ' ὥσπερ τινὰ πηγὴν δακρύων ἐξαίφνης ἀνιείς μετ' οἰμωγῆς πικρᾶς παρεῖās καὶ γένεια καὶ στέρνα κατένιπτε καὶ τὰς περὶ αὐτὸν ἐσθῆτας ἅμα τοιαῦτ' ἐπιλέγων· “ οὐχ ὁ θάνατός με λυπεῖ, τέκνον, ἀλλ' ὁ τούτου τρόπος<sup>1</sup>. εἰ ἐπὶ γῆς ἐτάφης τῆς σῆς, παρηγορούμην, ἐθεράπευσα, ἐνοσήλευσα πρότερον, ἀποθνήσκοντι τελευταίων ἀσπασμῶν ἐκοινώνησα, τοὺς ὀφθαλμοὺς συνέκλεισα, ἐπεδάκρυσσα κειμένῳ τῷ νεκρῷ, πολυ-24 τελῶς ἐκήδευσα, τῶν νομιζομένων οὐδὲν παρἔλιπον. ἀλλ' εἰ καὶ ἐπὶ τῆς ξένης, εἶπον ἄν· τὸ οἰκεῖον ὄφλημα τῆς φύσεως ἀπολαβούσης, ὧ οὗτος, μὴ κατήφει· πρὸς ζῶντας αἱ πατρίδες, ἀποθανόντων δὲ πᾶσα γῆ τάφος· ὠκύμορος οὐδεὶς ἢ πάντες ἀνθρωποι, καὶ γὰρ ὁ μακροβιώτατος ὀλιγοχρόνιος 25 ἀντεξεταζόμενος αἰῶνι. εἰ δὲ δὴ καὶ βιαίως καὶ ἐξ ἐπιβουλῆς ἔδει θνήσκειν, ἦν ἄν μοι κουφότερον κακόν, ὑπ' ἀνθρώπων ἀναιρεθέντος, οἱ κτείναντες νεκρὸν ἂν ἠλέησαν, ὡς ἐπαμήσασθαι κόνιν καὶ τὸ σῶμα συγκρύψαι· εἰ δὲ καὶ πάντων ἐγεγένητο ὠμότατοι, τί πλέον εἶχον ἢ ρύψαντες ἄταφον ἀπ-ἀλλάττεσθαι; τῶν δ' ἐν ὄδῳ παριόντων ἴσως τις ἐπιστὰς καὶ θεασάμενος, οἴκτον τῆς κοινῆς λαβὼν φύσεως, ἐπιμελείας καὶ ταφῆς ἠξίωσε. νυνὶ δ', ὡς λόγος, ἀτιθάσις καὶ σαρκοβόροις θηρσὶν εὐωχία καὶ θοίνη γέγονας γενεσαμένους καὶ ἐστιαθεῖσι τῶν

<sup>1</sup> MSS. τάφος.

<sup>a</sup> Cf. De Abr. 257.

<sup>b</sup> Perhaps a somewhat distorted reminiscence of ἀνδρῶν γὰρ ἐπιφανῶν πᾶσα γῆ τάφος Thuc. ii. 43.

ON JOSEPH, 22-26

emotion, he lay for a great while with closed lips, not even able to lift his head, so utterly did the calamity afflict and break him down. Then, suddenly pouring 23 forth tears like a fountain, he watered his cheeks and chin and breast and his own raiment, while bitterly wailing, and uttered such words as these: "Child, it is not your death which grieves me, but the manner of it. If you had been buried in your own land, I should have comforted and watched and nursed your sick-bed, exchanged the last farewells as you died, closed your eyes, wept over the body as it lay there, given it a costly funeral and left none of the customary 24 rites undone. Nay, even if it had been on foreign soil, I should have said to myself: 'Man, be not downcast that nature has recovered the forfeit that was her due.'<sup>a</sup> Separate countries concern the living: every land is the tomb of the dead.<sup>b</sup> Death comes early to none, or rather it comes early to all, for few are the years of the longest-lived compared with eternity. And, indeed, if you needs must have died 25 by violence or through premeditation, it would have been a lighter ill to me, slain as you would have been by human beings, who would have pitied their dead victim, gathered some dust and covered the corpse. And then if they had been the cruellest of men, what more could they have done but cast it out unburied and go their way, and then perhaps some passer-by would have stayed his steps, and, as he looked, felt pity for our common nature and deemed the tendance of burial to be its due. But, as it is, you have become, in common phrase, a rich banquet for savage carnivorous beasts who have found my own flesh and blood to their taste, and feasted thereon. I am long 26

PHILO

- 26 ἐμῶν σπλάγχνων. ἀθλητῆς εἰμι τῶν ἀβουλήτων, εἰκῆ γεγύμνασμαι πολλαῖς κακοπαθείαις, ἀλώμενος, ξενιτεύων, θητεύων, ἀναγκαζόμενος, ἄχρι καὶ ψυχῆς ἐπιβουλευόμενος ὑφ' ὧν ἦκιστ' ἐχρήν· καὶ πολλὰ μὲν εἶδον, πολλὰ δ' ἤκουσα, μυρία δ' αὐτὸς ἔπαθον τῶν ἀνηκέστων, ἐφ' οἷς παιδευθεὶς μετριοπαθεῖν οὐκ ἐγνάμφθην· ἀλλ' οὐδὲν τοῦ συμβεβηκότος ἀφορητότερον, ὃ μου τὴν ῥώμην τῆς ψυχῆς ἀνατέ-
- 27 τροφε καὶ καθήρηκε. τί γὰρ μείζον ἢ οἰκτρότερον πένθος; ἢ μὲν ἐσθῆς τοῦ παιδὸς διακεκόμισται μοι τῷ πατρί, τοῦ δὲ οὐ μέρος, οὐ μέλος, οὐ βραχὺ λείψανον· ἀλλ' ὁ μὲν ὄλος δι' ὄλων δεδαπάνηται μηδὲ ταφῆς δυνηθεὶς μεταλαχεῖν, ἢ δ' οὐδ' ἂν εἰσπεμφθῆναι μοι δοκεῖ τὸ παράπαν, εἰ μὴ πρὸς ἀνίας ὑπόμνησιν καὶ ὧν ὑπέμεινε καίνωσιν, εἰς ἀλήστους καὶ συνεχεῖς ἐμοὶ συμφοράς." καὶ ὁ μὲν
- [46] τοιαῦτ' ἀπωδύρετο. οἱ δ' ἔμποροι | πιπράσκουσι τὸν παῖδα ἐν Αἰγύπτῳ τῶν εὐνούχων τινὶ τοῦ βασιλέως, ὅς ἐστιν ἀρχιμάγειρος.
- 28 VI. "Ἄξιον μέντοι μετὰ τὴν ῥητὴν διήγησιν καὶ τὰ ἐν ὑπονοίαις προσαποδοῦναι· σχεδὸν γὰρ τὰ πάντα ἢ τὰ πλείστα τῆς νομοθεσίας ἀλληγορεῖται. ὁ τοίνυν ἐπικρινόμενος τρόπος παρὰ μὲν Ἑβραίοις Ἰωσήφ καλεῖται, παρὰ δ' Ἑλλησι "κυρίου πρόσθεσις," εὐθυβολώτατον <ὄνομα> καὶ τῷ δηλουμένῳ πράγματι οἰκειότατον· προσθήκη γάρ ἐστι τῆς τὸ κῦρος ἀπάντων ἀνημμένης φύσεως ἢ κατὰ δήμους trained in the athletics of adversity, drilled by many a random stroke of misfortune, a wanderer, a stranger, a serf, a thrall, my very life and soul a mark for the malice of those by whom I should least have been so treated. Many desperate calamities I have seen and heard: thousands of them have I experienced myself, but trained to moderate my feelings at such I remained unmoved. But none was more unbearable than this event which has overturned and destroyed the strength of my soul. For what sorrow could be 27 greater or more pitiful? My son's raiment has been conveyed to me, his father, but not a part of him, not a limb, not a tiny fragment. But, while he has been utterly made away with beyond even any possibility of burial, his raiment too would not have been sent to me at all save to remind me of my sorrow, and to make his sufferings live again as calamities constant and indelible to myself." Thus did he bewail. But the merchants sold the boy in Egypt to one of the king's eunuchs who was his chief cook.<sup>a</sup>

<sup>a</sup> So LXX. E.V. "An officer of Pharaoh's, the captain of the guard."

VI. After this literal account of the story, it will 28 be well to explain the underlying meaning, for, broadly speaking, all or most of the law-book is an allegory. The kind of character then here under discussion is called in the Hebrew "Joseph," but in our language is "addition of a lord," a most significant title well suited to the thing which it indicates, since polity as seen in the various peoples is an addition to nature who is invested with a universal lordship.<sup>b</sup>

<sup>b</sup> The interpretation of Joseph as="Addition" has appeared in De Mut. 89 and De Som. ii. 47 without any appendage. There, however, it is applied to adventitious wealth, luxuries and the like. Here the appendage "of a lord" helps Philo in the political interpretation which he gives. See further App. p. 600.

- 29 πολιτεία. ἡ μὲν γὰρ μεγαλόπολις ὅδε ὁ κόσμος ἐστὶ καὶ μιᾷ χρῆται πολιτεία καὶ νόμῳ ἐνί· λόγος δέ ἐστι φύσεως προστακτικὸς μὲν ὧν πρακτέον, ἀπαγορευτικὸς δὲ ὧν οὐ ποιητέον· αἱ δὲ κατὰ τόπους αὐταὶ πόλεις ἀπερίγραφοί τέ εἰσιν ἀριθμῶ καὶ πολιτείας χρῶνται διαφερούσαις καὶ νόμοις οὐχὶ τοῖς αὐτοῖς, ἄλλα γὰρ παρ' ἄλλοις ἔθῃ καὶ
- 30 νόμιμα παρεξυρημένα καὶ προστεθειμένα. αἴτιον δὲ τὸ ἄμικτον καὶ ἀκοινῶνητον οὐ μόνον Ἑλλήνων πρὸς βαρβάρους ἢ βαρβάρων πρὸς Ἑλληνας, ἀλλὰ καὶ τὸ ἑκατέρου γένους ἰδίᾳ πρὸς τὸ ὁμόφυλον· εἶθ' ὡς ἔοικε τὰ ἀναίτια αἰτιώμενοι, καιροῦς ἀβουλήτους, ἀγωνίαν καρπῶν, τὸ λυπρόγεων, τὴν θέσιν ὅτι παράλιος ἢ μεσόγειος ἢ κατὰ νῆσον ἢ κατὰ ἠπειρον ἢ ὅσα τούτοις ὁμοιότροπα, τάληθές ἡσυχάζουσιν· ἔστι δ' ἡ πλεονεξία καὶ ἡ πρὸς ἀλλήλους ἀπιστία, δι' ἧς οὐκ ἀρκεσθέντες τοῖς τῆς φύσεως θεσμοῖς τὰ δόξαντα συμφέρειν κοινῇ τοῖς ὁμογνώμοσιν ὁμίλοις
- 31 ταῦτα νόμους ἐπεφήμισαν. ὥστε εἰκότως προσθῆκαι μᾶλλον αἱ κατὰ μέρος πολιτεῖαι μιᾶς τῆς κατὰ τὴν φύσιν· προσθῆκαι μὲν γὰρ οἱ κατὰ πόλεις νόμοι τοῦ τῆς φύσεως ὀρθοῦ λόγου, προσθήκη δέ ἐστι πολιτικὸς ἀνὴρ τοῦ βιοῦντος κατὰ φύσιν.
- 32 VII. οὐκ ἀπὸ σκοποῦ μέντοι καὶ χιτῶνα ποικίλον ἀναλαμβάνειν λέγεται· ποικίλον γὰρ πολιτεία καὶ πολύτροπον, μυρίας ὄσας ἐνδεχομένη μεταβολάς, πράγμασιν, αἰτίαις, <sup>a</sup> This term for the Stoic ideal of the world conceived of as a state and expressed in the name κοσμοπολίτης has been used in De Op. 19 and appears again in Mos. ii. 51. It is not quoted from any other writer than Philo in this sense. Cf. also μεγαλοπολίτης De Op. 143.

ON JOSEPH, 29-32

For this world is the Megalopolis or "great city,"<sup>a</sup> 29 and it has a single polity and a single law, and this is the word or reason of nature, commanding what should be done and forbidding what should not be done. But the local cities which we see are unlimited in number and subject to diverse polities and laws by no means identical, for different peoples have different customs and regulations which are extra inventions and additions. The cause of this is the reluctance to 30 combine or have fellowship with each other, shewn not only by Greeks to barbarians and barbarians to Greeks, but also within each of them separately in dealing with their own kin. And then we find them alleging causes for this which are no real causes, such as unfavourable seasons, want of fertility, poverty of soil or how the state is situated, whether it is maritime or inland or whether it is on an island or on the mainland and the like. The true cause they never mention, and that is their covetousness and mutual mistrusts, which keep them from being satisfied with the ordinances of nature, and lead them to give the name of laws to whatever approves itself as advantageous to the communities which hold the same views. Thus naturally particular polities are rather 31 an addition to the single polity of nature, for the laws of the different states are additions to the right reason of nature, and the politician is an addition to the man whose life accords with nature.

VII. Further, he is quite properly said to assume a 32 coat of varied colours,<sup>b</sup> for political life is a thing varied and multiple, liable to innumerable changes brought about by personalities, circumstances, <sup>b</sup> Gen. xxxvii. 3. Observe that the point has not been mentioned in the narrative.

PHILO

- πράξεων ιδιότησι, καιρῶν καὶ τόπων διαφοραῖς.
- 33 ὡσπερ γὰρ κυβερνήτης ταῖς τῶν πνευμάτων μεταβολαῖς συμμεταβάλλει τὰς πρὸς εὐπλοίαν βοηθείας, εὐθύνων τὸ σκάφος οὐχ ἐνὶ τρόπῳ, καὶ ἰατρός οὐ μᾶ χρῆται θεραπείᾳ πρὸς ἅπαντας τοὺς κάμνοντας, ἀλλ' οὐδὲ πρὸς ἓνα, τοῦ πάθους μὴ ἐπιμένοντος, ἀλλ' ἐπιτηρῶν ἀνέσεις, ἐπιτάσεις, πληρώσεις, κενώσεις, αἰτίων μεταβολὰς ποικίλλει ταῦτα<sup>1</sup> πρὸς
- [47] σωτηρίαν ποτὲ μὲν ταυτὶ ποτὲ δὲ ταυτὶ | προσ-
- 34 φέρων, οὕτως, οἶμαι, καὶ τὸν πολιτικὸν ἀναγκαῖον εἶναί τινα πολυειδῆ καὶ πολύμορφον, ἕτερον μὲν κατ' εἰρήνην, ἕτερον δ' ἐν πολέμῳ, ἄλλον δὲ ἐπισυνισταμένων ὀλίγων ἢ πολλῶν, τῶν μὲν ὀλίγων εὐτόνως κατεξανιστάμενον, μετὰ δὲ πειθοῦς τοῖς πολλοῖς ὀμιλοῦντα, καὶ ὅπου μὲν μετὰ κινδύνου τὸ εἶναι,<sup>2</sup> διὰ τὸ κοινωφελές φθάνοντα τοὺς ἄλλους αὐτουργία, ὅπου δὲ πόνων ἢ σκέψις, ἐτέροις ὑπ-
- 35 ηρετεῖν ἐξιστάμενον. εὖ μέντοι τὸ φάναι πιπράσκεσθαι τὸν ἄνθρωπον· ὁ μὲν γὰρ δημοκόπος καὶ δημηγόρος ἀναβὰς ἐπὶ τὸ βῆμα, καθάπερ τὰ πιπρασκόμενα τῶν ἀνδραπόδων, δούλος ἀντ' ἐλευθέρου γίνεται διὰ τῶν τιμῶν, ἃς δοκεῖ λαμβάνειν, ἀπ-
- 36 αχθεῖς ὑπὸ μυρίων δεσποτῶν. ὁ δ' αὐτὸς καὶ θηριάλωτος εἰσάγεται· θηρίον δὲ ἀτίθασον ἢ λοχῶσα κενοδοξία συναρπάζουσα καὶ διαφθείρουσα

<sup>1</sup> Unless ἀνέσεις etc. can represent processes rather than symptoms, in which case we should have to change, as Mangey suggested, αἰτίων into σιτίων, ταῦτα is quite illogical. Cohn suggests πάντα or τὰ. The latter is adopted in the translation.

<sup>2</sup> This τὸ εἶναι seems quite impossible and the reading of some mss. τοῦ εἶναι ("danger to existence"), though thought possible by Cohn, does not commend itself. I suggest for motives, individualities of conduct, differences in occasions and places. The pilot is helped to a successful voyage by means which change with the changes of the wind, and does not confine his guidance of the ship to one method. The physician does not use a single form of treatment for all his patients, nor even for an individual if the physical condition does not remain unaltered, but he watches the lowering and the heightening of the strain, its alternations of fullness and emptiness and all the changes of symptoms,<sup>a</sup> and varies his salutary processes, sometimes using one kind and sometimes another. And so too the politician must needs be a man of many sides and many forms. He must be a different man in peace from what he is in war, another man as those who venture to oppose him are few or many, resisting the few with vigorous action but using persuasion in his dealings with the many, and when danger is involved he will, to effect the common good, outstrip all others in his personal activity, but when the prospect is one of labour merely he will stand aside and leave others to serve him. Again it is rightly said that this person is sold, for when the would-be popular orator mounts the platform, like a slave in the market, he becomes a bond-servant instead of a free man, and, through the seeming honours which he receives, the captive of a thousand masters. Again, he is also represented as the prey of wild beasts, and indeed the vainglory which lies in ambush and then seizes and destroys those who consideration τὸ λέναι διὰ τοῦ κοινωφελούς (according to the common idiom of λέναι διὰ). "When the path of serving the commonweal involves danger," etc.

ON JOSEPH, 32-36

<sup>a</sup> Lit. "causes."

---

PHILO

τοὺς χρωμένους. οἱ δ' ὠνησάμενοι καὶ πιπράσκουσιν· οὐ γὰρ εἰς δεσπότης τῶν πολιτευομένων, ἀλλ' ὄχλος, ἐξ ἑτέρων ἕτεροι κατὰ τινας ἐφεδρείας καὶ διαδοχάς· οἱ δὲ τρίπρατοι κακῶν θεραπόντων τρόπον ἀλλάττουσι τοὺς κυρίους οὐχ ὑπομένοντες τοὺς προτέρους διὰ τὴν ἀψίκορον καὶ φιλόκαινον τῶν ἡθῶν ἀνωμαλίαν.

- 37 VIII. Τοσαῦτα καὶ περὶ τούτων. ὁ μέντοι νεανίας εἰς Αἴγυπτον ἀχθεὶς καὶ γενόμενος, ὡς ἐλέχθη, παρ' εὐνούχῳ δεσπότη, τῆς καλοκάγαθίας καὶ εὐγενείας πείραν ὀλίγαις ἡμέραις δοὺς τὴν ἐπὶ τοῖς ὁμοδούλοις ἀρχὴν παραλαμβάνει καὶ συμπάσης τῆς οἰκίας τὴν ἐπιμέλειαν· ἤδη γὰρ ὁ κτησάμενος ἔτεκμηριοῦτο διὰ πολλῶν, ὡς οὐκ ἄνευ θείας ἐπιφροσύνης ἐκεῖνος ἕκαστα λέγει τε καὶ πράττει.
- 38 τῷ μὲν οὖν δοκεῖν ὑπὸ τοῦ πριαμένου καθίστατο τῆς οἰκίας ἐπίτροπος, ἔργῳ δὲ καὶ ταῖς ἀληθείαις ὑπὸ φύσεως μνωμένης αὐτῷ πόλεων καὶ ἔθνους καὶ χώρας μεγάλης ἡγεμονίαν· ἔδει γὰρ τὸν μέλλοντα ἔσεσθαι πολιτικὸν ἐγγυμνάσασθαι καὶ ἐνασκηθῆναι πρότερον τοῖς κατ' οἰκονομίαν· οἰκία τε γὰρ πόλις ἐστὶν ἐσταλμένη καὶ βραχεῖα καὶ οἰκονομία συνηγμένη τις πολιτεία, ὡς καὶ πόλις μὲν οἶκος μέγας,
- 39 πολιτεία δὲ κοινὴ τις οἰκονομία. δι' ὧν μάλιστα παρίσταται τὸν αὐτὸν οἰκονομικὸν τε εἶναι καὶ πολιτικόν, κὰν τὰ πλήθη καὶ μεγέθη τῶν ὑποκειμένων διαλλάττη· καθάπερ ἐπὶ ζωγραφίας ἔχει

---

<sup>a</sup> The false statement, as in De Som. ii. 65, is treated as true for the purposes of allegory. Cf. De Mig. 21.

<sup>b</sup> §§ 37-53 follow the narrative of Gen. xxxix.

<sup>c</sup> See note on De Abr. 99.

ON JOSEPH, 36-39

indulge it is a savage beast.<sup>a</sup> Once more his purchasers sell him again, for politicians have not one but a multitude of masters who buy them one from another, each waiting to take his turn in the succession, and those who are thus sold again and again like bad servants change their masters, because, capricious and fitful in character as they are and ever hankering after novelty, they cannot endure their old lords.

VIII. <sup>b</sup> Enough on this subject also. To resume the 37 story, when the youth had been brought to Egypt and as I have said placed with the eunuch as his master, he gave proof in a few days of his nobility of character and nature, and therefore he received authority over his fellow-servants and the charge of the whole household; for his owner had already observed many signs that everything which he said or did was under God's directing care. So, while in outward 38 appearance it was his purchaser who appointed him steward of his household, in fact and reality it was nature's <sup>c</sup> doing, who was taking steps to procure for him the command of whole cities and a nation and a great country. For the future statesman needed first to be trained and practised in house management; for a house is a city compressed into small dimensions, and household management may be called a kind of state management, just as a city too is a great house and statesmanship the household management of the general public.<sup>d</sup> All this shews 39 clearly that the household manager is identical with the statesman, however much what is under the purview of the two may differ in number and size. The same holds with sculpture and painting, for the † See App. p. 600.

PHILO

καὶ πλαστικῆς· ὁ γὰρ ἀγαθὸς ἀνδριαντοποιὸς ἢ ζωγράφος, εἴαν τε πολλὰ καὶ κολοσσιαῖα μεγέθη κατασκευάζῃ, εἴαν τε ὀλίγα καὶ βραχύτερα, τὴν αὐτὴν ἐπιδεικνύμενος τέχνην ὁ αὐτὸς ἐστὶ.

- 40 IX. Σφόδρα δὲ εὐδοκιμῶν ἐν τοῖς κατὰ τὴν οἰκουρίαν ἐπιβουλεύεται πρὸς τῆς τοῦ δεσπότητος [48] γυναικὸς ἐπιβουλήν τὴν ἐξ ἔρωτος | ἀκολάστου. τῇ γὰρ εὐμορφία ἐπιμανεῖσα τοῦ νεανίσκου καὶ ἀκαθέκτως περὶ τὸ πάθος λυττώσα τοὺς περὶ μίξεις λόγους προσέφερεν ἐρρωμένως ἐναντιουμένῳ καὶ μηδ' ὄλως προσίεσθαι ὑπομένοντι διὰ τὴν ἐκ φύσεως καὶ μελέτης ἐνυπάρξασαν κοσμιότητα καὶ
 41 σωφροσύνην. ἐπεὶ δὲ ζωπυροῦσα καὶ ἀναφλέγουσα τὴν ἔκνομον ἐπιθυμίαν αἰεὶ μὲν ἀπεπειρᾶτο, αἰεὶ δ' ἀπετύγγανε, βία λοιπὸν προσπαθοῦσα ἐχρήτο καὶ λαβομένη τῆς ἀμπεχόνης εὐτόνως ἄχρι τῆς εὐνῆς ἐπεσπάσατο ῥώμῃ κραταιοτέρα, τοῦ πάθους ἰσχὺν ἐπιδιδόντος, ὃ καὶ τοὺς ἀσθενεστάτους εἴωθε νευ-42 ροῦν. ὁ δὲ τῆς παρούσης ἀκαιρίας γενόμενος δυνατώτερος τὰς ἐλευθερίους καὶ ἀξίας τοῦ γένους ἔρρηξε φωνάς, “ τί βιάζῃ; ” λέγων· “ ἐξαιρέτοις ἔθεσι καὶ νομίμοις χρώμεθα ἡμεῖς οἱ Ἑβραίων 43 ἀπόγονοι. τοῖς ἄλλοις ἐφέϊται μετὰ τὴν τεσσαρεσκαιδεκάτην ἡλικίαν πόρναις καὶ χαμαιτύπαις καὶ ταῖς ὅσαι μισθαρνοῦσιν ἐπὶ τοῖς σώμασι μετὰ πολλῆς ἀδείας χρῆσθαι, παρ' ἡμῖν δὲ οὐδ' ἑταῖρα ζῆν ἔξεστιν, ἀλλὰ κατὰ τῆς ἑταιρούσης ὠρισταὶ δίκη θάνατος. πρὸ δὴ συνόδων νομίμων ὁμιλίαν ἑτέρας γυναικὸς οὐκ ἴσμεν, ἀλλ' ἀγνοὶ γάμων ἀγναῖς

---

<sup>a</sup> Cf. Deut. xxiii. 17. The passage hardly suggests this good statuary or painter, whether the works which he produces are many and of colossal size or few and smaller, is the same man exhibiting the same skill.

IX. But while he was winning a high reputation 40 in household affairs, his master's wife made him the object of her designs, which were prompted by licentious love ; for wrought up to madness by the beauty of the youth, and putting no restraint upon the frenzy of her passion, she made proposals of intercourse to him which he stoutly resisted and utterly refused to accept, so strong was the sense of decency and temperance which nature and the exercise of control had implanted in him. And, 41 since, as she fed the fire of lawless lust till it burst into a blaze, her constant efforts to gain him as constantly failed, at last in an accession of passion she was fain to employ violence. She caught hold of his outer garment and powerfully drew him to her bed by superior force, since passion which often braces even the weakest gave her new vigour. But 42 he shewed power which was more than a match for the untoward situation and burst into speech with a frankness worthy of his race. "What," he said, "are you forcing me to ? We children of the Hebrews follow laws and customs which are especially our own. Other nations are permitted after the fourteenth 43 year to deal without interference with harlots and strumpets and all those who make a traffic of their bodies, but with us a courtesan is not even permitted to live, and death is the penalty appointed for women who ply this trade.<sup>a</sup> Before the lawful union we know no mating with other women, but come as virgin men extreme interpretation, but Philo repeats it in De Spec. Leg. iii. 51.

PHILO

- παρθένους προσερχόμεθα προτεθειμένοι τέλος οὐχ 44 ἡδονὴν ἀλλὰ γνησίων παιδῶν σποράν. εἰς δὴ ταύτην καθαρεύσας τὴν ἡμέραν οὐκ ἄρξομαι παρα-νομεῖν ἀπὸ μοιχείας, τοῦ μεγίστου τῶν ἀδικη-μάτων, ὀφείλων, εἰ καὶ τὸν ἄλλον χρόνον ὑπῆρχον ἐκδεδιητημένος καὶ νεότητος ὄρμαϊς ἡγμένος καὶ τὴν ἐγχώριον ἐξηλωκῶς τρυφήν, ὅμως ἀλλότριον μὴ θηρᾶν γάμον· ἐφ' ᾧ τίς ἀνθρώπων οὐ φονᾶ; περὶ γὰρ τῶν ἄλλων εἰωθότες διαφέρεσθαι μόνον τοῦθ' ὁμογνωμονοῦντες πανταχοῦ πάντες ἄξιον θανάτων μυρίων ἐνόμισαν ἀκρίτους ἐκδιδόντες τοὺς ἀλόντας 45 τοῖς πεφωρακόσι. σὺ δ' ἐπιδαιψιλευομένη καὶ τρίτον<sup>1</sup> προστίθης μοι μίασμα κελεύουσα μὴ μοιχεύειν μόνον, ἀλλὰ καὶ δέσποιναν καὶ δεσπότην γυναικὰ διαφθείρειν· εἰ μὴ ἄρα τούτου χάριν παρ-ῆλθον εἰς τὴν ὑμετέραν οἰκίαν, ἵν' ἀποστάς τῶν ὑπηρεσιῶν, ἃς δεῖ θεράποντα παρέχειν, μεθύω καὶ ἐμπαροινῶ ταῖς ἐλπίσι τοῦ πριαμένου νοθεύων 46 αὐτοῦ γάμον, οἰκίαν, συγγένειαν. ἀλλὰ γὰρ οὐχ ὡς δεσπότην μόνον ἀλλὰ καὶ ὡς εὐεργέτην ἤδη τιμᾶν προάγομαι· πάντ' ἐπιτέτροφέ μοι τὰ οἰκεία, οὐδὲν οὐ μικρὸν οὐ μέγα ὑπεξήρηται τὸ παράπαν δίχα σοῦ τῆς γυναικός· ἀνθ' ὧν ἄξιον αὐτὸν ἐν οἷς [49] παραινεῖς ἀμείψασθαι; καλὰς | ὡς ἔοικεν ἀντιπαρ-ἔξω δωρεὰς ταῖς προὔπηργμείαις χάρισιν οἰκείας.
 47 ὁ μὲν δεσπότης αἰχμάλωτον ὄντα με καὶ ξένον ταῖς εὐεργεσίαις ἐλεύθερον καὶ ἀστὸν τὸ γοῦν ἐπ' αὐτὸν

<sup>1</sup> So mss.: Cohn τριττὸν. If τρίτον is kept the three μιάσματα will be (1) harlotry, (2) adultery, (3) adultery with a master's wife. With τριττὸν they will presumably be (1) adultery, (2) adultery with a mistress, (3) adultery with a master's

ON JOSEPH, 43-47

to virgin maidens. The end we seek in wedlock is not pleasure but the begetting of lawful children. To this day I have remained pure, and I will not take 44 the first step in transgression by committing adultery, the greatest of crimes. For even if I had always hitherto lived an irregular life, drawn by the appetites of youth and following after the luxury of this land, I ought not to make the wedded wife of another my prey. Who does not thirst for the blood of the adulterer? For while men are accustomed to differ on other matters they are all and everywhere of one mind on this; they count the culprits worthy of a multitude of deaths, and deliver them unjudged into the hands of those who have discovered their guilt. But you in your extravagance would impose upon 45 me a third pollution when you bid me not only commit adultery but also defile my mistress and my master's wife. You cannot think that for this purpose I came into your house, to decline the duties which a servant should render and play like a drunkard and a sot with the hopes of the master who bought me by debasing his bed, his household and his kin. Indeed I am called on to honour him not 46 only as a master but further as a benefactor. He has entrusted to me all his belongings and nothing at all great or small has been withdrawn from me save you, his wife. Is it well that I should requite him for this by doing what you urge me to do? A fine gift this would seem to be, a suitable return for preceding favours! The master found me a captive 47 and an alien, and has made me by his kindnesses a free man and a citizen as far as he can do it. Shall wife. But no stress is laid on any distinction between these two in the sequel.

---

PHILO

- ἦκον μέρος ἀπειργάσατο, ἐγὼ δ' ὁ δοῦλος ὡς ξένω καὶ αἰχμαλώτῳ προσενεχθήσομαι τῷ δεσπότῃ; τίνι ψυχῇ παραδεξάμενος τὸ ἀνοσιούργημα τοῦτο; προσβλέψω δὲ τίσιν ὀφθαλμοῖς ὁ σιδηροῦς ἐγώ; τὸ συνειδὸς ἐλλαμβανόμενον ὀρθοῖς ὄμμασιν οὐκ ἔάσει προσβλέπειν, κἂν δυνηθῶ λανθάνειν· λήσομαι δ' οὐδαμῶς· εἰσὶ γὰρ ἕξετασταὶ μυρίοι τῶν λάθρα 48 δρωμένων, οἷς οὐ θέμις ἠσυχάζειν. ἐὼ λέγειν ὅτι, κἂν μηδεὶς ἕτερος αἰσθηταὶ ἢ συναισθόμενος μὴ κατείπη, μηνυτῆς οὐδὲν ἤττον αὐτὸς γενήσομαι κατ' ἑμαυτοῦ τῷ χρώματι, τῷ βλέμματι, τῇ φωνῇ, καθάπερ μικρῷ πρότερον εἶπον, ὑπὸ τοῦ συνειδότητος ἐλεγχόμενος· εἰ δὲ καὶ μηδεὶς κατερεῖ, τὴν πάρεδρον τοῦ θεοῦ δίκην καὶ τῶν πραγμάτων ἔφορον οὔτε δέδιμεν οὔτ' αἰδούμεθα;”
- 49 X. Πολλὰ τοιαῦτα συνέιροντος καὶ φιλοσοφοῦντος, ἐκεκώφητο πρὸς ἅπαντα· δεῖναι γὰρ αἱ ἐπιθυμίαι καὶ τὰς ἀκριβεστάτας τῶν αἰσθήσεων ἐπισκιάσαι· ὅπερ συνιδῶν ἀποδιδράσκει τὰ ἱμάτια καταλιπὼν ἐν ταῖς χερσὶν αὐτῆς, ὧν ἐπέληπτο.
- 50 τοῦτο παρέσχεν αὐτῇ τὸ ἔργον εὐρεσιλογεῖν προφάσεις σκεπτομένη κατὰ τοῦ νεανίσκου, αἷς αὐτὸν ἀμυνεῖται· παραγενομένῳ γὰρ ἐξ ἀγορᾶς τῷ αὐτῆς ἀνδρὶ καθυποκρινομένη τὴν σὺφρονα καὶ κοσμίαν καὶ τοῖς ἀκολάστοις ἐπιτηδεύμασι πάνυ δυσχεραίνουσαν “ἦγαγες” ἔφη “θεράποντα ἡμῖν παῖδα Ἑβραῖον, ὃς οὐ μόνον ἤδη τὴν σὴν ψυχὴν διέφθαρκεν εὐχερῶς καὶ ἀνεξετάστως ἐπιτρέψαντος αὐτῷ τὴν οἰκίαν, ἀλλὰ καὶ ἐμοῦ ἀπετόλμησεν αἰσχύναι 51 τὸ σῶμα. ταῖς γὰρ ὁμοδούλοις οὐκ ἐξήρκεσεν αὐτῷ χρῆσθαι μόναις ἀσελγεστάτῳ καὶ λαγνιστάτῳ γενομένῳ, πειρᾶν δὲ καὶ τὴν δέσποιναν ἐπεχείρησεν

ON JOSEPH, 47-51

I, the slave, deal with the master as though he were an alien and a captive? What would be my inward feelings if I agreed to this unholy act? What my looks when I face him, iron-hearted though I be? No, conscience will take hold of me and not suffer me to look him straight in the face<sup>a</sup> even if I can escape detection. And that cannot be, for there are thousands to sit in judgement on my secret doings who must not remain silent; not to mention that, 48 even if no other knows of it or reports the knowledge which he shares with me, all the same I shall turn informer against myself through my colour, my look, my voice, convicted as I said just now by my conscience. And even if no one denounce me, have we no fear or respect for justice, the assessor of God, justice who surveys all our doings?"<sup>b</sup>

X. Thus he spoke long and wisely, but she remained deaf to it all. For lust is powerful to becloud even the keenest of the senses. And seeing this he fled leaving in her hands the garments which she had grasped. This action of his gave her the opportunity to invent a story and devise charges against the youth to punish him. When her husband came in from the market she put on the air of a chaste and modest woman who regards licentious practices with the utmost indignation. "You brought to us," she said, "a Hebrew lad as servant, who has not only corrupted your soul when you lightly and thoughtlessly entrusted your household to him, but has had the audacity to dishonour my body. For not content 51 with taking merely the women who were his fellow-servants, so utterly lewd and lascivious has he shown himself, he has attempted to violate me by force, <sup>a</sup> Or "with unchanged eyes."    <sup>b</sup> See App. pp. 600-601.

- ἐμὲ καὶ βιάζεσθαι. καὶ τὰ δείγματα τῆς φρενοβλαβείας ἐναργῆ καὶ δῆλά ἐστι· περιπαθήσασα γὰρ ὡς ἐξεφώνησα τοὺς ἔνδον βοηθοὺς ἐπικαλοῦσα, πτοηθεὶς διὰ τὸ ἀπερίσκεπτον τὴν ἐσθῆτα καταλιπὼν ἀποδιδράσκει φόβῳ συλλήψεως.” ἦν καὶ ἐπιδεικνυμένη πίστιν ἐδόκει προσφέρειν τῶν λεγομένων.
- 52 ἄπερ ἀληθῆ νομίσας ὁ δεσπότης εἶναι κελεύει τὸν ἄνθρωπον εἰς εἰρκτὴν ἀπαγαγεῖν δυσὶ τοῖς μεγίστοις ἁμαρτῶν, ἐνὶ μὲν ὅτι μὴ μεταδοὺς ἀπολογίας ἀκρίτως κατέγνω τοῦ μηδὲν ἠδίκηκότος ὡς τὰ μέγιστα παρανομήσαντος, ἐτέρῳ δὲ ὅτι ἡ ἐσθῆς, ἣν προῦφερον ἡ γυνὴ ὡς ἀπολειφθεῖσαν ὑπὸ τοῦ νεανίσκου, πίστις ἦν βίας, οὐχ ἦν ἐκεῖνος εἰργάζετο, ἀλλὰ τὴν ὑπομονὴν<sup>1</sup> ἦν ὑπέμεινεν ἐκ τῆς γυναικός· βιαζομένου μὲν γὰρ ἔργον ἦν τὴν ἀμπεχόνην τῆς δεσποίνης κατέχειν, βιασθέντος δὲ τὴν ἰδίαν ἀφαιρεθῆναι. συγγνωστός | δ’ ἴσως τῆς ἄγαν ἀπαιδευσίας, ἅτε τὴν δίαιταν ἐν μαγειρείῳ ποιούμενος αἵματος καὶ καπνοῦ καὶ τέφρας ἀνάπλεω,<sup>2</sup> τοῦ λογισμοῦ καιρὸν οὐκ ἔχοντος ἐνηρμεῖν καὶ σχολάζειν ἑαυτῷ διὰ τὸ πεφύρθαι μᾶλλον ἢ οὐχ ἦττον τοῦ σώματος.
- 54 XI. Τρεῖς ἤδη χαρακτῆρας τοῦ πολιτικοῦ διετύπωσε, τὸν τε ποιμενικὸν καὶ τὸν οἰκονομικὸν καὶ τὸν καρτερικόν. περὶ μὲν οὖν τῶν προτέρων εἴρηται δυεῖν, ὁ δ’ ἐγκρατῆς οὐχ ἦττον ἐκείνων πρὸς
- 55 πολιτείαν συντείνει. πρὸς μὲν οὖν ἅπαντα τὰ τοῦ βίου πράγματα λυσιτελὲς ἐγκράτεια καὶ σωτήριον, <sup>1</sup> Not only awkward, but ungrammatical. It would be simpler with Mangey to expunge τὴν ὑπ. than, as Wendland suggests, to substitute τῆς ἐπιβουλήs.

<sup>2</sup> MSS. ἀνάπλεως or -ων.

ON JOSEPH, 51-55

me his mistress. The proofs of his insane depravity are clear and evident, for when in my great agitation I cried aloud and called those who were indoors to my aid, he was so scared at my unexpected action<sup>a</sup> that he left his garment behind and fled in fear of arrest." This garment she showed and made as though she were proffering a proof of her tale. Joseph's master, believing this to be true, ordered 52 him to be carried away to prison, and in this he committed two great errors. First he gave him no opportunity of defence, and convicted unheard this entirely innocent person as guilty of the greatest misconduct. Secondly, the raiment which his wife produced as left by the youth was a proof of violence not employed by him but suffered at her hands. For if force were used by him he would retain his mistress's robe, if against him he would lose his own. But his master may perhaps be pardoned for his 53 gross ignorance, since his days were spent in a kitchen full of blood and smoke and cinders, where the reason even more, or at least no less, than the body lives amid confusion and has no chance of quietly retiring into itself.

XI. Moses has now set before us three character- 54 istics of the statesman, his shepherd-craft, his household-management, his self-control. We have dealt with the two first, but the last-named has quite as much bearing on statesmanship. While in all the 55 affairs of life self-mastery is a source of profit and <sup>a</sup> This is an unusual sense for ἀπελοκεπτος which regularly means with Philo "reckless" or "inconsiderate." It is possible, though less likely, that it may mean here "in his thoughtlessness," i.e. he did not consider what evidence he would leave behind him.

PHILO

πρὸς δὲ τὰ πόλεως καὶ διαφερόντως, ὡς ἀφθόνως τοῖς βουλομένοις μανθάνειν πάρεστι καὶ προχειρό-56 τατα. τίς γὰρ ἀγνοεῖ τὰς ἐξ ἀκρασίας ἔθνεσι καὶ χώραις καὶ ὄλοις κλίμασι τῆς οἰκουμένης ἐν γῆ καὶ θαλάττῃ γνωμένας συμφοράς; τῶν γὰρ πολέμων οἱ πλείους καὶ μέγιστοι δι' ἔρωτας καὶ μοιχείας καὶ γυναικῶν ἀπάτας συνέστησαν, ὑφ' ὧν τὸ πλείστον καὶ ἄριστον ἐξαναλώθη τοῦ τε Ἑλληνικοῦ καὶ βαρβαρικοῦ γένους καὶ τῶν πόλεων ἢ νεότης 57 ἐφθάρη. εἰ δὲ τὰ ἐξ ἀκρασίας στάσεις ἐμφύλιοι καὶ πόλεμοι καὶ κακὰ ἐπὶ κακοῖς ἀμύθητα, δῆλον ὅτι τὰ ἐκ σωφροσύνης εὐστάθεια καὶ εἰρήνη καὶ τελείων κτῆσις ἀγαθῶν καὶ ἀπόλαυσις.

58 XII. Ἄξιον μέντοι καὶ τὰ διὰ τούτων ἐμφαινόμενα κατὰ τὸ ἀκόλουθον παραστήσαι. ὁ πριάμενος τὸν ἐπικρινόμενον εὐνοῦχος εἶναι λέγεται· δεόντως· ὁ γὰρ ὠνούμενος τὸν πολιτικὸν ὄχλος ἐστὶ πρὸς ἀλήθειαν εὐνοῦχος, ὅσα μὲν τῷ δοκεῖν ἔχων τὰ γεννητικά, τὰς δ' εἰς τὸ γεννᾶν δυνάμεις ἀφηρημένος, καθάπερ καὶ οἱ τὰς ὄψεις ὑποχυθέντες ὀφθαλ-μούς ἔχοντες τῆς δι' ὀφθαλμῶν ἐνεργείας στέρονται 59 βλέπειν οὐ δυνάμενοι. τίς οὖν ἢ πρὸς ὄχλον εὐνούχων ὁμοιότης; ὅτι ἄγονός ἐστι σοφίας δοκῶν ἐπιτηδεύειν ἀρετὴν· ὅταν γὰρ μιγάδων καὶ συγ-κλύδων πλήθος ἀνθρώπων εἰς ταῦτόν συνέλθῃ, λέγει μὲν τὰ δέοντα, φρονεῖ δὲ καὶ πράττει τὰναντία, τὰ νόθα πρὸ τῶν γνησίων ἀποδεχόμενος, ἔνεκα τοῦ δόξης μὲν ἠττάσθαι, τὸ δ' ἀληθεία καλὸν μὴ ἐπι-60 τηδεύειν. ὅθεν καὶ—τὸ παραλογώτατον—γυνῆ τῷ

---

<sup>a</sup> Philo is no doubt thinking primarily of the Trojan War, and it is not unlike him to magnify this into a plural. Still safety, it is particularly so in affairs of state, as those who will may learn from plentiful and obvious examples. Who does not know the misfortunes which 56 licentiousness brings to nations and countries and whole latitudes of the civilized world on land and sea? For the majority of wars, and those the greatest, have arisen through amours and adulteries and the deceits of women, which have consumed the greatest and choicest part of the Greek race and the barbarian also, and destroyed the youth of their cities.<sup>a</sup> And, if the results of licentiousness are civil strife and 57 war, and ill upon ill without number, clearly the results of continence are stability and peace and the acquisition and enjoyment of perfect blessings.

ON JOSEPH, 55-60

XII. We should now, however, in due course 58 show the lessons revealed to us by this story. The purchaser of the subject of our examination is said to be a eunuch; rightly so, for the multitude which purchases the statesman is in very truth a eunuch, possessing to all appearance the organs of generation but deprived of the power of using them, just as those who suffer from cataract have eyes but lack the active use of them and cannot see. How then 59 does the multitude resemble eunuchs? It is because the multitude is unproductive of wisdom, though it seems to practise virtue. For when a mixed crowd of heterogeneous persons comes together, it says what is right, but it thinks and does the opposite. It prefers the spurious to the genuine, because it is under the dominion of appearances and does not practise what is truly excellent. And, therefore, also, paradoxical though it be, this 60 he can hardly have failed to have Antony and Cleopatra also in mind.

PHILO

ευνούχῳ τούτῳ συνοικεῖ· μνᾶται γὰρ ὄχλος ἐπι-θυμίαν, ὥσπερ ἀνὴρ γυναῖκα, δι' ἧς ἕκαστα καὶ λέγει καὶ πράττει σύμβουλον αὐτὴν ποιούμενος ἀπάντων ῥητῶν καὶ ἀπορρήτων μικρῶν τε αὐ καὶ μεγάλων, ἧκιστα προσέχειν εἰωθὼς τοῖς ἐκ λογι-51 σμοῦ. προσφύεστατα μέντοι καὶ ἀρχιμάγειρον αὐτὸν καλεῖ· καθάπερ γὰρ οὐδὲν ἕτερον ἐπιτηδεύει μάγειρος ἢ τὰς ἀνηνύτους καὶ περιττὰς γαστρὸς ἡδονάς, τὸν αὐτὸν τρόπον καὶ ὁ πολιτικὸς ὄχλος τὰς δι' ἀκοῆς τέρψεις τε καὶ θρύψεις, ὑφ' ὧν 52 οἱ τόνοι τῆς διανοίας χαλῶνται καὶ τρόπον τινα | τὰ νεῦρα τῆς ψυχῆς ἐκλύεται. τὴν δὲ πρὸς ἰατροὺς μαγείρων διαφορὰν τίς οὐκ οἶδεν; οἱ μὲν τὰ ὑγιεινά, κἂν μὴ προσηνῆ τυγχάνη, μόνα διὰ σπουδῆς τῆς πάσης εὐτρεπίζονται, οἱ δ' ἔμπαλιν 63 μόνα τὰ ἡδέα τοῦ συμφέροντος ἀλογοῦντες. ἰα-τροῖς μὲν οὖν εἰκόασιν ἐν δήμῳ νόμοι καὶ οἱ κατὰ νόμους ἄρχοντες βουλευταὶ τε καὶ δικασταὶ φροντίζοντες τῆς τῶν κοινῶν σωτηρίας καὶ ἀσφαλείας ἀκολάκευτοι, ὄψαρτυταῖς δὲ οἱ πολυάνθρωποι τῶν νεωτέρων ὄμιλοι· μέλει γὰρ αὐτοῖς οὐ τὰ συνοίσοντα, ἀλλὰ πῶς τὴν ἐν τῷ παρόντι καρπώσονται 64 μόνον ἡδονήν. XIII. ἐρᾷ δ' ὡς ἀκόλαστος γυνή καὶ ἡ τῶν ὄχλων ἐπιθυμία τοῦ πολιτικοῦ καὶ φησιν αὐτῷ· “ παρελθὼν, ὦ οὗτος, εἰς ὄχλον, ᾧ συνοικῶ, πάντων ἐκλαθοῦ τῶν ἰδίων ἡθῶν, ἐπιτηδευμάτων, λόγων, ἔργων, ἐν οἷς ἐτράφη· ἐμοὶ δὲ πειθάρχει καὶ ἐμὲ θεράπευε καὶ ὅσα δι' ἡδονῆς ἐστὶ μοι 65 πρᾶττε. αὐστηρὸν γὰρ καὶ αὐθέκαστον καὶ ἀληθείας ἑταῖρον καὶ ἀκριβοδίκαιον, ὄγκῳ καὶ σεμ-

<sup>a</sup> See App. p. 601.

ON JOSEPH, 60-65

eunuch is mated with a wife. For the multitude woos desire as a man woos a woman, and makes her his medium in all that he says and does, and takes her as his counsellor in all things great and small, whether decency sanctions them or not, and is wont to pay little heed to the promptings of reason.

Very aptly too does Moses call him a chief cook ; 61 for, just as the cook is solely occupied in endlessly providing superfluous pleasures for the belly, so is the multitude, considered as politicians, in choosing what charms and pleases the ears, and thus the tension of the understanding is relaxed and the sinews of the soul, so to speak, unstrung. As for 62 the difference between cooks and physicians, it is a matter of common knowledge.<sup>a</sup> The physician devotes all his energies solely to preparing what is wholesome, even if it is unpalatable, while the cook deals with the pleasant only and has no thought of what is beneficial. Now in a democracy, physi- 63 cians are represented by laws, and those who rule in accordance with the law, members of councils and juries who consider the safety and security of the common weal and are proof against flattery ; cooks by the swarming crowd of younger spirits, for they do not care what will be beneficial but only how they may reap pleasure for the moment. XIII. And like a licentious woman the desire of the multi- 64 tudes makes love to the statesman. "Forward,<sup>b</sup> lad," she says, "forward, to my mate, the multitude. Forget your own old ways, the habits, the words, the actions in which you were bred. Obey me, wait on me and do all that gives me pleasure. The stern, 65 strict, uncompromising friend of truth, stiff and solemn

<sup>b</sup> Or "when you address . . . forget."

PHILO

νότητι πρὸς ἅπαντα χρώμενον καὶ πρὸς μηδὲν εἴκοντα, μόνου περιεχόμενον αἰεὶ τοῦ συμφέροντος ἄνευ θεραπείας τῶν ἀκρωμένων, οὐκ ἀνέχομαι.
 66 διαβολὰς δ' ἐρανιῶ κατὰ σοῦ μυρίας καὶ<sup>1</sup> πρὸς τὸν ἕμὸν ἄνδρα τὸν ὄχλον, τὸν σὸν δεσπότην· ἄχρι γὰρ νῦν ἀπελευθεριάζειν δοκεῖς μοι καὶ ὅτι δούλος τυραννικοῦ γέγονας δεσπότην λίαν ἀγνοεῖς. εἰ δὲ ἤδεις, ὅτι αὐτοπραγία μὲν οἰκειότατον ἐλευθέρῳ, οἰκότηρ δ' ἀλλότριον, ἐπεπαίδευσο ἂν αὐθάδειαν μεθἕμενος εἰς ἐμὲ βλέπειν τὴν ἐκείνου γυναῖκα, ἐπι-θυμίαν, καὶ δρᾶν τὰ πρὸς ἀρέσκειαν τὴν ἐμήν, 67 δι' ὧν μάλιστα εὐαρεστήσεις. XIV. ὁ δὲ πολιτικὸς ὄντως οὐκ ἀγνοεῖ μὲν, ὅτι δεσποτικὴν ἐξουσίαν ἔχει ὁ δῆμος, αὐτὸν δ' οὐχ ὁμολογήσει δούλον ἀλλ' ἐλεύθερον καὶ . . .<sup>2</sup> τὴν τῆς ψυχῆς ἀρέσκειαν. ἀλλ' ἀντικρυς ἐρεῖ· “δημοκοπεῖν οὐτ' ἔμαθον οὐτ' ἐπιτηδεύσω ποτέ, πόλεως δὲ προστασίαν καὶ ἐπιμέλειαν ἔχειν ἐγχειρισθείς, ὡς ἀγαθὸς ἐπίτροπος ἢ πατήρ εὖνους<sup>3</sup> ἀδόλως καὶ 68 καθαρῶς ἄνευ τῆς ἐχθρᾶς ὑποκρίσεως. ταῦτα φρονῶν ἐξετασθήσομαι μηδὲν ὑποστέλλων μηδὲ συγκρύπτων φωρὸς τρόπον, ἀλλὰ τὸ συνειδὸς αὐγάζων ὡς ἐν ἡλίῳ καὶ φωτί· φῶς γὰρ ἡ ἀλήθεια· φοβηθήσομαι δ' οὐδὲν ὧν ἂν ἐπανατείνηται, κἂν θάνατον ἀπειλῇ· θανάτου γὰρ ἐμοὶ κακὸν ἀργαλεώ-

<sup>1</sup> Cohn, who prints καὶ, notes “excludendum videtur.” It certainly seems pointless. If retained, it must mean that the charges are disseminated in general as well as made to the master in particular.

<sup>2</sup> Something is clearly lost; Mangey's πάντα δρῶντα κατὰ will make good sense.

<sup>3</sup> Here, too, Cohn indicates a lacuna and suggests δρᾶσω

ON JOSEPH, 65-68

and inflexible in all his dealings, who clings to the beneficial only and pays no court to his audience, is to me intolerable. And I will collect any number 66 of charges against you to produce before my husband, the multitude, your master. For hitherto you have seemed to me to act as if at liberty and you are quite unaware that you have become the slave of a despotic master. But if you had known that independence may be quite properly possessed by the free man, but is denied to the slave, you would have schooled yourself to abandon your self-will and to look to me, Desire, his wife, and do what may please me as the best way to secure his favour."

XIV. Now the true statesman knows 67 quite well that the people has the power of a master, yet he will not admit that he is a slave, but regards himself as a free man and shapes his activities to please his own soul. He will frankly say, "I have never learned to cringe to the people, and I will never practise it. But since the leadership and charge of the state is put into my hands I will know how to hold it as a good guardian or an affectionate father, guilelessly and sincerely without the dissimulation which I hate. Being thus minded, I 68 will not be found cloaking and hiding anything as a thief might do, but I will keep my conscience clear as in the light of the sun, for truth is light. I will fear none of the tyrant's menaces, even though he threaten me with death, for death is a less evil than or χρηματιῶ. It does not seem to me necessary. It is not difficult to understand ἐμαθον και ἐπιτηδεύσω. To understand an affirmative out of a negative is a looseness which may be found in good writers. A good example occurs in the opening lines of Horace's Satires.

---

PHILO

- 69 τερον ὑπόκρισις. ἦν ὑπομενω τοῦ χάριν; καὶ γὰρ εἰ δεσπότης ὁ δῆμος, ἀλλ' οὐκ ἐγὼ δοῦλος, εὐπατρίδης δ' εἰ καὶ τις ἄλλος ἐφίεμενος ἐγγραφῆς τῆς ἐν τῷ μεγίστῳ καὶ ἀρίστῳ πολιτεύματι τοῦδε
- 70 τοῦ κόσμου. ὅταν | γὰρ μὴ δῶρα, μὴ παρα-
- [52] κλήσεις, μὴ τιμῶν ἔρως, μὴ ἀρχῆς ἐπιθυμία, μὴ ἀλαζονεία, μὴ ὁ τοῦ δοκεῖν ἡμερος, μὴ ἀκολασία, μὴ ἀνανδρία, μὴ ἀδικία, μηδὲν ἄλλο τῶν ὅσα ἐκ πάθους ἢ κακίας ὑπάγεται, τίνος ἔτι φοβηθήσομαι
- 71 δεσποτειαν; ἢ δῆλον ὅτι τὴν ἀπ' ἀνθρώπων; ἀλλ' οὐτοί γε τὴν σώματος ἐπιγράφονται κυρεΐαν, οὐ τὴν κατ' ἐμέ. ἐγὼ γὰρ ἀπὸ τοῦ κρείττονος, τῆς ἐν ἐμαυτῷ διανοίας, χρηματίζω, καθ' ἣν παρεσκευασμαι βιοῦν ὀλίγα φροντίζων τοῦ θνητοῦ σώματος, ὃ κἂν ὀστρέου δίκην περιπεφυκὸς ἐπηρεάζηται πρὸς τινων, ἀφειμένος<sup>1</sup> τῶν ἔνδον δεσποτῶν τε χαλεπῶν καὶ δεσποινῶν, οὐκ ἀνιάσομαι τὴν βαρυτάτην
- 72 ἀνάγκην ἐκπεφευγώς. εἰάν οὖν δικάζειν δέη, δικάσω μῆτε πλουσίῳ προσθέμενος διὰ τὴν περιουσίαν μῆτε πένητι διὰ τὸν ἐπὶ ταῖς ἀτυχίαις ἔλεον, ἀλλὰ τὰ τῶν κρινομένων ἀξιώματα καὶ σχήματα παρακαλυψάμενος ἀδόλως βραβεύσω τὸ φανησόμενον δίκαιον. εἰάν τε βουλευῶ, γνώμας εἰσηγήσομαι τὰς κοινωφελείας, κἂν μὴ πρὸς ἡδονὴν ὦσιν· εἰάν τε ἐκκλησιάζω, τοὺς θῶπας λόγους ἐτέροις καταλιπὼν τοῖς σωτηρίοις χρῆσομαι καὶ συμφέρουσιν, ἐπιτιμῶν, νουθετῶν, σωφρονίζων, οὐκ αὐθάδειαν μανιώδη καὶ παράφορον ἀλλὰ νήφουσιν
- 74 παρρησίαν ἐπιτετηδευκώς. εἰ δὲ μὴ χαίρει τις ταῖς βελτιώσεσιν, ἐπιτιμάτω καὶ γονεῦσι καὶ ἐπιτρόποις

<sup>1</sup> So Mangey: most mss. ἀφειμένον, which Cohn retains, others -ων. The masculine seems to me necessary for the sense.

ON JOSEPH, 69-74

dissimulation. And why should I submit to it? 69 For, though the people be a master, I am not a slave, but as highly-born as any, one who claims enrolment among the citizens of that best and greatest state, this world. For when neither presents 70 nor appeals nor craving for honours nor desire for office nor spirit of pretentiousness nor longing for reputation, nor incontinence, nor unmanliness, nor injustice, nor any other creation of passion and vice can subdue me, what domination is still left for me to fear? Clearly, it can only be that of men, but 71 men, while they assume the sovereignty of my body, are not sovereigns of the real I. For I take my title from the better part, the understanding within me, and by that I am prepared to live with little thought of the mortal body, the shell-like growth which encases me. And, though some may maltreat it, yet, if I be free from the hard masters and mistresses within, I shall suffer no affliction, since I have escaped the cruellest tyranny of all. If then 72 I have to serve on a jury, I will give my verdict without favouring the rich because of his abundant wealth, or the poor through pity of his misfortunes, but drawing a veil over the dignity or the outward appearance of the litigants I will in all honesty award what shall appear just. If I act as a councillor 73 I will introduce such proposals as are for the common good, even if they be not agreeable. If I speak in the general assembly I will leave all talk of flattery to others and resort only to such as is salutary and beneficial, reproving, warning, correcting in words studied to shew a sober frankness without foolish and frantic arrogance. He who does not gladly receive 74 improving advice must to be consistent censure

PHILO

καὶ διδασκάλους καὶ πᾶσι τοῖς κηδεμόσιν, ὅτι τέκνα γνήσια καὶ ὄρφανούς παῖδας καὶ φοιτητὰς κακηγοροῦσιν, ἔστι δ' ὅτε καὶ τύπτουσιν, οἷς οὔτε βλασφημίαν οὔθ' ὕβριν ὅσιον ἐπιφημίζειν, ἀλλὰ 75 τοῦναντίον τὰ φιλίας καὶ εὐνοίας ὀνόματα. πάνυ γὰρ ἀνάξιον τὸν πολιτικὸν ἐμὲ καὶ τὰ τοῦ δήμου πάντα ἐπιτετραμμένον ἐν τοῖς περὶ τοῦ συμφέροντος λογισμοῖς χεῖρονα γενέσθαι τινὸς τὴν ἰατρικὴν 76 τέχνην ἐπιτηδεύοντος. ἐκεῖνος γὰρ οὐδὲν τῆς περὶ τὸν θεραπευόμενον λαμπρότητος ἐν ταῖς νομιζόμεναις εὐτυχίαις φροντίσας, οὔθ' ὅτι εὐγενῆς ἦν ἢ πολυχρήματος οὔθ' ὅτι τῶν κατ' αὐτὸν ἐνδοξότατος βασιλεὺς ἢ τύραννος, ἐνὸς περιέχεται μόνου τοῦ σῶσαι κατὰ δύναμιν, κἂν δέη τομαῖς ἢ καύσει χρῆσθαι, καίει τε καὶ τέμνει τὸν ἄρχοντα καὶ 77 δεσπότην ὁ ὑπήκοος καὶ λεγόμενος δοῦλος. ἐγὼ δ' οὐχ ἓνα ἄνδρα πόλιν δ' ὅλην κάμνουσαν παραλαβὼν ὑπ' ἀργαλεωτέρων νόσων, ἃς κατεσκεύασαν αἱ συγγενεῖς ἐπιθυμίαι, τί πράσσειν ὀφείλω; προέμενος τὰ συνοίσοντα πᾶσι κοινῇ τὰ τοῦ δεινὸς ἢ τοῦ δεινὸς ὦτα θεραπεύειν ἀνελευθέρω καὶ σφόδρα δουλοπρεπεῖ κολακείᾳ; τεθνάναι μᾶλλον ἢ ἐλοιμήν ἢ πρὸς [53] ἡδονὴν τι φθεγξάμενος | ἐπικρῦψαι τὴν ἀλήθειαν καὶ τοῦ συμφέροντος ἀμελήσαι.

78 “ πρὸς ταῦθ' ”

ὡς ὁ τραγικός φησιν

“ ἴτω μὲν πῦρ, ἴτω δὲ φάσγανον.”—

“ πῖμπρα, κάταιθε σάρκας, ἐμπλήσθητί μου πίνων κελαινὸν αἷμα· πρόσθε γὰρ κάτω γῆς εἰσιν ἄστρα, γῆ δ' ἄνεισ' εἰς αἰθέρα, πρὶν ἐξ ἐμοῦ σοι θῶπ' ἀπαντῆσαι λόγον.”

ON JOSEPH, 74-78

parents and guardians and teachers and all persons in charge, because they reprimand and sometimes even beat their own children or orphan-wards or pupils, though really it is against all morality to call such treatment evil-speaking or outrage instead of friendliness and benevolence. For it were a quite 75 unworthy thing that I, the statesman, to whom are committed all the interests of the people, should, in planning for their benefit, shew myself inferior to anyone who practises the physician's art. He cares 76 not how brilliant is the good fortune, as men hold it, which attends his patient or that he is high-born or wealthy or the most glorious king or despot of his time, but devotes himself to one object only, to save him to the best of his ability, even if he must use cautery or surgery, and he applies the fire or the knife, he the subject to his ruler, he the so-called slave to his master. And I, who am called 77 to attend not on a single person but on the whole state afflicted by the more powerful distempers which its inbred lusts have produced, what ought I to do? Shall I sacrifice the future welfare of all and minister to the cares of this man and that man with flattery utterly slave-like and unworthy of the free? I would rather lie dead than with some pleasant words conceal the truth and disregard real welfare. As the tragedian says : 78

So then come fire, come sword.<sup>a</sup> Burn me, consume my flesh, drink my dark blood, Take fill of me; for sooner shall the stars Go 'neath the earth, and earth go up to sky Than thou shalt from these lips hear fawning word.

<sup>a</sup> The first line is from Eur. Phoenissae 521. The others also from Eur. Quoted Leg. All. iii. 202 and Quod Probus 99, where the speaker is given as Heracles.

PHILO

- 79 οὕτως οὖν ἡρρενωμένον τὸ φρόνημα καὶ ἐκτὸς πάντων παθῶν ἰστάμενον, ἡδονῆς, φόβου, λύπης, ἐπιθυμίας, ἀνδρα πολιτικὸν ὁ δεσπότης δῆμος οὐκ ἀνέχεται, συλλαβὼν δ' ὡς ἐχθρὸν κολάζει τὸν εὖ-νουν καὶ φίλον, πρὸ ἐκείνου τιμωρούμενος ἑαυτὸν τῇ μεγίστῃ τῶν τιμωριῶν, ἀπαιδευσία, δι' ἣν οὐκ ἔμαθεν ἄρχεσθαι, τὸ κάλλιστον καὶ βιωφελέστατον, ἐξ οὗ περιγίνεται καὶ τὸ ἄρχειν.
- 80 XV. Ἀποχρώντως δὴ καὶ περὶ τούτων διειλεγμένοι τὰ ἐξῆς ἴδωμεν. ὁ διαβληθεὶς νεανίας ὑπὸ τῆς ἐρωμένης γυναικὸς τῷ δεσπότηι πλασαμένης ἀντιστρόφους αἰτίας, αἷς ἦν ἔνοχος αὐτῇ, μηδ' ἀπολογίας τυχὼν εἰς εἴρκτην ἀπάγεται· καὶ γενόμενος ἐν τῷ δεσμωτηρίῳ τοσοῦτον ἀρετῆς μέγεθος ἐπεδείξατο, ὡς καὶ τοὺς πονηροτάτους τῶν ἐκεῖ τεθηπέναι καὶ καταπλήττεσθαι καὶ παρηγόρημα τῶν συμφορῶν ὑπολαμβάνειν ἀλεξίκακον εὐρηκέναι
- 81 τὸν ἀνθρωπὸν. ὅσης δ' ἀπανθρωπίας οἱ εἴρκτο-φύλακες γέμουσι καὶ ὠμότητος, οὐδεὶς ἀγνοεῖ· φύσει τε γὰρ ἀνηλεεῖς εἰσι καὶ μελέτη συγκροτοῦνται θηριούμενοι καθ' ἐκάστην ἡμέραν πρὸς ἀγριότητα, χρηστὸν μὲν οὐδὲν ἀλλ' οὐδ' ἐκ τύχης ὀρώντες ἢ λέγοντες ἢ δρῶντες, ὅσα δὲ βιαιότατα καὶ χαλεπώ-
- 82 τατα. καθάπερ γὰρ οἱ τὰ σώματα εὐπαγεῖς, ὅταν τὴν ἐξ ἀθλητικῆς ἄσκησιν προσλάβωσι, νευροῦνται δύναμιν ἀνανταγώνιστον καὶ εὐεξίαν ὑπερβάλλουσαν κτώμενοι, τὸν αὐτὸν τρόπον, ὅταν ἀτίθασος καὶ ἀμείλικτος φύσις ἄσκησιν εἰς τὸ ἀνήμερον προσλάβῃ, διχόθεν ἄβατος καὶ ἀπρόσιτος οἴκτω

ON JOSEPH, 79-82

When the statesman stands thus aloof from all 79 passions, from pleasure, from fear, from pain, from desire, with the spirit of a true man, the despot-people cannot away with him, but takes him and chastises as an enemy its friend and well-wisher. And thus it lays upon itself rather than on its victim the greatest of punishments, indiscipline, whereby it fails to learn the lesson of submission to government, that lesson most excellent and of life-long profit, which he who learns learns also how to govern.

XV. <sup>a</sup> Having sufficiently discussed these matters, 80 let us proceed to the next. The youth who had been brought into disgrace with his master by the false charges of a lovesick woman, charges which were the counterpart of those to which she was liable herself, was carried away to gaol without even any opportunity of making his defence. In the prison he displayed such a wealth of virtue that even the vilest of the inmates were astounded and over-awed, and considered that they had found in him a consolation for misfortunes and a defence against future ills. Everyone knows how full of inhumanity 81 and cruelty gaolers are ; pitiless by nature and case-hardened by practice, they are brutalized day by day towards savagery, because they never even by chance see or say or do any kindness, but only the extremes of violence and cruelty. Just as men 82 of well-built physique, if they add to this athletic training, grow sinewy and gain irresistible strength and unequalled robustness, so, whenever any uncivilized and unsoftened nature adds practice to its harshness, it becomes doubly impervious and in-

<sup>a</sup> For §§ 80-124 see Gen. xxxix. 20-xli. 45.

PHILO

83 γίνεται, χρηστῶ πάθει καὶ φιλανθρώπῳ. ὥσπερ γὰρ οἱ τῶν ἀγαθῶν ὀμιλεῖται βελτιοῦνται τοὺς τρόπους χαίροντες τοῖς συνοῦσιν, οὕτω καὶ οἱ τοῖς πονηροῖς συζῶντες ἀπομάττονται τι τῆς ἐκείνων κακίας· δεινὸν γὰρ τὸ ἔθος ἐξομοιωῖσαι καὶ βιάσα-84 σθαι πρὸς φύσιν. συνδιατρίβουσιν οὖν οἱ εἰρκτηφύλακες λωποδύταις, κλέπταις, τοιχωρύχοις, ὕβρι-σταῖς, βιαίοις, φθορεῦσιν, ἀνδροφόνοις, μοιχοῖς, ἱερο-σύλοις, ὧν ἀφ' ἑκάστου σπῶνται τι μοχθηρίας καὶ συνερανίζουσι καὶ ἐκ τῆς πολυμιγοῦς κράσεως ἐν ἀποτελοῦσι πάμφυρτον καὶ παμμίαιρον κακόν.
 85 XVI. ἀλλ' ὅμως ὁ τοιοῦτος | ἡμερωθεὶς ὑπὸ τῆς [54] τοῦ νεανίσκου καλοκαγαθίας οὐ μόνον ἀδείας καὶ ἐκεχειρίας μετέδωκεν, ἀλλὰ καὶ ἀρχῆς τῆς ἐφ' ἅπασιν τοῖς δεσμώταις, ὡς λόγῳ μὲν ἔνεκα προσχήματος ἐμμένειν εἰρκτηφύλαξ, τὴν δ' ἐν ἔργοις τάξιν παρακεχωρηκέναι τῷ νεανίᾳ, δι' ἧς οὐκ ὀλίγα 86 συνέβαινε τοὺς ἀπαχθέντας ὠφελεῖσθαι. τὸ γοῦν χωρίον οὐδ' ὀνομάζειν ἔτ' ἠξίουεν εἰρκτην, ἀλλὰ σωφρονιστήριον· ἀντὶ γὰρ βασάνων καὶ τιμωριῶν, ἃς νύκτωρ καὶ μεθ' ἡμέραν ὑπέμενον τυπτόμενοι καὶ καταδύμενοι καὶ τί κακὸν οὐ πάσχοντες, λόγοις καὶ δόγμασι τοῖς φιλοσοφίας ἐνουθετοῦντο καὶ ταῖς ἀνυσιμωτέραις παντὸς λόγου πράξεις τοῦ 87 διδάσκοντος. τὸν γὰρ αὐτοῦ βίον σωφροσύνης καὶ πάσης ἀρετῆς οἷα γραφὴν ἀρχέτυπον εἶ δεδημιουργημένην ἐν μέσῳ θεὸς ἐπέστρεψε καὶ τοὺς πάνυ δοκοῦντας ἀνιάτως ἔχειν, οἷς μακρὰ νόσοι τῆς ψυχῆς ἐλώφησαν ἤδη κακίζουσιν ἐπὶ τοῖς πεπραγ-

ON JOSEPH, 82-87

accessible to the kindly and humane emotion of pity. For, even as those who consort with the good are 83 improved in character by the pleasure they take in their associates, so those who live with the bad take on some impression of their vice. Custom has a wonderful power of forcing everything into the likeness of nature. Gaolers then spend their days 84 with footpads, thieves, burglars, men of violence and outrage, who commit rape, murder, adultery and sacrilege, and from each of these they imbibe and accumulate something of their villainy, out of which miscellaneous amalgam they produce a single body of evil, a fusion of every sort of pollution. XVI. But nevertheless one of this kind, tamed by 85 the nobility of the youth, not only allowed him some security from violence and hardship, but gave him the command of all the prisoners; and thus while he remained nominally and for the sake of appearance the keeper of the gaol, he resigned to Joseph the actual office, which thus became the source of no small benefit to those who were in confinement. Thus even the place, as they felt, could 86 not rightly be called a prison, but a house of correction. For instead of the tortures and punishments which they used to endure night and day under the lash or in manacles or in every possible affliction, they were rebuked by his wise words and doctrines of philosophy, while the conduct of their teacher effected more than any words. For by setting before 87 them his life of temperance and every virtue, like an original picture of skilled workmanship, he converted even those who seemed to be quite incurable, who as the long-standing distempers of their soul abated reproached themselves for their past μένοις αὐτοὺς καὶ μετανοοῦσι καὶ τοιαῦτ' ἐπιφθεγομένοις· “ ποῦ ποτ' ἄρ' ἦν πάλαι τοσοῦτον ἀγαθόν, οὐ τὴν ἀρχὴν ἐσφάλημεν; ἰδοὺ γὰρ ἐπιλάμψαντος αὐτοῦ, ὡς πρὸς κάτοπτρον τὴν ἀκοσμίαν ὀρῶντες αὐτῶν αἰσχυρόμεθα.”

PHILO

- 88 XVII. Τοῦτον τὸν τρόπον βελτιουμένων εἰσάγονται δύο εὐνοῦχοι τοῦ βασιλέως, ὁ μὲν ἀρχιοινοχός, ὁ δὲ ἀρχισιτοποιός, ἐν οἷς ἐπετράπησαν κατηγορηθέντες καὶ καταγνωσθέντες. ὁ δὲ καὶ τούτων τὴν ἐπιμέλειαν ἦν καὶ τῶν ἄλλων ἐποιεῖτο, εὐχόμενος ὅπως οἷός τε ἢ μηδὲν χεῖρους τῶν ἀν-
- 89 ἐπιλήπτων ἀπεργάσασθαι τοὺς ὑφ' ἑαυτῷ. χρόνου δ' οὐ μακροῦ διελθόντος, ἐπιὼν τοὺς δεσμώτας ὄρα συννοίας καὶ κατηφείας γέμοντας μᾶλλον ἢ πρότερον τοὺς εὐνοῦχους καὶ στοχασάμενος ἐκ τῆς σφοδρᾶς λύπης προσπεπτωκέναι τι νεώτερον ἐπυν-
- 90 θάνετο τὴν αἰτίαν. ἀποκριναμένων δέ, ὡς ὀνειρούς ἰδόντες ἄσης καὶ ἀδημονίας πεπλήρωνται, μηδενοῦ ὄντος τοῦ διακρινοῦντος, “ θαρσεῖτε ” ἔφη “ καὶ διηγείσθε, γνῶριμοι γὰρ ἔσονται βουλομένου θεοῦ· βούλεται δὲ τὰ συνεσκιασμένα τῶν πραγμάτων ἀνακαλύπτειν τοῖς ἀλήθειαν ποθοῦσιν.”
- 91 εἶτα πρότερος ὁ ἀρχιοινοχός φησίν· “ ἔδοξα μεγάλην ἄμπελον ἐκπεφυκέναι τριῶν πυθμένων ἐν εὐερνέστατον στέλεχος, τεθληλυῖαν καὶ βοτρυηφοροῦσαν ὡς ἐν ἀκμῇ τῆς ὀπώρας, ὑποπερκαζούσης δὲ τῆς σταφυλῆς δρέψασθαι τῶν βοτρύων καὶ εἰς ἔκπωμα βασιλικὸν ἀποθλίβειν, ὅπερ ἱκανῶς ἔχον
- 92 ἀκράτου προσενεγκεῖν τῷ βασιλεῖ.” ὁ δὲ μικρὸν ἐπισχὼν “ εὐτυχίαν ” εἶπεν “ ἢ φαντασία σοι καταγγέλλει καὶ τῆς προτέρας ἀνάληψιν ἀρχῆς· αἱ γὰρ τρεῖς ρίζαι τῆς ἀμπέλου τρεῖς ἡμέρας ὑπο-

ON JOSEPH, 87-92

and repented with such utterances as these : " Ah, where in old days was this great blessing which at first we failed to find ? See, when it shines on us we behold as in a mirror our misbehaviour and are ashamed."

XVII. While they were thus growing in goodness, 88 two eunuchs of the king were brought in, the chief butler and the chief baker, both of them accused and condemned for dereliction of duties. Joseph paid the same attention to them as to the others, in his earnest wish to raise if possible those under him to the level of those who were innocent of offence. And 89 after no long time on visiting the prisoners he saw that they were full of depression and dejection, even more than before, and, guessing from their extreme sadness that something unusual had befallen them, he asked the reason. When they answered that they 90 had had dreams which filled them with sore trouble and distress because there was no one to interpret them, he said to them : " Cheer up, and tell me these dreams, for their meaning will be known, if God wills, and He does will to unveil what is hidden to those who desire the truth." Then the chief butler 91 spoke first and said : " I dreamt that I saw a great vine, an exceedingly fine stalk growing from three roots. It was thriving and covered with grapes as in the height of the vintage season, and from a cluster which was turning ripe black I plucked some grapes and squeezed them into the royal cup, and when it had plenty of liquor I brought it to the king." Joseph 92 paused for a little, and then said : " Your vision is an announcement to you of good fortune and the recovery of your former office. The three roots of γράφουσι, μεθ' ὧς ὑπομνησθήσεται σου ὁ βασιλεὺς καὶ μεταπεμψάμενος ἐνθένδε παρέξει μὲν ἀμνηστίαν, ἐπιτρέψει δὲ τῆς αὐτῆς μεταποιεῖσθαι τάξεως, καὶ ὑπὲρ βεβαιώσεως τῆς ἀρχῆς οἰνοχοήσεις ἀναδούς ἕκπωμα τῷ δεσπότῃ." καὶ ὁ μὲν ἐγεγῆθει ταύτ' 93 ἀκούσας.

PHILO

XVIII. ὁ δ' ἀρχισιτοποιὸς |

- [55] ἀποδεξάμενος τὴν διάκρισιν, ὡς καὶ αὐτὸς εὐτυχὲς ὄναρ ἰδὼν—ἦν δ' οὐ μετρίως παλίμφημον—, ἀπατηθεὶς ταῖς ἐτέρου χρησταῖς ἐλπίσι φησὶν· “ ἀλλὰ καὶ γὰρ κληρονομεῖν ἔδοξα καὶ τρία πλήρη κανᾶ πεμμάτων κομίζεω ἐπὶ τῆς κεφαλῆς, τὸ δ' ἀνωτάτω πλήρες εἶναι παντοίων γενῶν, οἷς ἔθος ἐστὶ χρῆσθαι τὸν βασιλέα—ποικίλας δ' εἶναι τὰς πρὸς δίκαιαν βασιλικὴν σιτοπόνων περιεργίας—, ὄρνεις δὲ καθιπταμένους ἀρπάζεω ἀπὸ τῆς κεφαλῆς καὶ ἀπλήστως ἐμφορεῖσθαι, μέχρις οὗ πάντ' ἀναλώσαι καὶ μηδὲν
- 94 τῶν εὐτρέπισθέντων ὑπολιπέσθαι.” ὁ δὲ “ ἐβουλόμην μὲν ” εἶπε “ μὴ παραστήναί σοι τὴν φαντασίαν ἢ φανείσαν ἡσυχασθῆναι ἢ, εἰ καὶ διηγείτο τις, μακρὰν γοῦν, ἵνα μὴ κατακούσασαι, τῶν ἐμῶν ὧτων γενέσθαι τὴν διήγησιν· ὀκνῶ τε γάρ, εἰ καὶ τις ἄλλος, εἶναι κακῶν ἄγγελος συναλγῶ τε τοῖς ἐν συμφοραῖς, ἔνεκα φιλανθρωπίας οὐχ ἥκιστα τῶν
- 95 ὑπομενονόντων ὀδυνώμενος. ἀλλ' ἐπειδὴ τοῖς ὀνείρων κριταῖς ἀληθεύει ἀναγκαῖον θεῖα λόγια διερμηνεύουσι καὶ προφητεύουσι, λέξω μηδὲν ὑποστειλάμενος· ἀψευδεῖν γὰρ ἐπὶ μὲν πάντων ἄριστον, ἐπὶ
- 96 δὲ τῶν θεῶν ἀποφθεγμάτων καὶ ὀσιώτατον. τὰ τοιαῦτα κανᾶ σύμβολον τριῶν ἡμερῶν ἐστίν· ἐπισχῶν

ON JOSEPH, 92-96

the vine denote three days, after which the king will remember you and send for you from this place. He will then grant you free pardon, and allow you to take your old post, and to confirm you in the office you will act as butler and offer the cup to your master." The chief butler rejoiced on hearing this.

XVIII. The chief baker, for his part, approved the 93 interpretation, and, thinking that he himself had had a lucky dream, though in reality it was very much the reverse, and misled by the comforting hopes of the other, proceeded as follows: "I too had a dream. I thought I was carrying three baskets—full of bake-meats—~~on my head~~, the uppermost full of all the different kinds which are regularly provided for the use of the king, for the delicacies produced by the caterers for the king's table are varied and elaborate. Then birds flew down and snatched them from my head, and gobbled them insatiably until all was consumed and nothing of the provisions was left." Joseph replied: "I could have wished that this 94 vision had never been seen by you, or, if seen, had remained unmentioned, or, if its story were told, that at least it should have been told far away from my ears to prevent my hearing it. For no one shrinks more than I from being a messenger of ill-tidings. I sympathize with those in misfortune, and kindly affection makes me feel as much pain as the actual sufferers. But the interpreters of dreams must needs 95 tell the truth, since they are prophets expounding divine oracles, and I will therefore speak without reserve; for, while veracity is best in all matters, in dealing with God's messages, anything else is profanity.<sup>a</sup> The three baskets are symbols of three days. 96 <sup>a</sup> ἄσπιον here in the sense of what is demanded by religion.

PHILO

- ταύτας ὁ βασιλεὺς ἀνασκολοπισθῆναί σε καὶ τὴν κεφαλὴν ἀποτμηθῆναι κελεύσει καὶ καταπατάμενα ὄρνεα τῶν σῶν εὐωχηθήσεται σαρκῶν, ἄχρισ ἂν 97 ὅλος ἐξαναλωθῆς." καὶ ὁ μὲν ὥσπερ εἰκὸς συγχυθεὶς ἀνατέτραπτο, καραδοκῶν τὴν ὀρισθείσαν προθεσίαν καὶ τῇ διανοίᾳ τὰς ἀνίας προσδεχόμενος. ὡς δ' αἱ τρεῖς ἡμέραι διήλθον, γενέθλιος ἐπέστη τοῦ βασιλέως, ἐν ἣ πάντες οἱ κατὰ τὴν χώραν ἐπανηγύριζον, διαφερόντως δ' οἱ περὶ τὰ 98 βασιλεία. ἐστιωμένων οὖν τῶν ἐν τέλει καὶ τῆς θεραπείας εὐωχουμένης ὥσπερ ἐν δημοθουίᾳ, τῶν κατὰ τὸ δεσμωτήριον εὐνούχων ὑπομνησθεὶς ἀχθῆναι κελεύει καὶ θεασάμενος τὰκ τῆς τῶν οὐνείρων διακρίσεως ἐπισφραγίζεται, προστάξας τὸν μὲν ἀνασκολοπισθῆναι τὴν κεφαλὴν ἀποτμηθέντα, τῷ δὲ τὴν ἀρχὴν ἣν διείπε πρότερον ἀπονεῖμαι.
- 99 XIX. Καταλλαγεὶς δὲ ὁ ἀρχιοινοχόος ἐκλανθάνεται τοῦ τὰς καταλλαγὰς προειπόντος καὶ ἕκαστα τῶν συμπεσόντων ἀτυχημάτων ἐπικουφίσαντος, ἴσως μὲν ἐπειδὴ πᾶς ἀχάριστος ἀμνήμων ἐστὶν εὐεργετῶν, ἴσως δὲ καὶ κατὰ πρόνοιαν θεοῦ βουλευθέντος τὰς εὐπραγίας τῷ νεανίᾳ μὴ δι' ἀνθρώπου γενέσθαι μᾶλλον ἢ δι' ἑαυτοῦ. μετὰ γὰρ 100 διετῆ χρόνον τῷ βασιλεῖ τὰ μέλλοντα τῇ χώρᾳ συμβαίνειν ἀγαθὰ καὶ κακὰ διτταῖς φαντασίαις δι' οὐνείρου θεσπίζεται ταῦτὸν ὑποσημαινούσαις ἔνεκα 101 βεβαιοτέρας πίστεως. ἔδοξε γὰρ ἐπτὰ βόας ἀνέρπειν ἐκ τοῦ ποταμοῦ, πίονας καὶ σφόδρα εὐσάρκους καὶ καλὰς ὀφθῆναι, καὶ παρὰ ταῖς ὄχθαις νέμεσθαι.
- [56] μεθ' ἃς ἐτέρας ἀριθμὸν ἴσας, | ἀσάρκους τρόπον τινὰ καὶ κατεσκελετευμένας καὶ εἰδεχθεστάτας, ἀνελθεῖν καὶ συννέμεσθαι ταῖς προτέραις· εἰτ' 188

ON JOSEPH, 96-101

When these have passed, the king will order you to be impaled and beheaded, and the birds will feast upon your flesh until you are entirely devoured." The baker, as might be expected, was confounded 97 and upset, having the appointed day before his eyes and mentally anticipating its pangs. But, when the three days had passed, came the king's birthday, when all the inhabitants of the country held festive gatherings, and particularly those of the palace. So, 98 while the dignitaries were banqueting, and the servants were regaling themselves as at a public feast, the king remembered the eunuchs in the prison and bade them be brought to him. And, when he saw them, he ratified what had been forecast in the interpretation of the dreams, by ordering one to be beheaded and impaled and the other to be restored to his former office.

XIX. But, when he was reconciled to his master, 99 the chief butler forgot him who had predicted the reconciliation and alleviated all the misfortunes which befell him; perhaps because the ungrateful are always forgetful of their benefactors, perhaps also in the providence of God Who willed that the happy events which befell the youth should be due to God rather than to man. For after two years the future 100 of his country for both good and ill was revealed to the king when dreaming, in two visions with the same significance, repeated in order to carry stronger conviction. He dreamt that seven oxen came up from 101 the river, fat and well covered with flesh and fair to look upon, and browsed beside the banks. After them seven others, mere skeletons, and fleshless, so to speak, and loathsome in appearance, came up and browsed with the former seven. Then suddenly

PHILO

- ἑξαπιναίως ὑπὸ τῶν χειρόνων καταβρωθῆναι τὰς ἀμείνους καὶ μηδὲν ἄλλὰ μηδὲ τὸ βραχύτατον ταῖς ἐμφορηθείσαις πρὸς ὄγκον ἐπιδοῦναι τὰς γαστέρας, 102 ἀλλ' ἢ μᾶλλον ἢ οὐχ ἦττον ἐστάλθαι. περιναστὰς δὲ καὶ κοιμηθεῖς πάλιν ἐτέρα πληχθῆναι φαντασία· νομίσαι γὰρ ἑπτὰ πυροῦ στάχυσ ἐκπεφυκότας ἐνὸς πυθμένος, ἰσαιτάτους τοῖς μεγέθεσιν, ἀξομένους καὶ τεθλότας αἵρεσθαι πρὸς ὕψος μάλ' εὐρώστους· εἶθ' ἐτέρους ἑπτὰ λεπτοὺς καὶ ἀσθενεῖς ἀναπεφυκέναι πλησίον, ὑφ' ὧν ἐπιδραμόντων καταποθῆναι 103 τὸν εὐσταχυν πυθμένα. ταύτην ἰδὼν τὴν ὄψιν, τὸ λειπόμενον τῆς νυκτὸς ἄπνος διατελέσας—ἤγειρον γὰρ αἱ φροντίδες κεντοῦσαι καὶ τιτρώσκουσαι—, μεταπέμπεται τοὺς σοφιστὰς ἅμα τῇ ἔω καὶ τὴν 104 φαντασίαν διηγείται. μηδενὸς δὲ στοχασμοῖς εἰκόσι τάληθές ἰχνηλατῆσαι δυναμένου, παρελθὼν ὁ ἀρχι-οינוχόος φησίν· “ὦ δέσποτα, τὸν ἄνδρα ὃν ζητεῖς ἐλπίς ἐστίν εὐρήσειν· ἀμαρτόντας ἐμὲ καὶ τὸν ἀρχι-σιτοποιὸν ἐκέλευσας εἰς τὸ δεσμωτήριον ἀπαχθῆ-ναι, ἐν ᾧ τοῦ ἀρχιμαγείρου θεραπείων ἦν Ἑβραῖος, ᾧτινι διηγησάμεθα ἐγὼ τε καὶ κείνος ὀνειράτα τὰ φανέντα ἡμῖν· ὁ δ' οὕτως εὐθυβόλως καὶ εὐσκόπως διέκρινεν, ὡς ὅσα προεῖπεν ἐκατέρω συμβῆναι, τῷ μὲν ἦν ὑπέμεινε τιμωρίαν, ἐμοὶ δὲ τὸ σοῦ τυχεῖν 105 ἴλεω καὶ εὐμενοῦς.” XX. ὁ μὲν οὖν βασιλεὺς ἀκούσας προστάττει συντείναντας ἀνα-καλεῖν τὸν νεανίαν. οἱ δ' ἀποκείραντες—βαθεῖαι γὰρ ἦσαν αὐτῷ χαῖται καθειργμένῳ κεφαλῆς καὶ γενείου—καὶ ἀντὶ ῥυπώσης λαμπρὰν ἐσθήτηα ἀντι-δόντες καὶ τᾶλλα φαιδρύναντες εἰσάγουσιν αὐτὸν 106 πρὸς τὸν βασιλέα· ὃς ἐκ τῆς ὄψεως τεκμηράμενος

ON JOSEPH, 101-106

the better seven were devoured by the worse, and yet these after swallowing the others shewed not the smallest increase in bulk of belly but were even more, or at least not less, shrunken. The king awoke and 102 then slept again, and was beset by another vision. He thought that seven ears of wheat had sprung out of a single stalk. They were very equal in size and grew and throve and rose to a considerable height, fine and strong. Then seven others sprang up near them, thin and feeble, which overran and swallowed up the stalk which bore the good ears. After seeing 103 this the king remained sleepless for the rest of the night, kept awake by the thoughts which pricked and stung him. At dawn he sent for his wise men and told them the vision, and when no one could make any 104 likely conjecture which could give a clue to the truth, the chief butler came forward and said: "Master, we may hope to find the man whom you seek. When I and the chief baker had offended, we were by your orders cast into prison where there was a Hebrew servant of the chief cook, to whom we two told the dreams which we had seen, and he interpreted them so exactly and skilfully that all that he had predicted happened to each of us, to him the penalty which he suffered, to me my admission to your clemency and favour."

XX. The king on hearing this 105 bade them hasten and summon the youth. They obeyed, but first they had him shaven and shorn, for in his confinement the hair had grown long and thick on his head and chin. Then they put on him a bright and clean raiment instead of his filthy prison clothes, and smartened him in other ways and thus brought him to the king. The king, judging him by his ap- 106 pearance to be a man of free and noble birth, for the ἄνδρα ἐλεύθερον καὶ εὐγενῆ—χαρακτήηρες γὰρ ἐπιφαίνονται τινες τῷ σώματι τῶν ὀρωμένων οὐχ ὄρατοὶ πᾶσιν, ἀλλ' οἷς τὸ τῆς διανοίας ὄμμα ὀξύδορκεῖ—“μαντεύεται” εἶπεν “ἡ ψυχὴ μου περὶ τοῦ μὴ εἰς ἅπαν ἀσαφεία τοὺς ὀνείρους ἐπισκιάσθησεται· δεῖγμα γὰρ σοφίας ὁ νεανίας οὗτος ὑποφαίνει, διακαλύψει τὴν ἀλήθειαν, οἷα φωτὶ σκότος ἐπιστήμη τὴν ἀμαθίαν τῶν παρ' ἡμῖν σοφιστῶν ἀποσκεδάσει.” καὶ τοὺς ὀνείρους δι-

PHILO

- 107 ἡγεῖτο. ὁ δὲ τὰξίωμα τοῦ λέγοντος οὐδὲν καταπλαγεῖς ὥσπερ ὑπηκόω βασιλεὺς, ἀλλ' οὐχ ὑπήκοος βασιλεῖ, παρρησίᾳ σὺν αἰδοῖ χρώμενος διελέγετο καὶ φησιν· “ὅσα μέλλει ποιεῖν ὁ θεὸς ἐν τῇ χώρᾳ, προμεμήνυκέ σοι. τὰς μέντοι διττὰς φαντασίας μὴ ὑπολάβῃς εἶναι διττοὺς ὀνείρους· εἰς ἔστι, τὴν ἀναδιπλωσιν ἔχων οὐ περιττήν, ἀλλὰ πρὸς
- 108 ἔλεγχον βεβαιοτέρας πίστεως. αἶ τε γὰρ πίονες ἑπτὰ βόες καὶ οἱ εὐβλαστοὶ καὶ εὐθαλεῖς ἑπτὰ |
- [57] στάχυες ἐνιαυτοὺς ἑπτὰ δηλοῦσιν εὐθηνίας καὶ εὐετηρίας καὶ ἑπτὰ ἑτέρουσ λιμοῦ αἶ ἐπανιοῦσαι ἑπτὰ βόες λεπταὶ καὶ εἰδεχθεῖς καὶ οἱ παρεφθαρ-
- 109 μένοι καὶ μεμνυκότες ἑπτὰ στάχυες. ἦξει μὲν οὖν ἑπταετία προτέρα πολλὴν καὶ ἄφθονον ἔχουσα εὐκαρπίαν, πλημμύραις μὲν ἀνὰ πᾶν ἔτος τοῦ ποταμοῦ λιμνάζοντος τὰς ἀρούρας, τῶν δὲ πεδίων ὡς οὐπω πρότερον εὐτοκία χρωμένων· ἦξει δὲ μετὰ ταῦτα ἑπταετία πάλιν ἐναντία χαλεπὴν ἔνδειαν καὶ σπάνιν τῶν ἀναγκαίων ἐπιφέρουσα, μήτ' ἀναχεομένου τοῦ ποταμοῦ μήτε τῆς γῆς λιπαινομένης, ὡς τῆς προτέρας εὐθηνίας ἐκλαθέσθαι καὶ εἴ τι λεί-
- 110 ψανον παλαιᾶς εὐετηρίας ἦν ἀναλωθῆναι. τὰ μὲν οὖν ἐκ τῆς διακρίσεως τοιαῦτ' ἐστίν. ὑπηχεῖ δέ

ON JOSEPH, 106-110

persons of those whom we see exhibit characteristics which are not visible to all, but only to those in whom the eye of the understanding is quick to discern, said : " My soul has a prophetic inkling that my dreams will not for ever remain veiled in obscurity, for in this youth there are signs and indications of wisdom. He will reveal the truth, and as light disperses darkness his knowledge will disperse the ignorance of our wizards." So he told him the dreams.

Joseph, nothing awed by the high dignity of the 107 speaker, spoke to him with frankness combined with modesty, rather as a king to a subject than as a subject to the king. " God has given you," he said, " warning of all that He is about to do in the land. But do not suppose that the two visions are two dreams. There is one dream repeated, though the repeating is not superfluous, but given to convince you more firmly of its trustworthiness. For both the 108 seven fat oxen and the seven well-grown and flourishing ears indicate seven years of abundance and prosperity, while the seven oxen that came up after, thin and loathly, and the seven blasted and shrunken ears mean seven other years of famine. The first period 109 of seven years, then, will come bringing a large and plentiful wealth of crops, while the river each year, with its rising waters, turns the fields into pools and the plains have a fertility never known before. But after this will come in its turn another period of seven years of the opposite kind, bringing severe dearth and lack of the means of living, with the river ceasing to overflow and the fields to get their fatness, so that men will forget the former prosperity and every trace of the old abundance will be blotted out. Such are 110 the facts which appear from the interpretation, but

PHILO

- μοι καὶ ἐκλαλεῖ τὸ θεῖον ὑποβάλλον τὰ ὡς ἐν νόσω σωτήρια· νόσος δὲ πόλεων καὶ χωρίων ἢ βαρυτάτη λιμός, ἢ κατασκευαστέον ἀσθένειαν, ἵνα μὴ τε-
- 111 λείως ῥωσθεῖσα τοὺς οἰκήτορας ἐκφάγη. πῶς οὖν ἀσθενήσει; τοῦ καρποῦ τῶν ἑπτὰ ἐτῶν, ἐν οἷς ἡ εὐφορία, τὸ πλεονάζον μετὰ τὰς αὐτάρκεις τοῖς πλήθεσι τροφὰς—ἔσται δ' ἴσως μέρος πέμπτον—θησαυριστέον ἐν πόλει καὶ κώμαις, μὴ μετακομίζοντας τὰ θέρη μακρόθεν, ἀλλ' ἐξ ὧν ἂν ἢ χωρίων, ἐν ἐκείνοις φυλάττοντας πρὸς τὴν τῶν οἰκούν-
- 112 των παρηγορίαν· συγκομίζειν δὲ τὸν καρπὸν αὐτοῖς δράγμασι μῆτε ἀλοῶντας μῆτε συνόλως καθαίροντας, τετάρτων ἕνεκα· ἐνὸς μὲν τοῦ σκέπη χρώμενον πρὸς πλείω χρόνον διαμένειν ἀδιάφθορον· ἑτέρου δὲ τοῦ καθ' ἕκαστον ἐνιαυτὸν γίνεσθαι τῆς εὐθηνίας ὑπόμνησιν, ἀλοῶντων καὶ λικμώντων· ἡ γὰρ μίμησις τῶν πρὸς ἀλήθειαν ἀγαθῶν δευτέραν ἔμελλεν ἡδονὴν ἀπεργάζεσθαι· τρίτου δὲ τοῦ μηδ' εἰς ἀριθμὸν ἐλθεῖν, ἐν στάχυσι καὶ δράγμασιν ἀδήλου καὶ ἀπεριγράφου τοῦ καρποῦ ὑπάρχοντος, ἵνα μὴ προαναπέσωσιν αἱ διάνοιαι τῶν ἐγχωρίων ἐν ταῖς ἀναλώσεσι τοῦ συλλογισθέντος, ἀλλ' εὐθυμία χρώμενοι τῇ σιτίων ἀμείνονι τροφῇ—τρέφει γὰρ ἐν τοῖς μάλιστα ἐλπίς—ἐπικουφίζωσι τὴν ἐκ τῆς ἐνδείας βαρεῖαν νόσον· τετάρτου δὲ τοῦ καὶ τοῖς θρέμ-

<sup>a</sup> For this regular use of ὑπηχεῖν in Philo for a voice heard inwardly see note on De Som. i. 164.

<sup>b</sup> Or "country districts"; cf. the common use of the word for farms or estates.

<sup>c</sup> There is no authority for this statement in Genesis, or the arguments adduced for it. But Philo may well have heard or read of precedents.

<sup>d</sup> i.e. when we thresh the annual allowance from the store

ON JOSEPH, 110-113

I also hear the promptings<sup>a</sup> of the divine voice, devising safeguards for the disease, as we may call it; and famine in cities and localities<sup>b</sup> is the severest of diseases, and we must provide means of weakening it lest it grow to full strength and devour the inhabitants. How, then, shall it be weakened? What 111 is left over from the harvest of the seven years of abundance after the necessary allowance for feeding the multitudes, which perhaps will be a fifth, should be stored in the city and villages, without transporting the crops to a distance, but keeping them in the places where they have been produced, to encourage the inhabitants. And the crops should be brought 112 in just as they are in the sheaves, without threshing them or purging them in any way,<sup>c</sup> for four reasons. First, that being thus under shelter they will last longer without spoiling; secondly, that every year when they are threshed and winnowed they will serve as a reminder of the prosperous time, for we always find that imitation<sup>d</sup> of our real blessings has brought a repetition of the pleasure; thirdly, the grain cannot 113 even be reckoned when it is contained in ears and sheaves, and therefore is an uncertain and incalculable quantity. This will prevent the minds of the inhabitants from being prematurely depressed, when they see that the grain, which is a known quantity,<sup>e</sup> is being gradually consumed. On the contrary, they will have courage, nourished on a food which is better than corn, since hope is the best of nourishments, and take more lightly the heavy scourge of want. Fourthly, to provide a store of fodder for the cattle we copy what we do in the ordinary harvest and therefore are reminded of it. But Cohn in his translation adopts Mangey's ὑπόμνησις.

<sup>e</sup> Lit. "which has been calculated."

PHILO

- 114 μασι χιλὸν τεταμιεύσθαι, τῶν ἀχύρων καὶ ἀθέρων ἐκ τῆς τοῦ καρποῦ καθάρσεως διακρινομένων. ἐπιμελητὴν δὲ τούτων χειροτονητέον ἄνδρα φρονιμώτατον καὶ συνετώτατον καὶ ἐν πᾶσι δόκιμον, ὃς γένοιτ' ἂν ἱκανὸς ἀμισῶς καὶ ἀνεπάφως εὐτρεπῆ τὰ λεχθέντα ποιεῖν μηδεμίαν αἴσθησιν τοῖς πλήθεσιν ἐνδιδούς περὶ τοῦ γενησομένου λιμοῦ· χαλεπὸν γὰρ τὸ προκείμενοντα ταῖς ψυχαῖς ἀναπεσεῖν δυσ-
- 115 ελπιστία. εἰάν δέ τις ἐπιζητῆ τὴν αἰτίαν, φήσει δεῖν, καθάπερ ἐν εἰρήνῃ προνοεῖν τῶν ἐν τῷ
- [58] πολέμῳ παρασκευῶν, καὶ ἐν | εὐπορίαις τῶν κατ' ἔνδειαν· ἀδήλους δὲ εἶναι πολέμους καὶ λιμούς καὶ συνόλως τοὺς καιροὺς τῶν ἀβουλήτων, εἰς οὓς ἀναγκαῖον εἶναι παρεσκευάσθαι, ἀλλὰ μὴ γενομένων τότε τὴν θεραπείαν ζητεῖν, ὅτ' οὐδὲν ὄφελος."
- 116 XXI. Ἀκούσας δὲ ὁ βασιλεὺς καὶ τὴν τῶν ὀνειρών διάκρισιν εὐθυβόλως καὶ εὐσκόπως στοχαζομένην τῆς ἀληθείας καὶ τὴν συμβουλίαν ὅσα τῷ δοκεῖν ὠφελιμωτάτην κατὰ τὴν τοῦ μέλλοντος ἀδήλου πρόνοιαν, τοὺς συνόντας ἐγγυτέρω προσελθεῖν κελεύσας, ἵνα μὴ κατακούοι, "ἄρ'" εἶπεν, "ἄνδρες, εὐρήσομεν τοιοῦτον ἄνθρωπον, ὃς ἔχει
- 117 πνεῦμα θεῖον ἐν ἑαυτῷ;" συνεπαινούντων δὲ καὶ συνευφημούντων, ἀπιδὼν εἰς τὸν παρεστῶτα "ἐγγυς" εἶπεν "ἔστιν ὃν παραινεῖς ἀναζητεῖν, οὐ μακρὰν ἀφέστηκεν ὁ φρόνιμος καὶ συνετός, ὃν ἔδει κατὰ τὰς σὰς ὑψηγήσεις σκοπεῖν, αὐτὸς ὢν τυγχάνεις· οὐ γὰρ ἄνευ θεοῦ ταῦτ' ἀποφθέγγεσθαι μοι δοκεῖς. ἴθι δὴ καὶ παραλάμβανε τὴν τ' ἐπιμέλειαν τῆς ἐμῆς οἰκίας καὶ τὴν Αἰγύπτου πάσης ἐπι-
- 118 τροπήν. εὐχέριαν δ' οὐδεὶς μου καταγνώσεται

ON JOSEPH, 113-118

when the bran and chaff are separated through the purging of the grain. And to take charge of all this 114 you must appoint a man of the utmost prudence and good sense and well-approved all round, one who will be competent, without exciting hatred or open resistance, to make the preparations here described without giving the multitude any idea of the coming famine. For it would be a grievous thing if they should faint in anticipation and lose heart through lack of hope. And, if anyone asks the reason for 115 these measures, he should be told that, just as in peace we must exercise forethought in preparing for war, so, too, in years of plenty must we provide against dearth. Wars and famines and times of adversity in general are uncertain, and we must stand ready to meet them, not wait till they have come and look for the remedy when nothing is available."

XXI. The king having heard both his interpreta- 116 tion of the dreams, so exactly and skilfully divining the truth, and his advice to all appearance most profitable in its foresight for the uncertainties of the future, bade his companions come closer to him so that Joseph might not hear, and said: "Sirs, shall we find another man such as this, who has in him the spirit of God?" When they with one accord praised 117 and applauded his words, he looked at Joseph who was standing by, and said: "He whom you bid us seek is near at hand, the man of prudence and sense is not far distant. He for whom according to your advice we should look is yourself, for I think that God is with you in the words you speak. Come, then, and take the charge of my house, and the superintendence of all Egypt. And no one will 118 condemn me for hastiness, for I am not actuated by

PHILO

- μὴ φιλαυτία χρωμένον, πάθει δυσιάτῳ· αἱ τε γὰρ μεγάλαι τῶν φύσεων χρόνοις οὐ δοκιμάζονται μακροῖς, ὄγκῳ δυνάμεως βιαζόμεναι φθάνειν εἰς ἀποδοχὴν αὐτῶν ἀνυπέρθετον, τά τε πράγματα μέλλησιν καὶ διατριβὴν οὐκ ἀνέχεται, τῶν καιρῶν
- 119 ἐπειγόντων εἰς τὰς ἀναγκαίας παρασκευάς." εἶπ' αὐτὸν καθίστησι τῆς βασιλείας διάδοχον, μᾶλλον δ', εἰ χρὴ τάληθές εἰπεῖν, βασιλέα, τὸ μὲν ὄνομα τῆς ἀρχῆς ὑπολειπόμενος αὐτῷ, τῆς δ' ἐν ἔργοις ἡγεμονίας ἐκστὰς ἐκείνῳ καὶ τᾶλλα πράττων ὅσα
- 120 ἐπὶ τιμῇ τοῦ νεανίου. δίδωσιν οὖν αὐτῷ σφραγίδα βασιλικὴν καὶ ἱερὰν ἐσθῆτα καὶ κύκλον χρυσοῦν περιδέραιον καὶ ἐπὶ δευτερεῖον τῶν ἀρμάτων ἀναβιβάσας κελεύει περιελθεῖν τὴν πόλιν, προσερχομένου κήρυκος καὶ δηλοῦντος τοῖς ἀγνοοῦσι τὴν χειρο-
- 121 τονίαν. μετονομάζει δ' αὐτὸν ἀπὸ τῆς ὄνειροκριτικῆς ἐγχωρίῳ γλώττῃ προσαγορεύσας καὶ ἐγγυᾶ πρὸς γάμον αὐτῷ τὴν ἐπιφανεστάτην τῶν κατ' Αἴγυπτον ἱερέως Ἡλίου θυγατέρα. ταῦτ' ἐγένετο, περὶ ἔτη γεγονότος ἤδη τριάκοντα.
- 122 τοιαῦτα τῶν εὐσεβῶν τὰ τέλη· κἂν γὰρ κλιθῶσιν, οὐκ εἰς ἅπαν πίπτουσιν, ἀλλὰ διαναστάντες ὀρθοῦνται παγίως καὶ βεβαίως, ὡς μηκέθ' ὑποσκελι-
- 123 σθῆναι. τίς γὰρ ἂν προσεδόκησε μιᾷ ἡμέρᾳ τὸν αὐτὸν ἀντὶ μὲν δούλου δεσπότην, ἀντὶ δὲ δεσμώτου
- [59] πάντων ἀξιονικότατον, | καὶ τὸν ὑποδιάκονον εἰρκτοφύλακος ὑπαρχον βασιλέως ἔσσεσθαι καὶ ἀντὶ τῆς εἰρκτικῆς τὰ βασιλεία οἰκήσειν, τὰ πρῶτα τῶν ἐπὶ τιμαῖς φερόμενον ἀντὶ τῶν εἰς ἀτιμίαν ἐσχάτων;
- 124 ἀλλ' ὅμως καὶ γέγονε ταῦτα καὶ γενήσεται πολ- λάκις, ὅταν δοκῇ τῷ θεῷ· μόνον ἐντυφέσθω τι

ON JOSEPH, 118-124

self-confidence, that passion so hard to cure. Great natures take no long time to prove themselves, but by the massiveness of their power force others to give them a rapid and immediate acceptance; and the facts of the case do not admit of delay and procrastination, since the needs of the time urge us on to make the necessary preparations." He then ap- 119 pointed him viceroy of the kingdom, or rather, if the truth be said, king, reserving indeed to himself the name of the office, but resigning to him the actual sovereignty and doing everything else that might give the young man honour. So, then, he bestowed 120 on him the royal seal and put upon him a sacred robe and a golden necklace, and setting him on his second chariot bade him go the round of the city with a crier walking in front who proclaimed the appointment to those who did not know of it. He 121 also gave him another name in the language of the country, based on his art of dream interpretation, and betrothed him to the most distinguished of the ladies of Egypt, the daughter of the priest of the Sun. These events happened when he was about thirty years old. Such is the latter end 122 of the pious; though they be bent they do not altogether fall, but arise and stand upright firm and strong, never to be brought low any more. For 123 who would have expected that in a single day the same man would turn from slave to master, from a prisoner to the highest of dignitaries, that the gaoler's underling would be the king's vice-regent and lodge in the palace instead of the gaol, thus winning the foremost place of honour instead of the lowest of dishonour? But nevertheless these things have 124 happened and will often happen when God so wills.

PHILO

- καλοκαγαθίας ἐμπύρευμα ταῖς ψυχαῖς ὅπερ ἀναγκαῖόν ποτε ριπιζόμενον ἐκλάμψαι.
- 125 XXII. Ἐπεὶ δὲ πρόκειται μετὰ τὴν ῥητὴν ἀπόδοσιν καὶ τὴν τροπικωτέραν ἐξετάζειν, λεκτέον ἂν χρῆ καὶ περὶ αὐτῆς. ἴσως μὲν οὖν γελάσονται τινες τῶν εἰκαιτέρων ἀκούσαντες· ἐγὼ δ' ἐρῶ μηδὲν ὑποστειλάμενος, ὅτι ὁ πολιτικός πάντως ὄνειροκριτικός ἐστίν, οὐχὶ τῶν βωμολόχων οὐδὲ τῶν ἐναδολεσχούντων καὶ ἐνσοφιστευόντων ἐπὶ μισθῷ καὶ τὴν τῶν καθ' ὕπνον φαντασιῶν διάκρισιν ἀργυρισμοῦ πρόβλημα πεποιημένων, ἀλλὰ τὸν κοινὸν καὶ πάνδημον καὶ μέγαν ὄνειρον οὐ κοιμωμένων μόνον ἀλλὰ καὶ ἐργηγορότων εἰθῶς ἀκριβούν.
- 126 ὁ δὲ ὄνειρος οὗτος, ὡς ἀψευδέστατα φάναι, ὁ τῶν ἀνθρώπων ἐστὶ βίος· ὡς γὰρ ἐν ταῖς καθ' ὕπνον φαντασίαις βλέποντες οὐ βλέπομεν καὶ ἀκούοντες οὐκ ἀκούομεν καὶ γεύομενοι ἢ ἀπτόμενοι οὔτε γεύομεθα οὔτε ἀπτόμεθα λέγοντές τε οὐ λέγομεν καὶ περιπατοῦντες οὐ περιπατοῦμεν καὶ ταῖς ἄλλαις κινήσεσι καὶ σχέσεσι χρῆσθαι δοκοῦντες οὐδεμιᾷ τὸ παράπαν χρώμεθα—κεναὶ δ' εἰσὶ τῆς διανοίας πρὸς οὐδὲν ὑποκείμενον ἀληθείᾳ μόνον ἀναζωγραφοῦσης καὶ ἀνειδωλοποιούσης τὰ μὴ ὄντα ὡς ὄντα,—οὔτω καὶ τῶν παρ' ἡμῖν ἐργηγορότων αἱ φαντασίαι τοῖς ἐνυπνίοις εἰκόασιν· ἦλθον, ἀπῆλθον, ἐφάνησαν, ἀπεπήδησαν, πρὶν καταληφθῆναι βεβαίως ἀπέπτυσαν.
- 127 ἐρευνησάτω δ' ἕκαστος αὐτὸν καὶ τὸν ἔλεγχον οἴκοθεν ἄνευ τῶν παρ' ἐμοῦ πίστεων εἴσεται, καὶ μάλιστα εἴ τις πρεσβύτερος ἤδη γεγωνῶς τυγχάνοι· οὗτος ἦν ὁ ποτὲ βρέφος καὶ μετὰ ταῦτα παῖς, εἴτ' ἔφηβος, εἶτα μειράκιον, καὶ
- 128 νεανίας αὖθις, εἴτ' ἀνήρ, καὶ γέρων ὕστατον. ἀλλὰ

ON JOSEPH, 124-128

Only there must be some live coal of nobility smouldering in the soul, which is sure; if it be fanned into flame, to blaze into light.

XXII. But since it is our purpose to examine the <sup>125</sup> more allegorical meaning after the literal, I must say what is needful on that also. Perhaps some of the more thoughtless will laugh at my words; but I will say quite plainly that the statesman is most certainly an interpreter of dreams, not one of the parasites, nor one of the praters who shew off their cleverness for hire and use their art of interpreting the visions given in sleep as a pretext for making money; but one who is accustomed to judge with exactness that great general universal dream which is dreamt not only by the sleeping but also by the waking.<sup>a</sup> This dream in veriest truth is human life: <sup>127</sup> for, just as in the visions of sleep, seeing we see not, hearing we hear not, tasting and touching we neither taste nor touch, speaking we speak not, walking we walk not, and the other motions which we make or postures we adopt we do not make or adopt at all, but they are empty creations of the mind which without any basis of reality produces pictures and images of things which are not, as though they were, so, too, the visions and imaginations of our waking hours resemble dreams. They come; they go; they appear; they speed away; they fly off before we can securely grasp them; let every man search into his own heart and <sup>127</sup> he will test the truth of this at first hand, with no need of proof from me, especially if he is now advanced in years. This is he who was once a babe, after this a boy, then a lad, then a stripling, then a young man, then a grown man and last an old man. But where <sup>128</sup> <sup>a</sup> For some discussion of §§ 125-147 see App. pp. 601-602.

PHILO

- ποῦ πάντ' ἐκεῖνα; οὐκ ἐν μὲν παιδί τὸ βρέφος ὑπεξήλθεν, ὁ δὲ παῖς ἐν παρήβῳ, ὁ δ' ἔφηβος ἐν μειρακίῳ, τὸ δὲ μειράκιον ἐν νεανίᾳ, ἐν ἀνδρὶ δ' ὁ νεανίας, ἀνὴρ δ' ἐν γέροντι, γῆρα δ' ἔπεται τε-129 λευτή; τάχα μέντοι τάχα καὶ τῶν ἡλικιῶν ἐκάστη παραχωροῦσα τοῦ κράτους τῇ μεθ' ἑαυτὴν προαποθνήσκει, τῆς φύσεως ἡμᾶς ἀναδιδασκούσης ἡσυχῇ μὴ δεδιέναι τὸν ἐπὶ πᾶσι θάνατον, ἐπειδὴ τοὺς προτέρους εὐμαρῶς ἠνέγκαμεν, τὸν βρέφους, τὸν παιδός, τὸν ἐφήβου, τὸν μειρακίου, τὸν νεανίου, τὸν ἀνδρός, ὧν οὐδεὶς ἔτ' ἐστὶ γῆρως ἐπιστάντος.
- 130 XXIII. τὰ δ' ἄλλα ὅσα περὶ τὸ σῶμα οὐκ ἐνύπνια; οὐ κάλλος μὲν ἐφήμερον, πρὶν ἀν-[60] θῆσαι μαραινόμενον; ὑγεία δὲ | ἀβέβαιον διὰ τὰς ἐφέδρους ἀσθενείας; ἰσχὺς δ' εὐάλωτον νόσοις ἐκ μυρίων προφάσεων; ἢ τ' ἀκρίβεια τῶν αἰσθήσεων οὐ παγία ρεύματος ἐνστάσει βραχέος ἀνατρέπεται;
- 131 τὴν δὲ τῶν ἐκτὸς ἀσάφειαν τίς οὐκ οἶδε; μιᾷ ἡμέρᾳ πλοῦτοι μεγάλοι πολλακίς ἀπερ-ρύησαν· τὰ πρωτεῖα τῶν ἐν ταῖς ἀνωτάτω τιμαῖς ἐνεγκάμενοι μυριοὶ πρὸς ἡμελημένων καὶ ἀφανῶν ἀδοξίαν μετέβαλον· ἀρχαὶ βασιλέων αἱ μέγισται
- 132 καθηρέθησαν βραχεῖα καιροῦ ῥοπή. ἐγγυᾶταί μου τὸν λόγον Διονύσιος ὁ ἐν Κορίνθῳ, ὃς Σικελίας μὲν τύραννος ἦν, ἐκπεσῶν δὲ τῆς ἡγεμονίας εἰς Κόρινθον καταφεύγει καὶ γραμματιστῆς ὁ τοσοῦτος
- 133 ἡγεμῶν γίνεται. συνεγγυᾶται καὶ Κροῖσος ὁ Λυδίας βασιλεύς, πλουσιώτατος βασιλέων, ὃς ἐλ-πίσας τὴν Περσῶν καθελεῖν ἀρχὴν οὐ μόνον τὴν

<sup>a</sup> Cf. De Cher. 114.

<sup>b</sup> The γραμματιστῆς is lower than the γραμματικός, cf. the

ON JOSEPH, 128-133

are all these gone? Has not the baby vanished in the boy, the boy in the lad, the lad in the stripling, the stripling in the youth, the youth in the man, the man in the old man, while on old age follows death? <sup>a</sup> Perhaps, indeed, each of the stages, as it resigns its 129 rule to its successor, dies an anticipatory death, nature thus silently teaching us not to fear the death which ends all, since we have borne so easily the earlier deaths:—that of the babe, of the boy, of the lad, of the stripling, of the man, who are all no more when old age has come. XXIII. And the other 130 things of the body are they not dreams? Is not beauty but for a day, withering before it flowers; health insecure because of the infirmities that lie ready to attack it; strength an easy victim of the diseases which arise from numberless causes; accuracy of senses unstable and easily upset by the onset of some little humour? As for the 131 external goods, who does not know their uncertainty? Magnificent fortunes have often been dissolved in a single day. Multitudes who have won the first place with the highest honour have passed over to the unglorious lot of the unmeritable and obscure. The greatest kings have seen their empires overthrown when occasion gives a slight turn to the scale. What 132 I say is vouched for by Dionysius of Corinth, who was the tyrant of Sicily, but when he fell from power fled to Corinth and there this great sovereign became a teacher of the rudiments.<sup>b</sup> Another witness is 133 Croesus, the king of Lydia, wealthiest of monarchs, who hoped to overthrow the empire of the Persians, definition of γραμματιστική as γραμματική ἀτελεστέρα, De Cong. 148. Cicero, Tusc. iii. 27, merely says of Dionysius “docebat pueros.”

PHILO

- οικειαν προσαπέβαλεν, ἀλλὰ καὶ ζωγρηθεὶς ἐμέλ-134 λησε καταπίμπρασθαι. μάρτυρες τῶν ἐνυπνίων οὐκ ἄνδρες μόνον, ἀλλὰ καὶ πόλεις, ἔθνη, χῶραι, ἢ Ἑλλάς, ἢ βάρβαρος, ἠπειρωταί, νησιῶται, ἢ Εὐρώπη, ἢ Ἀσία, δύοσις, ἀνατολή. μεμένηκε γὰρ οὐδὲν οὐδαμοῦ τὸ παράπαν ἐν ὁμοίῳ, τροπαῖς δὲ καὶ μεταβολαῖς ἐχρήσατο πάντα διὰ πάντων.
 135 Αἴγυπτός ποτε πολλῶν ἐθνῶν ἡγεμονίαν εἶχεν, ἀλλὰ νῦν ἐστὶ δούλη. Μακεδόνες οὕτως ἐπὶ καιρῶν ἠγκμασαν, ὡς ἀπάσης ἀνάψασθαι τῆς οἰκουμένης τὸ κράτος, ἀλλὰ νῦν τοῖς ἐκλογεῦσι τῶν χρημάτων τοὺς ἐπιταχθέντας ὑπὸ τῶν κυρίων δασμοὺς ἐτη-136 σίους εἰσφέρουσι. ποῦ δὲ ἢ τῶν Πτολεμαίων οἰκία καὶ ἢ καθ' ἕκαστον τῶν διαδόχων ἐπιφάνεια μέχρι γῆς καὶ θαλάττης περάτων ἐκλάμψασα; ποῦ δ' αἰ τῶν αὐτονόμων ἐθνῶν καὶ πόλεων ἐλευθερίαι; ποῦ δ' ἔμπαλιν αἰ δουλείαι τῶν ὑπηκόων; οὐ Πέρσαι μὲν Παρθυαίων ἐπεκράτουσαν, νυνὶ δὲ Περσῶν Παρ-θυαῖοι διὰ τὰς τῶν ἀνθρωπείων πραγμάτων στροφὰς καὶ τὰς ἄνω καὶ κάτω πεττείας καὶ μεταθέσεις 137 αὐτῶν; ἀναπλάττουσιν ἔνιοι μακρὰς τινὰς καὶ ἀπεράτους εὐτυχίας ἑαυτοῖς, αἱ δ' ἀρχαὶ μεγάλων κακῶν εἰσι· καὶ σπεύδοντες ὡς ἐπ' ἀγαθῶν κληρο-νομίαν εὐρίσκουσι δεινὰς κακοπραγίας, καὶ τοῦναντίον κακὸν προσδοκῆσαντες ἀγαθοῖς ἐνέτυχον.
 138 ἀθληταὶ δυνάμεσι καὶ ῥώμαις καὶ εὐεξίαις σωμάτων μέγα φρονούντες, ἀνενδοίαστον νίκην ἐλπίσαντες, ἐξαγώνιοι πολλάκις ἐγένοντο μὴ δοκιμασθέντες ἢ καταστάντες εἰς τὸν ἀγῶνα ἠττήθησαν, οἱ δ' ἀπογνόντες καὶ δευτερείων ἐφίξεσθαι τὰ πρῶτα

<sup>a</sup> Cf. Quod Deus 173 f.

<sup>b</sup> i.e. of Alexander.

ON JOSEPH, 133-138

and not only lost his own as well but was taken prisoner and on the point of being burnt alive. That 134 these are dreams is attested not only by single men, but by cities, nations, countries, by Greeks, by the world of the barbarians, by dwellers on the mainland, by dwellers on islands, by Europe, by Asia, by West, by East.<sup>a</sup> For nothing at all anywhere has remained in the same condition; everywhere all has been subject to changes and vicissitudes. Egypt once 135 held the sovereignty over many nations, but now is in slavery. The Macedonians in their day of success flourished so greatly that they held dominion over all the habitable world, but now they pay to the tax-collectors the yearly tributes imposed by their masters. Where is the house of the Ptolemies, and 136 the fame of the several Successors<sup>b</sup> whose light once shone to the utmost boundaries of land and sea? Where are the liberties of the independent nations and cities, where again the servitude of the vassals? Did not the Persians once rule the Parthians, and now the Parthians rule the Persians? So much do human affairs twist and change, go backward and forward as on the draught-board. Some picture for 137 their future a long and unlimited run of luck, and the outcome is great calamity, and when they press eagerly to secure what they think to be their heritage of good they find terrible misfortunes, while on the contrary when they expect evil what they meet with is good. Athletes mightily proud of the 138 strength and muscle and robustness of their bodies, hoping for undoubted victory, have often failed to pass the test and been excluded from the arena, or if admitted, have been vanquished, while others who despaired of taking even the second place have won

PHILO

- 139 τῶν ἄθλων στεφανηφοροῦντες ἦραντο. θέρους ἀναχθέντες τινές—ὁ γὰρ καιρὸς εὐπλοίας—ἐναυάγησαν, ἕτεροι δὲ χειμῶνος ἀνατραπήσεσθαι προσδοκῶντες ἀκινδύνως ἄχρι λιμένων παρεπέμφθησαν. ὡς ἐφ' ὁμολογούμενα κέρδη συντείνουσιν ἔνιοι τῶν ἐμπόρων ἀγνοοῦντες τὰς ἐφέδρους ζημίας, ἔμπαλιν λογιζόμενοι βλαβήσεσθαι μεγάλων ἀπέλαυσαν |
- [61] 140 ὠφελειῶν. οὕτως ἄδηλοι μὲν αἱ τύχαι πρὸς ἑκάτερα, τὰ δ' ἀνθρώπεια ὡς ἐπὶ ζυγοῦ ταλαντεύεται βάρεσιν ἀνίσοις ἐπικουφίζόμενα καὶ καθέλκοντα· δεινὴ δ' ἀσάφεια καὶ πολὺ σκότος κατακέχυται τῶν πραγμάτων· ὡς δ' ἐν βαθεῖ ὕπνῳ πλαζόμεθα μηδὲν ἐμπεριελθεῖν ἀκριβείᾳ λογισμοῦ δυνάμενοι μηδ' εὐτόνως καὶ παγίως ἐπιδράξασθαι τινος, σκιαῖς γὰρ
- 141 ἔοικε καὶ φάσμασι. καὶ ὥσπερ ἐν ταῖς πομπαῖς τὰ πρῶτα παρέρχεται φεύγοντα τὰς ὄψεις κὰν τοῖς χειμάρροις τὸ φερόμενον ρεῦμα φθάνει παραδραμὸν ὀξύτητι τάχους τὴν κατάληψιν, οὕτω καὶ τὰ ἐν τῷ βίῳ πράγματα φερόμενα καὶ παρεξίοντα φαντάζονται μὲν ὡς ὑπομένοντα, μένει δ' οὐδ' ἐπ' ἀκαρές,
- 142 ἀλλ' αἰεὶ ὑποσύρεται. καὶ οἱ ἐγρηγορότες, ὅσα γε πρὸς τὸ ἐν ταῖς καταλήψεσιν ἀβέβαιον οὐδὲν τῶν κοιμωμένων διαφέροντες, ἀπατῶντες ἑαυτοὺς ἱκανοὶ νομίζουσιν εἶναι τὰς φύσεις τῶν πραγμάτων ἀπλανέσι λογισμοῖς ὄραν· οἷς ἑκάστη τῶν αἰσθήσεων εἰς ἐπιστήμην ἐμπόδιος, δεκαζομένη θεάμασιν, ἀκούσμασι, χυλῶν ποιότησιν, ἀτμῶν ιδιότησι, πρὸς ἅπερ ἀποκλίνουσα συνεφέλκεται καὶ τὴν ὄλην ψυχὴν οὐκ ἐῷσα ὀρθοῦσθαι καὶ ἀπταιστώσ οἶα διὰ λεωφόρων ὁδῶν προέρχεσθαι· τὸ δ' ὑψηλο-

ON JOSEPH, 139-142

the first prize and worn the crown. Some who 139 embarked in summer, the safe sailing season, have been shipwrecked; others who sailed in winter, expecting to be capsized, have reached the harbour in security. Of merchants, some hurry to what seems certain gain, and little know the disasters that await them. Again, when they reckon that they will suffer loss, they win great profits. Thus fortunes 140 are uncertain either way, and human affairs swing as on a scale with unequal weights, carried lightly up or pressing the balance down, and terrible is the uncertainty and vast the darkness which envelops the events of life. We flounder as though in deep sleep, unable to compass anything by accurate reasoning or to grasp it vigorously and firmly, for all are like shadows and phantoms. And as in 141 processions the front part passes on and is lost to sight, and in the winter torrents the stream in its course speeds past us and by its violence and rapidity outstrips our observation, so too the events of life rush along past us, and though they make a show of remaining do not stay even for a moment, but are ever swept away. And those who 142 are awake, who in the uncertainty of apprehension differ nothing from the sleeping, deceive themselves and think that they are capable of discerning differences in the nature of things by incontrovertible processes of reason. Each sense impedes their attainment of knowledge, seduced whether by the sights it sees or by the sounds it hears, or by varieties of flavours, or by scents of different quality, to which it turns aside and is dragged along with them, and prevents the soul as a whole from standing erect and advancing without stumbling as along a high τάπεινον καὶ μεγαλόμικρον καὶ πᾶν ὅσον ἀνισότητι καὶ ἀνωμαλίᾳ συγγενὲς ἀπεργάζεται καὶ σκοτοδιναῖν ἀναγκάζει καὶ πολὺν ἐμποιεῖ ἴλιγγον.

- 143 XXIV. τοσαύτης οὖν ταραχῆς καὶ ἀταξίας ἔτι δὲ ἀσαφείας γέμοντος τοῦ βίου, παρελθόντα δεῖ τὸν πολιτικὸν ὡσπερ τινὰ σοφὸν τὴν ὄνειροκριτικὴν τὰ μεθημερινὰ ἐνύπνια καὶ φάσματα τῶν ἐγρηγορέναι δοκούντων διακρίνειν εἰκόσι στοχασμοῖς καὶ εὐλόγοις πιθανότησι περὶ ἐκάστου ἀναδιδάσκοντα, ὅτι τοῦτο καλόν, ἐκεῖνο αἰσχρόν, τοῦτο ἀγαθόν, κακὸν ἐκεῖνο, τουτὶ δίκαιον, ἀδικον τοῦναντίον, καὶ τᾶλλα ταύτῃ, τὸ φρόνιμον, τὸ ἀνδρείον, τὸ εὐσεβές, τὸ ὄσιον, τὸ συμφέρον, τὸ ὠφέλιμον, καὶ πάλιν τὸ ἀνωφελές, τὸ ἀλόγιστον, τὸ ἀγεννές, τὸ ἀσεβές, τὸ ἀνόσιον, τὸ ἀσύμφορον,
- 144 τὸ βλαβερόν, τὸ φίλαυτον.<sup>1</sup> καὶ ἔτι πρὸς τούτοις<sup>2</sup> ἀλλότριον τοῦτο, μὴ ἐπιθύμει· ἴδιον τοῦτο, χρῶ μὴ παραχρῶμενος· περιουσιάζεις, μεταδίδου· πλούτου γὰρ τὸ κάλλος οὐκ ἐν βαλαντίοις, ἀλλ' ἐν τῇ τῶν χρηζόντων ἐπικουρίᾳ· ὀλίγα κέκτησαι, μὴ φθόνει τοῖς ἔχουσι· πένητα γὰρ βάσκανον οὐδεὶς ἂν ἐλεῆσαι· εὐδοξεῖς καὶ τετίμησαι, μὴ καταλαζονεύου· ταπεινὸς εἰ ταῖς τύχαις, ἀλλὰ τὸ φρόνημα μὴ καταπιπτέτω· πάντα σοι κατὰ νοῦν χωρεῖ, μεταβολὴν εὐλαβοῦ· πταίεις πολλάκις, χρηστὰ ἔλπιδε· πρὸς

<sup>1</sup> The two lists balance so closely that one may be tempted to make the balance complete, and Cohn suggests the omission of τὸ ἀνωφελές at the beginning of the second and the insertion of τὸ φιλόανθρωπον. The argument does not seem to me convincing. Perhaps, too, φιλόθεον rather than φιλόανθρωπον is the reverse of Philo's φίλαυτον. Cf. Quod Det. 32.

<sup>2</sup> The transition to a totally different kind of question

ON JOSEPH, 142-144

road. And thus the senses produce the confusion of high with low and great with small, and all that is akin to inequality and irregularity, and the soul's sight swims perforce in the great dizziness which they create.

XXIV. Since, then, human life 143 is full of this vast confusion and disorder and uncertainty also, the statesman must come forward, and, like some wise expounder of dreams, interpret the day-time visions and phantoms of those who think themselves awake, and with suggestions commended by reason and probability shew them the truth about each of these visions : that this is beautiful, that ugly, this just, that unjust, and so with all the rest ; what is prudent, courageous, pious, religious, beneficial, profitable, and conversely what is unprofitable, unreasonable, ignoble, impious, irreligious, deleterious, harmful, selfish.<sup>a</sup> And he will 144

give other lessons, such as, This is another's, do not covet it ; This is your own, use it but do not misuse it ; You have abundance of wealth, give a share to others, for the excellence of wealth consists not in a full purse but in succouring the needy ; Your possessions are small, be not jealous of the rich, for envious poverty gets pity from none ; You have high reputation and have received honour, be not arrogant ; Your fortunes are lowly, let not your spirits sink also ; All goes with you as you would have it, be prepared for change ; You have made many a trip, hope for a better time, for with men

<sup>a</sup> Or perhaps better " self-assertive."

---

seems a little abrupt. It may be observed that what we might expect, viz. ἄλλα οἶον, would very easily be lost before ἀλλότριον.

PHILO

- 145 γὰρ τὰναντία τῶν ἀνθρώπων αἱ τροπαί. σελήνη μὲν γὰρ καὶ ἥλιος καὶ ὁ σύμπας οὐρανὸς σαφεῖς καὶ ἀριδῆλους ἔχει τὰς τρανότητας, ἅτε πάντων τῶν | [62] κατ' αὐτὸν ὁμοίων μενόντων καὶ τοῖς τῆς ἀληθείας αὐτῆς μετρουμένων κανόσιν ἐν τάξεσιν ἐναρμονίοις καὶ συμφωνιῶν ταῖς ἀρίσταις, τὰ δ' ἐπίγεια πολλῆς ἀταξίας γέμοντα καὶ ταραχῆς ἀσύμφωνα καὶ ἀνάρμοστα, ὡς κυριώτατα φάναι, ὅτι ταῦτα μὲν βαθὺ σκότος κατεῖληφεν, ἐκεῖνα δ' ἐμφέρεται τηλ-αυγεστάτῳ φωτί, μᾶλλον δ' αὐτὸ φῶς ἐστὶν εἰλι-146 κρινέστατον καὶ καθαρώτατον. εἰ γοῦν βουλευθείη διακύπτειν εἴσω τις τῶν πραγμάτων, εὐρήσει τὸν οὐρανὸν ἡμέραν αἰώνιον, νυκτὸς καὶ πάσης σκιᾶς ἀμέτοχον, ἅτε περιλαμπόμενον ἀσβέστοις καὶ 147 ἀκηράτοις ἀδιαστάτως φέγγεσιν. ὅσῳ τε διαφέρουσιν οἱ παρ' ἡμῖν ἐγρηγορότες τῶν κοιμωμένων, τοσοῦτῳ καὶ ἐν ἅπαντι τῷ κόσμῳ τὰ οὐράνια τῶν ἐπιγείων, τὰ μὲν ἐγρηγόρσει χρώμενα ἀκοι-μήτῳ διὰ τὰς ἀπλανεῖς καὶ ἀπταίστους καὶ ἐν ἅπασι κατορθούσας ἐνεργείας, τὰ δ' ὑπνῷ κατεχόμενα, κἂν εἰ πρὸς βραχὺ διανασταίη, πάλιν καθελκό-μενα καὶ καταδαρθάνοντα διὰ τὸ μηδὲν εὐθυτενῶς δύνασθαι τῇ ψυχῇ βλέπειν, ἀλλὰ πλάζεσθαι καὶ περιπταίειν· ἐπισκοτεῖται γὰρ ψευδέσι δόξαις, ὑφ' ὧν ὄνειρώττειν ἀναγκαζόμενα καὶ τῶν πραγμάτων ὑστερίζοντα οὐδὲν παγίως καὶ βεβαίως ἱκανὰ 148 καταλαμβάνειν ἐστί. XXV. συμ-βολικῶς μέντοι καὶ ἐπὶ τὸ δευτερεῖον τῶν βασιλικῶν ἀρμάτων ἀναβαίνειν λέγεται δι' αἰτίαν τοιάνδε· ὁ πολιτικὸς τὰ δευτερεῖα φέρεται βασιλέως· οὔτε γὰρ ἰδιώτης ἐστὶν οὔτε βασιλεύς, ἀλλ' ἀμφοῖν μεθόριος, ἰδιώτου μὲν ὧν κρείττων, ἐλάττων δ' εἰς ἀρχὴν

ON JOSEPH, 145-148

things turn to their opposite ; The sun and moon and 145 the whole heaven stand out in such clear and plain distinctness because everything there remains the same and regulated by the standards of truth itself moves in harmonious order and with the grandest of symphonies ; while earthly things are brimful of disorder and confusion and in the fullest sense of the words discordant and inharmonious, because in them deep darkness reigns while in heaven all moves in most radiant light, or rather heaven is light itself most pure and unalloyed. And indeed if one be 146 willing to look into the inner realities he will find that heaven is an eternal day, wherein there is no night or any shadow, because around it shine without ceasing unquenchable and undefiled beams of light.
And the same difference that there is here in people 147 when asleep and when awake exists in the universe as a whole between the heavenly and the earthly, for the former is kept in unsleeping wakefulness by active forces which do not err or stumble and go always aright, but the earthly life is sunk in sleep, and even if it wake up for a little is dragged down again and falls asleep, because it can see nothing steadily with its soul but wanders and stumbles about darkened as it is by false opinions which compel it to dream, and thus never catching up with realities it is incapable of apprehending anything firmly and securely.

XXV. Again there is a sym- 148 bolic meaning in saying that Joseph mounts on the king's second chariot, and the reason is this. The statesman takes a second place to the king, for he is neither a private person nor a king, but something between the two. He is greater than a private person but less than a king in absolute power, since

PHILO

- αὐτεξούσιον βασιλέως, τῷ δήμῳ βασιλεῖ χρώμενος, ὑπὲρ οὗ πάντα πράττειν προήρηται καθαρᾶ καὶ 149 ἀδολωτάτῃ πίστει. φέρεται δὲ ὡς ἐφ' ἄρματείου δίφρου μετέωρος ὑπὸ τε τῶν πραγμάτων καὶ τῶν ὄχλων εἰς ὕψος αἰρόμενος, καὶ μάλισθ' ὅταν κατὰ νοῦν ἕκαστα μικρὰ καὶ μεγάλα χωρῆ, μηδενὸς ἀντιπνέοντος μηδ' ἀντιστατοῦντος, ἀλλ' ὡς ἐν εὐπλοίᾳ πάντων σωτηρίως ὑπὸ θεοῦ κυβερνωμένων. ὃν τε δίδωσιν ὁ βασιλεὺς δακτύλιον, ἐναργέστατον δεῖγμα πίστεώς ἐστιν, ἣν πεπίστευκεν ὅ τε βασιλεὺς δῆμος τῷ πολιτικῷ καὶ ὁ πολιτικὸς τῷ βασιλεύοντι δήμῳ.
- 150 ὁ δὲ περὶ τὸν τράχηλον χρυσοῦς κύκλος εὐδοξίαν ὁμοῦ καὶ κόλασιν ἔοικεν ὑποσημαίνειν· ἕως μὲν γὰρ τὰ κατὰ τὴν πολιτείαν εὐδοεῖ πράγματα αὐτῷ, γαυρὸς ἐστι καὶ σεμνὸς ὑπὸ τῶν ὄχλων τιμώμενος· ἐπειδὰν δὲ πταιῖσμα συμβῆ, μὴ κατὰ προαίρεσιν —τοῦτο γὰρ ὑπαίτιον—, ἀλλὰ τυχερόν, ὅπερ ἐστὶ συγγνωστόν, οὐδὲν ἤττον ἔλκεται κάτω διὰ τοῦ περιουχενίου κόσμου καὶ ταπεινοῦται, μόνον οὐκ ἐπιλέγοντος τοῦ δεσπότου· “ τὸν περιουχένιον τοῦ-τον κύκλον ἐδωρησάμην σοι καὶ κόσμον κατορθουμένων τῶν ἐμῶν καὶ ἀγχόνην ἀποτυγχανομένων.”
- 151 [63] XXVI. | Ἦκουσα μέντοι καθ' ἑτέραν ἰδέαν τροπικώτερον τὰ περὶ τὸν τόπον ἀκριβοῦντων. ἦν δὲ τοιάδε· τὸν βασιλέα τῆς Αἰγύπτου τὸν ἡμέτερον νοῦν ἔλεγον εἶναι, τὸν τῆς καθ' ἕκαστον σωματικῆς χώρας ἡγεμόνα, ὃς οἷα βασιλεὺς ἀνῆπται τὸ κράτος.
- 152 ὧ γενομένῳ φιλοσωμάτῳ τρία τὰ πλείστης ἀξιού-μενα σπουδῆς διαπονεῖται, σιτία καὶ ὄψα καὶ ποτά,

ON JOSEPH, 148-152

he has the people for his king, and to serve that king with pure and guileless good faith is the task he has set before him. He rides, too, aloft seated 149 on a chariot, raised on high both by the affairs he handles and the multitude around him, especially when everything great and small goes as he would have it, when from none comes any counterblast or opposition, and under the safe pilotage of God all is well with the voyage. And the ring which the king gives is the clearest sign of the good faith which the king-people places in the statesman and the statesman in the king-people.

The golden chain around his neck seems to indicate 150 both high fame and punishment, for while affairs of state fare well in his hands he is proud and dignified and honoured by the multitude, but when disaster befalls him, not indeed of his set purpose which would imply guilt, but by chance which is a venial matter, he is all the same dragged down to the dust by the decoration round his neck, and as he falls you may almost hear his master say : " I gave you this neck circlet both as a decoration when my business prospers and as a halter when it goes amiss." <sup>a</sup>

XXVI. I have heard, however, some scholars give 151 an allegorical exposition of this part of the story in a different form. It was as follows. The king of Egypt, they said, was our mind, the ruler of the land of the body in each of us over which he is invested with kingly power. When this mind 152 becomes enamoured of the body, its efforts are expended on three things which it deems most worthy of its care and trouble, bread, meat and drink ; and, <sup>a</sup> The incidents of Joseph's exaltation discussed in these sections are treated somewhat differently in De Som. ii. 43-47.

PHILO

παρὸ καὶ τρισὶ χρήται τοῖς τῶν λεγομένων ἐπιμεληταῖς, ἀρχισιτοποιῶ καὶ ἀρχιοινοχόω καὶ ἀρχιμαγεύω· πρυτανεύει γὰρ ὁ μὲν τὰ περι ἔδωδὴν, ὁ δὲ τὰ περι πόσιν, ὁ δ' ἐπιτέτακται τοῖς περι αὐτὰ 153 τὰ ὄψα ἡδύσμασιν. πάντες δέ εἰσιν εὐνοῦχοι, ἐπει-δὴ ὁ φιλήδονος ἄγονός ἐστι τῶν ἀναγκαιοτάτων, σωφροσύνης, αἰδοῦς, ἐγκρατείας, δικαιοσύνης, ἀπά-σης ἀρετῆς· οὐδὲν γὰρ οὕτως ἐχθρόν ἄλλο ἄλλω, ὡς ἀρετῇ ἡδονή, δι' ἣν ἀλογοῦσιν οἱ πολλοὶ ὦν μόνον ἄξιον πεφροντικέαι, ταῖς ἀκαθέκτοις ἐπιθυμίαις 154 χαριζόμενοι καὶ οἷς ἂν προστάττωσιν εἴκοντες. ὁ μὲν οὖν ἀρχιμάγειρος οὔτ' εἰς δεσμοκτήριον ἀπἄγεται οὔτε τινὶ περιπίπτει λύμη διὰ τὸ μὴ σφόδρα τῶν ἀναγκαίων εἶναι τὰς παραρτύσεις οὐχ ἡδονὰς οὔσας ἀλλ' εὐσβεστα ἡδονῶν ὑπεκκαύματα, δύο δὲ τῶν περι τὴν ἄθλιον γαστέρα πραγματευομένων, ἀρχισιτοποιὸς καὶ ἀρχιοινοχόος, ἐπειδὴ τὰ συνεκτικώτατα τῶν εἰς τὸ ζῆν χρησίμων ἐστὶ βρώσις καὶ πόσις, ὦν ἐπιμελείας μὲν ἄξιουμένων οἱ προεστῶτες εἰκότως ἐπαίνων τυγχάνουσιν, ὀλιγωρουμένων δὲ 155 ὀργῆς καὶ κολάσεως ἀξιοῦνται. διαφορὰ δὲ κὰν ταῖς κολάσεσιν, ὅτι διάφορος ἡ χρεία, σιτίων μὲν ἀναγκαιοτάτη, οἴνου δὲ οὐ πάνυ χρησίμη· καὶ γὰρ ἀκράτου δίχα ζῶσιν ἄνθρωποι ναματιαίω ὕδατι 156 ποτῶ χρώμενοι. δι' ἣν αἰτίαν πρὸς μὲν τὸν ἀρχιοινοχόον γίνονται καταλλαγαὶ καὶ συμβάσεις ὡς ἂν ἀμαρτόντα περι τὸ ἔλαττον μέρος, ἀσύμβατα δὲ καὶ ἀκατάλλακτα τὰ πρὸς τὸν ἀρχισιτοποιόν ἐστὶν ἄχρι θανάτου λαμβάνοντα τὴν ὀργὴν ὡς ἂν περι τὸ μέγιστον ἀδικήσαντα· τελευτῇ γὰρ ἔπεται σιτίων σπάνει· οὐ χάριν καὶ ὁ περι ταῦτ' ἔξαμαρτῶν εἰκότως θνήσκει κρεμασθεῖς, ὅμοιον κακὸν

ON JOSEPH, 152-156

therefore, it provides three offices to provide for these, a chief baker, a chief butler and a chief cook, for the first presides over the food, the second over the drink, the third over the seasoning which adds relish to the actual meat. All are eunuchs, since 153 the lover of pleasure is barren of all the chief necessities, temperance, modesty, self-restraint, justice and every virtue; for no two things can be more hostile to each other than virtue is to pleasure, which makes the many disregard what alone deserves their care, satisfy their unbridled lusts and submit to whatever those lusts command. So, then, the chief cook is not haled 154 to prison and meets with no maltreatment, because the extra seasonings he prepares are not of the most indispensable kind and are not pleasure, but incitements to pleasure, which kindle only to be quenched. Not so with the other two whose business lies with the miserable belly, namely the chief baker and the chief butler. For the most essential of the needs of life are food and drink, and those who take charge of them are naturally held to deserve praise if they treat the charge as worthy of their care, but anger and punishment if they neglect it. The punishment 155 also differs in the two cases because the usefulness of the two differs, being absolutely vital in regard to bread-food, less so in regard to wine, for men can live without strong liquor by drinking fresh water, and 156 therefore it is possible to make terms of reconciliation with the chief butler as an offender in a less important matter. Not so with the chief baker who, being guilty in what is all-important, is the object of an anger which demands his life. For death is the consequence of lack of bread-food, and therefore the offender in this is properly put to death by hanging, ὧ διέθηκε παθῶν· καὶ γὰρ αὐτὸς ἀνεκρέμασε καὶ παρέτεινε τὸν πεινῶντα λιμῶ.

PHILO

- 157 XXVII. Τοσαῦτα καὶ περὶ τούτου. ὁ μέντοι βασιλέως ὑπαρχος κατασταθεὶς καὶ τῆς Αἰγύπτου τὴν ἐπιμέλειαν καὶ προστασίαν λαβὼν ἐξήγει γνωρισθησόμενος ἅπασιν τοῖς ἐγχωρίοις καὶ τοὺς λεγομένους νομοὺς ἐπιῶν κατὰ πόλεις πολὺν αὐτοῦ πόθον ἐνειργάζετο τοῖς ὀρώσιν, οὐ μόνον ταῖς ὠφελείαις, ἃς ἐκάστοις παρείχεν, ἀλλὰ καὶ ταῖς περὶ τὴν ὄψιν τε καὶ τὴν ἄλλην ὀμιλίαν ἀλέκτοις
- 158 καὶ ἐξαιρέτοις χάρισιν. ἐπεὶ δὲ κατὰ τὴν τῶν ὄνειράτων σύγκρισιν<sup>1</sup> ἐνέστη προτέρα τῆς εὐθηνίας
- [64] ἢ ἑπταετία, τὸ πέμπτον | τῶν καρπῶν ἀνὰ πᾶν ἔτος συνάγων διὰ τε τῶν ὑπάρχων<sup>2</sup> καὶ τῶν ἄλλων, οἱ πρὸς τὰς δημοσίας χρείας ὑπηρέτουν αὐτῷ, τοσαύτην ἠθροισε πληθὺν δραγμάτων, ὅσῃν οὐδεὶς πω πρότερον γενομένην ἐμέμνητο· πίστις δὲ σαφειστάτη τὸ μῆδ' ἀριθμηθῆναι δύνασθαι, καίτοι μυρία τινῶν πονηθέντων, οἷς ἐπιμελές, περιεργία διαριθμήσα-
- 159 σθαι. διεξεληθόντων δὲ τῶν ἑπτὰ ἔτων, ἐν οἷς εὐφόρησεν ἡ πεδιάς, ἀρχὴν ἐλάμβανεν ὁ λιμός, ὃν ἐπιβαίνοντα καὶ συναυξόμενον οὐκ ἐχώρησεν Αἰγυπτος· ἀναχεόμενος γὰρ καὶ τὰς ἐξῆς αἰεὶ πόλεις καὶ χώρας ἐπικαταλαμβάνων ἄχρι περάτων καὶ τῶν πρὸς ἑω καὶ τῶν πρὸς δυσμὰς ἔφθασε τὴν οἰ-
- 160 κουμένην ἐν κύκλῳ πᾶσαν κατασχών. λέγεται γοῦν

<sup>1</sup> Cohn would read διάκρισιν, but cf. De Mig. 19 τὰς ἀληθεῖς καὶ σαφεῖς τῶν πραγμάτων συγκρίσεις (referring also to Joseph's dreams) εἶναι κατὰ θεόν.

<sup>2</sup> Perhaps read τοπάρχων, the word used (in the form τοπάρχης) in Gen. xli. 34.

ON JOSEPH, 156-160

suffering what he has made others to suffer, for indeed he has hanged and racked the starving man with hunger.

XXVII. So much for this.<sup>a</sup> To continue the story, 157 Joseph, thus appointed viceroy to the king and promoted to the superintendence of Egypt, took a journey to make himself known to all the people of the country. He visited the nomes,<sup>b</sup> as they are called, city by city, and made his presence very welcome to those who saw him, not only through the benefits which they received from him, but through the remarkable and exceptional charm of his appearance and his general deportment. When the 158 first seven years of plenty came, as his reading of the dreams had predicted, he employed the (local) prefects and others who served him in providing for the public needs to collect a fifth part of the fruits every year, and the quantity of sheaves which he amassed surpassed anything within the memory of men. The clearest proof of this is that it was impossible even to count them, though some persons who were interested in it spent a vast amount of labour in making elaborate calculations. But when 159 the seven years during which the plains bore plentifully were ended, the famine began and spread and grew till Egypt could not hold it. It overran successively the cities and countries which lay in its path to the utmost limits of east and west, and rapidly made itself master of the whole civilized world round Egypt. In fact, it is said that never did so great a 160

<sup>a</sup> From this point on to § 257 Philo's narrative follows Gen. xli. 46-xlvii. 12 without serious interruption.

<sup>b</sup> The name regularly given to the districts of Egypt. See L. & S.

PHILO

- μηδέποτε κοινή νόσος κατασκήψαι τοσαύτη, καθάπερ ἦν ἰατρῶν παῖδες ὀνομάζουσιν ἐρπήνα· καὶ γὰρ αὕτη πᾶσι τοῖς μέρεσιν ἐπιφοιτῶσα τὴν κοινωνίαν τῶν ἡλκωμένων σωμάτων ὅλην δι' ὅλων στοιχηδὸν
- 161 πυρὸς τρόπον ἐπινέμεται. τοὺς οὖν ἀφ' ἑκάστης δοκιμωτάτους αἰρούμενοι σιτώνας ἐξέπεμπον εἰς Αἴγυπτον· ἤδη γὰρ ἡ πρόνοια τοῦ νεανίσκου πανταχόσε διηγγέλλετο ταμειυσαμένου τροφὰς ἀφθόνους
- 162 εἰς καιρὸν ἐνδείας. ὁ δὲ τὸ μὲν πρῶτον κελεύει ἀνοιχθῆναι τοὺς σωροὺς ἅπαντας, ὑπολαμβάνων εὐθυμοτέρους παρασκευάσειν τοὺς ἰδόντας καὶ τρόπον τινὰ τὰς ψυχὰς ἀναθρέψειν πρὸ τῶν σωμάτων ἐλπίσι χρησταῖς, ἔπειτα διὰ τῶν ἐπιτραπέντων τὰς σιταρχίας ἐπώλει τοῖς ἔχουσιν ὠνητικῶς, στοχαζόμενος τοῦ μέλλοντος αἰεὶ καὶ τὸ ἐπιὸν ὀρῶν τοῦ παρόντος ἀκριβέστερον.
- 163 XXVIII. Ἐν δὲ τούτῳ καὶ ὁ πατήρ, ὑποσπανίζόντων ἤδη τῶν ἀναγκαίων, ἀγνοῶν τὴν τοῦ παιδὸς εὐτυχίαν ἐκπέμπει δέκα τῶν υἱῶν ἐπὶ σιτωνίαν τὸν νεώτατον οἴκοι κατασχών, ὃς ἦν ὁμομήτριος ἀδελ-
- 164 φὸς τῷ βασιλέως ὑπάρχῳ. καὶ οἱ μὲν εἰς Αἴγυπτον ἐλθόντες ἐντυγχάνουσιν ὡς ἀλλοτρίῳ τὰδελφῷ καὶ τὴν περὶ αὐτὸν ἀξίωσιν καταπλαγέντες ἔθει παλαιῶ προσκυνούσιν, ἤδη καὶ τῶν ὄνειράτων αὐτοῦ λαμβανόντων βεβαίωσιν. ὁ δὲ τοὺς πεπρακότας θεασάμενος εὐθύς ἐγνώρισεν ἅπαντας ὑπὸ μηδενοῦς αὐτὸς γνωρισθεῖς τὸ παράπαν, μὴ βουλευθέντος πω τοῦ θεοῦ τάληθές ἀναφῆναι διὰ τινος ἀναγκαίας αἰτίας, ἃς τότε βέλτιον ἦν ἡσυχάζεσθαι, ἀλλ' ἢ τὴν ὄψιν
- 218

ON JOSEPH, 160-165

scourge fall upon the whole community. In this it resembled what the medical schools call herpes, which attacks every part and spreads in successive stages like a fire over the whole framework of the festering body. Accordingly from each city the most ap- 161 proved persons were chosen and sent to Egypt, for already the story of Joseph's foresight in storing up abundance of food against a time of dearth had penetrated to every quarter. He first ordered all 162 the stores to be thrown open, thinking that he would thus increase the courage of those who saw them, and, so to speak, feed their souls with comforting hopes before he fed their bodies. Afterwards, through the commissioners of victualling he sold to those who wished to buy, still always forecasting the after-time and keeping a keener eye on the future than on the present.

XXVIII. In these circumstances, his father, too, 163 as the necessities of life were now growing scarce, little knowing his boy's good fortune, sent ten of his sons to buy corn, but kept at home the youngest, the uterine brother of the king's viceroy. The ten came 164 to Egypt and had an interview with their brother, thinking him to be a stranger, and awestruck at his dignified position bowed to him in the old-fashioned way, and thus at the very outset brought his dreams to fulfilment.<sup>a</sup> He, seeing those who had sold him, 165 immediately recognized them all, though none of them recognized him. It was not God's will to reveal the truth as yet, for cogent reasons which were best at the time kept secret, and therefore He ἀλλάξαντος εἰς σεμνότερον εἶδος τοῦ τὴν χώραν ἐπιτραπέντος ἢ παρατρέφαντος τὰς ἀκριβεῖς κατα-166 λήψεις τῆς διανοίας τῶν ὀρώντων. εἰτ' οὐχ ὡσπερ νέος καὶ τοσαύτης ἡγεμονίας διάδοχος ἀρχὴν τὴν μετὰ βασιλέα πρώτην ἀναψάμενος, εἰς ὃν ἀνατολαὶ [65] καὶ δύσεις ἀπέβλεπον, | ἡλικίας ἀκμῇ καὶ μεγέθει τῆς ἐξουσίας ἐπαρθεῖς, καιρὸν ἔχων ἀμύνης ἐμνησικάκησεν, ἀλλ' ἐγκρατῶς τὸ πάθος ἐνεγκὼν καὶ ταμιευσάμενος αὐτοῦ τῇ ψυχῇ μετὰ πολλοῦ τοῦ προμηθοῦς ἐπεμόρφάζεν ἀλλοτρίωσιν καὶ βλέμμασι καὶ φωνῇ καὶ τοῖς ἄλλοις καθυποκρινόμενος τὸν δυσχεραίνοντα “ οὐδέν ” εἶπεν, “ ὦ οὔτοι, φρονεῖτε εἰρηνικόν, ἀλλὰ τις τῶν βασιλέως ἐχθρῶν κατα-σκόπους ὑμᾶς ἐξέπεμψεν, ᾧ κακὰς ὑπηρεσίας ὁμο-λογήσαντες ὑπηρετήσῃν λήσεσθαι μὲν ᾤθητε, λανθάνει δ' οὐδέν τῶν δρωμένων ἐπ' ἐνέδρα, κἄν 167 βαθεῖ σκότῳ συσκιάζεται. ” πειρωμένων δ' ἀπολογεῖσθαι καὶ διεξιόντων, ὡς ἐπ' ἀγενήτοις κατηγοροῦνται, μήτε γὰρ παρὰ δυσμενῶν ἦκειν μήτ' αὐτοὶ τοῖς ἐγχωρίοις ἀπέχθεσθαι μηδ' ἂν ὑπομεῖναι ποτε τοιαύτην διακονίαν, εἶναι γὰρ τὰς φύσεις εἰρηνικοὶ καὶ μεμαθηκέναι σχεδὸν ἐξ ἔτι νηπίων παιδῶν τιμᾶν εὐστάθειαν παρ' ὀσιωτάτῳ καὶ θεοφιλεστάτῳ πατρί, ᾧ δώδεκα γενομένων υἱῶν ἓνα μὲν τὸν νεώτατον οὐκ ἔχοντά πω ἡλικίαν ἀποδημίας οἶκοι καταμεῖναι, δέκα δὲ τοὺς ὀρω-μένους ἡμᾶς ἐνταῦθα ὑπάρχειν, τὸν δὲ λοιπὸν ἐκποδῶν γεγενῆσθαι—, XXIX. ταῦτ'

<sup>a</sup> Philo is probably thinking of Gen. xlii. 9 "Joseph remembered the dreams which he dreamed of them, and said unto them, Ye are spies."

ON JOSEPH, 165-167

either changed and added grandeur to the appearance of the regent or else perverted the understanding of the brothers from properly apprehending what they saw. Then, though, young as he was, promoted 166 to so high a command, invested with the first office after the king, looked up to by east and west, flushed with the vigour of his prime and the greatness of his power, with the opportunity of revenge in his hands, he might well have shewn vindictiveness, he did not do so. He bore up firmly against his feelings, and, keeping them under the management of his soul, with a carefully considered purpose, he feigned disfavour and with looks and voice and the rest of his demeanour counterfeited indignation.

“Sirs,” he said, “your intentions are not peaceful. You have been sent as spies by one of the king’s enemies, to whom you have agreed to render this base service thinking that you would escape detection. But no treacherous action passes undetected, however profound the obscurity in which it is shrouded.”

The brothers attempted 167 to defend themselves, and maintained that the charges had no foundation of fact. They had not been sent, they said, by ill-disposed persons, and they themselves had no hostility to the people of the country and could never have brought themselves to undertake such employment, being men of peaceful nature who had learned almost from infancy to value a steady and quiet life under a father of scrupulous conduct and highly favoured by God. “This father has had twelve sons, the youngest of whom has stayed at home, being not of an age to travel. Ten are we whom you see before you here, and the twelfth has passed away.”

PHILO

- ἀκούσας ὡς ἐπὶ τεθνεῶτι ἑαυτῷ παρὰ τῶν ἀπο-168 δομένων τί τὴν ψυχὴν ἄρα ἐπεπόνθει; καὶ γὰρ εἰ μὴ ἐξελάλησε τότε τὸ παραστὰν πάθος, ἀλλὰ τούτοις ὑποτυφομένῳ καὶ ζωπυρουμένῳ πάντως τὰ ἐντὸς ἐκαίετο, βαθεῖ δ' ὅμως ἤθει φησὶν αὐτοῖς· “ εἰ τῷ ὄντι μὴ κατασκευόμενοι τὴν γῆν ἀφίχθε, πρὸς πίστιν τὴν ἐμὴν ὑμεῖς μὲν ἐνταυθοὶ διατρίψατε βραχύν τινα χρόνον, ὁ δὲ νεώτατος ἀδελφὸς ὑμῶν ἀφικέσθω μετακληθεὶς ἐπιστολιμαίοις γράμμασιν.
 169 ἂν δ' ἔνεκα τοῦ πατρὸς ἐπείγησθε ἀπιέναι φοβησομένου τάχα τὴν μακρὰν ὑμῶν διάζευξιν, οἱ μὲν ἄλλοι πάντες ἀπάρατε, καταμεινάτω δ' εἰς ὀμηρεύσων, ἄχρις ἂν ἐπανέλθητε σὺν τῷ νεωτάτῳ· τιμωρία δὲ κατὰ τῶν μὴ πειθαρχούντων ἢ ἀνωτάτω προ-170 κείσεται θάνατος.” καὶ ὁ μὲν τοιαυτ' ἀπειλήσας ὑποβλεπόμενος καὶ βαρείας ὀργῆς δείγματα παρασχῶν ὅσα τῷ δοκεῖν ἀπηλλάττετο· οἱ δὲ συννοίας καὶ κατηφείας γεμισθέντες ἐκάκιζον ἑαυτοὺς ἔνεκα τῆς πρὸς τὸν ἀδελφὸν ἐπιβουλῆς “ ἐκεῖνο ” λέγοντες “ τὰ δίκημα τῶν παρόντων ἐστὶ κακῶν αἴτιον, τῆς ἐφόρου δίκης τῶν ἀνθρωπέων πραγμάτων ἤδη τι μηχανωμένης καθ' ἡμῶν· βραχύν γὰρ ἡσυχάσασα χρόνον διανίσταται τὴν ἀμείλικτον καὶ ἀπαραίτητον αὐτῆς ἐπιδεικνυμένη φύσιν τοῖς ἀξίοις κολάσεως.
 171 πῶς γὰρ οὐκ ἄξιοι; οἱ δεόμενον καὶ ποτνιώμενον τὸν ἀδελφὸν οἱ ἀνηλεεῖς ὑπερείδομεν οὐδὲν μὲν ἐξαμαρτόντα, φαντασίας δὲ τὰς καθ' ὕπνον διὰ τὸ φιλοΐκειον ὡς συνήθεσιν ἀνενεγκόντα, ὑπὲρ ὧν οἱ θηριωδέστατοι καὶ πάντων ἀγριώτατοι δυσχεραί-[66] νοντες ἡμεῖς οὐχ ὅσια—δεῖ γὰρ | ἀψευδεῖν—εἰργα-172 σάμεθα. τοιγαροῦν καὶ ταῦτα καὶ ἔτι χεῖρω τού-

<sup>a</sup> Or “with consummate acting.” See App. p. 602.

ON JOSEPH, 168-172

XXIX. When he heard this and found himself spoken of as dead by those who had sold him, what do we suppose were the sensations of his soul? Though he gave no utterance to the emotion which 168 he felt, yet inwardly he was consumed by the secret fire which their words had kindled. In spite of this, he said, assuming a very impressive air,<sup>a</sup> "If it is true that you have not come to spy out the land, do you as a proof of good faith to me abide here for a short time and let your youngest brother be summoned hither by letter. But, if you are anxious 169 to depart for the sake of your father who will perhaps be alarmed at his long separation from you, let all the rest set off but one remain to serve as a hostage until you return with the youngest. And any disobedience in this will entail the extreme penalty of death." Thus he threatened with grim 170 looks, and giving to all appearance signs of great anger took his departure. But they, filled with gloom and depression, began to reproach themselves for their plot against their brother. "That wrong we did," they said, "is the cause of our present evil plight. Justice, the surveyor of human affairs, is now devising our downfall. For a little while she kept quiet, but now is awake and shews her implacable and inexorable nature to those who deserve punishment. And who deserves it more than we, 171 who mercilessly disregarded the prayers and supplications of our brother, though he had committed no offence, but merely in family affection recounted to us as his intimates the visions of his sleep, in resentment for which, with unparalleled brutality and savagery, we wrought what truth forces us to admit were unholy deeds? And, therefore, let us 172

PHILO

- των πείσεσθαι προσδοκῶμεν, οἵτινες μόνοι σχεδὸν ἐξ ἀπάντων ἀνθρώπων εὐπατρίδαι λεγόμενοι διὰ τὰς πατέρων καὶ πάππων καὶ προγόνων ὑπερβαλλούσας ἀρετὰς ἠσχύναμεν τὴν συγγένειαν ἐπιφανῆς
- 173 ὄνειδος κτήσασθαι σπουδάσαντες.” ὁ δὲ πρεσβύτατος τῶν ἀδελφῶν, ὃς καὶ ἐν ἀρχῇ, συντιθεμένων τὴν ἐπιβουλήν, ἠναντιοῦτο, “ ἐπὶ δὴ πεπραγμένοις ” εἶπεν “ ἀνωφελεῖς αἱ μεταμέλειαί· παρεκάλουν, ἰκέτευον, ἐξετάζων ὅσον ἐστὶ τὸ ἀνοσιούργημα, μὴ θυμῷ χαρίζεσθαι· συναινεῖν δέον, ταῖς ἀβουλίαις
- 174 ἐαυτῶν εἶξατε. τοιγαροῦν καρπούμεθα τῆς αὐθαδείας καὶ ἀσεβείας τὰπίχειρα· ζητεῖται μὲν ἢ ἐπ’ ἐκείνῳ τυρευθεῖσα ἐπιβουλή, ὃ δὲ ζητῶν οὐκ ἔστιν ἄνθρωπος, ἀλλ’ ἢ θεὸς ἢ λόγος ἢ νόμος θεῖος.”
- 175 XXX. ταῦτα δ’ ἤκουεν ὁ πραθεὶς ἀδελφὸς ἡσυχῇ διαλαλούντων, ἐρμηνεύς μεταξὺ ὄντος· καὶ νικηθεὶς ὑπὸ τοῦ πάθους, μέλλων δακρῦειν, ὡς μὴ γένοιτο καταφανῆς, ἀποστρέφεται καὶ προχέας θερμὰ καὶ ἐπάλληλα δάκρυα καὶ πρὸς ὀλίγον ἐπικουφισθεὶς, τὴν ὄψιν ἀπομαζάμενος, ἐπιστρέφει καὶ κελεύει τὸν ἡλικία δευτέρον τῶν ἀδελφῶν ἐν ὄψεσι ταῖς ἀπάντων δεθῆναι, τὸν αὐτῷ κατάλληλον—ὁ γὰρ ἐν πλείοσι δεύτερος τῷ παρεσχάτῳ κατάλληλος, ἐπεὶ καὶ τῷ τελευταίῳ ὁ πρῶτος
- 176 — ἴσως μέντοι καὶ διότι τὴν πλείστην μοῖραν ἔδοξε τῶν ἀμαρτηθέντων εἰσενεγκεῖν μόνον οὐ συνταγματάρχων καὶ τοὺς ἄλλους ἀλείφων ἐπὶ δυσμένειαν· εἰ γὰρ συνετάχθη τῷ πρεσβυτάτῳ χρηστὰ καὶ

<sup>a</sup> Gen. xlii. 23 “ they knew not that Joseph understood, for there was an interpreter between them.” By missing out the first half of this Philo obscures the point. Presumably he means the same as Genesis, viz. that they ventured on expect to suffer this, and even more than this, we who though almost alone among men we owe our title of nobly-born to the surpassing virtues of father, grandfather and ancestors, have shamed our kin and hastened to load ourselves with infamy and disgrace." The eldest of the brothers, who originally opposed them when they were forming their plot, said : " Remorse for what is done is useless. I proved to you the enormity of the crime and begged and exhorted you not to give way to your wrath, but when you should have accepted my advice you let your evil counsels have their way. And so we are 174 reaping the rewards of our self-will and impiety. The plot we hatched for him is under inquisition, but the inquisitor is no man but God or the word or law of God."

ON JOSEPH, 172-176

XXX. As they talked 175 thus quietly, since an interpreter was acting for them,<sup>a</sup> the brother whom they had sold heard what they said, and, overcome by his emotion and on the point to weep, turned aside to avoid discovery and let the tears stream warm and fast. Then, somewhat relieved, he wiped them from his face, turned round and bade the second eldest of the brothers to be bound in the sight of them all. This brother corresponded to himself, for the second of a large number corresponds to the last but one as the eldest does to the last. But perhaps too he thought that 176 that brother had the greatest responsibility for the wickedness, since he might be almost called the officer of the company and the ringleader of their spite. For if he had ranged himself with the eldest when this quiet conversation, because they supposed that he would not understand them in the absence of the interpreter, who had acted before.

PHILO

- φιλάνθρωπα βουλευομένω, νεώτερος μὲν ἐκείνου, τῶν δ' ἄλλων πρεσβύτερος ὢν, ἴσως ἂν ἴσως ἐπ-εσχέθη τὰδικήμα, τῶν τὴν ἀνωτάτω τάξιν καὶ τιμὴν ἐχόντων συμπνεόντων καὶ ὁμογνωμονούντων περὶ πράγματος, ὃ κἂν<sup>1</sup> καθ' αὐτὸ πολλὴν ῥοπὴν συνεφ-
- 177 εἴλκετο· νυνὶ δ' ἀποστὰς τῆς ἡμέρου καὶ ἀμείνονος τάξεως πρὸς τὴν ἀνήμερον καὶ χαλεπὴν ἠτύτομόλησε καὶ ταύτης ἀποδειχθεὶς ἡγεμῶν οὕτως ἐθάρσυνε τοὺς συνεφαπτομένους τοῦ παρανομήματος, ὡς ἀνευδότης τὸν ἐπίληπτον ἄθλον διαθλήσαι. διὰ ταύτ' ἐξ ἀπάντων μόνος οὗτος δεθῆναι μοι δοκεῖ.
- 178 οἱ δ' ἄλλοι τὴν οἴκαδε ἐπάνοδον ἤδη παρεντρεπί-ζονται, κελεύσαντος τοῦ τῆς χώρας ἐπιτρόπου τοῖς πυροπωλοῦσι τὰ ἀγγεῖα τῶν ἀδελφῶν ὡς ξένων ἅπαντα πληρῶσαι καὶ ἣν ἔλαβον τιμὴν ἐπὶ τῶν στομίων λάθρα καταθεῖναι μὴ προειπόντας οἷς ἀπεδίδοσαν καὶ τρίτον τι προσεπιδαφιλεύεσθαι τροφάς, αἷ γένοιτ' ἂν ἱκαναὶ κατὰ τὴν ὁδόν, ἐξαιρέτους ὑπὲρ τοῦ παραπεμφθῆναι τὴν σιτωνίαν
- 179 ἀμείωτον. ὁδοιπορούντων δὲ καὶ τὸν ἐν δεσμοῖς ἀδελφὸν ὡς εἰκὸς οἰκτιζομένων, οὐχ ἦττον δ' ἐπὶ τῷ πατρὶ κατηφούντων, εἰ πάλιν ἀκούσεται συμ-
- [67] φορᾶς, καθ' ἐκάστην ὁδὸν | ἐλαττουμένης καὶ ἀποκειρομένης αὐτοῦ τῆς εὐπαιδίας, καὶ λεγόντων “ ἄλλ' οὐδὲ πιστεύσει δεδέσθαι, πρόφασιν δ' εἶναι τὰ δεσμὰ τελευτῆς ὑπολήψεται διὰ τὸ τοὺς ἅπαξ πληγέντας εἰς τὰ αὐτὰ προσπταίειν,” ἐσπέρα κατα-λαμβάνει καὶ τῶν ὑποζυγίων καθελόντες τὰ ἄχθη τὰ μὲν ἐπεκουφίζον, αὐτοὶ δὲ βαρυτέρας ταῖς ψυχαῖς

<sup>1</sup> My correction: mss. and Cohn καὶ. Mangey ἂν ἐφέιλκετο for συνεφέιλκετο.

ON JOSEPH, 176-179

he counselled kindness and humanity, being, though younger than he, older than the others, the wrongdoing might well have been stopped. For the two highest in position and honour would have been united in sentiment and purpose on the question, and this of itself would have had great weight to turn the scale. As it was, he left the mild, the better, side, and 177 deserted to the cruel and savage side, and being appointed their leader so encouraged his fellow-malefactors that they played out without flinching the criminal contest. It was for this reason, I think, that he alone of them all was put in bonds.

As the others were now preparing for their journey 178 homewards, the regent ordered the corn-factors to fill all their sacks, thus treating them as guests, and secondly to place secretly in the mouth of each sack the price which had been paid, without giving information of this repayment to the recipients, and thirdly to bestow an additional bounty, namely a special stock of provisions sufficient for the journey, so that the corn purchased might be brought to its destination undiminished. The brothers journeyed 179 on, pitying as was natural the one whom they left in bonds, and no less depressed at the thought of their father, how he would again hear of misfortune and feel that every journey diminished and curtailed his wealth of children. "Indeed," they said, "he will not even believe that he has been put in bonds, but think that bonds are a pretext to cloak death, since those who have once received a blow often find themselves brought up against the same calamity." As they thus talked, evening overtook them, and when they had unloaded their beasts, though these were relieved, they themselves felt the burden of their

PHILO

- φροντίδας ἐδέχοντο· φιλεῖ γὰρ ἐν ταῖς ἀναπαύλαις τῶν σωμάτων ἐναργεστέρας τῶν ἀβουλήτων ἢ διάνοια λαμβάνουσα φαντασίας χαλεπῶς ἄγαν 180 θλίβεσθαι καὶ πιέζεσθαι. XXXI. λύσας δέ τις ἐν ἀγγεῖον ὄρᾳ παρὰ τῷ στομίῳ βαλάντιον ὑπόμειστον ἀργυρίου καὶ διαριθμησάμενος εὔρισκεν ὅσην τοῦ σίτου καθῆκε τιμὴν ἀποδοδομένην αὐτῷ καὶ κατα-181 πλαγεῖς τοῖς ἀδελφοῖς ἀνέφερον. οἱ δ' οὐ χάριν ἀλλ' ἐνέδραν ὑποτοπήσαντες ἠθύμουν καὶ βουλόμενοι πάντα τὰ ἀγγεῖα διερευνήσασθαι φόβῳ διώξεως ἄραντες ἢ τάχιστα συντέεινον καὶ μόνον οὐκ ἀπνευστὶ θέοντες πολυήμερον ὁδὸν ἐπιτεμόντες 182 ἀνύουσιν. εἰτ' ἀλλαχόθεν ἄλλοι τὸν πατέρα οὐκ ἀδακρυτὶ περιλαβόντες ἐφίλουν ἐκάστῳ περιπλεκόμενον καὶ περιχεόμενον ἐκθύμῳς, καίτοι τῆς ψυχῆς ἤδη τι μαντευομένης ἀβούλητον· καὶ γὰρ προσιόντας καὶ δεξιουμένους κατενόει καὶ τὸν ὑπολειφθέντα υἱὸν ὡς ὑστερηκότα τῆς βραδυτήτος ἠτιᾶτο καὶ πρὸς τὰς εἰσόδους ἀπέβλεπε σπεύδων τὸν ἀριθμὸν 183 τῶν τέκνων πλήρη θεάσασθαι. μηδενὸς δ' ἕξωθεν ἔτι προσεπιφοιτῶντος, διεπτοημένον ἰδόντες “ τῶν ἀβουλήτων ” ἔφασαν, “ ὦ πάτερ, ἀνιαιρότερος τῆς μαθήσεως ὁ ἐνδοιασμός ἐστι· μαθὼν μὲν γὰρ τις ὁδὸν εὔρεν εἰς σωτηρίαν, ἢ δ' ἀμφίβολος ἄγνοια δυσοδίας καὶ ἀπορίας αἴτιον· ἄκουε δὴ σφόδρα μὲν 184 ἀνιαιροῦ διηγήματος, ἀναγκαίου δὲ λεχθῆναι. ὁ συμπεμφθεὶς ἡμῖν ἀδελφὸς ἐπὶ σιτωνίαν καὶ μὴ ἐπανελθυσθῶς ζῆ μὲν—δεῖ γὰρ τὸν ὡς ἐπὶ τεθνεῶτι ἀπαλλάξαι σου μείζονα φόβον—, ζῶν δ' ἐν Αἰγύπτῳ

---

<sup>a</sup> More literally “from different sides,” or perhaps “taking hold of different parts.”

ON JOSEPH, 179-184

cares weigh heavier on their souls. For when the body takes rest the mind receives clearer visions of adversities and is grievously afflicted and oppressed thereby. XXXI. One of them, loosing a particular sack, saw at its mouth a purse nearly full of silver, and, counting it, found that the exact price which he had paid for the corn had been restored to him. Filled with astonishment, he told his brothers, who, suspecting that it was not a gift but a trap, were dismayed. And though they fain would have examined all the sacks, so great was their fear of pursuit that they started off and hurried on with all speed, and racing along with hardly a pause for breath made a short matter of accomplishing a journey of many days. Then grouped around<sup>a</sup> their father they embraced him, weeping the while, and kissed him as he clung to each and folded them passionately in his arms, though his soul already had a boding of some calamity. For he took note of them as they approached and greeted him, and, thinking that the son who was actually left behind was playing the laggard, he blamed him for his slowness and kept looking to the different approaches in his eagerness to see the number of his children complete. And, seeing his agitation when no one else appeared from outside, they said: "In calamity, to learn the truth is less painful than to doubt. He who has learned the truth may find the way to safety; the ignorance of doubt produces the perplexity which finds no path. Listen, then, to a story, which, painful though it be, must needs be told. The brother who was sent with us to buy corn and has not returned is alive—you must cast from your mind the worse fear of his death—but, though alive, he remains in Egypt with the regent

PHILO

καταμένει παρὰ τῷ τῆς χώρας ἐπιτρόπῳ, ὃς εἶτ' ἐκ διαβολῆς εἶτε καὶ ὑποτοπήσας αὐτὸς αἰτίαν ἡμῖν 185 ὡς κατασκόποις ἐπέφερεν. ἀπολογουμένων<sup>1</sup> δὲ ὅσα ὁ καιρὸς καὶ περὶ τε σοῦ τοῦ πατρὸς διεξιόντων<sup>1</sup> καὶ τῶν ἀπολειπομένων ἀδελφῶν, ἐνὸς μὲν τοῦ τεθνεῶτος, ἐτέρου δὲ τοῦ παρὰ σοὶ διατρίβοντος, ὃν ἔφαμεν ἔτι νέον ὄντα διὰ τὴν ἡλικίαν οἴκοι<sup>2</sup> καταμείναι, πάντα ἀπαμπίσχοντες καὶ ἀπογυμνοῦντες τὰ τῆς συγγενείας εἰς τὸ ἀνύποπτον οὐδὲν ἠνύσαμεν, ἀλλ' ἔφη μόνην ἂν αὐτῷ πίστιν ἀμειδουῖς ὁμολογίας γενέσθαι τὴν ὡς αὐτὸν ἄφιξιν τοῦ νεωτάτου παιδός, οὗ χάριν καὶ τὸν δεύτερον κατεσχηκέναι ρύσιόν τε 186 καὶ ἐνέχυρον ἐκείνου. τὸ μὲν οὖν ἐπίταγμα πάντων ἀνιαρότατον, ὁ δὲ καιρὸς αὐτὸ προστάττει μᾶλλον [68] τοῦ κελεύοντος, ᾧ | πειστέον ἐξ ἀνάγκης διὰ τὰπιτήθεια, μόνης Αἰγύπτου χορηγούσης αὐτὰ 187 τοῖς λιμῷ πιεσθεῖσιν." XXXII. ὁ δὲ βαρύτερον ἀναστενάξας "τίνα πρῶτον" εἶπεν "ὄλοφύρωμαι; τὸν παρέσχατον, ὃς οὐ τελευταῖος ἀλλὰ πρῶτος ἔλαχε τὴν τῶν συμφορῶν τάξιν; ἢ τὸν δεύτερον, ὃς τὰ δευτερεῖα τῶν κακῶν ἤρατο, πρὸ θανάτου δεσμά; ἢ τὸν νεώτατον, ὃς ἀπευκταιοτάτην ὁδὸν ἀφίξεται, ἐὰν ἄρα ἀπίη, ταῖς τῶν ἀδελφῶν κακοπραγίαις οὐ σωφρονισθεῖς; ἐγὼ δὲ κατὰ μέλη καὶ μέρη διαρτῶμενος—μέρη γὰρ τέκνα γονέων—εἰς ἀπαιδίαν κινδυνεύω περιελθεῖν ὁ πολύ-188 παις καὶ εὖπαις ἄχρι πρὸ μικροῦ νομισθεῖς." ὁ δὲ πρεσβύτερος "εἰς ὀμηρείαν" ἔφη "σοὶ δύο υἱοὺς δίδωμι, οὓς καὶ μόνους ἐγέννησα· τούτους ἀπό-κτεινον, ἐὰν μὴ σῶον ἀποδῶ τὸν ἐγχειρισθησόμενον

<sup>1</sup> The ungrammatical genitives should perhaps be corrected to nominatives.

<sup>2</sup> MSS. οἴκαδε.

ON JOSEPH, 184-188

of the land, who, either on some accusations laid by others, or on his own suspicions, charged us with being spies. We made all the defence which the occasion called for. We told him of you, our father, 185 and the brothers who were absent from our company, how one of them was dead and the other was abiding with you, who, as we said, was still quite young and therefore on account of his age kept at home. But when we thus laid bare without concealment all the facts about our family we made no headway in removing his suspicion. He told us that the only proof which he would accept of the truth of our assertions was that the youngest son should be sent to him, and that to ensure this he detained the second son as pledge and security for the other. This command 186 is painful beyond everything, but is laid upon us less by him who issued it than by the needs of the time, which we must perforce obey to get those provisions which Egypt alone supplies to people who are hard pressed by famine.” XXXII. Their 187 father gave a deep groan, and said : “ Whom should I lament for first ? My youngest but one, who was not the last but the first to be placed on the list of unfortunates, or the second eldest who won the second prize of evils, bonds in place of death, or the youngest who, if he does go, will go on a journey of truly evil omen, unlessoned by the misfortunes of his brothers ? While I, divided limb by limb and part by part, since the child is part of its parent, am like to survive childless, I who but lately was held to be the father of a fine and numerous family.” His eldest son then 188 said : “ I give you my two sons, my only children, as hostages. Slay them if I do not restore to you in safety the brother whom you will entrust to my hand, ἀδελφόν, ὃς ἀφικόμενος εἰς Αἴγυπτον δύο περιποιή-σει τὰ μέγιστα ἡμῖν, ἐν μὲν πίστιν σαφῆ τοῦ μὴ κατασκόπους μηδὲ πολεμίους εἶναι, ἕτερον δὲ τὸ τὸν ἀδελφόν τὸν ἐν δεσμοῖς ἀπολαβεῖν δυνηθῆναι.”

PHILO

- 189 σφόδρα δ' ἀχθομένου τοῦ πατρὸς καὶ λέγοντος ἀγνοεῖν,<sup>1</sup> ὅτι δυεῖν ὄντων ὁμομητρίων ὁ μὲν ἤδη τέθνηκεν, ὁ δ' ἔρημος καὶ μόνος ἀπολειφθεὶς εὐλαβήσεται τὴν ὁδὸν καὶ ζῶν προαποθανεῖται τῷ δέει κατὰ τὴν φοβερῶν ἐκείνων ὑπόμνησιν, ἃ συνέβη τὸν πρότερον παθεῖν, ταῦτα λέγοντος, τὸν εὐτολμότατον καὶ ἀρχικὸν φύσει καὶ δυνατὸν εἰπεῖν—ἦν δὲ καθ' ἡλικίαν ἀπὸ τοῦ πρώτου τέταρ-τος—προστησάμενοι διερμηνεύειν ἔπεισαν τὰ δο-190 κούντα πᾶσιν. ἐδόκει δὲ τῶν μὲν ἀναγκαίων ὑστεριζόντων—ὁ γὰρ κομισθεὶς πρότερος σῆτος ἐπιλελοίπει—, κρατοῦντος δὲ τοῦ λιμοῦ καὶ πιέζοντος, ὠνησομένους ἀπιέναι, μὴ βαδιεῖσθαι δὲ τοῦ νεωτάτου καταμένοντος· τὸν γὰρ τῆς χώρας ἐπί-τροπον ἀπηγορευκένοι δίχα τούτου παραγενέσθαι.
191 λογισάμενος δὲ ἄτε σοφὸς ἀνὴρ, ὡς ἔστιν ἄμεινον ἕνα προέσθαι τῷ τοῦ μέλλοντος ἀδήλω καὶ ἀμφιβόλῳ πρὸ τῆς ὁμολογουμένης τῶν τοσοῦτων ἀπωλείας, ἦν ὑπομενεῖ πᾶς οἶκος ἐνδεία 192 πιεσθεῖς, ἀνιάτῳ νόσῳ, φησὶν αὐτοῖς· “ ἄλλ' εἰ τῆς ἐμῆς βουλήσεως ἐπικρατέστερα τὰ τῆς ἀνάγκης ἐστίν, εἰκτέον· ἴσως γὰρ ἴσως ἢ φύσις οἰκονομεῖ τι βέλτιον, ὃ μήπω ταῖς διανοίαις ἡμῶν παραφαίνειν 193 ἀξιοῖ. λαβόντες οὖν καὶ τὸν νεώτατον, ὡς προῆρησθε, ἅπιτε, μὴ μέντοι τὸν αὐτὸν ὃν καὶ πρόσθεν τρόπον· πάλαι μὲν γὰρ ἀργυρίου μόνον ἔδει πρὸς

<sup>1</sup> ἀγνοεῖν in this sense is strange: Cohn suggests ἀποκνεῖν, Mangey (better) ἀμφιγνοεῖν: I would also suggest as nearer

ON JOSEPH, 188-193

whose coming to Egypt will procure us two very great gains, first the clear proof that we are not spies or enemies, secondly the power to recover our brother from bondage." The father was much distressed, and 189 said that he knew not what to do, since of the two full brothers one was already dead and the other left desolate and alone would dread the journey and suffer a living death through fright recalling the horrors which had befallen his precursor. When he thus spoke, they put forward the fourth in age, the most courageous of them all, a man princely in nature and powerful of speech, and persuaded him to act as spokesman of what they all thought. This was, that, since the 190 necessities of life were running short, as the first stock of corn which they had brought was exhausted and the stress of the famine pressed hard upon them, they should set out to buy more corn but would not do so if their youngest brother stayed behind, since the ruler of the land had forbidden them to appear without him. Their father, reckoning in 191 his wisdom that it was better to surrender one to the mercy of an obscure and dubious future than that many should suffer the undoubted destruction which the stress of famine, that fatal scourge, would inflict upon the whole household, said: "Nay, if the call of necessity 192 is stronger than my wishes, I must yield, for haply it may be that nature has some better gift in store, which as yet she refuses to reveal to our mind. Take, 193 then, the youngest as you propose, and depart, but not in the same fashion as before, for on the former occasion when you were unknown and had not met to the MSS. & ἐνδοί, "what was in his mind." The ταῦτα λέγοντος is anacoluthic in any case.

---

PHILO

- σιτωνίαν ἀγνοούμενοι ἀνθρώποις καὶ μηδέν πω πεπονθόσιν ἀνήκεστον, νυνὶ δὲ καὶ δώρων, τριῶν [69] ἔνεκα, τῆς τε | πρὸς τὸν ἡγεμόνα καὶ σιτάρχη ἀρεσκείας, ὑφ' οὗ γνωρίζεσθαί φατε, καὶ τοῦ τὸν ἐν δεσμοῖς ἀπολαβεῖν θάπτον πολλὰ καταθέντας αὐτοῦ λύτρα καὶ τοῦ τὴν ὑπόνοιαν τῆς κατασκοπῆς 194 ὡς ἐνὶ μάλιστα ἰάσασθαι. πάντων οὖν ὅσων ἡ ἡμετέρα γῆ φέρει λαβόντες ὡσπερ τινὰς ἀπαρχὰς κομίζετε τῷ ἀνθρώπῳ καὶ δισσὸν ἀργύριον, τό τε ἀποδοθὲν πρότερον, ὃ ἴσως ἀγνοία τινὸς ἀπεδόθη, 195 καὶ ἕτερον αὐτάρκες εἰς σιτωνίαν. ἐπιφέρεσθε μέν-τοι καὶ τὰς ἡμετέρας εὐχὰς, ἃς πρὸς τὸν σωτήρα ποιούμεθα θεόν, ἵνα καὶ εὐάρεστοι τοῖς ἐγχωρίοις ξενιτεύοντες ἦτε καὶ ἐπανέρχησθε σῶμι τὰς ἀναγ-καίας παρακαταθήκας, υἱούς, ἀποδιδόντες πατρί, τὸν τε καταλειφθέντα πρότερον ἐν δεσμοῖς καὶ ὃν συνεπάγεσθε νυνὶ νεώτατον καὶ πραγμάτων ἄπειρον." ἄραντες δὲ συνέτεινον εἰς Αἴγυπτον.
 196 XXXIII. Εἶτ' ὀλίγαις ὕστερον ἡμέραις ἀφικο-μένους ἰδὼν ὃ τῆς χώρας ἐπίτροπος ἦσθη πάνυ καὶ κελεύει τῷ τῆς οἰκίας ἐπιμελουμένῳ πολυτελὲς ἄριστον εὐτρεπίζειν καὶ τοὺς ἄνδρας εἰσάγειν ἀλῶν 197 καὶ τραπέζης μεθέξοντας. εἰσαχθέντες δὲ καὶ ἐφ' ὅτῳ μὴ συναισθόμενοι διεπτόητο καὶ συγχυθέντες ἐτόπαζον ἐπὶ κλοπῇ μέλλειν συκοφαντεῖσθαι ὡς ὑφελόμενοι τὴν τοῦ σίτου τιμὴν, ἣν πρότερον ἐν τοῖς ἀγγελίοις ἀνεῦρον· εἶτα τῷ τῆς οἰκίας ἐπιμελητῇ προσελθόντες ἀπελογοῦντο περὶ οὗ μηδεὶς ἐτόλμα κατηγορεῖν τὸ συνειδὸς ἰώμενοι καὶ ἅμα προφέροντες ἐπεδείκνυον τὸ ἀργύριον εἰς ἀπόδοσιν.

with any fatal disaster you only needed money to pay for the corn, but now you must take presents also for three reasons, to propitiate the governor and chief victualler to whom you say you are known, to hasten the delivery of the prisoner with a considerable ransom, and to remedy the suspicion that you are spies as much as you can. Take, then, samples of all 194 the products of our land, firstfruits, as it were, and a double sum of money, to make good what was restored to you on your former visit, perhaps through someone's oversight, and also enough for purchasing the corn. Carry with you, further, my own prayers 195 which I offer to the God of our salvation that you, as strangers in the land, may be well-pleasing to the inhabitants, and also may return in safety and restore to your father the sureties which he has been forced to pledge, even his sons, both him who before was left behind in bondage and the one whom you now take with you, the youngest so inexperienced in life."

XXXIII. They set off, and hastened to Egypt. 196 On their arrival a few days afterwards the governor saw them and was greatly pleased. He bade the steward of his household prepare a sumptuous meal and bring them in to partake of his salt and board. Conducted thus, with no knowledge of what was 197 intended, they were scared and perturbed, guessing that they were to be libelled as thieves for having filched the price of the corn which they had found in the sacks on the first occasion. Then they approached the steward and made their defence, clearing their consciences of a matter on which no one was venturing to charge them, and at the same time they produced and shewed him the money which they had

PHILO

- 198 ὁ δὲ χρηστοῖς καὶ φιλανθρώποις λόγοις εὐθυμοτέρους αὐτοὺς ἐποίει φάσκων· “ οὐδεὶς ἀσεβῆς ἐστὶν οὕτως, ὡς τὰς τοῦ θεοῦ χάριτας συκοφαντεῖν, ὃς ἰλεως εἶη· θησαυροὺς γὰρ ἐν τοῖς ὑμετέροις ὤμβρησεν ἀγγείοις οὐ μόνον τροφὰς ἀλλὰ καὶ 199 πλοῦτον ἐξ ἐτοίμου διδούς.” οἱ δὲ παρηγορηθέντες ἐν τάξει διετίθεσαν ἅ οἴκοθεν ἐπηνέγκαντο δῶρα καὶ παραγενομένῳ τῷ δεσπότῃ τῆς οἰκίας προσἔφερον· πυνθανομένῳ δέ, πῶς ἔχοιεν καὶ εἰ ὁ πατὴρ ζῆ, περὶ οὗ πρόσθεν ἔλεγον, ἀποκρίνονται περὶ μὲν αὐτῶν οὐδέν, περὶ δὲ τοῦ πατρὸς ὅτι ζῆ καὶ ὑγιαί-200 νει. κατευξάμενος δ’ ἐκείνῳ καὶ θεοφιλέστατον προσ-ειπών, τὸν ὁμομήτριον περιβλεψάμενος ἀδελφὸν ὡς εἶδεν, οὐ κατασχὼν ἀλλ’ ἤδη νικώμενος ὑπὸ τοῦ πάθους, πρὶν γενέσθαι καταφανῆς, ἐπιστρέφεται καὶ δραμῶν πρόφασιν ἐπὶ τι τῶν κατεπειγόντων—ἐκλαλήσαι γὰρ τάληθές καιρὸς οὐκ ἦν—ἐν μυχῶ τινι τῆς οἰκίας ἀνακλαυσάμενος ἀποχεῖ τὴν τῶν δακρῦων 201 φοράν. XXXIV. εἶτ’ ἀπονυψάμενος λογισμῷ τῆς ἀνίας ἐπεκράτησε καὶ προσελθὼν εἰστία τοὺς ξένους ἀποδοὺς πρότερον καὶ τὸν ἀντὶ τοῦ νεωτάτου κατασχεθέντα εἰς ὀμηρείαν· συνεισιτῶντο δὲ καὶ 202 ἄλλοι τῶν παρ’ Αἰγυπτίους δοκίμων. αἱ δ’ ὑποδοχαὶ κατὰ τὰ πάτρια ἐκάστοις ἐγίνοντο, χαλεπὸν ἡγουμένου παλαιοῦς νόμους παριδεῖν, καὶ ταῦτα ἐν εὐωχίᾳ τινί, ἔνθα τῶν ἀηδιῶν αἱ ἡδοναὶ 203 πλείους. | ἐξῆς δὲ προστάξαντος κατὰ τὰς ἡλικίας [70] καθέζεσθαι, μήπω τῶν ἀνθρώπων ἐν ταῖς συμποτικαῖς συνουσίαις κατακλίσει χρωμένῳ, ἐθαύ-

<sup>a</sup> Perhaps based on Gen. xliii. 32 “ they set on for him by himself, and them by themselves, and for the Egyptians by themselves.”

ON JOSEPH, 198-203

brought for repayment. But he raised their courage 198 with kind and friendly words. "No one," he said, "is so impious as to libel the bounties of God Whose mercy I invoke. For He has poured treasure into your sacks, thereby providing not only sustenance but wealth to spend as you need it." Thus en- 199 couraged, they proceeded to set out in order the gifts they had brought from home, and when the master of the house arrived they offered them to him. He asked them how they were, and whether the father of whom they spoke before still lived, in answer to which they said nothing about themselves but told him that their father was alive and well. Joseph 200 invoked a blessing on him and pronounced him most favoured by God, and then, when, looking round, he saw Benjamin, his own mother's son, he could not contain himself, but, overcome by emotion, turned aside before he could be observed, and hastened, nominally on some pressing business, as the time for disclosure had not come, into a corner of the house and there burst into weeping and let the tears stream forth. XXXIV. Then he washed his face, and, reason 201 prevailing over his troubled feelings, approached his guests and led them to the feast, having first restored the prisoner who had been detained as hostage for the youngest. Other Egyptian dignitaries feasted with them. The method of entertainment 202 followed in each case ancestral practice,<sup>a</sup> since he strongly disapproved of neglecting old customs, particularly at a festivity where the pleasures outnumber the disagreeables. When the guests were 203 seated, arranged by his commands in order of age, as at that date it was not the custom to recline at con-

PHILO

μαζον, εἰ Αἰγύπτιοι ζηλωταὶ τῶν αὐτῶν Ἑβραίοις εἰσὶ τάξεώς τε πεφροντικότες καὶ τὰς πρεσβυτέρων 204 καὶ νεωτέρων τιμὰς διακρίνειν ἐπιστάμενοι. τάχα μέντοι καὶ τὸν ἄλλον χρόνον, ἔφασκον, τῆς χώρας ἀμαθέστερον τὰ περὶ διαίταν ἀγούσης, ὁ ἀνὴρ οὗτος τοῖς κοινοῖς ἐπιστὰς οὐ μόνον τοῖς μεγάλοις πράγμασιν ἤρμοσεν εὐταξίαν, δι' ὧν τὰ εἰρήνης καὶ πολέμου κατορθοῦσθαι πέφυκεν, ἀλλὰ καὶ τοῖς εὐτελεστέροις εἶναι δοκοῦσιν, ὧν τὰ πλεῖστα ἐν παιδιαῖς· ἰλαρότητα γὰρ ἐπιζητοῦσιν εὐωχίαι 205 σεμνὸν ἄγαν καὶ αὐστηρὸν συμπότην ἥκιστα παρα-δεχόμενοι. τοιοῦτους ἐπαίνους ἡρέμα συνειρόντων, τράπεζαι μὲν οὐ σφόδρα πολυτελεῖς εἰσκομίζονται, διὰ τὸν λιμὸν οὐκ ἀξιώσαντος τοῦ ξενοδόχου ταῖς ἐτέρων ἀτυχίαις ἐντρυφᾶν· αὐτοὶ δ' ἄτε σύνεσιν ἀκριβεῖς καὶ τοῦτ' εἰς τὰ ἐγκώμια παρελάμβανον, ὡς ἀπειροκαλίαν, πρᾶγμα ἐπίφθονον, ἀπέστραπται, λέγοντες· ὡς καὶ τὸ τοῦ συναλγοῦντος τοῖς δεο-μένοις καὶ τὸ τοῦ ἐστιάτορος σχῆμα διασώζει μεθόριον ἀμφοῖν τιθεὶς αὐτὸν καὶ τὴν ἐν ἑκατέρῳ 206 μέμψιν ἐκφεύγων. αἱ μὲν οὖν παρασκευαὶ τὸ ἀμισῆς εἶχον πρόσφοροι τῷ καιρῷ γεγονυῖαι· τὸ δ' ἔλλιπες ἀνεπλήρουν αἱ συνεχεῖς φιλοφροσύναι προπόσεσιν, εὐχαῖς, παραινέσεσι ταῖς εἰς ἀνάληψιν, ἃ τοῖς ἐλευθέροις καὶ μὴ ἀμούσοις τὸ ἦθος ἡδῖω τῶν ὅσα περὶ ἔδωδὴν καὶ πόσιν εὐτρεπίζουσιν οἱ φιλ-

<sup>a</sup> See Gen. xliii. 33, where the statement that they were placed in order of seniority is followed by "the men marvelled one with another."

<sup>b</sup> Philo may have found a ground for this in the phrase

ON JOSEPH, 203-206

vivial gatherings, they were surprised to find that the Egyptians affected the same fashions as the Hebrews, and were careful of order of precedence, and knew how to discriminate between younger and older in the honours which they paid them.<sup>a</sup> "It may be," they said, "that in other times the style of life in this country was less civilized, until this man, when put over the state, introduced good order not only in the important matters which give rise to success in peace and war, but in those regarded as less important which mainly belong to the lighter side of life. For festivities demand cheerfulness and have no room for the over-grave and austere guest." While they thus quietly descanted in his praise the tables were brought in, not over-sumptuously laden,<sup>b</sup> because their host, on account of the famine, disliked the thought of luxury while others were suffering want; and they themselves had the sound sense to include in their eulogies this also, that he had shunned the odious fault of tasteless display. He had preserved, they said, the attitude both of a sympathizer with the needy and of the host at a feast, had set himself in the mean between the two and escaped censure on either count. The arrangements, then, did not offend good taste, but were suitable to the occasion, and any deficiency was made good by the constant signs of kind feeling shewn in toasts and good wishes and invitations to take refreshment, things which to liberal and cultured temperaments give more pleasure than all the preparations of food and drink provided by the lovers of high feasting for

"set on bread" in contrast to the more elaborate preparations of Gen. xviii. He apparently forgets that the steward had been ordered to provide a sumptuous meal (§ 196).

PHILO

εστιάτορες καὶ φιλόδειπνοι τὰ μηδεμιᾶς ἄξια σπου-δῆς εἰς ὀλιγοφρόνων ἐπίδειξιν πομποστολοῦντες.

207 XXXV. Τῇ δ' ὕστεραία ἅμα τῇ ἔω μεταπεμψάμενος τὸν ἐπίτροπον τῆς οἰκίας κελεύει τὰ ἀγγεῖα τῶν ἀνδρῶν ὅσα ἐπηνέγκαντο γεμίσαι σίτου καὶ πάλιν ἐπὶ τῶν στομιῶν τὴν τιμὴν ἐν βαλαντίοις καταθεῖναι, εἰς δὲ τὸ τοῦ νεωτάτου καὶ τὸ κάλλιστον τῶν ἀργυρῶν ἔκπωμα, ᾧ πίνειν ἔθος εἶχεν 208 αὐτός. καὶ ὁ μὲν τὰ προσταχθέντα προθύμως ἐπετέλει μηδένα μάρτυρα παραλαμβάνων, οἱ δ' οὐδὲν τῶν κρύφα γεγονότων εἰδότες ἀνεξεύγνυσαν ἐπὶ τοῖς 209 παρ' ἐλπίδας ἀγαθοῖς ἅπασι χαίροντες. ἃ μὲν γὰρ προσεδόκησαν, ταῦτα ἦν· ἐπὶ κλοπῇ τοῦ ἀποδοθέντος ἀργυρίου συκοφαντίαν ἔξειν, ἀδελφὸν τὸν ὁμηρεύοντα μὴ ἀπολήψεσθαι, προσαποβαλεῖν καὶ τὸν νεώτατον ἴσως ὑπὸ τοῦ σπουδάσαντος αὐτὸν

210 ἀχθῆναι βία κατασχεθέντα. τὰ δ' ἀποβάντα αἰσίων [71] τελειότερα εὐχῶν· τὸ πρὸς | τῷ μὴ συκοφαντηθῆναι τραπέζης καὶ ἀλῶν, ἃ σύμβολα γνησίου φιλίας ἀνθρώποις ἀνεύρηται, μεταλαχεῖν, τὸ κομίσασθαι τὸν ἀδελφὸν ἀνύβριστον, μηδενὸς ἐντυχόντος καὶ δεηθέντος, τὸ καὶ τὸν νεώτατον ἀγαγεῖν πρὸς τὸν πατέρα σῶνον, ἐκπεφευγότας μὲν τὰς ἐπὶ κατα-σκόπων ὑπονοίας, ἄφθονον δὲ τροφῶν πλῆθος ἐπιφερομένους, χρηστὰ δὲ καὶ περὶ τοῦ μέλλοντος λογιζομένους· εἰ γὰρ ἐπιλίποι τὰπιτήδεια πολλάκις, ἔφασκον, οὐκέθ' ὡς πρότερον περιδεεῖς ἀλλὰ γεγηθότες ὡς πρὸς ἴδιον ἀλλ' οὐ ξένον τὸν τῆς χώρας

ON JOSEPH, 206-210

themselves and others, who make a parade of what is unworthy of care and attention with the ostentation natural to men of little mind.

XXXV. On the next day at dawn he sent for the 207 steward of the house and bade him fill with corn all the sacks which the men had brought, and again put the purchase-money in purses at the mouths of the sacks, and also to place in that of the youngest his finest piece of silver, the cup out of which he was accustomed to drink himself. The steward readily 208 carried out his orders without anyone else being present, and they, knowing nothing of these secret doings, set off in high spirits at all their good fortune so far beyond their hopes. What they had expected 209 was to find themselves the victims of a false charge of stealing the money which had been restored to them, to fail to recover their brother who was left as hostage and perhaps also in addition to lose the youngest who might be forcibly detained by the governor who had urged his coming. What had 210 happened surpassed their most sanguine wishes. Instead of being subjected to accusation, they had been made partners in the board and salt which men have devised as the symbols of true friendship. They had recovered their brother inviolate without any intervention or entreaty. They were bringing, too, the youngest safe and sound to his father, and while they had escaped the suspicion of being spies they were taking with them a rich abundance of food and moreover had comfortable prospects for the future. "For if provisions should chance to fail," they reasoned, "we shall leave home not in extreme fear as before but with joyful hearts, knowing that we shall find in the governor of the country not a stranger but a per-

PHILO

- 211 ἐπίτροπον ἀποδημήσομεν. XXXVI. ἀλλὰ γὰρ οὕτω διακειμένων καὶ τοιαῦτα ταῖς ψυχαῖς ἀναπολούντων, αἰφνίδιος καὶ ἀπροσδόκητος ταραχὴ καταλαμβάνει. προσταχθεὶς γὰρ ὁ τῆς οἰκίας ἐπιμελητῆς, ἐπαγόμενος θεραπόντων πλήθος οὐκ ὀλίγον, κατασεῖων τὰς χεῖρας καὶ μένειν ὑποσημαίνων ἐβοηδρόμει. καὶ συντείνας ἄσθματος πλήρης “ἐπεσφράγισθε” εἶπε “καὶ τὰς προτέρας καθ’ αὐτῶν αἰτίας· ἀγαθὰ κακοῖς ἀμειψάμενοι πάλιν τὴν αὐτὴν ὁδὸν τῶν ἀδικημάτων ἐτρέπεσθε· τὴν τοῦ σίτου τιμὴν ὑπεξελόμενοι καὶ μείζον ἔτι προσεξεργάσασθε· πονηρία γὰρ τυχοῦσα ἀμνηστίας ἐπιδίδωσι. τὸ κάλλιστον καὶ τιμιώτατον ἔκπωμα τοῦ δεσπότου, ἐν ᾧ προπόσεις προὔπινεν ὑμῖν, κεκλόφατε οἱ λίαν εὐχάριστοι, οἱ λίαν εἰρηνικοί, οἱ μὴδ’ ὄνομα κατασκοπῆς εἰδότες, οἱ διττὸν ἀργύριον εἰς ἀπόδοσιν τοῦ προτέρου κεκομικότες, ἐνέδραν ὡς ἔοικε καὶ δέλεαρ ἐπὶ θήραν καὶ ἀρπαγὴν πλειόνων. ἀλλ’ οὐκ εἰς ἅπαν εὐδοεῖ κακία, λανθάνει δ’ αἰεὶ τεχνάζουσα καταφωρᾶται.” ταῦτα συνείροντος, ἀχανεῖς ἐπάγησαν, λύπης καὶ φόβου, τῶν ἀργαλεωτάτων κακῶν, ἐξαίφνης ἐπιπεσόντων, ὡς μὴδὲ διαῖραι τὸ στόμα δύνασθαι· τῶν γὰρ ἀπροσδοκῆτων κακῶν αἱ προσβολαὶ καὶ τοῖς δεινοῖς περὶ λόγους ἀφωνίαν ἐμποιοῦσι. παρειμένοι δ’ ὅμως ὑπὲρ τοῦ μὴ δοκεῖν ἀλισκόμενοι τῷ συνειδῶτι καθησυχάζειν “πῶς” ἔφασαν “ἀπολογησόμεθα καὶ πρὸς τίνα; σὺ γὰρ μέλλεις ἔσεσθαι καὶ δικαστῆς ὁ κατήγορος, ὃς ὧφειλες καὶ ἐτέρων αἰτιωμένων ἡμῖν συναγορεύειν ἐξ ὧν ἐπειράθης· ἢ τὸ μὲν ἀργύριον τὸ

ON JOSEPH, 211-215

sonal friend.” XXXVI. While they were 211 in this mood, and their souls occupied with these reflections, a sudden and unexpected discomfiture overtook them. For the steward, by order of his master, with a considerable body of servants, appeared in pursuit waving his hands and beckoning to them to halt. And when he arrived, all eagerness and panting 212 hard, “You have set the seal,” he said, “to the earlier charges made against you. You have returned evil for good and once more set your feet in the same path of iniquity. You have filched the price of the corn and committed in addition a still worse crime, for villainy grows if it receives condonation. You have stolen the finest and most valuable 213 of my master’s cups in which he pledged you, you, who were so exceedingly grateful, so exceedingly peace-loving, you who did not so much as know the meaning of ‘spy,’ you who brought double money to pay what was due before, apparently as a trap and snare to serve you in your quest for still more plunder. But wickedness does not prosper in the long run; it is ever scheming to remain hid but is detected in the end.” While he continued in this strain, they 214 stood paralysed and speechless, suddenly seized by those most painful inflictions, grief and fear, so that they could not even open their mouths. For the onset of unexpected ills can render even eloquent speakers mute. Yet, unnerved as they were, they 215 did not wish their silence to be construed as a sign that their conscience convicted them, and therefore they replied: “How shall we defend ourselves, and to whom? You will be our judge, you who are also our accuser, who from your experience of us should rather be the advocate did others arraign us. Could εὔρεθὲν ἐν τοῖς ἀγγείοις πρότερον οὐδενὸς ἐλέγχοντος ἐκομίσαμεν ἀποδώσοντες, τσαούτη δ' ἔχρησάμεθα τῶν τρόπων μεταβολῇ, ὡς τὸν ξενοδόχον ἀμείψασθαι ζημίαις καὶ κλοπαῖς; ἀλλ' οὔτε γέγονε 216 τοῦτο μήτ' εἰς νοῦν ἔλθοι ποτὲ τὸν ἡμέτερον. ὅς δ' ἂν ἔχων ἀλῶ τὸ ἔκπωμα τῶν ἀδελφῶν, θνη-σκέτω· θανάτου γὰρ τὰδίκημα, εἰ γέγονεν ὄντως, τιμώμεθα διὰ πολλά· πρῶτον μὲν ὅτι πλεονεξία καὶ τὸ τῶν ἀλλοτρίων ἐπιθυμεῖν παρανομώτατον, δεύτερον ὅτι τοὺς ὠφεληκότας βλάπτειν ἐπιχειρεῖν ἀνοσιώτατον, τρίτον δὲ ὅτι τοὺς μέγα φρονούντας [72] ἐπ' εὐγενεῖα τὸ τῶν προγόνων ἀξίωμα | καθαιρεῖν ἔργοις ὑπαιτίοις τολμᾶν ὄνειδος αἰσχιστον· οἷς ἅπασιν ἔνοχος ὢν, εἴ τις ἡμῶν ὑφῆρηται, θανάτων 217 μυρίων ἄξια πεπραχῶς τελευτάτω." XXXVII. καὶ ἅμα λέγοντες τὰ ἄχθη τῶν ὑποζυγίων καθαιροῦσι καὶ προτρέπονται μετὰ πάσης ἐπιμελείας ἐρευνᾶν. ὁ δὲ οὐκ ἀγνοῶν ἐν τῷ τοῦ νεωτάτου κατακείμενον ἅτε αὐτὸς λάθρα θεῖς ἐσοφίζετο καὶ τὴν ἀρχὴν ἀπὸ τοῦ πρεσβυτάτου ποιησάμενος ἐξῆς κατὰ στοῖχον ἐπακολουθῶν ταῖς ἡλικίαις ἐσκόπει, προφέροντος ἐκάστου καὶ ἐπιδεικνυμένου τὰ ἀγγεῖα, μέχρι τοῦ τελευταίου, παρ' ᾧ καὶ τὸ ζητούμενον ἀνευρέθη, ὡς ἰδόντας ἀθρόους ἀνοιμῶσαι καὶ τὰς ἐσθήτας διαρρήξαντας ἐκδακρύειν ἐπιστένοντας καὶ ζῶντα τὸν ἀδελφὸν ἔτι προθρηνοῦντας καὶ οὐχ ἦττον αὐτοὺς καὶ τὸν πατέρα, ὃς προὔλεγε τὰς συμ-βησομένας τῷ υἱῷ κακοπραγίας, δι' ἃς βουλομένοις 218 συναποδημεῖν τὸν ἀδελφὸν οὐκ ἐπέτρεπε. κατ-

PHILO

ON JOSEPH, 215-217

it be that after bringing in repayment the money we found in our sacks though no one challenged us, we completely changed our characters, so as to requite our entertainer by mulcting and robbing him? No, we have not done so, and may no such thought ever enter our mind. Let whoever of the brothers is proved to have the cup be put to death, for death is the penalty at which we assess the crime if it really has been committed, for several reasons. First, because covetousness and the desire for what is another's is against all law; secondly, because to attempt to injure benefactors is a most unholy deed; thirdly, because to those who pride themselves on their high lineage it is a most shameful reproach if they do not shrink from ruining the prestige of their ancestors by deeds of guilt. And since, if any one of us has committed this theft, he is liable on all these counts, let him die since his deed deserves a thousand deaths." XXXVII. With these words they pulled the packs from off their beasts, and bade him search with all diligence. He, who knew well that the cup was lying in the sack of the youngest son, since he had secretly put it there himself, tricked them by beginning his examination with the eldest, and continued in regular order according to their age, as each produced and shewed his sack, until he reached the last. When the object of the search was actually found in his possession, a wail arose from the whole body at the sight. They rent their clothes and wept and groaned, mourning for the death which awaited the brother who was still alive, and no less for themselves and their father who foretold the misfortunes which would befall his son and had therefore for a time refused to consent to their wish that their brother should travel

PHILO

- ηφοῦντες δὲ καὶ συγκεχυμένοι τὴν αὐτὴν ὑπέστρεφον ὁδὸν εἰς τὴν πόλιν ἐκπεπληγμένοι τῷ συμβεβηκότι καὶ τὸ πρᾶγμα ἐπιβουλήν ἄλλ' οὐ φιλαργυρίαν ἀδελφοῦ νομίζοντες· εἶτα τῷ τῆς χώρας ἐπιτρόπῳ προσαχθέντες φιλάδελφον εὐνοίαν ἀπὸ γνησίου πά-219 θους ἐπιδείκνυνται. προσπεσόντες γὰρ ἀθρόοι τοῖς ἐκείνου γόνασιν ὡς κλοπῇ πάντες ἔνοχοι, ὃ μὴδ' εἰπεῖν θέμις ἐπ' αὐτῶν,<sup>1</sup> ἔδακρυσσάουσαν, ἰκέτευον, ἑαυτοὺς ἐξεδίδουσαν, ἐκούσιον δουλείαν ὑπισχνούσαν, δεσπότην προσηγόρευον ἐκείνον, προβλήτους,<sup>2</sup> οἰκότριβας, ἀργυρωνήτους, οὐδὲν παραλείποντες τῶν οἰκετικῶν ὀνομάτων, ἀνεκάλουσαν ἑαυτοὺς.
- 220 ὃ δ' ἔτι μᾶλλον ἀποπειρώμενος ἤθει βαρυτάτῳ φησὶν αὐτοῖς· “ μὴδέποτε τοῦτο ἐργασαίμην, ὡς τοσοῦτους ἀπάγειν ἐνὸς ἀμαρτόντος· τί γὰρ εἰς μετουσίαν ἄξιον καλεῖν τιμωριῶν τοὺς μὴ τῶν ἀδικημάτων κοινοπραγήσαντας; ἐκείνος μόνος, 221 ἐπεὶ καὶ μόνος ἔπραξε, κολαζέσθω. πυνθάνομαι μὲν οὖν, ὅτι πρὸ τῆς πόλεως καὶ θάνατον ὠρίζετε κατὰ τοῦ ἀλόγους· ἐγὼ δ' ἕκαστα πρὸς τὸ ἐπιεικὲς ἄγων καὶ ἡμερώτερον ἐπικουφίζω τὴν τιμωρίαν 222 δουλείαν ὀρίσας ἀντὶ θανάτου.” XXXVIII. χαλεπῶς δὲ τὴν ἀπειλήν φερόντων καὶ ἐφ' οἷς ἐσυκοφαντοῦντο καταδουομένων ὁ τέταρτος καθ' ἡλικίαν—ἦν <sup>1</sup> MSS. ἐπ' αὐτῷ.

<sup>2</sup> So Cohn and Mangey with some ms. authority. Most mss. have προσηλύτους or προσβλήτους. See note a.

<sup>a</sup> Assuming that προβλήτους is to be read, its place in the series as a “servile name,” followed by οἰκότριβας and ἀργυρωνήτους, suggests that it also describes a special type of slave. If so, it may perhaps refer to children who had been exposed in infancy and then annexed by persons who brought them up as their own slaves. Thus they would with them. Downcast and confounded they returned 218 by the same road to the city, appalled at the event and attributing it to a malicious plot and not to the covetousness of their brother. Then, when brought before the governor, they shewed their brotherly good feeling by their genuine emotion. For, falling 219 in a body at his knees, as though they were all guilty of the theft, a charge the mere mention of which was an outrage, they wept, they besought him, they put themselves at his disposal, they volunteered to submit to enslavement, they called him their master and themselves his slaves of any and every kind, outcasts,<sup>a</sup> household bred or purchased in the market ; no servile name did they leave unsaid. . But 220 he, to try them still further, assumed a very severe <sup>b</sup> air and said : " I trust that I may never act thus, and send so many to captivity for the sin of one. For what good reason is there for including in the penalties those who had no share in the offence ? He yonder, who alone did the deed, let him suffer for it. Now, I 221 am told that before you entered the city <sup>c</sup> death was the sentence you too approved for the guilty person, but as I am ever inclined for the moderate and humaner course I reduce the punishment and sentence him to slavery instead of death." XXXVIII. This stern 222 decision had greatly distressed them, utterly dejected as they were by the false accusations made against them, when the fourth in age, who combined naturally form a third class to οικότριβας (taken as = οικογένεις) and ἀργυροπώητους. I have not been able to find in Greek or Roman legislation any allusion to such a status, but see App. p. 602.

<sup>b</sup> Or perhaps "dignified," "impressive," cf. De Abr. 210.
 Possibly, as Mangey suggested, read βαθυτέρω, cf. § 168 above.

<sup>c</sup> Lit. "in front of the city."

PHILO

δὲ τολμητῆς μετ' αἰδοῦς καὶ θαρραλέος, παρρησίαν τὴν ἄνευ ἀναισχυντίας ἐπιτετηδευκῶς—προσελθὼν φησι· “δέομαι, δέσποτα, μὴ θυμῷ χαρίσασθαι μηδ' ὅτι τέταξαι τὴν μετὰ βασιλέα τάξιν προκαταγνῶναι 223 πρὸ τῆς ἀπολογίας ἡμῶν. πυνθανομένῳ σοι κατὰ τὴν προτέραν ἐπιδημίαν περὶ τε ἀδελφοῦ καὶ πα-[73] τρὸς ἀπεκρινάμεθα· πατήρ μὲν | ἐστὶ πρεσβύτης, οὐ χρόνῳ μᾶλλον γεγηρακῶς ἢ ταῖς ἐπαλλήλοις δυστυχίαις, ὑφ' ὧν γυμναζόμενος ἀθλητοῦ τρόπον ἐν πόνοις καὶ δυσκαρτερήτοις κακοπαθείαις διετέλεσεν· ἀδελφὸς δὲ κομιδῇ νέος ἐστίν, ἐκτόπως στεργόμενος ὑπὸ τοῦ πατρός, ἐπειδὴ καὶ ὀψίγονός ἐστὶ καὶ δυεῖν γενομένων ὁμομητρίων ἀπελείφθη μόνος, τοῦ πρεσβυτέρου βιαίως ἀποθανόντος.
 224 κελεύοντος δὲ σοῦ ἐνθάδε τὸν ἀδελφὸν ἀγαγεῖν καὶ ἀπειλοῦντος, εἰ μὴ παραγένοιτο, μηδ' ἡμῖν εἰς ὄψιν ἔλθειν ἔτι τὴν σὴν ἐπιτραπήσεσθαι, κατηφούντες ἀπηλλαττόμεθα καὶ μόλις οἴκαδε ἐπανελθόντες 225 ἔδηλοῦμεν τὰ ἀπὸ σοῦ τῷ πατρί. ὁ δὲ κατ' ἀρχὰς μὲν ἀντέλεγε δεδιῶς σφόδρα περὶ τῷ παιδί, τῶν δ' ἀναγκαίων ὑποσπανιζόντων καὶ μηδενὸς ἡμῶν τολμῶντος ἐπὶ σιτωνίαν ἤκειν δίχα τοῦ νεωτάτου διὰ τὰς σὰς ἐπανατάσεις, μόλις πείθεται τοῦτον συνεκπέμψαι μυρία μὲν αἰτιώμενος, ὅτι ἀδελφὸν ἄλλον ἔχειν ὠμολογήσαμεν, μυρία δ' οἰκτιζόμενος, εἰ μελλήσει διαζεύγνυσθαι· νήπιος γάρ ἐστι καὶ πραγμάτων ἄπειρος, οὐ μόνον τῶν κατὰ τὴν ἀλ-226 λουδαίαν, ἀλλὰ καὶ τῶν κατὰ τὴν πόλιν.<sup>1</sup> πρὸς οὖν <sup>1</sup> The singular seems strange. Mangey wished to correct either to τὴν <ιδίαν> πόλιν or τὰς πόλεις. The latter is accepted

ON JOSEPH, 222-225

boldness and courage with modesty and practised frankness of speech without effrontery, approached him and said : " My lord, I pray you not to give way to wrath, nor, because you have been appointed to the second post after the king, to condemn before you have heard our defence. When you asked us at our 223 first visit of our brother and father, we answered, ' Our father is an old man, aged not so much by years as by repeated misfortunes, whereby as in a training-school he has been continually exercised amid labours and sufferings which have tried him sore. But our brother is quite young, the idol and darling of his father, because he is the child of his later years, the only one left of the two that their mother bore, since the elder has died a violent death. Now when you 224 bade us bring that brother here, and threatened that if he did not arrive we should not even be admitted again to your presence, we departed in dejection, and, when we got home, only with reluctance told your orders to our father. He at first opposed them in 225 his great fear for the boy, but, when necessities grew scarce and yet none of us dared to come and buy corn without the youngest because of the stern warning you had given, he was with difficulty persuaded to send the boy with us. Many a time did he blame us for admitting that we had another brother. Many a time did he pity himself for the coming separation from the boy, for he is but a child and without experience, not only of life in a foreign land, but of city<sup>a</sup> life <sup>a</sup> Cohn translates " einheimischen," which would seem to represent Mangey's τὴν ἰδίαν πόλιν (see critical note).

---

by Cohn in a similar passage in De Decal. 13, where the MSS. have κατὰ πόλιν. (The absence of the article perhaps makes a difference, and κατὰ πόλιν might be read in both passages.)

PHILO

οὕτω διακείμενον τὸν πατέρα πῶς ἂν ἀφικοίμεθα; τίσι δ' ὀφθαλμοῖς αὐτὸν θεάσασθαι δίχα τούτου δυνησόμεθα; τελευταίην οἰκτίστην ὑπομενεῖ μόνον ἀκούσας, ὡς οὐκ ἐπανελήλυθεν· εἶθ' ἡμᾶς ἀνδροφόνους καὶ πατροκτόνους ἕκαστος ἐρεῖ τῶν φιλαπεχθημόνων καὶ ἐπὶ ταῖς τοιαύταις συμφοραῖς 227 ἐθελοκακούντων. τὸ δὲ πλείστον τῆς κατηγορίας ῥηθήσεται κατ' ἐμοῦ· πολλὰ γὰρ ὑπεσχόμεν τῷ πατρὶ προέσθαι παρακαταθήκην λαμβάνειν ὁμολογῶν, ἣν ὑποδώσειν, ὅταν ἀπαιτηθῶ· πῶς δ' ἂν, εἰ μὴ ἐξευμενισθείης αὐτός, ἀποδοῦναι δυναίμην; οἰκτον δέομαι τοῦ πρεσβύτου λαβεῖν καὶ εἰς ἔννοιαν ἐλθεῖν τῶν κακῶν οἷσπερ ἀνιαθήσεται μὴ κομισάμενος ὃν 228 ἀβουλῶν ἐνεχείρισεν. ἀλλὰ σὺ μὲν ὑπὲρ ὧν ἔδοξας ἡδικῆσθαι δίκας λάμβανε. δώσω δ' ἐθελοντῆς ἐγώ· δοῦλον ἀπὸ ταύτης ἀνάγραφε τῆς ἡμέρας, ἄσμενος ὑπομενῶ τὰ τῶν νεωνήτων, ἐὰν τὸ παιδίον ἐθελήσης 229 εἶσαι. λήψεται<sup>1</sup> δ' οὐκ αὐτὸς τὴν χάριν, ἐὰν ἄρα διδῶς, ἀλλ' ὁ μὴ παρῶν ἐπικουφισθεῖς τῶν φροντίδων, ὁ τῶν τοσοῦτων πατῆρ ἱκετῶν ἀπάντων· ἱκέται γάρ ἐσμεν καταπεφευγότες ἐπὶ τὴν σὴν 230 ἱερωτάτην δεξιάν, ἧς μηδέποτε διαμάρτομεν. ἔλεος οὖν εἰσελθέτω σε γήρως ἀνδρὸς τοὺς ἀρετῆς ἄθλους κατὰ πᾶσαν ἡλικίαν διαπονήσαντος· τὰς κατὰ Συρίαν πόλεις εἰς ἀποδοχὴν αὐτοῦ καὶ τιμὴν ἐπ-ἔστρεψε, καίτοι ξενικωτέροις ἔθεσι καὶ νομίμοις καὶ πολὺ διεστῶσι χρώμενος, οὐ βραχεῖ τινι τῶν ἐγχω-ρίων ἡλλοτριωμένος· ἀλλ' ἡ τοῦ βίου καλοκάγαθία καὶ τὸ σύμφωνον καὶ ὁμολογούμενον πρὸς ἔργα λόγων καὶ πρὸς λόγους ἔργων ἐξενίκησεν, ὡς καὶ [74] τοὺς ἔνεκα | τῶν πατρίων μὴ εἰγνώμονας μεθ-

<sup>1</sup> MSS. λήψη.

ON JOSEPH, 226-230

in general. Then, since such are our father's feelings, 226 how can we return to him? How can we look him in the face without the boy? He will suffer the saddest of deaths on merely hearing that he has not returned, and we shall be called murderers and parricides by all the spiteful people who gloat over such misfortunes. And the chief stream of obloquy will 227 be directed against me, for I pledged myself with many forfeits to my father, and declared that I received the boy as a deposit which I would restore when it was demanded from me. But how can I restore it, unless you yourself are propitiated? I pray you to take pity on the old man, and realize the miseries which he will suffer if he does not recover him whom he unwillingly entrusted to my hand. But do you 228 exact the penalty for the wrongs which you believe yourself to have received. I will willingly pay it.
Write me down your slave from this day onwards. I will gladly endure what the newly-bought endure if you will spare the child. This boon, if indeed you 229 grant it, will be a boon not to the boy himself but to one who is not here present, whom you will relieve of his cares, the father of all these many suppliants.
For suppliants we are who have fled for refuge to your most august right hand, which we pray may never fail us.
Take pity, then, on the old age of one 230 who has spent all his years labouring in the arena of virtue. The cities of Syria he won over to receive and honour him, though his customs and usages were strange to them and very different, and those of the country alien to him in no small degree. But the nobility of his life, and his acknowledged harmony of words with deeds and deeds with words, prevailed so that even those whom national feelings prejudiced

PHILO

- 231 ἀρμόσασθαι. τοιαύτην μέλλεις κατατίθεσθαι χάριν, ἧς οὐκ ἂν δύναίτο τις μείζονα λαβεῖν· τίς γάρ ἂν γένοιτο πατρὶ δωρεὰ μείζων ἢ υἱὸν ἀπογνωσθέντα κομίσασθαι;”
- 232 XXXIX. Πάντα δ’ ἦσαν ἀπόπειρα καὶ ταῦτα καὶ τὰ πρότερα, πῶς ἔχουσι τοῦ τῆς χώρας ἐπιτρόπου σκοποῦντος εὐνοίας πρὸς τὸν ὁμομήτριον ἀδελφόν· ἐδεδίει γάρ, μὴ φυσικῇ τινι ἀλλοτριώσει κέχρηται, καθάπερ οἱ ἐκ μητριῶν γεγονότες πρὸς
- 233 τὸν ἐξ ἐτέρας ἰσοτίμου γυναικὸς οἶκον. διὰ τοῦτο καὶ ὡς κατασκόπους ἠτιᾶτο καὶ περὶ τοῦ γένους ἐπυνθάνετο πρόφασιν τοῦ γνῶναι, εἰ περίεστιν ὁ ἀδελφός, ἀλλὰ μὴ ἐξ ἐπιβουλήs ἀνήρηται, καὶ ἕνα κατέσχε τοὺς ἄλλους ἐάσας ἀπαίρειν ὁμολογήσαντας ἀγαγεῖν τὸν νεώτατον, ὃν ἰδεῖν μάλιστ’ ἐπόθει καὶ τῆς ἐπ’ αὐτῷ χαλεπῆs καὶ βαρυτάτης
- 234 ἀνίας ἀπαλλαγῆναι,<sup>1</sup> καὶ ἐπειδὴ παρεγένετο καὶ τὸν ἀδελφὸν ἐθεάσατο, μικρὸν ὅσον ἀνεθεῖs τῆs φροντίδος, καλέσας ἐπὶ ξενίαν καὶ ἐστιῶν πολυτελεστέrais εὐώχει τὸν ὁμομήτριον παρασκευαῖs, ἀποβλέπων εἰς ἕκαστον καὶ τεκμαιρόμενος ἐκ τῆs
- 235 ὀψεωs, εἴ τις αὐτοῖs ὑποικουρεῖ φθόνος, καὶ ὡς ἀσμενίζοντας ἑώρα καὶ ἀναχεομένους ἐπὶ τῇ τοῦ νεωτάτου τιμῇ, δυσὶν ἤδη μαρτυρίαιs σημειωσάμενος τὸ μηδὲν ἔχθος ὑποτύφεσθαι καὶ τρίτην ἐπενόησε, τὴν τοῦ κεκλέφθαι δοκοῦντος ἐκπώματος <sup>1</sup> Cohn and Mangey’s punctuation seems to me faulty in this sentence. They place full stops after ἀπαλλαγῆναι and φθόνος (Mangey also after ἀνήρηται). But surely it is all one sentence introduced by διὰ τοῦτο and stating that all these steps were taken as a test.

---

<sup>a</sup> Benjamin’s “mess” was five times as much as any of 252

ON JOSEPH, 231-235

against him were brought over to his ways. Such 231 is the gratitude which you will earn, and what greater could be earned? For what greater boon could a father have than the recovery of a son of whose safety he has despaired?"

XXXIX. All this and what had gone before was 232 intended to test what feeling they shewed under the eyes of the governor to his own mother's son.
For he feared that they might have had that natural estrangement which the children of a stepmother often shew to the family of another wife who was no less esteemed than their own mother. This was the 233 reason why he accused them of spying, and questioned them on their kin in order to know whether that brother was alive and had not been the victim of a plot, and also why he detained one when he let the others depart after agreeing to bring the youngest, whom he greatly yearned to see and thus shake off the trouble which weighed on him so heavily. This again was why, though when he 234 came to join them and seeing his brother felt just a little relieved, he after inviting them to the hospitality of his board entertained his mother's son on a richer scale than the rest,<sup>a</sup> but meanwhile observed each of them to judge from their looks whether they still cherished some secret envy. Finally it was for 235 the same reason that when he saw how pleased and overjoyed they were at the honour paid to that brother and thus had established by two testimonies that there was no smouldering enmity, he devised this third testimony, namely to pretend that the theirs, Gen. xliii. 34. Philo has rather strangely omitted to mention this in his account of the feast. Josephus, Ant.

ii. 125, gives the same reason for the action.

PHILO

- αἰτίαν ἀναθεῖς τῷ νεωτάτῳ· σαφέστατος γὰρ ἔμελλεν ἔλεγχος οὕτως γενέσθαι τῆς ἐκάστου 236 διανοίας καὶ οἰκειότητος τῆς πρὸς τὸν συκοφαν-τούμενον ἀδελφόν. ἐξ ὧν ἀπάντων ἤδη συνεπίθετο περὶ τοῦ μὴ καταστασιάζεσθαι μηδ' ἐπι-βουλεύεσθαι τὸν μητρῶον οἶκον λογισμὸν τε εἰκότα καὶ περὶ τῶν αὐτῷ συμβεβηκότων ἐλάμβανεν, ὡς οὐκ ἐπιβουλαῖς ἀδελφῶν αὐτὰ μᾶλλον εἶη πεπονθῶς ἢ κατὰ πρόνοιαν θεοῦ τὰ μακρὰν ἐμβλέποντος καὶ τὰ μέλλοντα οὐχ ἦττον τῶν παρόντων ὀρώντος.
- 237 XL. Εἴτ' ἐπὶ συμβάσεις καὶ καταλλαγὰς ἴετο νικώμενος ὑπὸ φιλοικείου πάθους καὶ ὑπὲρ τοῦ μηδὲν ὄνειδος προσβαλεῖν τοῖς ἀδελφοῖς ἕνεκα τῆς πράξεως οὐδένα τῶν Αἰγυπτίων ἐδικαίωσε παρεῖναι
- 238 κατὰ τὴν πρώτην ἀναγνώρισιν· ἀλλὰ κελεύσας ἅπασαν τὴν θεραπείαν μεταστῆναι, πηγὴν τινα δακρύων ἐξαίφνης ἀνεῖς καὶ τῇ δεξιᾷ προσελθεῖν ἐγγυτέρω σημήνας, ἵνα μηδ' ἐκ τύχης ἐπακοῦσαι τις ἄλλος δυνηθῆ, φησὶν αὐτοῖς· “ἐπεσκιασμένον πρᾶγμα καὶ χρόνῳ μακρῷ συγκεκρῦθαι δοκοῦν μέλλων ἀνακαλύπτειν μόνος μόνοις ὑμῖν ἀπαμπίσχῳ· ἀδελφὸν δὲν ἀπέδοσθε εἰς Αἴγυπτον, ἐκεῖνος
- 239 δὲν ὄρατε νῦν παρεστῶτα αὐτός εἰμι ἐγώ.” καταπλαγέντων δ' αὐτῶν παρ' ἐλπίδα καὶ διεπτοημένων καὶ ὥσπερ ὀλκῆ τι βιαίῳ τὰς ὄψεις ἐπὶ γῆν καταβεβληκότων καὶ πεπηγότων ἀφώνων καὶ ἀχανῶν,
- [75] “μὴ κατηφέιτε” | εἶπεν, “ἀμνηστίαν ἀπάντων παρέχω τῶν εἰς ἐμὲ πεπραγμένων, μηδενὸς ἑτέρου
- 240 δεῖσθε παρακλήτου· αὐτοκελεύστῳ καὶ ἔκουσῶ γνώμη πρὸς συμβάσεις ἐθελοντῆς ἀφίγμαι συμβούλοις<sup>1</sup> χρησάμενος δυσί, τῇ τε πρὸς τὸν πατέρα <sup>1</sup> MSS. συμβόλοις.

ON JOSEPH, 235-240

cup had been stolen, and charge the theft to the youngest. For this would be the clearest way of testing the real feeling of each, and their attachment to the brother thus falsely accused. On all these 236 grounds he was now convinced that there was no factious conspiracy to undo his mother's family, and also considering what had happened to himself he came to the conclusion that his experiences were probably due not so much to their conspiring as to the providence of God Who beholds distant events and sees the future no less than the present.

XL. So then, overcome by family affection, he 237 hastened to conclude his reconciliation. And that no reproach might attach to the brothers for their action he judged it best that no Egyptian should be present at the first recognition. Instead he bade all 238 the staff to withdraw, and then suddenly shedding a flood of tears and beckoning to them with his right hand to approach nearer so that no one else could by chance hear him, he said: "I am going to reveal to you a matter which has been shrouded in darkness and long time hidden, and I do so while you and I are all alone. The brother whom you sold into Egypt is I myself, whom you see standing beside you." When, astonished and staggered at the un- 239 expected news, they stood rooted to the spot mute and speechless with eyes cast to the ground as though drawn by some compelling force, "Be not downcast," he continued, "I forgive and forget all what you did to me. Do not ask for any other advocate. Of my own free, unbidden judgement I 240 have voluntarily come to make my peace with you. In this I have two fellow-counsellors, my reverence

PHILO

- εὐσεβεία, ᾧ τὸ πλείστον τῆς χάριτος ἀνατίθημι, καὶ τῇ φυσικῇ φιланθρωπία, ἣ πρὸς ἅπαντας δια-241 φερόντως δὲ πρὸς τοὺς ἀφ' αἵματος χρῶμαι. Καὶ νομίζω τῶν συμβεβηκότων οὐχ ὑμᾶς ἀλλὰ θεὸν αἴτιον γεγενῆσθαι βουλευθέντα με τῶν αὐτοῦ χαρίτῶν καὶ δωρεῶν, ὡς ἐν τοῖς ἀναγκαιοτάτοις καιροῖς ἠξίωσε τῷ γενεῖ τῶν ἀνθρώπων παρασχεῖν, ὑπη-242 ρέτην γενέσθαι καὶ διάκονον. ἐναργῆ δὲ πίστιν δύνασθε λαβεῖν ἐξ ὧν ὁράτε· πᾶσαν μὲν Αἴγυπτον ἐπιτέτραμμαι, τιμὴν δὲ ἔχω τὴν πρώτην παρὰ τῷ βασιλεῖ καὶ μὲ νέον ὄντα πρεσβύτερος ὢν ὡς πατέρα τιμᾶ· θεραπεύομαί τε οὐχ ὑπὸ τῶν ἐγγχωρίων μόνον ἀλλὰ καὶ ὑπὸ πλείστων ἄλλων ἐθνῶν, ὅσα καὶ ὑπήκοα καὶ αὐτόνομα· χρεῖα γὰρ πάντα διὰ τὴν 243 ἔνδειαν προεστῶτος. ἄργυρός τε καὶ χρυσὸς καί, τὸ τούτων ἀναγκαιότερον, αἱ τροφαὶ παρ' ἐμοὶ μόνω ταμιεύονται διανέμοντι καὶ κατακερματίζοντι πρὸς τὰς ἀναγκαίας χρεῖας ἐκάστοις τῶν δεομένων, ὡς μήτε τι τῶν εἰς τρυφὴν περιπεῦσαι μήτε τι τῶν 244 εἰς ἐκπλήρωσιν ἐνδείας ἐπιλιπεῖν. ἀλλ' οὐκ ἐναβρυνόμενος καὶ σεμννόμενος ταυτὶ διεξῆλθον, ἀλλ' ἴν' αἰσθησθε, ὅτι τῶν τηλικούτων οὐδεὶς ἔμελλεν ἀνθρώπων αἴτιος ἔσεσθαι δούλω καὶ μετὰ ταῦτα δεσμώτῃ γενομένῳ—καὶ γὰρ ἐδέθην ποτὲ συκο-φαντηθεῖς—, ἀλλ' ὁ τὰς ἐσχάτας συμφορὰς τε καὶ δυσπραγίας μεθαρμοσάμενος εἰς τὰς ἀνωτάτω καὶ 245 πρώτας εὐτυχίας θεὸς ἦν, ᾧ πάντα δυνατά. ταῦτα ἐμοῦ διανοουμένου, μηκέτι εὐλαβῶς ἔχετε τὰς δυσφροσύνας ἐκποδῶν ποιησάμενοι καὶ πρὸς ἰλαρὰν μεταβαλόντες εὐθυμίαν. εὖ δ' ἂν ἔχοι καὶ πρὸς τὸν πατέρα· συντεῖναι καὶ πρῶτον αὐτῷ τὰ περὶ τῆς

ON JOSEPH, 240-245

for our father, which is chiefly responsible for the favour I shew you, and the natural humanity which I feel to all men, and particularly to those of my blood. (And I consider that the cause of what has 241 happened is not you but God, Who willed to use me as His servant, to administer the boons and gifts which He deigns to grant to the human race in the time of their greatest need. You can have a clear 242 proof of this in what you see. All Egypt is committed to my hands, and I hold the first place of honour with the king, and though I am young, and he my elder, he honours me as a father. I have waiting on my will not only the inhabitants of the land, but most of the other nations, whether subject or independent, for because of the dearth they all need me at the head. Silver and gold are stored in my 243 keeping alone, and, what is more necessary than these, the means of sustenance, which I distribute and parcel out to those who ask, according to their necessary requirements, so that they have no superfluities which might serve for luxury nor lack of what may satisfy actual want. But I have told you all 244 this, not because I plume and pride myself thereon, but that you may perceive that no man could have caused such greatness to come to one who was a slave and afterwards a prisoner—for I was once in bonds under a false charge—but He Who turned my condition of extreme calamity into one of unequalled and exalted good fortune was God to Whom all things are possible. Since I am so dis- 245 posed, fear no more, but cast aside your heaviness of heart and take a cheerful courage in its stead. It would be well that you should hasten to our father, and first of all give him the good tidings that you

PHILO

- ἐμῆς εὐρέσεως εὐαγγελίσασθαι· φθάνουσι γὰρ αἱ 246 φῆμαι πανταχόσε.” XLI. οἱ δὲ κατὰ διαδοχὴν τοὺς ἐπαίνους αὐτοῦ συνείροντες ἀπαύ-στως ἀχαλίνοις στόμασιν ἐξύμουν ἄλλος ἄλλο τι διεξιὼν, ὁ μὲν τὸ ἀμνησικάκον, ὁ δὲ τὸ φιλοίκειον, ὁ δὲ τὴν σύνεσιν, ἅπαντες δ’ ἀθρόοι τὴν εὐσέβειαν ἐπὶ τὸν θεὸν ἀναφέροντος τὰ τέλη τῶν κατορθουμένων καὶ μηκέτι ταῖς ἀβουλήτοις ἀρχαῖς καὶ 247 πρώταις ἐνστάσεσι τῶν μὴ κατὰ γνώμην δυσχεράναντος καὶ τὴν ὑπερβάλλουσαν μετ’ αἰδοῦς καρ-τερίαν· ὃς ἐν τοσαύταις γεγονῶς ἀνωμαλίαις οὔτε δουλεύων βλάσφημον οὐδὲν εἶπε κατὰ τῶν ἀδελφῶν ὡς πεπρακότων οὔτ’ εἰς εἰρκτὴν ἀπαγόμενος ὑπ’ ἀθυμίας ἐξελάλησέ τι τῶν ἀπορρήτων οὔτε πολὺν [76] χρόνον ἐκεῖ καταμένων, οἷα | φιλεῖ, τοῖς δεσμώταις ἔθους ὄντος τὰς ἰδίας ἀτυχίας ἀναμετρεῖσθαι, ἀπ-248 εγύμνωσεν· ἀλλ’ ὡς μηδὲν εἰδὼς τῶν αὐτῷ συμβε-βηκότων, ἀλλ’ οὐδ’ ὅτε τὰ ὀνειράτα διέκρινεν ἢ τοῖς εὐνούχοις ἢ τῷ βασιλεῖ, καιρὸν ἔχων εἰς μῆνυσιν ἐπιτήδειον, ἐφθέγγαστό τι περὶ τῆς ἰδίας εὐγενείας, οὐδ’ ὅτε βασιλέως ὑπαρχος ἐχειροτονεῖτο καὶ τῆς Αἰγύπτου πάσης τὴν ἐπιμέλειαν καὶ προστασίαν παρελάμβανεν, ἵνα μὴ δόξῃ τις εἶναι τῶν ἡμελη-μένων καὶ ἀφανῶν, ἀλλὰ τῷ ὄντι εὐπατρίδης, οὐ φύσει δούλος, ἀλλ’ ἐπιβουλὰς ὑφ’ ὧν ἦκιστ’ ἐχρῆν 249 ἀνηκέστους ὑπομεμενηκῶς καὶ συμφοράς. ἔτι δὲ πρὸς τούτοις ἐρρῦή πολὺς ἔπαινος ἰσότητος αὐτοῦ καὶ δεξιότητος· τὰς γὰρ τῶν ἄλλων ἀλαζονείας καὶ * §§ 246–249 have no basis in Genesis. The nearest corresponding text is xlv. 15 “and after that his brethren talked 258

ON JOSEPH, 245-249

have found me, for rumours travel fast in all directions.” XLI. <sup>a</sup>The brothers, letting their 246 tongues run freely, ceased not to sound his praises point by point. Each one had a different theme, one his readiness to forgive, one his family affection, one his prudence, while all united in praising his piety in attributing to God the success which crowned his career and abandoning all resentment at the unwelcome experiences which had attended its distressing opening and earliest stages. They praised also the pre-eminent self-restraint of his modest 247 reticence. He had passed through all these vicissitudes, yet neither while in slavery did he denounce his brothers for selling him nor when he was haled to prison did he in his despondency disclose any secret, nor during his long stay there make any revelations of the usual kind, since prisoners are apt to descant upon their personal misfortunes. He 248 behaved as though he knew nothing of his past experiences, and not even when he was interpreting their dreams to the eunuchs or the king, though he had a suitable opportunity for disclosing the facts, did he say a word about his own high lineage. Nor yet, when he was appointed to be the king’s viceroy and was charged with the superintendence and head-ship over all Egypt, did he say anything to prevent the belief that he was of obscure and ignoble station, whereas he was really a noble, no slave by birth, but the unfortunate victim of the ruthless conspiracy of those who should have been the last to treat him so.
 In addition there was a great outflow of praise of 249 his fairness and kind behaviour, for they knew the with him.” Did Philo read or think he read περὶ for πρὸς αὐτόν?

PHILO

- ἀπαιδευσίας ἡγεμόνων εἰδότες ἐθαύμαζον τὸ ἀνεπίφαντον καὶ ἀτραγώδητον καὶ ὡς εὐθύς ἰδὼν κατὰ τὴν προτέραν ὁδὸν ἀποκτεῖναι δυνάμενος ἢ τὸ γοῦν τελευταῖον λιμώττουσι τροφὰς μὴ παρασχεῖν πρὸς τῷ μὴ τιμωρήσασθαι καὶ ὡς χάριτος ἀξίοις δωρεὰν ἔδωκε τὰπιτήδεια τὴν τιμὴν αὐτῶν ἀποδοθῆναι
- 250 κελεύσας. οὕτω μέντοι τὰ τῆς ἐπιβουλῆς καὶ πράσεως εἰς ἅπαν ἡγνοήθη καὶ διέλαθεν, ὥσθ' οἱ ἐν τέλει τῶν Αἰγυπτίων συνήδοντο, ὡς πρῶτον ἄρτι τῶν ἀδελφῶν τοῦ προεστῶτος ἡκόντων, καὶ ἐπὶ ξενίαν ἐκάλουν καὶ φθάνοντες εὐηγγελίζοντο τῷ βασιλεῖ, καὶ πάντα διὰ πάντων ἔγεμε χαρᾶς οὐκ ἔλαττον ἢ εἴπερ εὐφόρησεν ἡ πεδιάς καὶ ὁ λιμὸς εἰς
- 251 εὐθηνίαν μετέβαλε. XLII. γνοὺς δ' ὁ βασιλεὺς, ὅτι καὶ πατήρ ἐστιν αὐτῷ καὶ ἡ γενεὰ πολυάνθρωπος, προτρέπει μεταναστῆναι πανοικί τὴν βαθυγειοτάτην Αἰγύπτου μοῖραν ὁμολογήσας δεδωρῆσθαι τοῖς ἀφιζομένοις. ἀπήνας οὖν καὶ ἄρμαμάξας καὶ πλήθος ὑποζυγίων ἐπηχθισμένων τὰπιτήδεια δίδωσι τοῖς ἀδελφοῖς καὶ θεραπείαν ἰκανήν, ἵνα μετ' ἀσφαλείας ἀγάγωσι τὸν πατέρα.
- 252 Παραγενομένων δὲ καὶ τὰ περὶ τὸν ἀδελφὸν ἄπιστα καὶ μείζονα ἐλπίδων διηγουμένων, οὐ πάνυ προσεῖχε· κἂν γὰρ οἱ λέγοντες ἀξιοπιστότατοι, ἀλλ' ἢ γε τοῦ πράγματος ὑπερβολὴ ραδίως συναινεῖν οὐκ
- 253 ἐπέτρεπεν. ἰδὼν δὲ ὁ πρεσβύτης τὰς ἐν τοιούτῳ

---

<sup>a</sup> Lit. "the last thing at any rate," i.e. the extreme of clemency which could be expected. Cohn takes it with λιμώττουσι—"in the extremity of famine." The position of γοῦν seems to me to be against this. Mangey postea certe, presumably meaning "at the conclusion of the interview."

ON JOSEPH, 249-253

arrogance and gross rudeness of other governors, and admired the absence of obtrusiveness and blustering. They remembered how directly he saw them on their former expedition, though he might have put them to death or at the very least<sup>a</sup> refused to provide them with food against the famine, so far from taking vengeance he treated them as worthy of his favour and gave them the victuals for nothing by bidding the price to be restored to them. In 250 fact the story of their conspiracy and selling of him to slavery was so completely unknown and remained so secret that the chiefs of the Egyptians rejoiced to hear that the brothers of the governor had now for the first time come to visit him. They invited them to share their hospitality and hastened to bring the good news to the king, and universal joy reigned everywhere, no less than if the fields had borne fruit and the famine had been changed into abundance. XLII. When the king learned that his 251 viceroy had a father and that his family was very numerous, he urged that the whole household should leave its present home, and promised to give the most fertile part of Egypt to the expected settlers. He therefore gave the brothers carts and wagons and a great number of beasts laden with provisions, and an adequate body of servants, that they might bring their father safely.

When they arrived home and told the story of 252 their brother, so incredible and beyond anything he could have hoped for, he gave no heed to them at all, for, however worthy of credit the speakers might be, the extravagance of the tale did not allow him to assent to it readily. But, when the old man saw 253 the equipments suited for an occasion of the kind,

PHILO

καιρῷ παρασκευᾶς καὶ χορηγίας τῶν ἀναγκαίων ἀφθόνους τοῖς περὶ τούτου λεγομένοις εὐτυχήμασι συναδούσας ὕμνει τὸν θεόν, ὅτι τὸ δοκοῦν ἐκλελοι-254 πέναι μέρος τῆς οἰκίας ἀπεπλήρωσεν. ἡ δὲ χαρὰ καὶ φόβον εὐθύς ἐγέννησε τῇ ψυχῇ περὶ τῆς τῶν πατρίων ἐκδικαιτήσεως· ἦδει γὰρ καὶ νεότητα εὐόλισθον φύσει καὶ ξενιτείας τὴν εἰς τὸ ἁμαρτάνειν ἐκεχειρίαν καὶ μάλιστα τῆς ἐν Αἰγύπτῳ χώρας [77] τυφλωπτουσης περὶ τὸν ἀληθῆ θεὸν ἕνεκα | τοῦ γενητὰ καὶ θνητὰ θεοπλαστεῖν καὶ προσέτι πλούτου καὶ δόξης ἐπιθέσεις (ᾶς)<sup>1</sup> ὀλιγόφροσι διανοίαις ἐπιτίθενται καὶ διότι ἀπολειφθεῖς, μηδενὸς τῶν ἐκ τῆς πατρώας οἰκίας συνεξεληλυθότος<sup>2</sup> σωφρονιστοῦ, μόνος ὢν καὶ ἔρημος διδασκάλων ἀγαθῶν ἔτοιμος 255 ἔσται πρὸς τὴν τῶν ὀθνείων μεταβολήν. οὕτως οὖν διακείμενον ἰδὼν ᾧ μόνῳ δυνατὸν ἀόρατον ψυχὴν ὄραν ἔλεον λαμβάνει καὶ κοιμωμένῳ νύκτωρ ἐπιφανείς φησι· “μηδὲν εὐλαβοῦ περὶ τῆς εἰς Αἴγυπτον ἀφίξεως· αὐτὸς ἡγεμονεύσω τῆς ὁδοῦ παρέχων τὴν ἀποδημίαν ἀσφαλῆ καὶ εὐάρεστον· ἀποδώσω μέντοι καὶ τὸν τριπόθητον υἱόν, ὃς ποτε τεθνᾶναι νομισθεῖς ἐκ πολυτείας οὐ ζῶν μόνον ἀλλὰ καὶ χώρας τοσαύτης ἡγεμὼν ἀναφαίνεται.” πληρωθεῖς δ’ εὐελπιστίας ἅμα τῇ ἔω γεγηθῶς ἐπέσπευδεν.
 256 ὁ δ’ υἱὸς ἀκούσας—σκοποὶ γὰρ καὶ φραστῆρες τῆς ὁδοῦ πάντ’ ἐδήλουν—οὐ μακρὰν τῶν ὀρίων ἀπἔχοντα<sup>3</sup> διὰ ταχέων ἀπήντα τῷ πατρί· καὶ κατὰ τὴν καλουμένην Ἡρώων πόλιν ἐντυχόντες ἐπιπίπτουσιν

<sup>1</sup> My insertion. The sentence evidently needs correction, which Cohn would make by expunging ἐπιτίθενται.

<sup>2</sup> Most mss. συνεξεληλυθότων or ἐξ-, one ἐξεληλυθότος.

<sup>3</sup> So mss., Cohn, and Mangey; but? ἀπέχοντι.

and that the lavish supplies of all that was needed agreed with the story they told him of his son, he praised God that He had filled the seeming gap in his house. But joy also straightway begat fear in his 254 soul at the thought of leaving his ancestral way of life. For he knew how natural it is for youth to lose its footing and what licence to sin belongs to the stranger's life, particularly in Egypt where things created and mortal are deified, and in consequence the land is blind to the true God. He knew what assaults wealth and renown make on minds of little sense, and that left to himself, since his father's house supplied no monitor to share his journey, alone and cut off from good teaching, he would be readily influenced to change to alien ways. Such were his 255 feelings when He Whose eye alone can see the invisible soul took pity, and in his sleep at night appeared to him and said, "Fear not to go to Egypt. I Myself will guide thee on the road and make the journey safe and to thy pleasure. Further, I will restore to thee the son for whom thou hast so greatly yearned,<sup>a</sup> who once was thought dead, but now, after many years, is found not only alive but a ruler of that great country." Then, filled with high hopes, he hastened at dawn to set forth rejoicing. But his son 256 when he heard it, informed of all by the scouts who watched the road, proceeded with all speed to meet his father when he was not far from the boundary. And when the two met at the place called the Heroes'

<sup>a</sup> Gen. xlvi. 4 "and Joseph shall put his hands upon thine eyes." Did Philo fail to understand this phrase, which does not occur again in the LXX? The idea of closing the eyes of the dead, otherwise expressed, was of course familiar to him in the classics, cf. § 23 above.

PHILO

- ἀλλήλοις τὰς κεφαλὰς ἐπὶ τῶν ἀνχένων ἐρείσαντες καὶ τὰς ἐσθῆτας δάκρυσι φύροντες πολυχρονίων ἀσπασμάτων ἀπλήστως ἐνεφοροῦντο καὶ μόλις 257 παυσάμενοι συντέεινον ἄχρι τῶν βασιλείων. θεασάμενος δὲ ὁ βασιλεὺς καὶ τὴν ὄψιν καταπλαγεὶς τῆς σεμνότητος ὡς οὐχ ὑπάρχου πατέρα ἀλλ' ἑαυτοῦ μετὰ πάσης αἰδοῦς καὶ τιμῆς ἐδεξιοῦτο· καὶ μετὰ τὰς ἐν ἔθει καὶ ἐξαιρέτους φιλοφροσύνας δίδωσιν αὐτῷ γῆς ἀποτομὴν ἀρετῶσαν καὶ σφόδρα εὐκαρπον, τούς τε υἱοὺς αὐτοῦ πυνθανόμενος εἶναι κτηνοτρόφους τὴν πολλὴν οὐσίαν ἔχοντας ἐν θρέμμασι καθίστησιν ἐπιμελητὰς τῶν ἰδίων αἰπόλια καὶ βουκόλια καὶ ποιμένας καὶ μυρίας ὄσας ἀγέλας ἐγχειρίσας αὐτοῖς.
- 258 XLIII. Ὁ δὲ νεανίας τοσαύτη πίστεως ἐχρήσατο ὑπερβολῇ, ὥστε τῶν καιρῶν καὶ τῶν πραγμάτων εἰς ἀργυρισμὸν παρεχόντων πλείστας ὄσας ἀφορμάς, δυνηθεὶς δι' ὀλίγου πλουσιώτατος τῶν κατ' αὐτὸν γενέσθαι, τὸν γνήσιον ὡς ἀληθῶς πρὸ τοῦ νόθου πλουτοῦν καὶ τὸν βλέποντα πρὸ τοῦ τυφλοῦ θαυμάσας ἅπαντα τὸν ἄργυρον καὶ χρυσόν, ὅσον ἐκ τῆς τιμῆς ἤθροισε τοῦ σίτου, ἐν τοῖς βασιλέως ἐθησαυρίζετο ταμειοῖς οὐδεμίαν δραχμὴν νοσφισάμενος, ἀλλὰ μόναις ἀρκεσθεὶς ταῖς δωρεαῖς, αἷς ἀμειβόμενος 259 ἐκεῖνος ἀντεχαρίζετο. καθάπερ τε οἰκίαν μίαν

<sup>a</sup> So LXX. E.V. Goshen.

<sup>b</sup> §§ 258-260 are a very free version of Gen. xlvii. 13-26.
Joseph's honesty is deduced from verse 14 "Joseph brought 264

ON JOSEPH, 256-259

City <sup>a</sup> they laid their heads upon each other's neck and while the tears smeared their raiment lingered long in embraces of which they could not take their fill, and, when at last they brought themselves to cease therefrom, pressed onwards to the king's court. When the king beheld him, overcome by his venerable appearance, he welcomed him with all modesty and respect, as though he were the father not of his viceroy but of himself. And, after the usual, and more than the usual, courtesies had passed, he gave him a portion of land, rich of soil and very fruitful. And, learning that the sons were graziers who had much substance of cattle, he appointed them keepers of his own, and put into their charge flocks and herds innumerable of goats and oxen and sheep. 257

XLIII. <sup>b</sup> Now the young man's honesty was exceedingly great, so much so that, though the times and state of affairs gave him very numerous opportunities for gaining wealth, and he might have soon become the richest of his contemporaries, his reverence for the truly genuine riches rather than the spurious, the seeing rather than the blind, led him to store up in the king's treasuries all the silver and gold which he collected from the sale of corn and refuse to appropriate to himself a single drachma, contented with nothing more than the gifts with which the king repaid his services. The excellence 259 all the money into Pharaoh's house." Philo omits the stages by which the property and land of the Egyptians passed into the king's hand, and the tax of one-fifth of the produce imposed upon them. That the gift of seed was only made in the seventh year of the famine might be fairly inferred from the LXX in verse 24 "and the land shall have its produce" (ἔσται δὲ γεννήματα αὐτῆς). The appointment of overseers has no parallel in Genesis.

PHILO

- Αἴγυπτον καὶ σὺν αὐτῇ χώρας ἑτέρας καὶ ἔθνη πιεσθέντα τῷ λιμῷ παντὸς λόγου κρεῖττον ἐπετρόπευσεν ὁ ἀνὴρ οὗτος κατὰ τὸ πρόπον διανέμων τὰς τροφὰς καὶ ἀφορῶν οὐκ εἰς τὸ παρὸν μόνον λυσι-τελεῖς ἀλλὰ καὶ τὴν πρὸς τὸ μέλλον ὠφέλειαν.
- 260 ἦνίκα γοῦν ὁ ἕβδομος ἐνιαυτὸς τῆς ἐνδείας ἐνέστη, [78] μεταπεμφόμενος τοὺς γεωργοὺς—ἤδη γὰρ | τῆς εὐφορίας καὶ εὐθηνίας ἐλπίς ἦν—ἐδίδου κριθάς τε καὶ πυροὺς εἰς σπέρματα φροντίσας τοῦ μηδένα νοσφίσασθαι καταθεῖναι δέ<sup>1</sup> εἰς τὰς ἀρούρας ἃ ἔλαβεν, ὀπτῆρας καὶ ἐφόρους ἐπιλέξας ἀριστίνδην, οἱ τὴν σπορὰν παραφυλάξουσι.
- 261 Μετὰ δὲ τὸν λιμὸν χρόνοις μακροῖς ὕστερον τελευτήσαντος τοῦ πατρός, ὑπονοία πληχθέντες οἱ ἀδελφοὶ καὶ δείσαντες, μή τι χαλεπὸν πάθωσι μνησικακία,<sup>2</sup> προσελθόντες ἐδέοντο λιπαρῶς ἐπ-
- 262 ἀγόμενοι γυναῖκας καὶ γενεάν. ὁ δ' ἐπιδακρύσας φησὶν· “ ὁ μὲν καιρὸς ἱκανὸς ὑπόνοιαν κατασκευά-σαι τοῖς ἀφόρητα ἐργασαμένοις καὶ μὴ δι' ἑτέρου μᾶλλον ἢ τοῦ συνειδότης ἐλεγχόμενοις· ἢ γὰρ τελευτῇ τοῦ πατρός τὸν ἀρχαῖον φόβον, ὃν πρὸ τῶν καταλλαγῶν εἶχετε, κεκαίνωκεν, ὥς τοῦ μὴ λυπηῖσαι τὸν πατέρα χάριν τὴν ἀμνηστίαν ἐμοῦ παρασχόντος.
- 263 ἐγὼ δὲ τὸν τρόπον οὐ χρόνοις μεταβάλλομαι οὐδ'<sup>3</sup> ὁμολογήσας ἐνσπονδος εἶναι δράσω ποτέ τὰ ἄ-σπονδα· οὐ γὰρ ὑπερθέσεις ἀμύνης ἐκαιροφυλάκουν, ἀλλὰ τὴν εἰς ἅπαν ἀπαλλαγὴν τῆς κολάσεως ἐχαριζόμεν ἐπινέμων τὸ μὲν τι τιμῇ τοῦ πατρός—δεῖ γὰρ ἀψευδεῖν—, τὸ δέ τι εὐνοία τῇ πρὸς ὑμᾶς ἀναγκαία.

<sup>1</sup> So Mangey: Cohn and mss. καταθεῖναι τε.

<sup>2</sup> mss. μνησικακίας.

ON JOSEPH, 259-264

with which he managed Egypt, as though it were a single household, and also the other famine-stricken lands and nations was beyond all words, and he dispensed the lands and food as was suitable, looking not only to present profit but also to future advantage. Accordingly, when the seventh year of dearth came, 260 having now reason to hope for plentiful harvests, he sent for the farmers and gave them barley and wheat as seed, and at the same time, to ensure that no one should embezzle it instead of putting it in the fields, he appointed men of high merit as inspectors and supervisors to watch the sowing.

<sup>a</sup> Many years after the famine his father died, and 261 his brothers, attacked by misgivings and fears that he might still harbour malice and wreak his vengeance on them, approached him with their wives and families and made earnest supplication. But he, moved to 262 tears, said: "The occasion might well raise misgivings in those whom conscience rather than others convicts of intolerable misdoing. My father's death has awakened the old fear which you felt before our reconciliation, with the idea that I gave you my pardon only to save my father from sorrow. But time does not change my character, nor, after promising to keep the peace with you, will I ever violate it by my actions. I was not watching for the hour of vengeance 263 repeatedly delayed, but I freely granted you immunity from punishment once for all, partly no doubt influenced, for I must tell the truth, by respect for my father, but partly by the goodwill which I cannot but feel towards you. And, even if it were 264 <sup>a</sup> For §§ 261-268 see Gen. i. 15-end.

PHILO

- 264 εἰ δὲ καὶ πατρός ἔνεκα πάντ' ἐποίουν τὰ χρηστὰ καὶ φιλάνθρωπα, φυλάξω ταῦτα καὶ πατρός<sup>1</sup> τετελευτηκότος· τέθνηκε δ' οὐδείς παρ' ἐμοὶ κριτῆ τῶν ἀγαθῶν ἀνδρῶν, ἀλλὰ καὶ ζήσεται τὸν αἰὶ χρόνον ἀγήρως, ἀθανάτῳ φύσει ψυχῇ μηκέτι ταῖς σώματος 265 ἀνάγκαις ἐνδεδεμένη. τί δὲ δεῖ μόνου μεμνήσθαι τοῦ γενητοῦ πατρός; ἔχομεν τὸν ἀγένητον, τὸν ἄφθαρτον, τὸν αἰδίου, “ὃς ἐφορᾷ πάντα καὶ πάντων ἐπακούει” καὶ τῶν ἡσυχάζοντων, τὸν αἰὶ βλέποντα καὶ τὰ ἐν μυχοῖς τῆς διανοίας, ὃν μάρτυρα καλῶ 266 τοῦ συνειδότος ἐπ' ἀψευδέσι καταλλαγαῖς. ἐγὼ γάρ, καὶ μὴ θαυμάσητέ μου τὸν λόγον, τοῦ θεοῦ εἰμι τοῦ τὰ πονηρὰ βουλευμάτα ὑμῶν εἰς ἀγαθῶν περιουσίαν μεθαρμωσαμένου. γίνεσθε οὖν ἄφοβοι καὶ πρὸς τὸ μέλλον χρησιμωτέρων μεθέξοντες ἢ 267 ζῶντος ἔτι τοῦ πατρός ἐκαρποῦσθε.” XLIV. τοιοῦτοις θαρσύνας τοὺς ἀδελφοὺς λόγοις, ἔργοις τὰς ὑποσχέσεις ἐβεβαίον μᾶλλον οὐδὲν παραλιπῶν τῶν εἰς ἐπιμέλειαν. μετὰ δὲ τὸν λιμόν, ἐπ' εὐθηνία καὶ εὐετηρία τῆς χώρας ἤδη γεγηθότων τῶν οἰκητόρων, ἐτιμᾶτο πρὸς ἀπάντων ἀμοιβὰς ἀντεκτινόντων ὑπὲρ ὧν εὖ πεπόνθησαν ἐν καιροῖς 268 ἀβουλήτοις. ἡ δὲ φήμη ρυεῖσα τὰς ἐξῆς πόλεις κατέπλησε τῆς ἐπὶ τῷδε τῷ ἀνδρὶ εὐκλείας. ἔτη δὲ βιώσας δέκα πρὸς τοῖς ἑκατὸν ἐτελεύτησεν εὐγῆρως ἐπ' ἄκρον ἐλθὼν εὐμορφίας καὶ φρονή-269 σεως καὶ λόγων δυνάμεως. μαρτυρεῖ δὲ τὸ μὲν

<sup>1</sup> MSS. πρὸς (or omit): some have τετελευτηκότα for -ότος.

* Cohn places the comma after φύσει, “will live proof against old age in an immortal existence with a soul,” etc.

for my father's sake that I acted with this kindness and humanity, I will continue in the same now that he is gone. In my judgement, no good man is dead, but will live for ever, proof against old age,<sup>a</sup> with a soul immortal in its nature no longer fettered by the restraints of the body. But why should I mention 265 that father who is but a creature? We have the uncreated Father, the Imperishable, the Eternal, "Who surveys all things and hears all things,"<sup>b</sup> even when no word is spoken, He Who ever sees into the recesses of the mind, Whom I call as witness to my conscience, which affirms that that was no false reconciliation. For I,—do not marvel at my words, 266 —belong to God<sup>c</sup> Who converted your evil schemes into a superabundance of blessings. Rid yourselves, then, of fear, since in the future greater advantage will fall to your share than you enjoyed while our father was still alive." XLIV. With such words he 267 encouraged his brothers, and by his actions he confirmed his promises, leaving nothing undone which could shew his care for their interests.

But, after the famine, when the inhabitants were now rejoicing in the prosperity and fertility of the land, he was honoured by them all, who thus requited the benefits which they had received from him in the times of adversity. And rumour, float- 268 ing into the neighbouring states, filled them with his renown. He died in a goodly old age, having lived 110 years, unsurpassed in comeliness, wisdom and power of language. His personal beauty is 269

<sup>b</sup> Il. iii. 277, Od. xi. 109, xii. 323 ὁς πάντ' ἐφορᾷ καὶ πάντ' ἐπακούει (of the sun).

<sup>c</sup> So LXX. (Gen. i. 19). E.V. "Am I in the place of God (to punish you)?" Philo has made use of the text in the same sense De Mig. 22 and 160, De Som. ii. 107.

PHILO

[79] κάλλος τοῦ σώματος ἔρως ὃς ἐξέμηνεν | ἐπ' αὐτῷ γυναῖκα, τὴν δὲ σύνεσιν ἢ ἐν ταῖς ἀμυθήτοις τῶν κατὰ τὸν βίον ἀνωμαλίαις ὁμαλότης εὐαρμοστίαν τοῖς ἀναρμόστοις καὶ συμφωνίαν τοῖς ἐξ αὐτῶν ἀσυμφώνοις ἐργασαμένη, τὴν δὲ τῶν λόγων δύνα-μιν ἢ τε τῶν ὄνειράτων διάκρισις καὶ ἢ ἐν ταῖς ὁμιλίαις εὐέπεια καὶ ἢ παρακολουθήσασα πειθῶ, δι' ἦν οὐδεὶς τῶν ἀρχομένων ἀνάγκη μᾶλλον ἢ ἐκὼν 270 ὑπήκουε. τούτων δὲ τῶν ἐνιαυτῶν ἑπτακαίδεκα μὲν ἄχρι μειρακίου διέτριβεν ἐν τῇ πατρῴᾳ οἰκίᾳ, τρισκαίδεκα δ' ἐν ταῖς ἀβουλήτοις συντυχίαις, ἐπιβουλευόμενος, πιπρασκόμενος, δουλεύων, συκοφαν-τούμενος, ἐν δεσμωτηρίῳ καταδούμενος, τοὺς δ' ἄλλους ὀγδοήκοντα ἐν ἡγεμονίᾳ καὶ εὐπραγίᾳ τῇ πάσῃ, λιμοῦ καὶ εὐθηνίας ἔφορος καὶ βραβευτῆς ἄριστος, τὰ πρὸς ἑκάτερον καιρὸν πρυτανεύειν ἱκανώτατος.

ON JOSEPH, 269-270

attested by the furious passion which a woman conceived for him ; his good sense by the equable temper he shewed amid the numberless inequalities of his life, a temper which created order in disorder and concord where all was naturally discordant ; his power of language by his interpretations of the dreams and the fluency of his addresses and the persuasiveness which accompanied them, which secured him the obedience, not forced but voluntary, of every one of his subjects. Of these years he spent 270 seventeen up to adolescence in his father's house, thirteen in painful misfortunes, the victim of conspiracy, sold into slavery, falsely accused, chained in a prison, and the other eighty as a ruler and in complete prosperity, a most admirable supervisor and arbiter in times both of famine and plenty, and most capable of presiding over the requirements of both.

p

MOSES I (DE VITA MOSIS)

INTRODUCTION TO DE VITA MOSIS I AND II

THE first of these two <sup>a</sup> treatises covers, as is stated at the beginning of the second, the early life and education of Moses and the main facts of his work as King; that is, as the leader of the Israelites in their escape from Egypt and adventures in the wilderness. It runs on very straightforwardly and does not call for any detailed analysis. There is only one attempt at allegory, viz. the reflections on the meaning of the vision of the Burning Bush.<sup>b</sup>

The second treatise is far more complicated. It treats the character of Moses under three heads, the legislative, the high-priestly and the prophetic, a method which necessarily precludes any chronological arrangement. The first division as it stands <sup>c</sup> begins with some general remarks on the need of these three qualifications as adjuncts to the ideal king (1-11), and proceeds to base the glory of Moses as a legislator first on the permanence of his laws (12-16), secondly on the respect paid to them by other nations (17-24) in support of which he adds an account of the making of the Septuagint (25-44). To these is to be added the greatness of the law-book itself, but this passes away into a justification of the scheme by which the

<sup>a</sup> Treated by all mss. and all editions before Cohn as three; the second ending at § 65. This is almost certainly erroneous. Philo in De Virt. 52 speaks of two books, and the concluding words of ii. 1 ἦν δὲ τῶν συντάττομεν περὶ τῶν ἐπομένων καὶ ἀκολούθων, if considered in connexion with the sequel, clearly imply the same.

<sup>b</sup> This is hardly an allegory in the usual sense. The vision is interpreted not in any spiritual or theological way, but as a figure of the nation's condition at the time. Contrast with De Fuga, 161 ff.

<sup>c</sup> On the question whether something has been lost see App. p. 606.

ON MOSES I AND II

legislative element is preceded by the historical, and this is followed by a dissertation on how the historical part records the punishment of the wicked and the salvation of the good, this last including a detailed account of Noah and the Ark (45-65).

In the second division the discussion of Moses as priest leads to a detailed description of the tabernacle and its appurtenances (66-108 and 136-140), the priest's vesture with its symbolism (109-135), the appointment of the priests and Levites (141-158) and this last to an account of the part played by the Levites in punishing the idolatry of the Golden Calf (159-173), and finally of the vindication of the superiority of the priests by the blossoming of Aaron's rod (174-186).

The third division treating of Moses as prophet is subdivided according as his pronouncements are made from an oracle given in answer to his question or from his own prophetic inspiration (181-191). Four examples are given of each: of the former, (a) the sentence on the blasphemer (192-208), (b) on the Sabbath-breaker (209-220), (c) special regulations as to the Passover (221-232), (d) the law of inheritance (233-245). As examples of the latter he gives Moses' prophecies (a) of the destruction of the Egyptians (246-257), (b) of the manna (258-269), (c) of the slaughter of the idolaters (270-274)<sup>a</sup> and (d) the destruction of Korah and his companions (275-287). The treatise ends with a few sections about the end of Moses. Altogether the two books, between them, cover most of the story of Moses as given in the Pentateuch, the only really serious omission being that of the theophany on Sinai.<sup>b</sup>

<sup>a</sup> Noted however by Philo himself as an exhortation rather than a prophecy.

<sup>b</sup> This would be more intelligible if one might suppose that the Life of Moses was, from the first, intended to be an integral part of the Exposition (see Gen. Introd. pp. xv f.), since the story of Sinai is treated at considerable length in De Decal. 32 ff.

Other omissions are Jethro's visit to Moses, the death of Aaron, and the appointment of Joshua as successor. Philo himself remarks on his omission of the last in De Virt. 52 ff.

ΠΕΡΙ ΤΟΥ ΒΙΟΥ ΜΩΥΣΕΩΣ
ΛΟΓΟΣ ΠΡΩΤΟΣ

[80]

1 I. Μωυσέως τοῦ κατὰ μὲν τινὰς νομοθέτου τῶν Ἰουδαίων, κατὰ δέ τινὰς ἑρμηνέως νόμων ἱερῶν, τὸν βίον ἀναγράψαι διενεώθη, ἀνδρὸς τὰ πάντα μεγίστου καὶ τελειοτάτου, καὶ γνώριμον τοῖς ἀξίοις 2 μὴ ἀγνοεῖν αὐτὸν ἀποφῆναι. τῶν μὲν γὰρ νόμων τὸ κλέος, οὓς ἀπολέλοιπε, διὰ πάσης τῆς οἰκου-μένης πεφοιτηκὸς ἄχρι καὶ τῶν τῆς γῆς τερμάτων ἔφθακεν, αὐτὸν δὲ ὅστις ἦν ἐπ' ἀληθείας ἴσασι οὐ πολλοί, διὰ φθόνον ἴσως καὶ ἐν οὐκ ὀλίγοις τῶν διατεταγμένων ὑπὸ τῶν κατὰ πόλεις νομοθετῶν ἐναν-τίωσι οὐκ ἔβελησάντων αὐτὸν μνήμης ἀξιῶσαι τῶν 3 παρ' Ἑλλησι λογίων· ὧν οἱ πλείους τὰς δυνάμεις ἀσ ἔσχον διὰ παιδείας ὕβρισαν ἐν τε ποιήμασι καὶ [81] τοῖς καταλογάδην | συγγράμμασι κωμωδίας καὶ συβαριτικὰς ἀσελείας συνθέντες, περιβόητον αἰ-σχύνην, οὓς ἔδει ταῖς φύσεσι καταχρήσασθαι πρὸς τὴν τῶν ἀγαθῶν ἀνδρῶν τε καὶ βίων ὑφήγησιν, ἵνα μήτε τι καλὸν ἡσυχία παραδοθὲν ἀρχαῖον ἢ νέον ἀφανισθῆ λάμψαι δυνάμενον μήτ' αὐτὰς ἀμείνους ὑποθέσεις παρελθόντες τὰς ἀναξίους ἀκοῆς προκρίναι δοκῶσι σπουδάζοντες τὰ κακὰ καλῶς ἀπ-4 ἀγγέλλειν εἰς ὄνειδῶν ἐπιφάνειαν. ἀλλ' ἔγωγε τὴν

ON THE LIFE OF MOSES, BOOK I

I. I purpose to write the life of Moses, whom some 1 describe as the legislator of the Jews, others as the interpreter of the Holy Laws. I hope to bring the story of this greatest and most perfect of men to the knowledge of such as deserve not to remain in ignorance of it; for, while the fame of the laws 2 which he left behind him has travelled throughout the civilized world and reached the ends of the earth, the man himself as he really was is known to few. Greek men of letters have refused to treat him as worthy of memory, possibly through envy, and also because in many cases the ordinances of the legislators of the different states are opposed to his. Most 3 of these authors have abused the powers which education gave them, by composing in verse or prose comedies and pieces of voluptuous licence, to their widespread disgrace, when they should have used their natural gifts to the full on the lessons taught by good men and their lives. In this way they might have ensured that nothing of excellence, old or new, should be consigned to oblivion and to the extinction of the light which it could give, and also save themselves from seeming to neglect the better themes and prefer others unworthy of attention, in which all their efforts to express bad matter in good language served to confer distinction on shameful

PHILO

τούτων βασκανίαν ὑπερβάς τὰ περὶ τὸν ἄνδρα μηνύσω μαθὼν αὐτὰ κακὰ βίβλων τῶν ἱερῶν, ὡς θαυμάσια μνημεῖα τῆς αὐτοῦ σοφίας ἀπολέλοιπε, καὶ παρά τινων ἀπὸ τοῦ ἔθνους πρεσβυτέρων· τὰ γὰρ λεγόμενα τοῖς ἀναγινωσκομένοις αἰεὶ συν-ὑφαίνον καὶ διὰ τοῦτ' ἔδοξα μᾶλλον ἐτέρων τὰ περὶ τὸν βίον ἀκριβῶσαι.

- 5 II. "Ἀρξομαι δ' ἀφ' οὗπερ ἀναγκαῖον ἄρξασθαι.
 Μωυσῆς γένος μὲν ἐστὶ Χαλδαῖος, ἐγεννήθη δ' ἐν Αἰγύπτῳ καὶ ἐτράφη, τῶν προγόνων αὐτοῦ διὰ πολυχρόνιον λιμόν, ὃς Βαβυλῶνα καὶ τοὺς πλησιοχώρους ἐπίεξε, κατὰ ζήτησιν τροφῆς εἰς Αἴγυπτον πανοικὶ μεταναστάντων, γῆν πεδιάδα καὶ βαθείαν καὶ πρὸς πάντα γονιμωτάτην, ὣν ἡ ἀνθρωπίνη φύσις δεῖται, καὶ μάλιστα τὸν τοῦ σίτου καρπόν.
 6 ὁ γὰρ ταύτης ποταμὸς θέρους ἀκμάζοντος, ἠνίκα τοὺς ἄλλους φασὶ μειοῦσθαι χειμάρρους τε καὶ αὐθιγενεῖς, ἐπιβαίνων τε καὶ ἀναχεόμενος πλημίμυρῆ καὶ λιμνάζει τὰς ἀρούρας, αἱ ὑετοῦ μὴ δεόμεναι φορᾶς ἀφθονίαν παντοίων ἀγαθῶν ἀνὰ πᾶν ἔτος χορηγοῦσιν, εἰ μὴ που μεσολαβήσειεν ὄργη θεοῦ δι' ἐπιπολάζουσαν ἀσέβειαν τῶν οἰκητόρων.
 7 πατρὸς δὲ καὶ μητρὸς ἔλαχε τῶν καθ' ἑαυτοὺς ἀρίστων, οὓς φυλέτας ὄντας ἡ ὁμοφροσύνη μᾶλλον ὠκείωσεν ἢ τὸ γένος. ἐβδόμη γενεὰ (δ') οὗτός ἐστὶν ἀπὸ τοῦ πρώτου, ὃς ἐπηλύτης ὢν τοῦ σύμπαντος Ἰουδαίων ἔθνους ἀρχηγέτης ἐγένετο. III.
 8 τροφῆς δ' ἠξιώθη βασιλικῆς ἀπ' αἰτίας τοιαύσδε·

---

* For §§ 5-17 see Ex. ii. 1-10.

MOSES I. 4-8

subjects. But I will disregard their malice, and tell 4 the story of Moses as I have learned it, both from the sacred books, the wonderful monuments of his wisdom which he has left behind him, and from some of the elders of the nation ; for I always interwove what I was told with what I read, and thus believed myself to have a closer knowledge than others of his life's history.

II. <sup>a</sup> I will begin with what is necessarily the right 5 place to begin. Moses was by race a Chaldean, but was born and reared in Egypt, as his ancestors had migrated thither to seek food with their whole households, in consequence of the long famine under which Babylon and the neighbouring populations were suffering. Egypt is a land rich in plains, with deep soil, and very productive of all that human nature needs, and particularly of corn. For the river 6 of this country, in the height of summer, when other streams, whether winter torrents or spring-fed, are said to dwindle, rises and overflows, and its flood makes a lake of the fields which need no rain but every year bear a plentiful crop of good produce of every kind, if not prevented by some visitation of the wrath of God to punish the prevailing impiety of the inhabitants. He had for his father and 7 mother the best of their contemporaries, members of the same tribe, though with them mutual affection was a stronger tie than family connexions. He was seventh in descent from the first settler, who became the founder of the whole Jewish nation.<sup>b</sup> III. He was brought up as a prince, a promotion 8 due to the following cause. As the nation of the <sup>b</sup> See Ex. vi. 16 ff., where Moses is given as fifth from Jacob and therefore seventh from Abraham.

PHILO

τῆς χώρας ὁ βασιλεύς, εἰς πολυανθρωπίαν ἐπιδιδόντος αἰεὶ τοῦ ἔθνους, δείσας μὴ οἱ ἔποικοι πλείους γενόμενοι δυνατωτέρα χειρὶ τοῖς αὐτόχθοσι περὶ κράτους ἀρχῆς ἀμιλλῶνται, τὴν ἰσχὺν αὐτῶν [82] ἀφαιρεῖν ἐπινοίαις ἀνοσιουργοῖς ἐμηχανᾶτο | καὶ κελεύει τῶν γεννωμένων τὰ μὲν θήλεα τρέφειν—ἐπεὶ γυνὴ διὰ φύσεως ἀσθένειαν ὀκνηρὸν εἰς πόλεμον—, τὰ δ' ἄρρενα διαφθείρειν, ἵνα μὴ αὐξήθῃ κατὰ πόλεις· εὐανδροῦσα γὰρ δύναμις δυσάλωτον καὶ 9 δυσκαθαίρετον ἐπιτείχισμα. γεννηθεὶς οὖν ὁ παῖς, εὐθύς ὄψιν ἐνέφαιεν ἀστειοτέραν ἢ κατ' ἰδιώτην, ὡς καὶ τῶν τοῦ τυράννου κηρυγμάτων, ἐφ' ὅσον οἶόν τε ἦν, τοὺς γονεῖς ἀλογῆσαι· τρεῖς γοῦν φασὶ μῆνας ἐφεξῆς οἴκοι γαλακτοτροφηθῆναι λανθάνοντα 10 τοὺς πολλοὺς. ἐπεὶ δ', οἷα ἐν μοναρχίαις φιλεῖ, καὶ τὰ ἐν μυχοῖς ἔνιοι διηρεύων σπεύδοντες αἰεὶ τι καινὸν ἄκουσμα προσφέρειν τῷ βασιλεῖ, φοβη-θέντες μὴ σωτηρίαν ἐνὶ μνώμενοι πλείους ὄντες αὐτοὶ σὺν ἐκείνῳ παραπόλωνται, δεδακρυμένοι τὸν παῖδα ἐκτιθέασιν παρὰ τὰς ὄχθας τοῦ ποταμοῦ καὶ στένοντες ἀπήεσαν, οἰκτιζόμενοι μὲν αὐτοὺς τῆς ἀνάγκης αὐτόχειράς τε καὶ τεκνοκτόνους ἀπο-καλοῦντες, οἰκτιζόμενοι δὲ καὶ τὸν παῖδα τῆς παρα-11 λογωτάτης ἀπωλείας. εἶθ', ὡς εἰκὸς ἐν ἀλλοκότῳ πράγματι, κατηγοροῦν αὐτῶν ὡς μείζονος αἰτίων συμφορᾶς· “ τί γὰρ ” ἔφασκον “ εὐθύς γεννώμενον οὐκ ἐξεθήκαμεν; τὸν μὴ φθάσαντα τροφῆς ἡμέρου μεταλαχεῖν οὐδ' ἄνθρωπον οἱ πολλοὶ νομίζουσιν·

---

<sup>a</sup> Ex. ii. 2. The LXX word ἀστειός is quoted in Hebrews xi. 23 and Acts vii. 20.

MOSES I. 8-11

newcomers was constantly growing more numerous, the king of the country, fearing that the settlers, thus increasing, might shew their superiority by contesting the chief power with the original inhabitants, contrived a most iniquitous scheme to deprive them of their strength. He gave orders to rear the female infants, since her natural weakness makes a woman inactive in war, but to put the males to death, to prevent their number increasing throughout the cities; for a flourishing male population is a coign of vantage to an aggressor which cannot easily be taken or destroyed. Now, the child from 9 his birth had an appearance of more than ordinary goodness,<sup>a</sup> so that his parents as long as they could actually set at nought the proclamations of the despot. In fact we are told that, unknown to all but few, he was kept at home and fed from his mother's breast for three successive months. But, since, as is 10 often the case under a monarch, there were persons prying into holes and corners, ever eager to carry some new report to the king, his parents in their fear that their efforts to save one would but cause a larger number, namely themselves, to perish with him, exposed him with tears on the banks of the river, and departed groaning. They pitied themselves being forced, as they said in their self-reproach, to be the murderers of their own child, and they pitied him too, left to perish in this unnatural way. Then, as was natural in so strangely cruel a 11 situation, they began to accuse themselves of having made bad worse. "Why did we not cast him away," they said, "directly he was born? The child who has not survived to enjoy a kind nurture is not usually reckoned as a human being. But we meddlers ἡμεῖς δ' οἱ περιττοὶ καὶ τρεῖς μῆνας ὅλους ἀνεθρέψαμεν, δαψιλεστέρας μὲν ἑαυτοῖς ἀνίας, τῷ δὲ τιμωρίας ἐκπορίζοντες, ἵν' ἡδονῶν καὶ ἀλγηδόνων ἐπὶ πλεῖστον ἀντιλαμβάνεσθαι δυνάμενος ἐν αἰσθήσει κακῶν ἀργαλεωτέρων διαφθείρηται."

PHILO

- 12 IV. Καὶ οἱ μὲν ἀγνοῖα τοῦ μέλλοντος ἀπήεσαν οἰκτρῷ κατεσχημένοι πένθει, ἀδελφῆ δὲ τοῦ ἐκτεθέντος βρέφους ἔτι παρθένος ὑπὸ φιλοικείου πάθους μικρὸν ἀποθεν ἐκαραδόκει τὸ ἀποβησόμενον· ἃ μοι δοκεῖ πάντα συμβῆναι κατὰ θεὸν προμηθούμενον
- 13 τοῦ παιδός. θυγάτηρ ἦν τῷ βασιλεῖ τῆς χώρας ἀγαπητῆ καὶ μόνη· ταύτην φασὶ γημαμένην ἐκ πολλοῦ χρόνου μὴ κυῖσκειν τέκνων ὡς εἰκὸς ἐπιθυμοῦσαν καὶ μάλιστα γενεᾶς ἄρρενος, ἥ τὸν εὐδαίμονα κλῆρον τῆς πατρώας ἡγεμονίας διαδέξεται κινδυνεύοντα ἐρημίᾳ θυγατριδῶν ἀλλοτριωθῆναι.
- 14 κατηφοῦσαν δὲ αἰεὶ καὶ στένουσαν ὡς μάλιστα ἐκείνη τῇ ἡμέρᾳ τῷ βάρει τῶν φροντίδων ἀπαγορεῦσαι καὶ δι' ἔθους ἔχουσαν οἴκοι καταμένειν καὶ μηδὲ τὰς κλισιάδας ὑπερβαίνειν ἐξορμησαὶ μετὰ θεραπαινίδων ἐπὶ τὸν ποταμόν, ἔνθα ὁ παῖς ἐξέκειτο· κᾶπειτα λουτροῖς καὶ περιρραντηρίοις χρῆ-
- [83] σθαι μέλλουσαν ἐν τῷ δασυτάτῳ τῶν ἐλῶν | αὐτὸν
- 15 θεάσασθαι καὶ κελεῦσαι προσφέρειν. εἶτα ἀπὸ κεφαλῆς ἄχρι ποδῶν καταθεωμένην τὴν τε εὐμορφίαν καὶ εὐεξίαν ἀποδέχεσθαι καὶ δεδακρυμένον ὀρώσαν ἐλεεῖν, ἥδη τῆς ψυχῆς τετραμμένης αὐτῇ πρὸς μητρῶον πάθος ὡς ἐπὶ γνησίῳ παιδί· γνοῦσαν

<sup>a</sup> See App. p. 603.

<sup>b</sup> The statements (1) that Pharaoh's daughter was the only child of her father, (2) that she had no child of her own, so

MOSES I. 11-15

actually nurtured him for three whole months, thus procuring more abundant affliction for ourselves and torture for him, only that when he was fully capable of feeling pleasure and pain he should perish conscious of the increased misery of his sufferings." <sup>a</sup>

IV. While they departed ignorant of the future, 12 overcome by grief and sorrow, the sister of the infant castaway, a girl still unmarried, moved by family affection, remained at a little distance, waiting to see what would happen, all this being brought about, in my opinion, by the providence of God watching 13 over the child. The king of the country had but one cherished daughter, who, we are told, had been married for a considerable time but had never conceived a child, though she naturally desired one, particularly of the male sex, to succeed to the magnificent inheritance of her father's kingdom, which threatened to go to strangers if his daughter gave him no grandson.<sup>b</sup> Depressed and loud in lamenta- 14 tion she always was, but on this particular day she broke down under the weight of cares ; and, though her custom was to remain at home and never even cross the threshold, she set off with her maids to the river, where the child was exposed. Then, as she was preparing to make her ablutions in the purifying water, she saw him lying where the marshland growth was thickest, and bade him be brought to her. There- 15 upon, surveying him from head to foot, she approved of his beauty and fine condition, and seeing him weeping took pity on him, for her heart was now moved to feel for him as a mother for her own child.

that Moses was heir presumptive to the throne, are additions to Exodus also either given or implied by Josephus, who adds much other legendary matter, Ant. ii. 232 ff.

PHILO

- δ' ὅτι τῶν Ἑβραίων ἐστὶ καταδεισάντων τοῦ βασιλέως τὸ πρόσταγμα βουλεύεσθαι περὶ τῆς τροφῆς αὐτοῦ· μὴ γὰρ ἀσφαλὲς εὐθὺς εἶναι νομίζειν εἰς τὰ 16 βασιλεία ἄγειν. διαπορούσης δ' ἔτι, τὴν ἀδελφὴν τοῦ παιδὸς καθάπερ ἀπὸ σκοπῆς τὸν ἐνδοιασμὸν στοχασαμένην πυνθάνεσθαι προσδραμοῦσαν, εἰ βουλήσεται γαλακτοτροφηθῆναι τοῦτον<sup>1</sup> παρὰ γυναιῶ 17 τῶν Ἑβραϊκῶν οὐ πρό πολλοῦ κυήσαντι· τῆς δὲ βούλεσθαι φαμένης, τὴν αὐτῆς καὶ τοῦ βρέφους μητέρα παραγαγεῖν ὡς ἀλλοτρίαν, ἣν ἐτοιμότερον ἀσμένην ὑπισχνεῖσθαι πρόφασιν ὡς ἐπὶ μισθῶ τροφεύσειν, ἐπινοία θεοῦ τοῦ τὰς πρώτας τροφὰς τῷ παιδί γνησίας εὐτρεπίζοντος· εἶτα δίδωσιν ὄνομα θεμένη Μωυσῆν ἐτύμως διὰ τὸ ἐκ τοῦ ὕδατος αὐτὸν ἀνελέσθαι· τὸ γὰρ ὕδωρ μῶν ὀνομάζουσιν Αἰγύπτιοι.
- 18 V. Ἐπεὶ δ' ἀθρόας ἐπιδόσεις καὶ παραυξήσεις λαμβάνων οὐ σὺν λόγῳ τῷ κατὰ χρόνον θάττον δ' ἀπότιθος γίνεται, παρῆν ἢ μήτηρ ἅμα καὶ τροφὸς κομίζουσα τῇ δούσῃ μηκέτι γαλακτοτροφίας δεό-19 μενον, εὐγενῆ καὶ ἀστείον ὀφθῆναι. τελειότερον δὲ τῆς ἡλικίας ἰδοῦσα κακ τῆς ὄψεως ἔτι μᾶλλον ἢ πρότερον σπάσασα εὐνοίας υἷον ποιεῖται τὰ περὶ τὸν ὄγκον τῆς γαστρὸς τεχνάσασα πρότερον, ἵνα γνήσιος ἀλλὰ μὴ ὑποβολιμαῖος νομισθῇ· πάντα δ' ἐξευμαρίζει θεὸς ἃ ἂν ἐβελήσῃ καὶ τὰ δυσκατ-20 ὀρθωτα. τροφῆς οὖν ἤδη βασιλικῆς καὶ θεραπείας ἀξιούμενος οὐχ οἷα κομιδῇ νήπιος ἦδετο τωθασμοῖς

<sup>1</sup> MSS. τοῦτο (sc. βρέφος?).

MOSES I. 15-20

And, recognizing that he belonged to the Hebrews, who were intimidated by the king's orders, she considered how to have him nursed, for at present it was not safe to take him to the palace. While 16 she was still thus debating, the child's sister, who guessed her difficulty, ran up from where she stood like a scout, and asked whether she would like to take for his foster-mother a Hebrew woman who had lately been with child. When the princess agreed, 17 she brought her own and the babe's mother in the guise of a stranger, who readily and gladly promised to nurse him, ostensibly for wages. Thus, by God's disposing, it was provided that the child's first nursing should come from the natural source. Since he had been taken up from the water, the princess gave him a name derived from this,<sup>a</sup> and called him Moses, for Möu is the Egyptian word for water.

V. As he grew and thrived without a break, and 18 was weaned at an earlier date than they had reckoned, his mother and nurse in one brought him to her from whom she had received him, since he had ceased to need an infant's milk. He was noble and goodly to look upon ; and the princess, seeing him so advanced 19 beyond his age, conceived for him an even greater fondness than before, and took him for her son, having at an earlier time artificially enlarged the figure of her womb to make him pass as her real and not a supposititious child. God makes all that He wills easy, however difficult be the accomplishment. So now he received as his right the nurture and 20 service due to a prince. Yet he did not bear himself <sup>a</sup> ἐτύμως as regularly in Philo used with reference to the "etymology" of the word, see note on De Conf. 137. So again § 130 below.

PHILO

- καὶ γέλωσι καὶ παιδιαῖς, καίτοι τῶν τὴν ἐπιμέλειαν αὐτοῦ παρειληφόντων ἀνέσεις ἔχειν ἐπιτρεπόντων καὶ μηδὲν ἐπιδεικνυμένων σκυθρωπόν, ἀλλ' αἰδῶ καὶ σεμνότητα παραφαίνων ἀκούσμασι καὶ θεάμασι, ἃ τὴν ψυχὴν ἔμελλεν ὠφελήσειν, προσεῖχε.
- 21 διδάσκαλοι δ' εὐθύς ἀλλαχόθεν ἄλλοι παρήσαν, οἱ μὲν ἀπὸ τῶν πλησιοχώρων καὶ τῶν κατ' Αἴγυπτον νομῶν αὐτοκέλευστοι, οἱ δ' ἀπὸ τῆς Ἑλλάδος ἐπὶ [84] μεγάλαις δωρεαῖς μεταπεμφθέντες· ὧν | ἐν οὐ μακρῷ χρόνῳ τὰς δυνάμεις ὑπερέβαλεν εὐμοιρία φύσεως φθάνων τὰς ὑψηλῆς, ὡς ἀνάμνησιν εἶναι δοκεῖν, οὐ μάθησιν, ἔτι καὶ προσεπινοῶν αὐτὸς τὰ
- 22 δυσθεώρητα. πολλὰ γὰρ αἱ μεγάλαι φύσεις καινοτομοῦσι τῶν εἰς ἐπιστήμην· καὶ καθάπερ τὰ εὐεκτικὰ τῶν σωμάτων καὶ πᾶσι τοῖς μέρεσιν εὐκίνητα φροντίδων ἀπαλλάττει τοὺς ἀλείπτας οὐδὲν ἢ βραχέα παρέχοντας τῶν εἰς ἐπιμέλειαν, ὥσπερ καὶ γεωργοὺς τὰ εὐβλαστα καὶ εὐγενῆ δένδρα βελτιούμενα δι' ἑαυτῶν, τὸν αὐτὸν τρόπον εὐφυῆς ψυχῆ προαπαντῶσα τοῖς λεγομένοις ὑφ' αὐτῆς μᾶλλον ἢ τῶν διδασκόντων ὠφελεῖται καὶ λαβομένη τινὸς ἐπιστημονικῆς ἀρχῆς κατὰ τὴν παροιμίαν “ ἵππος
- 23 εἰς πεδίον ” ὄρμη. ἀριθμοὺς μὲν οὖν καὶ γεωμετρίαν τὴν τε ῥυθμικὴν καὶ ἀρμονικὴν καὶ μετρικὴν θεωρίαν καὶ μουσικὴν τὴν σύμπασαν διὰ τε χρήσεως ὀργάνων καὶ λόγων τῶν ἐν ταῖς τέχναις καὶ διεξόδοις τοπικωτέρας Αἰγυπτίων οἱ λόγιοι

<sup>a</sup> Josephus on the other hand makes him shew his superiority in his games, Ant. ii. 230.

<sup>b</sup> See App. p. 603.

<sup>c</sup> Philo may have derived this from his own knowledge of the scope of education in Egypt in the present and past, but perhaps also from Plato, Laws 656 D, 799 A, 819 A, where 286

MOSES I. 20-23

like the mere infant that he was, nor delight in fun and laughter and sport, though those who had the charge of him did not grudge him relaxation or shew him any strictness; <sup>a</sup> but with a modest and serious bearing he applied himself to hearing and seeing what was sure to profit the soul. Teachers at once <sup>21</sup> arrived from different parts, some unbidden from the neighbouring countries and the provinces of Egypt, others summoned from Greece under promise of high reward. But in a short time he advanced beyond their capacities; his gifted nature forestalled their instruction, so that his seemed a case rather of recollection than of learning, and indeed he himself devised and propounded problems which they could not easily solve. For great natures carve <sup>22</sup> out much that is new in the way of knowledge; and, just as bodies, robust and agile in every part, free their trainers from care, and receive little or none of their usual attention, and in the same way well-grown and naturally healthy trees, which improve of themselves, give the husbandmen no trouble, so the gifted soul takes the lead in meeting the lessons given by itself rather than the teacher and is profited thereby, and as soon as it has a grasp of some of the first principles of knowledge presses forward like the horse to the meadow, <sup>b</sup> as the proverb goes. Arith- <sup>23</sup> metic, geometry, the lore of metre, rhythm and harmony, and the whole subject of music as shown by the use of instruments or in textbooks and treatises of a more special character, were imparted to him by learned Egyptians. <sup>c</sup> These further in-mathematics, music, and dancing are said to be the subjects most stressed by Egyptians. Cf., as a summary of all that is said here, Acts vii. <sup>22</sup> "he was instructed in all the wisdom of the Egyptians."

PHILO

παρεδίδοσαν καὶ προσέτι τὴν διὰ συμβόλων φιλο-σοφίαν, ἣν ἐν τοῖς λεγομένοις ἱεροῖς γράμμασιν ἐπιδεικνυνται καὶ διὰ τῆς τῶν ζώων ἀποδοχῆς, ἃ καὶ θεῶν τιμαῖς γεραίρουσι· τὴν δ' ἄλλην ἐγκύκλιον παιδείαν Ἕλληνες ἐδίδασκον, οἱ δ' ἐκ τῶν πλησιο-χώρων τὰ τε Ἀσσύρια γράμματα καὶ τὴν τῶν 24 οὐρανίων Χαλδαϊκὴν ἐπιστήμην. ταύτην καὶ παρ' Αἴγυπτίων ἀνελάμβανε μαθηματικὴν ἐν τοῖς μάλιστα ἐπιτηδευόντων· καὶ τὰ παρ' ἀμφοτέροις ἀκριβῶς ἐν οἷς τε συμφωνοῦσι καὶ διαφέρονται καταμαθῶν, ἀφιλονείκως τὰς ἔριδας ὑπερβάς, τὴν ἀλήθειαν ἐζήτει, μηδὲν ψεῦδος τῆς διανοίας αὐτοῦ παραδέχεσθαι δυναμένης, ὡς ἔθος τοῖς αἰρεσιο-μάχοις, οἱ τοῖς προτεθείσι δόγμασιν ὅποια ἂν τύχη βοηθοῦσιν οὐκ ἐξετάζοντες, εἰ δόκιμα, τὸ δ' αὐτὸ δρῶντες τοῖς ἐπὶ μισθῷ συναγορεύουσι καὶ μηδὲν 25 τοῦ δικαίου πεφροντικῶσιν. VI. ἤδη δὲ τοὺς ὄρους τῆς παιδικῆς ἡλικίας ὑπερβαίνων ἐπἔτεινε τὴν φρόνησιν, οὐχ ὡς ἔνιοι τὰς μεираκιώδεις ἐπιθυμίας ἀχαλινώτους ἔων καίτοι μυρία ἔχούσας ὑπεκκαύματα διὰ παρασκευὰς ἀφθόνους, ἃς αἱ βασιλεῖαι χορηγοῦσιν, ἀλλὰ σωφροσύνη καὶ καρ-τερία ὥσπερ τισὶν ἡνίαις ἐνδησάμενος αὐτὰς τὴν εἰς 26 τὸ πρόσω φอรὰν ἀνεχαίτιζε βία. καὶ τῶν ἄλλων μέντοι παθῶν ἕκαστον ἐξ ἑαυτοῦ μεμνηὸς καὶ λελυττηκὸς φύσει τιθασεῦων κἀξημερῶν ἐπράνυν· εἰ δέ που διακινήθει μόνον ἡσυχῇ καὶ πτερυζαίτο, κολάσεις ἐμβριθεστέρας παρείχετο ἢ διὰ λόγων |

* This would normally be grammar or literature, rhetoric, logic and perhaps astronomy as distinguished from astrology.
 See De Cong. 11 and note; also De Som. i. 205 and note, with other references. Clement, Strom. i. 23, adds ιατρική.

structed him in the philosophy conveyed in symbols, as displayed in the so-called holy inscriptions and in the regard paid to animals, to which they even pay divine honours. He had Greeks to teach him the rest of the regular school course,<sup>a</sup> and the inhabitants of the neighbouring countries for Assyrian letters<sup>b</sup> and the Chaldean science of the heavenly bodies. This he also acquired from Egyptians,<sup>c</sup> who 24 give special attention to astrology. And, when he had mastered the lore of both nations, both where they agree and where they differ, he eschewed all strife and contention and sought only for truth. His mind was incapable of accepting any falsehood, as is the way with the sectarians, who defend the doctrines they have propounded, whatever they may be, without examining whether they can stand scrutiny, and thus put themselves on a par with hired advocates who have no thought nor care for justice.

VI. When he was now passing beyond the term of 25 boyhood, his good sense became more active. He did not, as some, allow the lusts of adolescence to go unbridled, though the abundant resources which palaces provide supply numberless incentives to foster their flame. But he kept a tight hold on them with the reins, as it were, of temperance and self-control, and forcibly pulled them back from their forward course. And each of the other passions, 26 which rage so furiously if left to themselves, he tamed and assuaged and reduced to mildness ; and if they did but gently stir or flutter he provided for them heavier chastisement than any rebuke of words

<sup>b</sup> See App. p. 603.

<sup>c</sup> This seems to suggest that in Philo's time astrology, as taught on Chaldaean (i.e. the generally accepted) principles, differed somewhat from the form current in Egypt.

PHILO

- [85] ἐπιπλήξεις· καὶ συνόλως τὰς πρώτας τῆς ψυχῆς ἐπιβολὰς τε καὶ ὄρμας ὡς ἀφηνιαστὴν ἵππον ἐπετήρει δεδιώς, μὴ προεκδραμοῦσαι τοῦ ἡνιοχεῖν ὀφείλοντος λογισμοῦ πάντα διὰ πάντων συγχέωσιν· αὐταὶ γὰρ εἰσιν αἱ ἀγαθῶν αἰτίαι καὶ κακῶν, ἀγαθῶν μὲν, ὅταν ἡγεμόνι λόγῳ πειθαρχῶσι, τῶν δ' 27 ἐναντίων, ὅταν εἰς ἀναρχίαν ἐκδιαιτῶνται. κατὰ τὸ εἰκὸς οὖν οἱ τε συνδιατρίβοντες καὶ οἱ ἄλλοι πάντες ἐτεθήπεσαν, ὡς ἐπὶ καινῷ θεάματι καταπληττόμενοι καὶ τίς ἄρα ὁ ἐνοικῶν αὐτοῦ τῷ σώματι καὶ ἀγαλματοφορούμενος νοῦς ἐστι, πότερον ἀνθρώπειος ἢ θεῖος ἢ μικτὸς ἐξ ἀμφοῖν, διερευνόμενοι, τῷ μηδὲν ἔχειν τοῖς πολλοῖς ὅμοιον, ἀλλ' ὑπερκύπτειν καὶ πρὸς τὸ μεγαλειότερον ἐξῆρθαι.
- 28 γαστρί τε γὰρ ἔξω τῶν ἀναγκαίων δασμῶν, οὓς ἡ φύσις ἔταξεν, οὐδὲν πλέον ἐχορήγει, τῶν τε ὑπογαστρίων ἡδονῶν εἰ μὴ μέχρι σποράς παιδῶν 29 γνησίων οὐδὲ ἐμέμνητο. γενόμενός τε διαφερόντως ἀσκητῆς ὀλιγοδεείας καὶ τὸν ἀβροδίαιτον βίον ὡς οὐδεὶς ἕτερος χλευάσας—ψυχῇ γὰρ ἐπόθει μόνη ζῆν, οὐ σώματι—τὰ φιλοσοφίας δόγματα διὰ τῶν καθ' ἐκάστην ἡμέραν ἔργων ἐπεδείκνυτο, λέγων μὲν οἷα ἐφρόνει, πράττων δὲ ἀκόλουθα τοῖς λεγομένοις εἰς ἀρμονίαν λόγου καὶ βίου, ἢν' οἶος ὁ λόγος τοιοῦτος ὁ βίος καὶ οἶος ὁ βίος τοιοῦτος ὁ λόγος ἐξετάζωνται καθάπερ ἐν ὀργάνῳ μουσικῷ συνηχοῦντες. 30 οἱ μὲν οὖν πολλοί, κὰν αὐτὸ μόνον αὔρα βραχεῖά τινος εὐτυχίας προσπέση, φυσῶσι καὶ πνέουσι μεγάλα καὶ καταλαζονεῦόμενοι τῶν ἀφαντέρων καθάρματα καὶ παρενοχλήματα καὶ γῆς ἄχθη καὶ ὅσα τοιαῦτα ἀποκαλοῦσιν, ὥσπερ τὸ ἀκλινές

MOSES I. 26-30

could give ; and in general he watched the first directions and impulses of the soul as one would a restive horse, in fear lest they should run away with the reason which ought to rein them in, and thus cause universal chaos. For it is these impulses which cause both good and bad—good when they obey the guidance of reason, bad when they turn from their regular course into anarchy. Naturally, therefore, his associates and everyone else, struck with amazement at what they felt was a novel spectacle, considered earnestly what the mind which dwelt in his body like an image in its shrine could be, whether it was human or divine or a mixture of both, so utterly unlike was it to the majority, soaring above them and exalted to a grander height. For on his belly he bestowed no more than the necessary tributes which nature has appointed, and as for the pleasures that have their seat below, save for the lawful begetting of children, they passed altogether even out of his memory. And, in his desire to live to the soul alone and not to the body, he made a special practice of frugal contentment, and had an unparalleled scorn for a life of luxury. He exemplified his philosophical creed by his daily actions. His words expressed his feelings, and his actions accorded with his words, so that speech and life were in harmony, and thus through their mutual agreement were found to make melody together as on a musical instrument.

Now, most men, if they feel a breath of prosperity ever so small upon them, make much ado of puffing and blowing, and boast themselves as bigger than meaner men, and miscall them offscourings and nuisances and cumberers of the earth and other suchlike names, as if

PHILO

- τῆς εὐπραγίας ἐν βεβαίῳ παρ' ἑαυτοῖς εὖ μάλα σφραγισάμενοι μηδὲ μέχρι τῆς ὑστεραίας ἴσως δια-
- 31 μενοῦντες ἐν ὁμοίῳ. τύχης γὰρ ἀσταθμητότερον οὐδὲν ἄνω καὶ κάτω τὰ ἀνθρώπεια πεττεουσύης, ἣ μῖα πολλάκις ἡμέρα τὸν μὲν ὑψηλὸν καθαιρεῖ, τὸν δὲ ταπεινὸν μετέωρον ἐξαίρει· καὶ ταῦτα ὁρῶντες ἀεὶ γινόμενα καὶ σαφῶς εἰδότες ὅμως ὑπερόπται μὲν οἰκείων καὶ φίλων εἰσὶ, νόμους δὲ παραβαίνουσι, καθ' οὓς ἐγενήθησαν καὶ ἐτράφησαν, ἔθνη δὲ πάτρια, οἷς μέμψις οὐδεμία πρόσεστι δικαία, κινουσιν ἐκδεδιητημένοι καὶ διὰ τὴν τῶν παρόντων ἀποδοχὴν οὐδενὸς ἔτι τῶν ἀρχαίων μνήμην λαμβάνουσιν.
- 32 VII. ὁ δὲ ἐπ' αὐτὸν φθάσας τὸν ὄρον τῆς ἀνθρωπίνης εὐτυχίας καὶ θυγατριδοῦς μὲν τοῦ τοσοῦτου βασιλέως νομισθεῖς, τῆς δὲ παππώας ἀρχῆς ὅσον [86] οὐδέπω γεγωνῶς ἐλπῖσι | ταῖς ἀπάντων διάδοχος καὶ τί γὰρ ἄλλ' ἢ ὁ νέος βασιλεὺς προσαγορευόμενος, τὴν συγγενικὴν καὶ προγονικὴν ἐζήλωσε παιδείαν, τὰ μὲν τῶν εἰσποιησαμένων ἀγαθὰ, καὶ εἰ λαμπρότερα καιροῖς, νόθα εἶναι ὑπολαβὼν, τὰ δὲ τῶν φύσει γονέων, εἰ καὶ πρὸς ὀλίγον ἀφανέστερα,
- 33 οἰκεία γούν καὶ γνήσια· καθάπερ τε κριτῆς ἀδέκαστος τῶν γεννησάντων καὶ τῶν εἰσποιησαμένων τοὺς μὲν εὐνοία καὶ τῶ φιλεῖν ἐκθύμωσ τοὺς δ' εὐχαριστίαις ἀνθ' ὧν εὖ ἔπαθεν ἡμεῖβετο καὶ μέχρι παντὸς ἡμεῖψατ' ἄν, εἰ μὴ κατεῖδεν ἐν τῇ χώρᾳ μέγα καινουργηθὲν ὑπὸ τοῦ βασιλέως ἀσέβημα.

---

<sup>a</sup> A paraphrase of the fragment of Euripides quoted De Som. i. 154:

ἡ μία γὰρ ἡμέρα
τὸν μὲν καθεῖλεν ὑψόθεν, τὸν δ' ἤρ' ἄνω.

MOSES I. 30-33

they themselves had the permanence of their prosperity securely sealed in their possession, though even the morrow may find them no longer where they are. For nothing is more unstable than Fortune, 31 who moves human affairs up and down on the draughtboard of life, and in a single day pulls down the lofty and exalts the lowly on high;<sup>a</sup> and though they see and know full well that this is always happening, they nevertheless look down on their relations and friends and set at naught the laws under which they were born and bred, and subvert the ancestral customs to which no blame can justly attach, by adopting different modes of life, and, in their contentment with the present, lose all memory of the past.

VII. But Moses, having 32 reached the very pinnacle of human prosperity, regarded as the son of the king's daughter, and in general expectation almost the successor to his grandfather's sovereignty, and indeed regularly called the young king, was zealous for the discipline and culture of his kinsmen and ancestors. The good fortune of his adopters, he held, was a spurious one, even though the circumstances gave it greater lustre; that of his natural parents, though less distinguished for the nonce, was at any rate his own and genuine; and so, 33 estimating the claims of his real and his adopted parents like an impartial judge, he requited the former with good feeling and profound affection, the latter with gratitude for their kind treatment of him. And he would have continued to do so throughout had he not found the king adopting in the country a new and highly impious course of action.

PHILO

- 34 ξένοι γὰρ ἦσαν, ὡς ἔφην πρότερον, οἱ Ἰουδαῖοι, τῶν τοῦ ἔθνους ἀρχηγῶν διὰ λιμὸν ἀπορία τροφῆς ἐκ Βαβυλῶνος καὶ τῶν ἄνω σατραπειῶν εἰς Αἴγυπτον μεταναστάντων, καὶ τρόπον τινὰ ἰκέται καταπεφευγότες ὡς ἐπ' ἄσυλον ἱερόν τήν τε βασιλέως πίστιν καὶ τὸν ἀπὸ τῶν οἰκητόρων
- 35 ἔλεον. οἱ γὰρ ξένοι παρ' ἐμοὶ κριτῇ τῶν ὑποδεξαμένων ἰκέται γραφέσθωσαν, μέτοικοι δὲ πρὸς ἰκέταις καὶ φίλοι, σπεύδοντες εἰς ἀστῶν ἰσοτιμίαν καὶ γειννῶντες ἤδη πολίταις, ὀλίγω τῶν αὐτοχθόνων
- 36 διαφέροντες. τούτους οὖν, οἱ τὴν μὲν οἰκείαν ἀπέλιπον, εἰς δ' Αἴγυπτον ἦκον ὡς ἐν δευτέρᾳ πατρίδι μετ' ἀσφαλείας οἰκήσοντες, ὃ τῆς χώρας ἡγεμῶν ἠνδραποδίζετο καὶ ὡς πολέμου νόμῳ λαβῶν αἰχμαλώτους ἢ πριάμενος παρὰ δεσποτῶν, οἷς ἦσαν οἰκότριβες, ὑπήγετο καὶ δούλους ἀπέφαινε τοὺς οὐκ ἐλευθέρους μόνον ἀλλὰ καὶ ξένους καὶ ἰκέτας καὶ μετοίκους οὔτε αἰδεσθεῖς οὔτε δείσας τὸν ἐλευθέριον καὶ ξένιον καὶ ἰκέσιον καὶ ἐφέστιον θεόν, ὃς
- 37 τῶν τοιούτων ἐστὶν ἔφορος. εἴτ' ἐπιτάγματα ἐπέταττε βαρύτερα τῆς δυνάμεως ἄλλους ἐπ' ἄλλοις πόνους προστιθείς, καὶ τοῖς ἀπαγορεύουσιν ὑπ' ἀσθενείας ὃ σίδηρος εἶπετο· ἐπιστάτας (γὰρ) τῶν ἔργων ἀνηλεεστάτους καὶ ὠμοθύμους οὐδενὶ συγγνώμης μεταδιδόντας ἠρέϊτο, οὓς "ἐργοδιώκτας"
- 38 ἀπὸ τοῦ συμβεβηκότος ὠνόμαζον. εἰργάζοντο δ' οἱ μὲν πηλὸν εἰς πλίνθον σχηματίζοντες, οἱ δὲ πανταχόθεν ἄχυρα συγκομίζοντες—πλίνθου γὰρ

<sup>a</sup> §§ 19-33 cannot be said to have any basis at all in the biblical narrative, though they give a reasonable sketch of what Moses might be expected to have felt and done in such

MOSES I. 34-38

<sup>a</sup> The Jews, as I have said before, were 34 strangers, since famine had driven the founders of the nation, through lack of food, to migrate to Egypt from Babylon and the inland satrapies. They were, in a sense, suppliants, who had found a sanctuary in the pledged faith of the king and the pity felt for them by the inhabitants. For strangers, in my 35 judgement, must be regarded as suppliants of those who receive them, and not only suppliants but settlers and friends who are anxious to obtain equal rights with the burgesses and are near to being citizens because they differ little from the original inhabitants. So, then, these strangers, who had left 36 their own country and come to Egypt hoping to live there in safety as in a second fatherland, were made slaves by the ruler of the country and reduced to the condition of captives taken by the custom of war, or persons purchased from the masters in whose household they had been bred. And in thus making serfs of men who were not only free but guests, suppliants and settlers, he showed no shame or fear of the God of liberty and hospitality and of justice to guests and suppliants, Who watches over such as these. Then he laid commands upon them, severe 37 beyond their capacity, and added labour to labour ; and, when they failed through weakness, the iron hand was upon them ; for he chose as superintendents of the works men of the most cruel and savage temper who showed no mercy to anyone, men whose name of "task-pursuer" well described the facts.
Some of the workers wrought clay into brick, while 38 others fetched from every quarter straw which served a situation. From §§ 34-59 we have an amplification of Ex.

ii. 14 end.

PHILO

- ἄχυρα δεσμός—, οἱ δ' ἦσαν ἀποτεταγμένοι πρὸς οἰκιῶν καὶ τειχῶν καὶ πόλεων κατασκευὰς καὶ διωρύχων ἀνατομάς, ὑλοφοροῦντες αὐτοὶ μεθ' ἡμέραν καὶ νύκτωρ ἄνευ διαδοχῆς, οὐδεμίαν ἔχοντες ἀνάπαυλαν, ἀλλ' οὐδ' ὅσον καταδαρθεῖν αὐτὸ μόνον [87] ἔώμενοι, | πάντα καὶ τὰ τῶν δημιουργῶν καὶ τὰ τῶν ὑπουργῶν δρᾶν ἀναγκαζόμενοι, ὡς ἐν βραχεῖ τὰ σώματα αὐτοῖς ἀπαγορεύειν, ἅτε καὶ τῆς ψυχῆς
- 39 προαναπιπτούσης. ἄλλοι γοῦν ἐπ' ἄλλοις ἐξέθνησκον ὡς ὑπὸ λοιμῶδους φθορᾶς, οὓς ἀτάφους ἔξω τῶν ὀρίων ἀπερρίπτουν οὐδὲ κόνιν ἐπαμήσασθαι τοῖς σώμασιν ἐῶντες ἀλλ' οὐδὲ δακρῦσαι συγγενεῖς ἢ φίλους οὕτως οἰκτρῶς διαφθαρέντας· ἀλλὰ καὶ τοῖς ἀδουλώτοις πάθει τῆς ψυχῆς, ἃ μόνον σχεδὸν ἐξ ἀπάντων ἐλεύθερα ἢ φύσις ἀνῆκε, δεσποτείαν ἐπηπειλοῦν οἱ ἀσεβεῖς ἀνάγκης ἀνυπόιστω βάρει δυνατωτέρας πιέζοντες.
- 40 VIII. Ἐπὶ δὴ τούτοις ἀθυμῶν καὶ δυσχεραίνων διετέλει μήτ' ἀμύνασθαι τοὺς ἀδικοῦντας μήτε βοηθεῖν τοῖς ἀδικουμένοις ἰκανὸς ὢν· ἃ δ' οἷός τε ἦν, διὰ λόγων ὠφέλει παραινῶν τοῖς μὲν ἐφεστῶσι μετριάξειν καὶ τὸ σφοδρὸν τῶν ἐπιταγμάτων ὑπανιέναι καὶ χαλᾶν, τοῖς δ' ἐργαζομένοις φέρειν τὰ παρόντα γενναίως ἄνδρας τε εἶναι τὰ φρονήματα καὶ μὴ συγκάμνειν τὰς ψυχὰς τοῖς σώμασιν, ἀλλὰ
- 41 χρηστὰ προσδοκᾶν ἐκ πονηρῶν· πάντα γὰρ μεταβάλλειν τὰ ἐν κόσμῳ πρὸς τὰναντία, νέφωσιν εἰς αἰθρίαν, πνευμάτων βίας εἰς ἀέρα νήνεμον, κλύδωνα θαλάττης εἰς ἡσυχίαν καὶ γαλήνην, τὰ δ' 296

MOSES I. 38-41

to bind the brick. Others were appointed to build houses and walls and cities or to cut canals. They carried the materials themselves day and night, with no shifts to relieve them, no period of rest, not even suffered just to sleep for a bit and then resume their work. In fact, they were compelled to do all the work, both of the artisan and his assistants, so that in a short time loss of heart was followed necessarily by bodily exhaustion. This was shown by the way <sup>39</sup> in which they died one after the other, as though they were the victims of a pestilence, to be flung unburied outside the borders by their masters, who did not allow the survivors even to collect dust to throw upon the corpses or even to shed tears for their kinsfolk or friends thus pitifully done to death. And, though nature has given to the untrammelled feelings of the soul a liberty which she has denied to almost everything else, they impiously threatened to exert their despotism over these also and suppressed them with the intolerable weight of a constraint more powerful than nature.

VIII. All this continued to depress and anger <sup>40</sup> Moses, who had no power either to punish those who did the wrong or help those who suffered it. What he could he did. He assisted with his words, exhorting the overseers to show clemency and relax and alleviate the stringency of their orders, and the workers to bear their present condition bravely, to display a manly spirit and not let their souls share the weariness of their bodies, but look for good to take the place of evil. All things in the world, he told <sup>41</sup> them, change to their opposites : clouds to open sky, violent winds to tranquil weather, stormy seas to calm and peaceful, and human affairs still more so,

PHILO

- ἀνθρώπεια καὶ μᾶλλον, ὅσω καὶ ἀσταθμητότερα.
 42 τοιούτοις κατεπάδων ὡσπερ ἀγαθὸς ἰατρὸς ᾤετο τὰς νόσους καίτοι βαρυτάτας οὐσας ἐπικουφιεῖν· αἱ δ' ὅποτε λωφήσειαν, αὐθις ἐκ περιτροπῆς ἐπετί-θεντο φέρουσαί τι πάντως ἐκ τοῦ διαπνεῦσαι καινὸν 43 κακὸν ἀργαλεώτερον τῶν προτέρων. ἦσαν γάρ τινες τῶν ἐφεστηκότων ἀτίθασοι σφόδρα καὶ λελυτ-τηκότες, μηδὲν εἰς ἀγριότητα τῶν ἰοβόλων καὶ σαρκοβόρων διαφέροντες, ἀνθρωποειδῆ θηρία, τὴν τοῦ σώματος μορφήν εἰς δόκησιν ἡμερότητος ἐπὶ θήρα καὶ ἀπάτη προβεβλημένοι, σιδήρου καὶ ἀδά-44 μαντος ἀπειθέστεροι. τούτων ἓνα τὸν βιαιότατον, ἐπειδὴ πρὸς τῷ μηδὲν ἐνδιδόναι καὶ ταῖς παρακλήσεσιν ἔτι μᾶλλον ἐξετραχύνετο, τοὺς τὸ προσταχθέν μὴ ἀπνευστί καὶ ὀξυχειρία δρῶντας τύπτων, προπηλακίζων ἄχρι θανάτου, πάσας αἰκίζόμενος αἰκίας, ἀναιρεῖ δικαίως εὐαγὲς εἶναι τὸ ἔργον· καὶ ἦν εὐαγὲς τὸν ἐπ' ὀλέθρῳ ζῶντα ἀνθρώπων ἀπόλ-λυσθαι.
- 45 Ταῦτ' ἀκούσας ὁ βασιλεὺς ἠγανάκτει δεινὸν ἠγούμενος, οὐκ εἴ τις τέθνηκεν ἢ ἀνήρηκεν ἀδίκως ἢ δικαίως, ἀλλ' εἰ ὁ θυγατρίδους αὐτῷ μὴ συμφρονεῖ μηδὲ τοὺς αὐτοὺς ἐχθροὺς καὶ φίλους ὑπέιληφεν, ἀλλὰ μισεῖ μὲν οὓς αὐτὸς στέργει, φιλεῖ δὲ οὓς προβέβληται καὶ ἐλεεῖ πρὸς οὓς ἀτρέπτως καὶ 46 ἀπαραιτήτως ἔχει. IX. | λαβόμενοι δ' ἅπαξ [88] ἀφορμῆς οἱ ἐν τέλει καὶ τὸν νεανίαν ὑφορώμενοι—ἤδεσαν γὰρ μνησικακήσοντα τῶν ἀνοσιουργημάτων

MOSES I. 42-46

even as they are more unstable. With such soothing 42 words, like a good physician, he thought to relieve the sickness of their plight, terrible as it was. But, when it abated, it did but turn and make a fresh attack and gather from the breathing-space some new misery more powerful than its predecessors.
For some of the overseers were exceedingly harsh 43 and ferocious, in savageness differing nothing from venomous and carnivorous animals, wild beasts in human shape who assumed in outward form the semblance of civilized beings only to beguile and catch their prey, in reality more unyielding than iron or adamant. One of these, the cruellest of all, was 44 killed by Moses, because he not only made no concession but was rendered harsher than ever by his exhortations, beating those who did not execute his orders with breathless promptness, persecuting them to the point of death and subjecting them to every outrage. Moses considered that his action in killing him was a righteous action. And righteous it was that one who only lived to destroy men should himself be destroyed.

When the king heard this, he was very indignant. 45 What he felt so strongly was not that one man had been killed by another whether justly or unjustly, but that his own daughter's son did not think with him, and had not considered the king's friends and enemies to be his own friends and enemies, but hated those of whom he was fond, and loved those whom he rejected, and pitied those to whom he was relentless and inexorable. IX. When 46 those in authority who suspected the youth's intentions, knowing that he would remember their wicked actions against them and take vengeance

PHILO

αὐτοῖς καὶ ἐπὶ καιρῶν ἀμυνούμενον—ἀναπεπτα-μένοις ὡσὶ τοῦ πάππου μυρίας διαβολὰς ἐπήντλουν, οἱ μὲν ἔνθεν, οἱ δ' ἔνθεν, ὡς καὶ περὶ ἀφαιρέσεως τῆς ἀρχῆς ἐμποιῆσαι δέος, “ ἐπιθήσεται ” λέγοντες, “ οὐδὲν φρονεῖ μικρόν, ἀεὶ τι προσπεριεργάζεται, πρὸ καιροῦ βασιλείας ἐρᾷ, θωπεύει τινάς, ἑτέροις ἀπειλεῖ, κτείνει χωρὶς δίκης, τοὺς μάλιστ' εὖνους σοι προβέβληται. τί δὴ μέλλεις, ἀλλ' οὐχ ἂ δια-νοεῖται δρᾶν ὑποτέμνεις; μέγα τοῖς ἐπιθεμένοις αἰ-τῶν ἐπιβουλενομένων ἀναβολαί.”

47 Τοιαῦτα διεξιόντων, ὑπανεχώρησεν εἰς τὴν ὁμορον Ἀραβίαν, ἔνθα διατρίβειν ἦν ἀσφαλές, ἅμα καὶ τὸν θεὸν ποτνιῶμενος, ἵνα τοὺς μὲν ἐξ ἀμηχάνων ῥύσῃται συμφορῶν, τοὺς δὲ μηδὲν παραλιπόντας τῶν εἰς ἐπήρειαν ἀξίως τίσῃται, παράσχη δ' αὐτῷ ταῦτ' ἐπιδεῖν ἀμφότερα διπλασιάσας τὴν χάριν. ὁ δὲ ἐπακούει τῶν εὐχῶν ἀγάμενος αὐτοῦ τὸ φιλό-καλον ἦθος καὶ μισοπόνηρον, οὐκ εἰς μακρὰν τὰ

48 κατὰ τὴν χώραν, ὡς θεῶν πρόπον, δικάσας. ἐν ᾧ δὲ ἔμελλε δικάζειν, τοὺς ἀρετῆς ἄθλους Μωυσῆς διήθλει τὸν ἀλείπτῃν ἔχων ἐν ἑαυτῷ λογισμὸν ἀστεῖον, ὑφ' οὗ γυμναζόμενος πρὸς τοὺς ἀρίστους βίους, τὸν τε θεωρητικὸν καὶ πρακτικόν, ἐπονείτο φιλοσοφίας ἀνελίττων ἀεὶ δόγματα καὶ τῇ ψυχῇ διαγινώσκων εὐτρόχως καὶ μνήμη παρακατατι-θέμενος εἰς τὸ ἄληστον αὐτὰ καὶ τὰς οἰκείας αὐτίκα

MOSES I. 46-48

when the opportunity came, had thus once got a handle, they poured malicious suggestions by the thousand from every side into the open ears of his grandfather, so as to instil the fear that his sovereignty might be taken from him. "He will attack you," they said, "he is highly ambitious. He is always busy with some further project. He is eager to get the kingship before the time comes. He flatters some, threatens others, slays without trial and treats as outcasts those who are most loyal to you. Why do you hesitate, instead of cutting short his projected undertakings? The aggressor is greatly served by delay on the part of his proposed victim."

While such talk was in circulation, Moses retired 47 into the neighbouring country of Arabia, where it was safe for him to stay, at the same time beseeching God to save the oppressed from their helpless, miserable plight, and to punish as they deserved the oppressors who had left no form of maltreatment untried, and to double the gift by granting to himself that he should see both these accomplished. God, in high approval of his spirit, which loved the good and hated evil, listened to his prayers, and very shortly judged the land and its doings as became His nature. But, while the divine judgement was still waiting, 48 Moses was carrying out the exercises of virtue with an admirable trainer, the reason within him, under whose discipline he laboured to fit himself for life in its highest forms, the theoretical and the practical. He was ever opening the scroll of philosophical doctrines, digested them inwardly with quick understanding, committed them to memory never to be forgotten, and straightway brought his personal conduct,

- πράξεις ἐφαρμόττων ἐπαινετὰς πάσας, ἐφιέμενος οὐ τοῦ δοκεῖν ἀλλὰ τῆς ἀληθείας, διὰ τὸ προκεῖσθαι σκοπὸν ἓνα τὸν ὀρθὸν τῆς φύσεως λόγον, ὃς μόνος
- 49 ἔστιν ἀρετῶν ἀρχὴ τε καὶ πηγὴ. ἕτερος μὲν οὖν ὀργὴν ἀμείλικτον βασιλέως ἀποδιδράσκων καὶ ἄρτι πρῶτον εἰς ἀλλοδαπὴν ἀφυγμένος, μήπω τοῖς τῶν ἐπιχωρίων ἔθεσιν ἐνωμιληκῶς μηδὲ ἀκριβῶς ἐπιστάμενος οἷς χαίρουσιν ἢ ἀλλοτριοῦνται, κἂν ἐσπούδασεν ἡσυχία χρώμενος ἀφανέστερον ζῆν τοὺς πολλοὺς λανθάνων ἢ βουλευθεὶς εἰς μέσον παρέρχεσθαι τοὺς γούν δυνατοὺς καὶ τοὺς πλείστον ἰσχύοντας λιπαρέσι θεραπείαις ἐξευμενίζεσθαι, παρ' ὧν τις ὠφέλεια προσεδοκᾶτο καὶ βοήθεια, εἴ τις
- 50 ἐπελθόντες ἀπάγειν πρὸς βίαν ἐπειρῶντο. ὁ δὲ τὴν ἐναντίαν τοῦ εἰκότος ἀτραπὸν ἤλαυνε ταῖς τῆς ψυχῆς ὑγιαινούσαις ὁρμαῖς ἐπόμενος καὶ μηδεμίαν ἐὼν ὑποσκελίζεσθαι· διὸ καὶ τῆς ὑπόουσης δυνάμεως
- [89] ἔστιν ὅτε πλέον ἐνεανιεύετο | δύναμιν ἀκαθαίρετον τὸ δίκαιον ἠγούμενος, ὑφ' οὗ προτραπείς αὐτοκέλευστος ἐπὶ τὴν τῶν ἀσθενεστέρων συμμαχίαν ἵετο.
- 51 X. Λέξω δὲ καὶ τὸ κατ' ἐκείνον αὐτῷ τὸν χρόνον πραχθέν, εἰ καὶ μικρὸν ὅσα γε τῷ δοκεῖν, ἀλλ' οὐκ ἀπὸ φρονήματος μικροῦ. κτηνοτροφοῦσιν Ἄραβες καὶ νέμουσι τὰ θρέμματα οὐκ ἄνδρες μόνον ἀλλὰ καὶ γυναῖκες νέοι τε καὶ παρθένοι παρ' αὐτοῖς, οὐχὶ τῶν ἡμελημένων καὶ ἀδόξων μόνον ἀλλὰ καὶ τῶν
- 52 ἄγαν ἐπιφανῶν. ἐπτὰ δὴ κόραι πατρὸς ἱερέως ποίμνην ἄγουσαι παρήσαν ἐπὶ τινα πηγὴν καὶ τῶν ἱμονιῶν ἐκδησάμενοι τοὺς καδίσκους ἄλλη διαδεχομένη παρ' ἄλλης ὑπὲρ τῆς ἐν τῷ πονεῖν ἰσομοιρίας praiseworthy in all respects, into conformity with them ; for he desired truth rather than seeming, because the one mark he set before him was nature's right reason, the sole source and fountain of virtues.

Now, any other who was fleeing from 49 the king's relentless wrath, and had just arrived for the first time in a foreign land, who had not yet become familiar with the customs of the natives nor gained exact knowledge of what pleases or offends them, might well have been eager to keep quiet and live in obscurity unnoticed by the multitude ; or else he might have wished to come forward in public, and by obsequious persistence court the favour of men of highest authority and power, if none others, men who might be expected to give help and succour should some come and attempt to carry him off by force. But the path which he took was the opposite of what 50 we should expect. He followed the wholesome impulses of his soul, and suffered none of them to be brought to the ground. And, therefore, at times he showed a gallant temper beyond his fund of strength, for he regarded justice as strength invincible, which urged him on his self-appointed task to champion the weaker.

X. I will describe an action of his at this time, 51 which, though it may seem a petty matter, argues a spirit of no petty kind. The Arabs are breeders of cattle, and they employ for tending them not only men but women, youths and maidens alike, and not only those of insignificant and humble families but those of the highest position. Seven maidens, 52 daughters of the priest, had come to a well, and, after attaching the buckets to the ropes, drew water, taking turns with each to share the labour equally. They μάλα προθύμως τὰς δεξαμενάς, αἱ πλησίον ἔκειντο, 53 πληροῦσιν. ἐπιφοιτήσαντες δ' ἕτεροι ποιμένες καὶ τῆς τῶν παρθένων ἀσθενείας ὑπεριδόντες τὰς μὲν ἐπεχείρουν μετὰ τῆς ποιμένης ἐλαύνειν, τὰ δ' οἰκεία θρέμματα. προσῆγον ἐπὶ τὸ εὐτρεπισθὲν ποτόν 54 ἀλλότριον καρπωσόμενοι πόνον. ἰδὼν δὲ Μωυσῆς τὸ γεγόμενον—οὐ γὰρ ἦν πόρρω—συντείνας ἔθει καὶ πλησίον στὰς “ οὐ παύσεσθε ” εἶπεν “ ἀδικοῦντες, τὴν ἐρημίαν νομίζοντες εἶναι πλεονεξίαν; βραχίονας καὶ πήχεις ἀργοὺς τρέφοντες οὐκ ἐρυθριάτε; χαῖται βαθεῖαι καὶ σάρκες ὑμεῖς ἐστε, οὐκ ἄνδρες· αἱ μὲν κόραι νεανιεύονται μηδὲν ὀκνοῦσαι τῶν 55 πρακτέων, οἱ δὲ νεανῖαι κορικῶς ἤδη τρυφᾶτε. οὐ βαδιεῖσθε; οὐχ ὑπεκστήσεσθε ταῖς πρότερον ἠκούσαις, ὧν καὶ τὸ ποτόν ἐστι; δικαίως ἂν αὐταῖς ἐπαντλήσαντες, ἢν' ἀφθονώτερον ὕδωρ εἶη, καὶ τὸ εὐτρεπισθὲν ἀφελέσθαι σπεύδετε; ἀλλὰ μὰ τὸν οὐράνιον τῆς δίκης ὀφθαλμὸν οὐκ ἀφελείσθε βλέ-56 ποντα καὶ τὰ ἐν τοῖς ἐρημοτάτοις. ἐμὲ γοῦν ἐχειροτόνησε βοηθὸν οὐ προσδοκηθέντα· καὶ γὰρ εἰμι σύμμαχος ταῖς ἀδικουμέναις μετὰ μεγάλης χειρός, ἣν οὐ θέμις πλεονέκταις ὄραν· αἰσθήσεσθε δὲ αὐτῆς ἐκ τοῦ ἀφανοῦς τιτρωσκούσης, εἰ μὴ 57 μεταβάλοιτε.” ταῦτα διεξιόντος, φοβηθέντες, ἐπεὶ καὶ λέγων ἅμα ἐνεθουσία μεταμορφούμενος εἰς προφήτην, μὴ χρησμούς καὶ λόγια θεσπίζει, κατα-πειθεῖς τε γίνονται καὶ τὴν ποιμήνην τῶν παρθένων ἐπὶ τὰς δεξαμενάς ἄγονται πρότερον μεταστησά-58 μνοι τὰς ἑαυτῶν.

PHILO

XI. αἱ δ' ἐπαγήσαν had with great industry filled the troughs which lay near, when some other shepherds appeared on the spot who, disdain- 53 ing the weakness of the girls, tried to drive them and their flock away, and proceeded to bring their own animals to the place where the water lay ready, and thus appropriate the labours of others. But Moses, who was not far off, seeing what had hap- 54 pened, quickly ran up and, standing near by, said : " Stop this injustice. You think you can take advantage of the loneliness of the place. Are you not ashamed to let your arms and elbows live an idle life ? You are masses of long hair and lumps of flesh, not men. The girls are working like youths, and shirk none of their duties, while you young men go daintily like girls. Away with you : give place to those who 55 were here before you, to whom the water belongs. Properly, you should have drawn for them, to make the supply more abundant ; instead, you are all agog to take from them what they have provided. Nay, by the heavenly eye of justice, you shall not take it ; for that eye sees even what is done in the greatest solitude. In me at least it has appointed a champion 56 whom you did not expect, for I fight to succour these injured maidens, allied to a mighty arm which the rapacious may not see, but you shall feel its invisible power to wound if you do not change your ways." As 57 he proceeded thus, they were seized with fear that they were listening to some oracular utterance, for as he spoke he grew inspired and was transfigured into a prophet. They became submissive, and led the maidens' flock to the troughs, after removing their own.

XI. The girls went home in high 58 glee, and told the story of the unexpected event to their father, who thence conceived a strong desire to

PHILO

σθαι τοῦ ξένου τῷ πατρί. κατεμέμφετο γοῦν αὐτὰς ἐπ' ἀχαριστία τοιαῦτα λέγων· “τί παθοῦσαι μεθίετε, δέον ἄγειν εὐθύς καὶ εἴπερ ἀνεδύετο λιπαρεῖν; ἢ τινα μισανθρωπίαν μου κατέγνωτε; ἢ δεύτερον [90] περιπεσεῖν ἀδίκους οὐ | προσδοκάτε; βοηθῶν ἀπορεῖν ἀνάγκη τοὺς ἐπιλήσιμονας χαρίτων. ἀλλ' ὅμως ἀναδραμοῦσαι (τὸ γὰρ ἀμάρτημα μέχρι νῦν ἔστιν ἰάσιμον) ἴτε μετὰ σπουδῆς καὶ καλεῖτε ξενίων μὲν πρότερον αὐθις δὲ καὶ ἀμοιβῆς (ὀφείλεται γὰρ αὐτῷ 59 χάρις) μεθέξοντα.” συντεῖνασαι δὲ καταλαμβάνουσι αὐτὸν οὐ πόρρω τῆς πηγῆς καὶ δηλώσασαι τὰ ἀπὸ τοῦ πατρὸς οἴκαδε συμπεῖθουσι ἤκειν. ὁ δὲ πατήρ τὴν μὲν ὄψιν εὐθύς τὸ δὲ βούλημα ὀλίγον ὕστερον καταπλαγείς—ἀρίδηλοι γὰρ αἱ μεγάλαί φύσεις καὶ οὐ μήκει χρόνου γνωριζόμεναι—δίδωσι τὴν καλλιστεύουσαν αὐτῷ τῶν θυγατέρων γυναῖκα, δι' ἐνὸς ἔργου πάνθ' ὅσα τῶν εἰς καλοκάγαθίαν μαρτυρήσας καὶ ὡς ἀξίεραστον μόνον τὸ καλὸν ἔστι τῆς ἀφ' ἐτέρου συστάσεως οὐ δεόμενον, ἀλλ' ἐν ἑαυτῷ περιφέρον τὰ γνωρίσματα.

60 μετὰ δὲ τὸν γάμον παραλαβὼν τὰς ἀγέλας ἐποίμαυε προδιδασκόμενος εἰς ἡγεμονίαν· ποιμενικὴ γὰρ μελέτη καὶ προγυμνασία βασιλείας τῷ μέλλοντι τῆς ἡμερωτάτης τῶν ἀνθρώπων ἐπιστατεῖν ἀγέλης, καθάπερ καὶ τοῖς πολεμικοῖς τὰς φύσεις τὰ κνηγέσια—θήραις γὰρ ἐμπρομελετῶσιν οἱ πρὸς τὰς στραταρχίας ἀλειφόμενοι—<sup>1</sup> τῶν ἀλόγων οἷά τινος ὕλης ὑποβεβλημένων πρὸς ἄσκησιν τῆς καθ' ἑκά-

<sup>1</sup> Cohn's punctuation (colon after κνηγέσια, comma after ἀλειφόμενοι) is faulty here. τῶν ἀλόγων κτλ. is common to both shepherding and hunting.

<sup>a</sup> Cf. De Ios. 2 f.

MOSES I. 58-60

see the stranger, which he showed by censuring them for their ingratitude. "What possessed you," he said, "to let him depart? You should have brought him straight along, and pressed him if he showed reluctance. Did you ever have to charge me with unsociable ways? Do you not expect that you may again fall in with those who would wrong you? Those who forget kindness are sure to lack defenders. Still, your error is not yet past cure. Run back with all speed, and invite him to receive from me first the entertainment due to him as a stranger, secondly some requital of the favour which we owe to him." They hurried back and found him not far from the 59 well, and, after explaining their father's message, persuaded him to come home with them. Their father was at once struck with admiration of his face, and soon afterwards of his disposition, for great natures are transparent and need no length of time to be recognized. Accordingly, he gave him the fairest of his daughters in marriage, and, by that one action, attested all his noble qualities, and showed that excellence standing alone deserves our love, and needs no commendation from aught else, but carries within itself the tokens by which it is known.

After the marriage, Moses took charge of the 60 sheep and tended them, thus receiving his first lesson in command of others; for the shepherd's business is a training-ground and a preliminary exercise in kingship for one who is destined to command the herd of mankind, the most civilized of herds, just as also hunting is for warlike natures, since those who are trained to generalship practise themselves first in the chase.<sup>a</sup> And thus unreasoning animals are made to subserve as material wherewith to gain practice in

PHILO

- τερον καιρὸν ἀρχῆς, τὸν τε πολέμου καὶ τὸν εἰρήνης.
- 61 ἡ μὲν γὰρ τῶν ἀγρίων θήρα στρατηγικὸν κατ' ἐχθρῶν ἐστὶ γύμνασμα, ἡ δὲ τῶν ἡμέρων ἐπιμέλεια καὶ προστασία βασιλικὸν πρὸς ὑπηκόους ἀγώνισμα· διὸ καὶ “ ποιμένες λαῶν ” οἱ βασιλεῖς, οὐχ ὡς ὄνειδος ἀλλ' ὡς ὑπερβάλλουσα τιμῆ, προσαγορεύ-
- 62 ονται. καὶ μοι δοκεῖ μὴ πρὸς δόξας τῶν πολλῶν ἀλλὰ πρὸς ἀλήθειαν ἐρευνωμένῳ τὸ πρᾶγμα— γελᾶτω δ' ὁ βουλόμενος—μόνος ἂν γενέσθαι βασιλεὺς τέλειος ὁ τὴν ποιμενικὴν ἐπιστήμην ἀγαθός, ἐν ἐλάττοσι ζώοις παιδευθεὶς τὰ τῶν κρειττόνων· ἀμήχανον γὰρ τὰ μεγάλα πρὸ τῶν μικρῶν τελεσθῆναι.
- 63 XII. Γενόμενος οὖν τῶν καθ' αὐτὸν ἀγελαρχῶν ἄριστος καὶ ποριστῆς <τῶν> ὅσα πρὸς τὴν τῶν θρεμμάτων συνέτεινεν ὠφέλειαν ἰκανὸς ἐκ τοῦ μηδὲν ἀποκνεῖν ἀλλ' ἐτελουργῶ καὶ αὐτοκελεύστω προθυμία<sup>1</sup> εἰς δέον τῇ προστασίᾳ χρῆσθαι μετὰ |
- [91] καθαρᾶς<sup>2</sup> καὶ ἀδόλου πίστεως ἠϋξήσε τὰς ἀγέλας·
- 64 ὡς ὑπὸ τῶν ἄλλων νομέων ἤδη καὶ φθονεῖσθαι μηδὲν ὁμοιότροπον ἐν ταῖς ἰδίαις ποιίμαις ὀρώντων, αἷς εὐτυχές εἶναι ἐδόκει ἢ ἐν ὁμοίῳ μονή, ταῖς δὲ τὸ μὴ βελτιοῦσθαι καθ' ἐκάστην ἡμέραν ἐλάττωσις διὰ τὸ μεγάλας εἰωθέναι λαμβάνειν ἐπιδόσεις ἐκ μὲν

<sup>1</sup> MSS. προστασία.

<sup>2</sup> MSS. χαρᾶς.

---

<sup>a</sup> Possibly, as the German translation takes it, τελεσθῆναι may mean simply “accomplished,” “consummated.” But De Sac. 62 οἱ πρὸ τῶν μεγάλων τούτων τὰ μικρὰ μυστήρια μυηθέντες, cf. De Cher. 49, and other allusions to the “great” mysteries seem to make it much more probable that the more picturesque meaning is intended. So Mangey, who on the strength of these two passages, and the adaptation

308

MOSES I. 60-64

government in the emergencies of both peace and war; for the chase of wild animals is a drilling-ground for the general in fighting the enemy, and the care and supervision of tame animals is a schooling for the king in dealing with his subjects, and therefore kings are called "shepherds of their people," not as a term of reproach but as the highest honour. And my opinion, based not on the opinions of the multitude but on my own inquiry into the truth of the matter, is that the only perfect king (let him laugh who will) is one who is skilled in the knowledge of shepherding, one who has been trained by management of the inferior creatures to manage the superior. For initiation in the lesser mysteries must precede initiation in the greater.<sup>a</sup>

XII. <sup>b</sup> To return to Moses, he became more skilled than any of his time in managing flocks and providing what tended to the benefit of his charges. His capacity was due to his never shirking any duty, but showing an eager and unprompted zeal wherever it was needed, and maintaining a pure and guileless honesty in the conduct of his office. Consequently the flocks increased under him, and this roused the envy of the other graziers, who did not see anything of the sort happening in their own flocks. In their case it was felt to be a piece of luck if they remained as they had been, but with the flocks of Moses any failure to make daily improvement was a set-back, so great was the progress regularly made, both in fine quality, through increased fatness and firm-given of them by Clement, would correct τελείσθαι to μειίσθαι. But this sense of τελείσθαι is quite common in Philo, cf. De Abr. 122.

<sup>b</sup> For §§ 63-84 see Ex. iii. 1-iv. 17.

PHILO

- εὐσαρκίας καὶ πιότητος εἰς κάλλος, εἰς δὲ πλήθος ἐξ εὐτοκίας καὶ τῶν περὶ δίαιταν ὑγιεινῶν.
- 65 ἄγων δὲ<sup>1</sup> τὴν ποιίμνην εἰς τόπον εὐνδρόν τε καὶ εὐχορτον, ἔνθα συνέβαινε καὶ πολλὴν πόαν προβατεύσιμον ἀναδίδοσθαι, γενόμενος πρὸς τινι νάπει θέαμα ἐκπληκτικώτατον ὄρα. βάτος ἦν, ἀκανθῶδές τι φυτὸν καὶ ἀσθενέστατον· οὗτος, οὐδενὸς πῦρ προσενεγκόντος, ἐξαίφνης ἀνακαίεται καὶ περι-σχεθεὶς ὄλος ἐκ ρίζης εἰς ἀκρέμονα πολλῇ φλογὶ καθάπερ ἀπὸ τινος πηγῆς ἀνομβρούσης διέμενε σῶος, οὐ κατακαιόμενος, οἶά τις ἀπαθῆς οὐσία καὶ οὐχ ὕλη πυρὸς αὐτὸς ὢν, ἀλλὰ τροφῇ χρώμενος
- 66 τῷ πυρί. κατὰ δὲ μέσσην τὴν φλόγα μορφή τις ἦν περικαλλεστάτη, τῶν ὄρατῶν ἐμφορῆς οὐδενί, θεοειδέστατον ἄγαλμα, φῶς αὐγοειδέστερον τοῦ πυρὸς ἀπαστράπτουσα, ἦν ἂν τις ὑπετόπησεν εἰκόνα τοῦ ὄντος εἶναι· καλείσθω δὲ ἄγγελος, ὅτι σχεδὸν τὰ μέλλοντα γενήσεσθαι διήγγελλε τρανο-τέρα φωνῆς ἡσυχία διὰ τῆς μεγαλουργηθείσης
- 67 ὄψεως. σύμβολον γὰρ ὁ μὲν καιόμενος βάτος τῶν ἀδικουμένων, τὸ δὲ φλέγον πῦρ τῶν ἀδικούντων, τὸ δὲ μὴ κατακαίεσθαι τὸ καιόμενον τοῦ μὴ πρὸς τῶν ἐπιτιθεμένων φθαρῆσεσθαι τοὺς ἀδικουμένους, ἀλλὰ τοῖς μὲν ἄπρακτον καὶ ἀνωφελῆ γενέσθαι τὴν ἐπίθεσιν, τοῖς δὲ τὴν ἐπιβουλήν ἀζήμιον, ὁ δὲ ἄγγελος προνοίας τῆς ἐκ θεοῦ τὰ λίαν φοβερὰ παρὰ τὰς ἀπάντων ἐλπίδας κατὰ
- 68 πολλὴν ἡσυχίαν ἐξευμαρίζοντος. XIII. τὴν δὲ εἰκασίαν ἀκριβῶς ἐπισκεπτέον. ὁ βάτος, ὡς ἐλέ-

<sup>1</sup> MSS. τε.

MOSES I. 64-68

ness of flesh, and in number through their fecundity and the wholesomeness of their food.

Now, as he was leading the flock to a place where the 65 water and the grass were abundant, and where there happened to be plentiful growth of herbage for the sheep, he found himself at a glen where he saw a most astonishing sight. There was a bramble-bush, a thorny sort of plant, and of the most weakly kind, which, without anyone's setting it alight, suddenly took fire ; and, though enveloped from root to twigs in a mass of fire, which looked as though it were spouted up from a fountain, yet remained whole, and, instead of being consumed, seemed to be a substance impervious to attack, and, instead of serving as fuel to the fire, actually fed on it. In the midst of the 66 flame was a form of the fairest beauty, unlike any visible object, an image supremely divine in appearance, refulgent with a light brighter than the light of fire. It might be supposed that this was the image of Him that is ; but let us rather call it an angel or herald, since, with a silence that spoke more clearly than speech, it employed as it were the miracle of sight to herald future events. For the 67 burning bramble was a symbol of those who suffered wrong, as the flaming fire of those who did it. Yet that which burned was not burnt up, and this was a sign that the sufferers would not be destroyed by their aggressors, who would find that the aggression was vain and profitless while the victims of malice escaped unharmed. The angel was a symbol of God's providence, which all silently brings relief to the greatest dangers, exceeding every hope. XIII. But the details of the comparison must be con- 68 sidered. The bramble, as I have said, is a very

PHILO

χθη, φυτὸν ἀσθενέστατον ἀλλ' οὐδὲ ἄκεντρον, ὡς εἰ καὶ μόνον ἐπιφαύσειέ τις τιτρώσκειν, οὐτ' ἐξαναλώθη τῷ φύσει δαπανηρῷ πυρί, τοῦναντίον δὲ ἐφυλάχθη πρὸς αὐτοῦ καὶ διαμένων ὁποῖος ἦν πρὶν ἀνακαίεσθαι μηδὲν ἀποβαλὼν τὸ παράπαν αὐγὴν

[92] 69 προσέλαβε. | τοῦθ' ἅπαν ὑπογραφή τίς ἐστὶ τῆς ἐθνικῆς ὑποθέσεως,<sup>1</sup> ἢ κατ' ἐκείνον τὸν χρόνον ἐπέιχε, μόνον οὐ βοῶσα τοῖς ἐν συμφοραῖς. “ μὴ ἀναπίπτετε, τὸ ἀσθενὲς ὑμῶν δύναμις ἐστίν, ἢ καὶ κεντέϊ καὶ κατατρώσει μυρίους. ὑπὸ τῶν ἐξαναλωσάσαι γλιχομένων τὸ γένος ἀκόντων διασωθήσεσθε μᾶλλον ἢ ἀπολείσθε, τοῖς κακοῖς οὐ κακωθήσεσθε, ἀλλ' ὅταν μάλιστα πορθεῖν νομίση τις ὑμᾶς, τότε

70 μάλιστα πρὸς εὐκλειαν ἐκλάμψετε.” πάλιν τὸ πῦρ φθοροποιὸς<sup>2</sup> οὐσία διελέγχουσα τοὺς ὠμοθύμους. “ μὴ ταῖς ἰδίαις ἀλκαῖς ἐπαίρεσθε, τὰς ἀμάχους ῥώμας ἰδόντες καθαιρουμένας σωφρονίσθητε· ἢ μὲν καυστικὴ δύναμις τῆς φλογὸς ὡς ξύλον καίεται, τὸ δὲ φύσει καυστὸν ξύλον οἷα πῦρ ἐμφανῶς καίει.”

71 XIV. Τὸ τεράστιον τοῦτο καὶ τεθαυματουργημένον δείξας ὁ θεὸς τῷ Μωυσεῖ, παραίνεσιν ἐναργεστάτην τῶν μελλόντων ἀποτελεῖσθαι, καὶ διὰ χρησμῶν ἄρχεται προτρέπειν αὐτὸν ἐπὶ τὴν τοῦ ἔθνους σπεύδειν ἐπιμέλειαν, ὡς οὐ μόνον ἐλευθερίας παραίτιον ἀλλὰ καὶ ἡγεμόνα τῆς ἐνθένδε ἀποικίας οὐκ εἰς μακρὰν γενησόμενον, ὁμολογῶν ἐν ἅπασιν

72 συλλήψεσθαι. “ κακουμένων γὰρ ἐκ πολλοῦ καὶ

<sup>1</sup> A strange use of the word. Cohn suggests διαθέσεως.

<sup>2</sup> I suggest φθοροποιὸς <φθοροποιεῖται>. See note a.

---

<sup>a</sup> The absence of a finite verb, for οὐσία can hardly be predicate, is curious. Also the sense is not brought out, for the sequel shows that the point is that the fire ultimately weakly plant, yet it is prickly and will wound if one do but touch it. Again, though fire is naturally destructive, the bramble was not devoured thereby, but on the contrary was guarded by it, and remained just as it was before it took fire, lost nothing at all but gained an additional brightness. All this is a descrip- 69 tion of the nation's condition as it then stood, and we may think of it as a voice proclaiming to the sufferers: "Do not lose heart; your weakness is your strength, which can prick, and thousands will suffer from its wounds. Those who desire to consume you will be your unwilling saviours instead of your destroyers. Your ills will work you no ill. Nay, just when the enemy is surest of ravaging you, your fame will shine forth most gloriously." Again fire, the element 70 which works destruction, convicts the cruel-hearted. "Exult not in your own strength" it says. "Behold your invincible might brought low, and learn wisdom. The property of flame is to consume, yet it is consumed, like wood. The nature of wood is to be consumed yet it is manifested as the consumer, as though it were the fire."

XIV. After showing to Moses this miraculous 71 portent, so clearly warning him of the events that were to be, God begins in oracular speech to urge him to take charge of the nation with all speed, in the capacity not merely of an assistant to their liberation, but of the leader who would shortly take them from Egypt to another home. He promised to help him in everything: "For," he said, "suffering, 72 goes out and leaves the bramble victorious. I strongly suspect that "is destroyed" has been lost and if so φθοροποιείται in juxtaposition to φθοροποιός would be preferable to φθελπεται. No such word is quoted in the lexica, but Philo is quite capable of coining it.

PHILO

δυσανασχέτους ὕβρεις ὑπομενόντων, οὐδενὸς ἀν-θρώπων οὐτ' ἐπικουφίζοντος οὐτ' ἐλεούντος τὰς συμφοράς, οἴκτον" φησὶν " αὐτὸς ἔλαβον. καὶ γὰρ <οἶδ'> ἰδίᾳ ἕκαστον καὶ πάντας ὁμοθυμαδὸν ἐφ' ἱκετείας καὶ λιτὰς τραπομένους ἐλπίζειν τὴν ἐξ ἐμοῦ βοήθειαν· εἰμὶ δὲ τὴν φύσιν ἥπιος καὶ 73 γνησίους ἱκέταις ἴλεως. ἴθι δὴ πρὸς τὸν βασιλέα τῆς χώρας μηδὲν εὐλαβηθεὶς τὸ παράπαν—ὁ μὲν γὰρ πρότερος τέθηκεν, ὃν ἀπεδίδρασκες διὰ φόβον ἐπιβουλῆς, ἕτερος δὲ τὴν χώραν ἐπιτέτραπται μηδενὸς τῶν πραγμάτων σοὶ μνησικακῶν—καὶ τὴν τοῦ ἔθνους γερουσίαν προσπαραλαβὼν εἶπέ χρησιμῶ προσκεκληθῆσθαι ὑπ' ἐμοῦ τὸ ἔθνος, ἵνα κατὰ τὰ πάτρια θύσῃ τριῶν ἡμερῶν ὁδὸν ἔξω τῶν ὄρων τῆς 74 χώρας προελθόν." ὁ δὲ οὐκ ἀγνοῶν ἐπὶ τοῖς λεγο-μένοις ἀπιστήσοντας τοὺς τε ὁμοφύλους καὶ τοὺς ἄλλους ἅπαντας " ἂν οὖν " φησὶ " πυνθάνωνται, τί τὸ ὄνομα τῷ πέμψαντι, μηδ' αὐτὸς εἰπεῖν ἔχων ἄρ' 75 οὐ δόξω διαπατᾶν;" ὁ δὲ " τὸ μὲν πρῶτον λέγε " φησὶν " αὐτοῖς, ὅτι ἐγὼ εἰμι ὁ ὢν, ἵνα μαθόντες διαφορὰν ὄντος τε καὶ μὴ ὄντος προσαναδιδαχθῶσιν, ὡς οὐδὲν ὄνομα τὸ παράπαν ἐπ' ἐμοῦ κυριολογεῖται, 76 ᾧ μόνῳ πρόσεστι τὸ εἶναι. ἂν δ' ἀσθενέστεροι τὰς φύσεις ὄντες ἐπιζητῶσι πρόσρησιν, δήλωσον [93] αὐτοῖς μὴ μόνον τοῦθ' ὅτι | θεὸς εἰμι, ἀλλ' ὅτι καὶ τριῶν τῶν ἐπωνύμων ἀνδρῶν ἀρετῆς, θεὸς Ἀβραὰμ καὶ θεὸς Ἰσαὰκ καὶ θεὸς Ἰακώβ, ὧν ὁ μὲν τῆς διδακτῆς, ὁ δὲ τῆς φυσικῆς, ὁ δὲ τῆς ἀσκητικῆς σοφίας κανὼν ἐστίν. ἂν δὲ ἔτι ἀπιστῶσι, τρισὶ 77 σημείοις ἀναδιδαχθέντες μεταβαλοῦσιν, ἃ πρότερον οὔτε τις εἶδεν οὔτε ἤκουσεν ἀνθρώπων." ἦν δὲ τὰ

MOSES I. 72-76

as they do, prolonged ill-treatment, and subjected to intolerable outrages, with no relief or pity for their miseries from men, I have taken compassion on them Myself. For I know that each severally, and all unitedly, have betaken themselves to prayers and supplications in hope to gain help from Me, and I am of a kindly nature and gracious to true suppliants. Now go to the king of the land, and fear 73 not at all, for the former king from whom you fled in fear that he meant mischief is dead, and the land is in the hands of another who does not remember any of your actions against you. Take with you also the elders of the nation, and tell him that the people has received a command from Me to make a three-days' journey beyond the bounds of the country, and there sacrifice according to the rites of their fathers." Moses knew well that his own nation 74 and all the others would disbelieve his words, and said: "If they ask the name of him who sent me, and I cannot myself tell them, will they not think me a deceiver?" God replied: "First tell them that 75 I am He Who is, that they may learn the difference between what is and what is not, and also the further lesson that no name at all can properly be used of Me, to Whom alone existence belongs. And, if, 76 in their natural weakness, they seek some title to use, tell them not only that I am God, but also the God of the three men whose names express their virtue, each of them the exemplar of the wisdom they have gained—Abraham by teaching, Isaac by nature, Jacob by practice.<sup>a</sup> And, if they still disbelieve, three signs which no man has ever before seen or heard of will be sufficient lesson to convert <sup>a</sup> For §§ 75-76 cf. De Mut. 11 ff.

PHILO

σημεία τοιάδε· ράβδον, ἣν εἶχεν, εἰς τοῦδαφος ρύψαι κελεύει· ἢ δ' αὐτίκα ψυχωθείσα εἶρπε καὶ τῶν ἀπόδων τὸ ἡγεμονικώτατον ὑπερμεγέθης δράκων γίνεται τελειότατος· ταχέως δ' ἀποχωρήσας ἀπὸ τοῦ ζώου καὶ διὰ δέος ἤδη πρὸς φυγὴν ὀρμῶν μετακαλεῖται καὶ θεοῦ προστάξαντος ἅμα τε θάρσος

78 ἐμποιήσαντος ἐπιδράττεται τῆς οὐρᾶς. ὁ δὲ ἰλυσπώμενος ἔτι κατὰ τὴν ἐπαφήν ἴσταται καὶ πρὸς μῆκος εὖ μάλα ταθεὶς εὐθύς εἰς βακτηρίαν μετστοιχειοῦτο τὴν αὐτήν, ὡς θαυμάζειν μὲν τὰς μεταβολὰς ἀμφοτέρας, ποτέρα δὲ καταπληκτικωτέρα, μὴ δύνασθαι διακρίνειν, τῆς ψυχῆς ἰσορρόπῳ

79 πληχθείσης φαντασίᾳ. τοῦτο μὲν δὴ πρῶτον, ἕτερον δ' οὐκ εἰς μακρὰν ἐθαυματουργεῖτο· τῶν χειρῶν τὴν ἑτέραν προστάττει τοῖς κόλποις ἐπικρύψαντα μικρὸν ὕστερον προενεγκεῖν· δράσαντος δὲ τὸ κελευσθέν, ἢ χεὶρ λευκοτέρα χιόνος ἐξαπιναίως ἀναφαίνεται· πάλιν δὲ καθέντος εἰς τοὺς κόλπους καὶ ἀνενεγκόντος, εἰς τὴν αὐτὴν χροᾶν

80 τρέπεται τὸ οἰκεῖον ἀπολαβοῦσα εἶδος. ταῦτα μὲν οὖν ὑπὸ μόνου μόνος ἐπαιδεύετο, ὡς παρὰ διδασκάλῳ γνῶριμος, ἔχων παρ' ἑαυτῷ τὰ τῶν τεράτων ὄργανα, τὴν τε χεῖρα καὶ τὴν βακτηρίαν, οἷς

81 προεφωδιάσθη. τρίτον δ' ἐπιφέρεσθαι μὲν οὐκ ἦν οὐδὲ προδιδάσκεσθαι, ἔμελλε δ' ἐκπλήττειν οὐκ ἔλαττον τὴν ἀρχὴν τοῦ γίνεσθαι λαβὸν ἐν Αἰγύπτῳ. ἦν δὲ τοιοῦτο· “ τοῦ ποταμίου ” φησὶν “ ὕδατος ὅσον ἂν ἀρυσάμενος ἐπὶ τὴν γῆν ἐκχέης, αἷμα ξανθότατον ἔσται πρὸς τῇ χροᾷ καὶ τὴν δύναμιν 82 ἕτεροιωθὲν εἰς ἀλλαγὴν παντελῆ.” πιστὸν δ' ὡς

MOSES I. 77-82

them." The signs were such as these. He bade 77 him cast on the ground the rod which he carried, and this at once took life and began to creep, and became that high chief of the reptile kingdom, a huge serpent grown to full strength. Moses quickly leaped away from the creature, and, in his fright, was starting to fly, when he was recalled by God, and, at His bidding and inspired by Him with courage, grasped its tail. It was still wriggling, but stopped 78 at his touch, and, stretching itself to its full length, was metamorphosed at once into the rod which it had been before, so that Moses marvelled at the double change, unable to decide which was the more astonishing, so evenly balanced was the profound impression which each made upon his soul. This 79 was the first miracle, and a second followed soon. God bade him conceal one of his hands in his bosom, and, after a little while, draw it out. And when he did as he was bid, the hand suddenly appeared whiter than snow. He did the same again, put it in his bosom and then brought it out, when it turned to its original colour and recovered its proper appearance. These lessons he received when he and God 80 were alone together, like pupil and master, and while the instruments of the miracles, the hand and the staff, with which he was equipped for his mission were both in his own possession. But the third had its birth- 81 place in Egypt. It was one which he could not carry with him or rehearse beforehand, yet the amazement which it was sure to cause was quite as great. It was this: "The water," God said, "which thou dost draw from the river and pour on the land will be blood quite ruddy, and not only its colour but its properties will be completely changed." Moses evi- 82

PHILO

- ἔοικε καὶ τοῦτ' ἀνεφαίνετο, οὐ μόνον διὰ τὸ τοῦ λέγοντος ἀψευδές, ἀλλὰ καὶ διὰ τὰ ἤδη προεπιδειχθέντα ἐπὶ τε τῆς χειρὸς καὶ τῆς βακτηρίας θαυματουργήματα.
- 83 πιστεύων δ' ὁμως παρητέϊτο τὴν χειροτονίαν ἰσχνόφωνον καὶ βραδύγλωσσον, οὐκ εὐλογον, αὐτὸν εἶναι φάσκων καὶ μάλιστ' ἀφ' οὗ λέγοντος ἤκουε θεοῦ· νομίσας γὰρ τὴν ἀνθρωπίνην λογιότητα κατὰ σύγκρισιν τῆς θείας<sup>1</sup> ἀφωνίαν εἶναι καὶ ἅμα τὴν φύσιν εὐλαβῆς ὧν
- [94] ὑπεστέλλετο | τοῖς ὑπερόγκοις, τὰ λίαν μεγάλα κρίνων οὐ καθ' αὐτόν, καὶ παρεκάλει ἕτερον ἐλέσθαι τὸν εὐμαρῶς ἕκαστα τῶν ἐπισταλέντων διαπράξασθαι δυνατόμενον. ὁ δ' ἀποδεξάμενος αὐτὸν τῆς αἰδοῦς “ ἄρά γε ἀγνοεῖς ” εἶπε “ τὸν δόντα ἀνθρώπῳ στόμα καὶ κατασκευάσαντα γλῶτταν καὶ ἀρτηρίαν καὶ τὴν ἅπασαν λογικῆς φωνῆς ὀργανοποιίαν; αὐτός εἰμι ἐγώ. μηδὲν οὖν δείσης· ἐμοῦ γὰρ ἐπιμεύσαντος ἀρθρωθήσεται πάντα καὶ μεταβαλεῖ πρὸς τὸ μέτριον, ὡς μηδενὸς ἔτι ἐμποδίζοντος ῥεῖν εὐτροχον καὶ λείον ἀπὸ καθαρᾶς πηγῆς τὸ τῶν λόγων νᾶμα. χρεῖα δ' εἰ γένοιτο ἐρμηνέως, ὑποδιακονικὸν στόμα τὸν ἀδελφὸν ἕξεις, ἵν' ὁ μὲν τῷ πλήθει ἀπαγγέλλῃ τὰ ἀπὸ σοῦ, σὺ δ' ἐκείνῳ τὰ θεῖα.”
- 85 XV. Ταῦτ' ἀκούσας—οὐ γὰρ ἦν εἰς ἅπαν ἀντιλέγειν ἀσφαλές οὐδ' ἀκίνδυνον—ἄρας ἐβάδιζε μετὰ γυναικὸς καὶ τέκνων ὁδὸν τὴν ἐπ' Αἴγυπτον, καθ' ἣν ὑπαντήσαντα τὸν ἀδελφὸν πείθει συνακολουθεῖν ὑπειπὼν τὰ θεῖα λόγια· τῷ δ' ἄρα προὔπειργαστο ἡ

<sup>1</sup> MSS. ἀληθείας.

MOSES I. 82-85

dently felt that this too was credible, not only because of the infallibility of the Speaker, but through the proofs he had already been shewn in the miracles of the hand and the staff. But, though he 83 believed, he tried to refuse the mission, declaring that he was not eloquent, but feeble of voice and slow of tongue, especially ever since he heard God speaking to him ; for he considered that human eloquence compared with God's was dumbness, and also, cautious as he was by nature, he shrank from things sublime and judged that matters of such magnitude were not for him. And therefore he begged Him to choose another, who would prove able to execute with ease all that was committed to him. But God, 84 though approving his modesty, answered : " Dost thou not know who it is that gave man a mouth, and formed his tongue and throat and all the organism of reasonable speech ? It is I Myself : therefore, fear not, for at a sign from Me all will become articulate and be brought over to method and order, so that none can hinder the stream of words from flowing easily and smoothly from a fountain undefiled. And, if thou shouldst have need of an interpreter, thou wilt have in thy brother a mouth to assist thy service, to report to the people thy words, as thou reportest those of God to him."

XV. <sup>a</sup> Moses, hearing this, and knowing how un- 85 safe and hazardous it was to persist in gainsaying, took his departure, and travelled with his wife and children on the road to Egypt. During the journey he met his brother, to whom he declared the divine message, and persuaded him to accompany him. His brother's soul, in fact, had already, through the

<sup>a</sup> For §§ 85-95 see Ex. iv. 27, v. 22, vii. 8-13.

PHILO

- ψυχὴ κατ' ἐπιφροσύνην θεοῦ πρὸς πειθαρχίαν, ὡς ἀνενδοιάστως συναινεῖν καὶ ἐτοίμως ἔπεσθαι.
 86 παραγενόμενοι δ' εἰς Αἴγυπτον γνώμη καὶ ψυχῇ μιᾷ τὸ μὲν πρῶτον τοὺς δημογέροντας τοῦ ἔθνους συναγαγόντες ἐν ἐπορρήτῳ μηνύουσι τοὺς χρησμούς καὶ ὡς ἔλεον καὶ οἶκτον λαβῶν αὐτῶν ὁ θεὸς ἔλευ-θερίαν καὶ τὴν ἐνθένδε μετανάστασιν εἰς ἀμείνω χώραν ὁμολογῶν αὐτὸς ἔσεσθαι τῆς ὁδοῦ ἡγεμῶν 87 ὑπισχνεῖται. μετὰ δὲ ταῦτα καὶ τῷ βασιλεῖ θαρ-ροῦσιν ἤδη διαλέγεσθαι περὶ τοῦ τὸν λεῶν ἱερουργήσοντα ἐκπέμψαι τῶν ὄρων· δεῖν γὰρ ἔφασκον ἐν ἐρήμῳ τὰς πατρίους θυσίας ἐπιτελεσθῆναι, μὴ κατὰ τὰ αὐτὰ ταῖς τῶν ἄλλων ἀνθρώπων γινομένας, ἀλλὰ τρόπῳ καὶ νόμῳ διαφεύγοντι τὴν κοινότητα 88 διὰ τὰς τῶν ἔθῶν ἐξαιρέτους ιδιότητας. ὁ δ' ἐξ ἔτι σπαργάνων προγονικῶ τύφῳ τὴν ψυχὴν πεπιεσμένος καὶ μηδένα τὸ παράπαν νοητὸν θεὸν ἔξω τῶν ὄρατῶν νομίζων ἀποκρίνεται πρὸς ὕβριν εἰπών· “ τίς ἐστίν οὗ χρὴ με ὑπακούειν; οὐκ οἶδα τὸν λεγόμενον τοῦτον καινὸν κύριον· οὐκ ἐξαποστέλλω τὸ ἔθνος ἐπὶ προφάσει ἑορτῆς καὶ θυσιῶν ἀφη-89 νιάσον.” εἶθ' ἄτε χαλεπὸς καὶ βαρύμητις καὶ ἀπαραίτητος τὴν ὄργην κελεύει τοὺς τοῖς ἔργοις ἐφεστῶτας προπηλακίζεσθαι ὡς ἀνέσεις καὶ σχολὴν ἐνδιδόντας, ἀνέσεως καὶ σχολῆς εἶναι λέγων τὸ βουλευέσθαι περὶ θυσιῶν καὶ ἑορτῶν· τοὺς γὰρ ἐν ἀνάγκαις τούτων οὐδὲ μεμνήσθαι, ἀλλ' οἷς ὁ βίος 90 ἐν εὐπαθείᾳ πολλῇ καὶ τρυφῇ. βαρυτέρας οὖν ἢ πρότερον συμφορὰς ὑπομενόντων καὶ ἐπὶ τοῖς ἀμφί

---

* Or perhaps “shrank from publicity.” Like mysteries in general, they had to be performed in secrecy.

MOSES I. 85-90

watchful working of God, been predisposed to obedience, so that without hesitation he assented and readily followed. When they had arrived in Egypt, 86 one in mind and heart, they first summoned the senators of the nation secretly, and informed them of the oracles, and how God had, in pity and compassion for them, assured them liberty and departure from their present to a better country, and promised to be Himself their leader. After this they were now 87 emboldened to talk to the king, and lay before him their request that he should send the people out of his boundaries to sacrifice. They told him that their ancestral sacrifices must be performed in the desert, as they did not conform with those of the rest of mankind, but so exceptional were the customs peculiar to the Hebrews that their rule and method of sacrifices ran counter to the common course.<sup>a</sup> The 88 king, whose soul from his earliest years was weighed down with the pride of many generations, did not accept a God discernible only by the mind, or any at all beyond those whom his eyes beheld; and therefore he answered insolently: "Who is he whom I must obey? I know not this new Lord of whom you speak. I refuse to send the nation forth to run loose under pretext of festival and sacrifices." Then, in the harshness and ferocity and obstinacy 89 of his temper, he bade the overseers of the tasks treat the people with contumely, for showing slackness and laziness. "For just this," he said, "was what was meant by the proposal to hold festival and sacrifice—things the very memory of which was lost by the hard pressed, and retained only by those whose life was spent in much comfort and luxury." Thus they endured woes more grievous than ever, 90

PHILO

- [95] Μωυσῆν δυσχεραινόντων ὡς | ἀπατεῶσι καὶ τὰ μὲν λάθρα τὰ δὲ φανερώς κακηγορούντων καὶ ἀσεβείας<sup>1</sup> αἰτιωμένων ἐπὶ τῷ δοκεῖν θεοῦ κατεφεῦσθαι, δει-κνύειν ἄρχεται Μωυσῆς ἃ προῦδιδάχθη τέρατα, νομίσας τοὺς θεασομένους ἐκ τῆς ἐπεχούσης ἀπι-στίας εἰς πίστιν τῶν λεγομένων μεταβαλεῖν.
- 91 ἢ δὲ τῶν τεράτων ἐπίδειξις ἐγένετο καὶ τῷ βασιλεῖ διὰ σπουδῆς καὶ τοῖς ἐν τέλει τῶν Αἰγυπτίων.
 XVI. πάντων οὖν τῶν δυνατῶν συρρυνέντων εἰς τὰ βασιλεία, λαβὼν τὴν βακτηρίαν ὁ Μωυσέως ἀδελφὸς καὶ κατασείσας μάλα ἐπιδεικτικῶς εἰς τοῦδαφος ῥίπτει· καὶ ἡ μὲν δράκων αὐτίκα γίνεται, οἱ δ' ἐν κύκλῳ κατεθεῶντο καὶ ἅμα θαυμαστικῶς ἔχοντες
- 92 ὑπὸ δέους ἐξαναχωροῦντες ἀπέφευγον. σοφισταὶ δ' ὅσοι καὶ μάγοι παρετύγχανον “ τί καταπλήτ-τεσθε; ” εἶπον· “ οὐδ' ἡμεῖς τῶν τοιούτων ἀμελετήτως ἔχομεν, ἀλλὰ χρώμεθα τέχνη δημιουργῶ τῶν ὁμοίων.” εἶθ' ἐκάστου βακτηρίαν ἣν εἶχε ῥύψαντος, δρακόντων πλήθος ἦν καὶ περὶ ἓνα τὸν
- 93 πρῶτον εἰλοῦντο. ὁ δ' ἐκ πολλοῦ τοῦ περιόντος διαναστὰς πρὸς ὕψος τὰ μὲν στέρνα εὐρύνει, τὸ δὲ στόμα διοίξας ὄλκοῦ πνεύματος ῥύμη βιαιοτάτη καθάπερ βόλον ἰχθύων πάντας ἐν κύκλῳ σαγηνεύσας ἐπισπᾶται καὶ καταπιὼν εἰς τὴν ἀρχαίαν φύσιν τῆς
- 94 βακτηρίας μετέβαλεν. ἤδη μὲν οὖν ἐν ἐκάστου τῇ ψυχῇ τῶν ἐθελοκακούντων τὸ ὑποπτον διήλεγξεν ἢ μεγαλοργηθεῖσα ὄψις, ὡς μηκέτι νομίζειν ἀν-θρώπων σοφίσματα καὶ τέχνας εἶναι τὰ γινόμενα πεπλασμένας πρὸς ἀπάτην, ἀλλὰ δύναμιν θειοτέραν
- 95 τὴν τούτων αἰτίαν, ἣ πάντα δρᾶν εὐμαρές. ἐπεὶ δὲ

<sup>1</sup> MSS. ἀσέβειαν.

MOSES I. 90-94

and were enraged against Moses and his companion as deceivers, abusing them, sometimes secretly, sometimes openly, and accusing them of impiety in that they appeared to have spoken falsely of God. Whereupon Moses began to show the wonders which he had been previously taught to perform, thinking that the sight would convert them from the prevailing unbelief to belief in his words.

The exhibition of these wonders to the king and the Egyptian nobles followed very quickly; (XVI.) so, when all the magnates had collected at the palace, the brother of Moses took his staff, and, after waving it in a very conspicuous manner, flung it on the ground, where it immediately turned into a serpent, while the onlookers standing round were filled with wonder, fell back in fear, and were on the point of running away. But all the wizards and magicians who were present said: "Why are you terrified? We, too, are practised in such matters, and we use our skill to produce similar results." Then, as each of them threw down the staff which he held, there appeared a multitude of serpents writhing round a single one; that one, the first, showed its great superiority by rising high, widening its chest and opening its mouth, when with the suction of its breath it swept the others in with irresistible force, like a whole draught of fishes encircled by the net, and, after swallowing them up, changed to its original nature, and became a staff. By this time, the marvellous spectacle had refuted the scepticism in every ill-disposed person's soul, and they now regarded these events not as the works of human cunning or artifices fabricated to deceive, but as brought about by some diviner power to which every feat is easy.

PHILO

καὶ ὁμολογεῖν ἀναγκασθέντες ὑπὸ τῆς τῶν γινομένων ἐμφανοῦς ἐναργείας οὐδὲν ἤττον ἐθρασύνοντο, τῆς αὐτῆς ἀπανθρωπίας καὶ ἀσεβείας ὥσπερ ἀγαθοῦ τινος ἐπειλημμένοι βεβαιοτάτου, μήτε τοὺς καταδουλωθέντας ἀδίκως ἐλεοῦντες μήτε τὰ διὰ τῶν λόγων<sup>1</sup> προσταπτόμενα δρῶντες, ἅτε δὴ τοῦ θεοῦ τρανοτέραις χρησμῶν ἀποδείξεισι ταῖς διὰ σημείων καὶ τεράτων τὸ βούλημα δεδηλωκότος, ἐμβριθεστέρας ἐπανατάσεως<sup>2</sup> ἐδέησε καὶ πληγῶν ἔσμου, αἷς οἱ ἄφρονες νουθετοῦνται, οὗς λόγος οὐκ ἐπαίδευσε.

- 96 Δέκα δὲ ἐπάγονται τῇ χώρᾳ τιμωρίαί, κατὰ τῶν τέλεια ἡμαρτηκότων τέλειος ἀριθμὸς κολάσεως· ἦν<sup>3</sup> δὲ κόλασις παρηλλαχυῖα τὰς ἐν ἔθει. XVII. τὰ γὰρ στοιχεῖα τοῦ παντός, γῆ καὶ ὕδωρ καὶ ἀήρ καὶ [96] πῦρ, ἐπιτίθενται, | δικαιώσαντος θεοῦ, οἷς ἀπετελέσθη ὁ κόσμος, τὴν ἀσεβῶν χώραν φθαρῆναι, πρὸς ἔνδειξιν κράτους ἀρχῆς ἣ κέχρηται, τὰ αὐτὰ καὶ σωτηρίως ἐπὶ γενέσει τῶν ὄλων σχηματίζοντος καὶ τρέποντος ὅποτε βουληθείη πρὸς τὴν κατὰ τῶν 97 ἀσεβῶν ἀπώλειαν. διανέμει δὲ τὰς κολάσεις, τρεῖς μὲν τὰς ἐκ τῶν παχυμερεστέρων στοιχειῶν γῆς καὶ ὕδατος, ἐξ ὧν ἀπετελέσθησαν αἱ σωματικαὶ ποιότητες, ἐφείς τῷ Μωυσέως ἀδελφῷ, τὰς δ' ἴσας ἐξ αἴρος καὶ πυρὸς τῶν ψυχογονιμωτάτων μόνῳ

<sup>1</sup> Perhaps read λογίων, as Mangey according to Cohn suggested, though I cannot find it in his foot-notes or addenda. On λόγου (?) see note a.

<sup>2</sup> MSS. ἐπαναστάσεως.

<sup>3</sup> MSS. ἦ.

---

<sup>a</sup> This seems to be the sense required, and so Mangey "divinitus imperata." But it is difficult to extract this from λόγων. λόγου "reason" will make good sense, correspond-

MOSES I. 95-97

But, though they were compelled by the clear evi- 95 dence of the facts to admit the truth, they did not abate their audacity, but clung to their old inhumanity and impiety as though it were the surest of blessings. They did not show mercy to those who were unjustly enslaved, nor carry out the orders which had divine authority,<sup>a</sup> since God had shown His will by the proofs of signs and wonders, which are clearer than oracles. And therefore a severer visitation was needed, and volley of those blows whereby fools whom reason has not disciplined are brought to their senses.

The punishments inflicted on the land were ten— 96 a perfect number for the chastisement of those who brought sin to perfection. The chastisement was different from the usual kind, (XVII.) for the elements of the universe—earth, fire, air, water—carried out the assault. God's judgement was that the materials which had served to produce the world should serve also to destroy the land of the impious; and to show the mightiness of the sovereignty which He holds, what He shaped in His saving goodness to create the universe He turned into instruments for the perdition of the impious whenever He would. He distributed 97 the punishments in this wise: three belonging to the denser elements, earth and water, which have gone to make our bodily qualities what they are, He committed to the brother of Moses; another set of three, belonging to air and fire, the two most productive ing to ὁ λόγος below, but in this sense the word does not seem to be used in the plural. If λογίων is read, we must suppose that it is contrasted with χρησμῶν as covering all divine intimations, whereas χρησμῶν is confined to the spoken oracle. But this also lacks authority.

PHILO

Μωυσεῖ, μίαν δὲ κοινὴν ἀμφοτέροις ἐβδόμην ἐπι-τρέπει, τρεῖς δὲ τὰς ἄλλας εἰς συμπλήρωσιν δεκάδος 98 ἀνατίθησιν αὐτῷ. καὶ πρῶτας ἐπιφέρειν ἄρχεται τὰς ἀφ' ὕδατος· ἐπειδὴ γὰρ τὸ ὕδωρ Αἰγύπτιοι διαφερόντως ἐκτετιμῆκασιν ἀρχὴν τῆς τῶν ὄλων γενέσεως τοῦτ' εἶναι νομίζοντες, αὐτὸ πρῶτον ἠξίωσε καλέσαι πρὸς τὴν τῶν ἀποδεχο-99 μένων ἐπίπληξίν τε καὶ νοουθεσίαν. τί οὖν οὐκ εἰς μακρὰ νουνέβη; τοῦ Μωυσεῶς ἀδελφοῦ προσ-τάξει θεία κατενεγκόντος τὴν βακτηρίαν ἐπὶ τὸν ποταμόν, ὃ μὲν εὐθὺς ἀπ' Αἰθιοπίας ἄχρι θαλάσσης εἰς αἶμα τρέπεται, συνεξαιματοῦνται δ' αὐτῷ λίμναι, διώρυχες, κρήναι, φρέατα, πηγαί, σύμπασα ἢ κατ' Αἴγυπτον οὐσία ὕδατος, ὡς ἀπορία ποτοῦ τὰ παρὰ ταῖς ὄχθαις ἀναστέλλειν, τὰς δ' ἀνατεμνο-μένας φλέβας καθάπερ ἐν ταῖς αἰμορραγίαις κρουνηδὸν αὐλοὺς ἀκοντίζειν αἵματος, μηδεμιᾶς ἐνορω-100 μένης διαυγοῦς λιβάδος. ἐναπέθνησκε δὲ καὶ τὰ γένη τῶν ἰχθύων ἅπαντα, ἅτε τῆς ζωτικῆς δυνάμεως εἰς φθοροποιὸν μεταβαλοῦσης, ὡς δυσωδίας πάντα διὰ πάντων ἀναπεπλησθαι, τοσοῦτων σηπο-μένων ἀθρόον σωμάτων· πολλὺς δὲ καὶ ἀνθρώπων ὄχλος ὑπὸ δίψους διαφθαρεῖς ἔκειτο σωρηδὸν ἐπὶ τῶν τριόδων, οὐ σθενόντων ἐπὶ τὰ μνήματα τῶν 101 οἰκείων τοὺς τετελευτηκότας ἐκκομίζειν. ἐπὶ γὰρ ἡμέρας ἑπτὰ τὸ δεινὸν ἐκράτησεν, ἕως οἱ μὲν Αἰγύπτιοι τοὺς ἀμφὶ Μωυσῆν, οὗτοι δὲ τὸν θεὸν ἰκέτευσαν, οἶκτον λαβεῖν τῶν ἀπολλυμένων· ὃ δὲ τὴν φύσιν ἔλεως μεταβάλλει τὸ αἶμα εἰς ὕδωρ πότιμον ἀποδοὺς τῷ ποταμῷ καθαρὰ τὰ ἀρχαῖα

* The above grouping of the ten plagues compels Philo to depart from the order of Exodus, as will appear in the 326

MOSES I. 97-101

of life, He gave to Moses alone ; one, the seventh, He committed to both in common ; and the other three which go to complete the ten He reserved to Himself.<sup>a</sup>

He began by bringing into 98 play first the plagues of water ; for, since the Egyptians had paid a specially high homage to water, which they believed to be the original source of the creation of the All, He thought well to summon water first to reprove and admonish its votaries. What, then, was the event which so soon came to 99 pass ? The brother of Moses, at the command of God, smote the river with his staff, and at once, from Ethiopia to the sea, it turned into blood, and so did also the lakes, canals, springs, wells and fountains and all the existing water-supply of Egypt. Consequently, having nothing to drink, they dug up the ground along the banks ; but the veins thus opened spouted up squirts of blood, which shot up as in haemorrhages, and not a drop of clear liquid was anywhere to be seen. Every kind of fish died 100 therein, since its life-giving properties had become a means of destruction, so that a general stench pervaded everything from all these bodies rotting together. Also a great multitude of men, killed by thirst, lay in heaps at the cross-roads, since their relatives had not the strength to carry the dead to the tombs. For seven days the terror reigned, until 101 the Egyptians besought Moses and his brother, and they besought God, to take pity on the perishing. And He Whose nature is to show mercy changed the blood into water fit for drinking, and restored to the river its old health-giving flood free from im-sequel. The first three, however, are in the same order. See Ex. vii. 14-viii. 19.

PHILO

102 ρείθρα καὶ σωτήρια. XVIII. μικρὸν δὲ ὅσον ἀνεθέντες ἐπὶ τὴν αὐτὴν ὠμότητα καὶ παρανομίαν ἴεντο, | ὡς ἡ τοῦ δικαίου παντάπασιν ἐξ ἀνθρώπων ἀφανισθέντος ἢ τῶν ὑπομεινάντων μίαν τιμωρίαν δεύτερον οὐκ εἰωθότων ἐπιπλήττεσθαι· παθόντες δ' ἀνεδιδάσκοντο νηπίων παίδων τρόπον μὴ καταφρονεῖν· ἢ γὰρ κόλασις ἐπομένη κατ' ἔχνος μελλόντων μὲν ἐβράδυνε, πρὸς δὲ τὰ ἀδικήματα θέοντας ἐπιδραμοῦσα κατελάμβανε.

[97]

103

Πάλιν γὰρ ὁ Μωυσέως | ἀδελφὸς κελευσθεὶς διώρυξι καὶ λίμναις καὶ ἔλεσι τὴν ῥάβδον ἐκτείνας ἐπιφέρει· πρὸς δὲ τὴν ἕκτασιν βατράχων πληθὺς ἀνέρπει τοσαύτη, ὡς μὴ μόνον ἀγορὰς καὶ πᾶσαν τὴν ὑπαιθρον, ἀλλὰ πρὸς τούτοις ἐπαύλεις, οἰκίας, ἱερά, πάντα ἰδιωτικὸν καὶ δημόσιον τόπον πεπληρῶσθαι, καθάπερ εἰς ἀποικίαν ἐν γένος τῶν ἐν ὑδρῶν τῆς φύσεως ἐκπέμψαι διανοηθείσης πρὸς τὴν

104 ἐναντίαν χώραν· ἐναντία γὰρ χέρσος ὕδατι. μήτ' οὖν ἔξω προελθεῖν ἔνεκα τοῦ προκατέχεσθαι τοὺς στενωποὺς μήτ' ἔνδον δυνάμενοι μένειν—καὶ γὰρ τὰ ἐν μυχοῖς ἤδη προκατειλήφεσαν ἄχρι καὶ τῶν ὑψηλοτάτων ἀνέρποντες—ἐν ἐσχάταις ἦσαν συμ-

105 φοραῖς καὶ σωτηρίας ἀπογνώσει. πάλιν οὖν καταφεύγουσιν ἐπὶ τοὺς αὐτοὺς, ὑποσχομένου τοῦ βασιλέως ἐπιτρέψαι τὴν ἔξοδον Ἑβραίοις· οἱ δὲ λιταῖς τὸν θεὸν ἐξευμενίζονται· καὶ ἐπινεύσαντος, τῶν φρύνων οἱ μὲν εἰς τὸν ποταμὸν ἀναχωροῦσι, τῶν δ' εὐθὺς διαφθαρέντων κατὰ τὰς τριόδους θημῶνες ἦσαν, σωρηδὸν ἐπιφερόντων καὶ τοὺς οἴκοθεν διὰ

MOSES I. 102-105

purity. XVIII. For a very short time they relaxed, 102 but soon betook themselves to the same cruelty and lawlessness as before, and seemed to think that either justice had disappeared utterly from amongst men, or that those who had suffered one punishment could not be expected to receive a second blow. But, like foolish children, they were taught once more by experience not to despise the warning. For chastisement, dogging their steps, slowed down when they tarried, but when they hastened to deeds of wickedness quickened its pace and overtook them.

For once more the brother of Moses, at God's com- 103 mand, stretched forth and brought his rod upon the canals and lakes and fens ; and, as he stretched it, a multitude of frogs crept up, so numerous that not only the market-places and all the open spaces, but all the farm-buildings as well, and houses and temples and every place, public or private, was filled with them, as though it were nature's purpose to send one kind of the aquatic animals to colonize the opposite region, since land is the opposite of water. The people, who 104 could neither go out into the streets, because the passages were occupied by the frogs, nor yet stay indoors, because they had already crept up even to the tops of the houses and taken up the inmost recesses, were in the most unhappy and desperate straits. So, after the king had promised them to 105 permit the Hebrews to leave the land, they fled for refuge to those who had helped them before ; and they made intercession with God, and when their prayer was granted some of the frogs went back into the river, and others died at once and lay in heaps at the cross-roads, to which the Egyptians added the piles of those which they brought out of their houses, τὰς ἀνυποίστους ὀσμάς, αἱ ἐκ νεκρῶν σωμάτων καὶ τοιούτων ἀνεφέροντο, ἃ καὶ ἔμψυχα ὄντα πολλὴν ἀηδίαν παρέχεται ταῖς αἰσθήσεσι.

PHILO

- 106 XIX. Διαπνεύσαντες δὲ τῆς τιμωρίας ἐπ' ὀλίγον ὥσπερ ἐν τοῖς ἀγῶσιν ἀθληταὶ συλλεξάμενοι δύναμιν, ἢν' ἀπ' ἐρρωμενεστέρας ἰσχύος ἀδικῶσι, πάλιν εἰς τὴν συνήθη κακίαν ἀνέδραμον ἐκλαθόμενοι ὧν
- 107 τέως ὑπέμειναν κακῶν. ἐπισχῶν δὲ τὰς ἐκ τοῦ ὕδατος τιμωρίας ὁ θεὸς τὰς ἐκ γῆς ἐπέφερε τὸν αὐτὸν ἐπιστήσας κολαστὴν, οὗ πάλιν κατὰ τὸ προσταχθὲν τῇ βακτηρίᾳ τοῦδαφος παίσαντος φορὰ σκνιπῶν ἐχύθη καὶ ταθείσα καθάπερ νέφος ἅπασαν
- 108 ἐπέσχευεν Αἴγυπτον. τὸ δὲ ζῶον, εἰ καὶ βραχύτατον, ὅμως ἀργαλεώτατον· οὐ γὰρ μόνον λυμαίνεται τὴν ἐπιφάνειαν κνησμοὺς ἐμποιοῦν ἀηδεῖς καὶ βλαβερωτάτους, ἀλλὰ καὶ εἰς τὰντὸς βιάζεται διὰ μυκτῆρων καὶ ὠτων· σίνεται δὲ καὶ κόρας ὀφθαλμῶν εἰσπετόμενον, εἰ μὴ φυλάξαιτό τις· φυλακὴ δὲ τίς ἔμελλε πρὸς τοσαύτην ἔσεσθαι φορὰν, καὶ μάλιστα θεοῦ
- 109 κολάζοντος; ἴσως ἂν τις ἐπιζητήσῃ, διὰ τί τοῖς οὕτως ἀφανέσι καὶ ἡμελημένοις ζώοις ἐτιμωρεῖτο τὴν χώραν παρὲς ἄρκτους καὶ λέοντας καὶ παρδάλεις καὶ τὰ ἄλλα γένη τῶν ἀπιθάσων θηρίων, ἃ σαρκῶν ἀνθρωπείων ἄπτεται, καὶ εἰ μὴ ταῦτα, τὰς γοῦν Αἰγυπτίας ἀσπίδας, ὧν τὰ δῆγματα πέφυκεν
- 110 ἀνυπερθέτως ἀναιρεῖν. εἰ δ' ὄντως ἀγνοεῖ, μαθέτω· πρῶτον μὲν ὅτι τοὺς οἰκήτορας τῆς χώρας ὁ θεὸς νουθετῆσαι μᾶλλον ἐβούλετο ἢ διαφθεῖραι· βουλη-

<sup>a</sup> Or "hitherto."

<sup>b</sup> E.V. "lice"; R.V. in margin "or sand-flies or fleas." Josephus (Ant. 300) has φθειρές, "lice." "Most moderns because of the intolerable stench arising from the dead bodies, and bodies of a kind which, even when alive, is highly displeasing to the senses.

XIX. But, having thus obtained a short breathing- 106 space from punishment, and, like athletes in the arena, rallied their forces, only to gain fresh strength for evil-doing, they quickly returned to their familiar wickedness, forgetful of the evils which they had suffered so long.<sup>a</sup> Then God stayed from using water 107 to afflict them, and used the earth instead ; but appointed the same minister of chastisement, who once more, when bidden, struck the ground with his staff, when a stream of gnats <sup>b</sup> poured forth, and spread like a cloud over the whole extent of Egypt. Now the 108 gnat is a very small creature, but exceedingly troublesome, for it not only causes mischief to the surface of the body, and produces an unpleasant and very noxious itching, but it forces its way inside through the nostrils and ears, and also flies into and damages the pupils of the eyes, if one does not take precautions. And what precautions would be possible against such a stream, especially when it is a chastisement sent by God ? Someone perhaps may ask why 109
He punished the land through such petty and insignificant creatures, and refrained from using bears and lions and panthers and the other kinds of savage beasts which feed on human flesh ; and, if not these, at any rate the asps of Egypt, whose bites are such as to cause immediate death. If such a person really 110 does not know the answer, let him learn it : first, God wished to admonish the inhabitants of the land rather than to destroy them, for had He wished to annihilate agree that gnats is the most probable rendering" (of the Hebrew word).—Driver.

- [98] θεῖς γὰρ ἀφανίζεῖν εἰς | ἅπαν οὐκ ἂν ζώοις ἐχρήτο πρὸς τὰς ἐπιθέσεις ὡσπερ συνεργοῖς, ἀλλὰ τοῖς 111 θεηλάτοις κακοῖς, λιμῶ τε καὶ λοιμῶ. μετὰ δὲ ταῦτα κἀκείνο προσδιδασκέσθω μάθημα πρὸς ἅπαντα τὸν βίον ἀναγκαῖον· τί δὲ τοῦτ' ἐστίν; ἄνθρωποι μὲν γὰρ ὅταν πολεμῶσι, τὸ δυνατώτατον εἰς συμμαχίαν ἐπικουρικὸν ἐξετάζουσιν, ὃ τὴν αὐτῶν ἀσθένειαν ἐκπλήσει· θεὸς δ' ἡ ἀνωτάτω καὶ μεγίστη δύναμις ὣν οὐδενός ἐστι χρεῖος· ἐὰν δέ που βουληθῆ καθάπερ ὄργανοις τισὶ χρῆσασθαι πρὸς τὰς τιμωρίας, οὐ τὰ ἐρρωμενέστατα καὶ μέγιστα αἰρεῖται, τῆς τούτων ἀλκῆς ἥκιστα φροντίζων, ἀλλὰ τοῖς εὐτελέσι καὶ μικροῖς ἀμάχους καὶ ἀηττήτους δυνάμεις ἐγκατασκευάσας ἀμύνεται δι' αὐτῶν τοὺς 112 ἀδικούντας, καθὰ καὶ νῦν. τί γὰρ εὐτελέστερον σκνιπός; ἀλλ' ὅμως τοσοῦτον ἴσχυσεν, ὡς ἀπαγορεῦσαι πᾶσαν Αἴγυπτον καὶ ἐκβοᾶν ἀναγκα-σθῆναι, ὅτι "δάκτυλος θεοῦ τοῦτ' ἐστὶ". χεῖρα γὰρ θεοῦ μηδὲ τὴν σύμπασαν οἰκουμένην ὑποστήναι ἂν ἀπὸ περάτων ἐπὶ πέρατα, μᾶλλον δ' οὐδὲ τὸν σύμπαντα κόσμον.
- 113 XX. Τοιαῦται μὲν αἱ διὰ τοῦ Μωυσέως ἀδελφοῦ τιμωρίαι· ἃς δὲ αὐτὸς Μωυσῆς ὑπηρέτησε καὶ ἐξ οἶων τῆς φύσεως συνέστησαν μερῶν, κατὰ τὸ ἀκόλουθον ἐπισκεπτέον. ἀῆρ μὲν οὖν καὶ οὐρανός, αἱ καθαρώταται μοῖραι τῆς τῶν ὄλων οὐσίας, παρ' ὕδατος καὶ γῆς διαδέχονται τὴν ἐπ' Αἰγύπτω νουθεσίαν, ἧς ἐπίτροπος ἐχειροτονήθη Μωυσῆς.
- 114 ἤρξατο δὲ πρότερον τὸν ἀέρα διακινεῖν· Αἴγυπτος γὰρ μόνη σχεδόν τι παρὰ τὰς ἐν τῷ νοτίῳ

<sup>a</sup> i.e. the phrase "finger of God" is interpreted as an intervention in which only a small part of God's power is

them altogether He would not have taken animals to co-operate in His visitation, but calamities sent direct from heaven—pestilence and famine. And 111 after this the inquirer should be taught a further lesson, and one that is needed throughout life. What is this? When men make war, they look round to find the most powerful auxiliaries to fight beside them, and so compensate for their own weakness; but God, the highest and greatest power, needs no one. But if, at any time, He wills to use any as instruments for His vengeance, He does not choose the strongest and the greatest, of whose might He takes no account, but provides the slightest and the smallest with irresistible and invincible powers, and through them wreaks vengeance on the evil-doers. So it was in this case. For what is slighter than a 112 gnat? Yet so great was its power that all Egypt lost heart, and was forced to cry aloud: "This is the finger of God"; for as for His hand not all the habitable world from end to end could stand against it, or rather not even the whole universe.<sup>a</sup>

XX. Such, then, were the punishments in which 113 the brother of Moses was the agent. We have now, in due course, to examine those which were administered by Moses himself, and to shew what were the parts of nature which went to their making. We find that air and heaven, the purest portions of the universe, took on the succession to earth and water in that admonition of Egypt which Moses was appointed to superintend.

First, he began 114 to cause disturbance in the air. We must remember that Egypt is almost the only country, apart from used. For a somewhat different interpretation of the phrase see De Mig. 85.

PHILO

- κλίματι χώρας τῶν ἐτησίων ὥρων μίαν τὴν χειμερινὴν οὐ παραδέχεται, τάχα μὲν, ὡς λόγος, διὰ τὸ μὴ πόρρω ζώνης διακεκαυμένης εἶναι, ρέοντος τοῦ πυρώδους ἐκεῖθεν ἀφανῶς καὶ τὰν κύκλῳ πάντα ἀλεαίνοντος, τάχα δὲ ἐπεὶ καὶ ταῖς θεριναῖς τροπαῖς πλημμυρῶν ὁ ποταμὸς προαναλίσκει τὰς νεφώσεις
- 115 —ἀρχεται μὲν γὰρ ἐπιβαίνειν θέρους ἐνισταμένου, λήγει δὲ λήγοντος, ἐν ᾧ χρόνῳ καὶ οἱ ἐτησίου καταράττουσιν ἐξ ἐναντίας τῶν τοῦ Νείλου στομάτων, δι' ὧν ἔτι κωλυόμενος ἐκχεῖσθαι, τῆς θαλάσσης ὑπὸ βίας τῶν ἀνέμων πρὸς ὕψος αἰρομένης καὶ τὰς τρικυμίας ὥσπερ μακρὸν τεῖχος ἀποτεινούσης, ἐντὸς εἰλεῖται, κάπειτα τῶν ρεῖθρων ὑπαντιαζόντων τοῦ τε κατιόντος ἄνωθεν ἀπὸ τῶν πηγῶν καὶ τοῦ θύραζε χωρεῖν ὀφείλοντος ταῖς ἀνακοπαῖς ἀνατρέχοντος εὐρύνεσθαι τε μὴ δυναμένων (αἱ γὰρ παρ' ἐκάτερα ἐκθλίβουσιν ὄχθαι), μετεωριζόμενος
- 116 ὡς εἰκὸς ἐπιβαίνει—, τάχα δ' ἐπεὶ καὶ περιττὸν ἦν ἐν Αἰγύπτῳ χειμῶνα γενέσθαι· πρὸς δ' γὰρ αἱ τῶν ὄμβρων φοραὶ χρήσιμοι, καὶ ὁ ποταμὸς λιμνάζων
- 117 τὰς ἀρούρας εἰς καρπῶν ἐτησίων γένεσιν. ἡ δὲ φύσις οὐ ματαιουργός, ὡς ὑετὸν χορηγεῖν μὴ
- [99] δεομένη γῆ, καὶ | ἅμα χαίρει τῷ πολυτρόπῳ καὶ πολυσχιδεῖ τῶν ἐπιστημονικῶν ἔργων τὴν συμφωνίαν τοῦ παντὸς ἐξ ἐναντιοτήτων ἐναρμοσαμένη· καὶ διὰ τοῦτο τοῖς μὲν ἄνωθεν ἐξ οὐρανοῦ τοῖς δὲ κάτωθεν ἐκ πηγῶν τε καὶ ποταμῶν παρέχει τὴν ἐξ
- 118 ὕδατος ὠφέλειαν. οὕτως οὖν τῆς χώρας διακειμένης καὶ ταῖς χειμεριναῖς ἐαριζούσης τροπαῖς καὶ τῶν μὲν πρὸς θαλάττῃ μόναίς ψεκάσιν

* At this point Philo's order begins to depart from that of 334

MOSES I. 114-118

those in southern latitudes, which is unvisited by one of the year's seasons—winter. The reason may be, some say, that it is not far from the torrid zone, and that the fiery heat which insensibly emanates thence warms all its surroundings. It may be, again, that the clouds are used up beforehand by the flooding of the river at the summer solstice. The river begins to rise as the summer opens, and ceases when it ceases, and during that time the Etesian winds sweep down opposite to the mouths of the Nile and put a stop to its outflow through them. For, as the sea rises to a great height through the violence of the winds, extending its huge billows like a long wall, it coops the river up within ; and then as the stream which flows from the upland springs, and the other which should find its way out but is driven inland by the obstacles which face it, meet each other, prevented as they are from expanding by the banks which compress them on either side, the river naturally rises aloft. Another possible reason is that winter is unneeded in Egypt. For the river, by making a lake of the fields, and thus producing the yearly crops, serves the purpose of rainfall. And, indeed, nature is no wastrel in her work, to provide rain for a land which does not want it. At the same time she rejoices to employ her science in works of manifold variety, and thus out of contrarities form the harmony of the universe. And therefore she supplies the benefit of water to some from heaven above, to others from the springs and rivers below. <sup>a</sup> Such was the condition of the land, enjoying springtime at mid-winter, the seaboard enriched by only slight Exodus. His fourth plague, that of hail, is seventh in Exodus (ix. 22-35).

PHILO

- ἀραιαῖς λιπαινομένων, τῶν δ' ὑπὲρ Μέμφιν, τὸ βασιλείου Αἰγύπτου, μηδὲ νιφομένων τὸ παράπαν, ἐξαίφνης οὕτως ἐνεωτέρισεν ὁ ἀήρ, ὥσθ' ὅσα ἐν τοῖς δυσχειμέροις ἀθρόα κατασκήψαι, φορὰς ὑετῶν, χάλαζαν πολλὴν καὶ βαρεῖαν, ἀνέμων συμπιπτόντων καὶ ἀντιπαταγούντων βίας, νεφῶν ῥήξεις, ἐπαλλήλους ἀστραπὰς καὶ βροντάς, κεραυνοὺς συνεχεῖς, οἱ τερατωδεστάτην ὄψιν παρείχοντο· θέοντες γὰρ διὰ τῆς χαλάζης, μαχομένης οὐσίας, οὔτε ἔτηκον αὐτὴν οὔτε ἐσβέννυντο, μένοντες δ' ἐν ὁμοίῳ καὶ δολιχεύοντες ἄνω καὶ κάτω διετήρουν τὴν χάλαζαν.
- 119 ἀλλ' οὐ μόνον ἡ ἐξαίσιος φορὰ πάντων τοὺς οἰκήτορας εἰς ὑπερβαλλούσας δυσθυμίας ἤγαγεν, ἀλλὰ καὶ τὸ τοῦ πράγματος ἄηθες· ὑπέλαβον γάρ, ὅπερ καὶ ἦν, ἐκ μηνιμάτων θείων κεκαιουργηῆσθαι τὰ συμβάντα, νεωτερίσαντος ὡς οὐπω πρότερον τοῦ ἀέρος ἐπὶ λύμη καὶ φθορᾷ δένδρων τε καὶ καρπῶν, οἷς συνεφθάρη ζῶα οὐκ ὀλίγα, τὰ μὲν περιψύξεσι, τὰ δὲ βάρει τῆς ἐπιπιπτούσης χαλάζης ὥσπερ καταλευσθέντα, τὰ δ' ὑπὸ τοῦ πυρὸς ἐξαναλωθέντα· ἔνια δ' ἡμίφλεκτα διέμενε τοὺς τύπους τῶν κεραυνίων τραυμάτων εἰς νοθεσίαν τῶν ὀρώντων ἐπιφερόμενα.
- 120 XXI. Λωφῆσαντος δὲ τοῦ κακοῦ καὶ πάλιν τοῦ βασιλέως καὶ τῶν περὶ αὐτὸν θρασυνομένων, εἰς τὸν ἀέρα Μωυσῆς τὴν ῥάβδον ἐκτείνει, κελεύσαντος τοῦ θεοῦ. κᾶπειτ' ἄνεμος καταράττει, νότος βιαιότατος, ὅλην τὴν ἡμέραν καὶ νύκτα προσεπιτεινόμενος καὶ σφοδρυνόμενος, αὐτὸς καθ' αὐτὸν ὢν showers, while the parts above Memphis, where the royal palace of Egypt was, experienced no rainfall at all, when suddenly a complete change came over the air, and all the visitations which belong to severe winter fell upon it in a body : rainstorms, a great quantity of heavy hail, violent winds, clashing and roaring against each other, cloudbursts, continuous claps of thunder and flashes of lightning and constant thunderbolts. These last provided a most marvellous spectacle, for they ran through the hail, their natural antagonist, and yet did not melt it nor were quenched by it, but unchanged coursed up and down and kept guard over the hail. Intense was the despondency 119 to which the inhabitants were reduced, not only by the disastrous onset of all these things, but by the strangeness of the event. For they thought, as indeed was the case, that divine wrath had brought about these novel happenings ; that the air in a way unknown before had conspired to ruin and destroy the trees and fruits, while at the same time many animals perished, some through excessive cold, others stoned to death, as it were, through the weight of the falling hail, others consumed by the fire, while some survived half-burnt and bore the marks of the wounds inflicted by the thunderbolts as a warning to the beholders.

---

<sup>a</sup> Philo's fifth plague, the locusts, is eighth in Exodus (x. 12-10).

XXI. When the plague abated, and the king and 120 his surroundings recovered their courage, Moses, at God's command,<sup>a</sup> stretched his rod into the air, and then a violent south<sup>b</sup> wind swooped down, gaining force and intensity throughout the day and night. This in itself was a source of much mischief, for the

<sup>b</sup> E.V. east wind (including winds at least from the south-east.—Driver).

PHILO

μεγάλη ζημία· ξηρός τε γάρ ἐστι καὶ κεφαλαλγῆς καὶ βαρυήκοος, ἄσας τε καὶ ἀδημονίας ἐμποιεῖν ἱκανός, καὶ μάλιστα ἐν Αἰγύπτῳ κειμένη κατὰ τὰ νότια, δι' ὧν αἱ περιπολήσεις τῶν φωσφόρων ἀστέρων, ὡς ἅμα τῷ διακινηθῆναι τὸν ἀφ' ἡλίου

121 φλογμὸν συνεπωθεῖσθαι καὶ πάντα καίειν. ἀλλὰ γὰρ ἅμ' αὐτῷ καὶ πλήθος ἀμύχανον ζώων ἐπεφέρετο φθοροποιὸν φυτῶν, ἀκρίδες, αἱ ρεύματος τρόπον ἀπαύστως ἐκχεόμεναι καὶ πάντα πληρώσασαι τὸν ἀέρα διέφαγον ὅσα οἱ κεραυνοὶ ὑπ[100] ἐλίποντο καὶ ἡ χάλαζα, ὡς | μηδὲν ἐν τῇ τοσαύ-

122 τη χώρα βλαστάνον ἔτι θεωρεῖσθαι. τότε μόλις εἰς ἀκριβεστάτην ἔννοιαν τῶν οἰκείων ἐλθόντες οἱ ἐν τέλει κακῶν προσελθόντες ἔλεγον τῷ βασιλεῖ· “μέχρι τίνος οὐκ ἐπιτρέπεις τὴν ἕξοδον τοῖς ἀνδράσιν; ἢ οὐπω μανθάνεις ἐκ τῶν γινομένων, ὅτι ἀπόλωλεν Αἴγυπτος;” ὁ δ' ὅσα τῷ δοκεῖν ἐφίεις ὠμολόγει, χαλάσαντος τοῦ δεινοῦ. πάλιν δ' εὐξαμένου Μωυσέως, ὑπολαβὼν ἐκ τῆς θαλάττης ἄνεμος ἀποσκίδνησι τὰς ἀκρίδας.

123 Ἄνασκεδασθειῶν δὲ καὶ τοῦ βασιλέως περὶ τὴν τοῦ ἔθνους ἄφεσιν δυσθανατοῦντος, ἐπιγίνεται τῶν πρότερον κακῶν μείζον· λαμπρᾶς γὰρ ἡμέρας οὕσης, ἕξαπιναίως ἀναχέεται σκότος, ἴσως μὲν καὶ ἡλίου γενομένης ἐκλείψεως τῶν ἐν ἔθει τελειότερας, ἴσως δὲ καὶ συνεχείαις νεφῶν καὶ πυκνότησιν ἀδιαστάτοις καὶ πιλῆσει βιαιοσάτη τῆς τῶν ἀκτίνων φορᾶς ἀνακοπέισης, ὡς ἀδιαφορεῖν ἡμέραν νυκτὸς καὶ τί γὰρ ἄλλ' ἢ μίαν νύκτα νομίζεσθαι μακρο-

MOSES I. 120-123

south wind is dry and produces headache and makes hearing difficult, and thus is fitted to cause distress and suffering, particularly in Egypt which lies well to the south, where the sun and the planets have their orbits, so that when the wind sets it in motion the scorching of the sun is pushed forward with it, and burns up everything. But it also brought with 121 it a huge multitude of creatures which destroyed the plants, locusts that is, who poured forth ceaselessly like a stream, and filling the whole air devoured whatever the lightnings and hail had left, so that nothing any longer could be seen growing in all that great country. Then those in authority, reluctantly 122 brought to a full realization of their own evil plight, approached the king and said : " How long will you refuse to grant these men leave to depart ? Do you not yet understand that Egypt is destroyed ? " The king yielded, or appeared to do so, and promised to comply if he were relieved from the dire scourge. And when Moses prayed again, a wind from the sea caught and scattered the locusts.

But, when they were scattered, and the king was 123 sick to death at the thought of releasing the people, a plague <sup>a</sup> arose greater than all that had gone before ; for, in bright daylight, darkness was suddenly overspread, possibly because there was an eclipse of the sun more complete than the ordinary, or perhaps because the stream of rays was cut off by continuous clouds, compressed with great force into masses of unbroken density. The result was that night and day were the same, and indeed what else could it seem but a single night of great length, equivalent to three <sup>a</sup> Philo's sixth plague, the darkness, is ninth in Exodus (x. 21-29).

PHILO

- τάτην τρισὶν ἢ μέραις ἴσῃν καὶ ταῖς ἰσαριθμοῖς νυξί.
 124 τότε δὴ φασὶ τοὺς μὲν ἐρριμμένους ἐν ταῖς εὐναῖς μὴ τολμᾶν ἐξανίστασθαι, τοὺς δ' ὀπότε κατεπεῖγοι τι τῶν τῆς φύσεως ἀναγκαίων ἐπαφωμένους τοίχων ἢ τινος ἑτέρου καθάπερ τυφλοὺς μόλις προέρχεσθαι. καὶ γὰρ τοῦ χρειώδους πυρὸς τὸ φέγγος τὸ μὲν ὑπὸ τῆς κατεχούσης ζάλῃς ἐσβέννυτο, τὸ δὲ τῷ βάθει τοῦ σκότους ἀμαυρούμενον ἐνηφανίζετο, ὡς τὴν ἀναγκαιοτάτην ὄψιν τῶν αἰσθήσεων ὑγιαίνουσαν πηρὸν εἶναι μηδὲν ὄραν δυναμένην, τετράφθαι δὲ καὶ τὰς ἄλλας οἷα ὑπηκόους πεσοῦσης τῆς ἡγεμονίδος.
 125 οὔτε γὰρ λέγειν τις οὔτ' ἀκούειν οὔτε προσενέγκα-σθαι τροφὰς ὑπέμενεν, ἀλλ' ἡσυχία καὶ λιμῷ παρἔτεινον αὐτοὺς οὐδεμιᾶ τῶν αἰσθήσεων σχολάζοντες, ἀλλ' ὑπὸ τοῦ πάθους ὅλοι συνηρπασμένοι, μέχρι πάλιν Μωυσῆς λαβὼν οἶκτον ἰκετεύει τὸν θεόν· ὁ δὲ φῶς ἀντὶ σκότους καὶ ἡμέραν ἀντὶ νυκτὸς ἐργάζεται σὺν αἰθρία πολλῇ.
 126 XXII. Τοιαύτας φασὶ γενέσθαι καὶ τὰς διὰ μόνου Μωυσέως ἐπιπλήξεις, τὴν διὰ χαλάζης καὶ κεραυνῶν, τὴν διὰ τῆς ἀκρίδος, τὴν διὰ σκότους, ὃ πᾶσαν ἰδέαν φωτὸς οὐ παρεδέχετο· κοινῇ δ' αὐτός τε καὶ ὁ ἀδελφὸς μίαν ἐπετράπησαν, ἣν αὐτίκα 127 σημανῶ. κελεύσαντος τοῦ θεοῦ, τέφραν ἀπὸ κα-μίνου λαμβάνουσι ταῖς χερσίν, ἣν Μωυσῆς κατὰ μέρος εἰς τὸν ἀέρα διέπαπτεν· ἔπειτα κονιορτὸς αἰφνίδιον ἐπενεχθεὶς ἀνθρώποις τε καὶ ἀλόγοις ζώοις ἀγρίαν καὶ δυσαληγὴ κατὰ τῆς δορᾶς ἀπάσης [101] ἔλκωσιν εἰργάζετο καὶ τὰ σώματα εὐθὺς | συνῶδει

<sup>a</sup> Or "fire of common use," cf. De Abr. 157, Quis Rerum 136.

MOSES I. 124-127

days and the same number of nights? Then, indeed, as we are told, some who had thrown themselves on their beds did not dare to rise from them, while others, when any of the needs of nature pressed, felt their way along the walls or any other object, proceeding with difficulty as though they were blind. For the light of artificial fire <sup>a</sup> was partly quenched by the prevailing storm wind, partly dimmed to the point of disappearance by the depth of the darkness, so that sight, the most indispensable of the senses, though sound in itself, was helpless and unable to see anything; and the other senses were discomfited, like subjects when their queen has fallen. For men <sup>125</sup> could not bring themselves to speak or hear or take food, but lay tortured in silence and famine with no heart to use any of the senses, so entirely overwhelmed were they by the disaster, until Moses again took pity and besought God, Who made light to take the place of darkness, and day of night, with bright open sky all around.

XXII. Such, we are told, were the plagues <sup>b</sup> inflicted through the agency of Moses alone, namely the plague of hail and lightning, the plague of the locusts, and that of the darkness which was proof against every form of light. One was committed to him and his brother together, which I will at once proceed to describe. They took in their hands, at <sup>127</sup> God's bidding, ashes from a furnace, which Moses scattered in the air, and then dust suddenly fell upon men and the lower animals alike. It produced an angry, painful ulceration over the whole skin, and, simultaneously with this eruption, their bodies <sup>b</sup> Philo's seventh plague, boils, is sixth in Exodus (ix. 8-12).

PHILO

- ταῖς ἕξανθήσεσιν ὑποπύους ἔχοντα φλυκταίνας, ἃς ἐτόπασεν ἄν τις ἀφανῶς ὑποκαιομένας ἀναζεῖν.
- 128 ἀλγηδόσι τε καὶ περιωδυνίαις κατὰ τὸ εἶκος ἐκ τῆς ἐλκώσεως καὶ φλογώσεως πιεζόμενοι μᾶλλον ἢ οὐχ ἦττον τῶν σωμάτων τὰς ψυχὰς ἔκαμνον ἐκτετρυχωμένοι ταῖς ἀνίαις—ἐν γὰρ ἄν τις ἀπὸ κεφαλῆς ἄχρι ποδῶν συνεχῆς ἔλκος ἐθεάσατο, τῶν κατὰ μέλος καὶ μέρος διεσπαρμένων εἰς μίαν καὶ τὴν αὐτὴν ἰδέαν ἀποκριθέντων—, ἕως πάλιν ἰκεσίαις τοῦ νομοθέτου, ἃς ὑπὲρ τῶν πασχόντων ἐποίησατο, ἡ νόσος ῥάων
- 129 ἐγένετο. κοινῇ μέντοι τὴν νοουθεσίαν ταύτην ἐπετραπήσαν δεόντως, ὁ μὲν ἀδελφὸς διὰ τὸν ἐπενεχθέντα κονιορτόν, ἐπεὶ τῶν ἀπὸ γῆς συμβαινόντων τὴν ἐπιμέλειαν ἔλαχε, Μωυσῆς δὲ διὰ τὸν ἀέρα μεταβαλόντα πρὸς κάκωσιν τῶν οἰκητόρων· ταῖς δ' ἀπ' ἀέρος καὶ οὐρανοῦ πληγαῖς οὗτος ὑπηρετεῖ.
- 130 XXIII. Λοιπαὶ δὲ τιμωρίαι τρεῖς εἰσιν αὐτουργηθεῖσαι δίχα τῆς ἀνθρώπων ὑπηρεσίας, ὧν κατὰ μίαν ἐκάστην, ὡς ἂν οἶόν τε ἦ, δηλώσω. πρώτη δ' ἐστὶν ἡ γενομένη διὰ ζώου τῶν ἐν τῇ φύσει πάντων θραυστάτου, κυνομυίας, ἣν ἐτύμως ἐκάλεσαν οἱ θετικοὶ τῶν ὀνομάτων—σοφοὶ γὰρ ἦσαν—ἐκ τῶν ἀναιδεστάτων ζώων συνθέντες τοῦνομα, μυίας καὶ κυνός, τοῦ μὲν τῶν χερσαίων θραυστάτου, τῆς δὲ τῶν πτηνῶν· ἐπιφοιτῶσι γὰρ καὶ ἐπιτρέχουσιν ἀδεῶς, κἂν ἀνείργῃ τις, εἰς τὸ ἀήττητον ἀντιφιλονεικοῦσιν, ἄχρισ ἂν αἵματος καὶ σαρκῶν κορε-
- 131 σθῶσιν. ἡ δὲ κυνόμυια τὴν ἀφ' ἑκατέρου τόλμαν

---

<sup>a</sup> Philo's eighth plague, dog-flies (E.V. flies), is fourth in Exodus (viii. 20-30).

MOSES I. 127-131

swelled with suppurated blisters, which might be supposed to be extravasations from inflammation lurking beneath. Oppressed as they naturally were 128 by the extreme painfulness and soreness of the ulceration and inflammation, they suffered in spirit more or no less than in body from the exhaustion which their miseries produced. For one continuous ulcer was to be seen stretching from head to foot, the sores scattered over every particular limb and part of the body being concentrated into a single form of the same appearance throughout. So it was until, again by the intercessions which the lawgiver made on behalf of the sufferers, the distemper was lightened. Rightly indeed was this chastisement 129 committed to the two in common : to the brother because the dust which came down upon the people was from the earth, and what was of earth was under his charge ; to Moses because the air was changed to afflict them, and plagues of heaven and air belonged to his ministration.

XXIII. The three remaining chastisements were 130 self-wrought, without any human agent, each of which I will proceed to describe as well as possible. In the first, a creature is employed whose ferocity is unequalled in all nature—the dog-fly.<sup>a</sup> This name, which the coiners of words in their wisdom have given it, well expresses its character, for it is a compound formed from the two most shameless animals of the land and the air—the dog and the fly. Both these are persistent and fearless in their assaults, and if one attempts to ward them off meet him with a perseverance which refuses to be beaten, until they have got their fill of flesh and blood. The dog-fly 131 has acquired the audacity of both, and is a creature

PHILO

- προσειληφύια δηκτικὸν καὶ ἐπίβουλον ζῶόν ἐστι· καὶ γὰρ πόρρωθεν μετὰ ροίζου καθάπερ βέλος εἰσακοντίζεται καὶ ἐπεμπίπτουσα βιαίως εὖ μάλα 132 ἐγχρίμπτεται. τότε δὲ καὶ θεήλατος ἦν ἡ προσβολή, ὡς δεδιπλασιάσθαι τὴν ἐξ αὐτῆς ἐπιβουλήν οὐκέτι μόνον τοῖς φυσικοῖς κεχρημένης πλεονεκτήμασιν, ἀλλὰ καὶ τοῖς ἐκ θείας ἐπιφροσύνης, ἣ τὸ ζῶον ὤπλιζε καὶ πρὸς ἀλκὴν ἀνήγειρε κατὰ τῶν 133 ἐγχωρίων. μετὰ τὴν κυνόμυϊαν εἶπετο τιμωρία πάλιν ἄνευ συμπράξεως ἀνθρωπίνης, βο-σκημάτων θάνατος· βουκόλια γὰρ καὶ αἰπόλια καὶ ποιμνία μεγάλα καὶ ὅσαι ὑποζυγίων καὶ ἄλλων θρεμμάτων ἰδέαι πᾶσαι μιᾷ ἡμέρᾳ, ὡς ἀφ' ἑνὸς συνθήματος, ἀγεληδὸν διεφθείροντο, τὴν ἀνθρώπων [102] | ἀπώλειαν, ἣ μικρὸν ὕστερον ἔμελλε γίνεσθαι, προμηνύουσαι καθάπερ ἐν ταῖς λοιμώδεσι νόσοις· λέγεται γὰρ προάγων τις εἶναι λοιμικῶν ἀρρωστη-μάτων ἢ ζῶων ἀλόγων αἰφνίδιος φθορά.
- 134 XXIV. Μεθ' ἣν ἡ δεκάτη καὶ τελευταία δίκη πάσας ὑπερβάλλουσα τὰς προτέρας ἐπεγένετο, θά-νατος Αἰγυπτίων οὔτε πάντων—οὐ γὰρ ἐρημῶσαι τὴν χώραν προηρείτο ὁ θεὸς ἀλλὰ νουθετῆσαι μόνον —οὔτε τῶν πλείστων ἀνδρῶν ὁμοῦ καὶ γυναικῶν ἐξ ἀπάσης ἡλικίας, ἀλλὰ τοῖς ἄλλοις ζῆν ἐφίεις μόνων τῶν πρωτοτόκων καταψηφίζεται θάνατον ἀρξάμενος ἀπὸ τοῦ πρεσβυτάτου τῶν βασιλέως παίδων καὶ λήξας εἰς τὸν τῆς ἀφανεστάτης ἀλετρίδος.
- 135 περὶ γὰρ μέσας νύκτας οἱ πρῶτοι πατέρας καὶ μητέρας προσειπόντες καὶ ὑπ' ἐκείνων υἱοὶ πάλιν

MOSES I. 131-135

venomous and vicious, which comes with a whirr from a distance, hurls itself like a javelin, and, with a violent onrush, fastens itself firmly on its victim. On this occasion the assault was also divinely im- 132 pelled, so that its viciousness was doubled, prompted by avidity due not only to nature but to divine providence, which armed the creature and roused it to use its force against the population.

After the dog-fly there followed again a chastise- 133 ment brought about without human co-operation, the death of the live-stock <sup>a</sup>; for great herds of oxen and sheep and goats, and every kind of beast of burden and other cattle, perished as by a single agreed signal in a single day, whole droves at a time, thus presaging the destruction of men which was about to follow, just as we find in epidemics. For pestilential disorders are said to be precluded by a sudden murrain among the lower animals.

XXIV. After this came the tenth and final judge- 134 ment, transcending all its predecessors.<sup>b</sup> This was the death of the Egyptians, not of the whole population, since God's purpose was not to make a complete desert of the country, but only to teach them a lesson, nor yet of the great majority of the men and women of every age. Instead, He permitted the rest to live, but sentenced the first-born only to death, beginning with the king and ending with the meanest woman who grinds at the mill, in each case their eldest male child. For, about midnight, those who had been the 135 first to call their parents father and mother, first to

<sup>a</sup> Philo's ninth plague, the murrain, is fifth in Exodus (ix. 1-7).

<sup>b</sup> For the tenth plague, and its sequel §§ 134-142, see Ex. xii. 29-36.

PHILO

- πρῶτον ὀνομασθέντες ὑγιαίνοντες καὶ τὰ σώματα ἔρρωμένοι πάντες ἀπ' οὐδεμιᾶς προφάσεως ἠβηδὸν ἕξαπιναιῶς ἀνήρηντο καὶ οὐδεμίαν οἰκίαν ἀμοιρῆσαι 136 φασὶ τότε τῆς συμφορᾶς. ἅμα δὲ τῇ ἔω κατὰ τὸ εἰκὸς ἕκαστοι θεασάμενοι τοὺς φιλτάτους ἀπροσ-δοκῆτως τετελευτηκότας, οἷς ὁμοδίαιτοι καὶ ὁμοτράπεζοι μέχρι τῆς ἑσπέρας ἐγεγένητο, βαρυτάτῳ πένθει κατασχεθέντες οἰμωγῆς πάντα ἐνέπλησαν, ὥστε συνέβη καὶ διὰ τὴν κοινοπραγίαν τοῦ πάθους ἀπάντων ἀθρόως ὁμοθυμαδὸν ἐκβοησάντων ἓνα θρήνον ἀπὸ περάτων ἐπὶ πέρατα κατὰ πάσης τῆς 137 χώρας συνηγῆσαι. καὶ μέχρι μὲν ἐν ταῖς οἰκίαις διέτριβον, ἀγνοῶν ἕκαστος τὸ τοῦ πλησίον κακὸν ἐπὶ τῷ ἑαυτοῦ μόνον ἔστενε, προελθὼν δὲ καὶ γνοὺς τὰ τῶν ἄλλων διπλοῦν πένθος πρὸς τῷ ἰδίῳ καὶ τὸ κοινὸν εὐθύς ἐλάμβανεν, ἐπ' ἐλάττονι καὶ κουφοτέρῳ μείζον καὶ βαρύτερον, ἅτε καὶ τὴν ἐλπίδα τῆς παραμυθίας ἀφηρημένος· τίς γὰρ ἔμελλε παρηγορεῖν 138 ἕτερον αὐτὸς ὢν τοῦδε χρεῖος; ὅπερ δ' ἐν τοῖς τοιοῦτοις φιλεῖ, τὰ παρόντα νομίσαντες ἀρχὴν εἶναι μειζόνων καὶ περὶ τῆς τῶν ἔτι ζώντων ἀπωλείας καταδείσαντες συνέδραμον εἰς τὰ βασιλεία δεδακρυμένοι καὶ τὰς ἐσθήτας περιερρηγμένοι κατεβόων τε τοῦ βασιλέως ὡς πάντων αἰτίου τῶν συμβεβηκότων 139 δεινῶν. εἰ γάρ, ἔλεγον, εὐθύς ἐν ἀρχῇ Μωυσέως ἐντυχόντος εἶασεν ἐξελθεῖν τὸ ἔθνος, οὐδενὸς ἂν τῶν γεγονότων πειραθῆναι τὸ παράπαν· εἴξαντος δ' αὐθαδεῖα τῇ συνήθει, τὰ ἐπίχειρα τῆς ἀκαίρου φιλονεικίας ἐξ ἐτοίμου λαβεῖν. εἰτ' ἄλλος ἄλλον παρεκάλει τὸν λεῶν μετὰ πάσης σπουδῆς ἐξ ἀπάσης

<sup>a</sup> Cf. πρώτη σ' ἐκάλεσα πατέρα καὶ σὺ παῖδ' ἐμέ, Eur. Iph. Aul. 122.

MOSES I. 135-139

be called sons by them,<sup>a</sup> all in full health and robust of body, were suddenly cut off wholesale without apparent cause, and no household, as we are told, was spared this calamity. When dawn came, every family, seeing their dearest thus unexpectedly dead, who, up till the evening, had shared their home and board, were naturally struck with profound grief and filled the whole place with their lamentations. And so, since in this general disaster the same emotion drew from all a united outcry, one single dirge of wailing resounded from end to end of the whole land. And, as long as they stayed in their houses, everyone, ignorant of his neighbour's evil plight, bewailed his own only; but, when they came forth and learned what had befallen the rest, their grief was straight-way doubled. To the personal sorrow, the lighter and lesser, was added the public, greater and heavier, since they lost even the hope of consolation. For who could be expected to comfort another if he needs consolation himself? And, as so often happens in such circumstances, they thought that their present condition was but the beginning of greater evils, and were filled with fear of the destruction of those who still lived. Consequently, bathed in tears and with garments rent, they rushed together to the palace and cried out against the king as the cause of all the dire events that had befallen them. If, they said, at the very beginning, when Moses first entreated him, he had suffered the people to go forth, they would have experienced none at all of these happenings; but, as he indulged his usual self-will, the rewards of his contentiousness had been promptly reaped by themselves. Then they exhorted each other to use all speed in driving the people from the

PHILO

- τῆς χώρας ἐξελαύνειν, καὶ τὸ μίαν ἡμέραν μᾶλλον 140 δέ ὥραν αὐτὸ μόνον κατασχεῖν πρὸς ἀνήκεστον [103] τιμωρίαν τιθέμενοι. XXV. | οἱ δ' ἐλαννόμενοι καὶ διωκόμενοι τῆς αὐτῶν εὐγενείας εἰς ἔννοιαν ἐλθόντες τόλμημα τολμῶσιν, ὁποῖον εἰκὸς ἦν τοὺς ἐλευθέρους καὶ μὴ ἀμνήμονας ὧν ἐπεβου-141 λεύθησαν ἀδίκως. πολλὴν γὰρ λείαν ἐκφορήσαντες τὴν μὲν αὐτοῖ διεκόμιζον ἐπηχθισμένοι, τὴν δὲ τοῖς ὑπόζυγίοις ἐπέθεσαν, οὐ διὰ φιλοχρηματίαν ἢ, ὡς ἂν τις κατηγορῶν εἴποι, τὴν τῶν ἀλλοτρίων ἐπι-θυμίαν—πόθεν;—ἀλλὰ πρῶτον μὲν ὧν παρὰ πάντα τὸν χρόνον ὑπηρέτησαν ἀναγκαῖον μισθὸν κομιζό-μενοι, εἶτα δὲ ὑπὲρ ὧν κατεδουλώθησαν ἐν ἐλάττωσι καὶ οὐχὶ τοῖς ἴσοις ἀντιλυποῦντες· ποῦ γὰρ ἐστ' ὅμοιον ζημία χρημάτων καὶ στέρησις ἐλευθερίας, 142 ὑπὲρ ἧς οὐ μόνον προῖεσθαι τὰς οὐσίας οἱ νοῦν ἔχοντες ἀλλὰ καὶ ἀποθνήσκειν ἐθέλουσιν; ἐν ἑκατέρῳ δὴ κατῶρθουν, εἴθ' ὡς ἐν εἰρήνῃ μισθὸν λαμβάνοντες, ὃν παρ' ἀκόντων<sup>1</sup> πολὺν χρόνον οὐκ ἀποδιδόντων ἀπεστεροῦντο, εἴθ' ὡς ἐν πολέμῳ τὰ τῶν ἐχθρῶν φέρειν ἀξιοῦντες νόμῳ τῶν κεκρατηκότων· οἱ μὲν γὰρ χειρῶν ἤρξαν ἀδίκων, ξένους καὶ ἰκέτας, ὡς ἔφην πρότερον, καταδουλωσάμενοι τρόπον αἰχμαλώτων, οἱ δὲ καιροῦ παραπεσόντος ἡμύναντο δίχα τῆς ἐν ὄπλοις παρασκευῆς, προασπί-ζοντος καὶ τὴν χεῖρα ὑπερέχοντος τοῦ δικαίου.
 143 XXVI. Τοσαύταις μὲν δὴ πληγαῖς καὶ τιμωρίαις Αἴγυπτος ἐνουθετεῖτο, ὧν οὐδεμία τῶν Ἑβραίων

<sup>1</sup> The mss. vary here considerably and the construction in the text as here printed is difficult. A simple emendation would be λαμβάνοντες παρ' ἀκόντων ὃν, and so, except that ἀ appears instead of ὃν, it is in the paraphrase of Procopius quoted in Cohn, p. 153.

MOSES I. 139-143

whole country, and declared that to detain them even for a single day, or rather only for an hour, would bring upon them a deadly vengeance. XXV.

The Hebrews, thus hunted as outcasts from the land, 140 and conscious of their own high lineage, were emboldened to act as was natural to them, as freemen and men who were not oblivious of the injustices which malice had inflicted on them ; for they took 141 out with them much spoil, which they carried partly on their backs, partly laid on their beasts of burden. And they did this not in avarice, or, as their accusers might say, in covetousness of what belonged to others. No, indeed. In the first place, they were but receiving a bare wage for all their time of service ; secondly, they were retaliating, not on an equal but on a lesser scale, for their enslavement. For what resemblance is there between forfeiture of money and deprivation of liberty, for which men of sense are willing to sacrifice not only their substance but their life ? In either case, their action was right, whether 142 one regard it as an act of peace, the acceptance of payment long kept back through reluctance to pay what was due, or as an act of war, the claim under the law of the victors to take their enemies' goods. For the Egyptians began the wrongdoing by reducing guests and suppliants to slavery like captives, as I said before. The Hebrews, when the opportunity came, avenged themselves without warlike preparations, shielded by justice whose arm was extended to defend them.

XXVI. With all these plagues and punishments 143 was Egypt admonished, none of which touched the

PHILO

- καίτοι γε ἐν ταῖς αὐταῖς πόλεσι καὶ κώμαις καὶ οἰκίαις συνδιατριβόντων ἦψατο, γῆς ὕδατος ἀέρος πυρός, ἃ μέρη τῆς φύσεώς ἐστιν, ἦν ἀμήχανον ἐκφυγεῖν, ἐπιθεμένων· ὃ δὴ καὶ παραδοξότατον ἦν, ὑπὸ τῶν αὐτῶν κατὰ τὸν αὐτὸν τόπον καὶ χρόνον
- 144 τοὺς μὲν διαφθείρεσθαι, τοὺς δὲ σώζεσθαι. ὁ ποταμὸς εἰς αἶμα μετέβαλεν, ἀλλ' οὐχ Ἑβραίοις· ἦνίκα γὰρ βουλευθεῖεν ἀρύσασθαι, τροπὴν ἐλάβρανεν εἰς πότιμον. βάτραχος ἐκ τῶν ὑδάτων ἐπὶ τὴν χέρσον ἀνερπύσας ἀγορὰς καὶ ἐπαύλεις καὶ οἰκίας ἐπλήρωσεν, ἀλλ' ἀπὸ τῶν Ἑβραίων ἐξανεχώρει μόνων καθάπερ διακρίνειν ἐπιστάμενος, οὓς τε χρή
- 145 κολάζεσθαι καὶ τούναντίον. οὐ σκνίπες, οὐ κυνόμυια, οὐκ ἀκρίς, ἣ καὶ φυτὰ καὶ καρποὺς καὶ ζῶα καὶ ἀνθρώπους μεγάλα ἔβλαψε, τούτοις προσέπησαν· οὐχ ὑετῶν, οὐ χαλάζης, οὐ κεραυνῶν αἱ
- [104] γενόμενα | συνεχεῖς φοραὶ μέχρι τούτων ἔφθασαν· ἐλκώσεως τῆς ἀργαλεωτάτης εἰς τὸ παθεῖν οὐδ' ὄναρ ἐπήσθοντο· βαθυτάτου σκότους τοῖς ἄλλοις ἀναχυθέντος, ἐν αὐγῇ καθαρᾷ διήγαγον, τοῦ ἡμερησίου φωτὸς ἐπιλάμποντος· ἀναιρουμένων τῶν παρ' Αἰγυπτίοις πρωτοτόκων, ἐτελεύτησεν Ἑβραῖος οὐδεὶς· οὐδὲ γὰρ εἰκὸς ἦν, ὅποτε καὶ ἡ τῶν ἀμυθῆτων φθορὰ θρεμμάτων οὐδεμίαν τῶν παρὰ τούτοις
- 146 ἀγέλην συνεπεσπάσατο πρὸς ἀπώλειαν. καὶ μοί τις δοκεῖ παρατυχῶν τοῖς γενομένοις κατ' ἐκείνον τὸν καιρὸν μηδὲν ἂν ἄλλο νομίσει τοὺς Ἑβραίους ἢ θεατὰς ὧν ἕτεροι κακῶν ὑπέμενον καὶ οὐ μόνον<sup>1</sup>

<sup>1</sup> Cohn, following Clem. Al. Strom. i. 23 θεατὰ δὲ Ἑβραῖοι ἐγένοντο ὧν ἕτεροι κακῶν ὑπέμενον ἀκινδύνως ἐκμανθάνοντες τὴν δύναμιν τοῦ θεοῦ, proposed to fill the lacuna with the last five

MOSES I. 143-146

Hebrews, though they dwelt in the same cities and villages and houses, and though earth, water, air, fire, the constituent parts of that nature which it is impossible to escape, joined in the attack. And the strangest thing of all was that the same elements in the same place and at the same time brought destruction to one people and safety to the other. The river 144 changed to blood, but not for the Hebrews ; for, when they wished to draw from it, it turned into good drinking-water. The frog tribe crept from the water on to the land, and filled the market-places, the farm buildings and houses, but held aloof from the Hebrews alone, as though it knew how to distinguish who should be punished and who should not. Neither the gnats, nor the dog-flies nor the 145 locusts, which did so great damage to plants and fruits and animals and men, winged their way to them ; neither the rainstorm nor the hail nor the thunderbolts which fell continuously reached as far as them. That most painful ulceration was not felt, or even imagined, by them. When the others were wrapped in profound darkness, they lived in clear radiance with the light of day shining upon them. When the first-born of the Egyptians was slain, no Hebrew died, nor was it likely that they should, when even the murrain, by which numberless cattle perished, did not involve a single herd of theirs in the destruction. Indeed, I think that everyone 146 who witnessed the events of that time could not but have thought of the Hebrews as spectators of the sufferings of others, and not merely spectators words of the quotation. Mangey was content with τοῦτο only. Perhaps ἀκινδύνους alone would be enough, Clement's remaining five words representing εὐσέβειαν.

---

PHILO

. . . , ἀλλὰ καὶ μαθημάτων τὸ κάλλιστον καὶ ὠφελιμώτατον ἀναδιδασκομένους, εὐσέβειαν· οὐ γὰρ ποθ' οὕτως ἢ τῶν ἀγαθῶν καὶ κακῶν κρίσις ἐμφανῶς ἦλθε τοῖς μὲν φθορὰν τοῖς δὲ σωτηρίαν παρασχοῦσα.

147 XXVII. Τῶν δ' ἐξιόντων καὶ μετανισταμένων οἱ μὲν ἀνδρὸς ἔχοντες ἡλικίαν ὑπὲρ ἐξήκοντα μυριάδας ἦσαν, ὁ δ' ἄλλος ὄμιλος πρεσβυτῶν, παιδῶν, γυναικῶν οὐ ράδιος ἀριθμηθῆναι· μιγάδων δὲ καὶ συγκλύδων καὶ θεραπειᾶς ὄχλος συνεχῆσθαι ὡσανεὶ νόθον μετὰ γνησίου πλήθους· οὗτοι δ' ἦσαν οἱ ἐκ γυναικῶν γεννηθέντες Αἰγυπτίων τοῖς Ἑβραίοις καὶ τῷ πατρίῳ γένει προσνεμηθέντες καὶ ὅσοι τὸ θεοφιλὲς ἀγάμενοι τῶν ἀνδρῶν ἐπηλύται ἐγένοντο καὶ εἰ δὴ τινες τῷ μεγέθει καὶ πλήθει τῶν ἐπαλλήλων κολάσεων μετεβάλλοντο σωφρονησθέντες.

148 τούτων ἀπάντων ἡγεμῶν ἐχειροτονεῖτο Μωυσῆς τὴν ἀρχὴν καὶ βασιλείαν λαβὼν οὐχ ὡσπερ ἔνιοι τῶν ἐπὶ τὰς δυναστείας ὠθουμένων ὄπλοις καὶ μηχανήμασιν ἵππικαῖς τε καὶ πεζικαῖς καὶ ναυτικαῖς δυνάμεσιν, ἀλλ' ἀρετῆς ἕνεκα καὶ καλοκαγαθίας καὶ τῆς πρὸς ἅπαντας εὐνοίας, ἣ χρώμενος αἰεὶ διετελεῖ, καὶ προσέτι καὶ τοῦ φιλαρέτου καὶ φιλοκάλου θεοῦ

149 γέρας ἄξιον αὐτῷ παρασχόντος. ἐπειδὴ γὰρ τὴν Αἰγύπτου κατέλπεν ἡγεμονίαν, θυγατριδοῦς τοῦ τότε βασιλεύοντος ὦν, ἕνεκα τῶν κατὰ τὴν χώραν γινομένων ἀδικημάτων πολλὰ χαίρειν φράσας ταῖς ἀπὸ τῶν θεμένων ἐλπίσι διὰ ψυχῆς εὐγένειαν καὶ φρονήματος μέγεθος καὶ τὸ μισοπόνηρον φύσει, τῷ • See Ex. xii. 27, 37 f.

MOSES I. 146-149

in safety, but learners thereby of the finest and most profitable of lessons—piety. For never was judgement so clearly passed on good and bad, a judgement which brought perdition to the latter and salvation to the former.

XXVII. The departing emigrants had among them 147 over six hundred thousand men of military age, while the rest of the multitude, consisting of old men, women-folk and children, could not easily be counted. They were accompanied by a promiscuous, nondescript and menial crowd, a bastard host, so to speak, associated with the true-born. These were the children of Egyptian women by Hebrew fathers into whose families they had been adopted, also those who, reverencing the divine favour shewn to the people, had come over to them, and such as were converted and brought to a wiser mind by the magnitude and the number of the successive punishments.<sup>a</sup>

The appointed leader of all these was Moses, invested 148 with this office and kingship, not like some of those who thrust themselves into positions of power by means of arms and engines of war and strength of infantry, cavalry and navy, but on account of his goodness and his nobility of conduct and the universal benevolence which he never failed to shew. Further, his office was bestowed upon him by God, the lover of virtue and nobility, as the reward due to him. For, when he gave up the lordship of Egypt, which 149 he held as son to the daughter of the then reigning king, because the sight of the iniquities committed in the land and his own nobility of soul and magnanimity of spirit and inborn hatred of evil led him to renounce completely his expected inheritance from the kinsfolk of his adoption, He Who presides

PHILO

πρυτανεύοντι καὶ ἐπιμελουμένῳ τῶν ὅλων ἔδοξεν αὐτὸν ἀμείψασθαι βασιλείᾳ πολυανθρωποτέρου καὶ κρείττονος ἔθνους, ὅπερ ἐμέλλεν ἐξ ἀπάντων τῶν ἄλλων ἱεράσθαι τὰς ὑπὲρ τοῦ γένους τῶν ἀνθρώπων αἰεὶ ποιησόμενον εὐχὰς ὑπὲρ τε κακῶν ἀποτροπῆς 150 καὶ μετουσίας ἀγαθῶν. παραλαβὼν δὲ τὴν ἀρχὴν οὐχ ὥσπερ ἔνιοι τὸν ἴδιον αὖξιν οἶκον καὶ τοὺς υἱοὺς—δύο γὰρ ἦσαν αὐτῷ—προάγειν ἐπὶ μέγα δυνάμει ἐσπούδασεν, ὡς ἐν μὲν τῷ παρόντι κοινωνοὺς αὐθις δὲ καὶ διαδόχους ἀποφῆναι· | [105] γνώμη γὰρ ἀδόλω καὶ καθαρᾷ πρὸς πάντα μικρά τε αὐτῷ καὶ μεγάλα χρώμενος τὴν φυσικὴν πρὸς τὰ τέκνα φιλοστοργίαν οἶα κριτῆς ἀγαθὸς ἐνίκα τῷ 151 περὶ τὸν λογισμὸν ἀδεκάστῳ. προὔκειτο γὰρ ἐν αὐτῷ τέλος ἀναγκαιότατον, ὀνήσαι τοὺς ἀρχομένους καὶ πάνθ' ὑπὲρ τῆς τούτων ὠφελείας ἔργῳ καὶ λόγῳ πραγματεῦσθαι, μηδένα παραλιπόντι καιρὸν τῶν 152 συντεινόντων εἰς κοινὴν κατόρθωσιν. μόνος οὗτος τῶν πῶποθ' ἡγεμονευσάντων οὐ χρυσὸν οὐκ ἄργυρον ἔθησαυρίσατο, οὐ δασμοὺς ἐξέλεξεν, οὐκ οἰκίας, οὐ κτήματα, οὐ θρέμματα, οὐ θεραπείαν οἰκετικὴν, οὐ προσόδους, οὐκ ἄλλο τῶν εἰς πολυτέλειαν καὶ περιουσίαν οὐδὲν ἐκτήσατο, καίτοι πάντων ἔχειν 153 ἀφθονίαν δυνάμενος· ἀλλ' ὑπολαβὼν πενίας ψυχικῆς ἔργον εἶναι τὸν ἐν ταῖς ὕλαις ἀποδέχεσθαι πλοῦτον τοῦ μὲν ὡς τυφλοῦ κατεφρόνησε, τὸν δὲ βλέποντα τῆς φύσεως ἐξετίμησε καὶ ζηλωτῆς ὡς οὐκ οἶδ' εἶ τις ἕτερος αὐτοῦ γενόμενος ἐν μὲν ἐσθῆσι καὶ τροφαῖς καὶ τοῖς ἄλλοις τοῖς περὶ δίαιταν οὐδὲν ἐπιτραγωδῶν πρὸς σεμνότερον ὄγκον εὐτέλειαν καὶ εὐκολίαν ἐπετήδευεν ἰδιώτου, πολυτέλειαν δὲ τῷ ὄντι βασιλικὴν ἐν οἷς καλὸν ἦν πλεονεκτεῖν τὸν

MOSES I. 149-153

over and takes charge of all things thought good to requite him with the kingship of a nation more populous and mightier, a nation destined to be consecrated above all others to offer prayers for ever on behalf of the human race that it may be delivered from evil and participate in what is good. Having received 150 this office, he did not, like some, take pains to exalt his own house, and promote his sons, of whom he had two, to great power and make them his consorts for the present and his successors for the hereafter. For in all things great and small he followed a pure and guileless policy, and, like a good judge, allowed the incorruptibility of reason to subdue his natural affection for his children. For he had set before him one 151 essential aim, to benefit his subjects ; and, in all that he said or did, to further their interests and neglect no opportunity which would forward the common well-being. In solitary contrast to those who had 152 hitherto held the same authority, he did not treasure up gold and silver, did not levy tributes, did not possess houses or chattels or livestock or a staff of slaves or revenues or any other accompaniment of costly and opulent living, though he might have had all in abundance. He held that to prize material 153 wealth shews poverty of soul, and despised such wealth as blind ; but the wealth of nature which has eyes to see he highly honoured and zealously pursued, more perhaps than any other man. In dress and food and the other sides of life, he made no arrogant parade to increase his pomp and grandeur. But, while in these he practised the economy and unassuming ways of a private citizen, he was liberal in the truly royal expenditure of those treasures which the ruler may well desire to have in abundance.

PHILO

- 154 ἄρχοντα· ταῦτα δ' ἦσαν ἐγκράτειαι, καρτερίαι, σωφροσύναι, ἀγχίνουαι, συνέσεις, ἐπιστήμαι, πόνοι, κακοπάθειαι, ἡδονῶν ὑπεροψίαι, δικαιοσύναι, προτροπαὶ πρὸς τὰ βέλτιστα, ψόγοι καὶ κολάσεις ἀμαρτανόντων νόμιμοι, ἔπαινοι καὶ τιμαὶ κατορθούντων
- 155 πάλιν σὺν νόμῳ. XXVIII. τοιγαροῦν πολλὰ χαίρειν φράσαντα πολυχρηματία καὶ τῷ παρ' ἀνθρώποις μέγα πνέοντι πλούτῳ γεραίρει θεὸς τὸν μέγιστον καὶ τελεώτατον ἀντιδούς πλοῦτον αὐτῷ· οὗτος δ' ἐστὶν ὁ τῆς συμπάσης γῆς καὶ θαλάττης καὶ ποταμῶν καὶ τῶν ἄλλων ὅσα στοιχεῖα καὶ συγκρίματα· κοινωνὸν γὰρ ἀξιώσας ἀναφανῆναι τῆς ἑαυτοῦ λήξεως ἀνῆκε πάντα τὸν κόσμον ὡς κληρο-
- 156 νόμῳ κτήσιν ἀρμόζουσαν. τοιγαροῦν ὑπήκουεν ὡς δεσπότη τῶν στοιχείων ἕκαστον ἀλλάττον ἢ εἶχε δύναμιν καὶ ταῖς προστάξεσιν ὑπέικον· καὶ θαυμαστὸν ἴσως οὐδέν· εἰ γὰρ κατὰ τὴν παροιμίαν “κοινὰ τὰ φίλων,” φίλος δὲ ὁ προφήτης ἀνείρηται θεοῦ, κατὰ τὸ ἀκόλουθον μετέχει ἂν αὐτοῦ καὶ τῆς
- 157 κτήσεως, καθ' ὃ χρειῶδες. ὁ μὲν γὰρ θεὸς πάντα κεκτημένος οὐδενὸς δεῖται, ὁ δὲ σπουδαῖος ἄνθρωπος κέκτηται μὲν οὐδὲν κυρίως ἀλλ' οὐδ' ἑαυτόν, τῶν δὲ τοῦ θεοῦ κειμηλίων, καθ' ὅσον ἂν οἶός τε ἦ, μετα-
- [106] λαγχάνει. | καὶ μήποτ' εἰκότως· κοσμοπολίτης γὰρ ἐστὶν, ἧς χάριν αἰτίας οὐδεμιᾶ τῶν κατὰ τὴν οἰκουμένην πόλεων ἐνεγράφη, δεόντως, οὐ μέρος
- 158 χώρας ἀλλ' ὅλον τὸν κόσμον κλῆρον λαβών. τί δ'; οὐχὶ καὶ μείζονος τῆς πρὸς τὸν πατέρα τῶν ὄλων καὶ ποιητὴν κοινωνίας ἀπέλαυσε προσρήσεως τῆς αὐτῆς ἀξιωθεῖς; ἄνομάσθη γὰρ ὄλου τοῦ ἔθνους

<sup>a</sup> Cf. De Abr. 235.

<sup>b</sup> Ex. xxxiii. 11.

MOSES I. 154-158

These treasures were the repeated exhibition of self- 154 restraint, continence, temperance, shrewdness, good sense, knowledge, endurance of toil and hardships, contempt of pleasures, justice, advocacy of excellence, censure and chastisement according to law for wrongdoers, praise and honour for well-doers, again as the law directs. XXVIII. And so, as he abjured the 155 accumulation of lucre, and the wealth whose influence is mighty among men, God rewarded him by giving him instead the greatest and most perfect wealth. That is the wealth of the whole earth and sea and rivers, and of all the other elements and the combinations which they form.
For, since God judged him worthy to appear as a partner of His own possessions, He gave into his hands the whole world as a portion well fitted for His heir. Therefore, each element obeyed him as its 156 master, changed its natural properties and submitted to his command, and this perhaps is no wonder. For if, as the proverb says, what belongs to friends is common,<sup>a</sup> and the prophet is called the friend of God,<sup>b</sup> it would follow that he shares also God's possessions, so far as it is serviceable. For God possesses all 157 things, but needs nothing; while the good man, though he possesses nothing in the proper sense, not even himself, partakes of the precious things of God so far as he is capable. And that is but natural, for he is a world citizen, and therefore not on the roll of any city of men's habitation, rightly so because he has received no mere piece of land but the whole world as his portion. Again, was not the joy of his partner- 158 ship with the Father and Maker of all magnified also by the honour of being deemed worthy to bear the same title? For he was named god and

PHILO

- θεὸς καὶ βασιλεύς· εἷς τε τὸν γνώφον, ἔνθα ἦν ὁ θεός, εἰσελθεῖν λέγεται, τουτέστιν εἰς τὴν αἰδιῆ καὶ ἀόρατον καὶ ἀσώματον τῶν ὄντων παραδειγματικὴν οὐσίαν, τὰ ἀθέατα φύσει θνητῇ κατανοῶν· καθάπερ τε γραφὴν εὐ δεδημιουργημένην ἑαυτὸν καὶ τὸν ἑαυτοῦ βίον εἰς μέσον προαγαγὼν πάγκαλον καὶ θεοειδὲς ἔργον ἔστησε παράδειγμα τοῖς ἐθέλουσι
- 159 μιμῆσθαι. εὐδαίμονες δ' ὅσοι τὸν τύπον ταῖς ἑαυτῶν ψυχαῖς ἐναπεμάξαντο ἢ ἐσπούδασαν ἐναπομάξασθαι· φερέτω γὰρ ἡ διάνοια μάλιστα μὲν τὸ εἶδος τέλειον ἀρετῆς, εἰ δὲ μή, τὸν γοῦν ὑπὲρ τοῦ κτήσασθαι τὸ εἶδος ἀνευδοίαστον πόθον.
- 160 καὶ μὴν οὐδ' ἐκεῖνό τις ἀγνοεῖ, ὅτι ζηλωταὶ τῶν ἐνδόξων οἱ ἀφανεῖς εἰσι καί, ὧν ἂν ἐκεῖνοι μάλιστ' ὀρέγεσθαι δοκῶσι, πρὸς ταῦτα τὰς αὐτῶν ἀποτείνουσιν ὀρμάς· ἐπειδὴν γοῦν ἡγεμῶν ἀρξῆται καθηδυπαθεῖν καὶ πρὸς τὸν ἀβροδίαιτον ἀποκλίνειν βίον, σύμπαν ὀλίγου δεῖν τὸ ὑπήκοον τὰς γαστρὸς καὶ τῶν μετὰ γαστέρα προσαναρρήγγυσιν ἔξω τῶν ἀναγκαίων ἐπιθυμίας, εἰ μὴ τινες εὐμοιρία χρῆσαιτο φύσεως ψυχὴν οὐκ ἐπίβουλον ἀλλ' εὐμενῆ
- 161 καὶ ἴω κτησάμενοι· ἐὰν δ' αὐστηροτέραν καὶ σεμνοτέραν ἔληται προαίρεσιν, καὶ οἱ λίαν αὐτῶν ἀκράτορες μεταβάλλουσι πρὸς ἐγκράτειαν ἢ φόβῳ ἢ αἰδοῖ σπουδάζοντες ὑπόληψιν ἐμποιεῖν, ὅτι ἄρα ζηλωταὶ τῶν ὁμοίων εἰσὶ· καὶ οὐκ ἂν ποθ' οἱ χεῖρους τὰ τῶν κρειττόνων ἀλλ' οὐδὲ μανέντες ἀποδοκιμά-
- 162 ζοιεν. τάχα δ', ἐπεὶ καὶ νομοθέτης ἔμελλεν ἔσεσθαι, πολὺ πρότερον αὐτὸς ἐγένετο νόμος ἔμφυχός τε καὶ λογικὸς θεῖα προνοία, ἥτις ἀγνοοῦντα αὐτὸν εἰς νομοθέτην ἐχειροτόνησεν αὐθις

MOSES I. 158-162

king of the whole nation, and entered, we are told, into the darkness where God was,<sup>a</sup> that is into the unseen, invisible, incorporeal and archetypal essence of existing things. Thus he beheld what is hidden from the sight of mortal nature, and, in himself and his life displayed for all to see, he has set before us, like some well-wrought picture, a piece of work beautiful and godlike, a model for those who are willing to copy it. Happy are they who imprint, or 159 strive to imprint, that image in their souls. For it were best that the mind should carry the form of virtue in perfection, but, failing this, let it at least have the unflinching desire to possess that form.

And, indeed, we all know this, that 160 meaner men emulate men of distinction, and set their inclinations in the direction of what they seem to desire. Thus, when a ruler begins to shew profligacy and turn to a life of luxury, the whole body almost of his subjects gives full vent to the appetites of belly and sex beyond their actual needs, save in the case of some who, blessed by the gifts of nature, possess a soul kindly and propitious and free from viciousness; whereas, if that ruler adopt a more severe 161 and more serious rule of life, even the very licentious are converted to continence and are eager, either through fear or shame, to create the impression that, after all, their aims are like to his. In fact the worse, even in madness, will never be found to condemn the ways of the better. Perhaps, too, since he was 162 destined to be a legislator, the providence of God which afterwards appointed him without his knowledge to that work, caused him long before that day to be the reasonable and living impersonation of law.

<sup>a</sup> Ex. xx. 21, cf. De Mut. 7.

PHILO

- 163 XXIX. Ἐπειδὴ τοίνυν παρ' ἐκόντων ἔλαβε τὴν ἀρχήν, βραβεύοντας καὶ ἐπινεύοντας θεοῦ, τὴν ἀποικίαν ἔστειλεν εἰς Φοινίκην καὶ Συρίαν τὴν κοίλην καὶ Παλαιστίνην, ἣ τότε προσηγορεύετο Χανααίων, ἧς οἱ ὄροι τριῶν ἡμερῶν ὁδὸν διειστήκεσαν ἀπ' Αἰγύπτου. εἰτ' ἦγεν αὐτοὺς οὐ | τὴν 164 [107] ἐπίτομον, ἅμα μὲν εὐλαβηθεῖς, μὴ ποθ', ὑπαντιασάντων τῶν οἰκητόρων διὰ φόβον ἀναστάσεως καὶ ἀνδραποδισμοῦ καὶ γενομένου πολέμου, πάλιν τὴν αὐτὴν ὁδὸν ὑποστρέψωσι εἰς Αἴγυπτον, ἀπ' ἐχθρῶν ἐπ' ἐχθρούς, νέων ἐπ' ἀρχαίους, γέλως καὶ χλεῦη γενησόμενοι καὶ χεῖρω καὶ ἀργαλεώτερα τῶν προτέρων ὑπομενοῦντες, ἅμα δὲ καὶ βουλόμενος αὐτοὺς δι' ἐρήμης ἄγων καὶ μακρᾶς δοκιμάσαι, πῶς ἔχουσι πειθαρχίας ἐν οὐκ ἀφθόνοις χορηγίαις ἀλλ' 165 ἐκ τοῦ κατ' ὀλίγον ὑποσπανίζούσαις. ἐκτραπόμενος οὖν τὴν ἐπ' εὐθείας, ἐγκάρσιον ἀτραπὸν εὐρῶν καὶ νομίσας κατατείνειν ἄχρι τῆς ἐρυθρᾶς θαλάττης ὁδοιπορεῖν ἤρχετο. τεράστιον δέ φασι συμβῆναι κατ' ἐκείνον τὸν χρόνον μεγαλουργημάτων τῆς φύσεως, ὃ μηδεὶς πω μέμνηται πάλαι γεγονός.
 166 νεφέλη γὰρ εἰς εὐμεγέθη κίονα σχηματισθείσα προῆι τῆς πληθύος, ἡμέρας μὲν ἡλιοειδὲς ἐκλάμπουσα φέγγος, νύκτωρ δὲ φλογοειδὲς, ὑπὲρ τοῦ μὴ πλάξεσθαι κατὰ τὴν πορείαν, ἀλλ' ἀπλανεστάτῳ ἔπεσθαι ἡγεμόνι ὁδοῦ. τάχα μέντοι καὶ τῶν ὑπάρχων τις ἦν τοῦ μεγάλου βασιλέως, ἀφανὴς ἄγγελος, ἐγκατελιημμένος τῇ νεφέλῃ προηγητήρ, ὃν οὐ θέμις σώματος ὀφθαλμοῖς ὁρᾶσθαι.
 167 XXX. Θεασάμενος δ' ὁ τῆς Αἰγύπτου βασιλεὺς ἀνοδία χρωμένους, ὡς ᾤετο, καὶ διὰ τραχείας καὶ <sup>a</sup> For §§ 163-180 see Ex. xiii. 17-xv. 21.

MOSES I. 163-167

XXIX. <sup>a</sup> So, having received the authority which 163 they willingly gave him, with the sanction and assent of God, he proposed to lead them to settle in Phoenicia and Coelesyria and Palestine, then called the land of the Canaanites, the boundaries of which were three days' journey from Egypt. The course by 164 which he then led them was not the straight road. He avoided this, partly because he was apprehensive that if the inhabitants, fearing to lose their homes and personal liberty, offered them opposition, and war ensued, they might return by the same road to Egypt, and thus, exchanging one enemy for another, the new for the old, might be mocked, derided and subjected to hardships worse and more painful than what they underwent before. Partly, too, he wished by leading them through a long stretch of desert country to test the extent of their loyalty when supplies were not abundant but gradually grew scarcer and scarcer. Therefore, leaving the straight road, 165 he found one at an angle to it, and, thinking that it extended to the Red Sea, began the journey. It was then, we are told, that there occurred a prodigy, a mighty work of nature, the like of which none can remember to have been seen in the past. A cloud 166 shaped like a tall pillar, the light of which in the day-time was as the sun and in night as flame, went before the host, so that they should not stray in their journey, but follow in the steps of a guide who could never err. Perhaps indeed there was enclosed within the cloud one of the lieutenants of the great King, an unseen angel, a forerunner on whom the eyes of the body were not permitted to look.

XXX. But the king of Egypt, seeing, as he thought, 167 that they had lost their way and were traversing a

PHILO

ἀτριβοῦς ἐρήμης βαδίζοντας ἦσθη μὲν ἐπὶ τῷ κατὰ τὴν πορείαν σφάλματι, νομίσας συγκεκλεισθαι δι-ἔξοδον οὐκ ἔχοντας, ἐπὶ δὲ τῷ μεθέσθαι μετανοῶν ἐπεχείρει διώκειν, ὡς ἢ φόβῳ τὴν πληθὺν ὑποστρέψων καὶ δουλωσόμενος αὐθις ἢ ἀποκτενῶν 168 ἤβηδὸν ἀφηνιάζουσαν. εἶθ' ἅπασαν τὴν ἱππικὴν δύναμιν παραλαβὼν ἀκοντιστάς τε καὶ σφενδονήτας καὶ ἵπποτοξότας καὶ τοὺς ἄλλους ὅσοι τῆς κούφης ὀπλίσεως καὶ τὰ κάλλιστα τῶν δρεπανηφόρων ἀρ-μάτων ἑξακόσια τοῖς ἐν τέλει δούς, ἵνα μετὰ τοῦ πρέποντος ἀξιώματος ἐπακολουθήσωσι καὶ τῆς στρατείας μετὰσχωσιν, οὐδὲν τάχους ἀνεῖς ἐπεξέθει καὶ συντεινῶν ἔσπευδε βουλόμενος ἑξαπιναιῶς οὐ προῖδομένοις ἐπιστῆναι· τὸ γὰρ ἀνέλπιστον κακὸν ἀργαλεώτερον αἰεὶ τοῦ προσδοκηθέντος, ὅσω καὶ τὸ ὀλιγωρηθὲν εὐεπιχειρητότερον τοῦ σὺν φροντίδι.
 169 καὶ ὁ μὲν ταῦτα διανοηθεὶς ἐπηκολούθει νομίζων αὐτοβοεῖ περιέσεσθαι, οἱ δ' ἔτυχον ἤδη παρὰ ταῖς ἡἰόσι τῆς θαλάττης στρατοπεδεύοντες· μελλόντων δ' ἀριστοποιεῖσθαι, τὸ μὲν πρῶτον πάταγος ἐξηχεῖτο πολὺς, ἅτε τοσοῦτων ἀνθρώπων ὁμοῦ καὶ ὑποζυγίων μετὰ σπουδῆς ἐλαυνόντων, ὡς ἐκχυθέντας<sup>1</sup> τῶν σκηνῶν περιβλέπεσθαι καὶ ὠτ-[108] ακουστῆν | ἀκροβατοῦντας· εἶτ' ὀλίγῳ ὕστερον ἐπὶ λόφου μετέωρος ἢ ἀντίπαλος καταφαίνεται δύναμις 170 ἐν τοῖς ὅπλοις ἐκτεταγμένη πρὸς μάχην. XXXI. ἐπὶ δὲ τῷ παραλόγῳ καὶ ἀπροσδοκῆτῳ καταπλαγέντες καὶ μήτε πρὸς ἄμυναν εὐτρεπεῖς ὄντες διὰ σπάνιν ἀμυντηρίων—οὐ γὰρ ἐπὶ πόλεμον ἀλλ' εἰς ἀποικίαν ἐξήεσαν—μήτε φυγεῖν δυνάμενοι—κατόπι μὲν γὰρ πέλαγος, ἐχθροὶ δ' ἀντικρὺ, τὰ δὲ παρ' ἑκάτερα

<sup>1</sup> MSS. ἐκλυθέντας et alia.

MOSES I. 167-170

rough and pathless desert, was pleased to find that disaster had befallen their journey, since he judged them to be shut in without an outlet. And, repenting that he had let them go, he essayed to pursue, expecting that he would make the multitude return in fear to renewed slavery, or massacre them wholesale if they proved refractory. Then he took with 168 him all his cavalry, javelineers, slingers, mounted archers, and all his other light-armed troops, and gave the six hundred finest of his scythed chariots to the men of rank that they might follow in suitable state and take part in the campaign. With unabated rapidity he rushed to the attack, and pushed on eagerly, wishing to come upon them suddenly and unforeseen. For the unexpected ill is ever more troublesome than the expected, since a negligently, compared with a carefully, guarded force is more liable to be successfully attacked. While he 169 pursued them with these intentions, hoping to win an uncontested victory, they, as it happened, were already encamped on the shores of the sea. And, just as they were preparing to take their early meal, first a mighty din was heard, caused by the host of men and beasts coming on at full speed; and, at the sound, they poured out of their tents, standing on tiptoe to look around and listen with both ears. Then, shortly afterwards, high on the hill, appeared the enemy's forces, armed and drawn up for battle. XXXI. At this strange, unexpected sight, they were 170 panic-stricken. They were not ready to defend themselves, for lack of the necessary weapons, for their expedition was not for war but for colonization. They could not fly, for the sea was behind them, the enemy in front, and on either side the depths of the trackless

PHILO

- βαθεία καὶ ἀτριβῆς ἐρήμη—σφαδάζοντες καὶ τῷ μεγέθει τῶν κακῶν ἀπειρηκότες, οἷα παρὰ τὰς τοιαύτας φιλεῖ συμφοράς, τὸν ἄρχοντα ἠτιῶντο 171 φάσκοντες· “διὰ τὸ μὴ εἶναι μνήματα ἐν Αἰγύπτῳ, οἷς ἀποθανόντες ἐνταφισόμεθα, ἐξήγαγες ἡμᾶς, ἵν’ ἐνταῦθα κηδεύσης ἀποκτείνας; ἢ οὐ πᾶσα δουλεία κουφότερον κακὸν θανάτου; δελεάσας ἐλευθε-ρίας ἐλπίδι τὸ πλῆθος τὸν χαλεπότερον περὶ τοῦ 172 ζῆν ἐπεκρέμασας κίνδυνον. ἠγνόεις τὴν ἡμετέραν ἀ(ο)πλότητα<sup>1</sup> καὶ τὴν Αἰγυπτίων πικρίαν καὶ τὸ βαρύμηρι; τὸ μέγεθος τῶν ἀφύκτων κακῶν οὐχ ὄρας; τί πρακτέον; πολεμῶμεν ἄοπλοι πρὸς ὀπλισμένους; ἀλλὰ φεύγωμεν καθάπερ ἄρκυσι κυκλωθέντες ἀνηλεέσιν ἐχθροῖς, ἐρημίαις ἀβάτοις, ἀπλώτοις πελάγεσιν; εἰ δὲ δὴ καὶ πλωτά, τίς εὐπορία 173 σκαφῶν εἰς περαιώσιν;” ὁ δὲ ταῦτα ἀκούων τοῖς μὲν συνεγίνωσκε, τῶν δὲ χρησμῶν ἐμέμνητο· καὶ διανείμας τὸν νοῦν καὶ τὸν λόγον κατὰ τὸν αὐτὸν χρόνον τῷ μὲν ἐνετύγχανεν ἀφανῶς τῷ θεῷ, ἵν’ ἐξ ἀμηχάνων ῥύσῃται συμφορῶν, δι’ οὗ δ’ ἐθάρσυνε καὶ παρηγόρει τοὺς καταβοῶντας “μὴ ἀναπίπτετε” λέγων· “οὐχ ὁμοίως ἄνθρωπος ἀμύνεται 174 καὶ θεός. τί μόνοις τοῖς εὐλόγοις καὶ πιθανοῖς προπιστεύετε; παρασκευῆς οὐδεμιᾶς ἐστι χρεῖος ὁ θεὸς βοηθός· ἐν ἀπόροις πόρον εὑρεῖν ἴδιον θεοῦ· τὰ ἀδύνατα παντὶ γενητῷ μόνῳ δυνατὰ καὶ κατὰ 175 χειρός.” καὶ ταῦτα μὲν ἔτι καθεστῶς διεξήγει·

<sup>1</sup> mss. ἀπλότητα, which all editors hitherto appear to have accepted. But what sense has “simplicity,” or any other shade of meaning which the word can bear, in this context? The correction here printed, suggested to me by Dr. Rouse, appears certain. It is true that ἀοπλότης is not found in the lexicon, nor is “unarmedness,” by which I have translated

MOSES I. 170-175

desert. So, in the bitterness of their hearts, broken down by the greatness of their misfortune, they acted as men often act in such troubles, and began to accuse their ruler. "Was it because there were no tombs in 171 Egypt where our dead bodies could be laid that you brought us out to kill and bury us here? Is not any slavery a lighter ill than death? You enticed this multitude with the hope of liberty, and then have saddled it with the greater danger which threatens its life. Did you not know our unarmedness, and 172 the bitterness and savage temper of the Egyptians? Do you not see how great are our troubles, how impossible to escape? What must we do? Can we fight unarmed against the armed? Can we fly, surrounded as in a net by merciless enemies, pathless deserts, seas impassable to ships, or, if indeed they are passable, what supply of boats have we to enable us to cross?" Moses, when he heard these words, 173 pardoned them, but remembered the divine messages, and, using his mind and speech simultaneously for different purposes, with the former silently interceded with God to save them from their desperate afflictions, with the latter encouraged and comforted the loud-voiced malcontents. "Do not lose heart," he said, "God's way of defence is not as that of men. Why are you quick to trust in the specious and plausible and that only? When God gives help He needs 174 no armament. It is His special property to find a way where no way is. What is impossible to all created being is possible to Him only, ready to His hand." Thus he discoursed, still calm and composed; 175 it, found in the abridged N.E.D. But both are natural and possible formations.

---

PHILO

μικρὸν δ' ἐπισχὼν ἔνθους γίνεται καταπνευσθεὶς ὑπὸ τοῦ εἰωθότος ἐπιφοιτᾶν αὐτῷ πνεύματος καὶ θεσπίζει προφητεύων τάδε· “ ἦν ὄρατε στρατιὰν εὐοπλοῦσαν, οὐκ ἐτ' ἀντιτεταγμένην ὄψεσθε· πεσεῖται γὰρ προτροπάδην πᾶσα καὶ βύθιος ἀφανισθήσεται, ὡς μηδὲ λείψανον αὐτῆς ὑπὲρ γῆς ἔτι φανῆναι, καὶ οὐ μήκει χρόνου, ἀλλὰ τῇ ἐπιούσῃ νυκτί.”

- 176 XXXII. Καὶ ὁ μὲν ταῦτ' ἀπεφθέγγετο. καταδύντος δ' ἡλίου, νότος εὐθύς ἤρξατο κατασκήπτειν βιαιότατος, ὑφ' οὗ τὸ πέλαγος ἐξανεχώρησεν, εἰωθὸς μὲν ἀμπωτίζειν, τότε δὲ καὶ μᾶλλον ὠθού-
- [109] μενον τὸ πρὸς | αἰγιαλοῖς ὑπεσύρη καθάπερ εἰς χαράδραν ἢ χάρυβδιν· ἀστήρ τε προῦφαίνεται οὐδεὶς, ἀλλὰ πυκνὸν καὶ μέλαν νέφος ἅπαντα τὸν οὐρανὸν ἐπέιχε, γνοφώδους τῆς νυκτὸς οὔσης εἰς κατάπληξιν
- 177 τῶν διωκόντων. προσταχθεὶς δὲ Μωυσῆς τῇ βακτηρίᾳ παίει τὴν θάλασσαν· ἡ δὲ ῥαγείσα διίσταται καὶ τῶν τμημάτων τὰ μὲν πρὸς<sup>1</sup> τῷ ῥαγέντι μέρει μετέωρα πρὸς ὕψος ἐξαίρεται καὶ παγέντα τρόπον τείχους κραταιῶς ἠρέμει καὶ ἡσύχαζε, τὰ δ' ὀπίσω σταλέντα καὶ χαλινωθέντα τὴν εἰς τὸ πρόσω φορὰν καθάπερ ἠνίας ἀφανέσιν ἀνεχαίτιζε, τὸ δὲ μεσαίτατον, καθ' ὃ ἐγένετο ἡ ῥῆξις, ἀναξηρανθὲν ὁδὸς εὐρεία καὶ λεωφόρος γίνεται. τοῦτο ἰδὼν Μωυσῆς καὶ θαυμάσας ἐγεγῆθει καὶ πληρωθεὶς χαρᾶς ἐθάρσυνε τοὺς ἰδίους καὶ ἦ τάχιστα προῦ-
- 178 τρεπεν ἀναζευγνύναι. περαιούσθαι δὲ μελλόντων, σημεῖον ἐπιγίνεται τερατωδέστατον· ἡ γὰρ ὁδηγὸς νεφέλη πρωτοστατοῦσα τὸν ἄλλον χρόνον ἀνακάμπτει πρὸς τὰ οὐραῖα τοῦ πλήθους, ὅπως ὀπισθοφυλακῇ, καὶ ταχθεῖσα μεθόριος τῶν διωbut, after a little, he became possessed, and, filled with the spirit which was wont to visit him, uttered these oracular words of prophecy : " The host which you see armed to the teeth you shall see no more arrayed against you. It shall all fall in utter ruin and disappear in the depths, so that no remnant may be seen above the earth. And this shall be at no distant time, but in the coming night."

XXXII. Such was his prediction. But at sunset <sup>176</sup> a south wind of tremendous violence arose, and, as it rushed down, the sea under it was driven back, and, though regularly tidal, was on this occasion more so than usually, and swept as into a chasm or whirlpool, when driven against the shore. No star appeared, but a thick black cloud covered the whole heaven, and the murkiness of the night struck terror into the pursuers. Moses now, at God's command, smote <sup>177</sup> the sea with his staff, and as he did so it broke and parted into two. Of the waters thus divided, one part rose up to a vast height, where the break was made, and stood quite firmly, motionless and still like a wall ; those behind were held back and bridled in their forward course, and reared as though pulled back by invisible reins ; while the intervening part, which was the scene of the breaking, dried up and became a broad highway. Moses, seeing this, marvelled and was glad, and in the fullness of his joy encouraged his men and bade them move on with all speed. <sup>178</sup> And, when they were about to begin the passage, a most extraordinary sign occurred. The guiding cloud, which at other times stood in front, turned round to the back of the multitude to form its rearguard, and thus posted between the pur-

<sup>1</sup> Perhaps τὰ μὲν <πρόσω> πρὸς.

PHILO

- κόντων καὶ τῶν διωκομένων τοὺς μὲν ἠνιοχοῦσα σωτηρίως καὶ ἀσφαλῶς ἐπήλαυνε, τοὺς δὲ ἀνείργε καὶ ἀνέκρουεν ἐφορμᾶν ἐπειγομένους· ἅπερ ὁρῶντες οἱ Αἰγύπτιοι θορύβου καὶ ταραχῆς πάντ' ἐπλήρουν τὰς τε τάξεις ὑπὸ δέους συνέχεον ἐπεμπίπτοντες ἀλλήλοις καὶ ζητοῦντες ἤδη φυγεῖν, ὅτ' οὐδὲν ἦν
- 179 ὄφελος. οἱ μὲν γὰρ Ἑβραῖοι διὰ ξηρᾶς ἀτραποῦ περὶ βαθὺν ὄρθρον μετὰ γυναικῶν καὶ παίδων ἔτι κομιδῇ νηπίων περαιοῦνται· τοὺς δὲ τὰ τμήματα τοῦ πελάγους ἐκατέρωθεν ἐπικυλισθέντα καὶ ἐνωθέντα αὐτοῖς ἄρμασι καὶ ἵπποις καταποντοῖ, βορείοις πνεύμασι τῆς παλιρροίας ἀναχυθείσης καὶ μετεώροις τρικυμίασι ἐπιδραμούσης, ὡς μηδὲ πυρφόρον ὑπολειφθῆναι τὸν ἀπαγγελοῦντα τοῖς ἐν
- 180 Αἰγύπτῳ τὰς αἰφνιδίους συμφοράς. τὸ μέγα τοῦτο καὶ θαυμαστὸν ἔργον Ἑβραῖοι καταπλαγέντες ἀναιμωτὶ νίκην οὐκ ἐλπισθεῖσαν ἤρανο καὶ κατιδόντες ἐν ἀκαρεῖ φθορὰν ἀθρόαν πολεμίων δύο χορούς, τὸν μὲν ἀνδρῶν, τὸν δὲ γυναικῶν, ἐπὶ τῆς ἡϊόνος στήσαντες εὐχαριστικούς ὕμνους εἰς τὸν θεὸν ἡῖδον, ἐξάρχοντος Μωυσέως μὲν τοῖς ἀνδράσιν, ἀδελφῆς δὲ τούτου ταῖς γυναιξίν· ἡγεμόνες γὰρ οὗτοι τῶν χορῶν ἐγεγένητο.
- 181 XXXIII. Ἄραντες δ' ἀπὸ θαλάττης μέχρι μέντινος ὠδοιπόρουν μηκέτι τὸν ἀπὸ τῶν ἐχθρῶν ὀρρωδοῦντες φόβον. ἐπυλιπόντος δὲ τοῦ ποτοῦ τρισὶν ἡμέραις, αἰθῆς ἐν ἀθυμίαις ἦσαν ὑπὸ δῖμους <sup>a</sup> Or simply a "survivor," the phrase having passed into a proverb without consideration of its origin, of which 368

MOSES I. 178-181

suers and pursued regulated the course of the latter and drove them before it under safe protection, but checked and repelled the former when they strove to advance. When the Egyptians saw this, tumult and confusion prevailed everywhere among them. In their terror their ranks fell into disorder. They tumbled over each other, and sought to escape, but it was of no avail; for, while the Hebrews with their 179 women and children, still mere infants, crossed on a dry road in the early dawn, it was otherwise with the Egyptians. Under the north wind the returning tide was swept back, and hurled its lofty billows upon them. The two sections of the sea rolled upon them from either side, united and submerged them, horses, chariots and all, with not even a torchbearer <sup>a</sup> left to announce to the people of Egypt the sudden disaster. This great and marvellous work struck the Hebrews 180 with amazement, and, finding themselves unexpectedly victorious in a bloodless conflict, and seeing their enemies, one and all, destroyed in a moment, they set up two choirs, one of men and one of women, on the beach, and sang hymns of thanksgiving to God. Over these choirs Moses and his sister presided, and led the hymns, the former for the men and the latter for the women.

XXXIII. <sup>b</sup> They set out from the sea coast, and 181 travelled for some time, no longer in any fear of danger from the enemy. But after three days the water failed, and thirst once more reduced them indeed there are other accounts besides that given in L. & S., viz. that it properly applied to the priest in the Spartan army who carried the sacred fire, which was not allowed to go out. So apparently even in the LXX Obadiah 18 οὐκ ἔσται πυρφόρος τῷ οἴκῳ Ἡσαΐ.

<sup>b</sup> For §§ 181-187 see Ex. xv. 22-26.

PHILO

- καὶ πάλιν ἤρξαντο μεμψιμοιρεῖν ὡς μηδὲν εὖ προπεποιθότες· αἰεὶ γὰρ ἡ τοῦ παρόντος προσβολὴ δεινοῦ τὰς ἐπὶ τοῖς προτέροις ἀγαθοῖς ἡδονὰς ἀφ-182 αἰρεῖται. θεασάμενοι δὲ πηγὰς ἐπιτρέχουσιν |
 [110] ὡς ἀρυσόμενοι χαρᾶς ὑπόπλεω, δι' ἄγνοιαν τάληθους ἀπατηθέντες· πικραὶ γὰρ ἦσαν· εἶτα γευσάμενοι γναμφθέντες τῷ παρ' ἐλπίδα τὰ τε σώματα παρεῖντο καὶ τὰς ψυχὰς ἀναπεπτώκεσαν, οὐχ οὕτως ἐφ' ἑαυτοῖς ὡς ἐπὶ τοῖς νηπίοις παισὶ στένοντες, οὓς ἀδακρυτὶ ποτὸν αἰτοῦντας ὄραν οὐχ ὑπέμενον.
 183 ἔνιοι δὲ τῶν ὀλιγωροτέρων καὶ πρὸς εὐσέβειαν ἀβεβαίῳν καὶ τὰ προγεγονότα ἠτιῶντο ὡς οὐκ ἐπ' εὐεργεσίᾳ συμβάντα μᾶλλον ἢ διὰ μετουσίαν ἀργαλεωτέρων συμφορῶν, ἄμεινον εἶναι λέγοντες τρίς, οὐχ ἅπαξ, ὑπ' ἐχθρῶν ἀποθανεῖν ἢ διΐβει παραπολέσθαι· τὴν μὲν γὰρ ἄπονον καὶ ταχεῖαν τοῦ βίου μετάστασιν οὐδὲν ἀθανασίας διαφέρειν τοῖς εὖ φρονούσι, θάνατον δ' ὡς ἀληθῶς εἶναι τὸν βραδὺν καὶ μετ' ἀλγηδόνων, οὐκ ἐν τῷ τεθνάναι τὸ φοβερὸν ἀλλ' ἐν μόνῳ τῷ ἀποθνήσκειν ἐπιδεικνύμενον.
 184 τοιαύταις χρωμένων ὀλοφύρσεσι, πάλιν ἱκετεύει τὸν θεὸν Μωυσῆς ἐπιστάμενον τὴν ζώων καὶ μάλιστα τὴν ἀνθρώπων ἀσθένειαν καὶ τὰς τοῦ σώματος ἀνάγκας ἐκ τροφῆς ἠρτημένου καὶ δεσποίναις χαλεπαῖς συνεζευγμένου, βρώσει καὶ πόσει, συγγνῶναι μὲν τοῖς ἀθυμοῦσι, τὴν δὲ πάντων ἔνδειαν ἐκπλήσαι, μὴ χρόνου μήκει, δωρεᾶ δ' ἀνυπερθέτῳ καὶ ταχεῖα, διὰ τὴν τοῦ θνητοῦ φυσικὴν ὀλιγωρίαν ὀξὺν καιρὸν τῆς βοηθείας ἐπιποθοῦντος.
 370

MOSES I. 181-184

to despondency. Again they began to grumble at their lot, as though nothing good had befallen them hitherto. For, under the onset of the present terror, we always lose sense of the pleasantness of past blessings. Then they saw some springs and ran to draw from them, full of joy, but in their ignorance of the truth were deceived. For the water was bitter, and, when they had tasted it, the disappointment broke them down. Their bodies were exhausted and their souls dejected, not so much for themselves as for their infant children, the sight of whom, as they cried for something to drink, was more than they could face without tears. Some of the more thoughtless, men of feeble piety, even denounced the past events as not having been intended for their benefit, but rather to bring them into worse misfortunes. It were better, they said, to die thrice, not merely once, at the hands of enemies, than to perish, or worse than perish, by thirst. To depart from life swiftly and easily is, in the eyes of the wise, the same thing as never dying, and death in the true sense is that which comes slowly and painfully, whose terrors appear not in the state of death, but only in the process of dying.

While they were engaged in such lamentations, Moses again addressed his supplications to God, that, knowing the weakness of His creatures, and particularly of mankind, and the necessities of the body, which depends on food, and is tied to those stern mistresses, meat and drink, He should pardon the despondent and also satisfy the needs of all, not at some distant time but with a boon bestowed promptly and swiftly, considering the in-born short-sightedness of mortality, which desires that assistance should be rendered quickly and at the

PHILO

- 185 ὁ δὲ τὴν ἰλεων αὐτοῦ δύναμιν φθάνει προεκπέμψας καὶ διοίξας τὸ τοῦ ἰκέτου τῆς ψυχῆς ἀκοίμητον ὄμμα ξύλον δείκνυσιν, ὃ προσέταξεν ἀράμενον εἰς τὰς πηγὰς καθεῖναι, τάχα μὲν κατεσκευασμένον ἐκ φύσεως ποιοῦν δύναμιν, ἢ τάχα<sup>1</sup> ἠγγνόητο, τάχα δὲ καὶ τότε πρῶτον ποιηθὲν εἰς ἣν ἔμελλεν ὑπηρετεῖν
- 186 χρεῖαν. γενομένου δὲ τοῦ κελευσθέντος, αἱ μὲν πηγαὶ γλυκαίνονται μεταβαλοῦσαι πρὸς τὸ πότιμον, ὡς μηδ' εἰ τὴν ἀρχὴν ἐγένοντό ποτε πικραὶ δύνασθαι διαγνῶναι, διὰ τὸ μηδὲ ἴχνος ἢ ζώπυρον τῆς ἀρχαίας κακίας εἰς μνήμην ὑπολελείφθαι.
- 187 XXXIV. τὸ δὲ δίψος ἀκεσάμενοι μεθ' ἡδονῆς διπλασίας, ἐπειδὴ τῆς ἀπολαύσεως τὸ παρ' ἐλπίδα συμβεβηκὸς ἀγαθὸν εὐφραίνει μᾶλλον, ἔτι καὶ τὰς ὕδριας πληρώσαντες ἀνεξεύγνυσαν, ὥσπερ ἀπὸ θοίνης καὶ ἰλαρᾶς εὐωχίας ἐστιαθέντες καὶ μεθύοντες οὐ τὴν ἐν οἴνῳ μέθην ἀλλὰ τὴν νηφάλιον, ἣν ἠκρατίσαντο τὰς προπόσεις λαβόντες παρὰ τῆς εὐσεβείας τοῦ προεστῶτος ἀρχοντος.
- 188 Ἀφικνοῦνται δ' εἰς σταθμὸν δεύτερον, εὐδρόν τε καὶ εὐδενδρον—Αἰλεῖμ ὠνομάζετο—, πηγαῖς καταρ-ρέομενον δώδεκα, παρ' αἷς στελέχη νέα φοινίκων εὐενρέστατα ἦν τὸν ἀριθμὸν ἑβδομήκοντα, τοῖς ὀξὺ [111] τῇ | διανοίᾳ βλέπειν δυναμένοις ἀγαθῶν τῶν 189 ἔθνικῶν ἐναργῆ σημεῖα καὶ δείγματα· φυλαί τε γάρ εἰσι τοῦ ἔθνους δώδεκα, ὧν ἐκάστη πηγῆς ἕξει λόγον εὐσεβοῦσα, χορηγούσης εὐσεβείας ἀενάους καὶ ἀνελλιπείς καλὰς πράξεις, γενάρχαι δὲ τοῦ σύμπαντος ἔθνους ἑβδομήκοντα γεγόνασι φοίνικι

<sup>1</sup> Clearly a mistake: ? τέως.

MOSES I. 185-189

moment. Hardly had he so prayed, when God sent 185 in advance the power of His grace, and, opening the vigilant eye of the suppliant's soul, bade him lift and throw into the spring a tree which he shewed him, possibly formed by nature to exercise a virtue which had hitherto remained unknown, or possibly created on this occasion for the service which it was destined to perform. Moses did as he was bid, whereupon the 186 springs became sweet, and were converted into drinkable water, so that no one could even guess that they had originally been bitter, since no trace or tang remained to remind one of its former badness. XXXIV.
When they had relieved their thirst with double 187 pleasure, since the unexpectedness of the event gave a delight beyond the actual enjoyment, they filled their water-vessels and then resumed their journey, feeling as though they had risen from a banquet and merry-making, and elated, with the intoxication not of wine, but of the sober carousal which the piety of the ruler who led them had invited them to enjoy.<sup>a</sup> <sup>b</sup> They then arrived at a second halting-place, one 188 well wooded and well watered, called Elim, irrigated by twelve springs beside which rose young palm-trees, fine and luxuriant, to the number of seventy.

Anyone who has the gift of keen mental sight may see in this clear signs and tokens of the national blessings. For the nation has twelve tribes, each of 189 which, in virtue of its piety, will be represented by the well which supplies piety in perennial streams and noble actions unceasingly, while the heads of the whole nation are seventy, who may properly be com-<sup>a</sup> Or more literally "the sober intoxication in which they indulged having first been pledged" etc.

<sup>b</sup> For §§ 188-190 see Ex. xv. 27 and cf. De Fuga 183 ff.

PHILO

- τῷ τῶν δένδρων ἀρίστῳ προσηκόντως παρεικασθέντες, ὃ καὶ ὀφθῆναι καὶ καρπὸν ἐνεγκεῖν ἐστὶ κάλλιστον, ὅπερ καὶ τὴν ζωτικὴν ἔχει δύναμιν οὐκ ἐν ρίζαις ὥσπερ τὰ ἄλλα κατορωρυγμένην ἀλλ' ἀνώφοιτον, καρδίας τρόπον ἐν τῷ μεσαιτάτῳ τῶν ἀκρεμόνων ἰδρυμένην, ὑφ' ὧν οἷα ἡγεμονίς ὄντως
- 190 ἐν κύκλῳ δορυφορεῖται. τοιαύτην δ' ἔχει φύσιν καὶ ἡ διάνοια τῶν γευσαμένων ὁσιότητος· ἄνω γὰρ μεμάθηκε βλέπει τε καὶ φοιτᾶν καὶ μετεωροπολοῦσα ἀεὶ καὶ τὰ θεῖα διερευνησμένη κάλλη χλεύην τίθεται τὰ ἐπίγεια, ταῦτα μὲν παιδιάν, ἐκείνα δὲ σπουδὴν ὡς ἀληθῶς νομίζουσα.
- 191 XXXV. Μετὰ δὲ ταῦτ' οὐ πολὺς διήλθε χρόνος καὶ ἀπορία σιτίων ἐλίμωτον, ὥσπερ ἐκ διαδοχῆς ἀντεπιτιθεμένων τῶν ἀναγκαίων· δέσποινα γὰρ χαλεπαὶ καὶ βαρεῖαι, πείνα καὶ δίψα, διακληρωσάμεναι τὰς κακώσεις ἐν μέρει προσέκειντο καὶ συνέβαινε κατὰ τὴν τῆς ἐτέρας ἄνεσιν ἐπιγίνεσθαι τὴν ἐτέραν, ὅπερ ἦν τοῖς πάσχουσιν ἀφορητότατον, εἴ γε πρὸ μικροῦ δόξαντες ἀπαλλαγῆναι δίψους
- 192 ἐφεδρεῦον κακὸν πείναν εὑρισκον. ἦν δ' οὐ μόνον ἡ παροῦσα σπάνις χαλεπὸν, ἀλλὰ καὶ ἡ πρὸς τὸν μέλλοντα χρόνον τῶν ἐπιτηδείων ἀπόγνωσις· ὀρώντες γὰρ βαθεῖαν καὶ πολλὴν ἔρημον καὶ καρπῶν ἀγονωτάτην σφόδρα ἠθύμουν· πάντα γὰρ ἦσαν ἢ τραχεῖαι καὶ ἀπορρῶγες πέτραι ἢ ἀλμυρόγεως πεδιάς ἢ ὄρη λιθωδέστατα ἢ ψάμμοι βαθεῖαι πρὸς ἠλίβατον ὕψος ἀνατείνουσαι, καὶ προσέτι ποταμὸς οὐδεὶς, οὐκ αὐθιγενής, οὐ χειμάρρους, οὐδεμία πηγὴ, σπαρτὸν οὐδὲν οὐδὲ δένδρον, οὐχ ἡμερον, οὐ τῆς ἀγρίας ὕλης, οὐ ζῶον πτηνὸν ἢ χερσαῖον, ὅτι

MOSES I. 189-192

pared to the palm, the noblest of trees, excellent both in its appearance and in the fruit which it bears. Also it has its life-giving principle, not, like the others, buried in its roots, but mounted aloft, seated like a heart in the very centre of the branches which stand around to guard it as their very queen. Such, too, 190 is the nature of the mind of those who have tasted of holiness. Such a mind has learned to gaze and soar upwards, and, as it ever ranges the heights and searches into divine beauties, it makes a mock of earthly things, counting them to be but child's-play, and those to be truly matters for earnest care.

XXXV. <sup>a</sup> After this no long time had elapsed when 191 they were famished for want of food. It seemed as though the forces of necessity were taking turns to attack them. For those stern mistresses, hunger and thirst, had parcelled out their inflictions and plied them with these successively, with the result that when one was relaxed the other was upon them. This was most intolerable to the victims, since, often when they thought they had got free of thirst, they soon found the scourge of hunger waiting to take its place. And the presence of the dearth was not their 192 only hardship ; there was also the despair of obtaining provisions in the future. The sight of the deep, wide desert, utterly barren of fruits, filled them with despondency. All around there was nothing but rough, broken rocks, or plains where the soil was full of salt, or very stony mountains, or depths of sand stretching upwards steep and high, and again no rivers, spring-fed or winter torrent, no well, no tilth, no woodland of trees, either cultivated or wild, no living creature either of the air or of the land, save reptiles <sup>a</sup> For §§ 191-208 see Ex. xvi.

PHILO

- μή τῶν ἔρπετῶν τὰ ἰοβόλα πρὸς ὄλεθρον ἀνθρώ-193 πων, ὄφεις καὶ σκορπίοι. εἶθ' ὑπομμνησκόμενοι τῆς κατ' Αἴγυπτον εὐθηνίας καὶ εὐετηρίας καὶ τὴν τῶν ἐκεῖ πάντων ἀφθονίαν ἀντιτιθέντες τῇ πάντων ἐνταῦθα ἐνδείᾳ χαλεπῶς ἔφερον καὶ πρὸς ἑτέρους ἕτεροι τοιαῦτ' ἐλογοποιοῦν. " ἐπ' ἐλευθερίας ἐλπίδι μεταναστάντες οὐδὲ τοῦ ζῆν ἄδειαν ἔχομεν οἱ ταῖς 194 ἔργοις ἀνθρώπων ἀπάντων κακοδαιμονέστατοι. τί [112] τέλος ἔσται τῆς | ἀνηνύτου καὶ μακρᾶς οὕτως ὁδοῦ; πᾶσι καὶ τοῖς πλέουσι καὶ τοῖς πεζεύουσιν ὄρος εἰς ὃν ἀφίξονται πρόκειται, τοῖς μὲν ἐμπόρια καὶ λιμένες, τοῖς δὲ πόλις τις ἢ χώρα, μόνοις δ' ἡμῖν ἄβατος ἐρημία καὶ δυσοδία καὶ χαλεπαὶ δυσελ-πιστία· προϊόντων γάρ, ὥσπερ ἄχανές καὶ βαθὺ πέλαγος ἀπόρευτον ἀναφαίνεται καθ' ἐκάστην ἡμέ-195 ραν εὐρυνόμενον. μετεωρίσας καὶ φυσήσας ἡμᾶς τῷ λόγῳ καὶ κενῶν ἐλπίδων τὰ ὦτα πληρώσας παρατείνει λιμῶ τὰς γαστέρας οὐδὲ τὰς ἀναγκαίας ἐκπορίζων τροφάς· ἀποικίας ὀνόματι τοσαύτην πληθὺν ἠπάτησεν ἐξ οἰκουμένης τὸ πρῶτον εἰς ἀοίκητον ἀγαγών, εἶτα καὶ εἰς ἄδου προπέμπων, τὴν τοῦ βίου τελευταίαν ὁδόν."
- 196 XXXVI. Τοιαῦτ' ὄνειδιζόμενος οὐχ οὕτως ἐπὶ ταῖς εἰς αὐτὸν κακηγορίαις ἐδυσχέραινεν, ὡς ἐπὶ τῷ τῆς γνώμης αὐτῶν ἀνιδρύτῳ· πεπειραμένοι γάρ μυρίων ὄσων ἐκ τοῦ παραλόγου συμβεβηκότων πραγμάτων παρὰ τὸ καθεστὸς ἔθος ὠφείλον ὑπὸ μηδενὸς ἔτι τῶν εὐλόγων καὶ πιθανῶν ἄγεσθαι, πεπιστευκένας δ' αὐτῷ λαβόντες ἀποδείξεις ἔναρ-197 γεστάτας τοῦ περὶ ἀπάντων ἀψευδεῖν. πάλιν δ' ὅτε εἰς ἔννοιαν ἦλθε τῆς ἐνδείας, ἥς μείζον οὐδὲν

MOSES I. 192-197

that vent poison for the destruction of mankind, such as snakes and scorpions. Then, remembering 193 the teeming fertility of Egypt, and contrasting the abundance of everything there with the lack of everything here, they were roused to anger, and expressed their feelings to each other in such words as these : " We left the country in the hope of freedom, and yet we have no security even of life. Our leader promised us happiness ; in actual fact, we are the most miserable of men. What will be the end of this 194 long, interminable journey ? Every traveller by sea or land has set before him some goal to come to, market or harbour for the one, city or country for the other ; we alone have before us a pathless wilderness, painful journeying, desperate straits. For, as we proceed, there opens out before us, as it were, an ocean, vast, deep, impassable, ever wider day by day. He exhorted and puffed us up with his words, and 195 filled our ears with empty hopes, and then tortures our bellies with hunger, not providing even the barest nourishment. With the name of colonization he has deceived this great multitude, and first carried us from an inhabited to an uninhabited world, then led us on to the grave along the road which brings life to its end."

XXXVI. Moses, when reviled in this way, was 196 indignant not so much at their denunciations of himself as at their instability of judgement. For, after experiencing strange events outside the customary without number, they should have ceased to be guided by anything that is specious and plausible, but should have put their trust in him of whose unflinching truthfulness they had received the clearest proofs. But, 197 on the other hand, when he considered the want of κακὸν ἀνθρώποις ἐστί, συνεγίνωσκεν ὄχλον εἰδῶς ἀβέβαιοι φύσει πρᾶγμα καὶ ὑπὸ τῶν ἐν χερσὶ διακινούμενον, ἃ λήθην μὲν τῶν προγεγονότων 198 ἐργάζεται, δυσελπιστίαν δ' εἰς τὰ μέλλοντα. πάντων οὖν ἐν ἀσκέτοις ὄντων ἀνίαις καὶ τὰς ἀνωτάτω προσδοκῶντων συμφοράς, ἃς ἐνόμιζον ἐφεδρεύειν καὶ ἐγγυτάτω παρῆναι, τοῦτο μὲν διὰ τὴν σύμφυτον ἐπιείκειαν καὶ φιλανθρωπίαν, τοῦτο δὲ βουλόμενος ὃν ἐχειροτόνησεν ἡγεμόνα τιμῆσαι καὶ ἔτι μᾶλλον ὡς εὐσεβείας ἔχει καὶ ὁσιότητος ἔν τε τοῖς φανεροῖς καὶ τοῖς ἀδήλοισι ἅπασι διασυστήσαι ὁ θεὸς ἐλέησας 199 τὸ πάθος ἰᾶται. ξένας οὖν εὐεργεσίας ἐκαινοτόμει, τρανοτέραις ὅπως ἐμφάσεσι παιδευθῶσιν<sup>1</sup> ἤδη μὴ δυσανασχετεῖν, εἴ τι μὴ κατὰ γνώμην εὐθύς ἀποβαίῃ, τλητικῶς δ' ὑπομένειν χρηστὰ περὶ τῶν 200 μελλόντων προσδοκῶντες. τί οὖν συνέβη; τῇ ὑστεραία περὶ τὴν ἕω δρόσος βαθεῖα καὶ πολλὴ περὶ σύμπαν ἦν ἐν κύκλῳ τὸ στρατόπεδον, ἦν ἐπέπιφεν ἡσυχῇ, ἀήθη ὑετὸν καὶ παρηλλαγμένον, οὐχ ὕδωρ, οὐ χάλαζαν, οὐ χιόνα, οὐ κρύσταλλον— ταῦτα γὰρ αἱ τῶν νεφῶν ἀπεργάζονται μεταβολαὶ ταῖς χειμεριναῖς τροπαῖς—, ἀλλὰ κέγχρον βραχυτάτην καὶ λευκοτάτην, ἣ διὰ τὴν ἐπάλληλον φορὰν σωρηδὸν προῦκέχυτο τῶν σκηνῶν, ἄπιστος ὄψις· ἦν καταπλαγέντες ἐπνυθάνοντο τοῦ ἡγεμόνος, τίς τε ὁ ὑετὸς οὗτός ἐστιν, ὃν οὐδεὶς πω πρότερον [113] εἶδεν | ἀνθρώπων, καὶ πρὸς τί γέγονεν. ὁ δὲ κατα-201 πνευσθεὶς ἐνθους γίνεται καὶ θεσπίζει τάδε· “ θνητοῖς μὲν ἀνείται πεδιάς ἢ βαθύγειος, ἦν ἀνατεμόντες <sup>1</sup> MSS. ἐμφάσεσιν αἰδεσθῶσιν.

MOSES I. 197-201

food, as great a misfortune as any that can befall mankind, he forgave them, knowing that the multitude by its very nature is an unstable thing, shaken by the circumstances of the moment, which produce oblivion of the past and despondency of the future. So, while they were all thus overwhelmed by affliction, 198 and expecting the extreme misfortunes which they believed to be close at hand, ready to attack them, God, moved partly by the clemency and benevolence to man which belongs to His nature, partly too by His wish to honour the ruler whom He had appointed, and still more to bring home to them the greatness of that ruler's piety and holiness as shewn in matters both clear and obscure, took pity on them and healed their sufferings. He, therefore, devised new and strange 199 forms of benefaction, that by clearer manifestations they might now be schooled not to shew bitter resentment if something did not at once turn out as they would have it, but bear it patiently in expectation of good to come. What, then, did happen? On the 200 morrow about daybreak, a great quantity of dew lay deep around the whole camp, showered noiselessly by God; a strange, extraordinary rain, not water, nor hail, nor snow, nor ice, such as are produced by the changes in the clouds at the winter solstice, but of grains exceedingly small and white, which, poured down in a continuous flow, lay in heaps in front of the tents. It was an incredible sight; and, in astonishment thereat, they asked their leader, "What is this rain, which no man ever saw before, and for what purpose has it come?" Moses, in answer, possessed 201 by divine inspiration, spoke these oracular words: "Mortals have the deep-soiled plainland given over to them, which they cut into furrows with the plough,

PHILO

- εἰς αὐλακας ἀροῦσι καὶ σπείρουσι καὶ τὰ ἄλλα τὰ κατὰ γεωργίαν δρῶσι καρποὺς ἐτησίους ἐκπορί-ζοντες εἰς ἀφθονίαν τῶν ἀναγκαίων· θεῶ δ' οὐ μία μοῖρα τοῦ παντός ἀλλ' ὁ σύμπας κόσμος ὑπο-βέβληται καὶ τὰ τούτου μέρη πρὸς ἅπασαν χρείαν 202 ὧν ἂν θέλῃ ὡς δεσπότη δουλα ὑπηρετήσοντα. νῦν οὖν ἔδοξεν αὐτῷ, τὸν ἀέρα τροφήν ἐνεγκεῖν ἀνθ' ὕδατος, ἐπεὶ καὶ γῆ πολλάκις ὑετὸν ἤνεγκεν· ὁ γὰρ ἐν Αἰγύπτῳ ποταμὸς καθ' ἕκαστον ἐνιαυτὸν ταῖς ἐπιβάσει πλημμυρῶν ὅταν ἄρδῃ τὰς ἀρούρας, τί ἕτερον ἢ ὑετός ἐστι κάτωθεν ἐπινίφων; ”
- 203 παράδοξον μὲν δὴ τὸ ἔργον, εἰ καὶ ἐνταῦθα ἔστη· νυνὶ δὲ καὶ παραδοξότεροις ἄλλοις ἐθαυματοουργεῖτο. ἐπενεγκάμενοι γὰρ ἄλλος ἀλλαχόθεν ἀγγεῖα συνεκόμιζον, οἱ μὲν ἐπὶ τῶν ὑποζυγίων, οἱ δὲ κατὰ τῶν ὤμων ἐπηχθισμένοι, προνοία τοῦ πρὸς πλείω χρόνον
- 204 ταμιεύεσθαι τὰ ἐπιτήδεια. ἦν δ' ἄρα ἀταμίευτα καὶ ἀθησαύριστα, δωρεὰς αἰεὶ νέας ἐγνωκότος τοῦ θεοῦ χαρίζεσθαι· τὰ μὲν γὰρ πρὸς τὴν τότε χρῆσιν αὐτάρκη σκευάσαντες μεθ' ἡδονῆς προσηγέγκαντο, τῶν δ' ἀπολειφθέντων εἰς τὴν ὑστεραίαν οὐδὲν ἔτι σῶον εὑρισκον, ἀλλὰ μεταβεβληκότα καὶ δυσ-ὠδῆ καὶ μεστὰ τοιουτοτρόπων ζώων, ἃ κατὰ σῆψιν εἴωθε γεννᾶσθαι· ταῦτα μὲν οὖν ἀπερρίπτουν κατὰ τὸ εἶκος, ἑτέρας δ' εὐτρεπεῖς τροφὰς ἀνεύρισκον, ἃς ἅμα τῇ δρόσῳ καθ' ἑκάστην ἡμέραν συνέβαινε
- 205 νίφεσθαι. γέρας δ' ἐξαιρέτον ἢ ἱερά ἐβδομάς εἶχεν· ἐπειδὴ γὰρ οὐδὲν ἐφέιται δρᾶν ἐν αὐτῇ, πάντων δὲ μικρῶν καὶ μεγάλων ἔργων ἀνἔχειν διεύρηται, συγκομίζειν οὐ δυναμένοις τότε τὰ ἐπιτήδεια πρὸ μιᾶς ὁ θεὸς ὕει διπλᾶ καὶ κελεύει

MOSES I. 201-205

and there sow their seed, and perform the other tasks of the husbandman, thus providing the yearly fruits, and through them abundance of the necessaries of life. But God has subject to Him not one portion of the universe, but the whole world and its parts, to minister as slaves to their master for every service that He wills. So now it has seemed good to Him 202 that the air should bring food instead of water, for the earth too often brings rain. What is the river of Egypt, when every year it overflows and waters the fields with its inroads, but a rainpour from beneath ? ”

This work of God was strange enough 203 even if it had stopped at this point, but actually there were other facts still stronger enhancing its marvels. For the men brought vessels from every quarter, and collected the grains, some on their beasts, others in burdens on their shoulders, thinking thus to store up provisions to last for later use. But, as it turned out, 204 it was impossible to store or hoard them, since it was God's purpose to bestow gifts ever new. For when they took a sufficient stock for their needs at the time, they consumed it with pleasure, but anything they left for the morrow they found did not keep, but changed and stank and was full of such life as is regularly bred in putrescence. This they naturally threw away, but found other food prepared for them, rained upon them with the dew every day.

A special distinction was given to the sacred seventh 205 day,<sup>a</sup> for, since it was not permitted to do anything on that day, abstinence from works great or small being expressly enjoined, and therefore they could not then gather what was necessary, God rained a double supply the day before, and bade them bring <sup>a</sup> ἐβδομάς here is used for ἐβδόμη; cf. Quis Rerum 170 and note.

PHILO

φέρειν εἰς δύο ἡμέρας αὐτάρκη τροφήν ἐσομένην· τὰ δὲ συγκομισθέντα σῶα διέμενεν, οὐδενὸς ἢ πρότερον φθαρέντος τὸ παράπαν.

- 206 XXXVII. λέξω δὲ καὶ τὸ ἔτι τούτου θαυμασιώ-τερον· ἐπὶ γὰρ ἔτη τεσσαράκοντα, τοσοῦτον μῆκος αἰῶνος, ὁδοιποροῦσιν αὐτοῖς αἱ χορηγίαι τῶν ἀναγ-καίων ἐν τάξεσι ταῖς εἰρημέναις ἐγίνοντο καθάπερ ἐν σιταρχίαις μεμετρημέναις πρὸς τὰς ἐπιβαλλούσας 207 ἐκάστοις διανομάς. ἅμα μέντοι καὶ τὴν τριπόθητον ἡμέραν ἀνεδιδάσκοντο—ζητοῦντες γὰρ ἐκ πολλοῦ, τίς ἄρ' ἐστὶν ἡ τοῦ κόσμου γενέθλιος, ἐν ἣ τὸδε τὸ πᾶν ἀπετελέσθη, καὶ παρὰ πατέρων καὶ προγόνων τὴν ζήτησιν ἄλυτον διαδεξάμενοι μόλις ἐδυνήθησαν [114] εὐρεῖν—οὐ μόνον | χρησιμοῖς ἀναδίδαχθέντες, ἀλλὰ καὶ τεκμηρίω πάνυ σαφεί· τοῦ γὰρ πλεονάζοντος ἐν ταῖς ἄλλαις ἡμέραις, ὡς ἐλέχθη, φθειρομένου, τὸ πρὸ τῆς ἐβδόμης ὑόμενον οὐ μόνον οὐ μετέβαλεν, 208 ἀλλὰ καὶ μέτρον εἶχε διπλάσιον. ἡ δὲ χρηῆσις ἦν τοιαύδε· συλλέγοντες ἅμα τῇ ἔω τὸ νιφό-μενον ἤλουν ἢ ἔτριβον, εἰθ' ἔψοντες ἠδείαν πάνυ τροφήν οἷα μελίπηκτον προσεφέροντο μὴ δεόμενοι 209 σιτοπόνων περιεργίας. ἀλλὰ γὰρ καὶ τῶν εἰς ἀβροδίατον βίον οὐκ εἰς μακρὰν εὐπόρουν, ὅσαπερ ἐν οἰκουμένην χώρα καὶ εὐδαίμονι βουλη-θέντος τοῦ θεοῦ κατὰ πολλὴν περιουσίαν ἄφθονα χορηγεῖν ἐν ἐρημίᾳ· ταῖς γὰρ ἐσπέραις ὀρτυγομητρῶν νέφος συνεχὲς ἐκ θαλάττης ἐπιφερόμε-

<sup>a</sup> The meaning is that the seventh day was known to be the birthday of the world (cf. De Op. 89), but the people had lost count (see Mos. ii. 263). Philo probably noticed that while it was hallowed in Gen. ii., no sign of observation of it occurred in the narrative till this point. That the seventh is the "birthday" rather than the sixth, because, though all in what would be sufficient for two days. And what was thus collected kept sound, nor did any of it decay at all as in the previous case. XXXVII.

There is something still more wonderful to be told. 206 During all that long period of forty years in which they journeyed, the food required was supplied according to the rules just mentioned, like rations measured out to provide the allotment needed for each. At the same time, they learned to date aright 207 the day of which they had dearly longed to have knowledge.<sup>a</sup> For, long before, they had asked what was the birthday of the world on which this universe was completed, and to this question, which had been passed down unsolved from generation to generation, they now at long last found the answer, learnt not only through divine pronouncements but by a perfectly certain proof. For, as we have said, while the surplus of the downpour decayed on the other days, on the day before the seventh it not only did not change, but was actually supplied in double measure.

The method they employed with the 208 food was as follows: At dawn they collected what fell, ground or crunched it and then boiled it, when they found it a very pleasant form of food, like a honey-cake, and felt no need of elaborate cookery.

But in fact, not long after, they were 209 well supplied with the means of luxurious living, since God was pleased to provide to them abundantly, and more than abundantly, in the wilderness all the viands which are found in a rich and well-inhabited country. For in the evenings a continuous cloud of quails appeared from the sea and overshadowed the whole was completed on the sixth, it was seen in its perfection on the seventh, is stated in De Spec. Leg. ii. 59.

PHILO

νον ἅπαν τὸ στρατόπεδον ἐπεσκίαζε τὰς πτήσεις προσγειοτάτας ποιουμένων εἰς τὸ εὖθρον· συλλαμβάνοντες οὖν καὶ σκευάζοντες ὡς φίλον ἐκάστοις κρεῶν ἀπέλαυον ἡδίστων ἅμα καὶ τὴν τροφήν παρηγοροῦντες ἀναγκαίῳ προσοψήματι.

- 210 XXXVIII. Τούτων μὲν οὖν πολλὴν ἦγον ἀφθονίαν οὐκ ἐπιλείποντων, ὕδατος δὲ καὶ πάλιν πύσσασα δεινὴ σπάνις ἐπιγίνεται· καὶ πρὸς ἀπόγνωσιν ἤδη τραπομένων σωτηρίας, λαβὼν Μωυσῆς τὴν ἱερὰν βακτηρίαν ἐκείνην, δι' ἧς τὰ κατ' Αἴγυπτον ἀπετέλεσε σημεῖα, θεοφορηθεὶς τὴν ἀκρό-
- 211 τομον πέτραι παῖει, ἢ δ', εἴτε προϋποκειμένης πηγῆς φλέβα καίριον διακοπέισα εἴτε καὶ τότε πρῶτον ὕδατος ἀφανέσιν ὑπονόμοις εἰς αὐτὴν ἀθρόου συρρνέντος καὶ σφόδρα ἐκθλιβέντος, ἀναστομωθείσα τῇ βίᾳ τῆς φορᾶς κρουνηδὸν ἐκχεῖται, ὡς μὴ τότε μόνον παρασχεῖν ἄκος δίψους ἀλλὰ καὶ πρὸς πλείω χρόνον τοσαύταις μυριάσιν ἀφθονίαν ποτοῦ· τὰ γὰρ ὕδρια πάντ' ἐπλήρωσαν, ὡς καὶ πρότερον ἐκ τῶν πηγῶν, αἱ πικραὶ μὲν ἦσαν φύσει, μετέβαλον δ' ἐπιφροσύνη θείᾳ πρὸς τὸ γλύκιον.
- 212 εἰ δέ τις τούτοις ἀπιστεῖ, θεὸν οὐτ' οἶδεν οὐτ' ἐζήτησέ ποτε· ἔγνω γὰρ ἂν εὐθέως, ἔγνω παγίως καταλαβὼν, ὅτι τὰ παράδοξα δὴ ταῦτα καὶ παράλογα θεοῦ παίγνιά ἐστιν, ἀπιδὼν εἰς τὰ τῷ

<sup>a</sup> In § 209 Philo combines the account of the sending of quails in Ex. xvi. 13 with that in Num. xi. 31-33. There, as in Philo, the quails come later than the manna, not, as in Exodus, before. On the other hand he ignores the statement in Numbers, that the demand for flesh was punished with a plague.

<sup>b</sup> For §§ 210-211 see Ex. xvii. 1-7 and Num. xx. 1-13.

MOSES I. 209-212

camp, flying close to the land, so as to be an easy prey.<sup>a</sup> So they caught and dressed them, each according to his tastes, and feasted on flesh of the most delicious kind, thus obtaining the relish required to make their food more palatable.

XXXVIII. <sup>b</sup> Though this supply of food never failed 210 and continued to be enjoyed in abundance, a serious scarcity of water again occurred. Sore pressed by this, their mood turned to desperation, whereupon Moses, taking that sacred staff with which he accomplished the signs in Egypt, under inspiration smote the steep <sup>c</sup> rock with it. It may be that the rock con- 211 tained originally a spring and now had its artery clean severed, or perhaps that then for the first time a body of water collected in it through hidden channels was forced out by the impact. Whichever is the case, it opened under the violence of the stream and spouted out its contents, so that not only then did it provide a remedy for their thirst but also abundance of drink for a longer time for all these thousands. For they filled all their water vessels, as they had done on the former occasion, from the springs that were naturally bitter but were changed and sweetened by God's directing care. If anyone disbelieves these 212 things, he neither knows God nor has ever sought to know Him ; for if he did he would at once have perceived—aye, perceived with a firm apprehension—that these extraordinary and seemingly incredible events are but child's-play to God. He has but to turn his eyes to things which are really great and <sup>a</sup> The epithet is taken from the allusion to the story in Deut. viii. 15. Philo has made use of it in Leg. All. ii. 84, and De Som. ii. 222. It might be translated "flinty" or "hard," as in E.V., but in both these cases Philo stresses its connexion with ἀκρος.

PHILO

- ὄντι μεγάλα καὶ σπουδῆς ἄξια, γένεσιν οὐρανοῦ καὶ πλανήτων καὶ ἀπλανῶν ἀστέρων χορείας καὶ φωτὸς ἀνάλαμψιν, ἡμέρας μὲν ἡλιακοῦ, νύκτωρ δὲ τοῦ διὰ σελήνης, καὶ γῆς ἴδρυσιν ἐν τῷ μεσαιτάτῳ τοῦ παντός, ἡπείρων τε καὶ νήσων ὑπερβάλλοντα μεγέθη καὶ ζώων καὶ φυτῶν ἀμυθήτους ἰδέας, ἔτι δὲ πελαγῶν ἀναχύσεις, ποταμῶν αὐθιγενῶν καὶ χειμάρρων φοράς, ἀνάων ρεῖθρα πηγῶν, ὧν αἱ | [115] μὲν ψυχρὸν αἱ δὲ θερμὸν ὕδωρ ἀνομβροῦσιν, αἲρος παντοίας τροπὰς, ἐτησίῳν ὥρῶν διακρίσεις, ἄλλα 213 κάλλη μυρία. ἐπιλίποι ἂν ὁ βίος τοῦ βουλομένου διηγείσθαι τὰ καθ' ἕκαστα, μᾶλλον δ' ἐν τι τῶν ὀλοσχερεστέρων τοῦ κόσμου μερῶν, κἂν εἰ μέλλοι πάντων ἀνθρώπων ἔσεσθαι μακροβιώτατος. ἀλλὰ ταῦτα μὲν πρὸς ἀλήθειαν ὄντα θαυμάσια καταπεφρόνηται τῷ συνήθει· τὰ δὲ μὴ ἐν ἔθει, κἂν μικρὰ ἦ, ξέναις φαντασίαις ἐνδιδόντες καταπληττόμεθα τῷ φιλοκαίῳ.
- 214 XXXIX. Ἦδη δὲ πολλὴν καὶ ἀπόρευτον διεξεληλυθότων, ὄροι τινὲς ἀνεφαίνοντο γῆς οἰκουμένης καὶ προάστεια χώρας, εἰς ἣν μεθωρμίζοντο· νέμονται δ' αὐτὴν Φοίνικες. ἐλπίσαντες δὲ βίον εὐδιον καὶ γαληνὸν αὐτοῖς ἀπαντήσεσθαι γνώμης 215 ἐσφάλησαν. ὁ γὰρ προκαθήμενος βασιλεὺς πόρθησιν εὐλαβηθεῖς, ἀναστήσας τὴν ἐκ τῶν πόλεων νεότητα, μάλιστα μὲν ἀνείρξων ὑπηγντίαζεν, εἰ δὲ βιάζοντο, διὰ χειρῶν ἀμνούμενος ἀκμησι καὶ worthy of his earnest contemplation, the creation of heaven and the rhythmic movements of the planets and fixed stars, the light that shines upon us from the sun by day and from the moon by night, the establishment of the earth in the very centre of the universe, the vast expanses of continents and islands and the numberless species of animals and plants, and again the widespreading seas, the rushing rivers, spring-fed and winter torrents, the fountains with their perennial streams, some sending forth cold, other warm, water, the air with its changes of every sort, the yearly seasons with their well-marked diversities and other beauties innumerable. He who 213 should wish to describe the several parts, or rather any one of the cardinal parts of the universe, would find life too short, even if his years were prolonged beyond those of all other men. But these things, though truly marvellous, are held in little account because they are familiar. Not so with the unfamiliar; though they be but small matters, we give way before what appears so strange, and, drawn by their novelty, regard them with amazement.

<sup>a</sup> For §§ 214-219 see Ex. xvii. 8-16 (cf. Deut. xxv. 17-19). Philo ignores the part taken by Aaron and Hur in holding up Moses' hands.

<sup>b</sup> Presumably this refers to the inhabitants of Canaan in general, not specially to Amalek, whose defeat is described in the sequel.

XXXIX. <sup>a</sup>After traversing a long and pathless 214 expanse, they came within sight of the confines of habitable land, and the outlying districts of the country in which they proposed to settle. This country was occupied by Phoenicians.<sup>b</sup> Here they had thought to find a life of peace and quiet, but their hopes were disappointed. For the king who ruled there, 215 fearing pillage and rapine, called up the youth of his cities and came to meet them, hoping to bar their way, or, if that were not feasible and they attempted violence, to discomfit them by force

PHILO

- ἄρτι πρῶτον καθισταμένοις εἰς ἀγῶνα κεκμηκότας ὁδοιπορίαις καὶ ἐνδείαις σιτίων καὶ ποτῶν, ἃ κατὰ 216 μέρος ἀντεπετίθετο. Μωυσῆς δὲ παρὰ τῶν σκοπῶν γνοὺς οὐ μακρὰν διεστηκότα τὸν ἐχθρὸν στρατόν, καταλέξας τοὺς ἡβῶντας καὶ στρατηγὸν ἐλόμενος ἓνα τῶν ὑπάρχων Ἰησοῦν, πρὸς τὴν μείζονα συμμαχίαν αὐτὸς ἠπείγετο· περιρρανάμενος γὰρ τοῖς εἰωθόσι καθαρμοῖς ἐπὶ κολωνόν τὸν πλησίον μετὰ σπουδῆς ἀναδραμῶν ἰκέτευε τὸν θεὸν ὑπερασπίσαι καὶ νίκην καὶ κράτος περιποιῆσαι τοῖς Ἑβραίοις, οὓς ἐκ χαλεπωτέρων πολέμων καὶ κακῶν ἄλλων ἐρρύσατο μὴ μόνον τὰς ἐξ ἀνθρώπων ἐπικρεμα-σθείσας συμφορὰς ἀποσκεδάσας, ἀλλὰ καὶ ὅσας ὅ-τε τῶν στοιχείων νεωτερισμὸς ἐκαινούργησε κατ' Αἴγυπτον καὶ ὃ ἐν ταῖς ὁδοιπορίαις ἀνήνυτος λιμός.
 217 ἤδη δὲ μελλόντων εἰς μάχην καθίστασθαι, τερατωδέστατόν τι συμβαίνει πάθος περὶ τὰς χεῖρας αὐτοῦ· κουφόταται γὰρ ἐγίνοντο ἐν μέρει καὶ βαρύταται· εἶθ' ὅποτε μὲν ἐπελαφρίζοντο πρὸς ὕψος αἰρόμεναι, τὸ συμμαχικὸν ἐρρώννυτο καὶ ἀνδραγαθιζόμενον ἐπικυδέστερον ἐγίνετο, ὅποτε δὲ κάτω βρίσειαν, ἰσχυροὶ οἱ ἀντίπαλοι, μηνύοντος διὰ συμβόλων τοῦ θεοῦ, ὅτι τῶν μὲν ἐστὶ γῆ καὶ αἱ τοῦ παντός ἐσ-χατῖαι κλῆρος οἰκείος, τῶν δ' αἰθῆρ ὁ ἱερώτατος, καὶ ὥσπερ ἐν τῷ παντὶ βασιλεύει καὶ κρατεῖ γῆς οὐρανός, οὕτω καὶ τὸ ἔθνος περιέσται τῶν ἀντι-218 πολεμούντων. ἄχρι μὲν οὖν τινος<sup>1</sup> αἱ χεῖρες οἶα

<sup>1</sup> This, though accepted without objection by editors, can hardly be right. A conjunction is clearly required, and ἄχρι τινός should be the adverb, "for a time." Perhaps ἄχρι μὲν οὐτινος (W.H.D.R.). Stephanus cites ἀχρις οὗ from Hippocrates.

MOSES I. 215-218

of arms, seeing that his men were unwearied and fresh for the contest, while the others were exhausted with much journeying and by the famine and drought which had alternately attacked them. Moses, learning from his scouts that the enemy was 216 not far distant, mustered his men of military age, and, choosing as their general one of his lieutenants named Joshua, hastened himself to take a more important part in the fight.<sup>a</sup> Having purified himself according to the customary ritual, he ran without delay to the neighbouring hill and besought God to shield the Hebrews and give a triumphant victory to the people whom He had saved from wars and other troubles still more grievous than this, dispersing not only the misfortunes with which men had menaced them but also those so miraculously brought about in Egypt by the upheaval of the elements and by the continual dearth which beset them in their journeying. But, when they were 217 about to engage in the fight, his hands were affected in the most marvellous way. They became very light and very heavy in turns, and, whenever they were in the former condition and rose aloft, his side of the combatants was strong and distinguished itself the more by its valour, but whenever his hands were weighed down the enemy prevailed. Thus, by symbols, God shewed that earth and the lowest regions of the universe were the portion assigned as their own to the one party, and the ethereal, the holiest region, to the other ; and that, just as heaven holds kingship in the universe and is superior to earth, so this nation should be victorious over its opponents in war. While, then, his hands became 218 <sup>a</sup> Or perhaps "to gain the mightier alliance," i.e. of God.

PHILO

- [116] πλάστιγγες ἐν μέρει μὲν | ἐπεκουφίζοντο, ἐν μέρει δ' ἐπέρρεπον, τηνικαῦτα καὶ ὁ ἀγὼν ἀμφήριστος ἦν· ἐξαπιναίως δ' ἀβαρεῖς γενόμενοι, δακτύλοις ἀντὶ ταρσῶν χρώμενοι, μετέωροι πρὸς ὕψος ἤρθησαν, καθάπερ αἱ πτηναὶ φύσεις ἀεροποροῦσαι, καὶ διέμενον ἀνώφοιτοι μέχρι τοῦ τὴν νίκην Ἑβραίους ἀνανταγώνιστον ἄρασθαι, τῶν ἐχθρῶν ἠβηδὸν ἀναιρεθέντων ἄπερ τε διαθεῖναι παρὰ τὸ προσῆκον
- 219 ἐσπούδαζον παθόντων μετὰ δίκης. τότε καὶ Μωυσῆς ἰδρύεται βωμόν, ὃν ἀπὸ τοῦ συμβεβηκότος ὠνόμασε “θεοῦ καταφυγὴν,” ἐφ' οὗ τὰ ἐπινίκια ἔθνε χαριστηρίου εὐχὰς ἀποδιδούς.
- 220 XL. Μετὰ τὴν μάχην ταύτην ἔγνω δεῖν τὴν χώραν, εἰς ἣν ἀπωκίζετο τὸ ἔθνος, κατασκέψασθαι—δεύτερον δ' ὁδοιποροῦσιν ἔτος ἐνειστήκει—βουλόμενος μή, οἷα φιλεῖ, γνωσιμαχεῖν οὐκ εἰδότας, ἀλλ' ἀκοῇ προμαθόντας αὐτήν, ἐπιστήμη τῶν ἐκεῖ βεβαία χρωμένους, τὸ πρακτέον ἐκλογίζεσθαι.
- 221 δώδεκα δ' ἰσαρίθμους ταῖς φυλαῖς ἄνδρας, ἐξ ἐκάστης ἓνα φύλαρχον, αἰρεῖται τοὺς δοκιμωτάτους ἀριστίνδην προκρίνας, ἵνα μηδεμία μοῖρα πλέον ἢ ἔλαττον ἐνεγκαμένη διαφέρηται, πᾶσαι δ' ἐξ ἴσου διὰ τῶν ἐν τέλει τὰ παρὰ τοῖς κατοίκοις, εἰ βουλη-
- 222 θεῖεν οἱ πεμφθέντες ἀψευδεῖν, ἐπιγνώσιν. ἐλόμενος δ' αὐτοὺς φησι τάδε· “τῶν ἀγώνων καὶ κινδύνων, οὓς ὑπέστημεν καὶ μέχρι νῦν ὑπομένομεν, ἀθλὸν εἰσω αἱ κληρουχίαι, ὧν τῆς ἐλπίδος μὴ διαμάρτοι-

---

<sup>a</sup> Or “taking refuge in God.” LXX. “the Lord is my refuge.” E.V. Jehovah-Nissi, “the Lord is my banner.”

<sup>b</sup> For §§ 220-236 see Num. xiii., xiv.

successively lighter and weightier, like scales in the balance, the fight, too, continued to be doubtful; but, when they suddenly lost all weight, the fingers serving them as pinions, they were lifted on high like the tribe that wings its way through the air, and remained thus soaring until the Hebrews won an undisputed victory and their enemies were slaughtered wholesale, thus justly suffering the punishment which they wrongly strove to deal to others. Then, 219 too, Moses set up an altar, and called it from the event "Refuge of God,"<sup>a</sup> and on this, with prayers of thanksgiving, he offered sacrifices in celebration of the victory.

XL. <sup>b</sup>After this battle he came to the conclusion 220 that, since it was now the second year of their travels, he ought to inspect the land in which the nation proposed to settle. He wished them, instead of arguing ignorantly in the usual way, to obtain a good idea of the country by first-hand report, and with this solid knowledge of the conditions to calculate the proper course of action. He chose twelve 221 men corresponding to the number of the tribes, one headman from each, selecting the most approved for their high merit, in order that no part of the nation might be set at variance with the others through receiving either more or less than they, but all might get to know through their chieftains the conditions in which the inhabitants lived, as they would do if the emissaries were willing to report the full truth. When he had chosen them, he spoke as 222 follows: "The conflicts and dangers which we have undergone and still endure, have for their prize the lands which we hope to apportion, a hope which we trust may not be disappointed, since the nation

PHILO

- μεν ἔθνος πολυανθρωπότατον εἰς ἀποικίαν παρα-πέμποντες. ἔστι δ' ὠφελιμώτατον ἢ τόπων καὶ ἀνθρώπων καὶ πραγμάτων ἐπιστήμη, ὥσπερ ἡ 223 ἄγνοια βλαβερόν. ὑμᾶς οὖν ἐχειροτονήσαμεν, ἵνα ταῖς ὑμετέραις ὄψεσί τε καὶ διανοίαις τάκεῖ θεασώμεθα· γίνεσθε δὴ τῶν τοσοῦτων μυριάδων ὦτα καὶ ὀφθαλμοὶ πρὸς τὴν ὦν ἀναγκαῖον εἰδέναί σαφῆ κατά-224 ληψιν. ἃ δὲ γινῶναι ποθοῦμεν, τρία ταῦτ' ἐστίν· οἰκητόρων πλήθος τε καὶ δύναμις, πόλεων τὴν ἐν εὐκαιρίᾳ θέσιν καὶ ἐν οἰκοδομίαις ἐχυρότητα ἢ τοῦναντίον, χώραν εἰ βαθύγειός ἐστι καὶ πίων, ἀγαθὴ παντοίους καρποὺς ἐνεγκεῖν σπαρτῶν τε καὶ δένδρων, ἢ λεπτόγεως ἔμπαλιν, ἵνα πρὸς μὲν ἰσχὺν καὶ πλήθος οἰκητόρων ἰσορρόποις δυνάμεσι φραξώμεθα, πρὸς δὲ τὴν ἐν τοῖς τόποις ἐρυμνότητα μηχανήμασι καὶ ταῖς ἐλεπόλεσιν· ἀναγκαῖον δὲ καὶ τὴν χώραν εἰδέναί, εἰ ἀρετῶσα ἢ μή· περὶ γὰρ λυπρᾶς 225 ἔκουσίους κινδύνους ὑπομένειν ἡλιθιότητος. τὰ δ' ὄπλα καὶ μηχανήματα ἡμῶν καὶ πᾶσα ἡ δύναμις ἐν μόνῳ τῷ πιστεύειν θεῷ κείται· ταύτην ἔχοντες τὴν παρασκευὴν οὐδενὶ τῶν φοβερῶν εἴξομεν· ἱκανὴ γὰρ ἀμάχους ῥώμας εὐεξίας, τόλμαις, ἐμπειρίαις, [117] πλήθεσιν ἐκ πολλοῦ τοῦ | περιόντος κατακρατεῖν, δι' ἣν καὶ ἐν ἐρήμῃ βαθεῖα χορηγία πάντων εἰσὶν 226 ὅσα ἐν εὐετηρίᾳ πόλεων. ὁ δὲ καιρὸς, ἐν ᾧ μάλιστα χώρας ἀρετὴν δοκιμάζεσθαι συμβέβηκεν, ἔαρ ἐστίν, ὃ νῦν ἐφέστηκεν· ὥρα γὰρ ἔαρος τὰ μὲν σπαρέντα τελεσφορεῖται γέννη, αἱ δὲ τῶν δένδρων φύσεις ἀρ-χὴν λαμβάνουσιν. ἄμεινον δ' ἂν εἶη καὶ ἐπιμεῖναι μέχρι θέρους ἀκμάζοντος καὶ διακομίσαι καρποὺς οἰονεὶ δείγματα χώρας εὐδαίμονος."

MOSES I. 222-226

which we are bringing to settle there is so populous. To know the places, the men and their circumstances, is as useful as the ignorance of them is mischievous. So we have appointed you that with 223 the aid of your sight and intelligence we may be able to survey the state of the country. Become, then, the ears and eyes of all this great multitude, to give them a clear apprehension of what they require to know. There are three things which we 224 desire to learn : the size and strength of the population, whether the cities are favourably situated and strongly built, or the contrary, and whether the land has a deep, rich soil, well-adapted to produce every kind of fruits from cornfields and orchards, or on the other hand is thin and poor. Thus shall we counter the number and power of the inhabitants with equal forces, and the strength of their position with machines and siege engines. Knowledge of the fertility or unfertility of the land is also indispensable, for if it is poor it would be folly to court danger to win it. Our arms and engines and all our power 225 consist solely in faith in God. Equipped with this, we shall defy every terror. Faith is able to overpower, and more than overpower, forces the most invincible, in physique, courage, experience and number, and by it we are supplied in the depths of the desert with all that the rich resources of cities can give. Now the season which has been found to be 226 best for testing the goodness of a land is spring, which is now present ; for in springtime the different crops come to their fullness and the fruit-trees begin to shew their natural growth. Yet it might be better to wait till summer is at its height, and bring back fruits as samples of the wealth of the land."

PHILO

- 227 XLI. Ταῦτ' ἀκούσαντες ἐπὶ τὴν κατασκοπὴν ἐξήεσαν ὑπὸ παντὸς τοῦ πλήθους προπεμπόμενοι δεδιότος, μὴ συλληφθέντες ἀπόλωνται καὶ συμβῆῖ δύο τὰ χαλεπώτατα, ἀνδρῶν τε, οἱ φυλῆς ἐκάστης ὄψις ἦσαν, σφαγαὶ καὶ ἄγνοια τῶν παρὰ τοῖς ἐφεδρεύουσιν ἐχθροῖς ὧν ὠφέλιμος ἢ ἐπιστήμη.
- 228 παραλαβόντες δ' ὀπτῆρας καὶ ἡγεμόνας τῆς ὁδοῦ προερχομένοις ἐφείποντο· καὶ γενόμενοι πλησίον, ἐφ' ὑψηλότατον ὄρος τῶν περι τὸν τόπον ἀναδραμόντες, κατεθεῶντο τὴν χώραν, ἧς πεδιάς μὲν ἦν πολλὴ κριθοφόρος, πυροφόρος, εὐχορτος, ὄρεινὴ δ' οὐκ ἔλαττον ἀμπέλων καὶ στελεχῶν ἄλλων κατάπλεως, εὐδενδρος ἅπασα, λάσιος, ποταμοῖς καὶ πηγαῖς διεζωσμένη πρὸς ἄφθονον ὑδρείαν, ὡς ἐκ τῶν προπόδων ἄχρι τῶν κορυφῶν ὅλα τῶν ὄρων τὰ κλίματα δένδρεσι κατασκίοις συνυφάνθαι, διαφερόντως δὲ τοὺς αὐχένας καὶ ὄσαι βαθεῖαι διαφύσεις.
- 229 κατεθεῶντο δὲ καὶ τὰς πόλεις ἐρυμνοτάτας διχόθεν, ἔκ τε τοπικῆς περι τὴν θέσιν εὐκαιρίας καὶ περιβόλων ἐχυρότητος. ἐξετάζοντες δὲ καὶ τοὺς οἰκήτορας ἐώρων ἀπείρους τὸ πλήθος, περιμηκεστάτους γίγαντας ἢ γιγαντώδεις τὰς τῶν σωμάτων ὑπερ-
- 230 βολὰς ἔν τε μεγέθεσι καὶ ῥώμαις. ταῦτα κατιδόντες εἰς ἀκριβεστέραν κατάληψιν ἐπέμενον—ὀλισθηρὸν γὰρ αἰ πρῶται φαντασίαι χρόνῳ μόλις ἐνσφραγιζόμεναι—καὶ ἅμα σπουδῆν ἐποιοῦντο δρεψάμενοι τῶν ἀκροδρύων, μὴ ἄρτι πρῶτον στεριφουμένων ἀλλ' ἤδη ὑποπερκαζόντων, ἐπιδείξασθαι

XLI. When the spies heard this, they set out on 227 their errand, escorted by the whole multitude, who feared that they might be taken and slain, thus entailing two heavy misfortunes, the death of the men who were as eyesight to their particular tribe, and concerning the foe that lay ready to attack them ignorance of the facts which it would be useful to know. The men took with them scouts and guides 228 to the road, and followed behind them. And, when they came near to their destination, they quickly ascended the highest of the mountains in the neighbourhood and surveyed the country. Much of it was plainland bearing barley, wheat and grass, while the uplands were equally full of vines and other trees, all of it well timbered and thickly overgrown and intersected with springs and rivers which gave it abundance of water, so that from the lowest part to the summits the whole of the hill country, particularly the ridges and the deep clefts, formed a close texture of umbrageous trees. They observed 229 also that the cities were strongly fortified, in two ways, through the favourable nature of their situation and the solidity of their walls. And, on scrutinizing the inhabitants, they saw that they were countless in number and giants of huge stature, or at least giant-like in their physical superiority both in size and strength. Having marked these things, 230 they stayed on to get a more accurate apprehension, for first impressions are treacherous and only slowly in time get the seal of reality. And, at the same time, they were at pains to pluck some of the fruits of the trees, not those in the first stage of hardening, but fruits darkening to ripeness, and thus have

PHILO

παντὶ τῷ πλήθει τὰ μὴ ῥαδίως φθαρησόμενα.
 231 μάλιστα δ' αὐτοὺς κατέπληττεν ὁ τῆς ἀμπέλου καρπός· οἱ γὰρ βότρυες ὑπερμεγέθεις ἦσαν, ἀντιπαρεκτεινόμενοι ταῖς κληματίσι καὶ μοσχεύμασιν, ἄπιστος θεά· ἓνα γοῦν ἐκτεμόντες καὶ δοκίδος ἐκ κέσων ἀπαιωρήσαντες, ἧς τὰς ἀρχὰς δυσὶ νέοις, τῷ μὲν ἔνθεν τῷ δ' ἔνθεν, ἐπετίθεσαν,<sup>1</sup> ἐκ διαδοχῆς, πιεζομένων αἰεὶ τῶν προτέρων—βαρύτατον γὰρ ἦν 232 φρονούντες. XLII. ἐγένοντο μὲν οὖν αὐ-τοῖς ἄμιλλαι μυρίαὶ καὶ πρὶν ἐπανήκειν κατὰ τὴν ὁδόν, ἀλλὰ κουφότεροι, ὑπὲρ τοῦ μὴ γνωσιμα-[118] χούτων μηδ' | ἄλλα ἄλλων ἀπαγγελόντων στά-σιν ἐν τῷ πλήθει γενέσθαι, χαλεπώτεροι δὲ μετὰ 233 τὴν ἐπάνοδον. οἱ μὲν γὰρ περὶ τῆς τῶν πόλεων ἐχυρότητος καὶ ὡς ἐκάστη πολυάνθρωπός ἐστι διεξιόντες καὶ πάντα αἴροντες τῷ λόγῳ πρὸς τὸ μεγαλεῖον φόβον ἐνειργάζοντο τοῖς ἀκούουσιν, οἱ δὲ τὸν ἀπάντων ὦν εἶδον ὑφαιροῦντες ὄγκον παρεκάλουν μὴ ἀναπίπτειν, ἀλλ' ἔχεσθαι τῆς ἀποικίας ὡς αὐτοβοεὶ περιεσομένους· οὐδεμίαν γὰρ ἀνθέξειν πόλιν πρὸς τοσαύτης δυνάμεως ἔφοδον ἀθρόως ἐπιστάσης, ἀλλὰ τῷ βάρει πιεσθεῖσαν πίπτειν· προσετίθεσαν δὲ καὶ τὰ ἐκ τῶν ἰδίων παθῶν ἐκά-τεροι ταῖς ψυχαῖς τῶν ἀκουόντων, οἱ μὲν ἄνανδροι δειλίαν, οἱ δ' ἀκατάπληκτοι θάρσος μετ' εὐελ-234 πιστίας. ἀλλ' οὗτοι μὲν πέμπτη μοῖρα τῶν ἀποδεδειλιακότων ἦσαν, οἱ δ' ἔμπαλιν τῶν γενναίων

<sup>1</sup> MSS. ἐπιθέντες. The anacoluthon might perhaps be cured more simply by the omission of ἧς.

MOSES I. 230-234

something which would naturally keep in good condition to exhibit to the whole multitude. They 231 were especially amazed by the fruit of the vine, for the bunches were of huge size, stretching right along the branches and shoots and presenting an incredible spectacle. One, indeed, they cut off, and carried it suspended from the middle part of a beam, the ends of which were laid on two youths, one in front and another behind, a fresh pair at intervals relieving its predecessors, as they continually were wearied by the great weight of the burden.

On vital matters, the envoys were not of one mind. XLII. Indeed, there were numberless 232 contentions among them, even during the journey before they arrived back, though of a lighter kind, as they did not wish that their disputes or conflicting reports should produce faction in the mass of the people. But, when they had returned, these contentions became more severe. For, while one party, 233 by dilating upon the fortifications of the cities and the great population of each and by magnifying everything in their description, created fear in their hearers, the others belittled the gravity of all that they had seen, and bade them not be faint-hearted but persist in founding their settlement in the certainty that they would succeed without striking a blow. No city, they said, could resist the combined onset of so great a power, but would fall overwhelmed by its weight. Both parties transmitted the results of their own feelings to the souls of their hearers, the unmanly their cowardice, the undismayed their courage and hopefulness. But these 234 last numbered but a fifth part of the craven-hearted, who were five times as many as the better spirited.

PHILO

πενταπλάσιοι· τὸ δ' ὀλίγον θάρσος ἀτολμίας ἐναφανίζεται περιουσία, ὃ δὴ καὶ τότε φασὶ συμ-βῆναι· τῶν γὰρ τὰ βέλτιστα διεξιόντων δυοῖν οἱ τάναντία φάσκοντες δέκα περιῆσαν οὕτως, ὥστε καὶ σύμπασαν ὑπηγάγοντο τὴν πληθὺν ἐκείνων μὲν ἀλλοτριώσαντες, ἑαυτοῖς δ' οἰκειωσάμενοι.

235 περὶ δὲ τῆς χώρας ταῦτά πάντες ἀπεφαίνοντο γνώμη μιᾷ τὸ κάλλος καὶ τῆς πεδιάδος καὶ τῆς ὄρεινῆς ἐκδιηγούμενοι· “ τί δ' ὄφελος ” εὐθύς ἀνεβόησαν “ ἡμῖν ἀλλοτριῶν ἀγαθῶν καὶ ταῦτα πεφρουρημένων κραταιᾷ χειρὶ πρὸς τὸ ἀναφαίρετον; ” καὶ τοῖς δυσὶν ἐπιδραμόντες μικροῦ καταλεύουσιν αὐτοὺς ἡδονὴν ἀκοῆς τοῦ συμφέρον-236 τος καὶ ἀπάτην ἀληθείας προκρίναντες. ἐφ' οἷς ὃ ἡγεμὼν ἠγανάκτει καὶ ἅμα ἠύλαβεῖτο, μὴ τι θεήλατον κατασκήψῃ κακὸν οὕτως ἐκθύμωσ ἀπιστοῦσι τοῖς χρησμοῖς· ὅπερ καὶ ἐγένετο· τῶν γὰρ κατασκόπων οἱ μὲν δειλοὶ δέκα λοιμῶδει νόσῳ διαφθείρονται μετὰ τῶν ἐκ τοῦ πλήθους συναπονοηθέντων, μόνοι δ' οἱ συμβουλευσάντες δύο μὴ ὄρρωδεῖν ἀλλ' ἐφίεσθαι τῆς ἀποικίας ἐσώθησαν, ὅτι καταπειθεῖς ἐγένοντο τοῖς λογίοις, γέρας ἐξαίρετον λαβόντες τὸ μὴ παραπολέσθαι.

237 XLIII. Τοῦτ' αἴτιον ἐγένετο τοῦ μὴ θᾶπτον ἦκειν εἰς ἣν ἀπωκίζοντο γῆν. δυνάμενοι γὰρ ἔτει δευτέρῳ μετὰ τὴν ἀπ' Αἰγύπτου μετανάστασιν τὰς ἐν Συρίᾳ πόλεις καὶ τὰς κληρουχίας ἐννέμεσθαι,<sup>1</sup> τὴν ἄγουσαν καὶ ἐπίτομον ἐκτραπόμενοι ὁδὸν ἐπλάζοντο, δυσαναπορεύτους καὶ μακρὰς ἀνοδίας ἄλλας

<sup>1</sup> MSS. ἐκνέμεσθαι.

Courage confined to few is lost to sight, when timidity has the superiority of numbers : and that, we are told, happened on this occasion ; for the two who gave a highly favourable account were so outweighed by the ten who said the opposite that the latter brought over the whole multitude into dissent from the others and agreement with themselves.

With regard to the country, they all <sup>235</sup> stated the same, unanimously extolling the beauty of both the plain and hill country. "But of what use to us," at once cried out the people, "are good things which belong to others, and moreover are strongly guarded so that none can take them away ?" And they set upon the two, and nearly stoned them in their preference of the pleasant-sounding to the profitable, and of deceit to truth. This roused their <sup>236</sup> ruler's indignation, who, at the same time, feared lest some scourge should descend upon them from God for their senseless disbelief in His utterances. This actually happened. For the ten cowardly spies perished in a pestilence with those of the people who had shared their foolish despondency, while the two who alone had advised them not to be terrified, but hold to their plan of settlement, were saved, because they had been obedient to the oracles, and received the special privilege that they did not perish with the others.

XLIII. This event was the reason why they did <sup>237</sup> not come sooner to the land where they proposed to settle. For, though they could have occupied the cities of Syria and their portions of land in the second year after leaving Egypt, they turned away from the road which led directly thither and wandered about, travelling with difficulty, through long, pathless

PHILO

- ἐπ' ἄλλαις ἀνευρίσκοντες εἰς ἀνήνυτον ψυχῆς τε καὶ σώματος κάματον, δίκας ἀναγκαίας τῆς ἄγαν 238 ἀσεβείας ὑπομένοντες. ὀκτῶ γοῦν ἐνιαυτοὺς πρὸς [119] τοῖς τριάκοντα δίχα τοῦ | παρεληλυθότος χρόνου, γενεᾶς βίον ἀνθρωπίνης, ἄνω κάτω τριβόμενοι καὶ τὰς ἀβάτους ἐρημίας ἀναμετροῦντες ἔτει τεσσαρακοστῶ μόλις ἐπὶ τοὺς τῆς χώρας ὄρους παρεγένοντο, ἐφ' οὓς καὶ πρότερον ἦλθον.
- 239 πρὸς δὲ ταῖς εἰσβολαῖς ὥκουν ἕτεροί τε καὶ δὴ καὶ συγγενεῖς αὐτῶν, οὓς ὥοντο μάλιστα μὲν συνεκπολεμήσειν τὸν πρὸς τοὺς ἀστυγείτονας πόλεμον καὶ πρὸς τὴν ἀποικίαν ἅπαντα συμπράξειν, εἰ δ' ἀποκνοίεν, μετὰ μηδετέρων γοῦν τετάξεσθαι
- 240 χεῖρας ἀνέχοντας. οἱ γὰρ ἀμφοτέρων τῶν ἔθνῶν πρόγονοι, τοῦ τε Ἑβραϊκοῦ καὶ τοῦ τὰ προάστεια κατοικοῦντος, ἀδελφοὶ δύο ἦσαν ὁμοπάτριοι καὶ ὁμομήτριοι, πρὸς δὲ καὶ δίδυμοι, ἀφ' ὧν εἰς πολυπαιδίαν ἐπιδιδόντων καὶ τῶν ἀπογόνων εὐφορία τινὶ χρωμένων εἰς μέγα καὶ πολυάνθρωπον ἔθνος ἑκατέρα τῶν οἰκιῶν ἀνεχύθη· ἀλλ' ἡ μὲν ἐφιλοχώρησεν, ἡ δ', ὡς ἐλέχθη πρότερον, εἰς Αἴγυπτον μετανα-
- 241 σταῖσα διὰ λιμὸν χρόνοις ὕστερον ἐπανήει. τὴν δ' οικειότητα ἡ μὲν διεφύλαττε, καίτοι πολὺν χρόνον διαζευχθεῖσα, πρὸς τοὺς μηδὲν ἔτι τῶν πατρίων φυλάττοντας, ἀλλὰ πάντα τὰ τῆς ἀρχαίας πολιτείας ἐκδεδιητημένους, ὑπολαβοῦσα τοῖς ἡμέροις τὰς φύσεις ἀρμόττον εἶναι δίδοναι τι καὶ χαρίζεσθαι
- 242 συγγενείας ὀνόματι· ἡ δ' ἔμπαλιν τὰ φιλικὰ πάντα ἔτρεψεν ἥθεσι καὶ λόγοις βουλαῖς τε καὶ πράξεσιν ἀσπόνδοις καὶ ἀσυμβάτοις χρωμένη, πατρικὴν ἔχθραν ζωπυροῦσα—ὁ γὰρ τοῦ ἔθνους ἀρχηγέτης

<sup>a</sup> For §§ 239-249 see Num. xx. 14-21.

MOSES I. 237-242

tracts, which appeared one after the other, bringing endless weariness of soul and body, the punishment they needs must endure for their great impiety. For thirty-eight years in addition to the time already 238 spent, the span of a generation of human life, they went wayworn up and down, tracing and retracing the trackless wilds till at last in the fortieth year they succeeded in reaching those boundaries of the country to which they had come before. <sup>a</sup> Near the 239 entrances there dwelt, among others, some kinsfolk of their own, who, they quite thought, would join in the war against their neighbours and assist the new settlement in every way, or, if they shrank from this, would at the worst abstain from force and remain neutral. For the ancestors of both nations, the Hebrews and 240 the inhabitants of the outlying districts, were two brothers with the same father and mother, and twins to boot. Both had become the parents of an increasing family, and, as their descendants were by no means unfruitful, both households had spread into great and populous nations. One of these had clung to the homeland, the other, as has been said, migrated to Egypt on account of the famine, and was returning 241 after many years. The latter in spite of its long separation maintained the tie of relationship, and though it had to deal with men who retained none of their ancestral customs, but had abandoned all the old ways of communal life, considered that it was proper for humane natures to pay some tribute of goodwill to the name of kinship. The other, on the contrary, 242 had upset all that made for friendship. In its customs and language, its policy and actions, it shewed implacable enmity and kept alive the fire of an ancestral feud. For the founder of the nation, αὐτὸς ἀποδόμενος τῷ ἀδελφῷ τὰ πρεσβεῖα μικρὸν ὕστερον ὧν ἐξέστη μετεποιεῖτο παραβαίνων τὰς ὁμολογίας καὶ ἐφόνα θάνατον ἀπειλῶν, εἰ μὴ ἀποδοίη— ταύτην τὴν παλαιὰν ἀνδρὸς ἐνὸς πρὸς ἓνα ἔχθραν ἔθνος τοσαύταις ὕστερον γενεαῖς ἐκαί-

PHILO

243 νωσεν. ὁ μὲν οὖν ἡγεμῶν τῶν Ἑβραίων Μωυσῆς, καίτοι γ' αὐτοβοεὶ δυνάμενος ἐλεῖν ἐξ ἐπιδρομῆς, οὐκ ἐδικαίωσε διὰ τὴν εἰρημένην συγγένειαν, ἀλλ' ὁδῶ χρήσασθαι μόνον ἡξίου τῇ διὰ τῆς χώρας πάνθ' ὑπισχνούμενος πράξειν τὰ ἔνσπονδα, μὴ τεμείν<sup>1</sup> χωρίον, μὴ θρέμματα, μὴ λείαν ἀπάξειν, ὕδατος, εἰ ποτοῦ γένοιτο σπάνις, τιμὴν παρέξειν καὶ τῶν ἄλλων τοῖς ἀχορηγῆτοις ὠνίων· οἱ δ' εἰρηρικαῖς οὕτω προκλήσεσιν ἀνὰ κράτος ἡγναντιοῦντο πόλεμον ἀπειλοῦντες, εἰ τῶν ὄρων ἐπιβάντας ἢ ψαύσαντας αὐτὸ μόνον αἰσθιοῦτο.

244 XLIV. χαλεπῶς δὲ τὰς ἀποκρίσεις ἐνηνοχότων καὶ ἡδὴ πρὸς ἄμυναν ὀρμώντων, ἐν ἐπηκόῳ στὰς “ἄνδρες” εἶπεν, “ἡ μὲν ἀγανάκτησις ὑμῶν εὐλογος καὶ δικαία· χρηστὰ γὰρ ἀφ' ἡμέρου γνώμης προτειναμένων, πονηρὰ ἀπὸ διανοίας ἀπεκρίναντο

245 [120] κακοήθους. ἀλλ' οὐχ ὅτι | τῆς ὠμότητος ἐκεῖνοι δίκας ἐπάξιοι τίνειν εἰσὶ, διὰ τοῦθ' ἡμῖν ἐπὶ τὰς κατ' αὐτῶν τιμωρίας ἀρμόττον ἴεσθαι, ἔνεκα τῆς πρὸς τὸ ἔθνος τιμῆς, ἵνα καὶ ταύτῃ μοχθηρῶν ἀγαθοὶ διαφέρωμεν, ἐξετάζοντες οὐ μόνον, εἰ κολαστέοι τινές εἰσιν, ἀλλ' εἰ καὶ ὑφ' ἡμῶν

<sup>1</sup> MSS. μήτε μὴν.

MOSES I. 242-245

after having of his own accord sold his birthright as the elder to his brother, had later reclaimed what he had surrendered, in violation of their agreement, and had sought his blood, threatening him with death if he did not make restitution ; and this old feud between two individual men was renewed by the nation so many generations after.

Now the 243
leader of the Hebrews, Moses, though an attack might have won him an uncontested victory, did not feel justified in taking this course because of the above-mentioned kinship. Instead, he merely asked for the right of passage through the country, and promised to carry out all that he agreed to do, not to ravage any estate, not to carry off cattle or spoil of any kind, to pay a price for water if drink were scarce and for anything else which their wants caused them to purchase. But they refused these very peaceful overtures with all their might, and threatened war if they found them overstepping their frontiers, or even merely on the threshold. XLIV. The 244 Hebrews were incensed at the answer, and were now starting to take up arms when Moses, standing where he could be heard, said : “ My men, your indignation is just and reasonable. We made friendly proposals in the kindest spirit. In the malice of their hearts, they have answered us with evil. But the 245 fact that they deserve to be punished for their brutality does not make it right for us to proceed to take vengeance on them. The honour of our nation forbids it, and demands that here too we should mark the contrast between our goodness and their unworthiness by inquiring not only whether some particular persons deserve to be punished, but

PHILO

- 246 ἐπιτήδειοι τοῦτο πάσχειν." εἶτ' ἐκτραπόμενος ἦγε δι' ἑτέρας τὴν πληθύν, ἐπειδὴ τὰς κατὰ τὴν χώραν ὁδοὺς ἀπάσας φρουραῖς διεζωσμένας εἶδεν ὑπὸ τῶν βλάβην μὲν οὐδεμίαν ἐνδεξομένων, φθόνῳ δὲ καὶ βασκανίᾳ τὴν ἐπίτομον οὐκ ἐόντων προέρχεσθαι.
- 247 ταῦτα δὲ σαφειστάτῃ πίστις ἦν ἀνίας, ἦν ἐπὶ τῷ τὸ ἔθνος ἐλευθερίας τυχεῖν ἠνιῶντο, δηλονότι χαίροντες, ἠνίκα τὴν ἐν Αἰγύπτῳ πικρὰν δουλείαν ὑπέμενον· ἀνάγκη γὰρ οἷς φέρει λύπην τὰ γαθὰ τῶν πλησίον ἐπὶ τοῖς τούτων εὐφραίνεισθαι κακοῖς, κὰν
- 248 μὴ ὁμολογῶσιν. ἔτυχον γὰρ ὡς πρὸς ὁμογνώμονας καὶ τὰ αὐτὰ βουλομένους ἀνενεγκόντες τὰ συμβάντα λυπηρά τε αὐ καὶ ὅσα καθ' ἡδονήν, οὐκ εἰδότες ὅτι πόρρω προεληλύθασιν μοχθηρίας καὶ ἐβελέχθρως καὶ φιλαπεχθημόνως ἔχοντες στένειν μὲν ἐπὶ τοῖς ἀγαθοῖς, ἠδεσθαι δὲ ἐπὶ τοῖς ἐναντίοις ἔμελλον.
- 249 τῆς δὲ κακονοίας ἀνακαλυφθείσης ἐκείνων, ἐκωλύθησαν εἰς χεῖρας ἐλθεῖν ὑπὸ τοῦ προεστῶτος ἐπιδειξαμένου δύο τὰ κάλλιστα, φρόνησιν ἐν ταυτῷ καὶ χρηστότητα· τὸ μὲν γὰρ μηδὲν παθεῖν φυλάξασθαι συνέσεως, τὸ δὲ μηδ' ἀμύνασθαι συγγενεῖς ὄντας ἐβελῆσαι φιλανθρωπίας ἔργον.
- 250 XLV. Τὰς μὲν οὖν τούτων πόλεις παρημεΐψατο. βασιλεὺς δέ τις τῆς ὁμόρου Χανάνης ὄνομα, τῶν σκοπῶν ἀπαγγελιάντων τὸν ὁδοιποροῦντα στρατὸν οὐ πάνυ μακρὰν ἀφεστηκότα, νομίσας ἀσύντακτόν τε εἶναι καὶ ῥαδίως εἰ προεπίθοιτο νικῆσειν, ἄρας also whether the punishment can properly be carried out by us." He then turned aside and led the 246 multitude by another way, since he saw that all the roads of that country were barricaded by watches set by those who had no cause to expect injury but through envy and malice refused to grant a passage along the direct road. This was the clearest proof 247 of the vexation which these persons felt at the nation's liberation, just as doubtless they rejoiced at the bitter slavery which it endured in Egypt. For those who are grieved at the welfare of their neighbours are sure to enjoy their misfortunes, though they may not confess it. As it happened, the Hebrews, believing 248 that their feelings and wishes were the same as their own, had communicated to them all their experiences, painful and pleasant, and did not know that they were far advanced in depravity and with their spiteful and quarrelsome disposition were sure to mourn their good fortune and take pleasure in the opposite. But, when their malevolence was exposed, the 249 Hebrews were prevented from using force against them by their commander, who displayed two of the finest qualities—good sense, and at the same time good feeling. His sense was shown in guarding against the possibility of disaster, his humanity in that on kinsmen he had not even the will to take his revenge.

---

<sup>a</sup> For §§ 250-254 see Num. xxi. 1-3.

MOSES I. 245-250

XLV. <sup>a</sup>So, then, he passed by the cities of this 250 nation; but the king of the adjoining country Chananes <sup>b</sup> by name, having received a report from his scouts that the host of wayfarers was at no great distance, supposed that they were disorganized and would be an easy conquest if he attacked them first.

<sup>b</sup> LXX The Canaanite king Arad (or of Arad), E.V. the Canaanite, the king of Arad.

PHILO

μετὰ τῆς οἰκείας νεότητος εὐοπλοῦσης ἐπεξέθει καὶ τοὺς πρώτους ὑπαντιάσαντας ἄτε μὴ παρεσκευασμένους εἰς μάχην τρέπεται· καὶ λαβὼν αἰχμαλώτους ἐπὶ τῷ παρ' ἐλπίδα εὐημερήματι φυσηθεὶς προήει, 251 καὶ τοὺς ἄλλους ἅπαντας χειρώσεσθαι νομίζων. οἱ δὲ—οὐ γὰρ ἐγνάμφθησαν ἡττη τῆς προερχομένης τάξεως—ἀλλ' ἔτι μᾶλλον ἢ πρότερον σπάσαντες εὐτολμίας καὶ τὴν ἔνδειαν τῶν ἐάλωκότων ἐκπλήσαι ταῖς προθυμίαις ἐπειγόμενοι συνεκρότουν ἄλλος ἄλλον μὴ ἀποκάμνειν “ ἀνεγειρώμεθα ” λέγοντες, “ ἄρτι τῆς χώρας ἐπιβαίνομεν· ἀκατάπληκτοι μετὰ τῆς ἐν τῷ θαρρεῖν ἐχυρότητος γινώμεθα· τὰ τέλη ταῖς ἀρχαῖς πολλάκις κρίνεται· ἐπὶ τῶν εἰσβολῶν ὄντες καταπληξώμεθα τοὺς οἰκήτορας, ὡς ἔχοντες [121] μὲν τὴν ἐκ τῶν πόλεων εὐετηρίαν, | ἀντιδεδωκότες δ' ἦν ἐκ τῆς ἐρημίας ἐπαγόμεθα σπάνιν τῶν ἀναγ-252 καίων.” καὶ ἅμα διὰ τούτων προτρέποντες αὐτοὺς ἠϋξάντο τῆς χώρας ἀπαρχὰς ἀναθήσειν τῷ θεῷ τὰς πόλεις τοῦ βασιλέως καὶ τοὺς ἐν ἐκάστη πολίτας· ὁ δ' ἐπινεύει ταῖς εὐχαῖς καὶ θάρσος ἐμπνεύσας τοῖς Ἑβραίοις τὴν ἀντίπαλον στρατιὰν ἀλῶναι παρ-253 εσκεύασεν. οἱ δ' ἀνὰ κράτος ἐλόντες τὰς χαριστηρίους ὁμολογίας ἐπετέλουν, οὐδὲν ἐκ τῆς λείας νοσφισάμενοι, τὰς δὲ πόλεις αὐτοῖς ἀνδράσι καὶ κειμηλίοις ἀνιερῶσαντες, καὶ ἀπὸ τοῦ συμβεβηκότος 254 ὄλην τὴν βασιλείαν ὠνόμασαν “ ἀνάθημα.” καθ-ἄπερ γὰρ εἰς ἕκαστος τῶν εὐσεβούντων ἀπὸ τῶν ἐτησίων ἀπάρχεται καρπῶν, οὓς ἂν ἐκ τῶν ἰδίων συγκομίξῃ κτημάτων, τὸν αὐτὸν τρόπον καὶ ὄλον 406

MOSES I. 250-254

He, therefore, started with a strongly armed force of such younger men as he had around him, and by a rapid attack routed those who first met him, unprepared as they were for battle; and, having taken them captive, elated at the unexpected success he advanced further, expecting to overpower all the rest. But they, not 251 a whit daunted by the defeat of the vanguard, but infused with courage greater even than before, and eager to supply by their zealousness the deficiency caused by the capture of their comrades, worked upon each other not to be faint-hearted. "Let us be up and doing," they cried. "We are now setting foot in the country. Let us shew ourselves undismayed and possessed of the security which courage gives. The end is often determined by the beginning. Here, at the entrance of the land, let us strike terror into the inhabitants, and feel that ours is the wealth of their cities, theirs the lack of necessities which we bring with us from the desert and have given them in exchange." While 252 they thus exhorted each other, they vowed to devote to God the cities of the king and the citizens in each as firstfruits of the land, and God, assenting to their prayers, and inspiring courage into the Hebrews, caused the army of the enemy to fall into their hands. Having thus captured them by the might of 253 their assault, in fulfilment of their vows of thank-offering, they took none of the spoil for themselves, but dedicated the cities, men and treasures alike, and marked the fact by naming the whole kingdom "Devoted." For, just as every pious person gives 254 firstfruits of the year's produce, whatever he reaps from his own possessions, so too the whole nation set τὸ ἔθνος μεγάλης χώρας, εἰς ἣν μετανίστατο, μέγα τμήμα, τὴν εὐθὺς αἰρεθείσαν βασιλείαν, ἀνέθηκεν ἀπαρχὴν τινα τῆς ἀποικίας· οὐ γὰρ ἐνόμιζεν ὅσιον εἶναι διανείμασθαι γῆν ἢ πόλεις κατοικῆσαι, πρὶν καὶ τῆς χώρας καὶ τῶν πόλεων ἀπάρξασθαι.

PHILO

255 XLVI. Μικρὸν δ' ὕστερον καὶ πηγὴν εὐνδρον ἀνευρόντες, ἢ παντὶ τῷ πλήθει ποτὸν ἐχορήγησεν— ἐν φρέατι δ' ἦν ἡ πηγὴ καὶ ἐπὶ τῶν τῆς χώρας ὄρων—, ὥσπερ οὐχ ὕδατος ἀλλ' ἀκράτου σπάσαντες τὰς ψυχὰς ἀνεχύθησαν· ὑπὸ τε εὐφροσύνης καὶ χαρᾶς ἄσμα καινὸν οἱ θεοφιλεῖς χοροὺς περὶ τὸ φρέαρ ἐν κύκλῳ στήσαντες ἦδον εἰς τὸν κληρουῆχον θεὸν καὶ τὸν ἀληθῶς ἡγεμόνα τῆς ἀποικίας, ὅτι πρῶτον ἐπιβάντες ἐξ ἔρημίας μακρᾶς τῆς οἰκουμένης καὶ ἦν ἔμελλον καθέξειν ποτὸν ἄφθονον ἀνεύρον, ἀρμόττον ἡγησάμενοι μὴ ἀσημεῖωτον τὴν 256 πηγὴν παρελθεῖν. καὶ γὰρ ἔτυχεν οὐ χερσὶν ἰδιωτῶν ἀλλὰ βασιλέων ἀνατετμηθῆσαι φιλοτιμηθέντων, ὡς λόγος, οὐ μόνον περὶ τὴν εὔρεσιν τοῦ ὕδατος ἀλλὰ καὶ περὶ τὴν τοῦ φρέατος κατασκευὴν, ἵν' ἐκ τῆς πολυτελείας βασιλικὸν φαίνεται τὸ ἔργον καὶ ἡ τῶν κατασκευασάντων ἀρχὴ καὶ μεγαλόνοια.

257 γεγηθῶς δ' ἐπὶ τοῖς αἰεὶ συμβαίνουσιν ἀπροσδοκῆτοις ἀγαθοῖς ὁ Μωσῆς ἐχώρει προσωτέρω, τὴν μὲν νεότητά διανείμας εἰς τε πρωτοστάτας καὶ ὀπισθοφύλακας, γηραιούς δὲ καὶ γύναια καὶ παῖδας ἐν μέσοις τάξας, ἵνα διὰ τῶν παρ' ἐκάτερα φρουρὰν

<sup>a</sup> For §§ 255-256 see Num. xxi. 16-18.

<sup>b</sup> Or "as we are told" (in the song).

<sup>c</sup> Philo interprets the words "the rulers dug it" of the

MOSES I. 254-257

apart the kingdom which they took at the outset, and thus gave a great slice of the great country into which they were migrating as the firstfruits of their settlement. For they judged it irreligious to distribute the land until they had made a firstfruit offering of the land and the cities.

XLVI. <sup>a</sup>Shortly afterwards they also found a <sup>255</sup> spring of good water in a well situated on the borders of the land. This supplied the whole multitude with drink, and their spirits were enlivened thereby, as though the draught were strong wine rather than water. In their joy and gladness, the people of God's choice set up choirs around the well, and sang a new song to the Deity, Who gave them the land as their portion and had, in truth, led them in their migration. They did so at this point because here, for the first time, when they passed from the long expanse of desert to set foot in a habitable land, and one which they were to possess, they had found water in abundance, and therefore they judged it fitting not to leave the well uncelebrated. For, as they were told, <sup>b</sup> it had <sup>256</sup> been dug by the hands of no common men, but of kings, whose ambition was not only to find the water but so to build the well that the wealth lavished upon it should shew the royal character of the work and the sovereignty and lofty spirit of the builders. <sup>c</sup> Moses, rejoicing at the succession of unexpected <sup>257</sup> happinesses, proceeded further, after distributing his younger men into vanguard and rearguard and placing the old men, womenfolk and children in the centre, so as to be protected by those on either side act of finding the water, and "kings hewed it" (ελατόμησαν) of building up the sides of the well. Cf. De Ebr. 113, where the spiritual meaning of the song is given.

PHILO

- ἔχωσιν, ἕάν τε ἀντικρὺ ἕάν τε κατόπιν ἐχθρὸς ὄμιλος ἐπίη.
- 258 XLVII. Ὀλίγαις δ' ὕστερον ἡμέραις εἰς τὴν τῶν Ἀμορραίων χώραν ἐμβαλὼν πρέσβεις ἐξέπεμπε πρὸς τὸν βασιλέα—Σηῶν δ' ὠνομάζετο—προτρέπων ἐφ' ᾧ καὶ τὸν συγγενῆ πρότερον· ὁ δ' οὐ μόνον πρὸς ὕβριν ἀπεκρίνατο τοῖς ἤκουσι μικροῦ καὶ ἀνελῶν αὐτούς, εἰ μὴ νόμος ὁ πρεσβευτικὸς ἐμποδῶν ἐγένετο, ἀλλὰ καὶ πάντα τὸν στρατὸν συναγαγὼν [122] ἐφώρμα | νομίζων αὐτίκα τῷ πολέμῳ περιέσεσθαι.
- 259 συμπλακείς δὲ οὐ πρὸς ἀμελετήτους καὶ ἀνασκήτους ἔγνω τὴν μάχην οὖσαν ἀλλ' ἀθλητὰς τῷ ὄντι πολέμων ἀηττήτους, οἳ πρὸ μικροῦ πολλὰ καὶ μεγάλα ἠδραγαθίσαντο σωμάτων ἀλκὴν καὶ φρόνημα διανοίας καὶ ἀρετῆς ὕψος ἐπιδειξάμενοι, δι' ὧν τοὺς μὲν ἐναντιωθέντας ἐκ πολλοῦ τοῦ περιόντος εἶλον, ἔψαυσαν δὲ τῶν ἀπὸ τῆς λείας οὐδενὸς τὰ πρῶτα τῶν ἄθλων ἀναθεῖναι τῷ θεῷ σπουδάσαντες·
- 260 οἳ καὶ τότε φραξάμενοι καρτερῶς ἀπὸ τῶν αὐτῶν βουλευμάτων καὶ παρασκευῶν ἀντεφώρμησαν ἅμα καὶ τῇ ἀκαθαιρέτῳ τοῦ δικαίου χρώμενοι συμμαχία, δι' ἣν εὐτολμότεροί τε ἦσαν καὶ ἀγωνισταὶ πρόθυ-
- 261 μοι. σαφῆς δὲ πίστις· δευτέρας οὐκ ἐδέησε μάχης, ἀλλ' ἡ πρώτη καὶ μόνη ἐγένετο, καθ' ἣν πᾶσα ἡ ἀντίπαλος ἐκλήθη δύναμις καὶ ἀνατραπέισα ἠβηδὸν
- 262 αὐτίκα ἠφανίσθη. αἱ δὲ πόλεις ὑπὸ τὸν αὐτὸν χρόνον κεναὶ τε καὶ πλήρεις ἐγεγένητο, κεναὶ μὲν τῶν ἀρχαίων οἰκητόρων, πλήρεις δὲ τῶν κεκρατηκότων· τὸν αὐτὸν μέντοι τρόπον καὶ αἱ κατ' ἀγροὺς ἐπαύλεις ἐρημωθεῖσαι τῶν ἐν αὐταῖς ἀντέλαβον ἄνδρας βελτίους τὰ πάντα.

<sup>a</sup> For §§ 258-262 see Num. xxi. 20-25.

if any enemy host should attack either in front or behind.

XI.VII. <sup>a</sup>A few days after, he entered the land of 258 the Amorites, and sent ambassadors to the king, Sihon by name, with the same demands as he had made to his kinsman before. But Sihon not merely answered the envoys insolently, and came nigh to putting them to death, had he not been prevented by the law of embassies, but also mustered his whole army, and went to the attack thinking to win an immediate victory. But, when he engaged, he perceived that he had no untrained or unpractised fighters 259 to deal with, but men who were truly masters in warfare and invincible, men who had shortly before performed many great feats of bravery and shown themselves strong in body, mettlesome in spirit, and lofty in virtue, and through these qualities had captured their enemies with abundant ease, while they left the spoil untouched in their eagerness to dedicate the first prizes to God. So, too, on this 260 occasion, mightily fortified by the same resolutions and armoury, they went out to meet the foe, taking with them that irresistible ally, justice, whereby also they became bolder in courage and champions full of zeal. The proof of this was clearly shewn. No 261 second battle was needed, but this first fight was the only one, and in it the whole opposing force was turned to flight, then overthrown and straightway annihilated in wholesale slaughter. Their cities 262 were at once both emptied and filled—emptied of their old inhabitants, filled with the victors. And, in the same way, the farm-houses in the country were deserted by the occupants, but received others superior in every way.

PHILO

- 263 XLVIII. Οὗτος ὁ πόλεμος ἅπασι μὲν τοῖς Ἀσιανοῖς ἔθνεσι φοβερὸν δέος ἐνεργάσατο, διαφερόντως δὲ τοῖς ὁμόροις, ὅσω καὶ τὰ δεινὰ ἐγγυτέρω προσεδοκᾶτο. εἰς δὲ δὴ ἐκ τῶν ἀστυγειτόνων βασιλέων ὄνομα Βαλάκης, μεγάλην καὶ πολυάνθρωπον τῆς ἐώας μοῖραν ὑπηγμένους, πρὶν εἰς χεῖρας ἔλθειν ἀπειπῶν, ἀντικρυσ μὲν ὑπαντᾶν οὐκ ἐδοκίμαζε τὸν ἐκπορθήσεως δι' ὄπλων ἐλεύθερον πόλεμον διαδιδράσκων, ἐπ' οἰωνοὺς δὲ καὶ μαντείας ἐτράπετο νομίζων ἀραῖς τισι δυνήσεσθαι τὴν ἄμαχον
- 264 ῥώμην τῶν Ἑβραίων καθελεῖν. ἀνὴρ δ' ἦν κατ' ἐκείνον τὸν χρόνον ἐπὶ μαντεία περιβόητος Μεσοποταμίαν οἰκῶν, ὃς ἅπαντα μὲν ἐμεμύητο τὰ μαντικῆς εἶδη, οἰωνοσκοπίαν δ' ἐν τοῖς μάλιστα συγκεκροτηκῶς ἐθαυμάζετο, πολλοῖς καὶ πολλάκις
- 265 ἐπιδειξάμενος ἄπιστα καὶ μεγάλα. προεῖπε γὰρ τοῖς μὲν ἐπομβρίας θέρους ἀκμάζοντος, τοῖς δ' αὐχμὸν τε καὶ φλογμὸν ἐν μέσῳ χειμῶνι, τοῖς δ' ἐξ εὐετηρίας ἀφορίαν καὶ ἔμπαλιν ἐκ λιμοῦ φορὰν, ἐνίοις δὲ πλημμύρας ποταμῶν καὶ κενώσεις καὶ θεραπείας λοιμικῶν νοσημάτων καὶ ἄλλων μυρίων, ὧν ἕκαστον ὁ προθεσπίζειν δοκῶν ὀνομαστότατος ἦν ἐπὶ μέγα εὐκλείας προερχόμενος διὰ τὴν ἐπιβαίνουσαν αἰὲ καὶ φθάνουσαν πανταχόσε φήμην.
- 266 ἐπὶ τοῦτον ἐξέπεμπε τῶν ἐταίρων τινὰς παρακαλῶν ἦκειν καὶ δωρεὰς τὰς μὲν ἤδη παρέιχε, τὰς δὲ δώσειν ὠμολόγει τὴν χρεῖαν ἧς ἕνεκα μεταπέμποιτο

---

<sup>a</sup> For §§ 263-293, the story of Balaam, see Num. xxii.-xxiv. Philo treats it in a curiously rationalistic way. The divinely sent dreams of Balaam in ch. xxii. are said to be fictions of

XLVIII. "This war caused terrible alarm among all 263 the nations of Asia, particularly among those of the adjoining territories, since the expectation of danger was nearer. But one of the neighbouring kings, named Balak, who had brought under his sway a great and populous portion of the East, lost heart before the contest began. As he had no mind to meet the enemy face to face, and shrank from a war of destruction waged freely and openly with arms, he had recourse to augury and soothsaying, and thought that, if the power of the Hebrews was invincible in battle, he might be able to overthrow it by imprecations of some kind. Now, there was 264 at that time a man living in Mesopotamia far-famed as a soothsayer, who had learned the secrets of that art in its every form, but was particularly admired for his high proficiency in augury, so great and incredible were the things which he had revealed to many persons and on many occasions. To some he had foretold rainstorms in summer, 265 to others drought and great heat in mid-winter, to some barrenness to follow fertility, or again plenty to follow dearth, to some rivers full or empty, ways of dealing with pestilences, and other things without number. In every one of these his reputation for prediction made his name well known and was advancing him to great fame, since the report of him was continually spreading and reaching to every part. To him Balak sent some of his courtiers, and 266 invited him to come, offering him gifts at once and promising others to follow, at the same time explaining the purpose for which his presence was his, and, though the appearance of the Angel to the ass is admitted, nothing is said of the animal speaking. See App. p. 603.

PHILO

δηλῶν· ὁ δ' οὐκ ἀπὸ φρονήματος εὐγενοῦς καὶ [123] βεβαίου, | ἀλλὰ τὸ πλεον ἄστειζόμενος<sup>1</sup> ὡς δὴ τῶν ἔλλογίμων προφητῶν γεγυῶς καὶ μηδὲν ἄνευ χρησμῶν εἰωθῶς πράττειν τὸ παράπαν, ὑπανεδύετο 267 λέγων οὐκ ἐπιτρέπειν αὐτῷ βαδίζειν τὸ θεῖον. καὶ οἱ μὲν ἤκοντες ἐπανήεσαν ἄπρακτοι πρὸς τὸν βασιλέα, ἕτεροι δ' εὐθύς ἐπὶ τὴν αὐτὴν χρεῖαν ἐχειροτονοῦντο τῶν δοκιμωτέρων, πλείω μὲν ἐπι-φερόμενοι χρήματα, περιττοτέρας δὲ δωρεᾶς ὑπ-268 ισχνούμενοι. δελεασθεῖς δὲ καὶ τοῖς ἤδη προτεινομένοις καὶ ταῖς μελλούσαις ἐλπίσι καὶ τὸ ἀξίωμα τῶν παρακαλούντων καταιδεσθεῖς ἐνεδίδου, πάλιν προφασιζόμενος τὸ θεῖον οὐκ ἐφ' ὑγιεῖ· τῇ γοῦν ὑστεραία παρεσκευάζετο τὴν ἔξοδον ὀνειράτα διηγούμενος, ὑφ' ὧν ἔλεγε πληχθεῖς ἐναργέσι φαντασίαις ἀναγκάζεσθαι μηκέτι μένειν, ἀλλὰ τοῖς 269 πρέσβεσιν ἀκολουθεῖν.

XLIX. ἤδη δὲ
 αὐτῷ προερχομένῳ γίνεται κατὰ τὴν ὁδὸν σημεῖον ἀρίδιον περὶ τοῦ τὴν χρεῖαν ἐφ' ἣν συνέτεινεν εἶναι παλίμφημον· τὸ γὰρ ὑποζύγιον, ᾧ συνέβαινεν αὐτὸν ἐποχεῖσθαι, προερχόμενον ἐπ' εὐθείας ἐξ-270 απιναιῶς ἴσταται τὸ πρῶτον· εἶθ', ὥσπερ ἐξ ἐναντίας βία τινὸς ἀνωθοῦντος ἢ ἀναχαιτίζοντος, ὑπὸ πόδας ἐχῶρει καὶ πάλιν ἐπὶ δεξιὰ καὶ εὐώνυμα ἐπιφερόμενον καὶ ᾧδε κάκεισε πλαζόμενον οὐκ ἠρέμει, καθάπερ ἐν οἴνῳ καὶ μέθῃ καρηβαροῦν, καὶ πολλάκις τυπτόμενον ἠλόγει τῶν πληγῶν, ὥστε καὶ

<sup>1</sup> Cohnsuggests ἀκκιζόμενος and points out that in §297, where ἀκκισμός is clearly right, the majority of mss. have ἀστειζόμενος.

* Or "cleverly posing." If ἀστειζόμενος is kept we must suppose that the word, which regularly applies to witty or ironical talk, is extended to any kind of dissimulation. But ἀκκιζόμενος, "feigning reluctance," is easier.

MOSES I. 266-270

required. But the seer, actuated not by any honourable or sincere feelings, but rather by a wish to pose<sup>a</sup> as a distinguished prophet whose custom was to do nothing without the sanction of an oracle, declined, saying that the Deity did not permit him to go. The envoys then returned to the king without success, but others, selected from the more highly reputed courtiers, were at once appointed for the same purpose who brought more money and promised more abundant gifts. Enticed by those offers present and prospective, and in deference to the dignity of the ambassadors, he gave way, again dishonestly alleging a divine command. And so on the morrow he made his preparations for the journey, and talked of dreams in which he said he had been beset by visions so clear that they compelled him to stay no longer but follow the envoys.

XLIX. But, as he proceeded there was given to him on the road an unmistakable sign that the purpose which he was so eager to serve was one of evil omen. For the beast on which he happened to be riding, while proceeding along the straight road, first came to a sudden stop, then, as though someone opposite was thrusting it by force or causing it to rear, it fell back<sup>b</sup> and then again swerved to right and left and floundered hither and thither unable to keep still, as though heady with wine or drink; and, while repeatedly beaten, it paid no regard to the blows, so that it almost <sup>b</sup> The Greek is odd. L. & S. give οἱ ὑπὸ πόδα as "those in the rear" and ὑπὸ πόδα χωρεῖν = "recede," "decline" (of strength), but these are hardly parallels. On the other hand ἐπὶ πόδα (or πόδας) χωρεῖν is a recognized phrase for "retreat" and should perhaps be read here.

PHILO

- τὸν ἐποχούμενον μικροῦ καταβαλεῖν καὶ καθεζό-271 μενον ὁμως ἀντιλυπήσαι. τῶν <γὰρ> παρ' ἐκάτερα χωρίων ἦσαν αἵμασιαι καὶ φραγμοὶ πλησίον· ὁπότ' οὖν τούτοις προσηράχθη φερόμενον, γόνυ καὶ 272 κνήμας καὶ πόδας ὁ δεσπότης θλιβόμενος καὶ πιεζόμενος ἀπεδρύνετο. ἦν δ', ὡς ἔοικε, θεία τις ὄψις, ἣν τὸ μὲν ζῶον ἐπιφοιτῶσαν ἐκ πολλοῦ θεασάμενον ὑπέπτηξεν, ὁ δ' ἄνθρωπος οὐκ εἶδεν, εἰς ἔλεγχον ἀναισθησίας· ὑπὸ γὰρ ἀλόγου ζώου 273 παρενημερεῖτο τὰς ὄψεις ὁ μὴ μόνον τὸν κόσμον τὸν ἀνθεστηκότα ἰδὼν ἄγγελον, οὐκ ἐπειδὴ τοιαύτης θεάς ἦν ἄξιος, ἀλλ' ἵνα τὴν ἀτιμίαν καὶ οὐδένειαν ἑαυτοῦ καταλάβῃ, πρὸς ἰκεσίας καὶ λιτὰς ἐτράπετο συγγνώμην δεόμενος ὑπ' ἀγνοίας ἀλλ' οὐ καθ' 274 ἐκούσιον γνώμην ἀμαρτόντι. τότε μὲν οὖν ὑποστρέφειν δέον, ἐπυθάνετο τῆς φανείσης ὄψεως, εἰ ἀνακάμπτει πάλιν τὴν ἐπ' οἴκου· ἡ δὲ συνιδούσα τὴν εἰρωνείαν καὶ σχετλιάσασα—τί γὰρ ἔδει πυν-θάνεσθαι περὶ πράγματος οὕτως ἐμφανοῦς, ὃ τὰς ἀποδείξεις εἶχεν ἐξ ἑαυτοῦ μὴ δεόμενον τῆς ἐκ [124] λόγων πίστεως, εἰ μὴ | ἄρα ὀφθαλμῶν ὦτα ἀλη-θέστερα καὶ πραγμάτων ῥήματα;—“ βάδιζε ” εἶπεν “ ἐφ' ἣν σπεύδεις ὁδόν· ὀνήσεις γὰρ οὐδέν, ἐμοῦ τὰ λεκτέα ὑπηχοῦντος ἄνευ τῆς σῆς διανοίας καὶ τὰ φωνῆς ὄργανα τρέποντος, ἧ δίκαιον καὶ συμφέρον· ἠνιοχῆσω γὰρ ἐγὼ τὸν λόγον θεσπίζων ἕκαστα διὰ τῆς σῆς γλώττης οὐ συνιέντος.” 275 L. Ἀκούσας δ' ὁ βασιλεὺς ἐγγὺς ἦδη γεγονότα μετὰ τῶν δορυφόρων ὑπαντησόμενος ἐξήει, καὶ

MOSES I. 270-275

threw its rider, and, even though he kept his seat, caused him as much pain as he gave. For the 271 estates on either side had walls and hedges close by, so that when the beast in its movements dashed against these, the feet, knees and shins of its master were crushed and lacerated by the pressure. It was 272 evidently a divine vision, whose haunting presence had for a considerable time been seen by the terrified animal, though invisible to the man, thus proving his insensibility. For the unreasoning animal showed a superior power of sight to him who claimed to see not only the world but the world's Maker. When, 273 at last, he did discern the angel standing in his way, not because he was worthy of such a sight, but that he might perceive his own baseness and nothingness, he betook himself to prayers and supplications, begging pardon for an error committed in ignorance and not through voluntary intention. Yet even 274 then, when he should have returned, he asked of the apparition whether he should retrace his steps homewards. But the angel perceived his dissimulation, for why should he ask about a matter so evident, which in itself provided its own demonstration and needed no confirmation by word, as though ears could be more truthful than eyes or speech than facts? And so in displeasure he answered: "Pursue your journey. Your hurrying will avail you nought. I shall prompt the needful words without your mind's consent, and direct your organs of speech as justice and convenience require. I shall guide the reins of speech, and, though you understand it not, employ your tongue for each prophetic utterance."

L. When the king heard that he was now near 275 at hand, he came forth with his guards to meet him.

PHILO

- ἐντυχόντων, οἷα εἰκός, τὸ μὲν πρῶτον ἦσαν φιλοφροσύναι καὶ δεξιώσεις, εἶτα βραχεῖα κατάμεμψις περὶ τῆς βραδυτῆτος καὶ τοῦ μὴ ἔτοιμότερον ἦκειν· μετὰ δὲ ταῦτ' εὐωχίαι ἦσαν καὶ πολυτελεῖς ἐστιάσεις καὶ ὅσα ἄλλα πρὸς ὑποδοχὴν ξένων ἔθος εὐτρεπίζεσθαι, φιλοτιμίαις βασιλικαῖς πάντα πρὸς τὸ μεγαλειότερον ἐπιδιδόντα καὶ σεμνότερον ὄγκον.
- 276 τῇ δ' ὑστεραία ἅμα τῇ ἔω τὸν μάντιν ὁ Βαλάκης παραλαβὼν ἐπὶ γέωλοφον ἀνήγαγεν, ἔνθα καὶ στήλην συνέβαινεν ἰδρῦσθαι δαιμονίου τινός, ἦν οἱ ἐγχώριοι προσεκύνουν· μέρος δ' ἐνθένδε καθεωρᾶτο τῆς τῶν Ἑβραίων στρατοπεδείας, ὃ καθάπερ ἀπὸ
- 277 σκοπιᾶς ἐπεδείκνυτο τῷ μάγῳ. ὁ δὲ θεασάμενός φησι· “ σὺ μὲν, ὦ βασιλεῦ, βωμοὺς ἑπτὰ δειμάμενος μόσχον ἐφ' ἑκάστου καὶ κριὸν ἰέρευσον· ἐγὼ δ' ἐκτραπόμενος πεύσομαι τοῦ θεοῦ, τί λεκτέον.” ἔξω δὲ προελθὼν ἔνθους αὐτίκα γίνεται, προφητικοῦ πνεύματος ἐπιφοιτήσαντος, ὃ πᾶσαν αὐτοῦ τὴν ἔντεχνον μαντικὴν ὑπερόριον τῆς ψυχῆς ἤλασε· θέμις γὰρ οὐκ ἦν ἱερωτάτῃ κατοκωχῇ συνδιαιτᾶσθαι μαγικὴν σοφιστείαν. εἶθ' ὑποστρέψας καὶ τὰς τε θυσίας ἰδὼν καὶ τοὺς βωμοὺς φλέγοντας ὥσπερ
- 278 ἔρμηνεὺς ὑποβάλλοντας ἐτέρου θεσπίζει τάδε· “ ἐκ Μεσοποταμίας μετεπέμψατό με Βαλάκης μακρὰν τὴν ἀπ' ἀνατολῶν στειλάμενον ἀποδημίαν, ἵνα τίσηται τοὺς Ἑβραίους ἀραῖς. ἐγὼ δὲ τίνα τρόπον ἀράσομαι τοῖς μὴ καταράτοις ὑπὸ θεοῦ; θεάσομαι μὲν αὐτοὺς ὀφθαλμοῖς ἀφ' ὑψηλοτάτων ὄρων καὶ τῇ διανοίᾳ καταλήψομαι, βλάψαι δ' οὐκ ἂν δυναίμην λαόν, ὃς μόνος κατοικήσει, μὴ συναριθμούμενος

MOSES I. 275-278

The interview naturally began with friendly greetings, which were followed by a few words of censure for his slowness and failing to come more readily. Then came high feasting and sumptuous banquets, and the other usual forms of provision for the reception of guests, each through the king's ambition of more magnificence and more imposing pomp than the last. The next day at dawn Balak took the 276 prophet to a hill, where it chanced that in honour of some deity a pillar<sup>a</sup> had been set up which the natives worshipped. From thence a part of the Hebrew encampment was visible, which he shewed as a watchman from his tower to the wizard. He 277 looked and said: "King, do you build seven altars, and sacrifice a calf and a ram on each, and I will go aside and inquire of God what I should say." He advanced outside, and straightway became possessed, and there fell upon him the truly prophetic spirit which banished utterly from his soul his art of wizardry. For the craft of the sorcerer and the inspiration of the Holiest might not live together. Then he returned, and, seeing the sacrifices and the altars flaming, he spake these oracles as one repeating the words which another had put into his mouth. "From Mesopotamia hath Balak called me, 278 a far journey from the East, that he may avenge him on the Hebrews through my cursing. But I, how shall I curse them whom God hath not cursed? I shall behold them with my eyes from the highest mountains, and perceive them with my mind. But I shall not be able to harm the people, which shall dwell alone, not reckoned among other nations; and <sup>a</sup> So LXX "Pillar of Baal." E.V. "high places of Baal," xxii. 41.

PHILO

- ἑτέροις ἔθνεσιν, οὐ κατὰ τόπων ἀποκλήρωσιν καὶ χώρας ἀποτομῆν, ἀλλὰ κατὰ τὴν τῶν ἐξαιρέτων ἐθῶν ιδιότητα, μὴ συναναμιγνύμενος<sup>1</sup> ἄλλοις εἰς 279 τὴν τῶν πατρίων ἐκδιαίτησιν. τίς ἐπ' ἀκριβείας εὔρε τὴν πρώτην καταβολὴν τῆς τούτων γενέσεως; τὰ μὲν σώματ' αὐτοῖς ἐξ ἀνθρωπίνων διεπλάσθη σπερμάτων, ἐκ δὲ θεῶν ἔφυσαν αἱ ψυχαί· διὸ καὶ γεγόνασιν ἀγχίσποροι θεοῦ. ἀποθάνοι μου ἢ ψυχῇ [125] τὸν | σωματικὸν βίον, ἢ ἐν ψυχαῖς δικαίων κατ-αριθμηθῆ, οἷας εἶναι συμβέβηκε τὰς τούτων." 280 LI. Ταῦτ' ἀκούων ὁ Βαλάκης ὤδινεν ἐν ἑαυτῷ. παυσαμένου δέ, τὸ πάθος οὐ χωρήσας "ἐπὶ κατά-ραις" εἶπεν "ἐχθρῶν μετακληθεὶς εὐχὰς τιθέμενος ἐκείνοις οὐκ ἐρυθρίας; ἐλελήθειν ἄρ' ἐμαυτὸν ἀπατῶν ὡς ἐπὶ φίλω σοι τὴν ὑπὲρ τῶν πολεμίων ἀφανῶς τεταγμένῳ τάξιν, ἢ νῦν γέγονε δῆλη. μήποτε καὶ τὰς ὑπερθέσεις τῆς ἐνθάθε ἀφίξεως ἐποιοῦ διὰ τὴν ὑποικουροῦσαν ἐν τῇ ψυχῇ πρὸς μὲν ἐκείνους οἰκειότητα πρὸς δ' ἐμέ καὶ τοὺς ἐμοὺς 281 ἀλλοτρίωσιν· πίστις γάρ, ὡς ὁ παλαιὸς λόγος, τῶν ἀδήλων τὰ ἐμφανῆ." ὁ δὲ τῆς κατοκωχῆς ἀνεθείς "ἀδικωτάτην" εἶπεν "αἰτίαν ὑπομένω συκοφαν-τούμενος· λέγω γὰρ ἴδιον οὐδέν, ἀλλ' ἄττ' ἂν

<sup>1</sup> MSS. συναναμιγνυμένων.

<sup>a</sup> Or "foundation" (?). But both καταβάλλω and καταβολή are frequently used of sowing and this meaning fits better the corresponding verse of LXX (xxiii. 10) τίς ἐξηκριβάσατο τὸ σπέρμα Ἰακώβ;

<sup>b</sup> Cf. the fragment of Aeschylus's Niobe quoted by Plato, Rep. iii. 391E:

οἱ θεῶν ἀγχίσποροι οἱ Ζητὸς ἐγγύς, καὶ οὐ πῶ σφιν ἐξίτηλον αἷμα δαιμῶνων.

that, not because their dwelling-place is set apart and their land severed from others, but because in virtue of the distinction of their peculiar customs they do not mix with others to depart from the ways of their fathers. Who has made accurate discovery of how the sowing<sup>a</sup> of their generation was first made? Their bodies have been moulded from human seeds, but their souls are sprung from divine seeds, and therefore their stock is akin to God.<sup>b</sup> May my soul die to the life of the body<sup>c</sup> that it may be reckoned among the souls of the just, even such as are the souls of these men.” 279

LI. Balak suffered tortures inwardly as he listened 280 to these words, and, when the speaker ceased, he could not contain his passion. “Are you not ashamed,” he cried, “that, summoned to curse the enemy, you have prayed for them? It seems that all unconsciously I was deceiving myself in treating you as a friend, who were secretly ranged on the side of the enemy, as has now become plain. Doubtless also your delay in coming here was due to your secretly harbouring a feeling of attachment to them and aversion for me and mine. For, as the old saying goes, the certain proves the uncertain.” The other, now liberated 281 from the possession, replied: “I suffer under a most unjust charge and calumny, for I say nothing that is

As there is nothing corresponding to this sentence in the LXX, it may be assumed that this is a conscious quotation.

<sup>c</sup> The LXX (v. 10) is ἀποθάνοι ἡ ψυχὴ μου ἐν ψυχαῖς δικαίων καὶ γένοιτο τὸ σπέρμα μου ὡς τὸ σπέρμα τούτων. E.V. “Let me die the death of the righteous, and let my last end be like his.” Philo’s idea presumably is that the souls of the righteous cannot die in the ordinary sense. For the construction cf. De Gig. 14 ψυχαι . . . μελετώσαι τὸν μετὰ σωμάτων ἀποθνήσκων βίον.

PHILO

ὑπηχῆση τὸ θεῖον, ὅπερ οὐχὶ νῦν πρῶτον ἐγὼ μὲν εἶπον, σὺ δ' ἤκουσας, ἀλλὰ καὶ πρόσθεν, ἡνίκα τοὺς 282 πρέσβεις ἔπεμψας, οἷς ἀπεκρινάμην ταῦτά." νομίσασ δ' ὁ βασιλεὺς ἢ τὸν μάντιν ἀπατᾶν ἢ τὸ θεῖον τρέπεσθαι καὶ ταῖς τῶν τόπων μεταβολαῖς τὸ τῆς γνώμης ἐχυρὸν ἀλλάττειν, εἰς ἕτερον ἀπαγαγὼν χωρίον ἐκ λόφου πάνυ περιμήκους ἐπεδείκνυτο μέρος τι τῆς ἀντιπάλου στρατιᾶς· εἶτα πάλιν ἐπτὰ βωμοὺς ἰδρυσάμενος καὶ τὰ ἴσα τοῖς πρόσθεν ἱερεῖα καταθύσας ἐξέπεμπε τὸν μάντιν ἐπ' οἰωνοὺς καὶ 283 φήμας αἰσίους. ὁ δὲ μονωθεὶς ἐξαίφνης θεοφορεῖται καὶ μηδὲν συνιείς, ὥσπερ μετανισταμένου τοῦ λογισμοῦ, τὰ ὑποβαλλόμενα ἐξελάλει προφη-τεύων τάδε· "ἀναστὰς ἄκουε, βασιλεῦ, τὰ ὦτα ἐπουρίσας.<sup>1</sup> οὐχ ὡς ἄνθρωπος ὁ θεὸς διαψευσθῆναι δύναται οὐδ' ὡς υἱὸς ἀνθρώπου μετανοεῖ καὶ ἅπαξ εἰπὼν οὐκ ἐμμένει. φθέγγεται τὸ παράπαν οὐδέν, ὃ μὴ τελειωθήσεται βεβαίως, ἐπεὶ ὁ λόγος ἔργον ἐστὶν αὐτῷ. παρελήφθην δ' ἐπ' εὐλογίαις, οὐ 284 κατάραις, ἐγώ. οὐκ ἔσται πόνος ἢ μόχθος ἐν Ἑβραίοις. ὁ θεὸς αὐτῶν προασπίζει περιφανῶς, ὃς καὶ τὴν τῶν Αἰγυπτιακῶν ρύμην κακῶν ἀπεσκέδασεν ὡς ἓνα ἄνδρα τὰς τοσαύτας μυριάδας ἀναγαγῶν. τοιγαροῦν οἰωνῶν ἀλογοῦσι καὶ πάντων τῶν κατὰ μαντικὴν ἐνὶ τῷ τοῦ κόσμου ἡγεμόνι

<sup>1</sup> See on De Abr. 20. Here as in De Decal. 148, the word is fairly well suited to the context. The best mss. have ἐπαιωρήσας, which does not seem altogether impossible, for though no similar use of the compound verb is quoted, the simple verb is found in this sense, e.g. αἰωρεῖν τὰς ὄφρῦς.

* Or "sounds and voices" = κληδόνας § 287. In Numbers Balaam goes to "meet the Lord," but the account of his 422

MOSES I. 281-284

my own, but only what is prompted by God, and this I do not say or you hear now for the first time, but I said it before when you sent the ambassadors to whom I gave the same answer." But the king, 282 thinking either to deceive the seer or to move the Deity and draw Him from His firm purpose by a change of place, led the way to another spot, and from an exceedingly high hill shewed the seer a part of the enemy's host. Then again he set up seven altars, and, after sacrificing the same number of victims as before, sent him away to seek good omens through birds or voices.<sup>a</sup> In this solitude, he was suddenly possessed, 283 and, understanding nothing, his reason as it were roaming, uttered these prophetic words which were put into his mouth.<sup>b</sup> "Arise, O King, and listen. Lend me a ready ear. God cannot be deceived <sup>c</sup> as a man, nor as the son of man does He repent <sup>d</sup> or fail to abide by what He has once said. He will utter nothing at all which shall not certainly be performed, for His word is His deed. As for me, I was summoned to bless, not to curse. There shall be no 284 trouble or labour among the Hebrews. Their God is their shield for all to see, He Who also scattered the fierce onset of the ills of Egypt, and brought up all these myriads as a single man. Therefore, they care nothing for omens and all the lore of the soothsayer, because they trust in One Who is the ruler of purpose given here might be justified from xxiv. 1 "he went not, as at the other times, to meet with enchantments."

<sup>b</sup> This is curiously expressed. We expect "returned and uttered" as in Num. xxiii. 17.

<sup>c</sup> So LXX (διαρτηθῆναι). E.V. "lie" (xxiii. 19).

<sup>d</sup> Here Philo whether accidentally or not agrees with the Hebrew against the LXX, which has ἀπειληθῆναι ("be threatened").

PHILO

πιστεύοντες. ὁρῶ λαὸν ὡς σκύμνον ἀνιστάμενον καὶ ὡς λέοντα γαυρούμενον. εὐωχηθήσεται θήρας καὶ ποτῶ χρήσεται τραυματιῶν αἵματι καὶ κορεσθεῖς [126] οὐ τρέφεται πρὸς ὕπνον, ἀλλ' | ἐργηγορῶς τὸν ἐπινίκιον ἄσεται ὕμνον."

285 LII. Χαλεπῶς δ' ἐνεγκὼν ἐπὶ τῷ παρ' ἐλπίδας αὐτῷ τὰ τῆς μαντικῆς ἀπαντᾶσθαι "ἄνθρωπε" εἶπε, "μήτε ἀρὰς τίθεσο μήτ' εὐχὰς ποιοῦ· βελτίων γὰρ τῶν μὴ καθ' ἡδονὴν λόγων ἢ ἀκίνδυνος ἡσυχία." καὶ ταῦτ' εἰπὼν ὥσπερ ἐκλαθόμενος ὦν εἶπε διὰ τὸ τῆς γνώμης ἀβέβαιον εἰς ἄλλον τόπον ἀπήγε τὸν μάντιν, ἀφ' οὗ δείξας μέρος τι τῆς Ἑβραϊκῆς

286 στρατιᾶς καταρᾶσθαι παρεκάλει. ὁ δ' ἄτε χείρων ἐκείνου, καίτοι πρὸς τὰς ἐπιφερομένας κατηγορίας ἀπολογία μὴ χρώμενος ἀληθεί, ὡς οὐδὲν ἴδιον λέγοι, κατεχόμενος δὲ καὶ ἐνθουσιῶν διερμηνεύοι τὰ ἑτέρου, δέον μηκέτ' ἐπακολουθεῖν ἀλλ' οἴκαδε ἀπαίρειν, ἐτοιμότερον τοῦ παραπέμποντος προεξέτρεχεν, ἅμα μὲν οἰήσει, κακῶ μεγάλῳ, πεπιεσμένος, ἅμα δὲ καὶ τῇ διανοίᾳ καταρᾶσθαι γλιχό-

287 μενος, εἰ καὶ τῇ φωνῇ διεκωλύετο. παραγενόμενος δ' εἰς ὄρος μείζον τῶν προτέρων ἄχρι πολλοῦ κατατεῖνον κελεύει μὲν τὴν αὐτὴν ἐπιτελεῖν θυσίαν βωμοὺς πάλιν ἑπτὰ κατασκευάσαντας καὶ ἱερεῖα τεσσαρεσκαίδεκα προσαγαγόντας ἐκάστῳ βωμῷ δύο, μόσχον τε καὶ κριόν. αὐτὸς δὲ οὐκέτι κατὰ τὸ εἶκός ἐπὶ κληδόνας καὶ οἰωνοὺς ἴετο πολλὰ τὴν

---

<sup>a</sup> ἀπαντᾶσθαι is apparently used in the middle here. The usage is found occasionally, but censured by Lucian, Lexiphanes 25 as non-Attic.

the world. I see the people rising up as a lion's cub, and exulting as a lion. He shall feast upon the prey, and take for his drink the blood of the wounded, and, when he has had his fill, he shall not betake himself to slumber, but unsleeping sing the song of the victorious."

LII. Highly indignant at finding the soothsayer's 285 powers thus unexpectedly hostile,<sup>a</sup> Balak said: "Sirrah, do not either curse or bless, for the silence which avoids danger is better than words which displease." And, having said this, as though in the inconstancy of his judgement he had forgotten what he said, he led the seer away to another place from which he shewed him a part of the Hebrew host and begged him to curse them. Here the seer proved 286 himself to be even worse than the king; for, though he had met the charges brought against him solely by the true plea that nothing which he said was his own but the divinely inspired version of the promptings of another, and therefore ought to have ceased to follow, and departed home, instead, he pressed forward even more readily than his conductor, partly because he was dominated by the worst of vices, conceit, partly because in his heart he longed to curse, even if he were prevented from doing so with his voice. And, having arrived at a mountain higher 287 than those where he had stood before, and of great extent, he bade them perform the same sacrifice after again erecting seven altars, and bringing fourteen victims, two for each altar, a ram and a calf. But he himself did not go again, as was to be expected, to seek for omens from birds or voices, for he had conceived a great contempt for his

PHILO

- αὐτοῦ τέχνην κακίστας ὡς χρόνῳ καθάπερ γραφήν ἐξίτηλον γενομένην καὶ τοὺς εὐθυβόλους στοχασμοὺς ἐξαμαυρωθεῖσαν· ἄλλως δὲ καὶ μόλις ἐνενόησεν, ὅτι οὐ συνάδει τῷ τοῦ θεοῦ βουλήματι ἢ τοῦ μισθωσαμένου προαίρεσις αὐτὸν βασιλέως.
 288 τραπόμενος οὖν κατὰ τὴν ἐρήμην ὄρᾳ κατὰ φυλάς ἔστρατοπεδευκότας Ἑβραίους καὶ τό τε πλῆθος καὶ τὴν τάξιν ὡς πόλεως ἄλλ' οὐ στρατοπέδου κατα-πλαγεῖς ἔνθους γενόμενος ἀναφθέγγεται τάδε· 289 “ φησὶν ὁ ἄνθρωπος ὁ ἀληθινῶς ὄρων, ὅστις καθ’ ὕπνον ἐναργῆ φαντασίαν εἶδε θεοῦ τοῖς τῆς ψυχῆς ἀκοιμήτοις ὄμμασιν. ὡς καλοὶ σου οἱ οἴκοι, στρατιὰ Ἑβραίων, αἱ σκηναὶ σου ὡς νάπαι σκιά-ζουσαι, ὡς παράδεισος ἐπὶ ποταμοῦ, ὡς κέδρος 290 παρ’ ὕδατα. ἐξελεύσεται ποτε ἄνθρωπος ἐξ ὑμῶν καὶ ἐπικρατήσῃ πολλῶν ἔθνῶν καὶ ἐπιβαίνουσα ἢ τοῦδε βασιλεία καθ’ ἐκάστην ἡμέραν πρὸς ὕψος ἀρθήσεται. ὁ λαὸς οὗτος ἡγεμόνι τῆς ἀπ’ Αἰγύπτου πάσης ὁδοῦ κέχρηται θεῷ καθ’ ἐν κέρας ἄγοντι τὴν 291 πληθύν. τοιγαροῦν ἔδεται | ἔθνη πολλὰ ἐχθρῶν [127] καὶ ὅσον ἐν αὐτοῖς πῖον ἄχρι μυελοῦ λήψεται καὶ ταῖς ἐκηβολίαις ἀπολεῖ τοὺς δυσμενεῖς. ἀνα-παύσεται κατακλινεῖς ὡς λέων ἢ σκύμνος λέοντος, μάλα καταφρονητικῶς δεδιὼς οὐδένα, φόβον τοῖς ἄλλοις ἐνεργασμένος· ἄθλιος ὃς ἂν αὐτὸν παρα-κινήσας ἐγείρῃ. οἱ μὲν εὐλογοῦντές σε εὐφημίας ἄξιοι, κατάρως δ’ οἱ καταρώμενοι.” 292 LIII. Σφόδρα δ’ ἐπὶ τούτοις ἀγανακτήσας ὁ βασιλεὺς “ ἐπ’ ἀραῖς ” εἶπεν “ ἐχθρῶν μετακληθεῖς

<sup>a</sup> LXX “The kingdom of Gog shall be exalted (E.V. his king shall be higher than Agag) and his kingdom shall be increased.”

own art, feeling that, as a picture fades in the course of years, its gift of happy conjecture had lost all its brilliance. Besides, he at last realized that the purpose of the king who had hired him was not in harmony with the will of God. So, setting his face 288 to the wilderness, he looked upon the Hebrews encamped in their tribes, and, astounded at their number and order, which resembled a city rather than a camp, he was filled with the spirit, and spoke as follows : " Thus saith the man who truly sees, who 289 in slumber saw the clear vision of God with the un-sleeping eyes of the soul. How goodly are thy dwellings, thou host of the Hebrews ! Thy tents are as shady dells, as a garden by the riverside, as a cedar beside the waters. There shall come forth from you 290 one day a man and he shall rule over many nations, and his kingdom spreading every day shall be exalted on high.<sup>a</sup> This people, throughout its journey from Egypt, has had God as its guide, Who leads the multitude in a single column.<sup>b</sup> Therefore, it shall eat up 291 many nations of its enemies, and take all the fatness of them right up to the marrow, and destroy its foes with its far-reaching bolts. It shall lie down and rest as a lion, or a lion's cub, full of scorn, fearing none but putting fear in all others. Woe to him who stirs up and rouses it. Worthy of benediction are those who bless thee, worthy of cursing those who curse thee."

LIII. Greatly incensed by this, the king said : 292 " Thou wast summoned to curse the enemy, and hast <sup>a</sup> Philo is evidently interpreting Num. xxiv. 8 ὡς δόξα μονοκέρωτος αὐτῷ, " he has as it were the glory of the unicorn " (R.V. " wild ox "). The mistake is strange, since the word occurs frequently in the LXX, and even in the Pentateuch (Deut. xxxiii. 17).

PHILO

εὐχὰς ἤδη τρεῖς τὰς ὑπὲρ ἐκείνων πεποίησαι· φεῦγε δὴ θάπτον—ὄξυ πάθος ἐστὶ θυμός—, μὴ τι καὶ 293 νεώτερον ἐργάσασθαι βιασθῶ. πόσον πλήθος χρημάτων, ἀνοητότατε, καὶ δωρεῶν, πόσῃν δ' εὐφημίαν καὶ δόξαν ἀφήρησαι σεαυτὸν φρενοβλαβῆς ὦν· ἐπανελεύσῃ φέρων ἀπὸ τῆς ξένης εἰς τὴν οἰκίαν ἀγαθὸν μὲν οὐδέν, ὀνειδίῃ δὲ καὶ πολλὴν ὡς ἔοικεν αἰσχύνῃν, οὕτως σοι τῶν κατὰ τὴν ἐπιστήμην, ἐφ' 294 οἷς πρότερον ἐσεμνύου, γελασθέντων." ὁ δὲ " τὰ μὲν πρότερα " εἶπε " πάντ' ἐστὶ λόγια καὶ χρησμοί, τὰ δὲ μέλλοντα λέγεσθαι γνώμης τῆς ἐμῆς εἰκασίαι." καὶ τῆς δεξιᾶς λαβόμενος μόνος μόνῳ συνεβούλευε, δι' ὧν, ὡς ἂν οἰὸν τε ἦ, φυλάσσεται τὸν ἀντίπαλον στρατόν, ἀσέβημα κατηγορῶν αὐτοῦ μέγιστον· τί γάρ, εἴποι τις ἂν, ἰδιάξεις καὶ συμβουλευεῖς τὰ ἐναντία τοῖς χρησμοῖς ὑποτιθέμενος, εἰ μὴ ἄρα τῶν λογίων αἰ σαὶ βουλαὶ δυνατώτεραι; 295 LIV. φέρε δ' οὖν καὶ τὰς καλὰς αὐτοῦ παραινέσεις ἐξετάσωμεν, ὡς τετεχνιτευμένοι πρὸς ὁμολογουμένην ἤτταν τῶν ἀεὶ νικᾶν δυναμένων. εἰδὼς γὰρ Ἑβραίοις μίαν ὁδὸν ἀλώσεως παρανομίαν, διὰ λαγνείας καὶ ἀκολασίας, μεγάλου κακοῦ, πρὸς μείζον κακόν, ἀσέβειαν, ἄγειν αὐτοὺς ἐσπούδασεν 296 ἠδονὴν δέλεαρ προθεῖς. " εἰσὶ " γὰρ εἶπεν " αἱ ἐγχώριοι γυναῖκες, ὧ βασιλεῦ, διαφέρουσαι τὴν ὄψιν ἐτέρων· ἀνὴρ δ' οὐδενὶ μᾶλλον εὐάλωτος ἢ γυναικὸς εὐμορφία. ταῖς οὖν περικαλλεστάταις ἐὰν

<sup>a</sup> §§ 294-299 are based on Num. xxxi. 16, where the sin of Israel is ascribed to the counsels of Balaam.

now thrice invoked blessings on them. Flee quickly, for fierce is the passion of wrath, lest I be forced to do thee some mischief. Most foolish of men, of what 293 a store of wealth and presents, of what fame and glory, hast thou robbed thyself by thy madness. Thou wilt return from the stranger's land to thy own with nothing good in thy hand, but with reproaches and deep disgrace, as all may see, having merely brought such ridicule on the lore of the knowledge on which thou didst pride thyself before." "The other 294 replied : " All that has been said hitherto was oracles from above. What I have now to say is suggestions of my own designing." And, taking him by the right hand, he counselled him in strict privacy as to the means by which, as far as might be, he should defend himself against the army of the enemy. Hereby he convicted himself of the utmost impiety ; for, " Why," we might ask him, " do you put forth your own personal counsels in opposition to the oracles of God ? That were to hold that your projects are more powerful than the divine utterances." LIV. Well, then, let us examine these fine injunctions of 295 his, and see how they were contrived to gain an unquestioned victory over the truths which have ever the power to prevail. His advice was this. Knowing that the one way by which the Hebrews could be overthrown was disobedience, he set himself to lead them, through wantonness and licentiousness, to impiety, through a great sin to a still greater, and put before them the bait of pleasure. " You 296 have in your countrywomen, king," he said, " persons of pre-eminent beauty. And there is nothing to which a man more easily falls a captive than women's comeliness. If, then, you permit the fairest among

PHILO

- ἐπιτρέψῃς μισθαρνεῖν καὶ δημοσιεύειν, ἀγκιστρέ-297 σονται τὴν νεότητα τῶν ἀντιπάλων. ὑψηγητέον δὲ αὐταῖς, μὴ εὐθὺς ἐμπαρέχεσθαι τοῖς ἐθέλουσι τὴν ὤραν· ὁ γὰρ ἀκκισμὸς ὑποκνίζων τὰς ὁρμὰς ἐπεγείρει μᾶλλον καὶ τοὺς ἔρωτας ἀναφλέγει· τραχηλιζόμενοι δὲ ταῖς ἐπιθυμίαις πάνθ' ὑπομενοῦσι δρᾶν 298 τε καὶ πάσχειν. πρὸς δὲ τὸν οὕτω διακείμενον [128] ἔραστὴν λεγέτω | φρυαττομένη τις τῶν ἐπὶ τὴν θήραν ἀλειφομένων· 'οὐ θέμις ὀμιλίας σοι τῆς ἐμῆς ἀπολαῦσαι, πρὶν ἂν ἐκδαιτηθῆς μὲν τὰ πάτρια, μεταβαλὼν δὲ τιμῆς ἄπερ ἐγώ. πίστις δέ μοι τῆς βεβαίου μεταβολῆς γένοιτ' ἂν ἀρίδῃλος, ἣν ἐθελήσῃς μετασχεῖν τῶν αὐτῶν σπονδῶν τε καὶ θυσῶν, ἃς ἀγάμμασι καὶ ξοάνοις καὶ τοῖς λοιποῖς 299 ἀφιδρύμασιν ἐπιτελοῦμεν.' ὁ δ' ἄτε σαγηνευθεὶς πάγαις πολυειδέσι, κάλλει καὶ στωμυλίας χειραγωγίαις, οὐδὲν ἀντειπὼν, ἐξηγκωνισμένος τὸν λογισμὸν, ἄθλιος ὑπηρετήσῃ τοῖς προσταττομένοις, ἀναγραφεὶς τοῦ πάθους δούλος." 300 LV. Ὁ μὲν δὴ τοιαῦτα συνεβούλευεν. ὁ δ' οὐκ ἀπὸ σκοποῦ νομίσας εἶναι τὰ λεχθέντα, τὸν κατὰ μοιχῶν νόμον παρακαλυψάμενος καὶ τοὺς ἐπὶ φθορᾷ καὶ πορνείᾳ κειμένους ἀνελὼν, ὡς εἰ μηδὲ τὴν ἀρχὴν ἐγράφησαν, ἀνέδην ἐπιτρέπει ταῖς γυναιξὶ 301 τὰς ὀμιλίας πρὸς οὓς ἂν ἐθέλωσι ποιεῖσθαι. δο-θείσης δὲ ἀδείας, τὴν πληθὺν τῶν μεираκίων ἐπήγοντο πολὺ πρότερον τὴν διάνοιαν αὐτῶν ἀπατῶσαι καὶ τρέπουσαι ταῖς γοητείαις πρὸς ἀσέβειαν, ἕως υἱὸς τοῦ ἀρχιερέως Φινεὲς ἐπὶ τοῖς γινομένοις σφόδρα χαλεπήνας—δεινότατον γὰρ αὐτῷ

* For §§ 300-304 see Num. xxv.

them to prostitute themselves for hire, they will ensnare the younger of their enemies. But you must 297 instruct them not to allow their wooers to enjoy their charms at once. For coyness titillates, and thereby makes the appetites more active, and inflames the passions. And, when their lust has them in its grip, there is nothing which they will shrink from doing or suffering. Then, when the lover is in 298 this condition, one of those who are arming to take their prey should say, with a saucy air: ' You must not be permitted to enjoy my favours until you have left the ways of your fathers and become a convert to honouring what I honour. That your conversion is sincere will be clearly proved to me if you are willing to take part in the libations and sacrifices which we offer to idols of stone and wood and the other images.' Then the lover, caught in the 299 meshes of her multiform lures, her beauty and the enticements of her wheedling talk, will not gainsay her, but, with his reason trussed and pinioned, will subserve her orders to his sorrow, and be enrolled as a slave of passion."

LV. <sup>a</sup> Such was his advice. And the king, thinking 300 that the proposal was good, ignoring the law against adultery, and annulling those which prohibited seduction and fornication as though they had never been enacted at all, permitted the women, without restriction, to have intercourse with whom they would.
 Having thus received immunity, so greatly did they 301 mislead the minds of most of the young men, and pervert them by their arts to impiety, that they soon <sup>b</sup> made a conquest of them. And this continued until Phinehas, the son of the high priest, greatly angered

<sup>b</sup> Lit. "First greatly deceiving . . . they made a conquest."

PHILO

κατεφαίνετο, εἰ ὑφ' ἓνα καιρὸν ἄμφω τὰ τε σώματα καὶ τὰς ψυχὰς ἐπιδεδώκασι, τὰ μὲν ἡδοναῖς, τὰς δὲ τῷ παρανομεῖν καὶ ἀνοσιουργεῖν—ἐνεανιεύσατο νεανείαν ἀνδρὶ καλῷ καὶ ἀγαθῷ προσήκουσαν.

302 ἰδὼν γάρ τινα τῶν ἀπὸ τοῦ γένους θύοντα καὶ εἰσιόντα πρὸς πόρνην, μήτε κεκυφότα εἰς τοῦδαφος μήτε λανθάνειν τοὺς πολλοὺς πειρῶμενον μήθ' οἷα φιλεῖ κλέπτοντα τὴν εἴσοδον, ἀλλὰ μετ' ἀναισχύντου θράσους τὴν ἀκοσμίαν ἐπιδεικνύμενον καὶ φρυαττόμενον ὡς ἐπὶ σεμνῷ πράγματι τῷ καταγελάστω, πάνυ πικρανθεὶς καὶ πληρωθεὶς ὀργῆς δικαίας ἐπεισδραμῶν ἔτι κατ' εὐνήν κειμένους ἀμφοτέρους τὸν τ' ἐραστὴν καὶ τὴν ἑταίραν ἀναιρεῖ προσανα-

303 ἐκθέσμοις. τοῦτο θεασάμενοί τινες τὸ παράδειγμα τῶν τὴν ἐγκράτειαν καὶ θεοσέβειαν ἐξηλωκότων προστάξαντος Μωυσέως ἐμιμήσαντο καὶ πάντας τοὺς τελεσθέντας τοῖς χειροποιήτοις συγγενεῖς καὶ φίλους ἡβηδὸν ἀνελόντες τὸ μὲν μίασμα τοῦ ἔθνους ἐκκαθαίρουσι διὰ τῆς τῶν προηδικηκότων ἀπαραιτήτου τιμωρίας, τοὺς δ' ἄλλους παρασχόντας ἀπολογίαν ἐναργεστάτην ὑπὲρ τῆς αὐτῶν εὐσεβείας περιποιήσαντο, μηδένα τῶν ἀφ' αἵματος κατακρίτων οἰκτισάμενοι μηδ' ἐλέω τὰδικήματα αὐτῶν παρελθόντες, ἀλλὰ καθαρὸς νομίσαντες τοὺς αὐτόχειρας· ὅθεν οὐδενὶ παρεχώρησαν τὴν ἐπέξοδον φέρουσαν τοῖς δρώσιω ἀψευδέστατον ἔπαινον.

304 τετρακισχιλίους δέ φασι πρὸς τοῖς δισμυρίοις | [129] ἀναιρεθῆναι μιᾷ ἡμέρᾳ, συναναιρεθέντος εὐθὺς τοῦ κοινῷ μιάσματος, ὃ πᾶσαν τὴν στρατιὰν ἐκῆλίδου.

MOSES I. 301-304

at what he saw, and horrified at the thought that his people had at the same moment surrendered their bodies to pleasure and their souls to lawlessness and unholiness, shewed the young, gallant spirit which befitted a man of true excellence. For, seeing one 302 of his race offering sacrifice and visiting a harlot, not with his head bowed down towards the ground, nor trying in the usual way to make a stealthy entrance unobserved by the public, but flaunting his licentiousness boldly and shamelessly, and pluming himself as though his conduct called for honour instead of scorn,<sup>a</sup> he was filled with bitterness and righteous anger, and attacking the pair whilst they still lay together he slew both the lover and his concubine, ripping up also her parts of generation because they had served to receive the illicit seed. This example 303 being observed by some of those who were zealous for continence and godliness they copied it at the command of Moses, and massacred all their friends and kinsfolk who had taken part in the rites of these idols made by men's hands. And thus they purged the defilement of the nation, by relentlessly punishing the actual sinners, while they spared the rest who gave clear proof of their piety. To none of their convicted blood-relations did they shew pity, or mercifully condone their crimes, but held that their slayers were free from guilt. And, therefore, they kept in their own hand the act of vengeance, which in the truest sense was laudable to its executors. Twenty-four thousand, we are told, perished in one 304 day. And with them perished, at the same moment, the common pollution which was defiling the whole <sup>a</sup> Cf. xxv. 6, "in the sight of Moses, and all the congregation."

PHILO

τῶν δὲ καθαρσίων ἐπιτελεσθέντων, ὡς ἀριστεί γέρας ἐπάξιον τῷ υἱῷ τοῦ ἀρχιερέως, ὃς πρῶτος ἐπὶ τὴν ἄμυναν ὤρμησεν, ἐζήτει παρασχεῖν Μωυσῆς. φθάνει δὲ χρησμοῖς δωρησάμενος ὁ θεὸς Φινεεὶ τὸ μέγιστον ἀγαθόν, εἰρήνην, ὃ μηδεὶς ἱκανὸς ἀνθρώπων παρασχεῖν, πρὸς δὲ τῇ εἰρήνῃ καὶ παγκρατησίαν ἱερωσύνης, αὐτῷ καὶ γένει κληρὸν ἀναφαίρετον.

- 305 LVI. Ἐπεὶ δὲ τῶν ἐμφυλίων οὐδὲν ἔτ' ἦν ὑπόλοιπον κακῶν, ἀλλὰ καὶ ὅσοι πρὸς αὐτομολίαν ἢ προδοσίαν ὑπωπτεύοντο πάντες ἀπωλώλεσαν, ἔδοξεν εἶναι καιρὸς ἐπιτηδειότατος τῆς ἐπὶ τὸν Βαλάκην στρατείας, ἀνδρα μυρία καὶ βεβουλευμένον ἐργάσασθαι κακὰ καὶ δεδρακότα, βεβουλευμένον μὲν διὰ τοῦ μάντεως, ὃν ἤλπισεν ἀραῖς τισι δυνήσεσθαι καθελεῖν τὴν δύναμιν τῶν Ἑβραίων, δεδρακότα δὲ διὰ τῆς τῶν γυναικῶν ἀσελγείας καὶ ἀκολασίας, αἱ τὰ μὲν σώματα λαγνείαις τὰς δὲ
- 306 ψυχὰς ἀσεβείᾳ τῶν χρωμένων διέφθειραν. παντὶ μὲν οὖν τῷ στρατῷ πολεμεῖν οὐκ ἔδοκίμαζεν, εἰδὼς τὰ ὑπέρογκα<sup>1</sup> πλήθη πταίοντα περὶ αὐτοῖς καὶ ἅμα λυσιτελὲς ἠγούμενος ἐφεδρείας εἶναι συμμάχων τοῖς προκαμοῦσι βοηθούς, ἀριστίνδην δὲ τοὺς ἡβῶντας ἐπιλέξας, χιλίους ἐκ φυλῆς ἐκάστης, δώδεκα χιλιάδας—τοσαῦται γὰρ ἦσαν αἱ φυλαί—καὶ στρατηγὸν ἐλόμενος τοῦ πολέμου Φινεὲς πείραν ἤδη δεδω-

<sup>1</sup> MSS. ὑπερόρια.

<sup>a</sup> Philo understands the "plague" of xxv. 8, 9, LXX πληγή, to refer not to a pestilence sent by God, but to the slaughter of the guilty. The mistake, if it is a mistake, is not unnatural. Not only has the mention of the "plague" been introduced so abruptly that probably something has been lost, but the coupling of πεπληγυία, referring to the slain woman,

MOSES I. 304-306

host.<sup>a</sup> When the purging was completed, Moses sought how to give to the high priest's son, who had been the first to rush to the defence, such reward as he deserved for his heroism. But he was forestalled by God, Whose voice granted to Phinehas the highest of blessings, peace—a gift which no human being can bestow—and, besides peace, full possession of the priesthood, a heritage to himself and his family which none should take from them.<sup>b</sup>

LVI. <sup>c</sup> Since, now, their internal troubles were entirely at an end, and, further, all those who were suspected of desertion or treachery had perished, it seemed to be a very suitable opportunity for waging war against Balak who had both plotted and executed mischief on so vast a scale. In the plotting he had been served by the soothsayer, who, he hoped, would be able by his curses to destroy the power of the Hebrews; in the execution by the licentiousness and wantonness of the women, who had caused the ruin of their paramours, of their bodies through lust, of their souls through impiety. However, Moses did not think well to employ his whole army, knowing that over-large multitudes fall through their own unwieldiness, and, at the same time, he thought it was an advantage to have reserves to reinforce those who bore the first brunt. He accordingly selected the flower of his men of military age, one thousand from each tribe, twelve thousand, that is, corresponding to the number of the tribes, and chose as commander-in-chief Phinehas, who had already given with πληγή in verse 18 (cf. also vv. 14, 15), would lend itself to his interpretation. See further App. pp. 603-604.

<sup>b</sup> The rewards of Phinehas have been treated in their allegorical sense, De Ebr. 75 f., De Post. 183 f., De Conf. 57.

<sup>c</sup> For §§ 305-318 see Num. xxxi.

PHILO

κότα στρατηγικῆς εὐτολμίας ἐπὶ καλοῖς ἱερείοις ἐξέπεμπε τοὺς ὀπλίτας καὶ θαρσύνων τοιαύδε διεξ-307 ἦει· “ οὐχ ὑπὲρ κράτους ἀρχῆς ὁ παρὼν ἀγὼν ἔστιν οὐδ’ ὑπὲρ τοῦ κτήσασθαι τὰ ἐτέρων, περὶ ὧν ἢ μόνων ἢ μάλιστα οἱ πόλεμοι, ἀλλ’ ὑπὲρ εὐσεβείας καὶ ὁσιότητος, ὧν τοὺς ἡμετέρους συγγενεῖς καὶ φίλους ἠλλοτριώσαν οἱ ἐχθροὶ παραίτιοι γενόμενοι 308 τοῖς ὑπαχθεῖσι χαλεπῆς ἀπωλείας. ἔστιν οὖν ἄτοπον οἰκείων μὲν αὐτόχειρας γεγενῆσθαι παρανομησάντων, ἐχθρῶν δὲ χαλεπώτερα ἡδίκηκόντων ἀποσχέσθαι, καὶ τοὺς μὲν μαθόντας ἀδικεῖν ἀνηρηκέναι, τοὺς δὲ βιασαμένους καὶ διδάξαντας ἀτιμωρήτους καταλιπεῖν, οὓς ἀπάντων αἰτίους εἶναι συμβέβηκεν, ὧν ἢ δεδράκασιν ἢ πεπόνθασιν ἐκεῖ-309 νοι.” LVII. νευρωθέντες οὖν ταῖς παραινέσεσιν ἐκείνοι καὶ ὅσον ἐν ταῖς ψυχαῖς προϋπήρχε γεν-ναιότητος ζωπυρήσαντες ὡς ἐφ’ ὁμολογουμένη νίκη πρὸς τὸν ἀγῶνα ἱέντο φρονήμασιν ἀηττήτοις· καὶ συμπλακέντες τοσαύτη περιουσίᾳ ῥώμης καὶ τόλμης ἐχρήσαντο, ὡς ἱερεῦσαι μὲν τοὺς ἀντιπάλους, αὐτοὶ 310 δὲ πάντες σῶοι ἐπανελθεῖν, οὐδενὸς ἀποθανόντος [130] ἀλλ’ οὐδὲ τρωθέντος. | ὑπέλαβεν ἂν τις τῶν ἀγνοούντων τὸ συμβεβηκὸς ἰδὼν αὐτοὺς ἐπανιόντας οὐκ ἀπὸ πολέμου καὶ παρατάξεως ἀφικνεῖσθαι μᾶλλον ἢ τῶν ἐν ταῖς ὀπλοσκοπίαις ἐπιδείξεων, ἃς ἔθος ἐν εἰρήνῃ ποιεῖσθαι, γυμνάσματα δ’ εἰσὶ καὶ μελέται συγκροτουμένων<sup>1</sup> τὰ κατ’ ἐχθρῶν ἐν φίλοις.
 311 τὰς μὲν οὖν πόλεις ἢ κατασκάπτοντες ἢ ἐμπιπράντες, ἠφάνισαν, ὡς μηδ’ εἰ τὴν ἀρχὴν ὑκίσθησαν

<sup>1</sup> Mangey wished to read συγκροτούντων, a very common usage no doubt with πόλεμον and the like, cf. e.g. De Abr. 29, but in a somewhat different sense. Here the passive =

MOSES I. 306-311

proof of his courage in that capacity ; and after favourable sacrifices he dispatched his armed men, with words of encouragement to the following effect : “ The contest before you is not to win dominion, nor 307 to appropriate the possessions of others, which is the sole or principal object of other wars, but to defend piety and holiness, from which our kinsfolk and friends have been perverted by the enemies who have indirectly caused their victims to perish miserably. It would be absurd, then, if, after having 308 slain with our own hands those who transgressed the law, we should spare the enemies who committed the graver wrong ; if, after putting to death those who learned the lesson of wrongdoing, we should leave unpunished the teachers who forced them to it, and are responsible for all they did or suffered.” LVII. So, braced by these exhortations, with the 309 native gallantry of their souls kindled to a flame, they went forth to the contest as to certain victory with indomitable resolution, and in the engagement shewed such a wealth of strength and boldness, that they made a slaughter of their opponents, and returned themselves all safe and sound without a single one killed or even wounded. Indeed, any spectator 310 who did not know the facts would have supposed that they were returning not from a war or pitched battle but from those military reviews and displays of arms so frequently made in peace-time, which serve as drilling and practising grounds, where training for hostilities is carried on among friends. They 311 proceeded to destroy the cities utterly by demolition or fire, so that no one could have told that “trained in” followed by the acc. of respect is more appropriate.

---

PHILO

εἰπεῖν ἔχειν· αἰχμαλώτων δὲ σωμάτων ἀπερίληπτον ἀριθμὸν ἀπαγαγόντες ἄνδρας μὲν καὶ γυναῖκας κτείνειν ἔδικαίωσαν, τοὺς μὲν ὅτι βουλευμάτων καὶ χειρῶν ἤρξαν ἀδίκων, τὰς δ' ἐπεὶ κατεγοήτευσαν τὴν Ἑβραίων νεότητα, παραιτίας γενομένας αὐτοῖς ἀκολασίας καὶ ἀσεβείας καὶ τὰ τελευταῖα θανάτου· νεοῖς δὲ κομιδῇ παισὶ καὶ παρθένοις συνέγνωσαν, ἀμνηστίαν τῆς ἡλικίας ἐφελκομένης.

- 312 Λείας δὲ πολλῆς ἄγαν εὐπορήσαντες ἔκ τε τῶν βασιλείων καὶ τῶν ἰδιωτικῶν οἰκιῶν, ἔτι δὲ τῶν κατ' ἀγροὺς ἐπαύλεων—ἦν γὰρ ἐν τοῖς χωρίοις οὐκ ἐλάττων τῆς ἐν τοῖς ἄστεσιν—, ἦγον εἰς τὸ στρατόπεδον ἐπηχθισμένοι τὸν παρὰ τῶν ἐχθρῶν πάντα
- 313 πλοῦτον. ἐπαιέσας δὲ Μωυσῆς τὸν τε στρατηγὸν Φινεὲς καὶ τοὺς παραταξαμένους ἐπὶ τε τοῖς κατορθώμασι καὶ ὅτι ταῖς ὠφελείαις οὐκ ἐπέδραμον τὴν λείαν μόνοι σφετερίσασθαι διανοηθέντες, ἀλλ' εἰς μέσον προὔθεσαν, ἵνα καὶ οἱ καταμείναντες ἐν ταῖς σκηναῖς μετάσχωσι, προστάττει τοὺς μὲν ἔξω τοῦ στρατοπέδου καταμένειν τινὰς ἡμέρας, τῷ δὲ μεγάλῳ ἱερεῖ καθᾶραι τοῦ φόνου τοὺς ἀπὸ τῆς
- 314 παρατάξεως ἦκοντας τῶν συμμάχων. καὶ γὰρ εἰ νόμιμοι αἱ κατ' ἐχθρῶν σφαγαί, ἀλλ' ὃ γε κτείνων ἄνθρωπον, εἰ καὶ δικαίως καὶ ἀμυνόμενος καὶ βιασθεὶς, ὑπαίτιος εἶναι δοκεῖ διὰ τὴν ἀνωτάτω καὶ κοινὴν συγγένειαν· οὗ χάριν καθαρσίῳν ἐδέησε τοῖς κτείνασι πρὸς ἀπαλλαγὴν τοῦ νομισθέντος ἄγους
- 315 γεγενῆσθαι. LVIII. μετ' οὐ πολὺν μὲντοι χρόνον καὶ τὴν λείαν διένειμε, τοῖς μὲν στρατευ-

MOSES I. 311-315

they had ever been inhabited. And, having carried off prisoners more than they could count, they felt justified in putting the men and women to death, the former because these iniquitous designs and actions had been begun by them, the women because they had bewitched the younger Hebrews and thus led them into licentiousness and impiety and finally to death ; but to the boys who were quite young and the maidens they shewed the mercy which their tender age secured for them.

Having greatly enriched themselves with much 312 booty from the palaces and private houses, and also from the country homesteads, since there was as much to be got from the estates as from the cities, they returned to the camp laden with all the wealth obtained from their enemies. Moses praised the 313 general, Phinehas, and the combatants for their exploits, and also because they had not rushed to gain the prizes, nor thought of taking the spoil for themselves alone, but put it into a common stock, that those who had stayed behind in the tents might have their share. But he gave orders that they should stay outside the camp for some days, and that the high priest should purge from bloodshed those members of the united army who returned after being actually engaged. For, though the 314 slaughter of enemies is lawful, yet one who kills a man, even if he does so justly and in self-defence and under compulsion, has something to answer for, in view of the primal common kinship of mankind. And therefore purification was needed for the slayers, to absolve them from what was held to have been a pollution.

LVIII. However, after 315 a short time, he went on to distribute the spoil,

PHILO

- σαμένοις—ὀλίγος δ' ἀριθμὸς ἦσαν παρὰ τοὺς ἡσυχάσαντας—διδούς ἡμισυ μέρος, θάτερον δὲ τοῖς καταμείνασιν ἐν τῷ στρατοπέδῳ· δίκαιον γὰρ ὑπέλαβεν εἶναι καὶ τούτοις μεταδοῦναι τῆς ὠφελείας, εἰ καὶ μὴ τοῖς σώμασι, ταῖς γοῦν ψυχαῖς διαγωνισαμένοις· οἱ γὰρ ἔφεδροι τῶν ἀγωνιστῶν οὐκ ἐλαττούμενοι ταῖς προθυμίαις χρόνῳ καὶ τῷ φθα-
- 316 σθῆναι μόνον ὑστερίζουσι. λαβόντων δὲ τῶν μὲν ὀλίγων πλείω διὰ τὸ προκινδυνεύσαι, τῶν δὲ
- [131] πλειόνων ἐλάττω διὰ | τὴν ἔνδον μονήν, ἔδοξεν ἀναγκαῖον εἶναι πάσης τῆς λείας τὰς ἀπαρχὰς καθιερώσαι· τὸ μὲν οὖν πεντηκοστὸν οἱ ἐφεδρεύσαντες, πεντακοσιοστὴν δὲ μοῖραν οἱ προπολεμήσαντες εἰσήνεγκαν· τῶν δ' ἀπαρχῶν τὰς μὲν παρὰ τῶν στρατευσαμένων τῷ μεγάλῳ ἱερεῖ προστάττει δοθῆναι, τὰς δὲ παρὰ τῶν καταμεινάντων ἐν τῷ στρατοπέδῳ τοῖς νεωκόροις, οἷς ὄνομα Λευῖται.
- 317 χιλίαρχοι δὲ καὶ ἑκατόνταρχοι καὶ ὁ ἄλλος ὄμιλος λοχαγῶν καὶ ταξιαρχῶν ὑπὲρ τε τῆς αὐτῶν σωτηρίας καὶ τῶν συστρατευσαμένων καὶ τῆς παντὸς λόγου κρείττονος νίκης ἐθελονταὶ κομίζουσιν ἐξαιρέτους ἀπαρχὰς, κόσμον τε χρυσοῦν ὅσον ἕκαστος ἐκ τῆς λείας ἀνεῦρε καὶ σκευὴ πολυτελέστατα, ὧν πάλιν ὕλη χρυσοῦς ἦν· ἃ Μωυσῆς λαβὼν καὶ τὴν εὐσέβειαν τῶν φερόντων ἀγάμενος ἀνατίθησιν ἐν τῇ καθιερωμένῃ σκηνῇ τῆς εὐχαριστίας τῶν ἀνδρῶν
- 318 ὑπόμνημα. παγκάλῃ δὲ ἡ διανομὴ τῶν ἀπαρχῶν· τὰς μὲν τῶν μὴ πεπολεμηκότων, ἡμίσειαν ἀρετῆς

MOSES I. 315-318

giving half to the campaigners, who were a small number compared with those who had remained inactive, while the other half he gave to those who had stayed in the camp. For he considered that it was just to give them a part of the prizes, seeing that their souls at least, if not their bodies, had taken part in the conflict. For reserve troops are not inferior in spirit to the actual fighters, but take a second place only in time and because the first place is preoccupied by others. And, now that the few had taken more, because they were in the forefront of danger, and the many less, because they had remained in the camp, he thought it necessary to dedicate the firstfruits of all the spoil. So the reserves contributed a fiftieth, and those who had led the advance a five-hundredth. The offerings of the latter class he ordered to be given to the high priest, and those of the former class to the temple servants, who were called Levites. But the commanders of hundreds and thousands, and the rest of the company of officers who led the various divisions,<sup>a</sup> voluntarily made a special offering of firstfruits in acknowledgement of the preservation of themselves and their fellow-combatants, and of the victory whose glory no words could describe. These offerings were all the golden ornaments which each of them obtained from the spoil, and very costly vessels also made of gold; all of which Moses took, and, honouring the piety of the donors, laid them up in the consecrated tabernacle as a memorial of their thankfulness. Admirable indeed was the system of distributing the firstfruits. The tribute of the non-combatants, who <sup>a</sup> More literally "captain of regiments and brigades." The "taxiarch" is the higher of the two.

PHILO

τὴν χωρὶς ἔργου προθυμίαν αὐτὸ μόνον ἐπιδειξα-μένων, τοῖς νεωκόροις ἀπένειμε, τὰς δὲ τῶν ἀγωνισαμένων, οἱ σώμασι καὶ ψυχαῖς ἐκινδύνευσαν ὀλό-κληρον ἀνδραγαθίαν παρασχόμενοι, τῷ προεστηκότῳ τῶν νεωκόρων ἱερεὶ τῷ μεγάλῳ, τὰς δὲ τῶν ταξι-αρχῶν ἅτε ἡγεμονικὰς τῷ συμπάντων ἡγεμόνι θεῷ.

- 319 LIX. Πάντες οὗτοι διεπολεμήθησαν οἱ πόλεμοι, μήπω διαβεβηκότων Ἰορδάνην τὸν ἐγχώριον ποτα-μόν, πρὸς τοὺς τῆς ἀντιπέρας γῆς οἰκήτορας εὐδαίμονος καὶ βαθείας, ἐν ἧ πολλῇ πεδιάδι σιτο-320 φόρος καὶ χιλὸν κτήνεσιν ἐνεγκεῖν ἀγαθῆ. ταύτην ὡς ἐθεάσαντο τὴν χώραν αἱ κτηνοτρόφοι δύο φυλαί, μοῖρα τοῦ σύμπαντος ἕκτη στρατοῦ, Μωυσῆν ἰκέτευον ἐπιτρέψαι τὰς κληρουχίας ἐνταυθοῖ λαβεῖν αὐτὰς ἤδη ποτὲ ἰδρυθείσας.<sup>1</sup> ἐπιτηδειότατον γὰρ ἔφασκον εἶναι τὸν τόπον ἐννέμεσθαί τε καὶ ἐμβόσκεσθαι θρέμμασιν εὐδρον ὄντα καὶ εὐχορτον καὶ 321 προβατευσίμην ἄφθονον πόαν ἀπαυτοματίζοντα. ὁ δὲ νομίσας αὐτοὺς ἢ προεδρία τὴν διανομὴν τὰ τε γέρα πρὸ καιροῦ λαμβάνειν ἀξιοῦν ἢ πρὸς τοὺς μέλλοντας πολέμους ἀποκνεῖν, ἐφεδρευόντων ἔτι πλειόνων βασιλέων, οἱ τὴν εἴσω τοῦ ποταμοῦ χώραν διεκεκλήρωντο, πάνυ δυσχεράνας πρὸς ὄργην 322 ἀποκρίνεται καὶ φησιν· “ ὑμεῖς μὲν οὖν ἐνταυθοῖ καθεδεῖσθε σχολὴν ἐν οὐ δέοντι καὶ ἀργίαν ἕξοντες, τοὺς δ’ ὑμετέρους συγγενεῖς καὶ φίλους οἱ λειπό-μενοι τραχηλιοῦσι πόλεμοι, καὶ τὰ μὲν ἄθλα μόνοις ὑμῖν ὡς ἐπὶ κατωρθωμένοις πᾶσι δοθήσεται, μάχαι [132] δὲ καὶ πόνοι καὶ | ταλαιπωρίαὶ καὶ οἱ ἀνωτάτω

<sup>1</sup> The text has not been questioned, but seems to me difficult. Presumably αὐτὰς . . . ἰδρυθείσας refers to φυλαί, not to κληρουχίας, but no example is given of this construction with ἐπιτρέπω. I should like to read αὐταῖς . . . ἰδρυθείσας.

MOSES I. 318-322

had shewn a half-excellence by a zeal unaccompanied by action, he assigned to the temple servants; that of the fighters, who had hazarded bodies and souls, and thus displayed a complete measure of manly worth, he gave to the high priest, the president of the temple servants, that of the commanders of divisions, being the gift of captains, to the captain all, even God.

LIX. <sup>a</sup> All these wars were fought and won without crossing the river of the land, the Jordan, against the inhabitants of the rich and deep-soiled country on the outer side, where there was much expanse of plain fit for growing corn and providing excellent fodder for cattle. When the two cattle-breeding tribes, who were a sixth part of the whole host, surveyed this country, they besought Moses to let them take their allotments there and settle down at once; for the region, they said, was very well suited to give pasturage and grazing to cattle, being well supplied with water and grassland and producing of itself abundance of herbage for maintaining sheep. Moses, however, considered that they were either claiming to have precedence in the distribution and to take their prizes before they were due, or else were shirking the wars which awaited them, where more kings, whose possessions were situated on the inner side of the river, were still lying ready to resist them. Consequently, he was greatly incensed, and answered them angrily in these words: "Are you, then, to settle down here to enjoy an undeserved leisure and idleness, leaving your kinsfolk and friends to the agony of the wars which still remain? And are the prizes to be given to you alone, as though success was complete, while battles and labours and tribula-

<sup>a</sup> For §§ 319-333 see Num. xxxii.

PHILO

- 323 κίνδυνοι ἑτέρους ἀναμενοῦσιν; ἀλλ' οὐ δίκαιον ὑμᾶς μὲν εἰρήνην καὶ τὰ ἐκ τῆς εἰρήνης ἀγαθὰ καρποῦσθαι, τοὺς δ' ἄλλους πολέμοις καὶ κακοῖς ἀμυθήτοις ἐναθλεῖν, οὐδὲ προσθήκην τὸ ὅλον μέρους εἶναι· τούναντίον γὰρ ἔνεκα τῶν ὅλων τὰ μέρη
- 324 κληρονομίας ἀξιοῦται. πάντες ἐστὲ ἰσότιμοι, γένος ἓν, οἱ αὐτοὶ πατέρες, οἰκία μία, ἔθνη τὰ αὐτά, κοινωνία νόμων, ἄλλα μυρία, ὧν ἕκαστον τὴν οἰκειότητα συνδεῖ καὶ πρὸς εὖνοιαν ἀρμόζεται. διὰ τί δὴ τῶν ἴσων ἐν τοῖς μεγίστοις καὶ ἀναγκαιοτάτοις ἀξιοθέντες ἐν ταῖς διανομαῖς πλεονεκτήσετε, ὡς ἢ ἄρχοντες ὑπηκόων ἢ δεσπότης δούλων κατα-
- 325 φρονήσαντες; ἔδει μὲν ὑμᾶς ταῖς ἑτέρων πληγαῖς πεπαιδευθῆναι· φρονίμων γὰρ ἀνδρῶν μὴ ἀναμένειν, ἄχρῖς ἂν ἐπ' αὐτοὺς ἔλθῃ τὰ δεινά· νυνὶ δὲ παραδείγματ' ἔχοντες οἰκεῖα τοὺς πατέρας, οἱ κατ-εσκεψάντο τήνδε τὴν χώραν, καὶ τὰς ἐκείνων συμφορὰς καὶ τῶν συναπονηθέντων—ἅπαντες γὰρ ἔξω δυοῖν ἀπώλοντο—, δέον μηδενὶ τῶν ὁμοίων συνεπιγράφεσθαι, δειλίαν, ὧ κενοὶ φρενῶν, ζηλοῦτε ὡς οὐκ εὐαλωτότεροι γενησόμενοι καὶ τὰς προθυμίας ὑποσκελίζετε τῶν ἀνδραγαθίζεσθαι προαιρουμένων ἐκλύοντες καὶ παριέντες αὐτῶν τὰ
- 326 φρονήματα. τοιγάρτοι σπεύδοντες ἀμαρτάνειν σπεύσετε καὶ πρὸς τιμωρίας· ἢ γὰρ δίκη μόλις μὲν εἴωθε κινεῖσθαι, κινηθεῖσα δ' ἅπαξ φθάνει προ-
- 327 καταλαμβάνουσα τοὺς ἀποδιδράσκοντας. ὅταν οὖν

---

<sup>a</sup> Lit. "and is fitted to goodwill," i.e. fitted to take part in producing goodwill.

<sup>b</sup> The thought is taken from v. 23 (in Moses' second

MOSES I. 323-327

tion and supreme dangers await the others? Nay, 323 it is not just that you should reap peace and its blessings, while the others are struggling with wars and countless ills, or that the whole should be a mere appendage to the parts, whereas, on the contrary, it is only on the merits of the whole that the parts are held deserving of their portion. You have all equal 324 rights with us ; one race, the same fathers, one house, the same customs, community of laws, and other things innumerable, each of which strengthens the tie of kinship and the harmony of goodwill.<sup>a</sup> Why, then, when you have been adjudged an equal share in the greatest and most vital matters, should you seek an unfair preference in the distribution, with the arrogance which a ruler might shew to his subjects or a master to his slaves? You ought, indeed, 325 to have learnt a lesson from the blows which others have suffered ; for wise men do not wait till the calamity is upon them. As it is, though your own kin supplies you with examples of warning in your fathers who inspected this land, and in the misfortune of them and those who shared their craven-heartedness, all of whom perished save two, though you should not let your name be associated with any such as these, so senseless are you that you follow after cowardice and forget that it will make you an easier prey. And you upset the ardent resolution of those who are fully disposed to manliness, whose spirits you paralyse and unnerve. Therefore, in hastening to sin, you will be 326 hastening to punishment also ;<sup>b</sup> for it is the way of justice to be slow to move, but, when it is once moved, it overtakes and seizes the fugitives. When all the 327 speech). LXX “ you shall know your sin, when evils overtake you.” E.V. “ and be sure your sin will find you out.”

PHILO

ἅπαντες μὲν οἱ ἐχθροὶ καθαιρεθῶσιν, ἔφεδρος δὲ μηδεὶς ἔτι προσδοκᾶται πόλεμος, ἐν δὲ ταῖς εὐθύταις ἀνεπίληπτοι δοκιμασθῶσιν οἱ σύμμαχοι, μὴ λιποτάξιον, μὴ λιποστράτιον, μηδὲν ἄλλο τῶν ἐφ' ἣττη διαπεπραγμένοι, παραμεμενηκότες δ' ἐξ ἀρχῆς ἄχρι τέλους φαίνονται καὶ τοῖς σώμασι καὶ ταῖς προθυμίαις, ἐρημωθῆ δὲ πᾶσα ἡ χώρα τῶν προενωκηκότων, τηρικαῦτα δοθήσεται τὰ γέρα καὶ τὰ ἀριστεία ταῖς φυλαῖς ἐξ ἴσου."

- 328 LX. Τὴν δὲ νοθεσίαν πράως ἐνεγκόντες ὡς υἱοὶ γνήσιοι σφόδρα εὖνου πατρὸς—ἤδεσαν γὰρ αὐτὸν οὐ καταλαξονεούμενον ἀρχῆς ἐξουσία, προκηδόμενον δὲ πάντων καὶ δικαιοσύνην καὶ ἰσότητα τιμῶντα καὶ τὸ μισοπόνηρον οὐκ ἐπ' ὀνειδίζει σωφρονισμῷ δὲ τῶν βελτιοῦσθαι δυναμένων αἰεὶ ποιούμενον<sup>1</sup>—"εἰκότως μὲν" ἔφασαν "ἀγανακτεῖς, εἰ τοῦθ' ὑπέληφας, ὅτι τὴν συμμαχίαν ἀπολιπόντες
- 329 πρὸ καιροῦ τὰς λήξεις λαβεῖν ἐπειγόμεθα. χρὴ δὲ σαφῶς εἰδέναι, ὅτι οὐδὲν ἡμᾶς φοβεῖ τῶν σὺν ἀρετῇ, κἂν ἐπιπονώτατον τυγχάνῃ. κρίνομεν δ'
- [133] ἀρετῆς ἔργα, πειθαρχεῖν τέ | σοι τοιῶδε ἡγεμόνι καὶ τῶν δεινῶν μὴ ὑστερίζειν καὶ ἐν ἀπάσαις ἐξετάζεσθαι ταῖς μελλούσαις στρατείαις, ἄχρισ ἂν
- 330 τὰ πράγματα λάβῃ τέλος αἴσιον. ἡμεῖς μὲν οὖν καθὰ καὶ πρότερον συνταξάμενοι διαβησόμεθα τὸν Ἰορδάνην ἐν ταῖς παντευχίαις, οὐδεὶν τῶν ὀπλιτῶν πρόφασιν παρασχόντες μονῆς· υἱοὶ δὲ κομιδῆ νήπιοι καὶ θυγατέρες καὶ γυναῖκες καὶ τὸ πλήθος τῶν <sup>1</sup> Cohn and Mangey both question this use of ποιούμενον, but do not propose any satisfactory emendation. Perhaps

MOSES I. 327-330

enemies are destroyed, and there is no prospect of war still awaiting us ; when all the confederates have on scrutiny been found guiltless of desertion from the ranks or from the army, or of any other action which is the sequel of defeat, but have proved their constancy both of body and spirit from first to last ; when finally the whole country has been cleared of its former inhabitants, then will the prizes and rewards for valour be given to the tribes on equal terms."

LX. The two tribes listened to this admonition 328 meekly, as true-born sons to a very kindly father. For they knew that he did not speak with an arrogance founded on official authority, but out of solicitude for them all and respect for justice and equality, and that his detestation of evil was never meant to cast reproach but always to bring those capable of improvement to a better mind. "You are naturally indignant," they replied, "if you have got the idea that we are eager to leave the confederacy and take our portions before they are due. But you must 329 clearly understand that no form of virtuous conduct, however toilsome it may be, alarms us. And by virtuous conduct we understand that we should obey you, great leader as you are, and be backward in no danger, and take our place in all the coming campaigns until the happy consummation is reached. We will, therefore, as before, take our place in the 330 ranks, and cross Jordan with our full equipment, and give none of our armed men any excuse to stay behind ; but our sons who are mere children and our daughters and our wives and our great stock of cattle

---

τὸ μισοπόνηρον <ὡς ἄν> . . . ποιούμενον ("deeming to be") would accord with the ordinary usage of the middle.

PHILO

βοσκημάτων, ἐὰν ἐπιτρέψῃς, ὑπολελείφονται, παισὶ μὲν καὶ γυναιξὶν οἰκίας ἐπαύλεις δὲ θρέμμασι κατασκευασάντων ἡμῶν, ἵνα μηδὲν ἐξ ἐπιδρομῆς δεινὸν πάθωσιν ἐν ἀτειχίστοις καὶ ἀφρουρήτοις προκαταληφθέντες.”

- 331 Ὁ δ' ἴλεω τῷ βλέμματι καὶ πραοτέρᾳ τῇ φωνῇ “ ἄψευδοῦσιν ὑμῖν ” ἔφη “ βέβαιοι μενοῦσιν ὡς ἠτήσασθε λήξεις. ὑπολείπεσθε μὲν ὡς ἀξιούτε γυναῖκας καὶ παῖδας καὶ βοσκήματα, κατὰ λόχους δ' αὐτοὶ διαβαίνετε μετὰ τῶν ἄλλων ὠπλισμένοι καὶ ἐκτεταγμένοι πρὸς μάχην ὡς αὐτίκα, ἣν δέη, 332 πολεμήσοντες. αὐθις δ' ὅταν ἅπαντες οἱ ἐχθροὶ καθαιρεθῶσι καὶ γενομένης εἰρήνης τὴν χώραν οἱ κεκρατηκότες διανείμονται, καὶ ὑμεῖς ἐπανελεύ-σεσθε πρὸς τοὺς οἰκείους τῶν ἐπιβαλλόντων ἀπο-λαύσοντες ἀγαθῶν καὶ καρπωσόμενοι ἣν εἴλεσθε 333 μοῖραν.” ταῦτ' εἰπόντος καὶ ὑποσχομένου, πληρωθέντες εὐθυμίας καὶ χαρᾶς τοὺς μὲν οἰκείους μετὰ τῶν θρεμμάτων ἀσφαλῶς ἐν ἐρύμασι δυσαλώτοις, ᾧν τὰ πλείστα χειροποίητα ἦν, ἰδρύνονται, τὰ δ' ὄπλα ἀναλαβόντες ἐξέθεον τῶν ἄλλων συμμάχων προθυμότερον ὡς ἢ μόνοι πολεμήσοντες ἢ προαγωνιούμενοι πάντων<sup>1</sup>. ὁ γὰρ προλαβὼν τινα δωρεὰν προθυμότερος εἰς συμμαχίαν, ἀποτίνειν ἀναγκαῖον ὄφλημα νομίζων, οὐ χαρίζεσθαι.
- 334 Τὰ μὲν δὴ κατὰ τὴν βασιλείαν πεπραγμένα αὐτῷ μεμήνυται· λεκτέον δ' ἐξῆς καὶ ὅσα διὰ τῆς ἀρχιερωσύνης καὶ νομοθετικῆς κατώρθωσε· καὶ γὰρ ταύτας περιεποίησατο τὰς δυνάμεις ὡς ἀρμοττούσας μάλιστα βασιλείᾳ.

<sup>1</sup> MSS. πάντως.

MOSES I. 330-334

will be left behind, if you permit, after we have built houses for the women and children and sheds for the animals, since otherwise, caught before we return, in a position unfortified and unprotected, they might meet with disaster at the hands of raiders."

Moses' face was kindly and his tones milder, as he 331 replied as follows : " If you are true to your words, the apportionments which you have asked shall remain secure to you. Leave your women and children and cattle, as you demand, and cross the river yourselves in your battalions with the rest, fully armed and arrayed for the fight, ready to engage at once if necessary. Later, when all the enemy are destroyed, 332 and, peace having been made, the victors divide the land, you too will return to your people to enjoy the good things that fall to your share and reap the fruits of the lot that you have chosen." When they heard 333 these promises from his lips, filled with joy and courage, they settled their people and cattle safely in positions strongly protected against assault, in most cases by artificial fortifications. Then, taking up their arms, they rushed to the field more eagerly than the other confederates, as though they would wage the war alone or at any rate be the first of all to enter the conflict. For the acceptance of a gift beforehand increases a man's readiness to support his comrades. He feels that he is not a free giver, but is repaying a debt which he cannot escape.

We have now told the story of Moses' actions in his 334 capacity of king. We must next deal with all that he achieved by his powers as high priest and legislator, powers which he possessed as the most fitting accompaniments of kingship.

ΠΕΡΙ ΤΟΥ ΒΙΟΥ ΜΩΥΣΕΩΣ ΛΟΓΟΣ ΔΕΥΤΕΡΟΣ

[134]

- 1 Ἡ μὲν προτέρα σύνταξις ἐστὶ περὶ γενέσεως τῆς Μωυσέως καὶ τροφῆς, ἔτι δὲ παιδείας καὶ ἀρχῆς, ἣν οὐ μόνον ἀνεπιλήπτως ἀλλὰ καὶ σφόδρα ἐπαινετῶς ἤρξε, καὶ τῶν ἐν τε Αἰγύπτῳ καὶ ταῖς ὁδοιπορίαις ἐπὶ τε τῆς ἐρυθρᾶς θαλάσσης καὶ κατὰ τὴν ἐρήμην πεπραγμένων, ἃ δύνανται πᾶσαν λόγων ὑπερβάλλει, καὶ προσέτι πόνων οὓς κατώρθωσε καὶ κληρουχιῶν ἃς ἐκ μέρους ἀπένειμε τοῖς στρατευσαμένοις· ἣν δὲ νυνὶ συντάττομεν, περὶ τῶν ἐπομένων
- 2 καὶ ἀκολουθῶν. φασὶ γάρ τινες οὐκ ἀπὸ σκοποῦ, μόνως ἂν οὕτω τὰς πόλεις ἐπιδοῦναι πρὸς τὸ βέλτιον, ἐὰν <ἦ> οἱ βασιλεῖς φιλοσοφήσωσιν ἢ οἱ φιλόσοφοι βασιλεύσωσιν. ὁ δ' ἐκ περιττοῦ φανεῖται μὴ μόνον ταύτας ἐπιδεδειγμένους τὰς δυνάμεις ἐν ταυτῷ, τὴν τε βασιλικὴν καὶ φιλόσοφον, ἀλλὰ καὶ
- 3 τρεῖς ἑτέρας, ὧν ἡ μὲν πραγματεύεται περὶ νομοθεσιαν, ἡ δὲ περὶ ἀρχιερωσύνην, ἡ δὲ τελευταία περὶ προφητείαν. περὶ ὧν νυνὶ λέγειν εἰλόμην ἀναγκαίως ὑπολαβὼν τῷ αὐτῷ πάντ' ἐφαρμόττειν· ἐγένετο γὰρ προνοία θεοῦ βασιλεύς τε καὶ νομοθέτης καὶ ἀρχιερεὺς καὶ προφήτης καὶ ἐν ἐκάστῳ

<sup>a</sup> Plato, Rep. v. 473 D.

ON THE LIFE OF MOSES, BOOK II

I. The former treatise dealt with the birth and 1 nurture of Moses ; also with his education and career as a ruler, in which capacity his conduct was not merely blameless but highly praiseworthy ; also with the works which he performed in Egypt and during the journeys both at the Red Sea and in the wilderness—works which no words can adequately describe ; further, with the troubles which he successfully surmounted, and with his partial distribution of territories to the combatants. The present treatise is concerned with matters allied and consequent to these. For it has been said, not without 2 good reason, that states can only make progress in well-being if either kings are philosophers or philosophers are kings.<sup>a</sup> But Moses will be found to have displayed, and more than displayed, combined in his single person, not only these two faculties —the kingly and the philosophical—but also three others, one of which is concerned with law-giving, the second with the high priest's office, and the last with prophecy. On these three I have now elected 3 to write, being forced to the conviction that it is fitting that they should be combined in the same person. For Moses, through God's providence, became king and lawgiver and high priest and prophet ; and in each function he won the highest

PHILO

τὰ πρωτεῖα ἠνέγκατο· διὰ τί δὲ τῷ αὐτῷ πάντ' ἐφ-4 αρμόττει, δηλωτέον. βασιλεῖ προσήκει προστάττειν ἃ χρῆ καὶ ἀπαγορεύειν ἃ μὴ χρῆ· πρόσταξις δὲ τῶν πρακτέων καὶ ἀπαγόρευσις τῶν οὐ πρακτέων ἴδιον νόμον, ὡς εὐθὺς εἶναι τὸν μὲν βασιλέα νόμον 5 ἔμψυχον, τὸν δὲ νόμον βασιλέα δίκαιον. βασιλεὺς δὲ καὶ νομοθέτης ὀφείλει μὴ τάνθρωπεια μόνον ἀλλὰ καὶ τὰ θεῖα συνεπισκοπεῖν· οὐ γὰρ ἄνευ θείας ἐπιφροσύνης κατορθοῦνται τὰ βασιλέων καὶ ὑπηκόων πράγματα· δι' ἣν αἰτίαν ἐδέησε τῷ τοιοῦτῳ τῆς πρώτης ἱερωσύνης, ἵν' ἐπὶ τελείοις ἱεροῖς καὶ ἐπιστήμῃ τελείᾳ τῆς τοῦ θεοῦ θεραπείας ἀποτροπήν μὲν κακῶν μετουσίαν δ' ἀγαθῶν αὐτῷ τε καὶ τοῖς ἀρχομένοις αἰτῆται παρὰ τοῦ ἔλεω καὶ ταῖς εὐχαῖς συνεπινεύοντος· πῶς γὰρ οὐ τελεσφορήσει τὰς εὐ-χὰς ὁ καὶ ἐκ φύσεως εὐμενῆς καὶ τοὺς γνησίως θεραπεύοντας αὐτὸν προνομίας ἀξιῶν; 6 ἀλλ' ἐπειδὴ μυρία καὶ βασιλεῖ καὶ νομοθέτῃ καὶ ἀρχιερεῖ τῶν ἀνθρωπείων καὶ θεῶν ἄδηλα—γε-νητὸς γὰρ οὐδὲν ἦττον καὶ θνητὸς ἐστίν, εἰ καὶ τοσοῦτον καὶ οὕτως ἄφθονον περιβέβληται κληρὸν εὐπραγιῶν—, ἀναγκαίως καὶ προφητείας ἔτυχεν, ἵν' ὅσα μὴ λογισμῷ δύναται καταλαμβάνειν, ταῦτα προνοία θεοῦ εὔροι· ὧν γὰρ ὁ νοῦς ἀπολείπεται, 7 πρὸς ταῦθ' ἡ προφητεία φθάνει. καλή γε ἡ συζυγία καὶ παναρμόνιος τῶν τεττάρων δυνάμεων· ἐμπλεκόμεναι γὰρ καὶ ἀλλήλων ἐχόμεναι συγχορεύουσι τὰς ὠφελείας ἀντιλαμβάνουσαι τε καὶ ἀντεκτίνουσαι, μιμούμεναι τὰς παρθένους Χάριτας, αἷς μὴ διαζεύγνυσθαι νόμος φύσεως ἀκίνητος· ἐφ' ὧν

<sup>a</sup> Cf. De Abr. 5 and note, and see App. p. 605.

MOSES II. 3-7

place. But why it is fitting that they should all be combined in the same person needs explanation. It is a king's duty to command what is right 4 and forbid what is wrong. But to command what should be done and to forbid what should not be done is the peculiar function of law; so that it follows at once that the king is a living law, and the law a just king.<sup>a</sup> But a king and lawgiver ought to 5 have under his purview not only human but divine things; for, without God's directing care, the affairs of kings and subjects cannot go aright. And therefore such as he needs the chief priest-hood, so that, fortified with perfect rites and the perfect knowledge of the service of God, he may ask that he and those whom he rules may receive prevention of evil and participation in good from the gracious Being Who assents to prayers. For surely that Being will grant fulfilment to prayers, seeing that He is kindly by nature and deems worthy of His special favour those who give Him genuine service. But, since 6 to this king, lawgiver and high priest who, though possessed of so generous a heritage of fortune's gifts, is after all but a mortal creature, countless things both human and divine are wrapped in obscurity, Moses necessarily obtained prophecy also, in order that through the providence of God he might discover what by reasoning he could not grasp. For prophecy finds its way to what the mind fails to reach. Beauti- 7 ful and all-harmonious is the union of these four faculties; for, intertwined and clinging to each other, they move in rhythmic concord, mutually receiving and repaying benefits, and thus imitate the virgin Graces whom an immutable law of nature forbids to be separated. And of them it may be justly δεόντως εἶποι τις ἄν, ὃ καὶ ἐπὶ τῶν ἀρετῶν εἴωθε λέγεσθαι, ὅτι ὁ μίαν ἔχων καὶ πάσας ἔχει.

PHILO

- 8 II. Ῥητέον δὲ πρῶτον περὶ τῶν κατὰ τὴν νομοθετικὴν ἔξιν. οὐκ ἄγνωῶ μὲν οὖν, ὅτι τῷ μέλλοντι ἀρίστῳ γενήσεσθαι νομοθέτη προσήκει παντελεσί καὶ ὀλοκλήροις κεχρησθαι ταῖς ἀρεταῖς πάσαις· ἐπεὶ δὲ καὶ ταῖς οἰκίαις οἱ μὲν ἐγγυτάτῳ γένους εἰσὶν, οἱ δὲ πόρρω, συγγενεῖς δὲ πάντες ἀλλήλων, καὶ τῶν ἀρετῶν τὰς μὲν προσπεφυκέναι νομιστέον
- 9 μᾶλλον ἐνίοις πράγμασι, τὰς δ' ἥττον ὤκειῶσθαι.
- [136] | νομοθετικῇ δ' ἀδελφὰ καὶ συγγενῇ τέτταρα ταυτὶ διαφερόντως ἐστί· τὸ φιλόανθρωπον, τὸ φιλοδίκαιον, τὸ φιλάγαθον, τὸ μισοπόνηρον· ὑπὸ γὰρ τούτων ἐκάστου παρακαλεῖται πᾶς, ὅτῳ ζῆλος εἰσέρχεται τοῦ νομοθετεῖν, φιλανθρωπίας μὲν εἰς μέσον προτιθέναι τὰς κοινωφελεῖς γνώμας ἀναδιδασκούσης, δικαιοσύνης δὲ ὡς ἰσότητα τιμητέον καὶ ὡς τὸ κατ' ἀξίαν ἀπονεμητέον ἐκάστοις, φιλαγαθίας δ' ἀποδέχεσθαι τὰ φύσει καλὰ καὶ παρέχειν ἅπασιν τοῖς ἀξίοις ἀταμίευτα πρὸς ἀφθονωτάτην χρῆσιν, μισοπονηρίας δὲ προβεβλήσθαι τοὺς ἀτιμάζοντας ἀρετὴν καὶ ὡς κοινούς δυσμενεῖς τοῦ τῶν ἀνθρώπων
- 10 γένους ὑποβλέπεσθαι. μέγα μὲν οὖν, εἴ τῳ καὶ ἔν τι τῶν λεχθέντων λαβεῖν ἐγένετο, θαυμαστὸν δ' ὡς ἔοικε τούτων ἀθρόων περιδράξασθαι δυναθῆναι, οὐ μόνος Μωυσῆς ἐφικέσθαι δοκεῖ τρανώσας εὖ μάλα
- 11 τὰς εἰρημένας ἀρετὰς ἐν οἷς διετάξατο. συνίσασιν δ' οἱ ταῖς ἱεραῖς βίβλοις ἐντυγχάνοντες, ἃς οὐκ ἄν, εἰ μὴ τοιοῦτος ἐπεφύκει, συνέγραψεν ὑψηγῆσαμένου θεοῦ καὶ παρέδωκε τοῖς ἀξίοις χρῆσθαι, κτημάτων

<sup>a</sup> Cf. Diog. Laert. vii. 125.

MOSES II. 7-11

said, what is often said of the virtues, that to have one is to have all.<sup>a</sup>

II. First, we must speak of the legislative condition of mind. I know, indeed, that he who is to obtain excellence as a legislator should possess all the virtues fully and completely. But, since also in households there are some very nearly and others only distantly connected with the family, though all are akin to each other, so too we must suppose that some virtues are more closely associated with some situations, while others have less affinity. The legislative faculty has for its brothers and close kinsfolk these four in particular : love of humanity, of justice, of goodness, and hatred of evil. Each of these has its message of encouragement for everyone who is inspired with a zeal for law-making. By love of humanity he is bidden to produce for public use his thoughts for the common weal ; by justice to honour equality and to render to every man his due ; by love of goodness to approve of things naturally excellent, and to supply them without reserve to all who are worthy of them for their unstinted use ; by hatred of evil to spurn the dishonourers of virtue, and frown upon them as the common enemies of the human race. It is no small thing if it is given to any one to acquire even one of these—a marvel surely that he should be able to grasp them all together. And to this Moses alone appears to have attained, who shews distinctly these aforesaid virtues in his ordinances. They know this well who read the sacred books, which, unless he was such as we have said, he would never have composed under God's guidance and handed on for the use of those who are worthy to use them, to be their fairest pos-

PHILO

τὸ κάλλιστον, τῶν ἀγαματοφορουμένων ἐν τῇ ψυχῇ παραδειγμάτων ἀπεικονίσματα καὶ μιμήματα, ἃ καὶ οἱ δηλωθέντες νόμοι γεγόνασι σαφέστατα τὰς λεχθείσας ἐμφαίνοντες ἀρετάς.

- 12 III. "Ὅτι δ' αὐτός τε νομοθετῶν ἄριστος τῶν πανταχοῦ πάντων, ὅσοι παρ' Ἑλλήσιν ἢ βαρβάροις ἐγένοντο, καὶ οἱ νόμοι κάλλιστοι καὶ ὡς ἀληθῶς θεῖοι μηδὲν ὦν χρή παραλιπόντες, ἐναργεστάτη
- 13 πίστις ἦδε· τὰ μὲν τῶν ἄλλων νόμιμα εἴ τις ἐπίοι τῷ λογισμῷ, διὰ μυρίας προφάσεις εὐρήσει κεκινημένα, πολέμοις ἢ τυραννίσιν ἢ τισιν ἄλλοις ἀβουλήτοις, ἃ νεωτερισμῷ τύχης κατασκήπτει· πολλάκις δὲ καὶ τρυφή πλεονάσασα χορηγίαις καὶ περιουσίαις ἀφθόνοις καθεῖλε νόμους, "τὰ λίαν ἀγαθὰ" τῶν πολλῶν φέρειν οὐ δυναμένων, ἀλλὰ διὰ κόρον
- 14 ἐξυβριζόντων· ὕβρις δ' ἀντίπαλον νόμῳ. τὰ δὲ τούτου μόνου βέβαια, ἀσάλευτα, ἀκράδαντα, καθάπερ σφραγίσιν φύσεως αὐτῆς σεσημασμένα, μένει παγίως ἀφ' ἧς ἡμέρας ἐγράφη μέχρι νῦν καὶ πρὸς τὸν ἔπειτα πάντα διαμενεῖν ἐλπίς αὐτὰ αἰῶνα ὡσπερ ἀθάνατα, ἕως ἂν ἡλῖος καὶ σελήνη καὶ ὁ σύμπας
- 15 οὐρανός τε καὶ κόσμος ἦ. τοσαύταις γοῦν χρησμένου τοῦ ἔθνους μεταβολαῖς κατὰ τε εὐπραγίας καὶ τούναντίον, οὐδὲν ἄλλ' οὐδὲ τὸ μικρότατον
- [137] τῶν | διατεταγμένων ἐκινήθη, πάντων ὡς εἶκε τὸ
- 16 σεμνὸν καὶ θεοπρεπὲς αὐτῶν ἐκτετιμηκότων. ἃ δὲ μὴ λιμός ἢ λοιμός ἢ πόλεμος ἢ βασιλεὺς ἢ τύραννος ἢ ψυχῆς ἢ σώματος ἢ παθῶν ἢ κακιῶν ἐπανάστασις ἢ τι ἄλλο θεήλατον ἢ ἀνθρώπειον κακὸν ἔλυσε, πῶς οὐ περιμάχητα καὶ παντὸς λόγου κρείττονα καθ-<sup>a</sup> See De Abr. 134 and note.

MOSES II. 11-16

session, likenesses and copies of the patterns enshrined in the soul, as also are the laws set before us in these books, which shew so clearly the said virtues.

III. That Moses himself was the best of all law-givers in all countries, better in fact than any that have ever arisen among either the Greeks or the barbarians, and that his laws are most excellent and truly come from God, since they omit nothing that is needful, is shewn most clearly by the following proof. Anyone who takes a considered view of the institutions of other peoples will find that they have been unsettled by numberless causes—wars, tyrannies or other mishaps—which the revolutions of fortune have launched upon them. Often, too, luxury, growing to excess by lavish supplies of superfluities, has upset the laws; because the mass of people, being unable to bear “good things in excess,”<sup>a</sup> becomes surfeited and consequently violent: and violence is the enemy of law. But Moses is alone in this, that his laws, firm, unshaken, immovable, stamped, as it were, with the seals of nature herself, remain secure from the day when they were first enacted to now, and we may hope that they will remain for all future ages as though immortal, so long as the sun and moon and the whole heaven and universe exist. Thus, though the nation has undergone so many changes, both to increased prosperity and the reverse, nothing—not even the smallest part of the ordinances—has been disturbed; because all have clearly paid high honour to their venerable and godlike character. But that which no famine nor pestilence nor war nor king nor tyrant, no rebel assault of soul or body or passion or vice, nor any other evil whether of God’s sending or man’s making, could undo, must surely be precious

PHILO

- 17 ἔστηκεν; IV. ἀλλ' οὐπω τοῦτο θαυμαστόν, καίτοι μέγα καθ' αὐτὸ δεόντως ἂν νομισθέν, τὸ ἐξ ἅπαντος τοῦ χρόνου πεφυλάχθαι τοὺς νόμους ἐν βεβαίῳ· ἀλλ' ἐκείνο θαυμασιώτερον, ὡς ἔοικε, τὸ μὴ μόνον Ἰουδαίους ἀλλὰ καὶ τοὺς ἄλλους σχεδὸν ἅπαντας καὶ μάλιστα οἷς ἀρετῆς πλείων λόγος πρὸς τὴν ἀποδοχὴν αὐτῶν καὶ τιμὴν ὠσιῶσθαι· γέρας γὰρ τοῦτ' ἔλαχον ἐξαιρέτον, ὃ μηδενὶ 18 πρόσσεστιν ἑτέρῳ. σημεῖον δέ· τῶν κατὰ τὴν Ἑλλάδα καὶ βάρβαρον, ὡς ἔπος εἰπεῖν, οὐδεμία πόλις ἐστίν, ἣ τὰ ἑτέρας νόμιμα τιμᾶ, μόλις δὲ καὶ τῶν αὐτῆς εἰς αἰὲ περιέχεται, πρὸς τὰς τῶν καιρῶν καὶ τῶν πραγμάτων μεθαρμοζομένη τροπᾶς.
 19 Ἀθηναῖοι τὰ Λακεδαιμονίων ἔθη καὶ νόμιμα προβέβληνται καὶ Λακεδαιμόνιοι τὰ Ἀθηναίων· ἀλλ' οὐδὲ κατὰ τὴν βάρβαρον Αἰγύπτιοι τοὺς Σκυθῶν νόμους φυλάττουσιν ἢ Σκύθαι τοὺς Αἰγυ-πτίων ἢ συνελόντι φράσαι τοὺς τῶν κατ' Εὐρώπην οἱ τὴν Ἀσίαν οἰκοῦντες ἢ τοὺς τῶν Ἀσιανῶν ἔθνῶν οἱ ἐν Εὐρώπῃ· ἀλλὰ σχεδὸν οἱ ἀφ' ἡλίου ἀνιόντος ἄχρι δυομένου, πᾶσα χώρα καὶ ἔθνος καὶ πόλις, τῶν ξενικῶν νομίμων ἀλλοτριοῦνται καὶ οἴονται τὴν τῶν οἰκείων ἀποδοχὴν, εἰ τὰ παρὰ τοῖς 20 ἄλλοις ἀτιμάζουσιν, συναυξήσειν. ἀλλ' οὐχ ὧδ' ἔχει τὰ ἡμέτερα· πάντας γὰρ ἐπάγεται καὶ συνεπιστρέφει, βαρβάρους, Ἑλληνας, ἠπειρώτας, νησιώτας, ἔθνη τὰ ἐῶα, τὰ ἐσπέρια, Εὐρώπην, Ἀσίαν, ἅπασαν τὴν οἰκουμένην ἀπὸ περάτων ἐπὶ πέρατα.
 21 τίς γὰρ τὴν ἱερὰν ἐκείνην ἐβδόμην οὐκ ἐκτετίμηκεν, ἄνεσιν πόνων καὶ ραστώνῃ αὐτῷ τε

MOSES II. 17-21

beyond what words can describe. IV.
 Yet, though it may be rightly thought a great 17 matter in itself that the laws should have been guarded securely through all time, we have not reached the true marvel. There is something surely still more wonderful—even this : not only Jews but almost every other people, particularly those which take more account of virtue, have so far grown in holiness as to value and honour our laws. In this they have received a special distinction which belongs to no other code. Here is the proof. Throughout 18 the world of Greeks and barbarians, there is practically no state which honours the institutions of any other. Indeed, they can scarcely be said to retain their own perpetually, as they adapt them to meet the vicissitudes of times and circumstances. The 19 Athenians reject the customs and institutions of the Lacedaemonians, and the Lacedaemonians those of the Athenians ; nor, in the world of the barbarians, do the Egyptians maintain the laws of the Scythians nor the Scythians those of the Egyptians—nor, to put it generally, Europeans those of Asiatics nor Asiatics those of Europeans. We may fairly say that mankind from east to west, every country and nation and state, shew aversion to foreign institutions, and think that they will enhance the respect for their own by shewing disrespect for those of other countries. It 20 is not so with ours. They attract and win the attention of all, of barbarians, of Greeks, of dwellers on the mainland and islands, of nations of the east and the west, of Europe and Asia, of the whole inhabited world from end to end. For, who has not 21 shewn his high respect for that sacred seventh day, by giving rest and relaxation from labour to himself

PHILO

- καὶ τοῖς πλησιάζουσιν, οὐκ ἐλευθέρους μόνον ἀλλὰ καὶ δούλοις, μᾶλλον δὲ καὶ ὑποζυγίοις διδούς;
- 22 φθάνει γὰρ ἢ ἐκεχειρία καὶ πρὸς πᾶσαν ἀγέλην καὶ ὅσα πρὸς ὑπηρεσίαν γέγονεν ἀνθρώπου καθάπερ δούλα θεραπεύοντα τὸν φύσει δεσπότην, φθάνει καὶ πρὸς δένδρων καὶ φυτῶν ἅπασαν ἰδέαν· οὐ γὰρ ἔρνος, οὐ κλάδον, ἀλλ' οὐδὲ πέταλον ἐφέϊται τεμεῖν ἢ καρπὸν ὄντινοῦν δρέψασθαι, πάντων διαφειμένων
- [138] κατ' ἐκείνην | τὴν ἡμέραν καὶ ὡσπερ ἐλευθερίαν ἀγόντων, κοινῶ κηρύγματι μηδενὸς ἐπιψαύοντος.
- 23 τίς δὲ τὴν λεγομένην νηστείαν οὐ τέθηπε καὶ προσκυνεῖ δι' ἔτους ἀγομένην τῆς ἱερομηνίας αὐστηρότερον καὶ σεμνότερον τρόπον; ἐν ἣ μὲν γὰρ πολὺς ἄκρατος καὶ τράπεζαι πολυτελεῖς καὶ ὅσα περὶ ἐδωδῆν καὶ πόσιν ἄφθονα πάντα, δι' ὧν αἱ ἀκόρεστοι γαστροὶ ἡδοναὶ συναύξονται προσαναρρηγνῦσαι καὶ τὰς ὑπογαστρίους
- 24 ἐπιθυμίας· ἐν ἣ δ' οὐ σιτίον, οὐ ποτόν ἕξεισι προσενέγκασθαι, καθαραῖς ὅπως διανοίαις, μηδενὸς ἐνοχλοῦντος μηδ' ἐμποδίζοντος σωματικοῦ πάθους, ὅποια φιλεῖ συμβαίνειν ἐκ πλησμονῆς, ἐορτάζωσιν ἰλασκόμενοι τὸν πατέρα τοῦ παντὸς αἰσίοις εὐχαῖς, δι' ὧν ἀμνηστίαν μὲν παλαιῶν ἀμαρτημάτων, κτήσιν δὲ καὶ ἀπόλαυσιν νέων ἀγαθῶν εἰώθασιν αἰτεῖσθαι.
- 25 V. Τὸ δὲ τῆς νομοθεσίας ἱεροπρεπὲς ὡς οὐ παρ' Ἰουδαίοις μόνον ἀλλὰ καὶ παρὰ πᾶσι τοῖς ἄλλοις τεθαύμασται, δῆλον ἐκ τε τῶν εἰρημένων ἤδη καὶ
- 26 τῶν μελλόντων λέγεσθαι. τὸ παλαιὸν ἐγράφησαν

<sup>a</sup> i.e. the Day of Atonement. For the term "the fast" cf. Acts xxvii. 9.

<sup>b</sup> Or "holy season." A vague term (not indicating necessarily a whole month) for the periods varying with and his neighbours, freemen and slaves alike, and beyond these to his beasts? For the holiday extends also to every herd, and to all creatures made to minister to man, who serve like slaves their natural master. It extends also to every kind of trees and plants; for it is not permitted to cut any shoot or branch, or even a leaf, or to pluck any fruit whatsoever. All such are set at liberty on that day, and live as it were in freedom, under the general edict that proclaims that none should touch them.

460

MOSES II. 21-26

Again, who does not every year shew awe and reverence for the fast, as it is called,<sup>a</sup> which is kept more strictly and solemnly than the "holy month"<sup>b</sup> of the Greeks? For in this last the untempered wine flows freely, and the board is spread sumptuously, and all manner of food and drink are lavishly provided, whereby the insatiable pleasures of the belly are enhanced, and further cause the outburst of the lusts that lie below it. But in our fast men may not put food and drink to their lips, in order that with pure hearts, untroubled and untrammelled by any bodily passion, such as is the common outcome of repletion, they may keep the holy-day, propitiating the Father of All with fitting prayers, in which they are wont to ask that their old sins may be forgiven and new blessings gained and enjoyed.

V. That the sanctity of our legislation has been a source of wonder not only to the Jews but also to all other nations, is clear both from the facts already mentioned and those which I proceed to state.<sup>c</sup> In different Greek states, in which hostilities or legal processes were forbidden.

<sup>c</sup> For the relation of this remarkable account (§§ 26-44) of the making of the Septuagint to other traditions see App. pp. 605-606.

PHILO

- οἱ νόμοι γλώσση Χαλδαϊκῇ καὶ μέχρι πολλοῦ διέμειναν ἐν ὁμοίῳ τὴν διάλεκτον οὐ μεταβάλλοντες, ἕως μήπω τὸ κάλλος εἰς τοὺς ἄλλους 27 ἀνθρώπους ἀνέφηναν αὐτῶν. ἐπεὶ δὲ ἐκ τῆς καθ' ἑκάστην ἡμέραν συνεχοῦς μελέτης καὶ ἀσκήσεως τῶν χρωμένων αἴσθησις ἐγένετο καὶ ἑτέροις καὶ τὸ κλέος ἐφοίτα πανταχόσε—τὰ γὰρ καλὰ κἂν φθόνῳ πρὸς ὀλίγον ἐπισκιασθῆ χρόνον, ἐπὶ καιρῶν αὖθις ἀναλάμπει φύσεως εὐμενεία—, δεινὸν ἡγησάμενοί τινες, εἰ οἱ νόμοι παρὰ τῷ ἡμίσει τμήματι τοῦ γένους ἀνθρώπων ἐξετασθήσονται μόνῳ τῷ βαρβαρικῷ, τὸ δ' Ἑλληνικὸν εἰς ἅπαν ἀμοιρή-
- 28 σει, πρὸς ἔρμηνειαν τὴν τούτων ἐτράποντο. τὸ δ' ἔργον ἐπεὶ καὶ μέγα ἦν καὶ κοινωφελές, οὐκ ἰδιώταις οὐδ' ἄρχουσιν, ὧν πολὺς ἀριθμὸς, ἀλλὰ βασιλεῦσι καὶ βασιλέων ἀνετέθη τῷ δοκιμωτάτῳ.
- 29 Πτολεμαῖος ὁ Φιλάδελφος ἐπικληθεὶς τρίτος μὲν ἦν ἀπ' Ἀλεξάνδρου τοῦ τὴν Αἴγυπτον παραλαβόντος, ἀρεταῖς δὲ ταῖς ἐν ἡγεμονίᾳ πάντων, οὐχὶ [139] τῶν καθ' αὐτὸν μόνον, | ἀλλὰ καὶ τῶν πάλαι πώποτε γεγενημένων ἀριστος, οὗ καὶ μέχρι νῦν τοσαύταις ὕστερον γενεαῖς ἄδεται τὸ κλέος πολλὰ δείγματα καὶ μνημεῖα τῆς μεγαλοφροσύνης κατὰ πόλεις καὶ χώρας ἀπολιπόντος, ὡς ἤδη καὶ ἐν παροιμίας εἶδει τὰς ὑπερόγκους φιλοτιμίας καὶ μεγάλας κατασκευὰς Φιλαδελφείους ἀπ' ἐκείνου καλεῖσθαι.
- 30 συνόλως μὲν οὖν ἢ τῶν Πτολεμαίων οἰκία διαφερόντως παρὰ τὰς ἄλλας βασιλείας ἤκμασεν, ἐν δὲ τοῖς Πτολεμαίοις ὁ Φιλάδελφος—ὅσα γὰρ εἰς ἔδρασεν οὗτος ἐπαινετά, μόλις ἐκείνοι πάντες

MOSES II. 26-30

ancient times the laws were written in the Chaldean tongue, and remained in that form for many years, without any change of language, so long as they had not yet revealed their beauty to the rest of mankind. But, in course of time, the daily, unbroken regularity 27 of practice exercised by those who observed them brought them to the knowledge of others, and their fame began to spread on every side. For things excellent, even if they are beclouded for a short time through envy, shine out again under the benign operation of nature when their time comes. Then it was that some people, thinking it a shame that the laws should be found in one half only of the human race, the barbarians, and denied altogether to the Greeks, took steps to have them translated. In 28 view of the importance and public utility of the task, it was referred not to private persons or magistrates, who were very numerous, but to kings, and amongst them to the king of highest repute. Ptolemy, sur- 29 named Philadelphus, was the third in succession to Alexander, the conqueror of Egypt. In all the qualities which make a good ruler, he excelled not only his contemporaries, but all who have arisen in the past; and even till to-day, after so many generations, his praises are sung for the many evidences and monuments of his greatness of mind which he left behind him in different cities and countries, so that, even now, acts of more than ordinary munificence or buildings on a specially great scale are proverbially called Philadelphian after him. To put it shortly, 30 as the house of the Ptolemies was highly distinguished, compared with other dynasties, so was Philadelphus among the Ptolemies. The creditable achievements of this one man almost outnumbered

✓

PHILO

ἄθροοι διεπράξαντο<sup>1</sup>—γενόμενος καθάπερ ἐν ζῳῳ τὸ ἡγεμονεῦον κεφαλὴν τρόπον τινα τῶν βασιλέων.

31 VI. ὁ δὲ τοιοῦτος ζῆλον καὶ πόθον λαβὼν τῆς νομοθεσίας ἡμῶν εἰς Ἑλλάδα γλῶτταν τὴν Χαλδαϊκὴν μεθαρμόζεσθαι διανοεῖτο καὶ πρέσβεις εὐθὺς ἐξέπεμπε πρὸς τὸν τῆς Ἰουδαίας ἀρχ-ιερέα καὶ βασιλέα—ὁ γὰρ αὐτὸς ἦν—τό τε βούλημα δηλῶν καὶ προτρέπων ἀριστίνδην ἐλέσθαι τοὺς

32 τὸν νόμον διερμηνεύοντας. ὁ δ' οἶα εἰκὸς ἦσθεις καὶ νομίσας οὐκ ἄνευ θείας ἐπιφροσύνης περὶ τὸ τοιοῦτον ἔργον ἐσπουδακέναι τὸν βασιλέα, σκεψά-μενος τοὺς παρ' αὐτῷ δοκιμωτάτους Ἑβραίων, οἱ πρὸς τῇ πατρίῳ καὶ τὴν Ἑλληνικὴν ἐπεπαιδεύοντο

33 παιδεῖαν, ἄσμενος ἀποστέλλει. ὡς δ' ἦκον, ἐπὶ ξενίαν κληθέντες λόγοις ἀστείοις καὶ σπουδαίοις τὸν ἐστιάτορα εὐώχουν ἀντεφεστιῶντες· ὁ μὲν γὰρ ἀπεπειράτο τῆς ἐκάστου σοφίας καινὰς ἀλλ' οὐ τὰς ἐν ἔθει ζητήσεις προτείνων, οἱ δ' εὐστόχως καὶ εὐθυβόλως, οὐκ ἐπιτρέποντος μακρηγορεῖν τοῦ 34 ἐλυόντο. δοκιμασθέντες δ' εὐθὺς ἤρξαντο τὰ τῆς καλῆς πρεσβείας ἀποτελεῖν καὶ λογισάμενοι παρ' αὐτοῖς, ὅσον εἴη τὸ πρᾶγμα θεσπισθέντας νόμους χρησιμοῖς διερμηνεύειν, μήτ' ἀφελεῖν τι μήτε προσθεῖναι ἢ μεταθεῖναι δυναμένους, ἀλλὰ τὴν ἐξ ἀρχῆς ἰδέαν καὶ τὸν τύπον αὐτῶν διαφυλάττοντας, ἐσκόπουν τὸ καθαρώτατον τῶν περὶ τὸν τόπον χωρίων ἔξω πόλεως· τὰ γὰρ ἐντὸς τείχους ἄτε παντοδαπῶν πεπληθότα ζῳῶν

<sup>1</sup> Cohn punctuates with a colon before ὅσα, and comma before γενόμενος.

MOSES II. 30-34

those of all the others put together, and, as the head takes the highest place in the living body, so he may be said to head the kings. VI. This great 31 man, having conceived an ardent affection for our laws, determined to have the Chaldean translated into Greek, and at once dispatched envoys to the high priest and king of Judaea, both offices being held by the same person, explaining his wishes and urging him to choose by merit persons to make a full rendering of the Law into Greek. The high priest 32 was naturally pleased, and, thinking that God's guiding care must have led the king to busy himself in such an undertaking, sought out such Hebrews as he had of the highest reputation, who had received an education in Greek as well as in their native lore, and joyfully sent them to Ptolemy. When they 33 arrived, they were offered hospitality, and, having been sumptuously entertained, requited their entertainer with a feast of words full of wit and weight. For he tested the wisdom of each by propounding for discussion new instead of the ordinary questions, which problems they solved with happy and well-pointed answers in the form of apophthegms, as the occasion did not allow of lengthy speaking. After standing this test, they at once began to fulfil 34 the duties of their high errand. Reflecting how great an undertaking it was to make a full version of the laws given by the Voice of God, where they could not add or take away or transfer anything, but must keep the original form and shape, they proceeded to look for the most open and unoccupied <sup>a</sup> spot in the neighbourhood outside the city. For, within the walls, it was full of every kind of living creatures, and <sup>a</sup> Or "the most cleanly," but see on § 72.

PHILO

διὰ νόσους καὶ τελευτὰς καὶ τὰς ὑγιαίνοντων οὐκ 35 εὐαγεῖς πράξεις ἦν ὑποπτα. νῆσος ἡ Φάρος πρόκειται τῆς Ἀλεξανδρείας, ἧς αὐχὴν ὑποταίνιος [140] τέταται πρὸς τὴν πόλιν περικλειόμενος | οὐκ ἀγχιβαθεῖ τὰ δὲ πολλὰ τεναγώδει θαλάττη, ὡς καὶ τῆς τῶν κυμάτων φορᾶς τὸν πολὺν ἦχον καὶ πάταγον 36 ἐκ πάνυ μακροῦ διαστήματος προεκλύεσθαι. τοῦ-τον ἐξ ἀπάντων τῶν ἐν κύκλῳ κρίναντες ἐπιτηδειό-τατον εἶναι τὸν τόπον ἐνησυχάσαι καὶ ἐνηρημῆσαι καὶ μόνη τῇ ψυχῇ πρὸς μόνους ὀμιλῆσαι τοὺς νόμους, ἐνταυθοῖ κατέμειναν καὶ τὰς ἱερὰς βίβλους λαβόντες ἀνατείνουσιν ἅμ' αὐταῖς καὶ τὰς χεῖρας εἰς οὐρανόν, αἰτούμενοι τὸν θεὸν μὴ διαμαρτεῖν τῆς προθέσεως· ὁ δ' ἐπινεύει ταῖς εὐχαῖς, ἵνα τὸ πλεῖστον ἢ καὶ τὸ σύμπαν γένος ἀνθρώπων ὠφεληθῇ χρησόμενον εἰς ἐπανόρθωσιν βίου φιλοσόφοις καὶ 37 παγκάλοις διατάγμασι. VII. καθίσαντες δ' ἐν ἀποκρύφῳ καὶ μηδενὸς παρόντος ὅτι μὴ τῶν τῆς φύσεως μερῶν, γῆς ὕδατος ἀέρος οὐρανοῦ, περὶ ὧν πρῶτον τῆς γενέσεως ἔμελλον ἱεροφαντήσιν—κοσμοποιία γὰρ ἢ τῶν νόμων ἐστὶν ἀρχή—, καθάπερ ἐνθουσιῶντες προεφήτευον οὐκ ἄλλα ἄλλοι, τὰ δ' αὐτὰ πάντες ὀνόματα καὶ ῥήματα, ὥσπερ ὑπο-38 βολέως ἐκάστοις ἀοράτως ἐνηχοῦντος. καίτοι τίς οὐκ οἶδεν, ὅτι πᾶσα μὲν διάλεκτος, ἡ δ' Ἑλληνικὴ διαφερόντως, ὀνομάτων πλουτεῖ, καὶ ταῦτόν ἐν-θύμημα οἶόν τε μεταφράζοντα καὶ παραφράζοντα σχηματῖσαι πολλαχῶς, ἄλλοτε ἄλλας ἐφαρμόζοντα

<sup>a</sup> For Philo's use of ἐνηχεῖν see note on De Mut. 57.

<sup>b</sup> Or "by paraphrasing more or less freely." The general distinction between μετάφρασις and παράφρασις is that the former sticks more closely than the latter to the material on which it is exercised. See Ernesti, Lex. tech. s.v. μετάφρασις. 466

MOSES II. 34-38

consequently the prevalence of diseases and deaths, and the impure conduct of the healthy inhabitants, made them suspicious of it. In front of Alexandria 35 lies the island of Pharos, stretching with its narrow strip of land towards the city, and enclosed by a sea not deep but mostly consisting of shoals, so that the loud din and booming of the surging waves grows faint through the long distance before it reaches the land. Judging this to be the most suit- 36 able place in the district, where they might find peace and tranquillity and the soul could commune with the laws with none to disturb its privacy, they fixed their abode there; and, taking the sacred books, stretched them out towards heaven with the hands that held them, asking of God that they might not fail in their purpose. And He assented to their prayers, to the end that the greater part, or even the whole, of the human race might be profited and led to a better life by continuing to observe such wise and truly admirable ordinances.

VII. Sitting here in seclusion with none present save 37 the elements of nature, earth, water, air, heaven, the genesis of which was to be the first theme of their sacred revelation, for the laws begin with the story of the world's creation, they became as it were possessed, and, under inspiration, wrote, not each several scribe something different, but the same word for word, as though dictated<sup>a</sup> to each by an invisible prompter. Yet who does not know that 38 every language, and Greek especially, abounds in terms, and that the same thought can be put in many shapes by changing single words and whole phrases<sup>b</sup> and suiting the expression to the occasion?

PHILO

λέξεις; ὅπερ ἐπὶ ταύτης τῆς νομοθεσίας οὐ φασι συμβῆναι, συνενεχθῆναι δ' εἰς ταῦτόν κύρια κυρίοις ὀνόμασι, τὰ Ἑλληνικὰ τοῖς Χαλδαϊκοῖς, ἐναρμο-39 σθέντα εὖ μάλα τοῖς δηλουμένοις πράγμασιν. ὃν γὰρ τρόπον, οἶμαι, ἐν γεωμετρίᾳ καὶ διαλεκτικῇ τὰ σημαινόμενα ποικιλίαν ἑρμηνείας οὐκ ἀνέχεται, μένει δ' ἀμετάβλητος ἢ ἐξ ἀρχῆς τεθεῖσα, τὸν αὐτὸν ὡς ἔοικε τρόπον καὶ οὗτοι συντρέχοντα τοῖς πράγμασιν ὀνόματα ἐξεῦρον, ἅπερ δὴ μόνα ἢ μάλιστα τρανώσειν ἔμελλεν ἐμφαντικῶς τὰ δηλούμενα.
 40 σαφεστάτη δὲ τοῦδε πίστις· ἐάν τε Χαλδαῖοι τὴν Ἑλληνικὴν γλώτταν ἐάν τε Ἕλληνες τὴν Χαλδαίων ἀναδιδαχθῶσι καὶ ἀμφοτέραις ταῖς γραφαῖς ἐντύχωσι, τῇ τε Χαλδαϊκῇ καὶ τῇ ἑρμηνευθείσῃ, καθάπερ ἀδελφὰς μᾶλλον δ' ὡς μίαν καὶ τὴν αὐτὴν ἐν τε τοῖς πράγμασι καὶ τοῖς ὀνόμασι τεθήπασι καὶ προσκυνούσιν, οὐχ ἑρμηνείας ἐκείνους ἀλλ' ἱερο-φάντας καὶ προφήτας προσαγορεύοντες, οἷς ἐξεγένετο συνδραμεῖν λογισμοῖς εἰλικρινέσι τῷ Μωυ-41 σέως καθαρωτάτῳ πνεύματι. διὸ καὶ μέχρι νῦν ἀνὰ πᾶν ἔτος ἑορτὴ καὶ πανήγυρις ἄγεται κατὰ τὴν Φάρον νῆσον, εἰς ἣν οὐκ Ἰουδαῖοι μόνον ἀλλὰ [141] καὶ παμπληθεῖς ἕτεροι διαπλέουσι τό τε | χωρίον σεμννοῦντες, ἐν ᾧ πρῶτον τὰ τῆς ἑρμηνείας ἐξ-ἔλαμψε, καὶ παλαιᾶς ἕνεκεν εὐεργεσίας αἰεὶ νεαζού-42 σης εὐχαριστήσοντες τῷ θεῷ. μετὰ δὲ τὰς εὐχὰς καὶ τὰς εὐχαριστίας οἱ μὲν πηξάμενοι σκηναὶ ἐπὶ τῶν αἰγιαλῶν οἱ δ' ἐπὶ τῆς αἰγιαλίτιδος ψάμμου κατακλιθέντες ἐν ὑπαίθρῳ μετ' οἰκείων καὶ φίλων ἐστιῶνται, πολυτελεστέραν τῆς ἐν βασιλείοις κατα-43 σκευῆς τότε τὴν ἀκτὴν νομίζοντες. οὕτω μὲν οἱ νόμοι ζηλωτοὶ καὶ περιμάχητοι πᾶσιν ἰδιώταις τε

MOSES II. 38-43

This was not the case, we are told, with this law of ours, but the Greek words used corresponded literally<sup>a</sup> with the Chaldean, exactly suited to the things they indicated. For, just as in geometry and logic, 39 so it seems to me, the sense indicated does not admit of variety in the expression which remains unchanged in its original form, so these writers, as it clearly appears, arrived at a wording which corresponded with the matter, and alone, or better than any other, would bring out clearly what was meant. The clearest proof of this is that, if Chaldeans have 40 learned Greek, or Greeks Chaldean, and read both versions, the Chaldean and the translation, they regard them with awe and reverence as sisters, or rather one and the same, both in matter and words, and speak of the authors not as translators but as prophets and priests of the mysteries, whose sincerity and singleness of thought has enabled them to go hand in hand with the purest of spirits, the spirit of Moses. Therefore, even to the 41 present day, there is held every year a feast and general assembly in the island of Pharos, whither not only Jews but multitudes of others cross the water, both to do honour to the place in which the light of that version first shone out, and also to thank God for the good gift so old yet ever young. But, after the prayers and thanksgivings, some 42 fixing tents on the seaside and others reclining on the sandy beach in the open air feast with their relations and friends, counting that shore for the time a more magnificent lodging than the fine mansions in the royal precincts. Thus the laws are 43 shewn to be desirable and precious in the eyes of all,

<sup>a</sup> See App. p. 606.

- καὶ ἡγεμόσιν ἐπιδείκνυνται, καὶ ταῦτ' ἐκ πολλῶν χρόνων τοῦ ἔθνους οὐκ εὐτυχοῦντος—τὰ δὲ τῶν 44 μὴ ἐν ἀκμαῖς πέφυκέ πως ἐπισκιάζεσθαι—· εἰ δὲ γένοιτό τις ἀφορμὴ πρὸς τὸ λαμπρότερον, πόσῃ εἰκὸς ἐπίδοσιν γενήσεσθαι; καταλιπόντας ἂν οἶμαι τὰ ἴδια καὶ πολλὰ χαίρειν φράσαντας τοῖς πατρίοις ἐκάστους μεταβαλεῖν ἐπὶ τὴν τούτων μόνων τιμὴν· εὐτυχία γὰρ τοῦ ἔθνους οἱ νόμοι συναλαάμψαντες ἀμαυρώσουσι τοὺς ἄλλους καθάπερ ἀνατείλας ἥλιος τοὺς ἀστέρας.
- 45 VIII. Ἀπόχρη μὲν οὖν καὶ τὰ λεχθέντα πολὺς ἔπαινος εἶναι τοῦ νομοθέτου. πλείων δ' ἐστὶν ἕτερος, ὃν αὐταὶ περιέχουσιν αἱ ἱερώταται βίβλοι, πρὸς ἃς ἤδη τρεπτέον, εἰς ἔνδειξιν τῆς τοῦ συγ-46 γράψαντος ἀρετῆς. τούτων τοίνυν τὸ μὲν ἐστὶν ἱστορικὸν μέρος, τὸ δὲ περὶ τὰς προστάξεις καὶ ἀπαγορεύσεις, ὑπὲρ οὗ δεύτερον λέξομεν τὸ πρότερον 47 τῇ τάξει πρότερον ἀκριβώσαντες. ἐστὶν οὖν τοῦ ἱστορικοῦ τὸ μὲν περὶ τῆς τοῦ κόσμου γενέσεως, τὸ δὲ γενεαλογικόν, τοῦ δὲ γενεαλογικοῦ τὸ μὲν περὶ κολάσεως ἀσεβῶν, τὸ δ' αὖ περὶ τιμῆς δικαίων. οὗ δὲ χάριν ἐνθένδε τῆς νομοθεσίας ἤρξατο τὰ περὶ τὰς προστάξεις καὶ ἀπαγορεύσεις ἐν δευτέρῳ 48 θείῳ, λεκτέον. οὐ γὰρ οἶά τις συγγραφεὺς ἐπετή-δευσε παλαιῶν πράξεων καταλιπεῖν ὑπομνήματα τοῖς ἔπειτα τοῦ ψυχαγωγῆσαι χάριν ἀνωφελῶς, ἀλλ' ἤρχαιολόγησεν ἄνωθεν ἀρξάμενος ἀπὸ τῆς τοῦ

<sup>a</sup> Though of course genealogies play a great part in the Pentateuch, γενεαλογικός if used in the strict sense is a very inadequate term to describe the historical part of the books, as distinct from the creation story. The wider sense, as given in the translation, appears to have been in use in the ordinary citizens and rulers alike, and that too though our nation has not prospered for many a year. It is but natural that when people are not flourishing their belongings to some degree are under a cloud. But, if a fresh start should be made to brighter 44 prospects, how great a change for the better might we expect to see ! I believe that each nation would abandon its peculiar ways, and, throwing overboard their ancestral customs, turn to honouring our laws alone. For, when the brightness of their shining is accompanied by national prosperity, it will darken the light of the others as the risen sun darkens the stars.

VIII. The above is sufficient in itself as a high com- 45 mendation to the lawgiver ; but there is another still greater contained in the sacred books themselves, and to these we must now turn to shew the great qualities of the writer. They consist of two parts : 46 one the historical, the other concerned with commands and prohibitions, and of this we will speak later, after first treating fully what comes first in order. One division of the historical side deals with 47 the creation of the world, the other with particular persons,<sup>a</sup> and this last partly with the punishment of the impious, partly with the honouring of the just. We must now give the reason why he began his law-book with the history, and put the commands and prohibitions in the second place. He did not, like 48 any historian, make it his business to leave behind for posterity records of ancient deeds for the pleasant but unimproving entertainment which they give ; but, in relating the history of early times, and going for its beginning right to the creation of the universe, grammatical schools, whose language Philo often adopts. For the evidence for this see App. p. 606.

PHILO

παντὸς γενέσεως, ἵν' ἐπιδείξῃ δύο τὰ ἀναγκαιότατα· ἐν μὲν τὸν αὐτὸν πατέρα καὶ ποιητὴν τοῦ κόσμου καὶ ἀληθείᾳ νομοθέτην, ἕτερον δὲ τὸν χρησόμενον τοῖς νόμοις ἀκολουθίαν φύσεως ἀσπασόμενον καὶ βιωσόμενον κατὰ τὴν τοῦ ὄλου διάταξιν ἀρμονία καὶ συμφωνία πρὸς ἔργα λόγων καὶ πρὸς λόγους 49 ἔργων. IX. τῶν μὲν οὖν ἄλλων νομοθετῶν οἱ μὲν εὐθύς ἃ τε χρῆ πράττειν καὶ ἃ μὴ διαταξάμενοι τιμωρίας κατὰ τῶν παραβαινόντων ὤρισαν, οἱ δ' | [142] ἀμείνους δόξαντες εἶναι τὴν ἀρχὴν οὐκ ἐνθένδε ἐποίησαντο, πόλιν δὲ τῷ λόγῳ κτίσαντες καὶ ἰδρυσάμενοι πρότερον ἢ ἐνόμιζον οἰκειοτάτην καὶ πρεπωδεστάτην εἶναι τῇ κτισθείσῃ πολιτείᾳ διὰ 50 τῆς τῶν νόμων θέσεως ἐφήρμοζον. ὁ δὲ τὸ μὲν πρότερον ὑπολαβὼν (ὅπερ ἦν) τυραννικὸν τε καὶ δεσποτικόν, ἄνευ παραμυθίας προστάττει ὡς οὐκ ἐλευθέρους ἀλλὰ δούλους, τὸ δ' ὕστερον ἐμμελὲς μὲν, οὐ μὴν τελείως ἐπαινετὸν ἅπασιν τοῖς κριταῖς, ὡς ἔοικεν, ἐν ἑκατέρῳ τῶν λεχθέντων διήνεγκεν. 51 ἔν τε γὰρ ταῖς προστάξεσι καὶ ἀπαγορεύσεσιν ὑποτίθεται καὶ παρηγορεῖ τὸ πλεόν ἢ κελεύει, μετὰ προοιμίῳν καὶ ἐπιλόγων τὰ πλείστα καὶ ἀναγκαιότατα πειρώμενος ὑφηγεῖσθαι, τοῦ προτρέψασθαι χάριν μᾶλλον ἢ βιάσασθαι· πόλεώς τε χειροποιήτου κτίσιν ἀρχὴν ποιήσασθαι τῆς γραφῆς ταπεινότερον ἢ κατὰ τὴν ἀξίαν τῶν νόμων ὑπολαβὼν εἶναι, πρὸς τὸ μέγεθος καὶ κάλλος τῆς ὄλης νομο-

<sup>a</sup> Compare the beginning of De Op., especially § 3.

<sup>b</sup> The allusion is, of course, primarily to Plato's Laws and Republic. Perhaps also to Zeno, whose Πολιτεία is said to have been written in opposition to Plato's (S.V.F. i. 260,

MOSES II. 48-51

he wished to shew two most essential things : first that the Father and Maker of the world was in the truest sense also its Lawgiver, secondly that he who would observe the laws will accept gladly the duty of following nature and live in accordance with the ordering of the universe, so that his deeds are attuned to harmony with his words and his words with his deeds.<sup>a</sup> IX. Now, other legislators are divided into 49 those who set out by ordering what should or should not be done, and laying down penalties for disobedience, and those who, thinking themselves superior, did not begin with this, but first founded and established their state as they conceived it, and then, by framing laws, attached to it the constitution which they thought most agreeable and suitable to the form in which they had founded it.<sup>b</sup> But Moses, 50 thinking that the former course, namely issuing orders without words of exhortation, as though to slaves instead of free men, savoured of tyranny and despotism, as indeed it did, and that the second, though aptly conceived, was evidently not entirely satisfactory in the judgement of all, took a different line in both departments. In his commands and 51 prohibitions he suggests and admonishes rather than commands, and the very numerous and necessary instructions which he essays to give are accompanied by forewords and after-words, in order to exhort rather than to enforce. Again, he considered that to begin his writings with the foundation of a man-made city was below the dignity of the laws, and, surveying the greatness and beauty of the whole cf. 262). Aristotle's Politics hardly fits the case. Josephus, Apion ii. 222, makes the same point, but adds that passing over the other philosophers he will only name Plato.

PHILO

θεσίας ἀκριβεστάτη ὄψει τῇ κατὰ διάνοιαν ἀπιδῶν καὶ νομίσας αὐτὴν κρείττονα καὶ θειοτέραν ἢ ὥστε κύκλω τινὶ τῶν ἐπὶ γῆς ὀρισθῆναι, τῆς μεγαλοπόλεως τὴν γένεσιν εἰσηγήσατο, τοὺς νόμους ἐμφερεστάτην εἰκόνα τῆς τοῦ κόσμου πολιτείας 52 ἡγησάμενος εἶναι.

X. τῶν γοῦν ἐν

μέρει διατεταγμένων τὰς δυνάμεις εἴ τις ἀκριβῶς ἐξετάζειν ἐθελήσειεν, εὐρήσει τῆς τοῦ παντὸς ἁρμονίας ἐφιεμένας καὶ τῷ λόγῳ τῆς αἰδίου φύσεως

53 συναδούσας. διὸ καὶ τοὺς ἀφθόνων μὲν ἀγαθῶν ἀξιωθέντας ὅσα κατ' εὐεξίαν σωμαίων καὶ τὰς περὶ πλοῦτον καὶ δόξαν καὶ τὰ ἄλλα ἐκτὸς εὐτυχίας, ἀρετῆς δ' ἀφηνιάσαντας καὶ οὐκ ἀνάγκη γνώμη δ' ἐκουσίῳ πανουργίαν καὶ ἀδικίαν καὶ τὰς ἄλλας κακίας, ὡς μέγα ὄφελος τὴν μεγίστην ζημίαν, ἐπι-τηδεύσαντας καθάπερ οὐκ ἀνθρώπων ἐχθροὺς ἀλλὰ τοῦ σύμπαντος οὐρανοῦ τε καὶ κόσμου τὰς ἐν ἔθει τιμωρίας οὗ φησιν ὑπομεῖναι, ἀλλὰ καινοτάτας καὶ παρηλλαγμένας, ἃς ἐμεγαλουργῆσεν ἡ πάρεδρος τῷ θεῷ μισοπόνηρος δίκη, τῶν τοῦ παντὸς δραστικω-τάτων στοιχείων ἐπιθεμένων ὕδατος καὶ πυρός, ὡς καιρῶν περιόδοις τοὺς μὲν κατακλυσμοῖς φθαρῆναι, τοὺς δὲ καταφλεχθέντας ἀπολέσθαι.

54 πελάγη μὲν ἀρθέντα καὶ ποταμοὶ μετεωρισθέντες αὐθιγενεῖς τε καὶ χεῖμαρροι τὰς ἐν τῇ πεδιάδι πόλεις ἀπάσας ἐπέκλυσαν καὶ κατέσυραν, τὰς δὲ κατὰ τὴν ὄρεινὴν αἱ μεθ' ἡμέραν καὶ νύκτωρ 55 συνεχεῖς καὶ ἀδιάστατοι ὄμβρων φοραί. χρόνῳ δ' ὑστερον ἐκ τῶν ὑπολειφθέντων πάλιν τοῦ γένους συναυξηθέντος καὶ εἰς πολυανθρωπίαν ἐπιδόντος,

[143] ἐπειδὴ τὸ περὶ τοὺς προγόνους πάθος οἱ | ἀπόγονοι μάθημα σωφροσύνης οὐκ ἐποίησαντο, πρὸς δ'

MOSES II. 51-55

code with the accurate discernment of his mind's eye, and thinking it too good and godlike to be confined within any earthly walls, he inserted the story of the genesis of the "Great City," holding that the laws were the most faithful picture of the world-polity.

X. Thus whoever will care- 52 fully examine the nature of the particular enactments will find that they seek to attain to the harmony of the universe and are in agreement with the principles of eternal nature. Therefore all those to whom God 53 thought fit to grant abundance of the good gifts of bodily well-being and of good fortune in the shape of wealth and other externals—who then rebelled against virtue, and, freely and intentionally under no compulsion, practised knavery, injustice and the other vices, thinking to gain much by losing all, were counted, Moses tells us, as enemies not of men but of the whole heaven and universe, and suffered not the ordinary, but strange and unexampled punishments wrought by the might of justice, the hater of evil and assessor of God. For the most forceful elements of the universe, fire and water, fell upon them, so that, as the times revolved, some perished by deluge, others were consumed by conflagration.<sup>a</sup> The seas lifted up their waters, and the rivers, spring- 54 fed and winter torrents, rose on high and flooded and swept away all the cities of the plain, while the continuous and ceaseless streams of rain by night and day did the same for the cities of the uplands. At a 55 later time, when the race sprung from the remnant had again increased and become very populous, since the descendants did not take the fate of their forefathers as a lesson in wisdom, but turned to deeds <sup>a</sup> See note on De Abr. 1.

PHILO

ἀκολασίας ἐτράποντο ζηλωταὶ χαλεπωτέρων ἐπι-τηδευμάτων γενόμενοι, πυρὶ τούτους ἀναλώσαι δι-56 νοήθη. τότε οὖν, ὡς μηνύει τὰ λόγια, κεραυνοὶ ῥυέντες ἐξ οὐρανοῦ τοὺς τε ἀσεβεῖς κατέπρησαν καὶ τὰς πόλεις αὐτῶν· καὶ μέχρι τοῦ νῦν μνημεῖα τοῦ συμβεβηκότος ἀλέκτου πάθους δείκνυται κατὰ Συρίαν, ἐρείπια καὶ τέφρα καὶ θεῖον καὶ καπνὸς καὶ ἡ ἔτι ἀναδιδομένη φλόξ ἀμαυρὰ καθάπερ διασμυχομένου πυρός.

57 Ἐν δὲ τούτῳ συνέβαινε τοὺς τε ἀσεβεῖς ταῖς εἰρημέναις τιμωρίαις κολάζεσθαι καὶ τοὺς καλο-κάγαθία διενηροχότας εὖ πάσχειν ἀρετῆς ἐπαξίων

58 ἄθλων τυγχάνοντας. ἐν μὲν γε τῇ φορᾷ τοῦ κεραυνίου πυρὸς οἰκήτορσιν αὐτοῖς ὅλης χώρας ἐμπιπραμένης, εἰς μόνος ἀνὴρ μέτοικος ἐπιφροσύνη θεία σώζεται, διότι τῶν ἐγχωρίων παρανομημάτων οὐδὲν ἠσπάσατο, τῶν μετοίκων εἰωθότων ἀσφαλείας ἔνεκα τὰ ξενικὰ τιμᾶν, ἐπεὶ τοῖς ἀτιμάζουσι κίν-δυνος ἐκ τῶν αὐτοχθόνων ἔπεται· καίτοι γ' οὐκ ἐπ' ἄκρον ἦλθε σοφίας, ὡς διὰ τελειότητα τῆς ἐν αὐτῷ φύσεως τοσοῦτου γέρως ἀξιωθῆναι, ἀλλ' ὅτι μόνος<sup>1</sup> τοῖς πολλοῖς οὐ συνηρέθη πρὸς τὸ ἀβροδίαιτον ἀποκλίνασι καὶ πάσας μὲν ἡδονὰς πάσας δ' ἐπι-θυμίας χορηγίαις ἀφθόνοις ἀνάψασιν ὥσπερ φλόγα 59 λασίῳ ὕλῃ κεχυμένη. XI. κατὰ δὲ τὸν μέγαν κατακλυσμὸν ὀλίγου δέω φάναι τοῦ σύμπαν-τος ἀνθρώπων γένους φθειρομένου, ἓνα οἶκον ἀπαθῆ γενέσθαι παντὸς κακοῦ λόγος ἔχει, τὸν πρεσβύτατον καὶ ἡγεμόνα τῆς οἰκίας ἐπειδὴ συνέβαινε μηδεὶν ἀδικήματος ἐκουσίου προσάψασθαι. τὸν δὲ τρόπον τῆς σωτηρίας, ὡς αἱ ἱεραὶ βίβλοι περιέχουσιν, ἀξίον

<sup>1</sup> MSS. μόνον.

MOSES II. 55-59

of licence and followed eagerly still more grievous practices, He determined to destroy them with fire. Then, as the oracles declare, the lightnings poured 56 from heaven and consumed the impious and their cities, and to the present day the memorials to the awful disaster are shewn in Syria, ruins and cinders and brimstone and smoke, and the dusky flame still arises as though fire were smouldering within.

But while in these disasters the impious were 57 chastised with the said punishments, it was also the case that those who stood out in excellence of conduct fared well and received the rewards which their virtue deserved. While the rush of the flaming 58 thunderbolts consumed the whole land, and the inhabitants to boot, one man alone, an immigrant, was saved by God's protecting care, because he had shewn no liking for any of the misdeeds of the country, though immigrants, to secure themselves, usually shew respect for the customs of their hosts, knowing that disrespect for these entails danger at the hands of the original inhabitants. Yet he did not reach the summit of wisdom, nor was it because of the perfection of his nature that he was deemed worthy of this great privilege, but because he alone did not fall in with the multitude, when they turned aside to licentious living and fed every pleasure and every lust with lavish supplies of fuel like a flame when the brushwood is piled upon it.

XI. So, too, in the great deluge when 59 all but the whole human race perished, one house, we are told, suffered no harm because the most venerable member and head of the household had committed no deliberate wrong. The manner of his preservation is a story worth recording, both as a

PHILO

ἱστορηθῆναι διὰ τε μεγαλουργίαν καὶ ἅμα βελτίωσιν 60 ἠθῶν. νομισθεῖς γὰρ ἐπιτήδειος εἶναι μὴ μόνον ἀμοιρῆσαι τῆς κοινῆς συμφορᾶς, ἀλλὰ καὶ δευτέρας γενέσεως ἀνθρώπων αὐτὸς ἀρχὴ γενέσθαι, θείαις προστάξεσιν, ὡς ὑφηγοῦντο οἱ χρησμοί, ξύλινον δημιουργήσας ἔργον μέγιστον εἰς πήχεις τριακοσίους μῆκος καὶ πεντήκοντα εὖρος καὶ τριάκοντα ὕψος καὶ συνεχῆ κατασκευασάμενος ἔνδον οἰκήματα ἐπίπεδα καὶ ὑπερῶα, τριώροφα καὶ τετρώροφα, καὶ τροφὰς ἐτοιμασάμενος, ἀφ' ἐκάστου γένους ζώων ὅσα χερσαῖα καὶ πτηνὰ εἰσήγαγεν ἄρρεν τε καὶ θῆλυ σπέρματα ὑπολειπόμενος πρὸς καταλλαγὴν 61 καιρῶν<sup>1</sup> τῶν αὐθις ποτε γενησομένων· ἦδει γὰρ τὴν τοῦ θεοῦ φύσιν ἴλεω, κἂν εἰ τὰ εἶδη φθειροίτο, ἀλλὰ τοι τὴν ἐν τοῖς γένεσιν ἀφθαρσίαν ἕνεκα τῆς πρὸς [144] αὐτὸν ὁμοιότητος | καὶ τοῦ μηδὲν τῶν κατὰ πρό-θεσιν φύντων ποτὲ λυθῆναι διαμένουσιν· XII. οὐ χάριν πάντα ἐπειθάρχει καὶ τὰ τέως ἐξηγριωμένα ἡμεροῦτο καὶ οἶα νομῆι καὶ ἀγελάρχη τιθασευθέντα 62 ἐπηκολούθει. μετὰ δὲ τὴν εἴσοδον ἀπάντων εἶ τις ἐθεάσατο τὸ πλήρωμα, οὐκ ἂν διήμαρτεν εἰπών, ἀντίμιμον εἶναι γῆς ἀπάσης ἐν ἑαυτῷ φέρον τὰ ζώων γένη, ὧν καὶ ἡ σύμπασα γῆ τὰ ἀμύθητα εἶδη 63 καὶ πρότερον ἠνεγκε καὶ ἴσως αὐθις οἴσει. τὰ δ' εἰκασθέντα χρόνοις ὕστερον οὐ μακροῖς ἀπέβαινε· τὸ μὲν γὰρ πάθος ἐλώφα καὶ ἡ τοῦ κατακλυσμοῦ φορὰ καθ' ἐκάστην ἡμέραν ἐμειοῦτο, τῶν τε ὄμβρων ἐπισχεθέντων καὶ τοῦ κατὰ πᾶσαν γῆν ἀναχυθέντος

<sup>1</sup> Cohn somewhat arbitrarily declares καταλλαγὴν καιρῶν corrupt and suggests καταγωγὴν γενῶν. The translation does perhaps require an unusual sense for καταλλαγῆ. If this is

MOSES II. 60-63

marvel and as a means of edification. Being judged 60 a fit person not only to be exempted from the common fate, but also to be himself the beginner of a second generation of mankind, by God's commands enjoined by the oracular voice, he built a huge structure of wood, three hundred cubits in length, fifty in breadth and thirty in height. Inside this, he framed a series of rooms, on the ground floor and second, third and fourth stories. Then, having laid up provisions, he introduced a male and female specimen of every kind of living creature both of the land and the air, thus reserving seeds in expectation of the better times <sup>a</sup> that were once more to come. For he knew that the nature of God was gracious, 61 and that, though the individuals perished, the race would be preserved indestructible because of its likeness to Himself, and that nothing whose being He had willed would ever be brought to nought. XII. In consequence, all the creatures obeyed him, and the erstwhile savage grew gentle, and in their new tameness followed him as a flock follows its leader. When they had all entered, anyone 62 who surveyed the crew might fairly have said that it was a miniature of earth in its entirety, comprising the races of living creatures, of which the world had carried before innumerable specimens, and perhaps would carry them again. What he had 63 surmised came to pass not long afterwards, for the trouble abated, and the force of the deluge diminished every day, as the rain ceased and the water that had fatal, I should suggest πρὸς <καταβολήν> κατ' ἀλλαγήν καιρῶν, i.e. "to be sown when the times change."

<sup>a</sup> Lit. "for change brought about by (or 'into') the seasons," etc. See note 1.

---

PHILO

ὕδατος τῇ μὲν ἀναλισκομένου τῷ ἀφ' ἡλίου φλογμῷ τῇ δὲ ὑπονοστοῦντος εἰς χαράδρας καὶ φάραγγας καὶ τὰς ἄλλας τῆς γῆς κοιλότητας· ὥσπερ γὰρ θεοῦ προστάξαντος, ἐκάστη φύσις ὅπερ ἔχρησεν οἶα δάνειον ἀναγκαῖον ἀπελάμβανε, θάλαττα καὶ πηγαὶ καὶ ποταμοί· πρὸς γὰρ τοὺς οἰκίους τόπους ἔκα-64 στον ρεῖθρον ὑπενόσσει. μετὰ δὲ τὴν κάθαρσιν τῶν ὑπὸ σελήνην, ἀπολουσαμένης τῆς γῆς καὶ νέας ἀναφανείσης καὶ τοιαύτης, οἶαν εἰκὸς εἶναι ὅτε τὴν ἀρχὴν μετὰ τοῦ κόσμου παντὸς ἐκτίζετο, πρόεισιν ἐκ τοῦ ξυλίνου κατασκευάσματος αὐτὸς καὶ γυνή καὶ υἱοὶ καὶ τούτων γυναῖκες καὶ μετὰ τῆς οἰκίας ἀγγεληδὸν τὰ συνεληλυθότα τῶν ζώων γένη πρὸς τὴν τῶν ὁμοίων σποράν τε καὶ γένεσιν.
 65 ταῦτα τῶν ἀγαθῶν ἀνδρῶν ἐστὶν ἀριστεία καὶ ἄθλα, δι' ὧν οὐ μόνον αὐτοὶ καὶ γένη σωτηρίας ἔτυχον τοὺς μεγίστους κινδύνους ἐκφυγόντες, οἱ κατὰ τὸν τῶν στοιχείων νεωτερισμὸν τοῖς πανταχοῦ πᾶσιν ἐπετειχίσθησαν, ἀλλὰ καὶ παλιγγενεσίας ἐγένοντο ἡγεμόνες καὶ δευτέρας ἀρχηγέται περιόδου, καθάπερ ἐμπυρεύματα τοῦ ζώων ἀρίστου γένους ἀνθρώπων ὑπολειφθέντες, ὃ τὴν ἡγεμονίαν τῶν περιγείων ἅπαξ ἀπάντων ἔλαχεν ἀντίμιμον γεγονὸς θεοῦ δυνάμεως, εἰκὼν τῆς ἀοράτου φύσεως ἐμφανής, αἰδίου γενητή.

* * * * *

66 XIII. | Δύο μὲν ἤδη μέρη τοῦ βίου Μωυσέως [145] διεξεληλύθαμεν, τό τε περὶ βασιλείας καὶ νομοθετικῆς· τρίτον δὲ προσαποδοτέον τὸ περὶ ἱερω-σύνης. ὃ τοίνυν μέγιστον καὶ ἀναγκαιότατον ἀρχιερεῖ προσεῖναι δεῖ, τὴν εὐσέβειαν, ἐν τοῖς <sup>a</sup> On the question of a considerable lacuna at this point see App. pp. 606-607.

MOSES II. 63-66

covered every land partly disappeared under the heat of the sun, partly subsided into the beds of water torrents and into chasms and the other hollows in the earth. For, as though by God's command, every form of nature, sea, springs and rivers, received back what it had lent as a debt which must be repaid; for each stream subsided into its proper place. But <sup>64</sup> when the sublunary world had been purged, when earth rising from its ablutions shewed itself renewed with the likeness which we may suppose it to have worn when originally it was created with the universe, there issued from the wooden structure himself and his wife and his sons and his sons' wives, and with the household, moving like a herd, the various animals which had been assembled there came forth to beget and reproduce their kind. <sup>65</sup> These are the guerçons and the prizes of the good, by which not only they themselves and their families won safety and escaped the greatest dangers, which, with the wild uprising of the elements as their weapon, stood menacingly over all and everywhere, but also became leaders of the regeneration, inaugurators of a second cycle, spared as embers to rekindle mankind, that highest form of life, which has received dominion over everything whatsoever upon earth, born to be the likeness of God's power and image of His nature, the visible of the Invisible, the created of the Eternal.<sup>a</sup>

* * * * *

XIII. We have now fully treated of two sides of <sup>66</sup> the life of Moses, the royal and the legislative. We must proceed to give account of the third, which concerns his priesthood. The chief and most essential quality required by a priest is piety, and

PHILO

- μάλιστα οὗτος ἤσκησεν ἅμα καὶ φύσεως εὐμοιρία χρησάμενος, ἦν ὥσπερ ἀγαθὴν ἄρουραν φιλοσοφία παραλαβοῦσα δογμάτων θεωρία παγκάλων ἐβελτίωσε καὶ οὐ πρότερον ἀνῆκεν ἢ τελειοποιηθῆναι τοὺς ἀρετῆς καρποὺς διὰ τε λόγων καὶ πράξεων.
- 67 τοιγαροῦν μετ' ὀλίγων ἄλλων φιλόθεός τε καὶ θεοφιλῆς ἐγένετο, καταπνευσθεὶς ὑπ' ἔρωτος οὐρανίου καὶ διαφερόντως τιμήσας τὸν ἡγεμόνα τοῦ παντός καὶ ἀντιτιμηθεὶς ὑπ' αὐτοῦ· τιμὴ δ' ἀρμόττουσα σοφῶ θεραπεύειν τὸ πρὸς ἀλήθειαν ὄν· ἱερωσύνη δὲ θεραπείαν ἐπιτετήδευκε θεοῦ. τούτου τοῦ γέρως, οὐ μείζον ἀγαθὸν ἐν τοῖς οὖσιν οὐκ ἔστιν, ἡξιούτο χρησιμοῖς ἕκαστα τῶν εἰς τὰς λει-τουργίας καὶ ἱεράς ὑπηρεσίας ἀναδιδασκόμενος.
- 68 XIV. ἔδει δὲ πρότερον ὥσπερ τὴν ψυχὴν καὶ τὸ σῶμα καθαρεῦσαι, μηδενὸς πάθους προσαιψάμενον, ἀλλ' ἀγνεύσαντα ἀπὸ πάντων ὅσα τῆς θνητῆς ἐστι φύσεως, σιτιῶν καὶ ποτῶν καὶ τῆς πρὸς γυναῖκας
- 69 ὀμιλίας. ἀλλὰ ταύτης μὲν ἐκ πολλῶν χρόνων κατ-εφρόνησε καὶ σχεδὸν ἀφ' οὗ τὸ πρῶτον ἤρξατο
- [146] | προφητεύειν καὶ θεοφορεῖσθαι, προσῆκον ἡγούμενος ἔτοιμον ἐμπαρέχειν αἰεὶ τοῖς χρησιμοῖς ἑαυτόν· σιτιῶν δὲ καὶ ποτῶν ἐπὶ ἡμέρας τεσσαράκοντα ἐξῆς ἠλόγησε, δηλονότι τροφὰς ἔχων ἀμείνους τὰς διὰ θεωρίας, αἷς ἄνωθεν ἀπ' οὐρανοῦ καταπνεόμενος τὴν μὲν διάνοιαν τὸ πρῶτον, ἔπειτα δὲ καὶ τὸ σῶμα διὰ τῆς ψυχῆς ἐβελτιούτο, καθ' ἑκάτερον πρὸς τε ἰσχὴν καὶ εὐεξίαν ἐπιδιδούς, ὡς τοὺς ἰδόντας
- 70 ὕστερον ἀπιστεῖν. εἰς γὰρ ὄρος ὑψηλότατον καὶ ἱερώτατον τῶν περὶ τὸν τόπον ἀνεληθὼν προστάξεισι

MOSES II. 66-70

this he practised in a very high degree, and at the same time made use of his great natural gifts. In these, philosophy found a good soil, which she improved still further by the admirable truths which she brought before his eyes, nor did she cease until the fruits of virtue shewn in word and deed were brought to perfection. Thus he came to love God 67 and be loved by Him as have been few others. A heaven-sent rapture inspired him, so markedly did he honour the Ruler of the All and was honoured in return by Him. An honour well-becoming the wise is to serve the Being Who truly is, and the service of God is ever the business of the priesthood. This privilege, a blessing which nothing in the world can surpass, was given to him as his due, and oracles instructed him in all that pertains to rites of worship and the sacred tasks of his ministry. XIV. But first 68 he had to be clean, as in soul so also in body, to have no dealings with any passion, purifying himself from all the calls of mortal nature, food and drink and intercourse with women. This last he had disdained 69 for many a day, almost from the time when, possessed by the spirit, he entered on his work as prophet, since he held it fitting to hold himself always in readiness to receive the oracular messages. As for eating and drinking, he had no thought of them for forty successive days, doubtless because he had the better food of contemplation, through whose inspiration, sent from heaven above, he grew in grace, first of mind, then of body also through the soul, and in both so advanced in strength and well-being that those who saw him afterwards could not believe their eyes. For we read that by God's command 70 he ascended an inaccessible and pathless mountain, θείαις, ὅπερ ἀπρόσιτον καὶ ἄβατον ἦν, εἰς ἐκεῖνον λέγεται διαμεῖναι τὸν χρόνον οὐδὲν ἐπιφερόμενος τῶν εἰς ἀναγκαίας ἀπόλαυσιν τροφῆς <καὶ><sup>1</sup> ἡμέραις ὕστερον, ὡς ἐλέχθη, τεσσαράκοντα κατέβαινε πολὺ καλλίων τὴν ὄψιν ἢ ὅτε ἀνήει, ὡς τοὺς ὄρωντας τεθηπέναι καὶ καταπεπληχθαι καὶ μηδ' ἐπὶ πλέον ἀντέχειν τοῖς ὀφθαλμοῖς δύνασθαι κατὰ τὴν προσβολὴν ἡλιοειδοῦς φέγγους ἀπαστράπτουτος.

PHILO

- 71 XV. Ἐτι δ' ἄνω διατρίβων ἐμυσταγωγεῖτο παι-δευόμενος τὰ κατὰ τὴν ἱερωσύνην πάντα καὶ πρῶτα, ἃ δὴ καὶ πρῶτα τῇ τάξει, τὰ περὶ τὴν τοῦ 72 ἱεροῦ καὶ τῶν ἐν αὐτῷ κατασκευὴν. εἰ μὲν οὖν τὴν χώραν, εἰς ἣν μετανίσταντο, ἤδη παρειλήφεσαν, ἀναγκαῖον ἦν ἰδρῦσασθαι περισημότατον νεῶν ἐν τῷ καθαρωτάτῳ λίθων πολυτελῶν ὕλης καὶ περὶ αὐτὸν τεῖχη μεγάλα δεῖμασθαι καὶ νεωκόροις παμπληθεῖς οἰκίας, ὀνομάσαντας ἱερόπολιν τὸν 73 τόπον. ἐπεὶ δ' ἔτι κατὰ τὴν ἐρήμην ἐπλάζοντο, τοῖς μήπω παγίως ἰδρυθεῖσιν ἤρμοττε φορητὸν ἔχειν ἱερόν, ἵν' ἐν ταῖς ὁδοιπορίαις καὶ στρατοπε-δεῖαις ἀνάγωσι θυσίας καὶ τὰ ἄλλα ὅσα κατὰ τὰς ἱερουργίας δρῶσι μηδενὸς ἀμοιροῦντες ὦν χρῆ τοὺς 74 ἐν πόλεσιν οἰκοῦντας. σκηνην οὖν, ἔργον ἱερώ-τατον, δημιουργεῖν ἔδοξεν, ἧς τὴν κατασκευὴν θεσφάτοις λογίοις ἐπὶ τοῦ ὄρους Μωυσῆς ἀνεδιδάσκετο, τῶν μελλόντων ἀποτελεῖσθαι σωμάτων ἀσωμάτων ἰδέας τῇ ψυχῇ θεωρῶν, πρὸς ἃς ἔδει

<sup>1</sup> <καὶ>: so Cohn emends this defective sentence. I suggest as an alternative to insert ἧ (= "where") before εἰς ἐκεῖνον.

* See Ex. xxiv. 18, xxxiv. 28 ff.

MOSES II. 70-74

the highest and most sacred in the region, and remained for the period named, taking nothing that is needed to satisfy the requirements of bare sustenance. Then, after the said forty days had passed, he descended with a countenance far more beautiful than when he ascended, so that those who saw him were filled with awe and amazement; nor even could their eyes continue to stand the dazzling brightness that flashed from him like the rays of the sun.<sup>a</sup>

XV. While he was still staying on the mount, he was 71 being instructed in all the mysteries of his priestly duties: and first in those which stood first in order, namely the building and furnishing of the sanctuary. Now, if they had already occupied the land into which 72 they were removing, they would necessarily have had to erect a magnificent temple on the most open and conspicuous site,<sup>b</sup> with costly stones for its material, and build great walls around it, with plenty of houses for the attendants, and call the place the holy city. But, as they were still wandering in the desert and 73 had as yet no settled habitation, it suited them to have a portable sanctuary, so that during their journeys and encampment they might bring their sacrifices to it and perform all their other religious duties, not lacking anything which dwellers in cities should have. It was determined, therefore, to fashion a tabernacle, 74 a work of the highest sanctity, the construction of which was set forth to Moses on the mount by divine pronouncements. He saw with the soul's eye the immaterial forms of the material objects about to be

<sup>b</sup> Mangey "augustissima sede," the German translation "geweihter Stätte," but the sense given above seems more probable. Cf. §§ 34 and 214, also In Flaccum 122 ἐπὶ τοὺς πλησίον αἰγιαλοὺς ἀφικνοῦνται κὰν τῷ καθαρωτάτῳ σπάντες ἀνεβήσαν.

PHILO

καθάπερ ἀπ' ἀρχετύπου γραφῆς καὶ νοητῶν παραδειγμάτων αἰσθητὰ μιμήματα ἀπεικονισθῆναι.
 75 προσῆκον γὰρ ἦν τῷ ὡς ἀληθῶς ἀρχιερεῖ καὶ τὴν τοῦ ἱεροῦ κατασκευὴν ἐπιτραπῆναι, ἵν' ἐκ πολλοῦ τοῦ περιόντος ἡρμοσμένας καὶ συμφώνους τοῖς δημιουργηθείσι ποιῆται τὰς ἐν τῷ ἱεράσθαι λει-76 τουργίας. XVI. ὁ μὲν οὖν τύπος τοῦ παραδείγματος ἐνεσφραγίζετο τῇ διανοίᾳ τοῦ προφήτου διαζωγραφοῦμενος καὶ προδιαπλαττόμενος ἀφανῶς ἄνευ ὕλης ἀοράτοις εἶδεσι· τὸ δ' ἀποτέλεσμα πρὸς τὸν τύπον ἐδημιουργεῖτο, ἐναποματτομένου τὰς σφραγίδας τοῦ τεχνίτου ταῖς προσφόροις ἐκάστων 77 ὕλικαῖς οὐσίαις. ἦν δ' ἡ κατασκευὴ τοιαύδε· ὀκτώ [147] καὶ τεσσαράκοντα κίονες κέδρου | τῆς ἀσηπτοτάτης ἀπὸ στελεχῶν κοπέντες εὐερνεστάτων περιεβάλλον-το χρυσῷ βαθεῖ· κᾶπειθ' ἐκάστῳ δύο ἀργυραῖ βάσεις ὑπηρείδοντο καὶ κατὰ τὸ ἀκροκίονιον ἐφ-78 ἠρμόζετο χρυσῇ κεφαλῇ. εἰς μὲν οὖν τὸ μῆκος τεσσαράκοντα κίονας διέταπτεν ὁ τεχνίτης, ἐκάτέρω-θεν τοὺς ἡμίσεις εἴκοσι, μηδὲν ἐν μέσῳ διάστημα ποιούμενος, ἀλλ' ἐξῆς ἐφαρμόζων καὶ συνάπτων, ἵν' οἷα τείχους ὄψις μία προφαίνεται· εἰς δὲ τὸ πλάτος ἐσώτατον τοὺς λοιποὺς ὀκτώ, ἐξ μὲν κατὰ τὴν μέσην χώραν, δύο δ' ἐν ταῖς παρ' ἐκάτερα τῆς μέσης γωνίαις, τὸν μὲν ἐπὶ δεξιᾷ, τὸν δ' ἐπ' ἐν-ὠνυμα· κατὰ δὲ τὴν εἴσοδον ἄλλους τέσσαρας, τὰ μὲν ἄλλα ὁμοίους, μίαν δ' ἀντὶ δυοῖν ἔχοντας βάσιν τῶν ἐξ ἀντικρῦ, μεθ' οὓς ἐξωτάτω πέντε μόναίς 79 ταῖς βάσει διαφέροντας, χαλκαῖ γὰρ ἦσαν· ὥστε τῆς σκηνῆς τοὺς σύμπαντας εἶναι, δίχα τῶν ἐν ταῖς

<sup>a</sup> For §§ 77-83 see Ex. xxvi. 18 ff.

<sup>b</sup> LXX στῦλοι ("posts"?). E.V. "boards."

MOSES II. 74-79

made, and these forms had to be reproduced in copies perceived by the senses, taken from the original draught, so to speak, and from patterns conceived in the mind. For it was fitting that the construction 75 of the sanctuary should be committed to him who was truly high priest, in order that his performance of the rites belonging to his sacred office might be in more than full accordance and harmony with the fabric. XVI. So the shape of the model was stamped 76 upon the mind of the prophet, a secretly painted or moulded prototype, produced by immaterial and invisible forms ; and then the resulting work was built in accordance with that shape by the artist impressing the stampings upon the material substances required in each case. <sup>a</sup>The actual construction was as follows. 77 Forty-eight pillars <sup>b</sup> of the most durable cedar wood, hewn out of the finest trunks, were encased in a deep layer of gold, and each of these had two silver bases <sup>c</sup> set to support it and a golden capital fixed on the top. For the length of the building, the craftsman put 78 forty pillars, half of them—that is a row of twenty—on each side, with no interval left between them, but each joined and fitted on to the next, so as to present the appearance of a single wall. For the breadth he set right inside the remaining eight, six in the central space and two in the corners on either side of the centre, one on the right and one on the left ; also four others at the entrance, like the rest in everything else, except that they had one base instead of the two of the pillars opposite, and after these, at the very outside, five, differing only in their bases, which were of brass. Thus the whole number of pillars visible in 79 the tabernacle, leaving out the two in the corners, <sup>c</sup> Or “sockets.”

PHILO

γωνίαις δυοῖν ἀφανῶν, πέντε καὶ πεντήκοντα ἐμφανείς, τὸν ἀπὸ μονάδος ἄχρι δεκάδος τῆς 80 παντελείας συμπληρούμενον ἀριθμόν. εἰ δὲ βουληθείη τις τοὺς ἐν τῷ προπυλαίῳ πέντε τῷ ὑπαίθρῳ συνάπτοντας, ὃ κέκληκεν αὐλήν, τιθέναι χωρίς, ἀπολειφθήσεται ὁ ἀγιώτατος πεντηκοντάδος ἀριθμός, δύναμις ὧν τοῦ ὀρθογωνίου τριγώνου, ὅπερ ἐστὶ τῆς τῶν ὄλων γενέσεως ἀρχή, συμπληρωθεὶς ἐκ τῶν ἐντὸς κιόνων, τεσσαράκοντα μὲν τῶν καθ' ἑκατέραν πλευρὰν εἴκοσιν, ἕξ δὲ τῶν ἐν μέσῳ δίχα τῶν παρὰ ταῖς γωνίαις ἀποκεκρυσμένων, τεσσάρων 81 δὲ τῶν ἀντικρῦ, ἐφ' ὧν τὸ καταπέτασμα. τὴν δ' αἰτίαν, ἧς ἔνεκα<sup>1</sup> τοὺς πέντε τοῖς πεντήκοντα συγκατατάπτω καὶ χωρὶς αὐτῶν τίθημι, δηλώσω. ἡ πεντὰς αἰσθήσεων ἀριθμός ἐστίν, αἴσθησις δ' ἐν ἀνθρώπῳ τῇ μὲν νεύει πρὸς τὰ ἐκτός, τῇ δὲ ἀνα-κάμπτει πρὸς νοῦν ὑπηρέτις οὕσα φύσεως νόμοις 82 αὐτοῦ. διὸ καὶ τὴν μεθόριον χώραν ἀπένευμε τοῖς πέντε· τὰ μὲν γὰρ ἐντὸς αὐτῶν ἐκνέενυκε πρὸς τὰ ἄδυστα τῆς σκηνῆς, ἅπερ ἐστὶ συμβολικῶς νοητά, τὰ δ' ἐκτός πρὸς τὸ ὑπαιθρον καὶ τὴν αὐλήν, ἅπερ ἐστὶν αἰσθητά· παρὸ καὶ ταῖς βάσεις διήνεγκαν, χαλκαῖ γὰρ εἰσιν· ἐπεὶ δὲ τῆς ἐν ἡμῖν αἰσθήσεως κεφαλὴ μὲν καὶ ἡγεμονικὸν ὁ νοῦς, ἐσχατιὰ δὲ καὶ ὡσανεὶ βᾶσις τὸ αἰσθητόν, εἴκασε δὴ τὸν μὲν νοῦν 83 χρυσοῦ, χαλκῷ δὲ τὸ αἰσθητόν. μέτρα δὲ τῶν κιόνων ταῦτα· δέκα μὲν πῆχεις τὸ μῆκος, εἰς δὲ

<sup>1</sup> Perhaps καὶ has fallen out after ἔνεκα.

<sup>a</sup> See App. pp. 607-608, and for παντελεία note on De Abr. 244.

<sup>b</sup> i.e.  $50 = 3^2 + 4^2 + 5^2$ , and 3, 4, 5 are the sides of the primary form of the right-angled triangle, which in De Op. 97 488

MOSES II. 79-83

hidden from view, amounted to fifty-five, that is to the sum of successive numbers from one to the supremely perfect ten.<sup>a</sup> But if you choose to exclude 80 the five in the propylaeum adjoining the open-air space which he has called the court, there will be left the most sacred number, fifty, the square of the sides of the right-angled triangle, the original source from which the universe springs.<sup>b</sup> This fifty is obtained by adding together the inside pillars, namely the forty made up by the twenties on each side, then the six in the middle, leaving out the two hidden away in the corners, and then the four opposite which support the veil. I will now give my reason for first 81 counting the five with the fifty and then separately. Five is the number of the senses, and sense in mankind inclines on one side to things external, while on the other its trend is towards mind, whose handmaiden it is by the laws of nature. And therefore he assigned the position on the border to the five pillars, for what lies inside them verges on the inmost sanctuary of the tabernacle, which symbolically represents the realm of mind, while what lies outside them verges on the open-air space and court which represent the realm of sense. And therefore the five differ from the rest 82 also in their bases which are of brass. Since the mind is head and ruler of the sense-faculty in us, and the world which sense apprehends is the extremity and, as it were, the base of mind, he symbolized the mind by the gold and the sense-objects by the brass. The 83 dimensions of the pillars were as follows : the height, is said to be the σχημάτων καὶ ποιότητων ἀρχή. The virtues of fifty are described more fully in De Spec. Leg. ii. 176, when it is said to be στοιχειωδέστατον καὶ πρεσβύτατον τῶν ἐν οὐσίαις περιλαμβανομένων.

PHILO

καὶ ἡμῖς τὸ εὖρος, ἢ ἡ σκηνὴ πᾶσι τοῖς μέρεσιν ἴση προφαίνηται.

- 84 [148] XVII. | Παγκάλους δὲ καὶ ποικίλους ὑφάσμασιν αὐτὴν περιέβαλεν, ὑακίνθῳ καὶ πορφύρᾳ καὶ κοκκίνῳ καὶ βύσσῳ καταχρώμενος εἰς τὴν ὑφήν. δέκα γὰρ ἄς διὰ τῆς ἱερᾶς γραφῆς ὠνόμασεν αὐλαίας ἐκ τῶν ἀρτίως λεχθέντων γενῶν ἐδημιούργει, μήκει μὲν ὀκτῶ καὶ εἴκοσι πηχῶν ἐκάστην, εἰς δὲ τέσσαρας πήχεις πρὸς εὖρος ἀποτείνων, ἵνα καὶ δεκάδα ἔχωσι τὴν παντέλειαν καὶ τετράδα τὴν δεκάδος οὐσίαν καὶ τὸν ὀκτῶ καὶ εἴκοσιν ἀριθμὸν τέλειον ἴσον τοῖς ἑαυτοῦ μέρεσι καὶ τεσσαρακοντάδα τὴν ζωογονικωτάτην, ἐν ἣ διαπλάττεσθαι φασιν ἄνθρωπον ἐν τῷ τῆς φύσεως ἐργαστηρίῳ. οἱ μὲν οὖν ὀκτῶ καὶ εἴκοσι πήχεις τῶν αὐλαιῶν τοιαύτην ἔχουσι τὴν διανομήν· δέκα μὲν κατὰ τὸν ὄροφον—τοσοῦτον γὰρ ἐστὶ τῆς σκηνῆς τὸ εὖρος—, οἱ δὲ λοιποὶ κατὰ τὰς πλευράς, ἑκατέρωθεν ἐννέα, πρὸς σκέπην ἀποτείνονται τῶν κιόνων, ὑπολειπομένου πήχεως ἀπὸ τοῦ ἐδάφους, ἵνα μὴ ἐπισύρηται <τὸ>
- 86 πάγκαλον καὶ ἱεροπρεπὲς ὑφασμα. τῶν δὲ τεσσαράκοντα, οἱ συναριθμοῦνται ἐκ τοῦ τῶν δέκα αὐλαιῶν πλάτους, τριάκοντα μὲν ἀπολαμβάνει τὸ μῆκος—τοσοῦτον γὰρ ἐστὶ καὶ <τὸ> τῆς σκηνῆς<sup>1</sup>—, ἐννέα δὲ ὁ ὀπισθόδομος, τὸν δὲ λοιπὸν τὸ κατὰ τὸ προπύλαιον, ἵνα δεσμὸς ἦ τοῦ ὄλου περιβλήματος·
- 87 ἐπὶ δὲ τοῦ προπυλαίου τὸ καταπέτασμα. σχεδὸν δὲ καὶ αἱ αὐλαῖαι καταπετάσματ' εἰσὶν, οὐ μόνον τῷ τὸν ὄροφον καὶ τοὺς τοίχους καλύπτειν, ἀλλὰ καὶ τῷ συνυφάνθαι γένεσι τοῖς αὐτοῖς, ὑακίνθῳ καὶ

<sup>1</sup> Or perhaps read τὸ μῆκος—τοσοῦτον γὰρ ἐστὶ—τῆς σκηνῆς, i.e. instead of adding τὸ as Cohn and Mangey, omit καὶ.

MOSES II. 83-87

ten cubits, the breadth, one-and-a-half, so that the tabernacle might appear equal in all its parts.

XVII. <sup>a</sup> He also surrounded it with the most beautiful pieces of woven work of various colours, using without stint materials of dark red and purple and scarlet and bright white, for the weaving. For he made ten curtains, as he calls them in the sacred writings, of the four kinds of material just mentioned, twenty-eight cubits in length and extended to four cubits in breadth. Thus we find in them ten, the supremely perfect number, four which contains the essence of ten, twenty-eight, a perfect number, equal to the sum of its factors,<sup>b</sup> and forty, the most prolific of life, which gives the time in which, as we are told, the man is fully formed in the laboratory of nature.<sup>c</sup> The twenty-eight cubits of the curtains were distributed as follows: ten along the roof, that being the breadth of the tabernacle, the rest extended along the sides, nine on each to cover the pillars, but leaving one cubit free from the floor, that this work so magnificent and worthily held sacred should not trail in the dust. Of the forty cubits which sum up the breadth of the ten curtains, thirty are taken up by the length of the tabernacle itself, that being its extent, nine by the backyard, and the remaining one by the space at the propylaeum, thus forming a bond to make the enclosing complete.<sup>d</sup> On the propylaeum was set the veil. But in a sense the curtains also are veils, not only because they cover the roof and the walls, but also because they are woven with the same kinds of

<sup>a</sup> For §§ 84-88 see Ex. xxvi. 1-14.

<sup>b</sup> i.e.  $1+2+4+7+14=28$ . See note on De Op. 101.

<sup>c</sup> i.e. forty weeks, or about ten months is supposed to be the period of gestation. Cf. e.g. Virg. Ecl. 4. 61.

<sup>d</sup> Lit. "to be a bond of all that was put round."

PHILO

πορφύρα καὶ κοκκίνω καὶ βύσσω. ἐκ δὲ τῶν αὐτῶν τό τε καταπέτασμα καὶ τὸ λεγόμενον κάλυμμα κατεσκευάζετο, τὸ μὲν εἴσω κατὰ τοὺς τέσσαρας κίονας, ἢ ἐπικρύπτηται τὸ ἄδυτον, τὸ δ' ἔξω κατὰ τοὺς πέντε, ὡς μηδεὶς ἐξ ἀπόπτου δύναιτο τῶν μὴ

88 ἱερωμένων καταθεάσασθαι τὰ ἅγια. XVIII. τὰς δὲ τῶν ὑφασμάτων ὕλας ἀριστίνδην ἐπέκρινεν ἐκ μυρίων ὄσων ἐλόμενος τοῖς στοχείοις ἰσαρίθμους, ἐξ ὧν ἀπετελέσθη ὁ κόσμος, καὶ πρὸς αὐτὰ λόγον ἔχουσας, γῆν καὶ ὕδωρ καὶ ἀέρα καὶ πῦρ· ἡ μὲν γὰρ βύσσος ἐκ γῆς, ἐξ ὕδατος δ' ἡ πορφύρα, ἡ δ' ὑάκινθος ἀέρι ὁμοιοῦται—φύσει γὰρ μέλας οὗτος—, τὸ δὲ κόκκινον πυρί, διότι φοινικουῖν ἐκάτερον· ἦν γὰρ ἀναγκαῖον ἱερὸν χειροποίητον κατασκευάζοντας τῷ πατρὶ καὶ ἡγεμόνι τοῦ παντὸς τὰς ὁμοίας |

[149] λαβεῖν οὐσίας, αἷς τὸ ὄλον ἐδημιούργει.

89 Ἡ μὲν οὖν σκηνή, καθάπερ νεὼς ἅγιος, τὸν εἰρημένον τρόπον κατεσκευάσθη. τέμενος δ' αὐτῆς ἐν κύκλῳ περιεβάλετο πηχῶν μῆκος ἑκατὸν καὶ πλάτος πεντήκοντα, κίονας ἔχον ἀφεστῶτας ἴσον ἀλλήλων διάστημα πέντε πήχεις, ὡς τοὺς μὲν σύμπαντας ἐξήκοντα εἶναι, διανεμῆσθαι δ' εἰς μὲν τὸ μῆκος τεσσαράκοντα, πρὸς δὲ τὸ εὖρος εἴκοσι,

90 καθ' ἑκάτερα μέρη τοὺς ἡμίσει. ὕλη δὲ τῶν στύλων τὰ μὲν ἐντὸς κέδρος, τὰ δ' ἐκ τῆς ἐπιφανείας ἄργυρος, ἀπάντων δ' αἱ βάσεις χαλκαῖ, καὶ τὸ ὕψος ἴσον πέντε πηχῶν· ἔδοξε γὰρ ἀρμόττον εἶναι τῷ τεχνίτῃ συνελεῖν ὄλω ἡμίσει τὸ ὕψος τῆς

---

<sup>a</sup> Philo seems to have made a slip here. The screen for the door of the tent (Ex. xxvi. 36) is in the lxx ἐπίσπαστρον, while κάλυμμα is the name given (Ex. xxvii. 16) to the material, dark red and purple and scarlet and bright white. And what he calls the "covering"<sup>a</sup> was also made with the same materials as the veil, that being placed inside along the four pillars to hide the inmost sanctuary, the "covering" outside along the five pillars, so that no unconsecrated person should get even a distant view of the holy precincts. XVIII. But, in choosing the materials for the woven work, 88 he selected as the best out of a vast number possible four, as equal in number to the elements—earth, water, air, fire—out of which the world was made, and with a definite relation to those elements; the byssus, or bright white, coming from the earth, purple from the water, while dark red is like the air, which is naturally black, and scarlet like fire, since both are bright red. For it was necessary that in framing a temple of man's making, dedicated to the Father and Ruler of All, he should take substances like those with which that Ruler made the All.

492

MOSES II. 87-90

<sup>b</sup> The tabernacle, then, was constructed to resemble 89 a sacred temple in the way described. Its precincts contained an area of a hundred cubits long by fifty broad, with pillars at equal intervals of five cubits from each other, so that the total number was sixty, with forty arranged on the long sides and twenty on the broad sides, in both cases half to each side. The 90 material of the columns was of cedar wood overlaid by silver. The bases in all cases were of brass, and the height was five cubits. For the master craftsman thought it proper to cut down the height of what he calls the court by a complete half, in order that the screen at the gate of the court represented in Philo by the ὕφασμα of § 93.

<sup>b</sup> For §§ 89-93 see Ex. xxvii. 9-18.

PHILO

- λεγομένης αὐλῆς, ἢ ἡ σκηνὴ πρὸς τὸ διπλάσιον μετέωρος ἀρθεῖσα προφαίνεται. λεπταὶ δ' ὀθόνην κατὰ τοῦ μήκους καὶ πλάτους ἦσαν ἐφαρμοζόμεναι τοῖς κίοσιν ἰστίοις ἐμφερεῖς, ὑπὲρ τοῦ μηδένα τῶν
- 91 μὴ καθαρῶν εἰσιέναι. XIX. ἡ δὲ θέσις τοιαύτη ἦν· μέση μὲν ἴδρυτο ἡ σκηνὴ μήκος ἔχουσα τριάκοντα πήχεις καὶ εὖρος δέκα σὺν τῷ βάθει τῶν κίωνων, ἀφειστήκει δὲ τῆς αὐλῆς ἐκ τριῶν μερῶν ἴσῳ διαστήματι, δυοῖν μὲν κατὰ τὰς πλευράς, ἐνὸς δὲ κατὰ τὸν ὀπισθόδομον, τὸ δὲ διάστημα ἐξ εἴκοσι πηχῶν ἀνεμετρέετο· κατὰ δὲ τὸ προπύλαιον, ὡς εἰκός, ἔνεκα τοῦ πλήθους τῶν εἰσιόντων μείζον ἐγένετο διάστημα πεντήκοντα πηχῶν· οὕτως γὰρ οἱ ἑκατὸν τῆς αὐλῆς ἔμελλον ἐκπληροῦσθαι, τῶν κατὰ τὸν ὀπισθόδομον εἴκοσι καὶ οὐς ἀπελάμβανεν ἡ σκηνὴ τριάκοντα συντεθέντων τοῖς κατὰ τὰς
- 92 εἰσόδους πεντήκοντα. τὰ γὰρ προπύλαια τῆς σκηνῆς ὡσανεὶ μέσος ὄρος ἴδρυτο διττῆς πεντηκοντάδος, τῆς μὲν κατ' ἀνατολᾶς, ἔνθα αἱ εἰσοδοὶ, τῆς δὲ πρὸς δυσμᾶς, ἔνθα τό τε μήκος τῆς σκηνῆς
- 93 καὶ ὁ κατόπιν περίβολος. κάλλιστον δὲ καὶ μέγιστον ἄλλο προπύλαιον ἐν ἀρχῇ τῆς εἰς τὴν αὐλὴν εἰσόδου κατεσκευάζετο διὰ τεττάρων κίωνων, καθ' ὧν ἐτείετο ποικίλον ὕφασμα τὸν αὐτὸν τρόπον τοῖς εἴσω κατὰ τὴν σκηνὴν κάκ τῆς ὁμοίας ὕλης ἀπειργασμένον.
- 94 Ἄμα δὲ τούτοις ἐδημιουργεῖτο καὶ σκεύη ἱερά, κιβωτός, λυχνία, τράπεζα, θυμιατήριον, βωμός. ὁ μὲν οὖν βωμός ἰδρύετο ἐν ὑπαίθρῳ, τῶν εἰσόδων τῆς σκηνῆς ἀντικρῦ, ἀφεστῶς τοσοῦτον ὅσον ἰκανὸν

---

<sup>a</sup> Or "the frontage," the plural, which here as in § 136 is 494

MOSES II. 90-94

tabernacle should be conspicuous by rising up to double the height. Five linen sheets like sails were attached to the pillars, both on the length and the breadth, so that no impure person could enter the place. XIX. The plan was as follows. The tab- 91 ernacle itself was set in the midst, thirty cubits long and ten broad, including the thickness of the pillars. From three aspects, namely the two long sides and the space at the back, it was the same distance from the boundary of the court, reckoned at twenty cubits. But at the propylaeum there was naturally a greater interval of fifty cubits, on account of the number of people entering. This increase was required to make up the hundred cubits of the court ; the twenty of the back-space and the thirty taken up by the tab- 92 ernacle being added to the fifty at the entrances. For the propylaeum<sup>a</sup> of the tabernacle was set as the border-line between the two fifties, namely the fifty on the eastern half, where the entrance is, and the fifty on the western half, consisting of the tabernacle and the area behind it. At the beginning of the 93 entrance to the court was built another very fine and large propylaeum with four pillars, on which was stretched a piece of woven work of various colours, made in the same way as those within the tabernacle and of like materials.

With these were also made the sacred vessels and 94 furniture, the ark, candlestick, table and altars for incense and burnt offerings. The altar for burnt offerings was placed in the open air, opposite the entrance of the tabernacle,<sup>b</sup> at a distance sufficient to applied to what is clearly a single "propylaeum," indicating that the line in which the portico stands is included.

<sup>b</sup> See Ex. xl. 6, 29.

PHILO

λειτουργοῖς εἶναι διάστημα πρὸς τὰς καθ' ἑκάστην 95 ἡμέραν ἐπιτελουμένας θυσίας. XX. ἡ δὲ κιβωτὸς ἐν ἀδύτῳ καὶ ἀβάτῳ τῶν καταπετασμάτων εἶσω, [150] κεχρυσωμένη πολυτελῶς ἔνδοθεν | τε καὶ ἔξωθεν, ἧς ἐπίθεμα ὡσανεὶ πῶμα τὸ λεγόμενον ἐν ἱεραῖς 96 βίβλοις ἰλαστήριον. τούτου μῆκος μὲν καὶ πλάτος μεμήνυται, βάθος δ' οὐδέν, ἐπιφανεία γεωμετρικῆ μάλισθ' ὡμοιωμένον, ὅπερ ἔοικεν εἶναι σύμβολον φυσικώτερον μὲν τῆς ἰλεω τοῦ θεοῦ δυνάμεως, ἠθικώτερον δὲ διανοίας πάλιν, ἰλεω δ' ἑαυτῆ, τὴν πρὸς ὕψος ἄλογον αἴρουσαν καὶ φυσῶσαν οἴησιν ἀτυφίας ἔρωτι σὺν ἐπιστήμῃ στέλλειν καὶ καθαιρεῖν 97 ἀξιούσης. ἀλλ' ἡ μὲν κιβωτὸς ἀγγεῖον νόμων ἐστίν· εἰς γὰρ ταύτην κατατίθεται τὰ χρησθέντα λόγια· τὸ δ' ἐπίθεμα τὸ προσαγορευόμενον ἰλαστήριον βάσις ἐστὶ πτηνῶν δυοῖν, ἃ πατρίῳ μὲν γλώττῃ προσαγορεύεται Χερουβίμ, ὡς δ' ἂν Ἕλληνες 98 εἶποιεν, ἐπίγνωσις καὶ ἐπιστήμη πολλή. ταῦτα δέ τινες μὲν φασιν εἶναι σύμβολα τῶν ἡμισφαιρίων ἀμφοῖν κατὰ τὴν ἀντιπρόσωπον θέσιν, τοῦ τε ὑπὸ γῆν καὶ ὑπὲρ γῆν· πτηνὸν γὰρ ὁ σύμπας οὐρανός.
 99 ἐγὼ δ' ἂν εἶποιμι δηλοῦσθαι δι' ὑπονοιῶν τὰς πρεσβυτάτας καὶ ἀνωτάτω δύο τοῦ ὄντος δυνάμεις, τὴν τε ποιητικὴν καὶ βασιλικὴν· ὀνομάζεται δ' ἡ μὲν ποιητικὴ δύναμις αὐτοῦ θεός, καθ' ἣν ἔθηκε

<sup>a</sup> For §§ 95-97 see Ex. xxv. 10-22.

<sup>b</sup> Or place of grace.

<sup>c</sup> See note on De Abr. 99.

<sup>d</sup> Or "full knowledge and much science." These words are not interpretations of the symbolical meaning of the two cherubim, but the supposed meaning of the Hebrew word, of which Philo gives two almost synonymous (and presumably alternative) renderings. The statement is reproduced by

MOSES II. 94-99

give the ministrants room for the daily performance of the sacrifices. XX. <sup>a</sup> The ark was placed on the 95 forbidden ground of the inner sanctuary, within the veils. It was coated with costly gilding within and without, and was covered by a sort of lid, which is called in the sacred books the mercy-seat.<sup>b</sup> The 96 length and breadth of this are stated, but no depth, and thus it closely resembles the plane surface of geometry. It appears to be a symbol in a theological sense <sup>c</sup> of the gracious power of God; in the human sense, of a mind which is gracious to itself and feels the duty of repressing and destroying with the aid of knowledge the conceit which in its love of vanity uplifts it in unreasoning exaltation and puffs it with pride. The ark itself is the coffer of the laws, for in 97 it are deposited the oracles which have been delivered. But the cover, which is called the mercy-seat, serves to support the two winged creatures which in the Hebrew are called cherubim, but, as we should term them, recognition and full knowledge.<sup>d</sup> Some hold 98 that, since they are set facing each other, they are symbols of the two hemispheres, one above the earth and one under it, for the whole heaven has wings. I 99 should myself say that they are allegorical representations of the two most august and highest potencies of Him that is, the creative and the kingly. His creative potency is called God, because through it He placed <sup>e</sup> Clem. as ἐπίγνωσις πολλή, by Jerome as "multitudo scientiae," to which add Augustine's "plenitudo scientiae." All these are presumably dependent on Philo and no explanation of how he got this belief seems to be forthcoming.

The symbolical interpretations mentioned below have been given in De Cher. 21 ff, together with a third, that they represent the spheres of the planets and fixed stars. See notes ad loc.

<sup>e</sup> θεός again associated with τῆθημι, cf. De Abr. 122.

PHILO

- καὶ ἐποίησε καὶ διεκόσμησε τόδε τὸ πᾶν, ἥ δὲ βασιλικὴ κύριος, ἥ τῶν γενομένων ἄρχει καὶ σὺν
- 100 δίκη βεβαίως ἐπικρατεῖ. μόνος γὰρ πρὸς ἀλήθειαν ὢν καὶ ποιητῆς ἐστὶν ἀψευδῶς, ἐπειδὴ τὰ μὴ ὄντα ἤγαγεν εἰς τὸ εἶναι, καὶ βασιλεὺς φύσει, διότι τῶν γεγονότων οὐδεὶς ἂν ἄρχει δικαιότερον τοῦ πεποιηκότος.
- 101 XXI. Ἐν δὲ τῷ μεθορίῳ τῶν τεσσάρων καὶ πέντε κιόνων, ὅπερ ἐστὶ κυρίως εἰπεῖν πρόναον εἰργόμενον δυσὶν ὑφάσμασι, τῷ μὲν ἔνδον ὃ καλεῖται καταπέτασμα, τῷ δ' ἐκτὸς ὃ προσαγορεύεται κάλυμμα, τὰ λοιπὰ τρία σκευὴ τῶν προειρημένων ἰδρύετο· μέσον μὲν τὸ θυμιατήριον, γῆς καὶ ὕδατος σύμβολον εὐχαριστίας, ἣν ἔνεκα τῶν γινομένων ἀφ' ἑκατέρου προσῆκε ποιεῖσθαι· τὸν γὰρ μέσον ταῦτα
- 102 τοῦ κόσμου τόπον κεκλήρωται· τὴν δὲ λυχνίαν ἐν τοῖς νοτίοις, δι' ἧς αἰνίττεται τὰς τῶν φωσφόρων κινήσεις ἀστέρων· ἥλιος γὰρ καὶ σελήνη καὶ οἱ ἄλλοι πολὺ τῶν βορείων ἀφροστώτες νοτίους ποιοῦνται τὰς περιπολήσεις· ὅθεν ἕξ μὲν κλάδοι, τρεῖς δ' ἑκατέρωθεν, τῆς μέσης λυχνίας ἐκπεφύκασι εἰς
- 103 ἀριθμὸν ἕβδομον· ἐπὶ δὲ πάντων λαμπάδιά τε καὶ λύχνοι ἑπτὰ, σύμβολα τῶν λεγομένων παρὰ τοῖς
- [151] φυσικοῖς ἀνδράσι πλανήτων· ὁ γὰρ ἥλιος, | ὡσπερ ἡ λυχνία, μέσος τῶν ἕξ τεταγμένος ἐν τετάρτῃ χώρᾳ φωσφορεῖ τοῖς ὑπεράνω τρισὶ καὶ τοῖς ὑπ' αὐτὸν ἴσοις, ἀρμοζόμενος τὸ μουσικὸν καὶ θεῖον
- 104 ὡς ἀληθῶς ὄργανον. XXII. ἥ δὲ τράπεζα τίθεται πρὸς τοῖς βορείοις, ἐφ' ἧς ἄρτοι καὶ ἄλες, ἐπειδὴ

MOSES II. 99-104

and made and ordered this universe, and the kingly is called Lord, being that with which He governs what has come into being and rules it steadfastly with justice. For, as He alone really is, He is undoubtedly 100 also the Maker, since He brought into being what was not, and He is in the nature of things King, since none could more justly govern what has been made than the Maker.

XXI. In the space between the four and the five 101 pillars, which may properly be called the vestibule of the temple, and is shut off by two woven screens, the inner and the outer, called respectively the veil and the covering, he set the remaining three of the equipments mentioned above. <sup>a</sup>The altar of incense he placed in the middle, a symbol of the thankfulness for earth and water which should be rendered for the benefits derived from both these, since the mid-position in the universe has been assigned to them. <sup>b</sup>The candlestick he placed at the south, figuring 102 thereby the movements of the luminaries above; for the sun and the moon and the others run their courses in the south far away from the north. And therefore six branches, three on each side, issue from the central candlestick, bringing up the number to seven, and on all these are set seven lamps and candle- 103 bearers, symbols of what the men of science call planets. For the sun, like the candlestick, has the fourth place in the middle of the six and gives light to the three above and the three below it, so tuning to harmony an instrument of music truly divine. XXII. <sup>c</sup>The table is set at the north and has bread 104

<sup>a</sup> See Ex. xxx. 1 f.

<sup>b</sup> See Ex. xxv. 31 ff. Cf. Quis Rerum, 221-225.

<sup>c</sup> See Ex. xxv. 23 ff.

PHILO

τῶν πνευμάτων τὰ βόρεια τροφιμώτατα καὶ διότι ἐξ οὐρανοῦ καὶ γῆς αἱ τροφαί, τοῦ μὲν ὕοντος, τῆς δὲ τὰ σπέρματα ταῖς τῶν ὑδάτων ἐπιρροίαις τελειο-105 γονούσης. οὐρανοῦ δὲ<sup>1</sup> καὶ γῆς παρίδρυνται τὰ σύμβολα, καθάπερ ἔδειξεν ὁ λόγος, τοῦ μὲν οὐρανοῦ ἡ λυχνία, τῶν δὲ περιγείων, ἐξ ὧν αἱ ἀναθυμιάσεις, 106 τὸ ἐτύμως προσαγορευόμενον θυμιατήριον. τὸν δ' ἐν ὑπαίθρῳ βωμὸν εἴωθε καλεῖν θυσιαστήριον, ὡσανεὶ τηρητικὸν καὶ φυλακτικὸν ὄντα θυσιῶν τὸν ἀναλωτικὸν τούτων, αἰνιττόμενος οὐ τὰ μέλη καὶ τὰ μέρη τῶν ἱερουργουμένων, ἅπερ δαπανᾶσθαι 107 φέροντος· εἰ μὲν γὰρ ἀγνώμων καὶ ἄδικος, ἄθνητοι θυσίαι καὶ ἀνίεροι ἱερουργαί καὶ εὐχαὶ παλίμφημοι παντελεῖ φθορὰν ἐνδεχόμεναι· καὶ γὰρ ὅποτε γίνεσθαι δοκοῦσιν, οὐ λύσιν ἀμαρτημάτων, ἀλλ' ὑπό-108 μνησιν ἐργάζονται· εἰ δ' ὁσῖος καὶ δίκαιος, μένει βέβαιος ἡ θυσία, κἂν τὰ κρέα δαπανηθῇ, μᾶλλον δὲ καὶ εἰ τὸ παράπαν μηδὲν προσάγοιτο ἱερεῖον· ἡ γὰρ ἀληθῆς ἱερουργία τίς ἂν εἴη πλὴν ψυχῆς θεοφιλοῦς εὐσέβεια; ἥς τὸ εὐχάριστον ἀθανατί-ζεται καὶ ἀνάγραφτον στηλιτεύεται παρὰ θεῶ συνδιαιωνίζον ἡλίῳ καὶ σελήνῃ καὶ τῷ παντὶ κόσμῳ.

<sup>1</sup> Perhaps, as the German translator, omit δὲ, put a full stop after τροφιμώτατα, and a comma after τελειογονούσης. See note b.

<sup>a</sup> So LXX Lev. xxiv. 7—not in Hebrew.

<sup>b</sup> The punctuation and reading suggested in note 1 certainly make the connexion of thought clearer. If the text is kept, I take the meaning to be that the table with the food upon it represents heaven and earth which send the food, and therefore it is fitting that the other two symbols of heaven and earth should be set beside it.

MOSES II. 104-108

and salt <sup>a</sup> on it, as the north winds are those which most provide us with food, and food comes from heaven and earth, the one sending rain, the other bringing the seeds to their fullness when watered by the showers.<sup>b</sup> In a line with the table are set <sup>105</sup> the symbols of heaven and earth, as our account has shewn, heaven being signified by the candlestick, earth and its parts, from which rise the vapours, by what is appropriately called the vapour-keeper <sup>c</sup> or altar of incense. The great altar in the open court <sup>106</sup> he usually calls by a name which means sacrifice-keeper, and when he thus speaks of the altar which destroys sacrifices as their keeper and guardian he alludes not to the parts and limbs of the victims, whose nature is to be consumed by fire, but to the intention of the offerer. For, if the worshipper is <sup>107</sup> without kindly feeling or justice, the sacrifices are no sacrifices, the consecrated oblation is desecrated, the prayers are words of ill omen with utter destruction waiting upon them. For, when to outward appearance they are offered, it is not a remission but a reminder of past sins which they effect. But, if <sup>108</sup> he is pure of heart and just, the sacrifice stands firm, though the flesh is consumed, or rather, even if no victim at all is brought to the altar. For the true oblation, what else can it be but the devotion of a soul which is dear to God? The thank-offering of such a soul receives immortality, and is inscribed in the records of God, sharing the eternal life of the sun and moon and the whole universe.

<sup>a</sup> Philo does not expressly derive the -τηριον of θυμιατήριον from τηρέιν. But as ἐτύμως implies etymological derivation, and in the next words he gives this derivation for θυσιαστήριον, it seems probable that he means it to apply to both words.

PHILO

- 109 XXIII. Τούτοις ἐξῆς ἱερὰν ἐσθήτα κατεσκευάζεν ὁ τεχνίτης τῷ μέλλοντι ἀρχιερεῖ καθίστασθαι παγκάλην καὶ θαυμασιωτάτην ἔχουσαν ἐν τοῖς ὑφάσμασι πλοκήν. τὰ δ' ὕψη διττὰ ἦν, τὸ μὲν
- 110 ὑποδύτης, τὸ δὲ προσαγορευόμενον ἐπωμῖς. ὁ μὲν οὖν ὑποδύτης ἀμιγεστέρας ἰδέας· ὅλος γὰρ ὑακίνθινος, ἔξω τῶν κατωτάτω καὶ πρὸς ἐσχατίας μερῶν, ταῦτα γὰρ ἐποικίλλετο χρυσοῖς ροῖσκόις καὶ
- 111 κώδωσι καὶ ἀνθίνοις πλέγμασιν. ἡ δ' ἐπωμῖς, ἐκπρεπέστατον ἔργον καὶ τεχνικώτατον, ἐπιστήμη τελειοτάτη κατεσκευάζετο τοῖς προειρημένοις γένεσιν, ὑακίνθω καὶ πορφύρᾳ καὶ βύσσῳ καὶ κοκκίνῳ, συγκαταπλεκομένου χρυσοῦ· πέταλα γὰρ εἰς λεπτὰς τρίχας κατατμηθέντα πᾶσι τοῖς νήμασι συν-
- 112 υφαίνετο. λίθοι δ' ἐπὶ τῶν ἀκρωμίῳν ἐνηρμόζοντο [152] σμαράγδου πολυτελοῦς δύο τιμαλφέστατοι, | οἷς τὰ ὀνόματα τῶν φυλάρχων ἐξ καθ' ἑκάτερον ἐνεχαράττετο, δώδεκα τὰ σύμπαντα· καὶ κατὰ τὸ στήθος ἄλλοι λίθοι πολυτελεῖς δώδεκα διαφέροντες ταῖς χροαῖς, σφραγῖσιν ἐοικότες, ἐκ τριῶν τετραστοιχεί· οὗτοι δ' ἐνηρμόζοντο τῷ προσαγορευομένῳ
- 113 λογεῖῳ. τὸ δὲ λογεῖον τετράγωνον διπλοῦν κατεσκευάζετο ὡσανεὶ βάσις, ἵνα δύο ἀρετὰς ἀγαματοφορῇ, δῆλωσίν τε καὶ ἀλήθειαν· ὅλον δ' ἀλυσειδίῳ χρυσοῖς ἀνήρητο πρὸς τὴν ἐπωμίδα, σφιγγόμενον ἐξ αὐτῆς, ὑπὲρ τοῦ μὴ χαλαῶσθαι.
- 114 χρυσοῦν δὲ πέταλον ὡσανεὶ στέφανος ἐδημιουργεῖτο

<sup>a</sup> For §§ 109-116 see Ex. xxviii.

<sup>b</sup> Lit. "shoulder-covering." I have retained the familiar and neutral word "ephod," by some supposed to be a kind of waistcoat, by others an apron. See note in Driver's Exodus, p. 312, or article in Biblical Encyclopaedia.

MOSES II. 109-114

XXIII. <sup>a</sup> Next after these, the master prepared for 109 the future high priest a vesture, the fabric of which had a texture of great and marvellous beauty. It consisted of two garments, one of which he calls the robe and the other the ephod.<sup>b</sup> The robe was 110 of a comparatively uniform make, for it was all of the dark red colour, except at the lowest extremities, where it was variegated with golden pomegranates and bells and intertwined flowers. The ephod, a 111 work of special magnificence and artistry, was wrought with perfect knowledge in the kinds of materials mentioned above, namely dark red and purple and bright white and scarlet, with gold thread intertwined. For gold leaf cut into fine threads was woven with all the yarn. On the shoulder-tops 112 were fitted two highly precious stones of the costly emerald kind, and on them were graven the names of the patriarchs, six for each shoulder, twelve in all.
On the breast were twelve other costly stones of different colours, like seals, in four rows of three each.
These were fitted into what he calls the "place of reason."<sup>c</sup> This was made four-square and doubled, 113 forming a ground to enshrine the two virtues, clear showing and truth.<sup>d</sup> The whole was attached by golden chainlets to the ephod, fastened strongly to it so as not to come loose. A piece of gold plate, 114 too, was wrought into the form of a crown with four

<sup>c</sup> Or "oracle" (LXX λογείον τῶν κρίσεων, Ex. xxviii. 15). But Philo clearly uses the word in the sense given in the translation (see §§ 125 and 128), and the same meaning is given to it De Spec. Leg. i. 87. The E.V. has "breastplate of judgement" though the word translated "breastplate" is said to be rather = "pouch."

<sup>d</sup> The LXX translation of the mysterious words rendered in E.V. as Urim and Thummim. Cf. Leg. All. iii. 142.

PHILO

- τέτταρας ἔχον γλυφὰς ὀνόματος, ὃ μόνοις τοῖς ὄτα καὶ γλῶτταν σοφία κεκαθαρμένοις θέμις ἀκούειν καὶ λέγειν ἐν ἁγίοις, ἄλλω δ' οὐδενὶ τὸ παράπαν 115 οὐδαμοῦ. τετραγράμματον δὲ τοῦνομά φησιν ὁ θεολόγος εἶναι, τάχα που σύμβολα τιθεὶς αὐτὰ τῶν πρώτων ἀριθμῶν, μονάδος καὶ δυάδος καὶ τριάδος καὶ τετράδος, ἐπειδὴ πάντα ἐν τετράδι, σημεῖον καὶ γραμμὴ καὶ ἐπιφάνεια καὶ στερεόν, τὰ μέτρα τῶν συμπάντων, καὶ αἱ κατὰ μουσικὴν ἄρισται συμ-φωναίαι, ἧ τε διὰ τεσσάρων ἐν ἐπιτρίτῳ λόγῳ καὶ ἧ διὰ πέντε ἐν ἡμιολίῳ καὶ ἧ διὰ πασῶν ἐν διπλασίῳ καὶ ἧ δις διὰ πασῶν ἐν τετραπλασίῳ· ἔχει δὲ καὶ τὰς ἄλλας ἀμυθήτους ἀρετὰς ἢ τετράς, ὧν τὰς πλείστας ἠκριβώσαμεν ἐν τῇ περὶ ἀριθμῶν πραγ-116 ματεία. μίτρα δ' ἦν ὑπ' αὐτῷ, τοῦ μὴ ψαύειν τῆς κεφαλῆς τὸ πέταλον. πρὸς δὲ καὶ κιδάρις κατεσκευάζετο· κιδάρει γὰρ οἱ τῶν ἐξῶν βασιλεῖς ἀντιδιαδήματος εἰώθασι χρῆσθαι.
- 117 XXIV. Τοιαύτη μὲν ἢ τοῦ ἀρχιερέως ἦν ἐσθῆς. ὄν δ' ἔχει λόγον οὐ παρασιωπητέον αὐτῇ τε καὶ τὰ μέρη. ὅλη μὲν δὴ γέγονεν ἀπεικόνισμα καὶ μίμημα τοῦ κόσμου, τὰ δὲ μέρη τῶν καθ' ἕκαστον 118 μερῶν. ἀρκτέον δ' ἀπὸ τοῦ ποδήρου. οὗτος ὁ | [153] χιτῶν σύμπας ἐστὶν ὑακίνθινος, ἀέρος ἐκμαγεῖον· φύσει γὰρ ὁ ἄηρ μέλας καὶ τρόπον τινὰ ποδήρης, ἄνωθεν ἀπὸ τῶν μετὰ σελήνην ἄχρι τῶν γῆς ταθεὶς περάτων, πάντῃ κεχυμένος· ὅθεν καὶ ὁ χιτῶν ἀπὸ

<sup>a</sup> The apparently traditional idea, which appears again in § 132, that the inscription on the πέταλον was the "tetragrammaton" YHVH is not borne out by the LXX ἁγίασμα κυρίου, or the Hebrew and E.V. "Holy (holiness) to the Lord" (Ex. xxviii. 32 (E.V. 36)). Philo has quoted it correctly De Mig. 103.

MOSES II. 114-118

incisions, showing a name which only those whose ears and tongues are purified may hear or speak in the holy place, and no other person, nor in any other place at all. That name has four letters,<sup>a</sup> so says 115 that master learned in divine verities, who, it may be, gives them as symbols of the first numbers, one, two, three and four; since the geometrical categories under which all things fall, point, line, superficies, solid, are all embraced in four. So, too, with the best harmonies in music, the fourth, fifth, octave and double octave intervals, where the ratios are respectively four to three, three to two, two to one and four to one. Four, too, has countless other virtues, most of which I have set forth in detail in my treatise on numbers.<sup>b</sup> Under the crown, to prevent 116 the plate touching the head, was a headband. A turban also was provided, for the turban is regularly worn by eastern monarchs instead of a diadem.

XXIV. <sup>c</sup> Such was the vesture of the high priest. 117 But I must not leave untold its meaning and that of its parts. We have in it as a whole and in its parts a typical representation of the world and its particular parts. Let us begin with the full-length robe. This 118 gown is all of violet, and is thus an image of the air; for the air is naturally black, and so to speak a robe reaching to the feet, since it stretches down from the region below the moon to the ends of the earth, and spreads out everywhere. And, therefore, the

The statement given here is also made by Josephus Bell. Jud. v. 235 (cf. Ant. iii. 178). See too App. pp. 608-609.

<sup>b</sup> Presumably the same as the "special treatise" mentioned in De Op. 52, after enumerating many of the properties of the number. He has also dealt with them in De Plant. 117 ff.

<sup>c</sup> For some notes on and illustration of the symbolism of §§ 117-135 see App. p. 609.

PHILO

- στέρνων ἄχρι ποδῶν περὶ ὅλον τὸ σῶμα κέχυται.
- 119 ἔξ αὐτοῦ δὲ κατὰ τὰ σφυρὰ ροῖσκοι καὶ ἄνθινα καὶ κώδωνές εἰσι· τὰ μὲν ἄνθινα σύμβολον γῆς, ἀνθεὶ γὰρ καὶ βλαστάνει πάντα ἐκ ταύτης· οἱ δὲ ροῖσκοι ὕδατος, παρὰ τὴν ῥύσιν λεχθέντες εὐθυβόλως· οἱ δὲ κώδωνες τῆς ἁρμονίας καὶ συμφωνίας τούτων, οὔτε γὰρ γῆ χωρὶς ὕδατος οὔθ' ὕδωρ ἄνευ τῆς γεώδους οὐσίας αὐταρκες εἰς γένεσιν, ἀλλ' ἡ
- 120 σύνοδος καὶ κρᾶσις ἀμφοῖν. μάρτυς δὲ τοῦ δηλουμένου καὶ ὁ τόπος ἐναργέστατος· ὡς γὰρ ἐν ἐσχάτοις τοῦ ποδήρους οἱ ροῖσκοι καὶ τὰ ἄνθινα καὶ οἱ κώδωνές εἰσιν, οὕτως καὶ τὰ ὦν ἐστὶ σύμβολα τὴν κατωτάτῳ χώρῳ ἔλαχεν ἐν κόσμῳ, γῆ καὶ ὕδωρ, καὶ τῇ τοῦ παντὸς ἁρμονίᾳ συνηχοῦντα τὰς οἰκείας ἐπιδείκνυται δυνάμεις ἐν ὠρισμέναις χρόνων περι-
- 121 ὁδοῖς καὶ τοῖς προσήκουσι καιροῖς. τριῶν μὲν δὴ στοιχείων, ἔξ ὧν τε καὶ ἐν οἷς τὰ θνητὰ καὶ φθαρτὰ γένη πάντα, ἀέρος, ὕδατος, γῆς, ὁ ποδήρης σὺν τοῖς ἀπηρωρημένοις κατὰ τὰ σφυρὰ σύμβολον ἐδείχθη προσηκόντως· ὡς γὰρ ὁ χιτῶν εἰς, καὶ τὰ λεχθέντα τρία στοιχεῖα μιᾶς ἰδέας ἐστίν, ἐπειδὴ τὰ κατωτέρῳ σελήνης ἅπαντα τροπὰς ἔχει καὶ μεταβολάς· καὶ καθάπερ ἐκ τοῦ χιτῶνος ἤρτηνται οἱ τε ροῖσκοι καὶ τὰ ἄνθινα, καὶ ἀπ' ἀέρος τρόπον τινὰ γῆ καὶ ὕδωρ ἐκκρέμανται, τὸ γὰρ ὄχημα τούτων ἐστὶν ἀήρ.
- 122 Τὴν δ' ἐπωμίδα οὐρανοῦ σύμβολον ὁ λόγος εἰκόσι στοχασμοῖς χρώμενος παραστήσει· πρῶτον μὲν γὰρ οἱ ἐπὶ τῶν ἀκρωμίων σμαράγδου δύο λίθοι περι-

---

<sup>a</sup> The stress lies on προσηκόντως; we may see that the 506

MOSES II. 118-122

gown, too, spreads out from the breast to the feet round the whole body. At the ankles there stand 119 out from it pomegranates and flower trimming and bells. The earth is represented by the flowers, for all that flowers and grows comes from the earth; the water by the pomegranates or flowing fruit, so aptly called from their flowing juice; while the bells represent the harmonious alliance of these two, since life cannot be produced by earth without water or by water without the substance of earth, but only by the union and combination of both. Their 120 position testifies most clearly to this explanation. For, just as the pomegranates, the flower trimming and the bells are at the extremities of the long robe, so too what these symbolize, namely earth and water, occupy the lowest place in the universe, and in unison with the harmony of the All display their several powers at fixed revolutions of time and at their proper seasons. This proof that the three 121 elements, earth, water and air, from which come and in which live all mortal and perishable forms of life, are symbolized by the long robe with the appendages at the ankles, is supported<sup>a</sup> by observing that as the gown is one, the three said elements are of a single kind, since all below the moon is alike in its liability to change and alteration, and that, as the pomegranates and flower patterns are fastened to the gown, so too in a sense earth and water are suspended on the air, which acts as their support.

As for the ephod, consideration following what 122 probability suggests will represent it as a symbol of heaven. For first the two circular emerald stones symbolism described above is suitable by the other resemblances pointed out in the last part of the sentence.

PHILO

- φερείς μηνύουσιν, ὡς μὲν οἴονταί τινες, ἀστέρων τοὺς ἡμέρας καὶ νυκτὸς ἡγεμόνας, ἥλιον καὶ σελήνην, ὡς δ' ἂν ἐγγυτέρω τις τῆς ἀληθείας προσερχόμενος εἴποι, τῶν ἡμισφαιρίων ἐκάτερον· ἴσα τε γὰρ ὡς οἱ λίθοι τό τε ὑπὲρ γῆν καὶ ὑπὸ γῆν καὶ οὐδέτερον πέφυκε μειοῦσθαι καὶ συναυξέσθαι 123 καθάπερ σελήνη. συνεπιμαρτυρεῖ δὲ καὶ ἡ χροά· σμαράγδω γὰρ ἔοικεν ἡ τοῦ παντὸς οὐρανοῦ φαν-τασία κατὰ τὴν τῆς ὄψεως προσβολήν. ἀναγκαίως δὲ καὶ καθ' ἐκάτερον τῶν λίθων ἕξ ὀνόματα ἐγγλύ-φεται, διότι καὶ τῶν ἡμισφαιρίων ἐκάτερον δίχα τέμνον τὸν ζωοφόρον ἕξ ἐναπολαμβάνει ζώδια.
 124 ἔπειθ' οἱ κατὰ τὰ στέρνα δώδεκα λίθοι ταῖς χροαῖς οὐχ ὅμοιοι διανεμηθέντες εἰς τέσσαρας στοίχους ἐκ τριῶν τίνος ἐτέρου δείγματ' εἰσὶν ἢ τοῦ ζωδιακοῦ [154] κύκλου; καὶ γὰρ | οὗτος τετραχῆ διανεμηθεὶς ἐκ τριῶν ζωδίων τὰς ἐτησίους ὥρας ἀποτελεῖ, ἔαρ, θέρος, μετόπωρον, χειμῶνα, τροπὰς τέσσαρας, ὧν ἐκάστης ὄρος τρία ζώδια, γνωριζόμενος ταῖς τοῦ ἡλίου περιφοραῖς κατὰ τὸν ἐν ἀριθμοῖς ἀσάλευτον 125 καὶ βεβαιότατον καὶ θεῖον ὄντως λόγον. ὅθεν ἐνηρμόζοντο καὶ τῷ προσαγορευθέντι δεόντως λογεῖω· λόγῳ γὰρ αἱ τροπαὶ καὶ ἐτήσιοι ὥραι τεταγμένῳ καὶ παγίῳ συνίστανται, τὸ παραδοξό-τατον, διὰ τῆς καιρίου μεταβολῆς ἐπιδεικνύμεναι 126 τὴν διαιωνίζουσαν αὐτῶν μονήν. εὖ δ' ἔχει καὶ πάνυ καλῶς τὸ τοῖς χρώμασι τοὺς δώδεκα λίθους διαλλάττειν καὶ μηδένα ὅμοιον εἶναι μηδενί· καὶ γὰρ τῶν ἐν τῷ ζωοφόρῳ ἕκαστον ἀποτελεῖ τι χρῶμα οἰκείον κατὰ τε ἀέρα καὶ γῆν καὶ ὕδωρ καὶ on the shoulder-pieces indicate, as some think, those heavenly bodies which rule the day and night, namely the sun and moon, or, as may be said with a nearer approach to truth, the two hemispheres of the sky. For, just as the stones are equal to each other, so is the hemisphere above to that below the earth, and neither is so constituted as to increase and diminish as does the moon. A similar testimony is given by 123 their colour, for the appearance of the whole heaven as presented to our sight is like the emerald. Six names, too, had to be engraved on each of the stones, since each of the hemispheres also divides the zodiac into two, and appropriates six of the signs. Secondly, the stones at the breast, which are dis- 124 similar in colour, and are distributed into four rows of threes, what else should they signify but the zodiac circle? For that circle, when divided into four parts, constitutes by three signs in each case the seasons of the year—spring, summer, autumn, winter—those four, the transition in each of which is determined by three signs and made known to us by the revolutions of the sun, according to a mathematical law, unshaken, immutable and truly divine. Therefore also they were fitted into what is rightly 125 called the place of reason, for a rational principle, ordered and firmly established, creates the transitions and seasons of the year. And the strangest thing is that it is this seasonal change which demonstrates their age-long permanence. It is an excellent 126 and indeed a splendid point that the twelve stones are of different colours and none of them like to any other. For each of the signs of the zodiac also produces its own particular colouring in the air and

PHILO

- τὰ τούτων παθήματα καὶ ἔτι κατὰ τὰ τῶν ζώων 127 καὶ φυτῶν γένη πάντα. XXV. διπλοῦν δὲ τὸ λογεῖον οὐκ ἀπὸ σκοποῦ· διττὸς γὰρ ὁ λόγος ἔν τε τῷ παντὶ καὶ ἐν ἀνθρώπου φύσει· κατὰ μὲν τὸ πᾶν ὃ τε περὶ τῶν ἀσωμάτων καὶ παραδειγματικῶν ἰδεῶν, ἐξ ὧν ὁ νοητὸς ἐπάγη κόσμος, καὶ ὁ περὶ τῶν ὄρατῶν, ἃ δὴ μιμήματα καὶ ἀπεικονί-σματα τῶν ἰδεῶν ἐκείνων ἐστίν, ἐξ ὧν ὁ αἰσθητὸς οὗτος ἀπετελεῖτο· ἐν ἀνθρώπῳ δ' ὁ μὲν ἐστὶν ἐνδιάθετος, ὁ δὲ προφορικός, (καὶ ὁ μὲν) οἶά τις πηγή, ὁ δὲ γεγωνὸς ἀπ' ἐκείνου ῥέων· καὶ τοῦ μὲν ἐστὶ χώρα τὸ ἡγεμονικόν, τοῦ δὲ κατὰ προφορὰν γλῶττα καὶ στόμα καὶ ἡ ἄλλη πᾶσα φωνῆς ὀρ-128 γανοποιία. σχῆμα δ' ἀπένειμεν ὁ τεχνίτης τετρά-γωνον τῷ λογεῖῳ πάνυ καλῶς αἰνιττόμενος, ὡς χρῆ καὶ τὸν τῆς φύσεως λόγον καὶ τὸν τοῦ ἀνθρώπου βεβηκέναι πάντῃ καὶ κατὰ μηδ' ὅτιοῦν κραδαίνεσθαι. παρὸ καὶ τὰς εἰρημένας δύο ἀρετὰς προσεκλήρωσεν αὐτῷ, δήλωσιν τε καὶ ἀλήθειαν· ὃ τε γὰρ τῆς φύσεως λόγος ἀληθῆς καὶ δηλωτικὸς πάντων ὃ τε τοῦ σοφοῦ μιμούμενος ἐκείνον ὀφείλει προσηκόντως ἀψευδέστατός τε εἶναι τιμῶν ἀλήθειαν καὶ μηδὲν φθόνῳ συσκιάζειν, ὧν ἡ μήνυσις 129 ὠφελήσει τοὺς ἀναδίδαχθέντας. οὐ μὴν ἀλλὰ καὶ δυσὶ λόγοις τοῖς καθ' ἕκαστον ἡμῶν, τῷ τε προφορικῷ καὶ ἐνδιαθέτῳ, δύο ἀρετὰς ἀπένειμεν οἰκείας, τῷ μὲν προφορικῷ δήλωσιν, τῷ δὲ κατὰ διάνοιαν ἀλήθειαν· ἀρμόζει γὰρ διανοία μὲν μηδὲν παρα-510

MOSES II. 126-129

earth and water and their phases, and also in the different kinds of animals and plants. XXV.

There is a point, too, in the reason-seat being doubled, 127 for the rational principle is twofold as well in the universe as in human nature. In the universe we find it in one form dealing with the incorporeal and archetypal ideas from which the intelligible world was framed, and in another with the visible objects which are the copies and likenesses of those ideas and out of which this sensible world was produced. With man, in one form it resides within, in the other it passes out from him in utterance. The former is like a spring, and is the source from which the latter, the spoken, flows. The inward is located in the dominant mind, the outward in the tongue and mouth and the rest of the vocal organism. The 128 master did well also in assigning a four-square shape to the reason-seat, thereby shewing in a figure that the rational principle, both in nature and in man, must everywhere stand firm and never be shaken in any respect at all; and, therefore, he allotted to it the two above-named virtues, clear shewing and truth. For the rational principle in nature is true, and sets forth all things clearly, and, in the wise man, being a copy of the other, has as its bounden duty to honour truth with absolute freedom from falsehood, and not keep dark through jealousy anything the disclosure of which will benefit those who hear its lesson. At the same time, as in each of us, 129 reason has two forms, the outward of utterance and the inward of thought, he gave them each one of the two virtues as its special property; to utterance clear shewing, to the thinking mind truth. For it is the duty of the thinking faculty to admit no false-

PHILO

- δέχεσθαι ψεῦδος, ἐρμηνεία δὲ μηδὲν ἐμποδίζειν τῶν 130 εἰς τὴν ἀκριβεστάτην δῆλωσιν. λόγου δὲ οὐδὲν ὄφελος τὰ καλὰ καὶ σπουδαῖα σεμνηγοροῦντος, ᾧ μὴ πρόσεστιν οἰκείων ἀκολουθία πράξεων· ὅθεν τὸ λογέιον ἤρτησεν ἐκ τῆς ἐπωμίδος, ἵνα μὴ χαλαῖται, [155] τὸν λόγον οὐ δικαίωσας | ἔργων ἀπεξεῦχθαι· τὸν γὰρ ὦμον ἐνεργείας καὶ πράξεως ποιεῖται σύμβολον.
- 131 XXVI. Ἄ μὲν οὖν αἰνίττεται διὰ τῆς ἱερᾶς ἐσθῆτος, ἐστὶ τοιαῦτα. κίδαριν δὲ ἀντὶ διαδήματος ἐπιτίθησι τῇ κεφαλῇ δικαίων τὸν ἱερωμένον τῷ θεῷ, καθ' ὃν χρόνον ἱεράται, προφέρειν ἀπάντων 132 καὶ μὴ μόνον ἰδιωτῶν ἀλλὰ καὶ βασιλέων. ὑπεράνω δὲ τὸ χρυσοῦν ἐστὶ πέταλον, ᾧ τῶν τεττάρων αἱ γλυφαὶ γραμμάτων ἐνεσφραγίσθησαν, ἐξ ὧν ὄνομα τοῦ ὄντος φασὶ μὴνύεσθαι, ὡς οὐχ οἶόν τε ὃν ἄνευ κατακλήσεως θεοῦ συστήναί τι τῶν ὄντων· ἀρμονία γὰρ πάντων ἐστὶν ἡ ἀγαθότης καὶ ἕλεως δύναμις 133 αὐτοῦ. τοῦτον τὸν τρόπον ὁ ἀρχιερεὺς διακοσμηθεὶς στέλλεται πρὸς τὰς ἱερουργίας, ἵν', ὅταν εἰσὶ τὰς πατρίους εὐχὰς τε καὶ θυσίας ποιη-σόμενος, συνεισέρχεται πᾶς ὁ κόσμος αὐτῷ δι' ὧν ἐπιφέρεται μιμημάτων<sup>1</sup> ἀέρος τὸν ποδήρη, ὕδατος τὸν ροῖσκον, γῆς τὸ ἄνθινον, πυρὸς τὸ κόκκινον, οὐρανοῦ τὴν ἐπωμίδα, καὶ κατ' εἶδος τοῖν δυοῖν ἡμισφαιρίοις τοὺς ἐπὶ τῶν ἀκρωμίων σμαράγδους περιφερεῖς, ἐφ' ὧν καθ' ἑκάτερον γλυφαὶ ἕξ, τοῦ ζωοφόρου τοὺς ἐπὶ τῶν στέρνων δώδεκα λίθους ἐκ

<sup>1</sup> So mss. or μίμημα. Cohn corrects to μιμήματα, wrongly, I think. The grammatical usage of relative attraction for διὰ μιμημάτων & ἐπιφέρεται justifies, if it does not require, the attraction of the noun to the case of the relative.

MOSES II. 129-133

hood, and of the language faculty to give free play to all that helps to shew facts clearly with the utmost exactness. Yet reason, as seen in either of these 130 faculties, is of no value, however admirable and excellent are its lofty pronouncements, unless followed by deeds in accordance with it. And, therefore, since in his judgement speech and thought should never be separated from actions, he fastened the reason-seat to the ephod or shoulder-piece so that it should not come loose. For he regards the shoulder as the symbol of deeds and activity.

XXVI. Such are the ideas which he suggests under 131 the figure of the sacred vesture ; but, in setting a turban on the priest's head, instead of a diadem, he expresses his judgement that he who is consecrated to God is superior when he acts as a priest to all others, not only the ordinary laymen, but even kings. Above the turban is the golden plate on which the 132 graven shapes of four letters, indicating, as we are told, the name of the Self-Existent, are impressed, meaning that it is impossible for anything that is to subsist without invocation of Him ; for it is His goodness and gracious power which join and compact all things.

Thus is the high priest 133 arrayed when he sets forth to his holy duties, in order that when he enters to offer the ancestral prayers and sacrifices there may enter with him the whole universe, as signified in the types of it which he brings upon his person, the long robe a copy of the air, the pomegranate of water, the flower trimming of earth, the scarlet of fire, the ephod of heaven, the circular emeralds on the shoulder-tops with the six engravings in each of the two hemispheres which they resemble in form, the twelve stones on the

PHILO

- τριῶν κατὰ τέτταρας στοίχους, τοῦ συνέχοντος καὶ 134 διοικούντος τὰ σύμπαντα τὸ λογεῖον. ἀναγκαῖον γὰρ ἦν τὸν ἱερωμένον τῷ τοῦ κόσμου πατρὶ παρα-κλήτῳ χρῆσθαι τελειοτάτῳ τὴν ἀρετὴν υἱῷ πρὸς τε ἀμνηστίαν ἀμαρτημάτων καὶ χορηγίαν ἀφθονω-135 τάτων ἀγαθῶν. ἴσως μέντοι καὶ προδιδάσκει τὸν τοῦ θεοῦ θεραπευτήν, εἰ καὶ μὴ τοῦ κοσμοποιῦ δυνατόν, ἀλλὰ τοῦ γε κόσμου διηνεκῶς ἄξιον εἶναι πειρᾶσθαι, οὗ τὸ μίμημα ἐνδύομενος ὀφείλει τῇ διανοίᾳ τὸ παράδειγμα εὐθὺς ἀγαλματοφορῶν αὐτὸς τρόπον τινὰ πρὸς τὴν τοῦ κόσμου φύσιν ἐξ ἀνθρώπου μεθηρμόσθαι καί, εἰ θέμις εἰπεῖν—θέμις δὲ ἀψευδεῖν περὶ ἀληθείας λέγοντα—, βραχὺς κόσμος εἶναι.
- 136 XXVII. Τῶν δὲ προπυλαίων ἔξω παρὰ ταῖς εἰσόδοις λουτήρ ἐστι χαλκοῦς, οὐκ ἄργον ὕλην λαβόντος τοῦ τεχνίτου πρὸς τὴν κατασκευὴν, ὅπερ φιλεῖ γίνεσθαι, σκευὴ δ' ἐπιμελῶς δημιουργηθέντα πρὸς ἑτέραν χρεῖαν, ἃ μετὰ σπουδῆς καὶ φιλοτιμίας πάσης αἱ γυναῖκες εἰσήνεγκαν ἀμιλλώμεναι τοῖς ἀνδράσι πρὸς εὐσέβειαν, ἀγώνισμα καλὸν ἄρασθαι διανοηθεῖσαι καὶ καθ' ὅσον δυνάμειος εἶχον σπου-137 κάσασαι μὴ ἀπολειφθῆναι τῆς ἐκείνων ὀσιότητος· [156] κάτοπτρα γάρ, οἷς εὐμορφίαν | εἰώθασι δια-κοσμεῖσθαι, μηδενὸς προστάξαντος, αὐτοκελεύστῳ προθυμίᾳ, σωφροσύνης καὶ τῆς περὶ γάμον ἀγνείας καὶ τί γὰρ ἄλλ' ἢ ψυχικοῦ κάλλους ἀπαρχὴν πρε-138 πωδεστάτην ἀπήρξαντο. ταῦτ' ἔδοξε τῷ τεχνίτῃ

---

<sup>a</sup> λόγου must be understood with τοῦ συνέχοντος, if indeed it has not fallen out of the text.

MOSES II. 133-138

breast in four rows of threes of the zodiac, the reason-seat of that Reason<sup>a</sup> which holds together and administers all things. For he who has been con- 134 secrated to the Father of the world must needs have that Father's Son<sup>b</sup> with all His fullness of excellence to plead his cause, that sins may be remembered no more and good gifts showered in rich abundance.
Perhaps, too, he is preparing the servant of God to 135 learn the lesson, that, if it be beyond him to be worthy of the world's Maker, he should try to be throughout worthy of the world. For, as he wears a vesture which represents the world, his first duty is to carry the pattern enshrined in his heart, and so be in a sense transformed from a man into the nature of the world; and, if one may dare to say so—and in speaking of truth one may well dare to state the truth—be himself a little world, a microcosm.

XXVII. <sup>c</sup> Outside the propylaeum, at the entrance, 136 there was a brazen laver, for the making of which the master did not take unworked material, as is usually done, but chattels already elaborately wrought for another purpose. These the women brought, filled with fervent zeal, rivalling the men in piety, resolved to win the prize of high excellence, and eager to use every power that they had that they might not be outstripped by them in holiness. For, with spont- 137 aneous ardour at no other bidding than their own, they gave the mirrors which they used in adorning their comely persons, a truly fitting firstfruit offering of their modesty and chastity in marriage, and in fact of their beauty of soul. These the master thought 138

<sup>b</sup> The Son here is of course the World.

<sup>c</sup> For §§ 136-140 see Ex. xxxviii. 26, 27 (E.V. 8). The incident has been treated briefly in the same way De Mig. 98.

PHILO

- λαβόντι χωνεῦσαι καὶ μηδὲν ἀπ' αὐτῶν ἕτερον ἢ τὸν λουτήρα κατασκευάσασθαι, περιρραντηρίοις ὅπως οἱ μέλλοντες εἰς τὸν νεῶν εἰσιεῖναι ἱερεῖς ἐπὶ τῷ τὰς διατεταγμένας ὑπουργεῖν λειτουργίας χρῶνται πόδας μάλιστα καὶ χεῖρας ἀπονιπτόμενοι—σύμβολον ἀνυπαιτίου ζωῆς καὶ βίου καθαρεύοντος ἐν πράξεσιν ἐπαινεταῖς, οὐ τὴν τραχείαν κακίας ὁδὸν ἢ κυριώτερον εἰπεῖν ἀνοδίαν ἀλλὰ
- 139 τὴν δι' ἀρετῆς λεωφόρον ἀπευθύνοντος—. “ ὑπομιμνησκέσθω μέντοι ” φησί “ καὶ ὁ μέλλων περιρραίνεσθαι, ὅτι τοῦδε τοῦ σκεύους ἢ ὕλη κάτοπτρα ἦν, ἵνα καὶ αὐτὸς οἶα πρὸς κάτοπτρον ἀνγάζη τὸν ἴδιον νοῦν καί, εἴ τι ὑποφαίνοιτο αἰσχος ἐξ ἀλόγου πάθους ἢ παρὰ φύσιν ἐπαιρούσης καὶ μετεωριζούσης ἡδονῆς ἢ στελλούσης ἔμπαλιν λύπης καὶ καθαιρούσης ἢ ἀποστρέφοντος καὶ ἀποκλίνοντος τὴν ἐπ' εὐθείας ὁρμὴν φόβου ἢ τῆς ἐπιθυμίας πρὸς τὰ μὴ παρόντα ἐλκούσης καὶ ἀποτεινούσης βία, τοῦτο θεραπεύη τε καὶ ἰᾶται τοῦ γνησίου καὶ ἀνόθου
- 140 μεταποιούμενος κάλλους· τὸ μὲν γὰρ τοῦ σώματος ἐν συμμετρίᾳ μερῶν εὐχροία τε καὶ εὐσαρκία κείται, βραχὺν τῆς ἀκμῆς ἔχον καιρόν, τὸ δὲ τῆς διανοίας ἐν ἀρμονίᾳ δογμάτων καὶ ἀρετῶν συμφωνία, μὴ χρόνου μήκει μαραινόμενον, ἀλλ' ἐφ' ὅσον ἐγχρονίζει καινούμενον καὶ νεάζον, χρώματι διαπρεπεῖ κεκοσμημένον ἀληθείας καὶ ὁμολογίας ἔργων πρὸς λόγους καὶ πρὸς ἔργα λόγων καὶ ἔτι βουλευμάτων πρὸς ἑκάτερα.”
- 141 XXVIII. Διδαχθέντι δ' αὐτῷ τὰ παραδείγματα τῆς ἱερᾶς σκηνῆς καὶ ἀναδιδάξαντι τοὺς διανοία ὀξεῖς καὶ εὐφυῶς ἔχοντας πρὸς ἀνάληψιν καὶ

MOSES II. 138-141

good to take, and, after melting them down, construct therewith the laver and nothing else, to serve for lustration to priests who should enter the temple to perform the appointed rites, particularly for washing the hands and feet ; a symbol, this, of a blameless life, of years of cleanliness employed in laudable actions, and in straight travelling, not on the rough road or more properly pathless waste of vice, but on the smooth high road through virtue's land. Let him, 139 he means, who shall be purified with water, bethink him that the mirrors were the material of this vessel, to the end that he himself may behold his own mind as in a mirror ; and, if some ugly spot appear of unreasoning passion, either of pleasure, uplifting and raising him to heights which nature forbids, or of its converse pain, making him shrink and pulling him down, or of fear, diverting and distorting the straight course to which his face was set, or of desire, pulling and dragging him perforce to what he has not got, then he may salve and heal the sore and hope to gain the beauty which is genuine and unalloyed. For beauty of body 140 lies in well-proportioned parts, in a fine complexion and good condition of flesh, and short is the season of its bloom. But beauty of mind lies in harmony of creed, in concert of virtues. The passing of time cannot wither it, and, as its years lengthen, it ever renews its youth, adorned with the lustrous hue of truth and of consistency of deeds with words and words with deeds, and further of thoughts and intentions with both.

XXVIII. When he had been taught the patterns 141 of the holy tabernacle, and had passed on the lesson to those who were of quick understanding and happily gifted to undertake and complete the works in which

PHILO

- τελείωσιν ἔργων, ἅπερ ἀναγκαίως εἶχε δημιουργηθῆναι, κατὰ τὸ εἰκὸς ἱεροῦ κατασκευασθέντος ἔδει καὶ ἱερεῖς τοὺς ἐπιτηδειοτάτους αἰρεθῆναι τε καὶ προμαθεῖν, ὃν τρόπον τὰς θυσίας ἀνάγειν τε
- 142 καὶ ἱερουργεῖν προσῆκε. τὸν μὲν οὖν ἀδελφὸν ἐξ ἀπάντων ἐπικρίνας ἀριστίνδην ἀρχιερέα, τοὺς δ' ἐκείνου παῖδας ἱερεῖς ἐχειροτόνει, προνομίαν οὐ τῷ οἰκείῳ γένει διδούς, ἀλλ' εὐσεβείᾳ καὶ ὁσιότητι, ἃς ἐνεύρα τοῖς ἀνδράσιν ὑπούσας. σαφῆς δὲ πίστις· οὐδέτερον υἱὸν—δύο γὰρ ἦσαν αὐτῷ—τούτου τοῦ γέρως ἠξίωσεν, ἀναγκαίως ἂν ἀμφοτέρους ἐλό-
- 143 μενος, εἴ τινα τιμὴν ἔνεμε τῷ φιλοικείῳ. καθίστη δὲ μετὰ τῆς ἅπαντος τοῦ ἔθνους γνώμης, ὡς τὰ
- [157] λόγια ὑφηγεῖτο, καινότατον τρόπον καὶ | ἄξιον ἱστορηθῆναι· λούει τὸ πρῶτον αὐτοὺς ὕδατι πηγῆς τῷ καθαρωτάτῳ καὶ ζωτικωτάτῳ κᾶπειτα τὰς ἱεράς ἀναδίδωσιν ἐσθῆτας, τῷ μὲν ἀδελφῷ τὸν ποδήρη καὶ τὴν ἐπωμίδα οἰονεὶ θώρακα, τὸ παμποιίκλον ὕφασμα καὶ μίμημα τοῦ παντός, τοῖς δ' ἀδελφιδοῖς χιτῶνας λινοῦς, ζῶνας τε καὶ περισκελῆ
- 144 πᾶσι· τὰς μὲν, ὅπως ἀνεμπόδιστοι καὶ ἐτοιμότεροι πρὸς τὰς ἱεράς ὑπουργίας ᾧσι, σφιγγομένων τοὺς ἀνειμένους κόλπους τῶν χιτῶνων, τὰ δ', ὅπως μηδὲν ὦν κρύπτεσθαι θέμις προφαίνεται, καὶ μάλιστ' ἀνερχομένων ἐπὶ τὸν βωμὸν ἢ κατιόντων ἄνωθεν καὶ πάντα δρώντων μετὰ σπουδῆς καὶ
- 145 τάχους· εἰ γὰρ μὴ οὕτως ἀκριβῆς γεγένητο ἡ στόλισις διὰ τὴν τοῦ μέλλοντος ἀδήλου προφυλακῆν, <sup>a</sup> For §§ 143-152 see Ex. xxix., Lev. viii.

MOSES II. 141-145

their handicraft was necessary, the construction of the sacred fabric followed in natural course. The next step needed was that the most suitable persons should be chosen as priests, and learn in good time how they should proceed to bring the offerings to the altar and perform the holy rites. Accordingly, he selected<sup>142</sup> out of the whole number his brother as high priest on his merits, and appointed that brother's sons as priests, and in this he was not giving precedence to his own family but to the piety and holiness which he observed in their characters. This is clearly shewn by the following fact. Neither of his sons, of whom he had two, did he judge worthy of this distinction, though he would surely have chosen both if he had attributed any value to family affection. <sup>a</sup>The installation was made with the consent of the<sup>143</sup> whole nation, and, followed the directions laid down by the oracles, in a wholly new manner which deserves to be recorded. First he washed them with the purest and freshest spring water, then he put on them the sacred garments; on his brother the vesture, woven with its manifold workmanship to represent the universe, that is the long robe and the ephod in the shape of a breastplate; on his nephews linen tunics, and on all three girdles and breeches. The object of the girdles was to keep them<sup>144</sup> unhampered and readier for the holy ministry, by tightening the loose folds of the tunics; of the breeches to prevent anything being visible which decency requires to be concealed, particularly when they were going up to the altar or coming down from above and moving quickly and rapidly in all their operations. For, if their dress had not been arranged so carefully,<sup>145</sup> as a precaution against unforeseen events, they would

PHILO

κἄν ἔνεκα τῆς συντόνου περὶ τὰς λειτουργίας ὀξύτητος ἀπεγυμνοῦτο τὸν προσήκοντα ἱεροῖς καὶ ἱερωμένοις κόσμον φυλάττειν ἀδυνατοῦντες.

- 146 XXIX. ὡς δὲ ταῖς ἐσθήσεσιν ἤσκησεν αὐτούς, χρίσματος εὐωδεστάτου λαβών, ὃ μυρρισηκῆ τέχνη κατειργάσθη, τὰ ἐν ὑπαίθρῳ πρῶτα, τὸν τε βωμὸν καὶ τὸν λουτήρα, κατέχριεν ἐπιρραίνων ἐπτάκις, ἔπειτα τὴν σκηνὴν καὶ τῶν ἱερῶν σκευῶν ἕκαστον, τὴν κιβωτόν, τὴν λυχνίαν, τὸ θυμιατήριον, τὴν τράπεζαν, τὰ σπονδεῖα, τὰς φιάλας, τὰ ἄλλα ὅσα πρὸς θυσίας ἀναγκαῖα καὶ χρήσιμα, καὶ τελευταῖον προσαγαγὼν τὸν ἀρχιερέα πολλῶ λίπει τὴν κεφαλὴν 147 ἀλείφει. ταῦτ' ἐπιτελέσας εὐαγῶς ἀχθῆναι κελεύει μόσχον καὶ κριοὺς δύο· τὸν μὲν, ἵνα θύσῃ περὶ ἀφέσεως ἁμαρτημάτων, αἰνιττόμενος ὅτι παντὶ γενητῶ, κἄν σπουδαῖον ἦ, παρόσον ἦλθεν εἰς γένεσιν, συμφυῆς τὸ ἁμαρτάνειν ἐστίν, ὑπὲρ οὗ τὸ θεῖον εὐχαῖς καὶ θυσίαις ἀναγκαῖον ἐξευμενίζεσθαι, 148 μὴ διακινηθὲν ἐπιθείτο· τῶν δὲ κριῶν τὸν μὲν ἕτερον εἰς ὀλοκαύτωμα εὐχαριστήριον τῆς τῶν ὄλων διοικήσεως, ἧς κατὰ τὸ ἐπιβάλλον ἕκαστω μέρος μέτεστι καρπουμένῳ τὴν ἀπὸ τῶν στοιχείων ὠφέλειαν, γῆς πρὸς οἴκησιν καὶ τὰς ἐξ αὐτῆς τροφάς, ὕδατος πρὸς ποτὸν καὶ λουτρά καὶ πλουῖν, ἀέρος πρὸς ἀναπνοὴν καὶ τὰς διὰ τῶν αἰσθήσεων ἀντιλήψεις—ἐπειδὴ πασῶν ἀῆρ ὄργανον—καὶ ἔτι τὰς ἔτησίους ὥρας, πυρὸς τοῦ μὲν χρειώδους πρὸς τὰ ἐψόμενα καὶ θερμαινόμενα, τοῦ δὲ οὐρανίου πρὸς 149 αὐγὴν καὶ τὰ ὄρατὰ πάντα· τὸν δ' ἕτερον εἰς τὴν 520

MOSES II. 145-149

in their eagerness to carry out their duties with expedition reveal their nakedness and be unable to preserve the decency befitting consecrated places and persons. XXIX. When he had attired them in these 146 vestments, he took some very fragrant ointment which was compounded by the perfumer's art, and applied it first to what stood in the open court, namely the great altar and the laver, sprinkling it on them seven times, then to the tabernacle and each of the sacred chattels, the ark, the candlestick, the altar of incense, the table, the libation cups or bowls, the vials, and everything else which was necessary or useful in sacrifices ; and finally, coming to the high priest, he anointed him on his head plentifully with the unguent. Having performed all this religiously, he ordered a 147 calf and two rams to be brought. The calf he purposed to offer to gain remission of sins, showing by this figure that sin is congenital to every created being, even the best, just because they are created, and this sin requires prayers and sacrifices to propitiate the Deity, lest His wrath be roused and visited upon them. Of the rams, one he offered as a whole 148 burnt offering in thanksgiving for His ordering of the whole, that gift which each of us shares according to the part allotted through the benefits which he receives from the elements : from earth, for habitation and the food which it affords ; from water, for drinking and cleansing and voyaging ; from air, for breathing and perception through the senses, all of which operate by means of air, which also gives us the seasons of the year ; from the fire of common use, for cooking and heating, and from the heavenly variety for light-giving and all visibility. The other ram he 149

PHILO

τῶν ιερωμένων διὰ καθάρσεως ἀγνευτικῆς παν-τέλειαν, ὃν ἐτύμως “τελειώσεως” ἐκάλεσεν, ἐπειδὴ τὰς ἀρμοττοῦσας θεραπευταῖς καὶ λειτουργοῖς θεοῦ 150 τελετὰς ἔμελλον ἱεροφαντεῖσθαι. τοῦ δ’ αἵματος αὐτοῦ τὸ μὲν ἐν κύκλῳ τοῦ βωμοῦ σπένδει λαβών, τὸ δὲ φιάλην ὑποσχῶν δέχεται καὶ ἀπὸ τούτου τρία μέρη τοῦ σώματος χρίει τῶν τελουμένων ἱερέων, [158] οὓς ἄκρον, ἄκραν χεῖρα, ποδὸς ἄκρον, | δεξιὰ τὰ σύμπαντα, αἰνιττόμενος ὅτι δεῖ τὸν τέλειον καὶ λόγῳ καὶ ἔργῳ καὶ βίῳ παντὶ καθαρεύειν· λόγον μὲν γὰρ ἀκοῇ δικάζει, χεῖρ δ’ ἔργου σύμβολον, διεξόδου 151 δὲ τῆς περὶ τὸν βίον πούς. ἐπεὶ δ’ ἕκαστον αὐτῶν ἄκρον τε καὶ δεξιόν, ὑπονοητέον δηλοῦσθαι τὴν ἐν ἑκάστοις ἐπίδοσιν μετὰ δεξιότητος, ἐφιεμένην τῆς ἄκρας εὐδαιμονίας καὶ τοῦ τέλους, ἐφ’ ὃ σπεύδειν ἀναγκαῖον καὶ τὰς πράξεις ἀπάσας ἀναφέρειν στοχαζομένους ὥσπερ ἐν ταῖς τοξείαις σκοποῦ, τοῦ 152 περὶ τὸν βίον. XXX. πάλαι μὲν οὖν ἱερείου ἑνός, ὃ προσηγορεύετο “τελειώσεως,” ἀκράτῳ αἵματι τὰ λεχθέντα τρία μέρη κατέχριε τῶν ἱερέων. αὐθις δ’ ἐκ τοῦ παρὰ τῷ βωμῷ λαβών, ὅπερ ἐξ ἀπάντων ἦν τῶν τεθυμένων, καὶ τοῦ λεχθέντος χρίσματος, ὃ μυρεψοὶ κατεσκεύασαν, ἀναμίξας τὸ ἔλαιον τῷ αἵματι τοῦ κράματος τοῖς ἱερεῦσι καὶ ταῖς ἐσθήσεσιν αὐτῶν ἐπέρραινε, βουλόμενος αὐτοὺς μὴ μόνον τῆς ἕξω καὶ ἐν ὑπαίθρῳ μεταλαχεῖν ἀγνείας, ἀλλὰ καὶ τῆς ἐν ἀδύτοις, ἐπειδὴ καὶ ἔνδον 522

MOSES II. 149-152

offered on behalf of those who were consecrated by the sanctifying purification for their full perfection, and accordingly called it the ram of "fulfilment," from the full rites befitting the servants and ministers of God into which they were to be initiated. He then 150 took its blood and poured part of it round the altar. The rest he received in a vial which he held underneath, and smeared it on three parts of the bodies of those who were being admitted to the priesthood, on the extremity of the ear, the extremity of the hand, the extremity of the foot, in all these on the right side. In this figure, he indicated that the fully-consecrated must be pure in words and actions and in his whole life ; for words are judged by the hearing, the hand is a symbol of action, and the foot of the pilgrimage of life. And, as in each case the part 151 smeared is the extreme end and on the right-hand side, we must suppose the truth indicated to be that improvement in all things needs a dexterous spirit, and seeks to reach the extreme of happiness, and the end to which we must press and refer all our actions, aiming our shafts, like archers, at the target of life. XXX. His first step, then, is to smear the unmixed 152 blood of the single victim called the ram of fulfilment on the three parts of the priests' bodies named above. After this, he took some of the blood at the altar, got from all the victims, and also some of the unguent already mentioned as compounded by the perfumers, and mixed the oil with the blood. He then used the mixture to sprinkle the priests and their garments, wishing to make them partakers not only of the sanctity of the outer and open court but that of the shrine within, since they were going to minister in the λειτουργεῖν ἔμελλον· τὰ δ' εἶσω πάντα ἐλαίω κατεκέχριστο.

PHILO

- 153 Θυσίας δ' ἐπὶ ταῖς προτέραις ἄλλας ἀναγαγόντων, τοῦτο μὲν τῶν ἱερέων ὑπὲρ αὐτῶν, τοῦτο δὲ τῆς γερουσίας ὑπὲρ ἅπαντος τοῦ ἔθνους, Μωυσῆς μὲν εἰς τὴν σκηνὴν εἰσέρχεται τὸν ἀδελφὸν ἐπαγόμενος — ὀγδόη δ' ἦν τῆς τελετῆς ἡμέρα καὶ τελευταία, ταῖς γὰρ πρότερον ἑπτὰ ἱεροφαντῶν αὐτὸν τε καὶ τοὺς ἀδελφιδοὺς ὠργίαζεν—, εἰσελθὼν δ' ἀνεδίδασκεν οἷα ὑφηγητῆς ἀγαθὸς εὐμαθῆ γνώριμον, ὃν χρῆ τὸν τρόπον τὸν ἀρχιερέα τὰς εἶσω ποιεῖσθαι
- 154 λειτουργίας. εἴτ' ἐξελθόντες ἀμφοτέροι καὶ τὰς χεῖρας ἀνατείναντες πρὸ τῆς κεφαλῆς εὐχὰς τίθενται τῷ ἔθνει τὰς προσηκούσας ἀπὸ καθαρᾶς καὶ ὀσιωτάτης γνώμης. ἔτι δ' εὐχομένων, τερατωδέστατόν τι συμβαίνει· ἐκ γὰρ τῶν ἀδύτων, εἴτε αἰθέρος ἀπόσπασμα τοῦ καθαρωτάτου, εἴτε ἀέρος κατὰ τὴν τῶν στοιχείων φύσει μεταβολὴν ἀναλυθέντος εἰς πῦρ, αἰφνίδιον ἀθρόα φλόξ διεκπαίει καὶ συντόνω ρύμη φέρεται μὲν ἐπὶ τὸν βωμόν, τὰ δ' ἐπ' αὐτοῦ πάντα ἐξαναλίσκει, πρὸς οἶμαι σαφεστάτην δήλωσιν, ὅτι οὐδὲν ἄνευ θείας ἐπιφροσύνης ἐπετελεῖτο.
- 155 δωρεὰν γὰρ ἐξαίρετον εἰκὸς ἦν τοῖς ἀγίοις προσνεμηθῆναι, μὴ μόνον ἐν οἷς ἀνθρωποὶ δημιουργοί, ἀλλὰ καὶ τῷ καθαρωτάτῳ τῆς οὐσίας πυρί, τὸ χρειῶδες καὶ παρ' ἡμῖν ὅπως μὴ προσάψαιτο τοῦ βωμοῦ,
- 156 διὰ τὸ μυρίας ἴσως ἀναμεμίχθαι κῆρας· ἄπτεται γὰρ οὐ μόνον ζῶων ἀλόγων ὀπτωμένων ἢ ἐψομένων
- [159] εἰς πλησμονὴν | ἄδικον γαστροὺς τῆς ταλαίνης, ἀλλὰ

<sup>a</sup> For §§ 153-158 see Lev. ix. (particularly verse 24).

MOSES II. 152-156

inner part also, all of which had been anointed with oil.

<sup>a</sup> After other additional sacrifices had been brought, 153 some by the priests on behalf of themselves, and others by the body of elders on behalf of the whole nation, Moses entered the tabernacle, taking his brother with him. This was on the eighth and last day of the celebration, the seven preceding days having been spent by him in initiating his nephews and their father and in acting as their guide to the sacred mysteries. After entering, he gave such instruction as the good teacher gives to an apt pupil on the way in which the high priest should perform the rites of the inner shrine. Then they both came 154 out, and, stretching forth their hands in front of their faces, offered prayers which befitted the needs of the nation in all sincerity and purity of heart. And, while they were still praying, a great marvel happened. There issued suddenly from the shrine a mass of flame. Whether it was a fragment of ether, the purest of substances, or of air resolved into fire by a natural conversion of the elements, it suddenly burst right through, and, with a mighty rush, fell upon the altar and consumed all that was on it, thus giving, I hold, the clearest proof that none of these rites was without divine care and supervision. For it was natural that 155 the holy place should have a special gift attached to it, over and above what human handiwork had given, through the purest of elements, fire, and thus the altar be saved from contact with the familiar fire of common use, perhaps because such a multitude of evils are associated with it. For its activity is applied 156 not only to the lower animals when they are roasted or boiled, to satisfy the cruel cravings of the miserable

PHILO

- καὶ ἀνθρώπων ἐξ ἐπιβουλῆς ἀναιρουμένων, οὐ τριῶν ἢ τεττάρων, ἀλλὰ καὶ πολυανθρώπων ὁμίλων· 157 ἤδη γοῦν καὶ στόλους μεγάλους ἐπιβατικοῦ πλή-ρεις οἷστοι πυρφόροι κατέφλεξαν βληθέντες καὶ ὅλας πόλεις ἐξανάλωσαν, αἱ σμυχόμεναι μέχρι θεμελίων εἰς τέφραν ἔδαπανήθησαν, ὡς μηδ' ἔχνος ὑπολε-158 λείφθαι τοῦ πάλαι συνοικισμοῦ. ταύτης ἕνεκά μοι δοκῶ τῆς αἰτίας ὡς μεμιασμένοι ἤλασε τοῦ ἱερω-τάτου καὶ καθαρωτάτου βωμοῦ πῦρ τὸ χρειώδες, ἀνθ' οὗ φλόγα αἰθέριον ὤμβρησεν ἀπὸ τοῦ οὐρανοῦ πρὸς διαστολὴν ἀγίων τε καὶ βεβήλων, ἀνθρωπέων τε καὶ θείων· ἤρμωτε γὰρ ταῖς θυσίαις ἀφθαρτοτέραν οὐσίαν ἀπονεμεῖσθαι πρὸς τῆς πρὸς τὰς βιωτικὰς χρείας ὑπηρετούσης.
- 159 XXXI. Πολλῶν δὲ κατὰ τὸ ἀναγκαῖον ἀναγομένων θυσιῶν καθ' ἑκάστην ἡμέραν καὶ δια-φερόντως ἐν πανηγύρεσι καὶ ἑορταῖς ὑπὲρ τε ἰδία ἐκάστου καὶ κοινῇ ὑπὲρ ἀπάντων, διὰ μυρίας καὶ οὐχὶ τὰς αὐτὰς αἰτίας, ἅτε πολυανθρωποτάτου ἔθ-νους εὐσεβοῦντος, ἐδέησε καὶ νεωκόρων πλήθους εἰς 160 τὰς ἱερὰς ὑπηρεσίας. ἡ δ' αἴρεσις ἐγένετο πάλιν καινότατον ἀλλ' οὐ τὸν εἰωθότα τρόπον· μίαν τῶν δώδεκα φυλῶν ἐπικρίνας ἀριστίνδην ἐχειροτόνει 161 θεοφιλοῦς ἔργου προθεῖς ἄθλα καὶ ἀριστεία. τὸ δ' ἔργον τοιόνδε ἦν· Μωυσέως ἀναβάντος εἰς τὸ πλησίον ὄρος καὶ πλείους ἡμέρας ἰδιάζοντος τῷ θεῷ, τὴν ἀπουσίαν αὐτοῦ καιρὸν ἐπιτήδειον εἶναι νομίσαντες οἱ μὴ βέβαιοι τὰς φύσεις, ὡσπερ ἀναρχίας γενομένης, ἀφეთοὶ πρὸς ἀσέβειαν ὤρμησαν καὶ ἐκλαθόμενοι τῆς πρὸς τὸ ὄν ὀσιότητος ζηλωταὶ τῶν

MOSES II. 156-161

belly, but to the human beings slaughtered by the design of others, and that not in threes or fours but in assembled multitudes. Ere now we have known 157 the impact of fire-carrying arrows burn up great fully-manned fleets, and consume whole cities which have smouldered down to their very foundations and wasted away into ashes, leaving no trace to shew that they were populated in the past. This is the reason, 158 I imagine, why God expelled from His most pure and sacred altar the fire of common use and rained instead an ethereal flame from heaven, to distinguish between the holy and the profane, the human and the divine. For it was fitting that fire of a more incorruptible nature than that which subserves the needs of human life should be assigned to the sacrificial offerings.

XXXI. Many sacrifices were necessarily brought 159 every day, and particularly at general assemblies and feasts, on behalf both of individuals and all in common, and for a multitude of different reasons. This piety shewn by so populous a nation made it needful to have also a number of temple attendants to help in the sacred services. These, again, were 160 chosen in a very novel and unusual manner. He selected and appointed one of the twelve tribes as the most meritorious, giving them the office as the prize and reward of a deed well pleasing to God. <sup>a</sup>The story of that deed is as follows: When Moses 161 had gone up into the mountain, and was there several days communing privately with God, the men of unstable nature, thinking his absence a suitable opportunity, rushed into impious practices unrestrainedly, as though authority had ceased to be, and, forgetting the reverence they owed to the Self-Existent, <sup>a</sup> For §§ 161-173 see Ex. xxxii.

PHILO

- 162 Αἰγυπτιακῶν γίνονται πλασμάτων. εἶτα χρυσοῦν ταῦρον κατασκευασάμενοι, μίμημα τοῦ κατὰ τὴν χώραν ἱερωτάτου ζώου δοκοῦντος εἶναι, θυσίας ἀθύτους ἀνήγον καὶ χοροὺς ἀχορευτοὺς ἴστασαν ὕμνους τε ἤδον θρήνων οὐδὲν διαφέροντας καὶ ἐμφορηθέντες ἀκράτου διπλῆ μέθη κατίσχοντο, τῇ μὲν ἐξ οἴνου, τῇ δὲ καὶ ἀφροσύνης, κωμάζοντές τε καὶ παννυχίζοντες ἀπροόρατοι τοῦ μέλλοντος ἠδέσι κακοῖς συνεβίουν, ἐφεδρευούσης δίκης, ἣ μὴ βλέ-163 ποντας ἔβλεπε καὶ ὧν ἄξιοι τιμωριῶν εἰσιν. ἐπεὶ δὲ αἱ ἐν τῷ στρατοπέδῳ συνεχεῖς ἐκβοήσεις κατὰ πολυανθρώπους ὀμίλους ἀθροιζομένων ἄχρι πολλοῦ διαστήματος ἐχώρουν, ὡς καὶ μέχρι τῆς ἀκρωρείας τὴν περιήχησιν ἐλθεῖν, πληχθεῖς τὰ ὦτα Μωυσῆς ἐν ἀμηχάνοις ἦν ἅτε θεοφιλῆς ὁμοῦ καὶ φιλάνθρωπος, μήτ' ἐκλιπεῖν ὑπομένων τὰς πρὸς θεὸν ὀμιλίας, ἃς ἰδιάζων μόνος μόνῳ διελέγετο, μήθ' ὑπεριδεῖν τοῦ πλήθους ἐμπιπλαμένου τῶν ἐξ ἀν-164 αρχίας κακοπραγιῶν· ἔγνω γὰρ τὸν θροῦν δεινὸς [160] | ὧν ἐκ φωνῆς ἀνάρθρου καὶ ἀσήμου στοχάσασθαι ψυχῆς ἀδήλων καὶ ἀφανῶν τοῖς ἄλλοις παθῶν ιδιότη-τητας, ὅτι παροιρίας ἐστὶν ἣ κατέχουσα ταραχῆ, γεννώσης ἀκρασίας μὲν κόρον, κόρου δὲ ὕβριν.
 165 ἀνθελκόμενος δὲ καὶ ἀντισπώμενος πρὸς ἑκατέρου μέρους ᾧδε κάκεισε τί χρῆ δρᾶν ἠπόρει. σκοπου-μένῳ δ' αὐτῷ θεσπίζεται τάδε· “ βάδιζε ταχέως ἐνθένδε, κατὰβηθι· πρὸς ἀνομίαν ἔσπευσεν ὁ λεῶς· χειροποίητον κατασκευάσαντες ταυρόμορφον θεὸν

---

* Here as elsewhere Philo assumes that the making of the golden calf was an imitation of the worship of Apis (though, as Driver points out, the Egyptian bull worship was given to a living animal). See note on De Ebr. 95

MOSES II. 162-165

became zealous devotees of Egyptian fables. Then, 162 having fashioned a golden bull, in imitation of the animal held most sacred in that country,<sup>a</sup> they offered sacrifices which were no sacrifices, set up choirs which were no choirs, sang hymns which were very funeral chants, and, filled with strong drink, were overcome by the twofold intoxication of wine and folly. And so, revelling and carousing the livelong night, and unwary of the future, they lived wedded to their pleasant vices, while justice, the unseen watcher of them and the punishments they deserved, stood ready to strike. But, since 163 the continuous shouting in the camp which arose from the great masses of men gathered together carried for a long distance, so that the echoes reached even to the mountain-top, Moses, as they smote upon his ear, was in a dilemma between God's love for him and his love for man. He could not bear to leave his converse with God, in which he talked with Him as in private with none other present, nor yet to disregard the multitude, brimful of the miseries which anarchy creates. For, skilled as he was to 164 divine in an inarticulate and meaningless noise the distinguishing marks of inward passions which to others were obscure and invisible, he recognized the tumult for what it was, saw that drunkenness caused the prevailing confusion, since intemperance begets satiety, and satiety riot. So, drawn backwards and 165 forwards, hither and thither, by the two sides of his being, he was at a loss what he should do. And, as he considered, this divine message came. "Go quickly hence. Descend. The people have run after lawlessness. They have fashioned a god, the work of their hands, in the form of a bull, and to this

PHILO

- οὐ θεὸν προσκυνοῦσι καὶ θύουσιν, ὧν εἶδον καὶ ὧν ἤκουσαν ἀπάντων ὅσα συντείνει πρὸς εὐσέβειαν
- 166 ἐκλαθόμενοι.” καταπλαγεῖς δὲ καὶ ἀναγκασθεῖς πιστεύειν ἀπίστοις πράξειςιν οἶα μεσίτης καὶ διαλλακτῆς οὐκ εὐθύς ἀπεπήδησεν, ἀλλὰ πρότερον τὰς ὑπὲρ τοῦ ἔθνους ἰκεσίας καὶ λιτὰς ἐποιεῖτο συγγνώμην τῶν ἡμαρτημένων δεόμενος· εἶπ’ ἐξευμενισάμενος ὁ κηδεμὼν καὶ παραιτητῆς τὸν ἡγε-μόνα ἐπανήει χαίρων ἅμα καὶ κατηφῶν· ἐγεγῆθει μὲν γὰρ τὴν ἰκεσίαν τοῦ θεοῦ προσιεμένου, συννοίας δὲ καὶ κατηφείας μεστὸς ἦν οἰδῶν ἐπὶ τῇ τοῦ
- 167 πλήθους παρανομίᾳ. XXXII. γενόμενος δ’ ἐν μέσῳ τοῦ στρατοπέδου καὶ τὴν ἑξαπίναιον ἐκδιαίτησιν τοῦ πλήθους θαυμάσας καὶ ὅσον ψεῦδος ἀνθ’ ὅσης ἀληθείας ὑπηλλάξαντο, κατιδὼν οὐκ εἰς ἅπαντας τὴν νόσον ἀφιγμένην, ἀλλὰ τινὰς ὑγιαίνοντας ἔτι καὶ μισοπονήρῳ πάθει χρωμένους, βουλόμενος διαγνώμην τοὺς τε ἀνιάτως ἔχοντας καὶ τοὺς ἐπὶ τοῖς πεπραγμένοις δυσχεραίνοντας καὶ εἰ δὴ τινες ἀμαρτόντες μετανοοῦσι, κήρυγμα κηρύττει—τὸ δ’ ἦν ἄρα βάσανος ἀκριβῆς τῆς ἐκάστου διανοίας, ὡς ἔχοι πρὸς τε ὁσιότητα καὶ
- 168 τοῦναντίον—. “εἴ τις” γὰρ φησι “πρὸς κύριον, ἴτω πρὸς μέ.” βραχὺ μὲν τὸ λεχθέν, μεγάλη δ’ ἡ ἔμφασις, ἔστι γὰρ τοιόνδε τὸ δηλούμενον· εἴ τις μηδὲν τῶν χειροποιήτων μηδ’ ὅσα γενητὰ νομίζει θεοῦς, ἀλλ’ ἓνα τὸν ἡγεμόνα τῶν ὄλων, ἐμοὶ προσ-
- 169 ἴτω. τῶν μὲν οὖν ἄλλων οἱ μὲν ἔνεκα τοῦ τὸν Αἰγυπτιακὸν ἐζηλωκεῖναι τυφὸν ἀφηγιάζοντες οὐ προσεῖχον τοῖς λεγομένοις, οἱ δὲ φόβῳ κολάσεως god, who is no god, they offer worship and sacrifice, and have forgotten all the influences to piety which they have seen and heard." Struck with dismay, 166 and compelled to believe the incredible tale, he yet took the part of mediator and reconciler and did not hurry away at once, but first made prayers and supplications, begging that their sins might be forgiven. Then, when this protector and intercessor had softened the wrath of the Ruler, he wended his way back in mingled joy and dejection. He rejoiced that God accepted his prayers, yet was ready to burst with the dejection and heaviness that filled him at the transgression of the multitude.

MOSES II. 165-169

XXXII. When he arrived at the middle of the camp, 167 and marvelled at the sudden apostasy of the multitude and their delusion, so strongly contrasting with the truth which they had bartered for it, he observed that the contagion had not extended to all and that there were still some sound at heart and cherishing a feeling of hatred of evil. Wishing, therefore, to distinguish the incurable from those who were displeased to see such actions and from any who had sinned but repented, he made a proclamation, a touchstone calculated to test exactly the bias of each to godliness or its opposite. "If 168 any is on the Lord's side," he said, "let him come to me." Few words, indeed, but fraught with much meaning, for the purport was as follows: "Whoso holds that none of the works of men's hands, nor any created things, are gods, but that there is one God only, the Ruler of the universe, let him join me." Of the rest, some, whom devotion to the vanity of 169 Egypt had made rebellious, paid no heed to his words, while others, possibly in fear of chastisement,

PHILO

- ἴσως ἐγγυτέρω προσελθεῖν οὐκ ἐθάρrouν ἢ τὴν ἐκ Μωυσέως τίσιν δεδιότες ἢ τὴν ἐκ τοῦ πλήθους ἐπανάστασιν· ἀεὶ γὰρ οἱ πολλοὶ τοῖς μὴ συν-
- 170 απονοουμένοις ἐπιτίθενται. μία δ' ἐξ ἀπάντων ἡ λεγομένη Λευϊτικὴ φυλὴ τοῦ κηρύγματος ἐπακούσασα καθάπερ ἀφ' ἐνὸς συνθήματος ἔθει μετὰ σπουδῆς, τῇ ποδωκείᾳ τὴν προθυμίαν ἐπιδεικνυμένη
- [161] καὶ τὴν ὀξύτητα τῆς εἰς εὐσέβειαν ψυχικῆς | ὀρμῆς.
- 171 οὗς ἰδὼν Μωυσῆς ὥσπερ ἀπὸ βαλβίδος ἀμιλλωμένους “ εἰ μὴ μόνον τοῖς σώμασιν ” εἶπεν “ ἐπισπεύδετε τὴν πρὸς ἡμᾶς ἄφιξιν ἀλλὰ καὶ ταῖς διανοίαις, αὐτίκα μαρτυρηθήσεται· ξίφος ἀναλαβὼν ἕκαστος τοὺς μυρίων ἄξια θανάτων εἰργασμένους, οἱ τὸν ἀληθῆ θεὸν καταλιπόντες τοὺς ψευδωνύμους ἐδημιούργησαν φθαρταῖς καὶ γενηταῖς οὐσίαις τὴν τοῦ ἀφθάρτου καὶ ἀγενήτου πρόσρησιν ἐπιφημίσαντες, συγγενεῖς καὶ φίλους ἀποκτεινάτω φιλίαν καὶ συγγένειαν ὑπολαβὼν εἶναι μόνην ἀνδρῶν
- 172 ἀγαθῶν ὀσιότητα.” οἱ δὲ τὴν παραίνεσιν ἐτοιμότητι φθάσαντες, ἐπεὶ καὶ τὰς γνώμας ἔτυχον ἡλλοτριωμένοι σχεδὸν ἀφ' οὗ τὸ παρανόμημα γενόμενον εἶδον, ἀναιροῦσιν ἠβηδὸν εἰς τρισχιλίους τῶν πρὸ μικροῦ φιλτάτων. κειμένων δ' ἐν ἀγορᾷ μέσῃ τῶν σωμάτων, ἡ πληθὺς θεασαμένη τοὺς μὲν ὠκτίσατο, τὸ δὲ τῶν κτεινόντων ἔνθερμον ἔτι καὶ μεστὸν ὀργῆς παράστημα καταδείσασα φόβῳ
- 173 νουθετεῖται. Μωυσῆς δὲ τὴν ἀριστείαν ἀποδεξάμενος γέρας ἐπενόησε καὶ ἐβεβαίωσε τῇ πράξει

MOSES II. 169-173

had not the courage to take their place beside him, either because they feared the vengeance they might suffer at the hand of Moses or the onslaught of an insurgent mob. For the multitude always set upon those who refuse to share their madness. Among 170 them all one tribe alone, known as Levites, when they heard the proclamation, came running with all speed, like troops for whom one signal is enough, shewing by their swiftness their zeal and the keenness of the inward feelings which urged them to piety. Moses saw them coming like racers from 171 the starting-point, and cried: "Whether the speed which has brought you here exists not only in your bodies but in your minds shall at once be put to the proof. Take each of you his sword, and slay those whose deeds deserve a thousand deaths, who have left the true God, and wrought gods, falsely so called, from corruptible and created matter, and given them a title which belongs to the Incorruptible and Uncreated. Yea, slay them, though they be kinsmen and friends, believing that between the good there is no kinship and friendship but godliness." Their readiness anticipated his exhorta- 172 tions, for their sentiments had been hostile to the offenders almost from the first moment that they saw their misconduct, and they made a wholesale slaughter to the number of three thousand of those who but now had been their dearest. As their corpses lay in the middle of the market-place, the multitude as they gazed felt pity for them, but, terror-struck at the still heated and wrathful resolution of the slayers, learned wisdom from fear. But 173 Moses, in approval of this heroism, devised and confirmed a reward for the victors well suited to the τὸ οἰκεῖον· ἔδει γὰρ τοὺς ὑπὲρ θεοῦ τιμῆς ἐκούσιον πόλεμον ἀραμένους καὶ βραχεὶ καιρῷ κατωρθωκότας ἀξιοθῆναι τῆς θεραπείας αὐτοῦ λαχόντας ἱερωσύνην.

PHILO

- 174 XXXIII. Ἐπεὶ δ' οὐ μία τάξις τῶν ἱερωμένων, ἀλλ' οἷς μὲν ἐπιτέτραπται τὰ περὶ τὰς εὐχὰς καὶ θυσίας καὶ τὰς ἄλλας ἱεουργίας ἄχρι τῶν ἀδύτων ἰοῦσιν, οἷς δὲ τούτων μὲν οὐδέν, ἐπιμέλειαί δὲ καὶ φυλακαὶ μεθ' ἡμέραν καὶ νύκτωρ τοῦ τε ἱεροῦ καὶ τῶν ἐν αὐτῷ, οὓς νεωκόρους ἔνιοι καλοῦσιν, ἢ πολλοῖς πολλαχοῦ μυρίων αἰτία κακῶν γενομένη περὶ πρωτείων στάσις ἐπεπόλασε κἀνταῦθα, τῶν νεωκόρων ἐπιθεμένων τοῖς ἱερεῦσι καὶ τὴν ἐκείνων τιμὴν παρασπάσασθαι διανοηθέντων· καὶ τοῦτ' εὐμαρῶς ἤλπισαν ἔσσεσθαι πολλαπλασίους τὸν ἀριθμὸν ὄντες. ὑπὲρ δὲ τοῦ μὴ δοκεῖν ἰδία γνώμη νεωτερίζειν καὶ τὴν πρεσβυτάτην τῶν δώδεκα φυλῶν συμφρονεῖν ἀναπειθουσιν, ἣ πολλοὶ τῶν εἰκαιωτέρων ἐπηκολούθησαν ὡς ἔχει δυναμένη 175 πρεσβεῖον ἡγεμονίας. μέγαν τοῦτον ἐπιτειχισμὸν ἔγνω Μωυσῆς φυόμενον καθ' αὐτοῦ· τὸν γὰρ ἀδελφὸν ἀρχιερέα κατὰ τὰ χρησθέντα λόγια ἤρητο, διαβολαὶ δ' ἦσαν ὡς τοὺς μὲν χρησμοὺς ἐπιψευσαμένου, ποιησαμένου δὲ τὴν αἵρεσιν διὰ τὴν 176 οἰκειότητα καὶ τὴν πρὸς τὸν ἀδελφὸν εὐνοίαν. ἐφ' οἷς εἰκότως ἀνιαθεῖς, εἰ μὴ μόνον ἀπιστεῖται διὰ τοσοῦτων ἐλέγχων τὴν ἑαυτοῦ πίστιν ἐπιδειξάμε- [162] νος, ἀλλὰ καὶ ἐπ' ἔργοις ἄπερ ἀναφέρεται πρὸς deed. For it was right that those who had voluntarily taken up arms for the honour of God, and so quickly achieved success, should receive the priesthood, and thus be worthily promoted to be His ministers.

<sup>a</sup> For §§ 174-179 see Num. xvi. 1-3 and xvii.

MOSES II. 173-177

XXXIII. <sup>a</sup> Now the consecrated persons consisted 174 of more than one order. They included both those who were commissioned to penetrate to the inner shrine and offer the prayers and sacrifices and the other holy rites, and those sometimes called temple attendants who had none of these duties but had the care and guarding of the sacred building and its contents by day and night. Consequently, the strife for precedence, the cause of innumerable troubles to many persons and in many places, gained ground here also. The temple attendants made headway against the priests, and purposed to wrest their privileges from them, and they hoped to accomplish this easily, since they were many times the number of the others. To pre- 175 vent this sedition appearing to be their own particular project, they persuaded the senior tribe of the twelve to make common cause with them, and this tribe had many adherents among the more thoughtless, who supposed it capable of taking the supremacy as its birthright. Moses recognized in this the rise of a 176 grave attack upon himself, for he had chosen his brother as high priest in accordance with the oracles vouchsafed to him. But there were spiteful rumours that he had falsely invented the oracles, and had made his choice through family feeling and affection for his brother. He was naturally pained at this, not 177 merely that he was distrusted when he had shewn his good faith by so many proofs, but that this distrust extended to actions which concerned the honouring

PHILO

- θεοῦ τιμὴν, δι' ἧ μόνα καὶ τὸν ἐν τοῖς ἄλλοις τὸ ἦθος κατεψευσμένον ἀναγκαῖον ἦν ἀληθεύειν—ἀλήθεια γὰρ ὁπαδὸς θεοῦ—, λόγοις μὲν ἀναδιδάσκειν περὶ τῆς ἑαυτοῦ προαιρέσεως οὐκ ἔδοκίμαζε, τὸ μεταπίθειν ἐπιχειρεῖν τοὺς προκαταληφθέντας ἐναντίας δόξαις ἀργαλέον εἰδώς, ἰκετεύει δὲ τὸν θεὸν ἐμφανεῖς ἀποδείξεις αὐτοῖς παρασχεῖν περὶ τοῦ μηδὲν ἐψεῦσθαι κατὰ τὴν τῆς ἱερωσύνης αἵρεσιν.
- 178 ὁ δὲ κελεύει δώδεκα ράβδους λαβεῖν ταῖς φυλαῖς ἰσαριθμούς καὶ τὰ μὲν τῶν ἄλλων ὀνόματα φυλάρχων ἐπιγράψαι ταῖς ἑνδεκα, τῇ δὲ λοιπῇ τὸ τοῦ ἀδελφοῦ καὶ ἀρχιερέως, εἰτ' εἰς τὸν νεῶν ἄχρι τῶν ἀδύτων εἰσενεγκεῖν· ὁ δὲ τὰ προσταχθέντα ποιήσας
- 179 ἑκαραδόκει τὸ ἀποβησόμενον. τῇ δ' ὑστεραία λογίῳ πληχθεῖς, ἅπαντος τοῦ ἔθνους παρεστῶτος, εἰσέρχεται καὶ τὰς ράβδους ἐκκομίζει, τὰς μὲν ἄλλας οὐδὲν διάφορον ἐχούσας, μίαν δ' ἐφ' ἣ τοῦνομα ἐπεγέγραπτο τοῦ ἀδελφοῦ τεθαυματοουργη-μένην· οἷα γὰρ φυτὸν εὐγενὲς ἅπασα νέους βλαστοὺς ἐξέφυσε καὶ ὑπ' εὐφορίας καρπῶν ἔβριθεν.
- 180 XXXIV. οἱ δὲ καρποὶ κάρυα ἦσαν, ἧ φύσιν ἐναντίαν ἔχει τοῖς ἄλλοις· ἐπὶ γὰρ τῶν πλείστων, σταφυλῆς, ἐλαίας, μήλων, διαφέρει τὸ σπέρμα καὶ τὸ ἐδώδιμον, ἧ διαφέροντα τόποις χωρίζεται· τὸ μὲν γὰρ ἐδώδιμον ἔξω, τὸ δὲ σπέρμα εἴσω κατακέκλεισται· τοῦ δὲ καρύου ταῦτόν ἐστι τό τε σπέρμα καὶ τὸ ἐδώδιμον, ἀμφοτέρων εἰς μίαν ἰδέαν ἀποκριθέντων, καὶ τόπος εἰς ὃ ἐντὸς ὠχυρωμένος καὶ περιπεφρουρημένος ἔρκει διπλῶ, τῷ μὲν ἐκ φλοιοῦ πάνυ βαθέος, τῷ δ' οὐδὲν ἀποδέοντι ξυλίνου κατα-

MOSES II. 177-180

of God, actions which by themselves would necessarily ensure truthfulness even in one whose character was false in everything else, for truth is God's attendant. But he did not think good to use words to explain to them his motives, knowing that it is vain labour to try to change the convictions of those of whom the opposite opinions have already taken hold, but besought God to shew them by clear demonstration that there had been no dishonesty in his choice of persons for the priesthood. God commanded him 178 to take twelve rods, corresponding to the number of the tribes, and on eleven of them to inscribe the names of the other patriarchs, but on the twelfth that of his brother who was also high priest, and then to take them into the temple, right into the inner sanctuary. Moses did as he was bidden, and eagerly awaited the result. On the next day, under the impulse of a 179 divine intimation, with all the people standing near, he went in and brought out the rods. The others shewed no difference, but the one on which was inscribed the name of his brother had undergone a wonderful change. Like a goodly plant, it had young sprouts growing all over it, and was laden with abundance of fruits. XXXIV. Now, the fruits were 180 nuts, which in nature are the opposite of other fruits, for in most cases, the grape, the olive, the apple, there is a difference between the seed and the eatable part, and this difference extends to their situation, which is separate, for the edible part is outside, and the seed enclosed within. But, in the nut, seed and edible part are identical, merged in a single form, and their situation is the same inside, shielded and guarded on all sides by a double fence, composed partly of very thick shell and partly of a substance equivalent to a

PHILO

- 181 σκευάσματος· ἀφ' οὗ τελείαν ἀρετὴν αἰνίττεται. ὡσπερ γὰρ ἐν καρύῳ ταυτόν ἐστὶν ἀρχὴ καὶ τέλος, ἀρχὴ μὲν ἢ σπέρμα, τέλος δὲ ἢ καρπός, οὕτως ἔχει καὶ ἐπὶ τῶν ἀρετῶν· ἐκάστη γὰρ συμβέβηκεν εἶναι καὶ ἀρχὴν καὶ τέλος, ἀρχὴν μὲν, ὅτι οὐκ ἐξ ἑτέρας δυνάμεως ἀλλ' ἐξ ἑαυτῆς φύεται, τέλος δέ, ὅτι πρὸς αὐτὴν ὁ κατὰ φύσιν βίος σπεύδει.
- 182 μία μὲν αἰτία ἦδε, λέγεται δὲ καὶ ἕτερα τῆς προτέρας ἐμφαντικωτέρα· καρύου τὸ μὲν φλοιῶδες ἐστὶ πικρὸν, τὸ δ' εἶσω περικείμενον ὡσανεὶ ξύλινον ἔρκος στιφρὸν εὖ μάλα καὶ κραταῖον, οἷς ἀμφοτέροις ὁ καρπὸς ἐγκατακεκλεισμένος οὐκ ἐστὶν εὐληπτος.
- 183 τοῦτο ποιεῖται σύμβολον ἀσκητικῆς ψυχῆς, ἀφ' οὗ προτρέπει αὐτὴν οἶεται δεῖν ἐπ' ἀρετὴν ἀναδιδάσκων, ὅτι πόνῳ προεντυχεῖν ἀναγκαῖον· πικρὸν δὲ καὶ ἀντιτυπὲς καὶ σκληρὸν ὁ πόνος, ἐξ οὗ φύεται τὰγαθόν, οὗ χάριν οὐ μαλακιστέον. ὁ | μὲν γὰρ [163] τὸν πόνον φεύγων φεύγει καὶ τὰ ἀγαθὰ, ὁ δὲ τλητικῶς καὶ ἀνδρείως ὑπομένων τὰ δυσκαρτέρητα σπεύδει πρὸς μακαριότητα· οὐ γὰρ ἀβροδιαίτοις καὶ τὴν ψυχὴν ἐκτεθηλυμμένοις καὶ τὸ σῶμα διαρρέουσιν ὑπὸ τῆς καθ' ἐκάστην ἡμέραν ἀδιαστάτου θρύψεως ἀρετὴ πέφυκεν ἐνδαιτιᾶσθαι, κακουμένη δὲ μετανίσταται πρότερον ἀπόλειψιν χρηματί-
- 185 σασα πρὸς τὸν ἄρχοντα τὸν ὀρθὸν λόγον. ἀλλ' εἰ δεῖ τάληθές εἰπεῖν, ὁ φρονήσεως καὶ σωφροσύνης ἀνδρείας τε καὶ δικαιοσύνης ἱερώτατος θίασος ἀσκητὰς μετατρέχει καὶ ὅσοι τὸν αὐστηρὸν καὶ σκληροδίατον βίον, ἐγκράτειαν καὶ καρτερίαν,

---

<sup>a</sup> Or "before right reason as Archon." See note on De Cher. 115, where it is shewn that χρηματίζειν ἀπόλειψιν is a 538

MOSES II. 181-185

wooden framework. In this way, it signifies perfect 181 virtue ; for, just as in a nut, beginning and end are identical, beginning represented by seed and end by fruit, so it is with the virtues. There, too, it is the case that each is both a beginning and an end ; a beginning in that it springs from no other power but itself, an end in that it is the aspiration of the life which follows nature.

This is one reason 182
why the nut is a type of virtue, but there is another given which is even clearer than that. The shell-formed part of the nut is bitter, and the inner layer which surrounds the fruit like a wooden fence is exceedingly solid and hard ; and, as the fruit is enclosed in both these, it is not easy to get at. In this Moses 183 finds the parable of the practising soul, which he thinks he can rightly use to encourage that soul to virtue and teach it that it must first encounter toil.
Toil is bitter and stiff and hard, yet from it springs goodness, and therefore there must be no softening.
For he who flees from toil flees from the good also, 184 but he who patiently and manfully endures what is hard to bear is pressing on to blessedness. For in the voluptuous livers, whose souls are emasculated and whose bodies run to waste with ceaseless luxury prolonged from day to day, virtue cannot make its lodging ; but it will first procure its divorce for mis-usage in the court of right reason,<sup>a</sup> and then seek another home. But in very truth that most holy 185 company, justice, temperance, courage, wisdom, follow in the train of the practisers and all who devote themselves to a life of austerity and hardship, that is to continence and self-restraint, together with regular phrase in Attic law, used of a wife who appeals to the Archon for divorce or separation from her husband.

- ζηλοῦσι σὺν εὐτελείᾳ καὶ ὀλιγοδείᾳ, δι' ὧν τὸ κυριώτατον τῶν ἐν ἡμῖν, ὁ λογισμὸς, εἰς ὑγίαν ἄνοσον καὶ εὐεξίαν ἐπιδίδωσι καθελὼν τὸν βαρὺν τοῦ σώματος ἐπιτειχισμόν, ὃν οἰνοφλυγίαί καὶ ὀψοφαγίαί καὶ λαγνεῖαι καὶ αἱ ἄλλαι ἀπλήρωτοι ἐπιθυμῖαι συνεκρότησαν γεννήσασαι τὴν ἀντίπαλον
- 186 ἀγχινοίας πολυσαρκίαν. λέγεται μέντοι καὶ τῶν ἐν ἔαρι βλαστάνειν εἰωθότων δένδρων ἢ ἀμυγδαλῆ καὶ πρῶτον ἀνθεῖν εὐαγγελιζομένη φοράν ἀκροδρῦων καὶ ὕστατον φυλλορροεῖν τὴν ἐπέτειον πρὸς μήκιστον ἀποτείνουσα τῆς χλόης εὐγηρίαν· ὧν ἑκάτερον ποιεῖται σύμβολον τῆς ἱερατικῆς φυλῆς, αἰνιττόμενος ὅτι καὶ πρώτη καὶ ὑστάτη τοῦ σύμπαντος ἀνθρώπων γένους ἀνθήσει, καθ' ὃν ἂν χρόνον δόξη τῷ θεῷ ταῖς ἔαριναῖς τροπαῖς ἐξομοιωῶσαι τὸν ἡμέτερον βίον ἀνελόντι τὴν ἐπίβουλον καὶ τοῦ κακοδαιμονεῖν πηγὴν πλεονεξίαν.
- 187 XXXV. Ἐπειδὴ τοίνυν τῷ τελειοτάτῳ ἡγεμόνι τέτταρα δεῖν ἔφαμεν προσεῖναι, βασιλείαν καὶ νομοθετικὴν ἕξιν καὶ ἱερωσύνην καὶ προφητείαν, ἵνα διὰ μὲν τῆς νομοθετικῆς προστάτῃ ἃ δεῖ καὶ ἀπαγορεύῃ ἃ μὴ δεῖ πράττειν, διὰ δὲ τῆς ἱερωσύνης μὴ μόνον τὰνθρώπεια ἀλλὰ καὶ τὰ θεῖα διέπη, διὰ δὲ τῆς προφητείας ὅσα μὴ λογισμῷ καταλαμβάνεται θεσπίξῃ, διειλεγμένος περὶ τῶν πρώτων τριῶν καὶ ἐπιδεδειχῶς Μωυσῆν ἄριστον βασιλέα

* The thought of this sentence seems confused. The permanent triumph of Aaron's family over the lower Levites assisted by Reuben was symbolized by the blossoming of the most permanent of blossoms and so when the πλεονεξία ("self-assertion") of mankind as a whole is destroyed, there will be a permanent blossoming. But of whom? We expect of all mankind. Instead we have "the priestly simplicity and frugal contentment. For by these the highest authority within us, reason, advances to sound health and well-being, and brings to nought the formidable menace to the body, engineered in many a scene of drunkenness and gluttony and lewdness and the other insatiable lusts, the parents of that grossness of flesh which is the enemy of quickness of mind. Further, they say, that of all the trees which regularly bud in the spring the almond-tree is the first to blossom with a welcome promise of a plentiful crop of fruit, and the last to shed its leaves, year by year protracting the hale old age of its verdure to the longest span. Each of these facts he takes as a parable of the priestly tribe, intimating that it will be the first and last of all the human race to blossom, in that day, whenever it shall be, when it shall please God to make our life as a springtime by ridding it of covetousness, that insidious foe which is the source of our misery.<sup>a</sup> 186

XXXV. We said above that there are four adjuncts to the truly perfect ruler. He must have kingship, the faculty of legislation, priesthood and prophecy, so that in his capacity of legislator he may command what should be done and forbid what should not be done, as priest dispose not only things human but things divine, as prophet declare by inspiration what cannot be apprehended by reason. I have discussed the first three, and shewn that Moses was the best of kings, of lawgivers and of tribe." Is this to be taken literally, or does it stand for Israel, the nation of priests or even for the truly priestly soul? If we could insert ἡ εὐχὴ ὑπὲρ after ὑστάρτη the thought would become clear. Philo often insists (e.g. De Spec. Leg. i. 97), that the prayers of the priests are for the whole human race.

PHILO

- καὶ νομοθέτην καὶ ἀρχιερέα τὸ τελευταῖον ἔρχομαι δηλώσω, ὅτι καὶ προφήτης γέγονε δοκιμώτατος.
- 188 οὐκ ἄγνοῶ μὲν οὖν, ὡς πάντ' εἰσὶ χρησιμοί, ὅσα ἐν ταῖς ἱεραῖς βίβλοις ἀναγράφονται, χρησθέντες δι' αὐτοῦ· λέξω δὲ τὰ ἰδιαίτερα, πρότερον εἰπὼν ἐκείνων τῶν λογίων τὰ μὲν ἐκ προσώπου τοῦ θεοῦ λέγεται δι' ἑρμηνέως τοῦ θείου προφήτου, τὰ δ' ἐκ πεύσεως καὶ ἀποκρίσεως ἐθεσπίσθη, τὰ δ' ἐκ προσώπου Μωυσέως ἐπιθειάσαντος καὶ ἐξ αὐτοῦ κατασχε-
- 189 θέντος. τὰ μὲν οὖν πρῶτα ὅλα δι' ὄλων ἀρετῶν
- [164] θείων δείγματα ἐστι, τῆς τε | ἴλεω καὶ εὐεργέτιδος, δι' ὧν ἅπαντας μὲν ἀνθρώπους πρὸς καλοκάγαθίαν ἀλείφει, μάλιστα δὲ τὸ θεραπευτικὸν αὐτοῦ γένος, ᾧ τὴν πρὸς εὐδαιμονίαν ἄγουσαν ἀνατέμνει ὁδόν·
- 190 τὰ δὲ δευτέρα μῖξιν ἔχει καὶ κοινωνίαν, πυνθανομένου μὲν τοῦ προφήτου περὶ ὧν ἐπεζήτει, ἀποκρινομένου δὲ τοῦ θεοῦ καὶ διδάσκοντος· τὰ δὲ τρίτα ἀνατίθεται τῷ νομοθέτῃ, μεταδόντος αὐτῷ τοῦ θεοῦ τῆς προγνωστικῆς δυνάμεως, ἣ θεσπιεῖ
- 191 τὰ μέλλοντα. τὰ μὲν οὖν πρῶτα ὑπερθετέον, μείζω γάρ ἐστιν ἢ ὡς ὑπ' ἀνθρώπου τινὸς ἐπαινεθῆναι, μόλις ἂν ὑπ' οὐρανοῦ τε καὶ κόσμου καὶ τῆς τῶν ὄλων φύσεως ἀξίως ἐγκωμιασθέντα, καὶ ἄλλως λέγεται ὡσανεὶ δι' ἑρμηνέως· ἑρμηνεία δὲ καὶ προφητεία διαφέρουσι. περὶ δὲ τῶν δευτέρων αὐτίκα πειράσομαι δηλοῦν συνυφήνας αὐτοῖς καὶ τὸ τρίτον εἶδος, ἐν ᾧ τὸ τοῦ λέγοντος ἐνθουσιῶδες ἐμφαίνεται, καθ' ὃ μάλιστα καὶ κυρίως νενομίσται προφήτης.

MOSES II. 187-191

high priests, and will now go on to shew in conclusion that he was a prophet of the highest quality. Now I am fully aware that all things written in the 188 sacred books are oracles delivered through Moses ; but I will confine myself to those which are more especially his, with the following preliminary remarks. Of the divine utterances, some are spoken by God in His own Person with His prophet for interpreter, in some the revelation comes through question and answer, and others are spoken by Moses in his own person, when possessed by God and carried away out of himself. The first kind are 189 absolutely and entirely signs of the divine excellences, graciousness and beneficence, by which He incites all men to noble conduct, and particularly the nation of His worshippers, for whom He opens up the road which leads to happiness. In the second 190 kind we find combination and partnership : the prophet asks questions of God about matters on which he has been seeking knowledge, and God replies and instructs him. The third kind are assigned to the lawgiver himself : God has given to him of His own power of foreknowledge and by this he will reveal future events. Now, the first kind must be 191 left out of the discussion. They are too great to be lauded by human lips ; scarcely indeed could heaven and the world and the whole existing universe worthily sing their praises. Besides, they are delivered through an interpreter, and interpretation and prophecy are not the same thing. The second kind I will at once proceed to describe, interweaving with it the third kind, in which the speaker appears under that divine possession in virtue of which he is chiefly and in the strict sense considered a prophet.

PHILO

- 192 XXXVI. Τῆς δ' ὑποσχέσεως ἀρκτέον ὦδε. τέτταρές εἰσι τόποι διὰ πεύσεως καὶ ἀποκρίσεως χρησιμοῖς νομοθετηθέντες, μικτὴν ἔχοντες δύναμιν· τῇ μὲν γὰρ ὁ προφήτης ἐνθουσιᾷ πυνθανόμενος, τῇ δὲ ὁ πατήρ θεσπίζει λόγου καὶ ἀποκρίσεως μεταδιδούς. ἔστι δὲ πρῶτος, ὃς οὐχ ὅτι Μωυ-σῆν ὀσιώτατον τῶν πώποτε γενομένων ἀλλὰ καὶ 193 τὸν ἐπὶ βραχὺ γευσάμενον εὐσεβείας ὤργισεν.<sup>1</sup> ἐξ ἀνομοίων τις γενόμενος ἄνθρωπος νόθος, Αἰγυπτίου μὲν πατρός, μητρὸς δὲ Ἰουδαίας, τῶν μὲν ταύτης πατρίων ἐθνῶν ἠλόγησε, πρὸς δὲ τὴν Αἰγυπτιακὴν, ὡς λόγος, ἀπέκλινεν ἀσέβειαν τὴν τῶν ἀνδρῶν 194 ζηλώσας ἀθεότητα. μόνοι γὰρ σχεδὸν ἀπάντων ἐθνῶν Αἰγύπτιοι γῆν ἐπετείχισαν οὐρανῶ, τὴν μὲν ἰσοθέων τιμῶν ἀξιώσαντες, τῷ δ' οὐδὲν γέρας ἐξ-αίρετον ἀπονείμαντες, ὡς δέον πρὸ τῶν βασιλείων τὰς ἐσχατιὰς περιέπειν—ἐν γὰρ κόσμῳ βασιλείον μὲν ἱερώτατον οὐρανός, ἐσχατιὰ δὲ γῆ, καθ' ἑαυτὴν μὲν ἀξιοσπούδαστος, εἰς δὲ σύγκρισιν ἰοῦσα αἰθέρος ἀπολειπομένη τοσοῦτον ὅσον σκότος μὲν φωτός, νύξ δὲ ἡμέρας, φθορὰ δ' ἀφθαρσίας καὶ θνητὸς 195 θεοῦ—. τῆς γὰρ χώρας οὐχ ὑετῶ καθάπερ αἱ ἄλλαι νιφομένης, ἀλλὰ ταῖς τοῦ ποταμοῦ πλημμύραις εἰωθυίας ἀνὰ πᾶν ἔτος λιμνάζεσθαι, θεοπλαστοῦσι τῷ λόγῳ τὸν Νεῖλον Αἰγύπτιοι ὡς ἀντίμιμον οὐ-

<sup>1</sup> ? ὤργισ' ἄν.

<sup>a</sup> Literally "giving him a share of speech and answer."

<sup>b</sup> For §§ 193-208 see Lev. xxiv. 10-16.

<sup>c</sup> Cf. De Fuga 180.

MOSES II. 192-195

XXXVI. In fulfilment of my promise, I must 192 begin with the following examples. There are four cases upon which the divine voice laid down the law in the form of question and answer and which therefore have a mixed character ; for, on the one hand, the prophet asks a question under divine possession, and on the other hand the Father, in giving the word of revelation, answers him and talks with him as with a partner.<sup>a</sup> The first case is one which would have enraged not only Moses, the holiest of men ever yet born, but even one who knew but a little of the flavour of godliness. <sup>b</sup> A certain base-born 193 man, the child of an unequal marriage, his father an Egyptian, his mother a Jewess, had set at naught the ancestral customs of his mother and turned aside, as we are told, to the impiety of Egypt and embraced the atheism of that people. For the Egyptians 194 almost alone among the nations have set up earth as a power to challenge heaven.<sup>c</sup> Earth they held to be worthy of the honours due to a god, and refused to render to heaven any special tribute of reverence, acting as though it were right to shew respect to the outermost regions rather than to the royal palace. For in the universe heaven is a palace of the highest sanctity, and earth is the outer region, estimable indeed in itself, but when it comes into comparison with ether, as far inferior to it as darkness is to light and night to day and corruption to incorruption and mortal man to God. The Egyptians thought 195 otherwise ; for, since the land is not watered like other countries by the downpour of rain but regularly every year becomes a standing water through the flooding of the river, they speak of the Nile as though it were the counterpart of heaven and therefore to be deified,

PHILO

196 ρανοῦ γεγονότα καὶ περὶ τῆς χώρας σεμνηγο-ροῦσιν. XXXVII. ὁ δὴ μικτὸς οὗτος ἐκείνος διενεχθείς τινι τῶν ἀπὸ τοῦ ὀρατικοῦ καὶ ἐπιστημονικοῦ γένους, ἀκράτωρ ὑπ' ὀργῆς αὐτὸς αὐτοῦ γενόμενος καὶ ἅμα τῆς Αἰγυπτιακῆς ἀθεότητος ζηλωτῆς ὢν, ἀπὸ γῆς εἰς οὐρανὸν ἔτεινε τὴν ἀ-[165] σέβειαν | ἐπαράτῳ καὶ ἐναγεῖ καὶ μεμιασμένην ψυχῆ τε καὶ γλώττῃ καὶ πάσῃ τῇ φωνῆς ὀργανοποιῶν καταρασάμενος δι' ὑπερβολὴν κακιῶν<sup>1</sup> ὃν οὐδ' ὑπὸ πάντων ἀλλὰ μόνων τῶν ἀρίστων εὐλογεῖσθαι 197 θέμις, ὅσοι τὰς τελείας καθάρσεις ἐδέξαντο. διὸ καὶ θαυμάσας τὴν φρενοβλάβειαν καὶ τὴν τοῦ θράσους ὑπερβολὴν, καίτοι γ' ὑπόπλεως ὢν παραστήματος εὐγενοῦς καὶ ἰέμενος αὐτοχειρία διαρτῆσαι τὸν ἄνθρωπον, ἔδεισε μὴ κουφοτέραν ἀναπράξῃ τιμωρίαν· ἰσόρροπον γὰρ ἐπινοῆσαι πρὸς τοσαύτην 198 ἀσέβειαν κόλασιν ἄνθρωπος οὐκ ἂν ἴσχυσεν. ἐπεὶ δὲ καὶ τῷ μὴ σέβειν<sup>2</sup> θεὸν ἔπεται τὸ μήτε γονεῖς μήτε πατρίδα μήτ' εὐεργέτας τιμᾶν, ὁ δὲ δὴ πρὸς τῷ μὴ σέβειν καὶ κακηγορεῖν τολμῶν τίνα μοχθηρίας ὑπερβολὴν ἀπολέλοιπε; καίτοι καὶ τὸ κακηγορεῖν ἦττον ἐν συγκρίσει κατάρας· ἀλλὰ γλωσσαλγία καὶ ἀχάλινον στόμα ὅταν ἐκνόμοις ἀφροσύναις ὑπηρετῶσι, πάντως τι καινουργεῖται 199 τῶν ἀθέσμων. ὦ ἄνθρωπε, καταρᾶταί τις θεόν; τίνα καλῶν ἕτερον θεὸν εἰς τὴν τῆς ἀρᾶς βεβαίωσιν; ἢ δῆλον ὅτι αὐτὸν κατ' αὐτοῦ; ἄπαγε βεβήλων καὶ ἀνοσιῶν ἐνθυμημάτων. καλὸν ἐκνύσασθαι τὴν ἀθλίαν ψυχὴν ἐπηρεασθεῖσαν μὲν ὑπὸ φωνῆς, διακόνοις δὲ τοῖς ὡσὶ χρησαμένην, αἰσθήσει τυφλῆ.

<sup>1</sup> MSS. κακῶν.

<sup>2</sup> MSS. σέβοντι.

MOSES II. 195-199

and talk about the land in terms of high reverence. XXXVII. And, lo, this half-bred person, 196 having a quarrel with someone of the nation that has vision and knowledge, losing in his anger all control over himself, and also urged by fondness for Egyptian atheism, extended his impiety from earth to heaven, and with his soul and tongue and all the organism of speech alike accursed, foul, abominable, in the superabundance of his manifold wickedness cursed Him, Whom even to bless is a privilege not permitted to all but only to the best, even those who have received full and complete purification. Whereupon Moses, astonished at his madness and 197 the superabundance of his audacity, though the spirit of noble indignation was strong within him and he would fain have cut him off with his own hand, feared lest he might exact too light a penalty ; for to devise an adequate punishment for such impiety was beyond human powers. Refusal to reverence 198 God implies refusal to honour parents and country and benefactors. And, if so, what depths of depravity remain for him to reach who besides refusing reverence dares also to revile Him? And yet even reviling is a lesser sin compared with cursing. But, when an idle tongue and an unbridled mouth put themselves at the service of lawless follies, some monstrous violation of the moral law is sure to be committed. Answer me, thou man, Does anyone 199 curse God? Then what other god does he call on to make good the curse, or is it clear that he invokes the help of God against Himself? Avaunt such profane and unholy thoughts! Well may the unhappy soul purge itself, which through the ministry of that purblind sense, the ears, has been outraged

PHILO

- 200 καὶ οὔτε ἡ γλῶττα τοῦ τοσοῦτον ἀσέβημα φθεγξαμένου παρείθη οὔτε τὰ τοῦ μέλλοντος ἀκούειν ὧτα ἐπεφράχθη; εἰ μὴ ἄρα κατὰ πρόνοιαν τῆς δίκης, ἥτις οὐτ' ἀγαθὸν ὑπερβάλλον οὔτε μέγιστον κακὸν οἶεται δεῖν ἐπισκιάζεσθαι, πρὸς ἔλεγχον ἐναργέστατον ἀρετῆς ἢ κακίας, ἵνα τὴν μὲν ἀποδοχῆς τὴν 201 δὲ τιμωρίας ἀξιώσῃ. διὰ τοῦτο τὸν μὲν εἰς εἰρκτὴν ἀπαχθέντα κελεύει δεθῆναι, ποτιῶνται δὲ τὸν θεὸν ἰλασάμενος ταῖς ἀνάγκαις τῶν αἰσθήσεων, δι' ὧν καὶ βλέπομεν ἃ μὴ θέμις ὄραν καὶ ἀκούομεν ὧν μὴ θέμις ἀκούειν, ὃ τι χρὴ παθεῖν τὸν εὐρετὴν ἀσεβήματος καὶ ἀνοσιουργήματος ἐκτόπου καὶ 202 ξένου δηλῶσαι. ὁ δὲ προστάττει καταλευσθῆναι, προσήκουσαν οἶμαι δίκην ὑπολαβὼν τὴν διὰ λίθων κατ' ἀνδρὸς λιθίνην καὶ ἀπόκροτον ψυχὴν ἔχοντος καὶ ἅμα βουλόμενος πάντας τοὺς ἀπὸ τοῦ ἔθνους συνεφάσασθαι τῆς κολάσεως, οὓς ἦδει σφόδρα τρα-χέως ἐνεγκόντας καὶ φονῶντας· μόνης δ' ὡς ἔοικε τῆς διὰ βλημάτων ἔμελλον αἰ τοσαῦται μυριάδες ἐφάπτεσθαι.
- 203 Μετὰ δὲ τὴν τοῦ ἀνοσίου καὶ παλαμναίου τίσιν ἐγράφη διάταγμα καινόν, οὐκ ἂν ποτε προ-ηγουμένης ἀξιωθὲν γραφῆς, ἀλλ' αἱ ἀπροσδόκητοι [166] νεωτεροποιῶνται καινοὺς νόμους εἰς ἀνακοπὴν | ἁμαρ-τημάτων ἐπιζητοῦσιν. αὐτίκα γοῦν νομοθετεῖται ταῖδε· ὃς ἂν καταράσῃται θεόν, ἁμαρτίας ἔνοχος

---

<sup>a</sup> Or "immediately," as Mangey and others take it. But the use of αὐτίκα—"for example" is common enough and 548

MOSES II. 200-203

by listening to such words. And was not the tongue 200 of him who uttered such a blasphemy paralysed?
and the ears of him who was to hear it blocked?
Surely they would have been, were it not otherwise provided by justice, who holds that over nothing which is extremely good or exceedingly bad should a veil be thrown, but would have them submitted to the clearest test of their goodness or badness, that it may award approval to the one and punishment to the other. Moses, therefore, ordered the man to be 201 haled to prison and put in chains, and implored God, to Whose mercy he appealed, pleading the enforcement of the senses by which we see what by rights we should not see and hear what we should not hear, to shew what should be done to the author of this impious and unholy crime, so monstrous and unheard-of. God commanded that he should be 202 stoned, holding, I suppose, that stoning was the fitting punishment for a man of a hard and stony soul, and also desiring that the work of vengeance should be shared by all the people, who, as He knew, were deeply indignant and desired the death of the offender. And execution by missiles appeared to be the only mode in which so many thousands could take part.

When this impious malefactor had paid the penalty, 203 a new ordinance was drawn up. Previous to this, no such enactment would have seemed to be required.
But unexpected disorders demand new laws as a check to offences. And so on this occasion<sup>a</sup> the following law was promulgated: Whoever curses god, let him bear the guilt of his sin, but he that fits in well with the general statement in the preceding sentence.

PHILO

ἔστω, ὃς δ' ἂν ὀνομάσῃ τὸ ὄνομα κυρίου, θνησκέτω.
 204 εὖ γ', ὧ πάνσοφε, μόνος ἀμιγοῦς ἡκρατίσω σοφίας· τοῦ καταρᾶσθαι χεῖρον τὸ ὀνομάζειν ὑπέιληφας<sup>1</sup> οὐ γὰρ ἂν τὸν μὲν βαρύτερον ἀσέβημα εἰργασμένον ἐπεκούφιζες διημαρτηκόσιν ἐπιεικέστερον συν-τάττων, κατὰ δὲ τοῦ βραχύτερον ἡδίκηκεναι δόξαντος τὴν ἀνωτάτω τιμωρίαν, θάνατον, ὠρίζες.
 205 XXXVIII. ἀλλ' ὡς ἔοικε "θεοῦ" τὰ νῦν οὐχὶ τοῦ πρώτου καὶ γεννητοῦ τῶν ὄλων ἀλλὰ τῶν ἐν ταῖς πόλεσι μέμνηται· ψευδώνυμοι δ' εἰσὶ γραφῶν καὶ πλαστῶν τέχναις δημιουργούμενοι· ξοάνων γὰρ καὶ ἀγαλμάτων καὶ τοιουτοτρόπων ἀφιδρυμάτων ἢ οἰκουμένη μεστή γέγονεν, ὧν τῆς βλασφημίας ἀνέχειν ἀναγκαῖον, ἵνα μηδεὶς ἐθίζηται τῶν Μωυ-σέως γνωρίμων συνόλως θεοῦ προσρήσεως ἀλογεῖν· 206 ἀξιονικοτάτη γὰρ καὶ ἀξιέραστος ἡ κλήσις. εἰ δέ τις οὐ λέγω βλασφημήσειεν εἰς τὸν ἀνθρώπων καὶ θεῶν κύριον, ἀλλὰ καὶ τολμήσειεν ἀκαίρως αὐτοῦ φθέγξασθαι τοῦνομα, θάνατον ὑπομεινάτω τὴν δί-207 κην. οὐδὲ γὰρ τῶν φυτευσάντων καίτοι θνητῶν ὑπαρχόντων οἷς μέλει γονέων τιμῆς τὰ ὀνόματα προφέρουσιν, ἀλλὰ τὰ κύρια διὰ τὸν ἐπ' αὐτοῖς σεβασμὸν ἡσυχάζοντες τοῖς τῆς φύσεως ἀνακαλοῦσι πατέρα καὶ μητέρα προσαγορεύοντες, δι' ὧν εὐθὺς αἰνίττονται τὰς ἐξ ἐκείνων ἀνυπερβλήτους εὐερ-

<sup>1</sup> Cohn puts a note of interrogation here, which I do not understand. Better perhaps, as two mss., ὑπειληφώς.

<sup>a</sup> So LXX Lev. xxiv. 15, 16. E.V. "Whosoever curseth his 550

MOSES II. 204-207

nameth the name of the Lord let him die.<sup>a</sup> Well 204 hast thou said, thou wisest of men, who alone hast drunk deep of the untempered wine of wisdom.
 Thou hast held the naming to be worse than the cursing, for thou couldst not be treating lightly one guilty of the gravest impiety and ranking him with the milder offenders while thou didst decree the extreme penalty of death to one who was judged to have committed the lesser iniquity. XXXVIII. No, 205 clearly by "god," he is not here alluding to the Primal God, the Begetter of the Universe, but to the gods of the different cities who are falsely so called, being fashioned by the skill of painters and sculptors. For the world as we know it is full of idols of wood and stone, and suchlike images. We must refrain from speaking insultingly of these, lest any of Moses' disciples get into the habit of treating lightly the name "god" in general, for it is a title worthy of the highest respect and love. But if any- 206 one, I will not say blasphemes the Lord of gods and men, but even ventures to utter His Name unseasonably, let him suffer the penalty of death. For, 207 even in the case of our own parents, though they are but mortals, all who have regard for the honour due to parentage abstain from using their personal names, and, leaving these unsaid, call them instead by the terms of natural relationship—father and mother—and their so addressing them is seen at once to be an indirect acknowledgement of unsurpassed benefits conferred by them and an expression of God shall bear his sin. And he that blasphemeth the name of the Lord shall surely be put to death." Philo's explanation is repeated by Josephus, Ant. iv. 207, Ap. ii. 237, with reference to Ex. xxii. 28, "Thou shalt not revile God," where the LXX has θεούς.

PHILO

208 γεσίας καὶ τὴν αὐτῶν εὐχάριστον διάθεσιν. ἔτι νῦν<sup>1</sup> συγγνώμης ἀξιούσθωσαν οἱ κατ' ἐπισυρμὸν γλώττης ἀκαιρευόμενοι καὶ λόγων ἀναπλήρωμα ποιούμενοι τὸ ἀγιώτατον καὶ θεῖον ὄνομα.

209 XXXIX. Μετὰ δὲ τὴν τοῦ γεννητοῦ τῶν ὄλων τιμὴν τὴν ἱερὰν ἑβδόμην ἐσέμνυνεν ὁ προφήτης ἰδὼν αὐτῆς ὀξυωπεστέροις ὄμμασι κάλλος ἐξαισίον ἐνεσφραγισμένον οὐρανῷ τε καὶ τῷ σύμπαντι κόσμῳ καὶ ὑπὸ τῆς φύσεως αὐτῆς ἀγαλματοφορού-

210 μενον. εὗρισκε γὰρ αὐτὴν τὸ μὲν πρῶτον ἀμήτορα, γενεᾶς τῆς θήλεος ἀμέτοχον, ἐκ μόνου πατρὸς σπαρέϊσαν ἄνευ σπορᾶς καὶ γεννηθεῖσαν ἄνευ κηρύσεως· ἔπειτα δ' οὐ ταῦτα μόνον κατείδεν, ὅτι παγκάλῃ καὶ ἀμήτωρ, ἀλλ' ὅτι καὶ ἀειπάρθενος,

[167] οὔτ' ἐκ μητρὸς οὔτε μήτηρ οὔτ' ἐκ | φθορᾶς οὔτε φθαρησομένη· εἴτ' ἐκ τρίτου κατενόησεν αὐτὴν ἐξ-ετάζων καὶ κόσμου γενέθλιον, ἣν ἑορτάζει μὲν οὐρανός, ἑορτάζει δὲ γῆ καὶ τὰ ἐν γῆ γανύμενα καὶ

211 ἐνευφραϊνόμενα τῇ παναρμονίῳ ἑβδομάδι. ταύτης ἔνεκα τῆς αἰτίας ὁ πάντα μέγας Μωυσῆς ἐδικαίωσε τοὺς ἐγγραφέντας αὐτοῦ τῇ ἱερᾷ πολιτείᾳ θεσμοῖς φύσεως ἐπομένους πανηγυρίζειν, ἐν ἰλαραῖς δι-ἀγοντας εὐθυμίαις, ἀνέχοντας μὲν ἔργων καὶ τεχνῶν τῶν εἰς πορισμὸν καὶ πραγματειῶν ὅσαι κατὰ βίου ζήτησι, ἀγοντας δ' ἐκεχειρίαν καὶ διαφειμένους πάσης ἐπιπόνου καὶ καματηρᾶς φροντίδος, σχολά-

<sup>1</sup> Cohn would read ἔτι τοίνυν comparing De Abr. 158. But ἐπιχειρῶμεν there is the interrogative subjunctive, ἀξιούσθωσαν here imperative, i.e. "let them still be thought worthy, if it is possible" (which of course it is not). In this case it seems to be better to retain νῦν, and to expunge the mark of interrogation which Cohn places after ὄνομα.

their own standing gratitude. After this, can we 208 still think worthy of pardon those, who, with a reckless tongue, make unseasonable use of the most holy name of the Deity and treat it as a mere expletive ?

XXXIX. After this honour paid to the Parent 209 of All, the prophet magnified the holy seventh day, seeing with his keener vision its marvellous beauty stamped upon heaven and the whole world and enshrined in nature itself. For he found that she 210 was in the first place motherless, exempt from female parentage, begotten by the Father alone, without begetting, brought to the birth, yet not carried in the womb. Secondly, he saw not only these, that she was all lovely and motherless, but that she was also ever virgin, neither born of a mother nor a mother herself, neither bred from corruption nor doomed to suffer corruption.<sup>a</sup> Thirdly, as he scanned her, he recognized in her the birthday of the world,<sup>b</sup> a feast celebrated by heaven, celebrated by earth and things on earth as they rejoice and exult in the full harmony of the sacred number. For this cause, Moses, great in everything, determined 211 that all whose names were written on his holy burgess-roll and who followed the laws of nature should hold high festival through hours of cheerful gaiety, abstaining from work and profit-making crafts and professions <sup>c</sup> and business pursued to get a livelihood, and enjoy a respite from labour released from weary and painful care. But this leisure should <sup>a</sup> Cf. De Op. 100 and Leg. All. i. 15, and further App. p. 609.

<sup>b</sup> Cf. Mos. i. 207 and note.

<sup>c</sup> Both the mental and the manual arts are included under τέχναι, cf. § 219.

PHILO

- ζοντας οὐχ ὡς ἔνιοι γέλωσιν ἢ παιδιαῖς ἢ μίμων ἢ ὄρχηστῶν ἐπιδείξεισι, περὶ ἃς κηραίνουσι καὶ δυσθανατοῦσιν οἱ θεατρομανοῦντες καὶ διὰ τῶν ἡγεμονικωτάτων αἰσθήσεων, ὀράσεως καὶ ἀκοῆς, 212 ἀλλὰ μόνῳ τῷ φιλοσοφεῖν· οὐχ ὅπερ μεθοδεύουσιν οἱ λογοθῆραι καὶ σοφισταὶ πιπράσκοντες ὡς ἄλλο τι τῶν ὠνίων ἐπ' ἀγορᾶς δόγματα καὶ λόγους, οἱ φιλοσοφία κατὰ φιλοσοφίας (ὦ γῆ καὶ ἥλιε!) χρώμενοι δι' αἰῶνος οὐκ ἐρυθριῶσιν, ἀλλὰ τῷ τῷ ὄντι φιλοσοφεῖν, ὅπερ ἐκ τριῶν συνύφανται, βουλευ-μάτων καὶ λόγων καὶ πράξεων, εἰς ἓν εἶδος ἡρμοσμένων πρὸς κτῆσιν καὶ ἀπόλαυσιν εὐδαιμονίας.
- 213 τούτου δὴ τις ἀλογήσας τοῦ διατάγματος, ἔτι τοὺς χρησμοὺς ἐναύλους ἔχων τοὺς περὶ τῆς ἱερᾶς ἐβδόμης, οὓς ἐθέσπισεν ἄνευ προφήτου ὁ θεὸς διὰ φωνῆς—τὸ παραδοξότατον—ὄρατῆς, ἢ τῶν παρατυγχανόντων ὀφθαλμοὺς ὤτων ἐπήγειρε μᾶλλον, ἐπὶ φρυγανισμόν ἐξήει διὰ μέσου τοῦ στρατοπέδου πάντα εἰδὼς ἐν ταῖς σκηναῖς ἡρε-μοῦντας, καὶ δρῶν ἔτι τὰδίκημα καταφανῆς ὑπὲρ 214 τοῦ μὴ λαθεῖν γίνεται. πυλῶν γὰρ ἔξω προελθόντες τινὲς εἰς ἐρημίαν, ἢ ἐν τῷ καθαρωτάτῳ καὶ ἡσυχάζοντι εὐξωνται, θεῶν ἔκνομον ἰδόντες, ξύλων ὕλην συγκομίζοντα, καὶ δυσανασχετήσαντες ἐμέλλησαν μὲν αὐτὸν ἀνελεῖν, λογισμῷ δὲ τὸ παρακекινημένον τῆς ὀργῆς ἐπισχόντες, ἵνα μήτε ἰδιῶται

<sup>a</sup> For §§ 213-220 see Num. xv. 32-36.

<sup>b</sup> Referring to LXX Ex. xx. 18 "all the people saw the voice," cf. De Mig. 47.

<sup>c</sup> i.e. providence to ensure his conviction caused this certain evidence to be forthcoming.

MOSES II. 211-214

be occupied, not as by some in bursts of laughter or sports or shows of mimes and dancers on which stage-struck fools waste away their strength almost to the point of death, and through the dominant senses of sight and hearing reduce to slavery their natural queen, the soul, but by the pursuit of wisdom only. And the wisdom must not be that of 212 the systems hatched by the word-catchers and sophists who sell their tenets and arguments like any bit of merchandise in the market, men who for ever pit philosophy against philosophy without a blush, O earth and sun, but the true philosophy which is woven from three strands—thoughts, words and deeds—united into a single piece for the attainment and enjoyment of happiness. <sup>a</sup> Now, a certain 213 man, setting at nought this ordinance, though the echoes of the divine commands about the sacredness of the seventh day were ringing in his ears, commands promulgated by God not through His prophet but by a voice which, strange paradox, was visible <sup>b</sup> and aroused the eyes rather than the ears of the bystanders, went forth through the midst of the camp to gather firewood, knowing that all were resting in their tents. But that his crime might not remain hidden, <sup>c</sup> he was observed while still engaged in the wicked deed. For some persons who had gone out of the gates into 214 the wilderness to pray in the quiet open solitude <sup>d</sup> saw this lawless sight, a man gathering sticks for fuel, and, hardly able to control themselves, they were minded to slay him. Reflection, however, caused them to restrain the fierceness of their anger. They

<sup>d</sup> LXX (xv. 32). "And the children of Israel were in the wilderness and they found," etc., E.V. "while they were . . . they found."

PHILO

- πρὸ ἀρχόντων κολάζειν τινὰ δοκῶσι καὶ ταυτ' ἀκριτον, κὰν ἄλλως τὸ παρανόμημα ἢ ἐμφανές, μήτε τοῦ περὶ τὴν ἡμέραν εὐαγοῦς μίασμα φόνου, κὰν δικαιοτάτος ἢ, προσάψηται, συλλαβόντες ἄγουσιν αὐτὸν ἐπὶ τὸν ἄρχοντα, ᾧ συνήδρευον μὲν οἱ ἱερεῖς, παρειστήκει δὲ σύμπασα ἢ πληθὺς πρὸς
- 215 ἀκρόασιν. ἔθος γὰρ ἦν, αἰεὶ μὲν κατὰ τὸ παρεῖκον, προηγουμένως δὲ ταῖς ἐβδόμαις, ὡς ἐδήλωσα καὶ πρόσθεν, φιλοσοφεῖν, τοῦ μὲν ἡγεμόνος ὑφηγου-
- [168] μένου καὶ διδάσκοντος ἃ τε | χρῆ πράττειν καὶ λέγειν, τῶν δ' εἰς καλοκάγαθίαν ἐπιδιδόντων καὶ
- 216 βελτιουμένων τά τε ἦθη καὶ τὸν βίον. ἀφ' οὗ καὶ εἰσέτι νῦν φιλοσοφοῦσι ταῖς ἐβδόμαις Ἰουδαῖοι τὴν πάτριον φιλοσοφίαν τὸν χρόνον ἐκείνον ἀναθέντες ἐπιστήμῃ καὶ θεωρίᾳ τῶν περὶ φύσιν· τὰ γὰρ κατὰ πόλεις προσευκτήρια τί ἕτερόν ἐστιν ἢ διδασκαλεῖα φρονήσεως καὶ ἀνδρείας καὶ σωφροσύνης καὶ δικαιοσύνης εὐσεβείας τε καὶ ὁσιότητος καὶ συμπάσης ἀρετῆς, ἣ κατανοεῖται καὶ κατορθοῦται τά τε ἀνθρώπεια καὶ θεῖα;
- 217 XL. Τότε μὲν οὖν εἰς εἰρκτὴν ὁ τηλικούτον ἀσέβημα δράσας ἀπάγεται. Μωυσῆς δὲ ἀπορῶν ὁ τι χρῆ παθεῖν τὸν ἄνθρωπον—ἦδει γὰρ ἄξια θανάτου διαπεπραγμένον, ἀλλὰ τίς ἂν γένοιτο τρόπος ἀρμόζων τῆς τιμωρίας;—ἀφικνεῖται πρὸς τὸ ἀόρατον ἀοράτῳ ψυχῇ δικαστήριον καὶ ἐπυνθάνετο τοῦ καὶ πρὶν ἀκοῦσαι πάντ' ἐπισταμένου δικα-
- 218 στοῦ, τί κέκρικεν. ὁ δ' ἀποφαίνεται τὴν γνώσιν,

<sup>a</sup> Or "of theology." See on De Abr. 99.

<sup>b</sup> According to the narrative as it stands, sabbath-breaking had already been declared a capital crime, Ex. xxxi. 14, xxxv. 2.

MOSES II. 214-218

did not wish to make it appear that they who were but private citizens took upon themselves the ruler's duty of punishment, and that too without a trial, however clear was the offence in other ways, or that the pollution of bloodshed, however justly deserved, should profane the sacredness of the day. Accordingly they arrested him, and took him before the ruler beside whom the priests were seated, while the whole multitude stood around to listen ; for it was 215 customary on every day when opportunity offered, and pre-eminently on the seventh day, as I have explained above, to pursue the study of wisdom with the ruler expounding and instructing the people what they should say and do, while they received edification and betterment in moral principles and conduct. Even now this practice is retained, and 216 the Jews every seventh day occupy themselves with the philosophy of their fathers, dedicating that time to the acquiring of knowledge and the study of the truths of nature.<sup>a</sup> For what are our places of prayer throughout the cities but schools of prudence and courage and temperance and justice and also of piety, holiness and every virtue by which duties to God and men are discerned and rightly performed?

XL. So, then, the perpetrator of this great sin 217 against God was for the time being taken into custody. But Moses was in doubt as to what should be done to him. He knew that the action deserved death,<sup>b</sup> but what would be the proper method of punishment? So, then, in spirit, he approached the judgement-seat, invisible even as the spirit which sought it, and asked of the Judge Who knows all before He hears it what His sentence was. That Judge declared His decision 218

PHILO

- ὅτι καὶ θνήσκειν ὀφείλει καὶ οὐχ ἑτέρως ἢ καταλευσθεῖς, ἐπειδὴ καὶ τούτῳ καθάπερ καὶ τῷ προτέρῳ μετέβαλεν ὁ νοῦς εἰς κωφὴν λίθον εἰργασμένῳ τελεώτατον παρανόμημα, ᾧ σχεδὸν πάντα τὰλλα ἐμφέρεται, ὅσα περὶ τοῦ σεβασμοῦ τῆς
- 219 ἐβδόμης νενομοθέτηται. διὰ τί; ὅτι οὐχ αἱ βάνησσοι μόνον ἀλλὰ καὶ αἱ ἄλλαι τέχναι καὶ πραγματεῖαι καὶ μάλιστα αἱ περὶ πορισμὸν καὶ βίου ζήτησιν ἢ διὰ πυρός εἰσιν ἢ οὐκ ἄνευ τῶν διὰ πυρός· ὅθεν ἀπαγορεύει πολλάκις ἐν ταῖς ἐβδόμαις πῦρ ἐναύειν ὡς ἀρχηγικώτατον αἴτιον καὶ πρεσβύτατον ἔργον, οὗ ἡσυχάσαντος ἐνενοήθη καὶ τὰ κατὰ
- 220 μέρος ὡς εἰκὸς συνησυχάσειν. ὕλη δὲ ξύλα πυρός, ὡς τὸν ξυλιζόμενον ἀδελφὸν καὶ συγγενὲς ἀμάρτημα τῷ καίοντι δρᾶν, τὸ παρανόμημα διπλασιάζοντα, τῇ μὲν ὅτι προσταχθὲν ἡρεμεῖν συνεκόμιζε, τῇ δ' ὅτι καὶ τοιαῦτα συνεκόμιζεν, ἃ πυρός ἐστὶν ὕλη, τῆς τῶν τεχνῶν ἀρχῆς.
- 221 XLI. "Ἀμφῶ μὲν οὖν τὰ εἰρημένα τιμωρίας ἀσεβῶν περιέχει διὰ πεύσεως καὶ ἀποκρίσεως βεβαιουμένας. ἕτερα δὲ δύο ἐστὶν οὐχὶ τῆς αὐτῆς ἀλλὰ διαφορούσης ἰδέας, ὧν τὸ μὲν περὶ κλήρου
- [169] διαδοχῆς, τὸ δ' ὅσα τῷ δοκεῖν παρὰ καιρὸν | ἐπιτελουμένης ἱερουργίας, περὶ ἧς λεκτέον πρότερον.
- 222 τὴν ἀρχὴν τῆς ἑαρινῆς ἰσημερίας πρῶτον ἀναγράφει μῆνα Μωυσῆς ἐν ταῖς τῶν ἐνιαυτῶν περιόδοις ἀναθεῖς οὐχ ὥσπερ ἐνιοὶ χρόνῳ τὰ πρεσβεῖα μᾶλλον ἢ ταῖς τῆς φύσεως χάρισιν, ἃς ἀνέτειλεν ἀνθρώποις·

<sup>a</sup> Only found in Ex. xxxv. 3, though the command to bake or boil the manna before the Sabbath, Ex. xvi. 23, may be taken to imply it. (Driver.)

<sup>b</sup> For §§ 222-232 see Num. ix. 1-14.

MOSES II. 218-222

that the man should die, and by no other death but stoning ; since in him, as in the earlier culprit, the mind had been changed into a senseless stone by a deed which was the perfection of wickedness, and covered practically all the prohibitions enacted for the honouring of the seventh day. How is this ? 219 Because not merely the mechanical but also the other arts and occupations, particularly those which are undertaken for profit and to get a livelihood, are carried on directly or indirectly by the instrumentality of fire. And, therefore, he often <sup>a</sup> forbids the lighting of a fire on the seventh day, regarding it as the cause which lay at the root of all and as the primary activity ; and, if this ceased, he considered that other particular activities would naturally cease also. But 220 sticks are the material for fire, so that by picking them up he committed a sin which was brother to and of the same family as the sin of burning them. And his was a double crime ; it lay first in the mere act of collecting, in defiance of the commandment to rest from work, secondly in the nature of what he collected, being materials for fire which is the basis of the arts.

XLI. Both the incidents mentioned above are con- 221 cerned with the punishment of impious persons, ratified by means of question and answer. There are two others of a different kind : one connected with the succession to an inheritance, the other with a rite performed at apparently a wrong season. It will be better to take the latter example before the other. <sup>b</sup> Moses dates the first month of the year's 222 revolution at the beginning of the spring equinox. And, in doing so, he is not like some giving the place of honour to the actual time but rather to the gifts of nature which she raises up for men. For at the equinox

PHILO

κατὰ γὰρ ταύτην τὰ μὲν σπαρτά, ἡ ἀναγκαία τροφή, τελειογονεῖται, ὁ δὲ τῶν δένδρων καρπὸς ἡβώντων ἄρτι γεννᾶται δευτέραν ἔχων τάξιν, ὅθεν καὶ ὀψίγονός ἐστιν· αἰεὶ γὰρ ἐν τῇ φύσει τὰ μὴ λίαν

223 ἀναγκαῖα τῶν σφόδρα ἀναγκαίων δεύτερα. σφόδρα μὲν οὖν ἀναγκαῖα πυροὶ τε καὶ κριθαὶ καὶ ὅσα ἄλλα εἶδη τροφῆς, ὧν ἄνευ ζῆν οὐκ ἔστιν· ἔλαιον δὲ καὶ οἶνος καὶ ἀκρόδρυα οὐχὶ τῶν ἀναγκαίων, ἐπεὶ καὶ δίχα τούτων ἄχρι μακροτάτου γήρως παρα-

224 τείνοντες εἰς πολυετίαν βιοῦσιν ἄνθρωποι. τῷ δὴ μηνὶ τούτῳ περὶ τεσσαρεσκαίδεκάτην ἡμέραν, μέλλοντος τοῦ σεληνιακοῦ κύκλου γίνεσθαι πλησι-φαοῦς, ἄγεται τὰ διαβατήρια, δημοφανῆς ἑορτή, τὸ Χαλδαῖστί λεγόμενον Πάσχα, ἐν ἧ οὐχ οἱ μὲν ἰδιῶται προσάγουσι τῷ βωμῷ τὰ ἱερεῖα, θύουσι δ' οἱ ἱερεῖς, ἀλλὰ νόμου προστάξει σύμπαν τὸ ἔθνος ἱεράται, τῶν κατὰ μέρος ἐκάστου τὰς ὑπὲρ αὐτοῦ

225 θυσίας ἀνάγοντός τε καὶ χειρουργούντος. ὁ μὲν οὖν ἄλλος ἅπας λεὼς ἐγεγήθει καὶ φαιδρὸς ἦν, ἐκάστου νομίζοντος ἱερωσύνην τετιμῆσθαι· δεδακρυμένοι δ' ἕτεροι καὶ στένοντες διῆγον, οἰκείων αὐτοῖς ἔναγχος τετελευτηκότων, οὓς πενθοῦντες διπλῆ κατεῖχοντο λύπη, προσειληφότες τῇ διὰ τοὺς ἀποθανόντας συγγενεῖς καὶ τὴν ἐκ τοῦ στερηθῆναι τῆς περὶ τὴν ἱερουργίαν ἡδονῆς τε καὶ τιμῆς, οἷς οὐδὲ καθάρασθαι καὶ περιρράνασθαι κατ' ἐκείνην τὴν ἡμέραν ἐξεγένετο, μήπω τοῦ πένθους ὑπερ-

226 ἡμέρου καὶ ἐκπροθέσμου γεγονότος. οὗτοι μετὰ τὴν πανήγυριν προσελθόντες τῷ ἄρχοντι συννοίας μεστοὶ καὶ κατηφείας τὰ συμβεβηκότα διηγήσαντο, τὴν ὑπόγυον τῶν συγγενῶν τελευτήν, τὸ πένθος ᾧ κατ' ἀναγκαῖον ἐχρήσαντο, τὸ μὴ δυνηθῆναι διὰ

MOSES II. 222-226

the corn crops, our necessary food, become ripe, while on the trees, which are in full bloom, the fruit is just beginning to appear. This ranks second to the corn, and therefore is a later growth. For in nature what is a less pressing always comes after a really pressing necessity. Now, wheat and barley and the other 223 kinds of food without which life is impossible are pressing necessities, but wine and olive oil and tree fruits do not come under this head, as men continue their life for many years and reach extreme old age without them. In this month, about the fourteenth 224 day, when the disc of the moon is becoming full, is held the commemoration of the crossing, a public festival called in Hebrew Pasch, on which the victims are not brought to the altar by the laity and sacrificed by the priests, but, as commanded by the law, the whole nation acts as priest, each individual bringing what he offers on his own behalf and dealing with it with his own hands. Now, 225 while all the rest of the people were joyful and cheerful, each feeling that he had the honour of priesthood, there were others passing the time in tears and sorrow. They had lost relations lately by death, and in mourning them they suffered a double sorrow. Added to their grief for their dead kinsfolk was that which they felt at the loss of the pleasure and honour of the sacred rite. For they were not even allowed to purify or besprinkle themselves with holy water on that day, since their mourning had still some days to run and had not passed the appointed term. These 226 persons, after the festival, came to the ruler full of gloom and depression and put the case before him—the still recent death of their kinsfolk, the necessity of performing their duty as mourners and their con-

PHILO

- 227 τούτο μετασχεῖν τῆς τῶν διαβατηρίων θυσίας. εἴτ' ἐδέοντο μὴ ἔλαττον τῶν ἄλλων ἐνέγκασθαι μηδὲ τὸ ἐπὶ τοῖς ἀποθανοῦσιν οἰκείοις ἀτύχημα ἐν ἀδικήματος μέρει καταριθμηθῆναι τιμωρίαν ἐργασάμενον
- [170] πρὸ | ἐλέου· νομίσαι γὰρ ἂν χείρονα παθεῖν τῶν ἀποθανόντων, εἴ γε τοῖς μὲν οὐδενός ἐστιν ἀντίληψις ἔτι τῶν ἀβουλήτων, οἱ δὲ ζῶντες δόξουσι τεθνάναι
- 228 τὸν μετ' αἰσθήσεως θάνατον. XLII. ταῦτ' ἀκούσας ἑώρα μὲν καὶ τὴν δικαιολογίαν οὐκ ἀπωδὸν καὶ τὴν τοῦ μὴ ἱερουργῆσαι πάλιν πρόφασιν ἀναγκαίαν καὶ τὸ συμπαθὲς ἀνακεκραμένον τούτοις, ἐπαμφοτερίζων δὲ τὴν γνώμην καὶ ὥσπερ ἐπὶ πλάστιγγος ἀντιρρέπων—τῇ μὲν γὰρ ἑταλάντευεν ὁ ἔλεος καὶ τὰ δίκαια, τῇ δ' ἀντέβριθεν ὁ νόμος τῆς τῶν διαβατηρίων θυσίας, ἐν ᾧ καὶ πρῶτος μὴν καὶ ἡμέρα τεσσαρεσκαίδεκάτῃ δεδήλωται τῆς ἱερουργίας—, ἀρνήσεως καὶ συγκαταθέσεως μεταξὺ φορούμενος ἰκετεύει τὸν θεὸν δικαστὴν γενέσθαι καὶ χρησμῶ
- 229 τὴν κρίσιν ἀναφῆναι. ὁ δ' ἐπακούσας θεσπίζει λόγιον οὐ περὶ ὧν ἐνετεύχθη μόνον ἀλλὰ καὶ περὶ τῶν αὐθὺς ποτε γενησομένων, εἰ ταῖς αὐταῖς χρῆσαιτο συντυχίαις· ἐπιδαφιλευόμενος δὲ καὶ περὶ τῶν κατ' ἄλλας αἰτίας οὐ δυνηθέντων ἱερουργῆσαι
- 230 μετὰ παντὸς τοῦ ἔθνους προσεπιθεσπίζει. τίνα οὖν ἐστὶ τὰ περὶ τούτων χρησθέντα λόγια, μηνυτέον. “ συγγενικὸν ” φησὶ “ πένθος ἀναγκαῖα μὲν τοῖς ἀφ' αἵματος ἀνία, γράφεται δ' οὐκ ἐν πλημμελείαις.
- 231 ἕως μὲν οὖν ἐμπρόθεσμόν ἐστιν, ἔξω περιβόλων

MOSES II. 226-231

sequent inability to take part in the sacrifice of the crossing-feast. Then they prayed that they might 227 not fare worse than the others, and that the misfortune which they had sustained in the death of their relations might not be counted as misconduct entailing punishment rather than pity. In that case they considered that their fate would be worse than that of the dead, for they have no longer any perception of their troubles, while they themselves would be suffering a living death, in which they still retained consciousness. XLII. Moses, hearing this, 228 recognized the reasonableness of their claim, and also the cogency of their excuse for absenting themselves from the sacrifice ; and with these was mingled a feeling of sympathy. Yet he wavered in his judgment, and oscillated as on a balance : one scale was weighed down by pity and justice, while in the other lay as a counterpoise the law of the Paschal sacrifices in which both the first month and the fourteenth day were clearly appointed for the rite. So, vacillating between refusal and assent, he besought God to act as judge and to give an oracle declaring his decision. And God hearkened to him and vouchsafed an answer 229 revealing His will, touching not only those for whom the prophet interceded but those of future generations who might find themselves in the same case. And, His grace abounding further, He included in the divine edict those who for other reasons might be unable to join the whole nation in a sacred service. It is right to state what the pronouncements thus 230 given were. " Mourning for kinsfolk," He said, " is an affliction which the family cannot avoid, but it does not count as an offence. While it is still running 231 its appointed course, it should be banished from the ἱερῶν ἐλαυνέσθω, οὓς ἀπὸ παντὸς ἀγνεύειν οὐχ ἔκουσίου μόνον ἀλλὰ καὶ τοῦ μὴ κατὰ γνώμην μιάσματος δεῖ· γενομένου δ' ἐκπροθέσμου, μὴ στερέσθωσαν ἰσομοιρίας τῆς ἐν ταῖς ἱερουργίαις, ἵνα μὴ προσθήκη τετελευτηκότων οἱ ζῶντες ὦσιν· ἴτωσαν δὲ ἅτε δεῦτεροι δευτέρῳ μηνί, πάλιν τεσ-σαρεσκαϊδεκάτῃ ἡμέρᾳ, καὶ θυέτωσαν κατὰ τὰ αὐτὰ τοῖς προτέροις καὶ τῷ θύματι χρήσθωσαν ὡς 232 ἐκεῖνοι νόμῳ καὶ τρόπῳ τῷ παραπλησίῳ. τὰ δ' αὐτὰ ἐπιτετράφθω καὶ τοῖς μὴ διὰ πένθος ἀλλὰ μακρᾶς χάριν ἀποδημίας κωλυμένοις ἅμα τῷ παντὶ ἔθνει συνιερουργεῖν· οὐ γὰρ οἱ ξενιτεύοντες ἢ ἐτέρωθι οἰκοῦντες ἀδικοῦσιν, ὡς στέρεσθαι τῆς ἴσης τιμῆς, καὶ ταῦτα μὴ χωρούσης διὰ πολυανθρωπίαν τὸ ἔθνος μιᾶς χώρας, ἀλλ' ἀποικίας πανταχόσε διαπεμφαμένης."

PHILO

233 XLIII. Τοσαῦτα διειλεγμένους περὶ τῶν ὑστερη-σάντων μὲν ἅμα τῷ πλήθει θῦσαι τὰ διαβατήρια κατὰ συντυχίας ἀβουλήτους, ἐκπλήσαι δ' εἰ καὶ ὀψὲ ἀλλ' οὖν ἀναγκαίως τὸ ἐλλειφθὲν σπουδασάντων, ἐπὶ τελευταῖον μέτειμι διάταγμα τὸ περὶ τῆς τῶν κλήρων διαδοχῆς, ὅπερ ὁμοίως μικτὸν ἦν ἐκ πεύ-

234 σεως καὶ ἀποκρίσεως λαβὼν τὴν σύστασιν. ἦν τις ὄνομα Σαλπαάδ, ἀνὴρ δόκιμος καὶ φυλῆς οὐκ ἀσήμου· τούτῳ πέντε μὲν γίνονται θυγατέρες, υἱὸς

[171] | δὲ οὐδεὶς· αἱ μετὰ τὴν τελευταίαν τοῦ πατρὸς στέρησιν τῆς πατρῴας λήξεως ὑποποτήσασαι διὰ τὸ τὰς κληρουχίας ἄρρεσι δίδοσθαι προσίασιν τῷ ἡγεμόνι μετὰ τῆς ἀρμοττούσης κόραις αἰδοῦς, οὐ θηρώμεναι πλοῦτον, ἀλλὰ τοῦνομα καὶ ἀξίωμα

* For this idiomatic use of ἀναγκαίως see note on Quod Det. 160.

MOSES II. 231-234

sacred precincts which must be kept pure from all pollution, not only that which is voluntary but also that which is unintentionally incurred. But when its term is finished let not the mourners be denied an equal share in the sacred services, and thus the living be made an appendage to the dead. Let them form a second set to come on the second month and also on the fourteenth day, and sacrifice just as the first set, and observe a similar rule and method in dealing with the victims. The same permission also must be 232 given to those who are prevented from joining the whole nation in worship not by mourning but by absence in a distant country. For settlers abroad and inhabitants of other regions are not wrongdoers who deserve to be deprived of equal privileges, particularly if the nation has grown so populous that a single country cannot contain it and has sent out colonies in all directions."

XLIII. Having thus discussed the case of those 233 who, through adverse circumstances, failed to make the Paschal sacrifice with the mass of the nation, but were set upon repairing the omission if late yet as best they could,<sup>a</sup> I will pass on to the final ordinance, which concerns the succession to an inheritance. This, like the others, originated in a question and answer and was thus of a mixed character. <sup>b</sup> There 234 was a man called Zelophehad, highly reputed and of no mean tribe, who had five daughters and no son. After the death of their father, the daughters, suspecting that they would be deprived of the property he had left, since inheritances went in the male line, approached the ruler in all maidenly modesty, not in pursuit of wealth but from a desire to preserve the <sup>b</sup> For §§ 234-245 see Num. xxvii. 1-11.

PHILO

- 235 γλιχόμεναι διασῶσαι τοῦ πατρὸς καὶ φασιν· “ ὁ μὲν πατὴρ ἡμῶν ἐτελεύτησεν, ἐτελεύτησε δ’ ἐν οὐδεμιᾷ στάσει γενόμενος, ἐφ’ ᾧ συνέβη διαφθαρῆναι μυρρίους, ἀλλ’ ἐξήλωσε βίον ἀπράγμονα καὶ ἰδιώτην, εἰ μὴ ἄρα ἐν ἁμαρτία θετέον τὸ γενεᾶς ἄρρενος ἀμοιρῆσαι. πάρεσμεν δ’ ἡμεῖς ὅσα μὲν τῷ δοκεῖν ὀρφαναί, τὸ δ’ ἀληθές σοι χρησόμεναι πατρί· τοῦ γὰρ γεννήσαντος ὁ νόμιμος ἄρχων οἰκειότερος
- 236 ὑπηκόοις.” ὁ δὲ θαυμάσας τὴν φρόνησιν τῶν παρθένων καὶ τὴν πρὸς τὸν γεινάμενον εὐνοίαν ἐπέσχεν ὑφ’ ἐτέρας ἐλκόμενος φαντασίας, καθ’ ἣν τὰς κληρουχίας ἄνδρες ὄφειλον διανεμεσθαι γέρας ληψόμενοι στρατείας καὶ πολέμων οὓς διήθλησαν, γυναικὶ δ’ ἡ φύσις ἀσυλίαν τῶν τοιούτων ἀγωνισμάτων παρέχουσα δηλονότι καὶ τῶν ἐπ’ αὐτοῖς
- 237 τιθεμένων ἄθλων οὐ μεταδίδωσιν. ὅθεν εἰκότως τῆς διανοίας ἀμφικλινῶς ἐχούσης καὶ ἀντισπωμένης, ἀναφέρει τῷ θεῷ τὴν διαπόρησιν, ὃν ἦδει μόνον ἀψευδέσι καὶ ἀπλανεστάτοις κριτηρίοις τὰς κατὰ μικρὸν διαφορὰς διαστέλλοντα πρὸς ἐπίδειξιν
- 238 ἀληθείας καὶ δικαιοσύνης. ὁ δὲ ποιητὴς τῶν ὄλων, ὁ τοῦ κόσμου πατήρ, γῆν καὶ οὐρανὸν ὕδωρ τε καὶ ἀέρα καὶ ὅσα ἐκ τούτων ἐκάστου συνέχων καὶ διακρατῶν, ὁ θεῶν καὶ ἀνθρώπων ἡγεμῶν, οὐκ ἀπηξίωσε χρηματίσαι κόραις ὀρφαναῖς· χρηματίσας δὲ καὶ πλέον τι παρέσχεν ἢ κατὰ δικαστὴν ὁ εὐμενῆς καὶ ἰλεως, ὁ πάντα διὰ πάντων πεπληρωκὴς τῆς εὐεργέτιδος ἑαυτοῦ δυνάμεως· ἔπαινον γὰρ δι-
- 239 ἐξῆλθε τῶν παρθένων. ὧ δέσποτα, πῶς ἂν σέ τις

---

<sup>a</sup> Philo is trying to interpret verse 3, E.V. “ but he died in his own sin ” (i.e. in the ordinary sinfulness of a man). “ and

MOSES II. 235-239

name and reputation of their father. "Our father 235 died," they said, "but not in any of the risings in which, as it fell out, multitudes perished, but followed contentedly the quiet life of an ordinary citizen, and surely it is not to be accounted as a sin that he had no male issue.<sup>a</sup> We are here outwardly as orphans, but in reality hoping to find a father in you ; for a lawful ruler is closer akin to his subjects than he who begat them." Moses admired the good sense 236 of the maidens and their loyalty to their parent, but suspended his judgement, being influenced by another view, which holds that men should divide inheritances among themselves, to be taken as the reward for military service and the wars of which they have borne the brunt ; while nature, who grants to women exemption from such conflicts, clearly also refuses them a share in the prizes assigned thereto. Natur- 237 ally, therefore, in this wavering and undecided state of mind, he referred the difficulty to God, Who alone, as he knew, can distinguish by infallible and absolutely unerring tests the finest differences and thereby shew His truth and justice. And He, the Maker of 238 All, the Father of the World, Who holds firmly knit together heaven and earth and water and air and all that each of them produces, the Ruler of men and gods, did not disdain to give response to the petition of some orphan girls. And, with that response, He gave something more than a judge would give, so kind and gracious was He, Who has filled the universe through and through with His beneficent power ; for He stated His full approval of the maidens. O 239 Lord and Master, how can one hymn Thee ? What he had no sons." The LXX is hardly intelligible "because he died on account of his sin, and had no sons."

PHILO

ὕμνήσειε, ποίῳ στόματι, τίνι γλώττη, ποία φωνῆς ὀργανοποιία, ποίῳ ψυχῆς ἡγεμονικῶ; οἱ γὰρ ἄστέρες εἰς γενόμενοι χορὸς ἄσσονται τι μέλος ἐπάξιον; ὁ δ' οὐρανὸς ὅλος εἰς φωνὴν ἀναλυθεὶς δυνήσεται τι τῶν σῶν ἀρετῶν διηγήσασθαι μέρος; “ ὀρθῶς ” φησὶν “ ἐλάλησαν αἱ θυγατέρες 240 Σαλπαάδ.” τοῦθ' ἡλίκον ἐστὶν ἐγκώμιον θεοῦ μαρτυροῦντος, τίς οὐκ οἶδε; πάριτε νῦν, οἱ ἀλαζόνες, οἱ μέγα πνέοντες ἐπὶ ταῖς εὐπραγίαις, οἱ τοὺς αὐχένας πλέον τῆς φύσεως ἐπαίροντες καὶ τὰς ὀφρῦς ἀνεσπακότες, παρ' οἷς χηρεῖα μὲν γυναικῶν γέλως, [καὶ] οἰκτρὸν κακόν, ἐρημία δὲ παίδων

[172] ὀρφανῶν, | οἰκτρότερον τοῦ προτέρου, χλευάζεται·

241 καὶ κατιδόντες ὅτι οὕτω ταπεινοὶ καὶ ἀτυχεῖς εἶναι δοκοῦντες οὐκ ἐν ἐξουθενημένοις καὶ ἀφανέσι τάττονται παρὰ τῷ θεῷ, οὗ τῆς ἀρχῆς τὸ ἀτιμότητον μέρος εἰσὶν αἱ πανταχοῦ τῆς οἰκουμένης βασιλεῖαι, διότι καὶ ὁ τῆς γῆς ἅπας ἐν κύκλῳ περίβολος ἐσχατιὰ τῶν ἔργων ἐστὶν αὐτοῦ, δέξασθε

242 νουθεσίαν ἀναγκαίαν. ἐπαιέσας δ' ὅμως τὴν ἔντεξιν τῶν παρθένων οὔτε ταύτας ἀγεράστους κατέλιπεν οὐτ' εἰς τὴν ἴσην τιμὴν τοῖς ἀγωνισταῖς ἀνδράσι περιήγαγεν, ἀλλὰ τοῖς μὲν ὡς ἄθλα οἰκεῖα ἀπένειμε τὰς κληρουχίας ἀνθ' ὧν ἠνδραγαθίσαντο, τὰς δὲ χάριτος καὶ φιλανθρωπίας, οὐ γέρωσ, ἡξίωσεν· ὁ ἐναργέστατα παρίστησι διὰ τῶν ὀνομάτων “ δόμα ” λέγων καὶ “ δώσεις,” ἀλλ' οὐκ “ ἀπόδομα ” οὐδ' “ ἀποδώσεις ”· ταῦτα μὲν γὰρ ἴδια τῶν 568

MOSES II. 239-242

mouth, what tongue, what else of the instruments of speech, what mind, soul's dominant part, is equal to the task? If the stars become a single choir, will their song be worthy of Thee? If all heaven be resolved into sound, will it be able to recount any part of Thy excellences? "The daughters of Zelophehad have spoken rightly," He said. Who 240 can fail to know how great a commendation is this testimony from God? Come now, you boasters, with your windy pride in your prosperity, and your pose of perked up necks and lifted eyebrows, who treat widowhood, that piteous calamity, as a joke, and the still more piteous desolation of orphanhood as a matter for mockery. Mark how the persons 241 who seem thus lonely and unfortunate are not treated as nothing worth and negligible in the judgement of God, of Whose empire the least honoured parts are the kingdoms found everywhere in the civilized world; for even the whole compass of the round earth is but the outermost fringe of His works—mark this, I say, and learn its much-needed lesson. Still, 242 though he praised the petition of the maidens and refrained from leaving them empty-handed, he did not promote them to equal honour with the men who bore the brunt of conflict. To these he assigned the inheritances as prizes suitable to their feats of valour; the women he judged worthy of charity and kindness, not of reward for services. He shows this clearly by the words He uses. He says: "Gift" and "thou shall give,"<sup>a</sup> not "payment" and "thou shalt pay," for the latter pair are used when we receive what is λαμβάνοντων,<sup>1</sup> ἐκεῖνα δὲ τῶν χαριζομένων.

<sup>a</sup> Or "restore," "return." Cf. De Som. i. 100.

PHILO

- 243 XLIV. θεσπίσας δὲ περὶ ὧν ἐνετύγχανον αἱ ὀρφαναὶ παρθένοι καὶ καθολικώτερον τίθησι νόμον περὶ κλήρων διαδοχῆς, πρώτους μὲν υἱοὺς ἐπὶ μετουσίαν καλῶν τῶν πατρῶων, εἰ δὲ μὴ εἶεν υἱοί, δευτέρας θυγατέρας, αἷς φησι δεῖν περιτιθέσθαι τὸν κλῆρον ὡσανεὶ κόσμον ἔξωθεν, ἀλλ' οὐχ ὡς ἴδιον καὶ συγγενὲς κτῆμα· τὸ γὰρ περιτιθέμενον οὐδεμίαν οἰκείωσιν ἔχει πρὸς τὸ διακοσμούμενον, ἀρμονίας
- 244 καὶ ἐνώσεως ἀλλοτριούμενον. μετὰ δὲ θυγατέρας τρίτους ἀδελφοὺς καλεῖ, τετάρτην δὲ θείους πρὸς πατρός ἀπονέμει τάξιν, αἰνιττόμενος ὅτι καὶ πατέρες γένοιντ' ἂν υἱῶν κληρονόμοι· πάνυ γὰρ εὐήθες ὑπολαβεῖν, ὅτι πατρός ἀδελφῶ νέμων κλῆρον ἀδελφίδου διὰ τὴν πρὸς πατέρα συγγένειαν αὐτὸν
- 245 ἀφείλετο τὸν πατέρα τῆς διαδοχῆς. ἀλλ' ἐπειδὴ νόμος φύσεώς ἐστι κληρονομεῖσθαι γονεῖς ὑπὸ παίδων ἀλλὰ μὴ τούτους κληρονομεῖν, τὸ μὲν ἀπευκτὸν καὶ παλίμφημον ἠσύχασεν, ἵνα μὴ πατήρ καὶ μήτηρ προσοδεύεσθαι δοκῶσι τὰ ἐπ' ὠκυμόροις τέκνοις ἀπαρηγόρητα πένθη, πλαγίως δ' αὐτοὺς ἐκάλεσε τοῖς θείους ἐφιεῖς, ἵν' ἀμφοτέρων στοχάσῃται καὶ τοῦ πρέποντος καὶ τοῦ μὴ τὴν οὐσίαν

<sup>1</sup> Corrupt? Perhaps read ὀφλισκανόντων = "debtors" or ἀποτινόντων. See note a.

---

<sup>a</sup> This seems the only way of taking the passage as it stands, but it is most unsatisfactory. For (1) we should expect τὰ ἴδια, and ἴδια in this position strongly suggests that it agrees with ταῦτα, and as often = "specially used of": (2) The substitution of the payee for the payer is extraordinarily awkward. The first difficulty might be surmounted our own,<sup>a</sup> the former when we make a free gift.

MOSES II. 242-245

XLIV. After signifying His will as to 243 the petition of the orphan maids, He lays down also a more general law about succession to inheritances.
He names sons first for participation in their father's property, and daughters second, if there are no sons.
In the case of the daughters His phrase is that the inheritance should be "put round"<sup>b</sup> them, as though it were an external ornament, not a possession by right of kinship inalienable. For what is put round does not have an intimate connexion with what it adorns, and the ideas of close fitting and union are quite foreign to it. After the daughters, 244 He names the brothers as standing third, and the fourth place He assigns to uncles on the father's side, thereby indirectly suggesting that fathers may become the heirs of sons. For it would be foolish to suppose that, while He assigns the inheritance of a nephew to his paternal uncle, because of that uncle's relation to the father, He withdraws from the father himself the right of succession. But 245 since, in the natural order of things, sons are the heirs of their fathers and not fathers of their sons, He left unmentioned this deplorable and sinister possibility, to avoid the idea of a father and mother making profit out of their inconsolable sorrow at the untimely death of their children. But He does indirectly mention this by admitting the right of the uncles; and thus He attains both ends, the preservation of decency and the rule that the by reading ἴδια τῶν <τὰ ἴδια> λαμβανόντων (W.H.D.R.), but the second would remain. I believe that λαμβάνοντων is corrupt, though neither Cohn nor Mangey, who translates "propria recuperantium," seem to have felt difficulty.

<sup>b</sup> So LXX; E.V. "cause to pass."

PHILO

ἀλλοτριωθῆναι. μετὰ δὲ θείους πέμπτη τάξις ἐστὶν οἱ ἔγγιστα γένους, ὧν αἰεὶ τοῖς πρώτοις δίδωσι τοὺς κλήρους.

- 246 XLV. Ταῦτ' ἀναγκαίως διεξεληλυθὼς περὶ τῶν μικτὴν ἔχόντων κληρουχίαν<sup>1</sup> χρησμῶν, ἐξῆς δηλώσω [173] | τὰ κατ' ἐνθουσιασμὸν τοῦ προφήτου θεσπισθέντα λόγια· τοῦτο γὰρ ὑπεσχόμην δείξειν. ἀρχὴ τοίνυν ἐστὶν αὐτῷ τῆς θεοφορήτου κατοκωχῆς, ἣτις καὶ τῷ ἔθνει γέγονεν εὐπραγίας ἀρχὴ στείλαμένῳ τὴν ἀπ' Αἰγύπτου πρὸς τὰς κατὰ Συρίαν πόλεις
 247 ἀποικίαν μυριάσι πολλαῖς. ἄνδρες γὰρ ὁμοῦ καὶ γυναῖκες ἀτριβῆ καὶ μακρὰν ἐρήμην ἄπασαν ἀνύσαντες ἐπὶ θάλατταν ἀφικνοῦνται τὴν Ἐρυθρὰν προσαγορευομένην· εἶθ' ὡς εἰκὸς ἐν ἀμηχάνοις ἦσαν οὔτε περαιοῦσθαι δυνάμενοι διὰ σκαφῶν ἀπορίαν οὔτ' ἐπιστρέφειν τὴν αὐτὴν ὁδὸν ἀσφαλῆς 248 ἡγούμενοι. διακειμένοις δ' οὕτως μείζον ἐπιρράττει κακόν· ὁ γὰρ τῶν Αἰγυπτίων βασιλεὺς δύναμιν παραλαβὼν οὐκ εὐκαταφρόνητον, ἰππότην καὶ πεζὸν στρατόν, ἐπεξέθει διώκων καὶ σπεύδων καταλαβεῖν, ἵνα τίσηται τῆς ἐξόδου, ἣν θεσφάτοις ἀριδῆλοις ἐπέτρεψε ποιήσασθαι. ἀλλ' ὡς ἔοικεν ἀβέβαιος ἢ μοχθηρῶν ἀνθρώπων διάθεσις ὡς ἐπὶ πλάστιγγος μικρᾶς ἔνεκα προφάσεως ῥέπουσα πρὸς 249 τὰναντία. μέσοι δὲ ληφθέντες ἐχθρῶν καὶ θαλάττης ἀπέγνωσαν τὴν ἰδίαν σωτηρίαν, οἱ μὲν εὐκτόν ἀγαθὸν ἡγούμενοι τὸν οἰκτιστὸν ὄλεθρον, οἱ δ' ἄμεινον εἶναι νομίζοντες ὑπὸ τῶν τῆς φύσεως ἀπολέσθαι μερῶν ἢ γέλως ἐχθροῖς γενέσθαι ῥίπτειν property should not go out of the family. After the uncles comes the fifth class, the nearest relations. And in all such cases it is the first in succession to whom He gives the inheritances.

<sup>1</sup> Clearly a mistake, induced by the subject of the preceding sections. δύναμιν from § 192 is suggested. Perhaps τὴν οὐσίαν.

MOSES II. 245-249

XLV. Having completed this necessary account 246 of the oracles of mixed character, I will proceed next to describe those delivered by the prophet himself under divine inspiration, for this was included in my promise. The examples of his possession by God's spirit begin with one which was also the beginning of the prosperity of the nation, when its many myriads set out as colonists from Egypt to the cities of Syria. <sup>a</sup> Men and women alike, they had traversed 247 a long and pathless wilderness, and arrived at the Red Sea, as it is called. They were then naturally in great difficulties, as they could not cross the sea for want of boats, and did not think it safe to retrace their steps. When they were in this state of mind, 248 a greater misfortune burst upon them. The king of Egypt, accompanied by a very formidable body of infantry and cavalry, came in hot pursuit, eager to overtake them and so chastise them for leaving the country. He had, indeed, permitted them to do so, induced by unmistakable warnings from God. But the disposition of the wicked is, as may be well seen, unstable, suspended as it were on a balance and swayed up and down by the slightest cause in opposite directions. Thus, caught between the enemy and 249 the sea, they despaired each of his own safety. Some thought that the most miserable death would be a welcome blessing, while others, believing it to be better to perish by the elements of nature than to become a laughing-stock to their enemies, purposed

• For §§ 247-257 see Ex. xiv.

PHILO

ἑαυτοὺς εἰς θάλασσαν διενουοῦντο καὶ τινα τῶν βάρους ἐχόντων ἐπαχθισάμενοι παρὰ ταῖς ἡϊόσιν ἐφήδρευον, ἕν', ὁπότεν θεάσωνται τοὺς πολεμίους ἐγγὺς ὄντας, καθαλλόμενοι ῥᾶον εἰς βυθὸν ἐνε-250 χθῶσιν. ἀλλὰ γὰρ οἱ μὲν πρὸς τὸ ἄπορον τῆς ἀνάγκης διεπτόηντο δυσθανατοῦντες· XLVI. ὁ δὲ προφήτης, ὑπ' ἐκπλήξεως ὄρων σεσαγηνευμένον ὡσπερ βόλον ἰχθύων τὸ σύμπαν ἔθνος, οὐκέτ' ὦν 251 ἐν ἑαυτῷ θεοφορεῖται καὶ θεσπίζει τάδε· " τὸ μὲν δέος ἀναγκαῖον, φόβος ἐγγὺς καὶ μέγας ὁ κίνδυνος· ἐξ ἐναντίας ἀχανές ἐστι πέλαγος, ὑπόδρομος εἰς καταφυγὴν οὐδεῖς, ἀπορία πλοίων, κατόπιν ἔφεδροι φάλαγγες ἐχθρῶν, αἱ στείχουσιν ἀπνευστὶ διώκουσαι. ποῖ τις τράπηται, ποῖ τις ἐκνεύσει; πάντα πανταχόθεν ἐξαπιναίως ἐπέθετο, γῆ, θάλαττα, 252 ἄνθρωποι, στοιχεῖα φύσεως. ἀλλὰ θαρρεῖτε, μὴ ἀποκάμητε, στήτε ταῖς διανοίαις μὴ κραδαινόμενοι, προσδοκᾶτε τὴν ἀήττητον ἐκ θεοῦ βοήθειαν· αὐτ-ἐπάγγελτος ἤδη παρέσται, μὴ ὄρωμένη προαγω-νιεῖται· πεπειρασθε αὐτῆς ἤδη πολλάκις ἀμυνομένης ἀφανῶς· βλέπω μέλλουσαν κονίεσθαι, βρόχους τοῖς αὐχέσι περιβάλλουσαν τῶν ἀντιπάλων· ἔλκει κατὰ τῆς θαλάττης· μολύβδου τρόπον εἰς βυθὸν χωροῦσιν. ὑμεῖς μὲν ἔτι ζώντων αἰσθάνεσθε, τεθνεώτων δ' ἐγὼ φαντασίαν λαμβάνω· τήμερον δὲ καὶ ὑμεῖς νεκροὺς αὐτοὺς θεάσεσθε."

[174] 253

| Καὶ ὁ μὲν ταῦτ' ἀπεφθέγγετο μείζονα ὄντα πάσης ἐλπίδος, οἱ δ' ἐπειρῶντο ἔργοις τῆς περὶ τὸ λόγιον ἀληθείας. ἀπέβαινε γὰρ τὰ χρησθέντα

MOSES II. 249-253

to throw themselves into the sea, and, loaded with some heavy substances, sat waiting by the shore, so that when they saw the foe near at hand they might leap down and easily sink into the depths. But, 250 while in these helpless straits, they were at death's door with consternation (XLVI.) the prophet, seeing the whole nation entangled in the meshes of panic, like a draught of fishes, was taken out of himself by divine possession and uttered these inspired words : "Alarm you needs must feel. Terror is near at 251 hand : the danger is great. In front is a vast expanse of sea ; no haven for a refuge, no boats at hand : behind, the menace of the enemy's troops, which march along in unresting pursuit. Whither can one turn or swim for safety ? Everything has attacked us suddenly from every side—earth, sea, man, the elements of nature. Yet be of good 252 courage, faint not. Stand with unshaken minds, look for the invincible help which God will send. Self-sent it will be with you anon, invisible it will fight before you. Ere now you have often experienced its unseen defence. I see it preparing for the contest and casting a noose round the necks of the enemy. It drags them down through the sea. They sink like lead into the depths.<sup>a</sup> You see them still alive : I have a vision of them dead, and to-day you too shall see their corpses."

So he spake with words of promise exceeding any- 253 thing they could hope for. But they began to find by the experience of facts the truth of the heavenly message. For what he prophesied came to pass <sup>a</sup> Taken from the song, Ex. xv. 10 "they sank like lead in the mighty water" and 5, "they sank in the depth like a stone.

PHILO

θείαις δυνάμεσι μύθων ἀπιστότερα· ῥῆξις θαλάττης, ἀναχώρησις ἑκατέρου τμήματος, πῆξις τῶν κατὰ τὸ ῥαγὲν μέρος διὰ παντὸς τοῦ βάθους κυμάων, ἢ ἀντὶ τειχῶν ἢ κραταιοτάτων, εὐθυτενῆς ἀνατομῆ τῆς μεγαλορρηθείσης ὁδοῦ, ἢ τῶν κρυσταλλω-254 θέντων μεθόριος ἦν, ὁδοιπορία τοῦ ἔθνους ἀκινδύνως πεζεύοντος διὰ θαλάττης ὡς ἐπὶ ξηρᾶς ἀτραποῦ καὶ λιθώδους ἐδάφους—ἐκραυρώθη γὰρ ἡ ψάμμος καὶ ἡ σπορὰς αὐτῆς οὐσία συμφῦσα ἠνώθη—, ἐχθρῶν ἀπνευστὶ διωκόντων ἐφόρμησις σπευδόντων ἐπ’ οἰκεῖον ὄλεθρον, νεφέλης ὀπισθοφυλακούμενης ἠνιό-χησις, ἐν ἣ θεία τις ὄψις πυρὸς αὐγὴν ἀπαστράπτουσα ἦν, πελαγῶν ἃ τέως ἀνακοπέντα διειστήκει παλίρροια, τοῦ διακοπέντος καὶ ἀναξηρανθέντος 255 μέρους αἰφνίδιος θαλάττωσις, πολεμίων φθορά, οὗς τὰ τε κρυσταλλωθέντα τείχη καὶ ἀνατραπέντα κατεύνασε<sup>1</sup> καὶ αἱ πλήμμυραι τοῦ πελάγους ὥσπερ εἰς φάραγγα τὴν ὁδὸν ἐπενεχθεῖσαι κατέκλυσαν, ἐπίδειξις τῆς φθορᾶς διὰ τῶν ἐπαναπλευσάντων σωμάτων, ἃ τὴν ἐπιφάνειαν τοῦ πελάγους κατεστόρεσε, καὶ σφοδρὰ κυμάτωνσις, ὑφ’ ἧς ἅπαντες οἱ νεκροὶ σωρηδὸν ἀπεβράσθησαν εἰς τοὺς ἀντιπέραν αἰγιαλοὺς, ἀναγκαῖα θέα γενησόμενοι τοῖς διασωθεῖσιν, οἷς ἐξεγένετο μὴ μόνον τοὺς κινδύνους διαφυγεῖν ἀλλὰ καὶ ἐπιδεῖν τοὺς ἐχθροὺς οὐκ ἀνθρωπίναις ἀλλὰ θείαις δυνάμεσι παντὸς λόγου 256 μείζον κολασθέντας. διόπερ εἰκότως εὐχαρίστοις ὕμνοις γεραίρει τὸν εὐεργέτην· εἰς γὰρ δύο χοροὺς διανείμας τὸ ἔθνος, τὸν μὲν ἀνδρῶν, τὸν δὲ γυναικῶν, ἐξάρχει μὲν αὐτὸς τοῖς ἀνδράσιν, ἕξαρχον

<sup>1</sup> MSS. κατένευσε(αν) or κατέκλυσε. Κατευνάω is a poetical word used in this sense by Soph. Ant. 833.

MOSES II. 253-256

through the might of God, though harder to credit than any fable. Let us picture the scene. The sea breaks in two, and each section retires. The parts around the break, through the whole depth of their waters, congeal to serve as walls of vast strength: a path is drawn straight, a road of miracle between the frozen walls on either side : the nation makes 254 its passage, marching safely through the sea, as on a dry path or a stone-paved causeway ; for the sand is crisped, and its scattered particles grow together into a unity : the enemy advance in unresting pursuit, hastening to their own destruction : the cloud goes behind the travellers' rear to guide them on their way, and within is the vision of the Godhead, flashing rays of fire. Then the waters which had been stayed from their course and parted for a while return to their place : the dried-up cleft between the walls suddenly becomes a sea again : the enemy 255 meet their doom, sent to their last sleep by the fall of the frozen walls, and overwhelmed by the tides, as they rush down upon their path as into a ravine ! that doom is evidenced by the corpses which are floated to the top and strew the surface of the sea : last comes a mighty rushing wave, which flings the corpses in heaps upon the opposite shore, a sight inevitably to be seen by the saved, thus permitted not only to escape their dangers, but also to behold their enemies fallen under a chastisement which no words can express, through the power of God and not of man. After this, what should Moses do but 256 honour the Benefactor with hymns of thanksgiving ? He divides the nation into two choirs, one of men, the other of women, and himself leads the men while

PHILO

δὲ καὶ τῶν γυναικῶν καθίστησι τὴν ἀδελφὴν, ἵν' ἄδωσι ὕμνους εἰς τὸν πατέρα καὶ ποιητὴν ἀντιφθόγγοις ἁρμονίαις συνηχοῦντες, διὰ τε κράσεως ἡθῶν καὶ μέλους, τῶν μὲν ἐπὶ τὴν αὐτὴν σπευδόντων ἀμοιβήν, τοῦ δὲ συνισταμένου κατὰ τὴν βαρύτητος πρὸς ὀξύτητα συμφωνίαν· φθόγγοι γὰρ οἱ μὲν ἀνδρῶν βαρεῖς, ὀξεῖς δ' οἱ γυναικῶν, ἐξ ὧν, ὅταν ἡ κρᾶσις γένηται σύμμετρος, ἥδιστον καὶ παν-257 αρμόνιον ἀποτελεῖται μέλος. τὰς δὲ τοσαύτας μυριάδας ἔπεισεν ὁμογνωμονῆσαι καὶ τὸν αὐτὸν ὕμνον ἐν ταυτῷ συνάδειν τὰ τεράστια ἐκείνα μεγαλουργήματα, περὶ ὧν ὀλίγῳ πρότερον διεξῆλθον· ἐφ' οἷς ὁ προφήτης γεγηθώς, ὁρῶν καὶ τὴν τοῦ ἔθνους περιχάρειαν, οὐδ' αὐτὸς ἔτι χωρῶν τὴν ἡδονήν, κατήρχε τῆς ὠδῆς· οἱ δ' ἀκούοντες εἰς δύο χοροὺς ἀλισθέντες τὰ λεχθέντα συνῆδον.

[175]
 258

XLVII. | Τοῦτ' ἐστὶ τῆς κατ' ἐνθουσιασμὸν προφητείας Μωυσέως ἀρχὴ καὶ προοίμιον. ἐξῆς δὲ θεσπίζει περὶ τοῦ πρώτου καὶ ἀναγκαιοτάτου, τροφῆς, ἣν γῆ μὲν οὐκ ἤνεγκε — καὶ γὰρ ἦν στείρα καὶ ἄγονος—, ὤμβρησε δ' οὐρανὸς οὐχ ἅπαξ ἀλλ' ἐπὶ τεσσαρακονταετίαν ἐκάστης ἡμέρας πρὸ τῆς ἔω καρπὸν αἰθέριον ἐν δρόσῳ κέγχρῳ παραπλήσιον.
 259 ὃν ἰδὼν Μωυσῆς συγκομίζειν κελεύει καὶ ἐπιθειάσας φησί· “πιστεύειν δεῖ τῷ θεῷ πεπειραμένους αὐτοῦ τῶν εὐεργεσιῶν ἐν μείζοσιν ἐλπίδος πράγμασιν· ἀθησαύριστα, ἀταμίευτα τὰ τῆς τροφῆς ἔστω· μηδεὶς ἄχρι πρῶτας ὑπολείπέσθω μηδὲν

---

° Or “feelings.” The thought is that while men and women have their different characteristics, here for the 578

MOSES II. 256-259

he appoints his sister to lead the women, that the two in concert might sing hymns to the Father and Creator in tuneful response, with a blending both of temperaments <sup>a</sup> and melody—temperaments eager to render to each other like for like; melody produced by the concord of treble and bass; for the voices of men are bass and the women's treble, and when they are blended in due proportion the resulting melody is of the fullest and sweetest harmony. All these myriads were persuaded by Moses to sing <sup>257</sup> with hearts in accord the same song, telling of those mighty and marvellous works which I have recorded just above. And the prophet, rejoicing at this, seeing the people also overjoyed, and himself no longer able to contain his delight, led off the song, and his hearers massed in two choirs sang with him the story of these same deeds.<sup>b</sup>

XLVII. <sup>c</sup> It was thus that Moses began and opened <sup>258</sup> his work as a prophet possessed by God's spirit. His next utterance of this sort was concerned with that primary and most necessary matter, food; and this food was not produced by the earth, which was barren and unfruitful, but heaven rained down before day-break, not once only but every day for forty years, a celestial fruit in the form of dew, like millet grain. When Moses saw it, he bade them gather it, and <sup>259</sup> said under inspiration: "We must trust God as we have experienced His kindnesses in deeds greater than we could have hoped for. Do not treasure up or store the food He sends. Let none leave any moment they are entirely united. The phrase is often used by Philo as a synonym for ὁμόνοια and the like.

<sup>b</sup> i.e. "the above-mentioned." Others take it to mean the words which Moses said to them.

<sup>c</sup> For §§ 258-269 see Ex. xvi. 4-30.

- 260 αὐτῆς μέρος.” τοῦτ’ ἀκούσαντες ἔνιοι τῶν πρὸς εὐσέβειαν ἀνερματίστων, ὑπολαβόντες ἴσως οὐ χρησμοὺς ἀλλὰ παραίνεσιν ἄρχοντος εἶναι τὰ λεγόμενα, λείπουσιν εἰς τὴν ὑστεραίαν· τὸ δὲ σηπόμενον τὸν κύκλον τοῦ στρατοπέδου δυσσοδμίας πληροῖ τὸ πρῶτον, εἴτ’ εἰς σκώληκας, ὧν ἡ γένεσις
- 261 ἐκ φθορᾶς ἐστὶ, μετέβαλεν. ἅπερ ἰδὼν Μωυσῆς εἰκότως ἐπὶ τοῖς ἀπειθέσι πικραίνεται· πῶς γὰρ οὐκ ἔμελλεν, εἰ τοσαῦτα καὶ τηλικαῦτα θεασάμενοι, πρὸς μὲν τὰς πιθανὰς καὶ εὐλόγους φαντασίας ἀδύναταπραχθῆναι, τελειωθέντα δὲ εὐμαρῶς ἐπιφροσύναις θείαις, οὐκ ἐνδοιάζουσι μόνον, ἀλλὰ καὶ
- 262 ἀπιστοῦσιν οἱ δυσμαθέστατοι πάντων; ἀλλ’ ὁ γε πατὴρ δυσὶν ἐναργεστάταις ἀποδειξέσει τὸ λόγιον τοῦ προφήτου διασυνέστησεν, ὧν τὴν μὲν ἑτέραν εὐθύς ἀπεδείξατο φθορᾶ τοῦ ὑπολειφθέντος καὶ δυσωδία καὶ τῇ πρὸς σκώληκας, τὸ φαυλότατον ζῶον, μεταβολῇ, τὴν δ’ ἑτέραν ὑστερον· αἰεὶ γὰρ τὸ πλεονάζον τοῦ συγκομισθέντος ὑπὸ τῆς πληθύος ταῖς ἡλιακαῖς ἀκτίσι διελύετο καὶ τηκόμενον ἐξανηλοῦτο.
- 263 XLVIII. Δεύτερον οὐκ εἰς μακρὰν ἐπιθειάσας ἀποφθέγγεται λόγιον τὸ περὶ τῆς ἱερᾶς ἐβδόμης. ἔχουσαν γὰρ αὐτὴν ἐν τῇ φύσει προνομίαν, οὐκ ἀφ’ οὗ μόνον ἐδημιουργήθη ὁ κόσμος, ἀλλὰ καὶ πρὸ τῆς οὐρανοῦ καὶ παντὸς αἰσθητοῦ γενέσεως, ἠγγόησαν ἄνθρωποι, τάχα που διὰ τὰς ἐν ὕδασι καὶ πυρὶ γενομένας συνεχεῖς καὶ ἐπαλλήλους φθορὰς οὐ δυνηθέντων παρὰ τῶν πρότερον διαδέξασθαι μνήμην τῶν ἔπειτα τῆς κατὰ τὸν ἐν χρόνοις εἰρμὸν ἀκολουθίας καὶ τάξεως· ὅπερ ἀδηλούμενον ἐπιθειάσας <sup>a</sup> Cf. notes on Mos. i. 207, and De Abr. 1.

MOSES II. 260-263

part of it over till the morrow." On hearing this, 260 some whose piety had little ballast, thinking perhaps that the statement was no divine oracle but just the exhortation of the ruler, left it to the next day ; but it first rotted and filled the whole extent of the camp with its stench, and then turned into worms which are bred from corruption. Moses, seeing this, was 261 naturally and indeed inevitably indignant at their disobedience—to think that after witnessing wonders so many and so great, impossibilities no doubt as judged by what to outward appearance is credible and reasonable but easily accomplished by the dispensations of God's providence, they not only doubted, but in their utter incapacity for learning actually disbelieved. But the Father confirmed the 262 utterance of the prophet with two most convincing proofs. One proof He had given at the time, when what was left over corrupted and stank and then was changed into worms, the vilest of living creatures.
The other He gave later, for the unneeded surplus over what was gathered by the multitude was dissolved by the sun's rays, melted away and disappeared.

XLVIII. Not long after, Moses delivered a second 263 inspired pronouncement concerning the sacred seventh day. That day has held the place of honour in nature, not merely from the time when the world was framed, but even before the heaven and all that sense perceives came into being. Yet men knew it not, perhaps because by reason of the constant and repeated destructions by water and fire the later generations did not receive from the former the memory of the order and sequence of events in the series of years.<sup>a</sup> This hidden truth Moses, under

PHILO

ἀνέφηγε λογίῳ μαρτυρηθέντι διὰ σημείου τινὸς 264 ἐναργοῦς. τὸ δὲ σημεῖον τοιοῦτον ἦν· ἐλάττων μὲν ἀπ' ἀέρος ἐγένετο ἢ φορὰ ταῖς προτέραις ἡμέραις τῆς τροφῆς, τότε δ' αὖ διπλασίων· καὶ ταῖς μὲν προτέραις εἶ τι κατελείφθη, λειβόμενον ἐτήκετο μέχρι τοῦ παντελῶς εἰς νοτίδα μεταβαλὸν ἀναλω-θῆναι, τότε δ' οὐδεμίαν ἐνδεχόμενον τροπὴν ἐν ὁμοίῳ διέμενεν· ἐφ' οἷς ἀγγελλομένοις ἅμα καὶ ὀρωμένοις καταπλαγεῖς Μωυσῆς οὐκ ἔστοχάσατο [176] μᾶλλον ἢ θεοφορηθεὶς ἐθέσπισε τὴν ἐβδόμην. | ἐὼ 265 λέγειν, ὅτι καὶ αἱ τοιαῦται εἰκασίαι συγγενεῖς προφητείας εἰσὶν· ὁ γὰρ νοῦς οὐκ ἂν οὕτως εὐσκόπως εὐθυβόλησεν, εἰ μὴ καὶ θεῖον ἦν πνεῦμα τὸ 266 ποδηγετοῦν πρὸς αὐτὴν τὴν ἀλήθειαν. τὸ δὲ τεράστιον οὐ μόνον ἐκ τοῦ διπλασιασθῆναι τὴν τροφήν ἐδηλοῦτο οὐδ' ἐκ τοῦ διαμεῖναι σῶον παρὰ τὸ καθεστῶς ἔθος, ἀλλὰ καὶ τοῦ ἀμφότερα ταῦτα συμβῆναι κατὰ τὴν ἕκτην ἡμέραν, ἀφ' ἧς ἤρξατο ἀπ' ἀέρος ἢ τροφῆς χορηγεῖσθαι, μεθ' ἧν ὁ ἱερώ-τατος τῆς ἐβδόμης ἀριθμὸς ἔμελλεν ἀνατέλλειν, ὥστε λογιζόμενος ἂν τις εὖροι κατὰ τὴν ἀκολουθίαν τῆς τοῦ κόσμου γενέσεως τὴν οὐράνιον δοθεῖσαν τροφήν· ἤρξατο γὰρ καὶ τὸν κόσμον ἐξάδος τῇ πρώτη δημιουργεῖν καὶ τὴν λεχθεῖσαν ὕειν τροφήν.
 267 ἢ δ' εἰκὼν ὁμοιοτάτη· καθάπερ γὰρ ἐκ τοῦ μὴ ὄντος εἰς τὸ εἶναι τὸ τελειότατον ἔργον, τὸν κόσμον, ἀνέφηγε, τὸν αὐτὸν τρόπον καὶ εὐθηνίαν ἐν ἐρήμῳ μεταβαλὼν τὰ στοιχεῖα πρὸς τὸ κατεπεῖγον τῆς χρείας, ἕν' ἀντὶ γῆς ὁ ἀῆρ σιτία τροφήν ἄπονον 582

MOSES II. 263-267

inspiration, revealed in an announcement to which a manifest sign gave testimony. This sign was as follows : the shower of food from the air was less on the first days, but on a later day was doubled ; and on those first days anything left melted and was dissolved till, after turning completely into moisture, it disappeared ; but on that later day it admitted no change and remained just as it had been. Moses, when he heard of this and also actually saw it, was awestruck and, guided by what was not so much surmise as God-sent inspiration, made announcement of the sabbath. I need hardly say that conjectures of this kind are closely akin to prophecies. For the mind could not have made so straight an aim if there was not also the divine spirit guiding it to the truth itself. Now the greatness of the wonder was shown not only by the double supply of food and its remaining sound contrary to the usual happening, but by the combination of both these occurring on the sixth day, counting from the day on which the food began to be supplied from the air ; and that sixth day was to be followed by the dawning of the seventh which is the most sacred of numbers. And therefore consideration will show the inquirer that the food given from heaven followed the analogy of the birth of the world ; for both the creating of the world and also the raining of the said food were begun by God on the first day out of six. The copy reproduces the original very exactly : for, as God called up His most perfect work, the world, out of not being into being, so He called up plenty in the desert, changing round the elements to meet the pressing need of the occasion, so that instead of the earth the air bore food for their nourishment, and

PHILO

- φέρη καὶ ἀταλαίπωρον οἷς ἀναχώρησις οὐκ ἦν εὐτρεπίζεσθαι κατὰ σχολὴν τὰπιτήδεια.
- 268 μετὰ ταῦτα τρίτον ἀναφθέγγεται χρησμὸν τερα-τωδέστατον, δηλῶν ὅτι τῇ ἐβδόμῃ τὴν εἰωθυῖαν ὁ ἀῆρ οὐ παρέξει τροφήν καὶ οὐδὲν ἐπὶ γῆν ἀλλ' οὐδὲ τὸ βραχύτατον ὡς ἔθος ἐνεχθήσεται. τοῦτ'
- 269 ἀπέβαιναν ἔργοις· τῇ μὲν γὰρ προτεραίᾳ ταῦτα θεσπίζει, τινὲς δὲ τῶν ἀβεβαίων τὸ ἦθος ὤρμησαν ἐπὶ τὴν συγκομιδὴν καὶ σφαλέντες τῆς ἐλπίδος ἐπ-ανήεσαν ἄπρακτοι, κακίζοντες μὲν ἑαυτοὺς τῆς ἀπιστίας, ἀληθόμαντιν δὲ καὶ θεοφράδμονα καὶ μόνον προορατικὸν τῶν ἀδήλων ἀνακαλοῦντες τὸν προφήτην.
- 270 XLIX. Τοιαῦτα μὲν ἐστίν, ἃ περὶ τῆς οὐρανοῦ τροφῆς κατεχόμενος ἐθέσπισεν. ἕτερα δ' ἐξῆς ἀναγκαῖα, καίτοι δόξαντα ἂν παραινέσεσιν εἰκέναι μᾶλλον ἢ χρησμοῖς, ὧν ἐστὶ καὶ τὸ χρησθὲν κατὰ τὴν μεγίστην τῶν πατρίων ἐκδιαίτησιν, περὶ ἧς καὶ πρόσθεν εἶπον, ἡνίκα τεκτηνάμενοι ταῦρον χρυσοῦν, Αἰγυπτιακοῦ μίμημα τύφου, χοροὺς ἴστασαν καὶ βωμοὺς κατεσκευάζον καὶ θυσίας ἀνήγον ἐκλαθόμενοι τοῦ πρὸς ἀλήθειαν θεοῦ καὶ τὴν προγονικὴν εὐγένειαν, ἣ δι' εὐσεβείας καὶ
- 271 ὁσιότητος ηὐξήθη, καθαιροῦντες. ἐφ' οἷς Μωυσῆς περιπαθήσας, εἰ πρῶτον μὲν ὁ λαὸς πᾶς ἐξαίφνης γεγένηται τυφλὸς ὁ ἄχρι πρὸ μικροῦ πάντων ἐθνῶν [177] ὄξυωπέστατος, ἔπειτα δὲ εἰ πλάσμα | μύθου κατεψευσμένον ἴσχυσε τοσαύτην αὐγὴν σβέσαι τῆς

• For §§ 270-274 see Ex. xxxii.

<sup>b</sup> See note on § 162 above.

MOSES II. 267-271

that without labour or travail for those who had no chance of resorting to any deliberate process of providing sustenance. After this, he uttered 268 a third prophetic saying of truly marvellous import. He declared that on the sabbath the air would not yield the accustomed food, and that nothing would come down to earth as it had done before, not even the smallest morsel. And this proved true in the 269 result, for it was on the day before the sabbath that he prophesied this, but on the morrow some of the weaker-minded set out to gather the food but were disappointed and returned baffled, reproaching themselves for their disbelief and hailing the prophet as a true seer, an interpreter of God, and alone gifted with foreknowledge of the hidden future.

XLIX. <sup>a</sup> Such was his pronouncement under divine 270 inspiration on the matter of the food which came from heaven, but there are examples to follow which must be noted, though perhaps they may be thought to resemble exhortations rather than oracular sayings. Among these is the command given at their great backsliding from the ways of their fathers, about which I have spoken above. This was when, after fashioning a golden bull in imitation of the vanity of Egypt,<sup>b</sup> they set up choirs and built altars and brought victims for sacrifice in forgetfulness of the true God and to the ruin of the high-born qualities inherited from their forefathers and fostered by piety and holiness. At this, Moses was cut to the heart to 271 think that in the first place the whole people had suddenly been blinded who a few hours ago had excelled every nation in clearness of vision, and secondly, that a fable falsely invented could quench the bright radiance of truth—truth on which no

PHILO

ἀληθείας, ἣν οὐθ' ἥλιος ἐκλιπὼν οὐθ' ὁ σύμπας χορὸς τῶν ἀστέρων ἐπισκιάσει—περιλάμπεται γὰρ ἰδίῳ φέγγει νοητῶ καὶ ἀσωμάτῳ, πρὸς ὃ παραβαλλόμενον τὸ αἰσθητὸν νύξ ἂν πρὸς ἡμέραν εἶναι 272 νομισθεῖη—, δι' ἣν αἰτίαν οὐκέτι μένων ὁ αὐτὸς ἐξαλλάττεται τό τε εἶδος καὶ τὴν διάνοιαν καὶ ἐπιθειάσας φησί· “ τίς ἐστὶν ὁ μὴ τῷ πλάνῳ συνενεχθεὶς μηδὲ τὸ κῦρος ἐπιφημίσας τοῖς ἀκύροις; 273 πᾶς ὁ τοιοῦτος ἐμοὶ προσίτω.” μιᾶς δὲ φυλῆς προσελθούσης οὐχ ἦττον ταῖς διανοίαις ἢ τοῖς σώμασιν, οἳ πάλαι μὲν ἐφόνων κατὰ τῶν ἀθέων καὶ ἀνοσιουργῶν, ἡγεμόνα δ' ἐζήτουν καὶ στρατάρχην ἀνευρεῖν, ὃς ἐνδίκως ὑψηγήσεται καιρὸν καὶ τρόπον τῆς ἀμύνης,—οὓς ὀργῶντας εὐρῶν καὶ γέμοντας εὐτολμίας καὶ παραστήματος, ἔτι μᾶλλον ἢ πρότερον θεοφορηθεῖς, “ ξίφος ἕκαστος ὑμῶν ἀναλαβὼν ” φησὶν “ ἄττέτω διὰ παντὸς τοῦ στρατοπέδου καὶ κτεινέτω μὴ μόνον ἀλλοτρίους ἀλλὰ καὶ φίλων καὶ συγγενῶν τοὺς οἰκειοτάτους ἐπιστροφάδην, εὐ-αγέστατον κρίνων τὸ ἔργον ὑπὲρ ἀληθείας καὶ θεοῦ τιμῆς, ὧν ὑπερμαχεῖν καὶ προαγωνίζεσθαι κουφό-274 τατος πόνος.” οἳ δ' αὐτοβοεῖ τρισχιλίους κτείναντες τοὺς ἀρχηγέτας μάλιστα τῆς ἀσεβείας γενομένους οὐκ ἀπελογήσαντο μόνον περὶ τοῦ μὴ συνεφάσασθαι τοῦ τολμήματος, ἀλλὰ καὶ ἐν ἀρι-στέων τοῖς γενναιοτάτοις ἐνεγράφησαν καὶ γέρως ἠξιώθησαν οἰκειοτάτου ταῖς πράξεσιν, ἱερωσύνης· ἔδει γὰρ θεραπευτὰς ὁσιότητος γενέσθαι τοὺς ὑπὲρ αὐτῆς ἀνδραγαθισαμένους καὶ προπολεμήσαντας.

MOSES II. 271-274

eclipse of the sun or of all the starry choir can cast a shadow, since it is illumined by its own light, the intelligible, the incorporeal, compared with which the light of the senses would seem to be as night compared with day. He therefore became another <sup>272</sup> man, changed both in outward appearance and mind ; and, filled with the spirit, he cried : “ Who is there who has no part with this delusion nor has given to no-lords the name of lordship ? Let all such come to me.” One tribe came at the call, bringing with <sup>273</sup> them their minds no less than their bodies, men who for some time had been breathing slaughter against the godless workers of unholiness, but sought to find a leader and captain who would have the right to tell them when and how to make this attack. When Moses found them hot with rage and brimful of courage and resolution, he was more than ever possessed by the spirit and said : “ Let each of you take his sword and rush through the whole camp, and slay not only those who are strangers to you but also the very nearest of your friends and kinsfolk. Mow them down, holding that to be a truly righteous deed which is done for truth and God’s honour, a cause which to champion and defend is the lightest of labours.” So they slaughtered three thousand of the <sup>274</sup> principal leaders in godlessness, without meeting any resistance, and thereby not only made good their defence against the charge of having been party to the shameless crime, but were accounted as the noblest of heroes and awarded the prize most suitable to their action, that is the priesthood. For it was meet that the duty of ministering to holiness should be given to those who had battled and acquitted themselves bravely in its defence.

PHILO

- 275 L. Ἐχω δέ τι μνηῦσαι σημειωδέστερον λόγιον, περὶ οὗ καὶ πάλαι διεξήλθον, ὅτε τὰ τῆς ἀρχιερωσύνης ἐπήειν τοῦ προφήτου, ὅπερ αὐτὸς πάλιν κατασχεθεὶς ἀνεφθέγξατο, τελειωθὲν οὐ μακροῖς
- 276 χρόνοις ὕστερον, ἀλλ' εὐθύς ὅτ' ἐχρησιμωδεῖτο. τῶν περὶ τὸν νεῶν λειτουργῶν δύο τάξεις εἰσὶν, ἡ μὲν κρείσσων ἱερέων, ἡ δ' ἐλάττων νεωκόρων· ἦσαν δὲ κατ' ἐκεῖνον τὸν χρόνον τρεῖς μὲν ἱερεῖς, νεωκόρων
- 277 δὲ πολλαὶ χιλιάδες. οὗτοι φυσηθέντες ἐπὶ τῇ τοῦ οἰκείου πλήθους περιουσίᾳ τῆς τῶν ἱερέων κατεφρόνουσι ὀλιγότητος καὶ δύο ἐν ταυτῷ παρανομήματα συνύφαινον, ὧν τὸ μὲν ἦν καθαίρεσις τῶν ὑπερεχόντων, τὸ δ' αὖξησης τῶν ἐλαττόνων, οἷα ἡγεμόσιν ὑπηκόων ἐπιτιθεμένων ἐπὶ συγχύσει τοῦ
- 278 κρατίστου καὶ δημοφειλεστάτου, τῆς τάξεως. εἰτ' ἐπισυνιστάμενοι καὶ ἀθροιζόμενοι κατεβόων τοῦ προφήτου, ὡς δι' οἰκειότητα τῷ τε ἀδελφῷ καὶ
- [178] τοῖς | ἀδελφιδοῖς χαρισαμένου τὴν ἱερωσύνην καὶ ἐπιψευσαμένου τὰ περὶ τὴν αἵρεσιν αὐτῶν, ὡς ἐπιφροσύνη θείᾳ, καθάπερ διεξήειμεν, μὴ γενόμενα.
- 279 ἐφ' οἷς ἀνιαθεὶς καὶ περιαλήσας, καίτοι πραότατος ὧν καὶ ἡμερώτατος, οὕτως πρὸς δικαίαν ὀργὴν ὑπὸ μισοπονήρου πάθους ἠκονήθη, ὡς ἰκετεῦσαι τὸν θεὸν ἀποστραφῆναι τὴν θυσίαν αὐτῶν, οὐκ ἐπειδήπερ ἔμελλεν ὁ δικαιοτάτος κριτῆς ἱερουργίας ἀσεβῶν παραδέχεσθαι, ἀλλ' ὅτι καὶ ἡ ψυχὴ τοῦ θεοφιλοῦς τὸ κατ' αὐτὴν μέρος οὐχ ὑποσιωπᾶ, σπεύδουσα μὴ εὐδοεῖν ἀνοσίους, ἀλλ' αἰεὶ τῆς

<sup>a</sup> For §§ 275-287 see Num. xvi.

<sup>b</sup> i.e. Aaron, Eleazar, and Ithamar. The death, or according to Philo the translation, of Nadab and Abihu is dated before this.

MOSES II. 275-279

L. <sup>a</sup> There is another still more remarkable utter- 275 ance of this kind which I may mention. It is one which I described some way back when I was speaking of the prophet in his capacity of high priest. This again came from his own mouth when again under possession, and it was fulfilled not long afterwards but at the very time when the prediction was given.
The ministers of the temple are of two ranks, the 276 higher consisting of priests, the lower of temple attendants; and at that time there were three priests<sup>b</sup> but many thousand attendants. These last, puffed 277 with pride at their own numerical superiority over the priests, despised their fewness, and combined in the same deed two trespasses, by attempting on the one hand to bring low the superior, on the other to exalt the inferior. This is what happens when subjects attack their rulers to confound that most excellent promoter of the common weal, order. Then, 278 conspiring with each other, and collecting in great numbers, they raised an outcry against the prophet, declaring that he had bestowed the priesthood on his brother and nephews because of their relation to him, and had given a false account of their election, which had not really been made under divine direction, as we stated it above to be. Moses, greatly hurt and grieved 279 at this, though the mildest and meekest of men, was so spurred to righteous anger by his passionate hatred of evil that he besought God to turn His face from their sacrifice; not that the All-righteous Judge would ever accept the ministries of the impious, but because the soul of one whom God loves must also do its part and not keep silence, so eagerly does it desire that the unholy may not prosper but ever fail to

PHILO

- 280 προθέσεως διαμαρτάνειν. ἔτι δὲ ζέων καὶ πεπυρωμένος ὑπὸ τῆς νομίμου διαγανακτήσεως ἐνθουσιᾷ μεταβαλὼν εἰς προφήτην καὶ θεσπίζει τάδε· “ χαλεπὸν ἀπιστία πρᾶγμα τοῖς ἀπίστοις μόνοις· τούτους<sup>1</sup> οὐ λόγος ἀλλ’ ἔργα παιδεύει· παθόντες εἴσονται τὸ 281 ἔμὸν ἀψευδές, ἐπεὶ μαθόντες οὐκ ἔγνωσαν. ἐπικριθήσεται δὲ τοῦτο τῇ τοῦ βίου τελευτῇ· εἰ μὲν γὰρ θάνατον ἐνδέξονται τὸν κατὰ φύσιν, πέπλασμαι τὰ λόγια, εἰ δὲ καινὸν τινα καὶ παρηλλαγμένον, τὸ φιλάληθές μοι μαρτυρηθήσεται. χάσματα γῆς ὄρω διηνοιγμένης ἐπὶ μήκιστον εὐρυνόμενα, πολυανθρώ-πους ἀπολλυμένας συγγενείας, αὐτάνδρους ὑπο-συρομένας καὶ καταπινομένας οἰκίας, ζῶντας ἀν-282 θρώπους εἰς ἄδου κατερχομένους.” ἐπεὶ δ’ ἡσύ-χασε, ῥήγνυται μὲν ἢ γῆ σεισμῶ τιναχθείσα, ῥήγνυται δὲ καθ’ ὃ μάλιστα μέρος αἰ σκηναὶ τῶν ἀσεβῶν ἦσαν, ὡς ὑπενεχθείσας ἀθρόας ἐπικρυ-φθῆναι· τὰ γὰρ διαστάντα μέρη πάλιν συνῆλθε, τῆς 283 χρείας ἀποτελεσθείσης, ἧς ἔνεκα διεζεύχθη. μικρὸν δ’ ὕστερον τοὺς τῆς στάσεως ἡγεμόνας πεντήκοντα πρὸς τοῖς διακοσίοις ἄνδρας κεραυνοὶ κατασκήψαντες αἰφνίδιον ἀθρόους ἐξανάλωσαν μηδὲν μέρος ὑπολειπόμενοι τῶν σωμάτων, ὃ ταφῆς ἐπιμοιρά-284 σεται. τὸ δὲ τῶν τιμωριῶν ἐπάλληλον καὶ τὸ ἑκατέρας μέγεθος διάσημον καὶ περιβόητον ἀπέφηνε τὴν εὐσέβειαν τοῦ προφήτου χρησαμένου θεῷ 285 μάρτυρι τῆς περὶ τοὺς χρησμούς ἀληθείας. ἄξιον δὲ κάκεῖνο μὴ παριδεῖν, ὅτι τὰς κατὰ τῶν ἀσεβῶν κολάσεις διεκκληρώσαντο γῆ καὶ οὐρανός, αἰ τοῦ παντὸς ἀρχαί· τὴν γὰρ μοχθηρίαν ἐρρίζωσαν μὲν

<sup>1</sup> Mangey with some mss. reads χαλεπὸν ἀπιστία πρᾶγμα· τοὺς ἀπίστους μόνοις τούτους κτλ.

MOSES II. 280-285

attain their purpose. While his heart was still hot 280 within him, burning with lawful indignation, inspiration came upon him, and, transformed into a prophet, he pronounced these words : “ Disbelief falls hardly on the disbelievers only. Such are schooled by facts alone, and not by words. Experience will show them what teaching has failed to show that I do not lie.
This matter will be judged by the manner of their 281 latter end. If the death they meet is in the ordinary course of nature, my oracles are a false invention ; but, if it be of a new and different kind, my truthfulness will be attested. I see the earth opened and vast chasms yawning wide. I see great bands of kinsfolk perishing, houses dragged down and swallowed up with their inmates, and living men descending into Hades.” As he ceased speaking, the earth 282 burst open under the shock of a convulsion, and the bursting was just in that part where the tents of the impious stood, so that they were borne below in a mass and hidden from sight ; for the gaping sides closed again when the object was accomplished for which they had been split asunder. And, shortly 283 after, thunderbolts fell suddenly on two hundred and fifty men who had led the sedition and destroyed them in a mass, leaving no part of their bodies to receive the tribute of burial. The quick succession 284 of these punishments and their magnitude in both cases clearly and widely established the fame of the prophet’s godliness, to the truth of whose pronouncments God Himself had testified. This too we 285 should not fail to note, that the work of chastising the impious was shared by earth and heaven, the fundamental parts of the universe. For they had set the roots of their wickedness on earth, but let it

PHILO

- ἐπὶ γῆς, ἐξέτειναν δ' εἰς αἰθέρα, τοσοῦτον ὕψος, 286 αὐτὴν διάραντες. ὅθεν καὶ τῶν στοιχείων ἑκάτερον ἐχορήγησε τὰς τιμωρίας, ἡ μὲν ἔν' ὑποσύρῃ καὶ καταπήγῃ τοὺς τότε βαρύνοντας αὐτὴν ῥαγεῖσα καὶ διαστάσα, ὃ δ' ἵνα καταφλέξῃ καὶ διαφθείρῃ πυρὸς 287 πολλοῦ φορᾶν, καινότατον ὑετόν, ὀμβρήσας. τὸ δὲ τέλος καὶ τοῖς καταποθεῖσι καὶ τοῖς ὑπὸ [179] τῶν κεραυνῶν | διεφθαρμένοις ταῦτόν ἀπέβαινε· οὐδέτεροι γὰρ ἐφάνησαν, οἱ μὲν ἐπικρυφθέντες γῆ τῇ τοῦ χάσματος συνόδῳ πρὸς τὸ ἰσόπεδον ἐνωθείσῃ, οἱ δ' ὅλοι δι' ὄλων ἀναλωθέντες ὑπὸ τοῦ κεραυνίου πυρός.
- 288 LI. Χρόνοις δ' ὕστερον, ἐπειδὴ τὴν ἐνθένδε ἀποικίαν ἔμελλεν εἰς οὐρανὸν στέλλεσθαι καὶ τὸν θνητὸν ἀπολιπὼν βίον ἀπαθανατίζεσθαι μετακληθεὶς ὑπὸ τοῦ πατρός, ὃς αὐτὸν δυάδα ὄντα, σῶμα καὶ ψυχὴν, εἰς μονάδος ἀνεστοιχείου φύσιν ὄλον δι' ὄλων μεθαρμοζόμενος εἰς νοῦν ἡλιοειδέστατον, τότε δὴ κατασχεθεὶς οὐκέτι συλλήβδην ἀθρώω παντὶ τῷ ἔθνει θεσπίζειν ἔοικεν ἀλλὰ καὶ κατὰ μέρος ἐκάστη φυλῇ τὰ μέλλοντα γενέσθαι καὶ αὖθις ἀποβησόμενα· ὧν τὰ μὲν ἤδη συμβέβηκε, τὰ δὲ προσδοκᾶται, διότι πίστις τῶν μελλόντων ἢ τῶν προγεγονότων 289 τελείωσις. ἤρμωτε γὰρ διαφέροντας καὶ ταῖς σποραῖς, καὶ μάλιστα ἐν τοῖς μητρώοις γένεσι, καὶ βουλευμάτων πολυτρόποις ἰδέαις καὶ τῶν περὶ τὸν βίον ἐπιτηδευμάτων ἀμυθήτοις διαφοραῖς ὥσπερ τινὰ κλήρου διανομὴν λογίων καὶ χρησμῶν ἀρμό-290 ζουσαν εὐρέσθαι. θαυμάσια μὲν οὖν ταῦτα· θαυ-μασιώτατον δὲ καὶ τὸ τέλος τῶν ἱερῶν γραμμάτων, ὃ καθάπερ ἐν τῷ ζώῳ κεφαλὴ τῆς ὄλης νομοθεσίας <sup>a</sup> For §§ 288-291 see Deut. xxxiii. and xxxiv.

MOSES II. 285-290

grow so high that it mounted right up to ether above. Therefore each of the two elements supplied its punishment: earth burst and parted asunder to drag down and swallow up those who had then become a burden to it; heaven poured down the strangest of rainstorms, a great stream of fire to blast them in its flames. Whether they were swallowed up or destroyed by the thunderbolts, the result was the same: neither party was ever seen again, the former hidden in the earth by the closing of the chasm which united to form level ground again, the latter consumed absolutely and entirely by the flame of the thunderbolt.

LI. <sup>a</sup> Afterwards the time came when he had to make his pilgrimage from earth to heaven, and leave this mortal life for immortality, summoned thither by the Father Who resolved his twofold nature of soul and body into a single unity, transforming his whole being into mind, pure as the sunlight. Then, indeed, we find him possessed by the spirit, no longer uttering general truths to the whole nation but prophesying to each tribe in particular the things which were to be and hereafter must come to pass. Some of these have already taken place, others are still looked for, since confidence in the future is assured by fulfilment in the past. It was very fitting that persons so different in the history of their birth, particularly in their descent on the mother's side and in the manifold varieties of their thoughts and aims and the endless diversities of their practices and habits of life, should receive as a sort of legacy a suitable apportionment of oracles and inspired sayings. This was indeed wonderful: but most wonderful of all is the conclusion of the Holy Scriptures, which stands to the whole law-book as the head to the living

PHILO

- 291 ἐστίν. ἤδη γὰρ ἀναλαμβάνομενος καὶ ἐπ' αὐτῆς βαλβίδος ἐστῶς, ἵνα τὸν εἰς οὐρανὸν δρόμον διπτάμενος εὐθύνη, καταπνευσθεὶς καὶ ἐπιθειάσας ζῶν ἔτι τὰ ὡς ἐπὶ θανόντι ἑαυτῷ προφητεύει δεξιῶς,<sup>1</sup> ὡς ἐτελεύτησε μήπω τελευτήσας, ὡς ἐτάφη μηδενὸς παρόντος, δηλονότι χερσὶν οὐ θνηταῖς ἀλλ' ἀθανάτοις δυνάμεσιν, ὡς οὐδ' ἐν τάφῳ τῶν προπατόρων ἐκηδεύθη τυχῶν ἐξαιρέτου μνήματος, ὃ μηδεὶς εἶδεν ἀνθρώπων, ὡς σύμπαν τὸ ἔθνος αὐτὸν ὅλον μῆνα δακρυρροοῦν ἐπένησεν ἴδιον καὶ κοινὸν πένθος ἐπιδειξάμενον ἕνεκα τῆς ἀλέκτου καὶ πρὸς ἕνα ἕκαστον καὶ πρὸς ἅπαντας εὐνοίας καὶ κηδεμονίας.
- 292 Τοιοῦτος μὲν ὁ βίος, τοιαύτη δὲ καὶ ἡ τελευταία τοῦ βασιλέως καὶ νομοθέτου καὶ ἀρχιερέως καὶ προφήτου Μωυσέως διὰ τῶν ἱερῶν γραμμάτων μνημονεύεται.

<sup>1</sup> A rather strange use : Mangey διεξιῶν.

MOSES II. 291-292

creature ; for when he was already being exalted and 291 stood at the very barrier, ready at the signal to direct his upward flight to heaven, the divine spirit fell upon him and he prophesied with discernment while still alive the story of his own death ; told ere the end how the end came ; told how he was buried with none present, surely by no mortal hands but by immortal powers ; how also he was not laid to rest in the tomb of his forefathers but was given a monument of special dignity which no man has ever seen ; how all the nation wept and mourned for him a whole month and made open display, private and public, of their sorrow, in memory of his vast benevolence and watchful care for each one of them and for all.

Such, as recorded in the Holy Scriptures, was the 292 life and such the end of Moses, king, lawgiver, high priest, prophet.

APPENDIX TO DE ABRAHAMO

§ 5. Laws endowed with life and reason. Here we have the common idea that the king is a "living law" (given in that form in Mos. ii. 4, where see note) extended to the good and wise in general, cf. De Virt. 194 νόμοι δέ τινες ἀγραφοὶ καὶ οἱ βλοὶ τῶν ζηλωσάντων τὴν ἀρετὴν.

§ 12. Enos . . . is fourth. That the number is obtained by the omission of Cain rather than Abel is suggested by Quaest. in Gen. i. 81 "quare neque terrigena patris successorem eum (i.e. Cain) indicat neque caput posteriorum generationum."

§ 17. Transferred him. In this passage Philo, to support his idea of Enoch as signifying repentance, takes μετετέθη as referring to a moral change in this life. The common view (cf. Hebrews xi. 5 "translated that he should not see death") is adopted in Quaest. in Gen. i. 86, and perhaps also in De Mut. 38.

§ 51. Relative instead of absolute. Philo, as often, shews his familiarity with grammatical terms. The distinction between relative nouns (πρὸς τι, Lat. ad aliquid) and absolute (usually ἀπολελυμένα, whence Lat. absoluta) is regularly given by Greek and Latin grammarians. θεός is usually an "absolute," but the addition "of Abraham," etc., makes it a "relative," as "father" or "king" always is. Cf. De Mut. 27 and note.

§ 99. Natural philosophers. The Stoic view of the higher study of nature is well illustrated by S.V.F. ii. 42 (from Chrysippus) τῶν δὲ φυσικῶν ἔσχατος εἶναι ὁ περὶ τῶν θεῶν λόγος, and ibid. 44 the study of φυσική comes later than λογική and ἠθική—θειοτέρα γὰρ ἐστὶ καὶ βαθυτέρας δέχεται τῆς ἐπιστάσεως.

§§ 100-102. The thought of these sections is not quite clear and the translation might perhaps be improved. Philo seems to be criticizing an allegorization, which is not his own, on the ground that it reverses the spiritual connexion between the mind and virtue, though as a matter of fact he adopts the same interpretation of Abraham's relation to Sarah in De Cher. and elsewhere. The criticism begins with ἐναντιώτατοι δέ (§ 100), where δέ = "but" rather than "now," and ends with σωτήριον (§ 102), so that ἅπαντες μὲν οὖν might be translated "however that may be, all men . . ." In § 101 ἢ μήποτε, "or perhaps," is not very clear, nor is the "perhaps however" of the translation. One would like to read καὶ μήποτε or μήποτε δέ.

PHILO

§ 118. Gave the appearance of both eating and drinking. So Josephus, Ant. i. 197 οἱ δὲ δόξαν αὐτῷ παρέσχον ἐσθιόντων, and so later Rabbinical writers (references in Cohn's translation of this book, p. 121). This is a point sometimes supposed to shew Josephus's dependence on Philo. But the doubt whether angels would really eat and drink would naturally be felt and noted in any discussion of the story. The same may be said of § 170, where the statement that Abraham told no one in his household of the divine command to sacrifice, is compared by commentators to a similar statement in Joseph. Ant. i. 225.

§ 182. The practice of "Suttee" seems to have been well-known from the time of Alexander. Strabo xv. 30 and 62 quotes Onesicritus and Aristobulus, both companions of Alexander, as having reported the existence of the custom in different tribes. Diodorus Siculus xix. 33 gives a long account of the competition between the two wives of the Indian prince Keteus, who was killed in the wars of Antigonus 316 B.C., for the honour of dying on their husband's pyre, and of the joy with which the one chosen went to her death.

§ 244. The supremely perfect number. The term Panteleia seems to have been rather a divine name for ten in Pythagorean use than a mere epithet. Stobaeus, Ecl. i. 1. 10 (p. 22 H.) says that Pythagoras gave the name of Apollo to one, Artemis to two, Aphrodite to six, Athena to seven, Poseidon to eight, and Panteleia to ten. The word is once applied by Philo to seven, but to ten in the other five cases, in which he uses it of a number.

§ 257. This passage is quoted by Wyttenbach in his note on Plutarch, Consolatio ad Apollonium 102 D. Plutarch there advocates μετριοπάθεια in bereavements in similar terms and proceeds to quote Crantor the Academician Περὶ πένθους to the same effect. The same passage from Crantor is quoted by Cic. Tusc. Disp. iii. 12, and his book may very possibly have been in Philo's mind.

APPENDICES

§ 261. Here once more we have the Stoic paradox of the sage as king (see S. V. F. iii. 617). See note on De Mut. 152 (where the saying is founded on the same text as here) for other references in Philo.

APPENDIX TO DE IOSEPHO

§ 3. στρατηγίας. It should perhaps be noted that the papyri (see L. & S. 1935) shew that στρατηγός was in common use as the title of a civil as well as military governor of a nome in Ptolemaic and Roman Egypt. But this hardly justifies its use as an antithesis to στρατηγός in the military sense.

§ 20. Less grievous to suffer wrong than to do it. This thought, which is, of course, one of the leading ideas of the Republic, is expressed in almost the same words as here Gorgias 469 c ἐλοιμην ἂν μᾶλλον ἀδικεῖσθαι ἢ ἀδικεῖν, ibid. 508 v ἀληθὴ ἄρα ἦν τὸ εἶναι τὸ ἀδικεῖν τοῦ ἀδικεῖσθαι, ὅσπερ αἰσχίον, τοσοῦτω κάκιον, and so again 509 c.

§ 28. Addition to nature. This idea of the superfluosness of the laws of the different states, which follows naturally on the Stoic doctrine of the law of nature, is expressed in the view attributed to Zeno by Plutarch, ἵνα μὴ κατὰ πόλεις μηδὲ κατὰ δήμους οἰκῶμεν, ἰδίοις ἕκαστοι διωρισμένοι δικαίοις, ἀλλὰ πάντας ἀνθρώπους ἡγώμεθα δημότας καὶ πολίτας (S. V. F. i. 262). Compare also Chrysippus's exposure of the ridiculous varieties in laws and customs, ibid. iii. 322.

§ 38. Statesmanship the household management of the general public. Compare the opening of Plato's Politicus, particularly 259 c ἐπιστήμη μία περὶ πάντ' ἐστὶ ταῦτα· ταύτην δὲ εἴτε βασιλικὴν εἴτε πολιτικὴν εἴτε οἰκονομικὴν τις ὀνομάξοι μηδὲν αὐτῷ διαφερώμεθα. The idea is combated by Aristotle at the beginning of the Politics, but admitted by him of monarchy iii. 10.2 ὥσπερ γὰρ ἡ οἰκονομικὴ βασιλεία τις οἰκίας ἐστίν, οὕτως ἡ βασιλεία πόλεως . . . οἰκονομία.

§ 48. Seneca in his Phaedra has some fairly close parallels to these sections, put into the mouth of Hippolytus. Thus in 145 ff., supposing the crime remains undetected, "Quid ille qui mundum gerit?" Then 159 ff.:

APPENDICES

sed ut secundus numinum abscondat favor coitus nefandos utque contingat stupro negata magnis sceleribus semper fides, quid poena praesens, conscius mentis pavor animusque culpa plenus et semet timens?

Considering the likeness of the themes, Philo may very possibly have had in mind some similar passage in the earlier and lost Hippolytus of Euripides, or the lost play of Sophocles on the same subject, on which Seneca's play is based. It may be observed that the phrase ὀρθοῖς θυμῶσιν in 47 occurs in Sophocles, Oed. Tyr. 1385 in the same sort of context:

τοιάνδ' ἐγὼ κηλῖδα μηνύσας ἐμὴν ὀρθοῖς ἐμελλον θυμῶσιν τούτους ὄρᾶν;

See on this subject Dr. Martin Braun, Griechischer Roman und hellenische Geschichtsschreibung.

§ 62. Cooks and physicians. Another reminiscence of the Gorgias, where medicine is shewn as standing in the same relation to cookery as justice and legislation bear to the "flattery" of rhetoric, 464 D ff., also 500 B and 501 A.

§§ 125-147. Arnim in his Quellenstudien zu Philo von Alexandria discusses these sections in a chapter headed "Philo und Aenesidem." In the first part of this chapter he deals with the reproduction of the "Tropes of Aenesidemus" in De Ebr. 171-205, and also with the close connexion of the philosophy of that sceptic with that of Heraclitus. His best, though not his only point, is the resemblance of the treatise of Plutarch De Ἐ ἀπὸ Δελφῶν, chap. xviii., a chapter in which Heraclitus is twice cited, and which is supposed to be Heraclitean throughout, to §§ 127-129 of De Iosepho. In both the same point is made that each successive stage of life from childhood to old age brings the death of the previous stage, and the same inference is drawn that we need not fear the final death.

However this may be, it should be noted that in the De Iosepho we do not find the same type of scepticism as in De Ebr., if indeed it can be called scepticism at all. Human life is a "dream," it is "full of confusion, disorder, and uncertainty," and men, as a whole, are incapable of knowledge, but the dream is interpreted by the true statesman. The same interpreter can give adequate guidance on moral questions, and though this is not perhaps opposed to the principles of the sceptics, who admitted probability as supplying a rule of conduct, it is very different from the view expressed in De Ebr. 197, that only the foolish will assert positively that any particular thing is just or prudent or honourable.

PHILO

§ 168. βαθεῖ ἤθει. The exact meaning of this phrase is obscure. Cohn translates in tiefer Bewegung, Mangey profunda solertia. But neither of these fits in well with any sense of ἤθος known to me. The combination occurs again in Quod Omn. Prob. 144, where to illustrate the advisability of answering threats mildly the story is told of the slave-musician Antigenidas that when one of his rivals in a rage threatened to buy him, he replied, βαθεῖ ἤθει, "then I shall be able to teach you to play the flute." There perhaps the phrase = "very wittily," a sense which ἤθει or ἐν ἤθει certainly sometimes bears; or it may mean "very mildly," cf. τοῖς ἐν ἤθει καὶ μετὰ παιδιᾶς λεγομένοις, Plutarch, De Poet. Aud. 20 E, and ἐν ἤθει καὶ μετ' εὐνοίας προσφέρεσθαι τοῖς ἀμαρτάνουσι, ibid. De Adul. 73 E. But this last does not suit our passage, for though Joseph's words are milder than in his first speech, they are described as angry threats in § 170. For the rendering suggested in the footnote, it may be argued that ἤθος in dramatic criticism often denotes the mood or air which the speaker or writer assumes. The fullest treatment known to me of the numerous shades of meaning which the word has is to be found in Rutherford's Chapter in the History of Annotation, see index, s.v. ἤθος.

§ 219. προβλήτους. The absence of any legal reference is not fatal to the suggestion made in the footnote, as if the owner's title was not disputed, there would be no need in law for differentiation according to the method in which it had been acquired.

I would suggest also for consideration προκλήτους, i.e. "who had been offered for examination by torture." No example of the word is cited, but it would be naturally formed from πρόκλησις, the regular term for an offer or challenge of the kind. It would not, however, so well account for the variants προσβλήτους and προσηλύτους.

APPENDIX TO DE VITA MOSIS I.

§ 11. Conscious of the increased misery, etc. This idea, which does not seem very applicable to a three-months-old infant, is mentioned as a common, though mistaken, feeling about the death of older children in Tusc. Disp. i. 93 "idem, si puer parvus occidit, aequo animo ferendum putant; si vero in cunis ne querendum quidem . . . 'Nondum gustaverat,' inquit, 'vitae suavitatem; hic autem iam sperabat magna, quibus frui coeperat.'"

§ 22. Like the horse to the meadow. The proverb appears with ἵππεύς instead of ἵππος in Plato, Theaetetus 183 D ἵππέας εἰς πεδίον προκαλεῖ Σωκράτη εἰς λόγους προκαλούμενος, and so in Lucian, Pseudosophistes 8. On the other hand ἵππος as here in Lucian, Piscator 9.

§ 23. Assyrian letters. Whatever Philo understood by this, he may have got the idea from Herodotus iv. 87, where Herodotus records the erection by Darius on the Bosphorus of two stelae, one inscribed with Ἀσσύρια γράμματα, the other with Ἑλληνικά.

§ 263. Balaam's ass (see footnote). Philo's omission of any mention of the ass speaking may no doubt be due to the feeling that the story might seem ridiculous to the Gentile readers, whom he certainly has in view. But he quite possibly may have felt that it was one of the many passages which could only be accepted in a spiritual sense, like the mythical (μυθῶδες) account of the creation of Eve from the rib of Adam. In the one place where he mentions this part of the story, De Cher. 32-35, he gives the interpretation that the ass stands for the "unreasoning rule of life," i.e. ordinary life pursuits, which the fool unjustly blames when things go wrong.

§ 304. πληγή (in Num. xxv. 8, 9). Not only is Philo's mistake in taking this as = "slaughter" very natural, but are we sure that the LXX did not intend it? The word does not seem to be used in the LXX, in the historical books at least, of a pestilence as excluding other forms of divine visitation, except perhaps in 1 Chron. xxi. 22, and on the other hand is constantly used of a slaughter, e.g. 1 Sam. iv. 10. Psalm cvi. (cv.) 30 speaking of the incident takes it as a plague, but uses the θραύσις of Num. xvi. 48, 49. Whether Paul understood it as a plague or a slaughter is not clear (1 Cor. x. 8).

PHILO

APPENDIX TO DE VITA MOSIS II.

§ 4. The king is a living law. This application of the term νόμος ἐμψυχος to the ruler (rather than as in De Abr. 4 to an exemplary person) is often met with. Cf. especially Musonius, δεῖ αὐτὸν ὡσπερ ἐδόκει τοῖς παλαιοῖς νόμον ἐμψυχον εἶναι (Stobaeus, Flor. xlvii. 67, Meineke's edition, vol. ii. p. 274). Other examples are Archytas, νόμων δὲ ὁ μὲν ἐμψυχος, βασιλεὺς, ὁ δὲ ἄψυχος, γράμμα (ibid. xliii. 132, Mein. ibid. p. 136), and Diotogenes, ὁ δὲ βασιλεὺς ἦτοι νόμος ἐμψυχος ἢ νόμιμος ἄρχων (ibid. xlvii. 61, Mein. ibid. p. 260). I owe these examples to an article by Professor Goodenough in Yale Classical Studies, vol. i. pp. 56-101, on "The Political Philosophy of Hellenistic Kingship." For the other part of the dictum, that the law is a just king, cf. Quod Det. 141 and note, where Plato, Symposium 196 c οἱ πόλεως βασιλῆς νόμοι, is quoted.

§ 26-44. Philo's story of the origin of the Septuagint is probably founded on and in the main agrees with the long and elaborate account in the so-called letter of Aristeas. This document is admittedly pseudonymous and not written as it claims to be by a contemporary Greek at the court of Ptolemy Philadelphus. Its probable date is a matter of dispute, opinions ranging from 200 to 80 B.C. The chief difference is that Aristeas represents the seventy-two translators as comparing their work as they write it and producing an agreed though not an inspired version. The feasting also is more elaborate than Philo suggests, and occupies seven days, during which some question bearing on morals, particularly on the duties of kingship, is propounded to each of the translators in turn, and each of the answers is recorded. The account of the annual festival at Pharos could not of course appear in Aristeas.

Aristeas like Philo, as also Josephus, who gives a free paraphrase of a large part of the letter (Ant. xii. 2. 1), confines the translation to the Pentateuch. Modern criticism tends to accept the view that the version was made in the time of Philadelphus and may well have had his approval, but doubts the official co-operation of the king with the high priest and the employment of Palestinian Jews.

PHILO

(See Swete, Introduction to the Old Testament in Greek, or Thackeray's translation of the letter with appendices.)

§ 38. κύρια κυρίοις ὀνόμασι. Thackeray in his version of these sections in an appendix to his translation of the letter of Aristeeas, p. 92, renders "the appropriate technical words in the translation corresponded with the technical words in the original." I do not think that κύριον ὄνομα, here at any rate, means a technical term. A κύριον ὄνομα is a word used in its literal and exact sense (without μετάφρασις or παραφρασις), and all that the phrase suggests is that each word is an exact rendering of the corresponding word in the original. The duplication serves to bring out more strongly the mutuality of the correspondence like μόνη . . . μόνους in § 36. See note on De Mut. 12.

§ 47. τὸ γεναλογικόν. In the grammatical schools the ἐξηγήσις ἱστοριῶν, i.e. the elucidation of allusions in literature, was classified according as they dealt with places (τοπικαί), dates (χρονικαί), events (πραγματικαί), and persons (γεναλογικαί); see Usener, Kleine Schriften ii. p. 286. So in Polybius ix. 1 the γεναλογικὸς τρόπος of historiography is opposed to ὁ περὶ τὰς ἀποικίας καὶ κτίσεις καὶ συγγενείας, i.e. the ethnological, and ὁ περὶ τὰς πράξεις τῶν ἐθνῶν καὶ πόλεων καὶ δυναστῶν, called afterwards ὁ πραγματικὸς, which Polybius himself adopts. No doubt the Pentateuch contains much of the "pragmatical," but Philo's preoccupation with character would lead him to regard it as "genealogical." (This use of the word is ignored in L. & S.)

§ 65. While I have followed Cohn's text in indicating a lacuna at this point, which is also the termination of the second book in those editions which divide the De Vita Mosis into three, the correctness of this should not, I think, be regarded as certain. The decision really depends on the interpretation put on § 46 ὑπὲρ οὗ (i.e. the legislative part of the Pentateuch) δεύτερον λέξομεν τὸ πρότερον τῇ τάξει (i.e. the historical part) πρότερον ἀκριβώσαντες. If these words, as has generally been thought and at first sight seems natural, refer to the plan of this treatise we should conclude that the following sections give the "full treatment" of the historical part and that some similar discussion on the legislative part has been lost. [It does not, however, seem to me that this need have been of any great length, or much more than a general praise of the laws to the same effect as what we find in § 52.] But I am inclined to agree with the suggestion of Professor Goodenough that the reference is to the scheme of the whole Exposition. On this view the full treatment of the historical part is being carried out in the four treatises, and the discussion of the legislation relegated to books De Specialibus Legibus, and the sections 47-65 are merely a justification of Moses' plan of setting the historical before the legislative.

APPENDICES

This will not, of course, seem convincing to those who regard the De Vita Mosi as a separate work entirely independent of the scheme of the Exposition (see General Introduction pp. xv f.). Also it may be argued that if there is no lacuna, or only a very small one, the length of the treatment of Moses as lawgiver is disproportionately short compared with what is given to him as high priest and prophet. Also it must be remembered that in the copies made by the scribes whose mss. we possess, the book did end at § 65, and that a loss at the end of a book is more likely to occur than a lacuna in the middle.

§ 79. The sum of successive numbers, etc. Fifty-five is what in ancient arithmetic is called a "triangular" number being the sum of  $1+2+3 \dots 10$ , and therefore  $= \frac{10 \cdot 11}{2}$

$\left(1+2 \dots n = \frac{n \cdot \overline{n+1}}{2}\right)$ . This name is given to these numbers because the units can be arranged in the form of an equilateral triangle. Thus e.g. 10 units can be arranged a a a a a a a a a a

so as to form an equilateral triangle with each side consisting of 4 units. This side, sometimes called the gnomon, is regarded as the base of the whole triangle, and thought to possess any allegorical virtues which belong to it. Cf. § 84, where four is said to be the essence of ten. Twenty-eight is also a triangular number, being the sum of  $1+2 \dots 7$ , but any virtues which it possesses as such appear to be superseded by its being also the sum of its factors.

PHILO

The number of the Beast ( $666 = 1 + 2 \dots 36$ ) and the Fishes in John xxi. ( $153 = 1 + 2 \dots 17$ ) are also triangular, and attempts have been made to interpret them from this point of view.

§ 114. (The inscription on the πέταλον.) The footnote requires supplementing and perhaps correcting. Thackeray in his note to Joseph. Bell. Iud. v. 235 states positively that the inscription has been shewn to be the "tetragrammaton" rather than "Holiness to the Lord." He refers to a note in the Journal of Theological Studies, vol. xxvi. p. 72 by Mr. J. E. Hogg. I do not think this note does more than argue (with what success I cannot tell) that the Hebrew in Ex. xxviii. 36 (LXX 32) and in Ex. xxxix. 30 (LXX, xxxvi. 38)—though the prima facie meaning is "Holy to Jahve"—may mean "the sacred name Jahve," and also that the LXX in Ex. xxviii. does not assert more than that the thing engraved was a "holy thing belonging to the Lord." This last is true, but in the other passage, Ex. xxxix. (LXX, xxxvi.), the translators make it perfectly clear that the inscription was ἀγίασμα κυρίου.

As for Philo, in De Mig. 103, where he quotes Ex. xxviii. in the form πέταλον χρυσοῦν καθαρόν, ἔχον ἐκτύπωμα σφραγιῶδος, ἀγίασμα κυρίου, it is quite possible that he takes ἀγίασμα in apposition to πέταλον or ἐκτύπωμα, and does not mention any inscription at all. The words then mean "a plate of pure gold, having the engraving (embossment?) of a signet, a sacred thing to the Lord"; not "as of a signet," for he goes on to explain that the signet represents the ιδέα ιδεῶν, a phrase which, I think, refers to the Logos rather than to the Self-existent. If so, in Mos. ii. 114 and 132 he is following quite another tradition. What authorities are there for this besides himself and Josephus? Prof. Burkitt in a supplementary note in J.T.S. xxvi. p. 180 remarks that the same is stated by Bar Hebraeus, "who must ultimately have derived it from Origen," and by Origen, who may "possibly" have derived it from Philo. Considering Origen's well-known acquaintance with Philo, "possibly" seems a weak word. Mangey also quotes Jerome to the same effect, but Jerome also makes frequent use of Philo. Is it a Rabbinic tradition? The German translators, generally well versed in such parallels, quote nothing from this source.

The question then suggests itself, "Did Josephus also merely follow Philo?" If so, though it is not given among

APPENDICES

Cohn's examples of coincidence between the two, it is the strongest evidence I have yet seen of Josephus's use of his predecessor.

A further question, to which I can give no answer, is what does Philo mean by saying that the "theologian," presumably Moses, declares that the name of the Self-existent has four letters. I do not think he anywhere shews any knowledge of the YHVH, or that it is represented by κύριος in the LXX.

§ 117-135. (Symbolism of the High Priest's vesture.) A much shorter account in De Spec. Leg. i. 85-95 agrees very closely with this in substance. The chief differences are that the bells there signify the harmony, not between merely earth and water, but between all the parts of the universe, and that "Clear-shewing" and "Truth" are given a somewhat different interpretation. There "Clear-shewing" is entirely confined to the "natures in heaven" (corresponding more or less to the "rational principle in nature" of this treatise), and "Truth" only concerns men as a qualification for the "heaven" which the breastplate in both passages represents, while in this treatise both are common to both forms of λόγος. In De Mig. 102 f. the only parts noticed are the gold-plate on the head, and the flowers and the bells at the feet (the pomegranates being left unnoticed). The treatment of these two (the flowers and bells) is altogether different. The two together represent the αἰσθητά, as opposed to the νοητά (the head-gear), the flowers being the things seen, and the bells the things heard, and, while in De Vita Mosis the harmony produced by the latter is that between earth and water, in De Mig. we have the profounder idea that it is the essential harmony between the world of sense and the world of thought.

In Josephus's short notice (Ant. ii. 184), besides other differences, the pomegranates signify the lightning, and the bells the thunder.

§ 210. Ever virgin, etc. In De Op. 100 Philo has ascribed these epithets to philosophers other than Pythagorean; in Leg. All. i. 15 to the Pythagoreans themselves. The second view is supported by the statement of Stobaeus, Ecl. i. 1. 10, that Pythagoras, likening the numbers to the Gods, called Seven Athena.

SUPPLEMENTARY LIST OF CASES WHERE THE TEXT PRINTED IS NOT VOUCHERED FOR BY ANY MANUSCRIPT

DE ABRAHAMO

§	TEXT	MSS.	§	TEXT	MSS.
111	οὐδ'	οὐχ	200	ἀποδόσεως	ὑποθέσεως <sup>1</sup>
185	ἐξευμαρίζον	ἐξευμαρίζον- των	235	ἐν τέλος	ἐντελές

DE JOSEPHO

§	TEXT	MSS.	§	TEXT	MSS.
132	τοσοῦτος	τοιούτος	156	ῶ	ὦν
137	ἀπεράτους	ἀπειράτους or ἀπίρους

DE VITA MOSIS I

§	TEXT	MSS.
44	δικαίωσας	δικάσας

DE VITA MOSIS II

§	TEXT	MSS.	§	TEXT	MSS.
179	παρεστῶτος	προεστῶτος	268	δηλῶν	δηλοῦντα or δηλον
264	ἐνδεχόμενον	ἐκδεχόμενον or δεχόμενον

<sup>1</sup> A doubtful correction. The senses in which ὑπόθεσις is used are very wide. Cf. Mos. i. 69.

Printed in Great Britain by R. & R. CLARK, LIMITED, Edinburgh.

PHILO
VOLUME VII

WITH AN ENGLISH TRANSLATION BY
F. H. COLSON

passed away 1943

HARVARD UNIVERSITY PRESS
CAMBRIDGE, MASSACHUSETTS
LONDON, ENGLAND

CONTENTS

GENERAL INTRODUCTION . . . . .	ix
LIST OF PHILO'S WORKS . . . . .	xix
ON THE DECALOGUE (DE DECALOGO)
Introduction . . . . .	3
Text and Translation . . . . .	6
ON THE SPECIAL LAWS (DE SPECIA- LIBUS LEGIBUS) BOOK I
Introduction . . . . .	98
Text and Translation . . . . .	100
BOOK II
Introduction . . . . .	304
Text and Translation . . . . .	306
BOOK III
Introduction . . . . .	472
Text and Translation . . . . .	474

CONTENTS

APPENDICES

I. To De Decalogo . . . . .	609
II. To De Specialibus Legibus , i. . . . .	615
III. To De Specialibus Legibus , ii. . . . .	624
IV. To De Specialibus Legibus , iii. . . . .	631

PREFACE TO VOLUME VII

THIS seventh volume is in a sense a continuation of the sixth, in that both belong to the second main division of Philo's work, the Exposition of the Laws. But the contents differ so essentially from the biographical treatises, contained in the last volume, that it seemed advisable to add a General Introduction, which will apply not only to the seventh, but also to a large part of the matter which has to be relegated to the eighth.

The only other thing I need say here is that I wish to acknowledge my debt to the German translators, particularly to the great Philonic scholar, I. Heinemann, whose version of three out of these four treatises and still more the notes appended to them have given me valuable help. I have not always felt able to accept his conclusions and differ from him occasionally as to the meaning of particular sentences and phrases. But I have generally, if not always, recorded these cases, so that scholars will be able to judge between us. His more recent work Philons griechische und jüdische Bildung<sup>a</sup> has also <sup>a</sup> Referred to in the notes as Bildung.

PREFACE

proved very useful. I will also note Prof. E. R. Goodenough's Jewish Jurisprudence in Egypt, and if I seem to mention it to express disagreement more often than agreement, this does not detract from what I owe to his fresh and illuminating way of treating the many problems which these treatises suggest.

F. H. C.

CAMBRIDGE, January 1937.

GENERAL INTRODUCTION

THE last volume carried us through the introductory part of the Exposition of the Laws, namely that in which Philo set before his readers the picture of Moses and his predecessors as living embodiments of the laws. In this volume we pass on to the laws themselves. Inevitably he begins with the Ten Commandments, which being given directly by God himself are to be regarded as the general heads under which the specific enactments given through Moses are to be grouped. While he practically accepts our division of the Ten into duty towards God and duty towards our neighbour, he does not divide them into four and six, but, led perhaps by his love of numerical symmetry, into two sets of five, the place of the Fifth in the first group being justified by the close analogy of parenthood to the creative work of God.

The first of the four treatises in this volume, the De Decalogo, apart from some preliminary considerations about the theophany on Sinai and a short sketch at the end of the system to be followed in the subsequent treatises, deals with the Ten in their literal meaning. He now passes on to the Special Laws. In all four books the treatment of each commandment begins with a dissertation on the commandment itself in its literal sense, similar to, though fuller than, that in the De Decalogo, and then proceeds to a discussion of the particular enactments which he thinks may be set under it. Thus in Book I, which takes the First and Second Commandments, this preliminary dissertation is followed by an account of the regulations about the priests, the sacrifices of various kinds and as appointed for the various feasts and the moral condition required of the sacrificers. As all these are concerned with the right method of worshipping God he considers that they are bound up in the commandment "Thou shalt have none other God but me."

GENERAL INTRODUCTION

The second Book covers all laws which can be assigned to the next three Commandments. Under the Third come all regulations about oaths and vows ; under the Fourth a very wide assortment of subjects. Philo has to some extent already dealt with the other holydays besides the Sabbath, when he enumerated the sacrifices offered at each, but he now returns to them, not so much as we might expect because the Sabbath is only the chief holyday, but because seven is a sacred number and the feasts are either for seven days or for one which is mystically identified with seven. On the same principle the sabbatical year and the year of Jubile, though social rather than religious ordinances, are here included. Under the Fifth, which is briefly treated, we have apart from the duties of parents and children to each other little more than the duty of paying respect to age in general.

Book III carries on with the Sixth and Seventh Commandments. It discusses many enactments which deal with sexual irregularities and crimes of violence. In Book IV regulations dealing with various forms of dishonesty come under the Eighth Commandment, and minor regulations as to witnesses and just judgement under the Ninth. In dealing with the Tenth, Philo, taking οὐκ ἐπιθυμήσεις to apply to desire in general, reads into it the duty of controlling the appetites and thus finds an opportunity for discussing the Pentateuchal food laws. At this point (iv. 132)<sup>a</sup> he recognizes that there are various precepts and enactments which cannot properly be assigned to any of the Ten but are implied by them all, and in consequence we have here what seems practically a new scheme. The laws in the succeeding part of the Exposition are classified according to the virtues, justice, courage, humanity, etc., which they may severally be said to promote. The last part of Book IV discusses justice in this sense and is followed by a treatise or rather a set of minor treatises bearing the title De Virtutibus and this again is supplemented by another (De Praemiis), well described as an epilogue, on rewards and penalties there laid down, with another perhaps entirely separate on blessings and cursings. As all these belong to the next volume I need not say more about them here.

GENERAL INTRODUCTION

It seems to me that on the whole Philo reports with fairness and accuracy the laws which he discusses. They are only a selection and it is not, I think, possible to find any principle on which the selection is based. There is, of course, a great amount of interpretation and justification and in this it will be found that he is influenced by Greek and Roman Law in the same way that he is influenced by Greek Philosophy in the Commentary. In the same way but not to the same extent; for though he was well read in Demosthenes <sup>a</sup> In fact if it were not for long established tradition the natural arrangement would be to end Book IV here and join the rest of the book with the De Virtutibus.

GENERAL INTRODUCTION

and very probably had a fair knowledge of Attic Law in general, he was not a jurist in the same sense that he was a philosopher. In his statements of the laws themselves there are several cases where either the whole law or some detail in it has no direct scriptural warrant, but many, if not most, of these are reasonable deductions from what is to be found in Scripture <sup>a</sup> and indeed he says this himself of some of these deductions.<sup>b</sup> Sometimes a scriptural law is applied to contemporary circumstances,<sup>c</sup> sometimes a non-scriptural detail is derived from contemporary practice or his own observation,<sup>d</sup> sometimes perhaps he has misinterpreted his text,<sup>e</sup> and sometimes his memory has gone astray,<sup>f</sup> but these last are quite exceptional.<sup>g</sup>

In the first section of the De Decalogo Philo promises that if any allegorical meaning should <sup>a</sup> e.g. i. 235, ii. 128, 252, iii. 64, 147 f.

<sup>b</sup> i.e. with the phrase "Moses forbade from afar" (νόρρωθεν). See note on iii. 63.

<sup>c</sup> ii. 82, iii. 72.

<sup>d</sup> e.g. much of what he says of the temple, i. 71 ff., 166, ii. 175.

<sup>e</sup> iii. 86, 140, 150.

<sup>f</sup> i. 72, iii. 82, 205.

<sup>g</sup> Here may be mentioned Prof. Goodenough's thesis elaborated in his Jewish Jurisprudence in Egypt. He believes that "the laws as expounded by Philo are the law of the Jewish courts in Alexandria" and "that what Philo is doing throughout is to rephrase the prescriptions of the Torah, reinterpret them, or even alter them or deny them in a literal sense altogether, so that in the end Jewish law resembles now a law of Rome, now one of Greece, or again one of the few laws we still have from Alexandria" (pp. 13, 14). He sustains this view with a wealth of references to, and citations from, a number of modern as well as ancient authorities, with which I am not really competent to cope. And, when I say that he does not seem to me to prove his point, I do not wish to speak dogmatically. My main criticisms may be put as follows: First, it does not seem to me that we know enough either of the limits of jurisdiction allowed to the Jews in Alexandria, or how they administered what they had, to determine appear to underlie the laws he discusses he will not fail to state it. The promise is only partially fulfilled. As a matter of fact allegory is almost entirely absent from the De Dec.<sup>a</sup> itself and only appears occasionally in the civil or social laws of the Spec. Leg.<sup>b</sup> though many of these have been allegorized at length in the Commentary.<sup>c</sup> Here again I cannot see any clear principle on which some particular laws are chosen for such treatment. On the other hand, when he is dealing with the sacrifices in Book I and the feasts in Book II allegory or rather symbolism is almost universal. Naturally enough. For both sacrifices and feasts have little meaning for him except the spiritual.

GENERAL INTRODUCTION

whether, when Philo departs from the substance of the Torah, he is adjusting it to what was administered or to what he himself thought reasonable. Secondly, that Prof. Goodenough much exaggerates, if not the "rephrasing and re-interpretation," at any rate the "alterations and denials." So that after reading and re-reading the book and with full acknowledgement of the useful and illuminating remarks in which it abounds, I adhere to my view that, with the reservations mentioned above, Philo gives a fair and accurate account of the laws which he discusses. <sup>a</sup> See, however, § 49.

<sup>b</sup> Sp. Leg. i. 8 ff., 327 ff., ii. 29 ff., iii. 178 ff.

<sup>c</sup> Two notable examples are Deut. xxi. 18-21, the stoning of the disobedient son, the allegorical sermon on which occupies a large part of De Ebr., and ib. 15-17, the right of the firstborn son of the discarded wife, which is the text for the long allegory in De Sac. 19 ff., and again in De Sob. 21. These two are treated literally without any hint of allegory in Sp. Leg. ii. 232 f. and 135 f. respectively. Still more remarkable is Philo's treatment of Deut. xx. 5-7 (exemption of the newly-married etc. from military service). In De Agr. 149 an allegory is suggested on the grounds that the sense of the exemption taken literally is at least doubtful (157). In De Virt. 27 ff. it is extolled as a wise measure. A similar inconsistency in dealing with "till the death of the high priest" (Num. xxxv. 28) is pointed out in the note to Sp. Leg. iii. 131 (App. p. 638).

GENERAL INTRODUCTION

What is the purpose of the Exposition? I think it is best expressed in the words of De Vita Mosis ii. 44, where he says that if the Jewish people prospered better each nation would abandon its ancestral customs and turn to honouring their laws alone and that these would darken the light of the others as the risen sun darkens the stars. That is to say, by this exposition he wishes to show the world at large how admirable is the Pentateuchal code, and if this is so, the natural answer to the question for whom was the Exposition written will be, primarily at any rate, for Gentiles. In the introduction to the preceding volume I noted characteristics in the treatises on Abraham and Joseph which pointed that way, and nothing in this volume seems to me to imply the contrary,<sup>a</sup> while in his insistence on the duty of honouring and welcoming proselytes and on the universal priesthood of the Jewish race we may see positive signs of a desire to interest and conciliate Gentile readers. It is true that the epilogue, the De Praemiis, seems to be addressed mainly to the Jews, but if we expand "primarily for Gentiles" by the addition "and also for Jews though not of the type which delighted in the tortuous meditations of the Commentary," it will probably satisfy the facts. It is quite in accordance with Philo's perpetually shifting mentality that he should have at one moment the first, at another the second class of readers in view.

The impression which the Exposition leaves is by no means uniform. We may naturally be revolted by the ferocity with which he supports the severer <sup>a</sup> I agree with Goodenough (Harvard Theological Review, Apr. 1933, pp. 110 ff.) against Massebieau that such phrases as "Our Nation" (De Dec. 1) have no bearing on the question.

GENERAL INTRODUCTION

sentences of the Pentateuch and sometimes goes beyond it. On the other hand we may well admire the fine liberal spirit shown in the emphasis which he lays on the humaner side of the code and in his constant plea for kindness to the poor, the helpless and the stranger. And the spirituality with which he interprets the baldness of the Levitical ritual, fanciful though it be, does something to illuminate what is the least readable and the least read part of the Old Testament.

NOTE ON THE TEXT

While the ms. authority for De Dec. and Sp. Leg. iii. is fairly plentiful, something has to be said about the other two treatises in this volume. The somewhat meagre evidence for the text of Sp. Leg. i. has received in recent years an important addition by the discovery of a palimpsest which Cohn calls R.<sup>a</sup> The Philo text of this is said to date probably from the 9th century. At a later time there were written across it some commentaries on Aristotle, which sometimes make the original hand hard to read ; so <sup>a</sup> R as we have it contains also De Vita Mosis ii. from § 71-end and the whole of De Dec. But as it only came to Cohn's knowledge between the publication in 1902 of his vol. iv (which includes these two treatises), and the publication of vol. v in 1906, while it is regularly cited in the App. Crit. to Sp. Leg. i. and ii., it is not so with the App. of the two earlier treatises. In his account of the manuscript in Sitzungsberichte der kön. preuss. Ak. der Wissenschaften, 1905, pp. 36 ff. he cites some of its readings in De Dec. with approval, most of which I have mentioned in my textual notes, but considers it to be of much less value in that treatise, and still more in De Vit. Mos., than in Sp. Leg. Some words, however, suggest that he did not give it the same careful scrutiny in the books which he had already edited as in those which he had still to publish.

GENERAL INTRODUCTION

that "R, ut videtur" occasionally appears in Cohn's App. Crit. He regards it as of special value, though unfortunately it comes to an end at ii. 95.<sup>a</sup>

The state of the text in Book II is a more complicated matter, and though some of the information here given will be found in the notes, it may be well to supply it more fully here.

The Éditio Princeps of Philo contained merely the part dealing with the Third Commandment (§§ 1-38). The Fourth Commandment down to § 214 was added by Hoeschel in 1614. But Hoeschel had mss. of Philo to hand only for the first part of this, namely down to the end of § 123. From this point he relied on mss. of Nicetas Serranus, Archbishop of Heraclea,<sup>b</sup> which in the absence of any codex of Philo himself he believed to be the genuine text. These, however, did not include the sections on the law of inheritance (§§ 124-139), nor the conclusion of the Fourth Commandment (the Basket Rite) (§§ 215-223), while the Fifth Commandment section and the concluding remarks were absent altogether.<sup>c</sup>

In the parts which they cover the excerpts supply a considerably abridged<sup>d</sup> version, with a certain <sup>a</sup> It should also be noted that §§ 177-193 of Sp. Leg. i. were absent from the mss. to which Mangey had access. The result is that in the marginal references in this edition to Mangey's paging p. 240 is not followed by p. 241 till after nine pages of my text instead of after the normal two.

<sup>b</sup> I have no information as to his date. I must apologize for having called him Nicetes in Vol. iii. p. 511 and elsewhere.

<sup>c</sup> Nicetas's excerpts are part of a commentary on St. Luke, this particular set being quoted on ch. xxi. 1 "Now the feast of unleavened bread drew nigh which is called the Passover."

<sup>d</sup> The extent of the abridging may be easily seen from the marginal references to Mangey's pages. A rough calculation will shew that something like half the full text has been omitted in §§ 140-214.

GENERAL INTRODUCTION

amount of variation. Hoeschel's text was adopted by Mangey and continued to be accepted till 1818, when another manuscript (called M) came to light, containing the full text of the whole book.<sup>a</sup> The total result is that for more than half of the book we have either M alone or at the best M with Nicetas's abridgement.<sup>b</sup>

A few words must be added on the tiresome subject of the traditional divisions, especially in Book I. Here the ms. Headings at different points translated as De Circumcisione, De Monarchia, etc., are sensible enough, if regarded as indicating the main divisions of the book. But if taken as introducing separate treatises, as they are in Mangey's edition and Yonge's translation, they are misleading in that they disguise the fact that the whole book<sup>c</sup> is a systematic dissertation on the laws which fall under the two first commandments. Unfortunately they are too often used for reference in fairly recent works to be completely ignored.

In Book II the separation of the Third, Fourth and Fifth Commandments is justifiable. But the divisions of the Fourth, as they appear in the mss., are quite unnecessary. They are disregarded in Cohn's head-

<sup>a</sup> According to Cohn a complete edition of the book from the mss. was first published by Tischendorf in 1868. Yonge, however, translated "the Basket" and "Honouring parents" in 1855 from what he calls "Schwichest's edition."

<sup>b</sup> M is called a corrupt manuscript by Cohn. But judging from the emendations recorded its text is far purer than that of De Post. and De Som. ii., where also we have to rely on a single codex.

<sup>c</sup> With the exception of the first 11 sections on circumcision which Philo does not claim to come under a particular commandment.

GENERAL INTRODUCTION

ings of the pages and partially <sup>a</sup> in his numeration of chapters.

In Book III the headings and divisions need not trouble us, though I have indicated them in the textual notes. They are really quite useless, being introduced at haphazard and rarely applying to more than a few sections of the matter they might be expected to cover. Fortunately Mangey ignores them in the heading of his pages and Cohn also, as well as in his numeration of chapters, though both insert them in the body of the text. It surely cannot be supposed that they, or indeed any of these headings, are due to Philo himself.

<sup>a</sup> See below

COHN'S NUMERATION OF CHAPTERS—The Special Laws I.

The point at which each fresh numeration begins is indicated in the notes, but to facilitate reference a summary is here appended.

COHN	THIS TRANSLATION
De Circumcisione . . . . . I.-II.	I.-II.
De Monarchia . . . . . I.-IX.	III.-XI.
De Templo and De Sacerdotibus . . . . . I.-XV. (In Mangey called De Monarchia II.)	XII.-XXVI.
De Sacerdotum honoribus . . . . . I.-VI.	XXVII.-XXXII.
De Victimis . . . . . I.-XV.	XXXIII.-XLVII.
De Sacrificantibus. . . . . I.-XVI.	XLVIII.-LXIII.

NUMERATION OF CHAPTERS—The Special Laws II.

COHN	THIS TRANSLATION
The Third Commandment (No special heading) . . . . . I.-IX.	I.-IX.
De Septenario . . . . . I.-XXIV.	X.-XXXIII.
The Basket Rite . . . . . I.-IV. (No special heading)	XXXIV.-XXXVII.
De parentibus colendis . . . . . I.-XI	XXXVIII.-XLVIII.

LIST OF PHILO'S WORKS

SHOWING THEIR DIVISION INTO VOLUMES IN THIS EDITION

VOLUME

- I. On the Creation (De Opificio Mundi) Allegorical Interpretation (Legum Allegoria)
- II. On the Cherubim (De Cherubim)
On the Sacrifices of Abel and Cain (De Sacrificiis Abelis et Caini)
The Worse attacks the Better (Quod Deterius Potiori insidiari solet)
On the Posterity and Exile of Cain (De Posteritate Caini)
- III. On the Unchangeableness of God (Quod Deus im-mutabilis sit)
On Husbandry (De Agricultura)
On Noah's Work as a Planter (De Plantatione)
On Drunkenness (De Ebrietate)
On Sobriety (De Sobrietate)
- IV. On the Confusion of Tongues (De Confusione Lin-guarum)
On the Migration of Abraham (De Migratione Abrahami)
Who is the Heir (Quis Rerum Divinarum Heres)
On the Preliminary Studies (De Congressu quaerendae Eruditionis gratia)
- V. On Flight and Finding (De Fuga et Inventione)
On the Change of Names (De Mutatione Nominum)
On Dreams (De Somniis)
- VI. On Abraham (De Abrahamo)
On Joseph (De Iosepho)
Moses (De Vita Mosis)

LIST OF PHILO'S WORKS

VOLUME

- VII. On the Decalogue (De Decalogo)
On the Special Laws Books I-III (De Specialibus Legibus)
- VIII. On the Special Laws Book IV (De Specialibus Legibus)
On the Virtues (De Virtutibus)
On Rewards and Punishments (De Praemiis et Poenis)
- IX. Every Good Man is Free (Quod Omnis Probus Liber sit)
On the Contemplative Life (De Vita Contemplativa)
On the Eternity of the World (De Aeternitate Mundi)
Flaccus (In Flaccum)
Hypothetica<sup>1</sup> (Apologia pro Iudaeis)
On Providence<sup>1</sup> (De Providentia)
- X. On the Embassy to Gaius (De Legatione ad Gaium)
GENERAL INDEX TO VOLUMES I-X

SUPPLEMENT

- I. Questions and Answers on Genesis<sup>2</sup> (Quaestiones et Solutiones in Genesin)
- II. Questions and Answers on Exodus<sup>2</sup> (Quaestiones et Solutiones in Exodum)
- GENERAL INDEX TO SUPPLEMENTS I-II

<sup>1</sup> Only two fragments extant.

<sup>2</sup> Extant only in an Armenian version.

THE DECALOGUE
(DE DECALOGO)

INTRODUCTION TO DE DECALOGO

The first part of this treatise deals with some questions raised by the law-giving on Sinai. First, why was it given in the desert? Four reasons are suggested: (a) because of the vanity and idolatry rampant in cities (2-9), (b) because solitude promotes repentance (10-13), (c) because it was well that laws needed for civic life should begin before the era of that life began (14), (d) that the divine origin of the laws should be attested by the miraculous supply of food in the barren wilderness (15-17). Secondly, observing that the Commandments given by God Himself were ten, we ask why that number, and the answer is given by a disquisition on its perfection as a number (18-31). Thirdly, what was the nature of the voice which announced the commandments?—not God's, for He is not a man, but an invisible kind of speech created for the occasion (32-35). Fourthly, why was the singular number "thou" used? (a) Because it emphasizes the value of the individual soul (36-38), (b) the personal appeal better secures obedience (39), (c) it is a lesson to the great not to despise the humblest (40-44). This part concludes with some words on the grandeur of the scene, particularly the fire from which the voice issued (45-49).

Coming to the Commandments themselves, after noting that they divide into two sets of five (50-51),

THE DECALOGUE

we pass to the First. Polytheism is denounced, particularly as taking the form of worship given to the elements or heavenly bodies (52-65). Worse than this is the worship of lifeless images forbidden by the Second Commandment. Its absurdity is exposed (66-76) and with it the worse absurdity of Egyptian animal-worship (77-81). The Third Commandment is taken as forbidding principally perjury (82-91), but also reckless swearing (92-95). The Fourth teaches us to set apart a time for philosophy as opposed to practical life (96-101), and reasons are given for the sanctity of seven and the seventh day in particular (102-105). The Fifth stands on the border-line, because parenthood assimilates man to God and to dishonour parents is to dishonour God (106-111). Children owe all to their parents, and in the duty of repaying kindness they may take a lesson from the lower animals (112-120).

The second set of five opens with the prohibition of Adultery (121). Adultery is denounced as (a) voluptuous (122), (b) involving the sin of another (123-124), (c) destructive of family ties (125-127), (d) cruel to the children (128-131). The second of the set forbids murder as both unnatural and sacrilegious, since man is the most sacred of God's possessions (132-134). Stealing is forbidden by the third, because theft on the smallest scale may develop into wholesale robbery and usurpation (135-137). The fourth forbids false witness, as opposed in itself to truth and justice, and also in law-courts causing judges to give wrong verdicts and thus break their own oaths (138-141). The last Commandment against "desire" gives Philo an opportunity of discoursing in Stoical terms on the four passions, pleasure, grief, fear, desire, of which the last is the deadliest (142-153).

THE DECALOGUE

Sections 154-175 are really a rough synopsis of Books II., III., and IV. 1-131, shewing the nature of the particular laws which will be placed under each commandment. And the concluding sections 176-178 justify the absence of any penalties attached to the commandments on the grounds that God who is the cause of good leaves the punishment for transgression to his subordinates.

ΠΕΡΙ ΤΩΝ ΔΕΚΑ ΛΟΓΩΝ ΟΙ ΚΕΦΑΛΑΙΑ ΝΟΜΩΝ ΕΙΣΙΝ

- [180] I. Τοὺς βίους τῶν κατὰ Μωυσέα σοφῶν ἀνδρῶν, <sup>1</sup> οὓς ἀρχηγέτας τοῦ ἡμετέρου ἔθνους καὶ νόμους ἀγράφους αἱ ἱεραὶ βίβλοι δηλοῦσιν, ἐν ταῖς προτέραις συντάξεσι μεμνηκῶς κατὰ τὰ ἀκόλουθα ἐξῆς τῶν ἀναγραφέντων νόμων τὰς ἰδέας ἀκριβῶσω μηδ', εἴ τις ὑποφαίνοιτο τρόπος ἀλληγορίας, τοῦτον παρὲς ἕνεκα τῆς πρὸς διάνοιαν φιλομαθοῦς ἐπιστήμης, ἧ πρό τῶν ἐμφανῶν ἔθος τὰ ἀφανῆ ζητεῖν.
2 Πρὸς δὲ τοὺς ἀποροῦντας, τί δὴ ποτε οὐκ ἐν πόλεσιν ἀλλ' ἐν ἐρήμῳ βαθεῖα τοὺς νόμους ἐτίθει, λεκτέον πρῶτον μὲν, ὅτι αἱ πολλαὶ τῶν πόλεων [181] ἀμυθῆτων κακῶν εἰσι | μεσταί, καὶ τῶν πρὸς τὸ θεῖον ἀνοσιουργημάτων καὶ τῶν πρὸς ἀλλήλους
3 ἀδικημάτων. οὐδὲν γάρ ἐστιν ὃ μὴ κεκιβδήλευται, τὰ γνήσια τῶν νόθων παρενημερούντων καὶ τάληθῆ τῶν εἰκότων, ἃ φύσει μὲν κατέψευσται, πιθανὰς 4 δ' ὑποβάλλει φαντασίας πρὸς ἀπάτην. ἐν πόλεσιν οὖν καὶ ὁ πάντων ἐπιβουλότατος φύεται τῦφος, ὃν τινες τεθήπασι καὶ προσκυνοῦσι τὰς κενὰς δόξας σεμνοποιοῦντες διὰ χρυσῶν στεφάνων καὶ ἀλουρ-

<sup>a</sup> See General Introduction to Vol. VI. pp. ix. f.

<sup>b</sup> See General Introduction to this volume, p. xiii.

<sup>c</sup> Lit. "On account of studious knowledge tending to under-

THE DECALOGUE

I. Having related in the preceding treatises the 1 lives of those whom Moses judged to be men of wisdom, who are set before us in the Sacred Books as founders of our nation and in themselves unwritten laws,<sup>a</sup> I shall now proceed in due course to give full descriptions of the written laws. And if some allegorical interpretation should appear to underlie them, I shall not fail to state it.<sup>b</sup> For knowledge loves to learn and advance to full understanding <sup>c</sup> and its way is to seek the hidden meaning rather than the obvious.

To the question why he promulgated his laws in 2 the depths of the desert instead of in cities we may answer in the first place that most cities are full of countless evils, both acts of impiety towards God and wrongdoing between man and man. For every- 3 thing is debased, the genuine overpowered by the spurious, the true by the specious, which is intrinsi-cally false but creates impressions whose plausibility serves but to delude. So too in cities there arises 4 that most insidious of foes, Pride,<sup>d</sup> admired and worshipped by some who add dignity to vain ideas <sup>e</sup> by means of gold crowns and purple robes and a standing." I cannot think that the text is right. For further discussion and attempts to emend it see App. p. 609.

<sup>a</sup> Or "vanity."

<sup>e</sup> Or "opinions."

PHILO

γίδων καὶ πλήθους θεραπόντων καὶ ὄχημάτων, ἐφ' ὧν οἱ λεγόμενοι μακάριοι καὶ εὐδαίμονες μετέωροι φέρονται, τοτὲ μὲν ὄρεις ἢ ἵππους καταξευγνύντες τοτὲ δὲ καὶ ἀνθρώπους, οἱ τὰ φορεῖα κατὰ τῶν αὐχένων ἀχθοφοροῦσι τὴν ψυχὴν πρὸ τοῦ σώματος δι' ὑπερβολὴν ὑβρεως πιεζόμενοι.

5 Π. τῦφος καὶ πολλῶν ἄλλων κακῶν δημιουργός ἐστίν, ἀλαζονείας, ὑπεροψίας, ἀνισότητος<sup>1</sup>. αἱ δ' εἰσὶν ἀρχαὶ ξενικῶν καὶ ἐμφυλίων πολέμων οὐδὲν μέρος, οὐ κοινόν, οὐκ ἴδιον, οὐ κατὰ γῆν, οὐ κατὰ 6 θάλατταν, ἡσυχάζειν ἐῶσαι. τί δὲ δεῖ τῶν πρὸς ἀλλήλους ἀμαρτημάτων μεμνησθαι; τύφω γὰρ καὶ τὰ θεῖα ἐξωλιγώρηται, καίτοι νομιζόμενα τῆς ἀνωτάτω τυγχάνειν τιμῆς· τιμὴ δὲ τίς ἂν γένοιτο, μὴ προσούσης ἀληθείας, ἢ καὶ ὄνομα καὶ ἔργον ἔχει τίμιον, ἐπεὶ καὶ τὸ ψεῦδος 7 ἔμπαλιν ἄτιμον φύσει; ἢ δ' ὀλιγωρία τῶν θείων ἐμφανῆς τοῖς ὀξυδερκέστερον ὀρώσι· μυρίας γὰρ ὄσας διὰ γραφικῆς καὶ πλαστικῆς μορφώσαντες ἰδέας ἱερὰ καὶ νεῶς αὐταῖς προσπεριεβάλλοντο καὶ βωμοὺς κατασκευάσαντες ἀγάλμασι καὶ ξοάνοις καὶ τοιουτοτρόποις ἀφιδρύμασι τιμὰς ἰσολυμπίους 8 καὶ ἰσοθέους ἀπένειμαν, ἅπασιν ἀψύχοις. οὕς εὐθυβόλως αἱ ἱεραὶ γραφαὶ τοῖς ἐκ πόρινης γεγο-νόσιν ἀπεικάζουσιν· ὡς γὰρ οὗτοι πάντας, ὅσους ἔραστὰς ἔσχεν ἢ μήτηρ, ἐπιγράφονται πατέρας ἐνὸς ἀγνοίᾳ τοῦ φύσει, οὕτω καὶ οἱ κατὰ πόλεις οὐκ εἰδότες τὸν ὄντα ὄντως ἀληθῆ θεὸν μυρία 9 πλήθη ψευδωνύμων ἐκτεθειώκασιν. εἰτ' ἄλλων παρ' ἄλλοις τιμωμένων, ἢ περὶ τοῦ ἀρίστου κρα-

THE DECALOGUE, 4-9

great establishment of servants and cars, on which these so-called blissful and happy people ride aloft, drawn sometimes by mules and horses, sometimes by men, who bear the heavy burden on their shoulders, yet suffer in soul rather than in body under the weight of extravagant arrogance. II. Pride is also the creator of many other evils, 5 boastfulness, haughtiness, inequality, and these are the sources of wars, both civil and foreign, suffering no place to remain in peace whether public or private, whether on sea or on land. Yet why 6 dwell on offences between man and man? Pride also brings divine things into utter contempt, even though they are supposed to receive the highest honours. But what honour can there be if truth be not there as well, truth honourable both in name and function, just as falsehood is naturally dishonourable? This 7 contempt for things divine is manifest to those of keener vision. For men have employed sculpture and painting to fashion innumerable forms which they have enclosed in shrines and temples and after building altars have assigned celestial and divine honours to idols of stone and wood and suchlike images, all of them lifeless things. Such persons are happily 8 compared in the sacred Scriptures to the children of a harlot <sup>a</sup>; for as they in their ignorance of their one natural father ascribe their paternity to all their mother's lovers, so too throughout the cities those who do not know the true, the really existent God have deified hosts of others who are falsely so called. Then as some honour one, some another god, diver- 9

<sup>a</sup> See note on Spec. Leg. i. 332.

<sup>1</sup> So R; other MSS. ἀνοσιότητος.

PHILO

τήσασα διχόνοια καὶ τὰς πρὸς τὰ ἄλλα πάντα διαφορὰς ἐγέννησεν. εἰς ἃ πρῶτον ἀπιδὼν ἕξω πόλεων<sup>1</sup> ἐβουλήθη νομοθετεῖν.

- 10 Ἐνενόει δὲ κάκεινο δεύτερον, ὅτι τοῦ μέλλοντος ἱεροῦς νόμους παραδέχεσθαι τὴν ψυχὴν ἀναγκαῖόν ἐστιν ἀπορρῦσθαι καὶ ἐκκαθήρασθαι τὰς | δυσ-
- [182] εκπλύτους κηλίδας, ἃς μιγᾶδων καὶ συγκλύδων ὄχλος ἀνθρώπων κατὰ πόλεις προσετρίψατο. τοῦτο
- 11 δὲ ἀμήχανον ἑτέρως ἢ διοικισθέντι συμβῆναι, καὶ οὐκ εὐθύς ἀλλὰ μακρῶ χρόνῳ ὕστερον, ἕως ἂν οἱ τῶν ἀρχαίων παρανομημάτων ἐνσφραγισθέντες τύποι κατὰ μικρὸν ἀμαυρούμενοι καὶ ἀπορρέοντες
- 12 ἀφανισθῶσι. τοῦτον τὸν τρόπον καὶ οἱ τὴν ἰατρικὴν ἀγαθοὶ σώζουσι τοὺς κάμνοντας· οὐ γὰρ πρότερον σιτία καὶ ποτὰ παρέχειν ἀξιούσι, πρὶν ἢ τὰ τῶν νόσων αἷτια ὑπεξελέσθαι· μενόντων γὰρ ἀνωφελεῖς αἱ τροφαί, ἀλλὰ καὶ ἐπιζήμιοι, ὕλαι γινόμεναι τοῦ
- 13 πάθους. III. εἰκότως οὖν ἐκ τῶν κατὰ πόλεις βλαβερωτάτων συνηθειῶν εἰς ἐρήμην ἀπαγαγόν, ἵνα κενώσῃ τὰς ψυχὰς ἀδικημάτων, ἤρξατο προσφέρειν ταῖς διανοίαις τροφάς· αὐταὶ δὲ τίνες ἂν εἶεν ὅτι μὴ νόμοι καὶ λόγοι θεῖοι;
- 14 Τρίτη δὲ ἐστὶν αἰτία ἣδε· καθάπερ οἱ στελλόμενοι μακρὸν πλοῦν, οὐχ ὅταν ἐπιβάντες τῆς νεῶς ἀπὸ λιμένος ἐξαναχθῶσιν, ἄρχονται κατασκευάζειν ἰστία καὶ πηδάλια καὶ οἰάκας, ἀλλ' ἔτι μένοντες ἐπὶ γῆς ἕκαστα τῶν συντεινόντων πρὸς πλοῦν εὐτρεπίζονται, τὸν αὐτὸν τρόπον ἠξίωσεν οὐ λαβόντας κληρουχίας καὶ τὰς πόλεις οἰκήσαντας τότε ζητεῖν νόμους, οἷς πολιτεύσονται, ἀλλ' ἔτοιμασαμένους τοὺς τῆς πολιτείας κανόνας καὶ

<sup>1</sup> MSS. πόλεως.

THE DECALOGUE, 9-14

sity of opinion as to which was best waxed strong and engendered disputes in every other matter also. This was the primary consideration which made him prefer to legislate away from cities.

He had also a second object in mind. He who is about 10 to receive the holy laws must first cleanse his soul and purge away the deep-set stains which it has contracted through contact with the motley promiscuous horde of men in cities. And to this he cannot attain 11 except by dwelling apart, nor that at once, but only long afterwards, and not till the marks which his old transgressions have imprinted on him have gradually grown faint, melted away and disappeared. In this 12 way too good physicians preserve their sick folk : they think it unadvisable to give them food or drink until they have removed the causes of their maladies. While these still remain, nourishment is useless, indeed harmful, and acts as fuel to the distemper. III. Naturally therefore he first led them away from 13 the highly mischievous associations of cities into the desert, to clear the sins out of their souls, and then began to set the nourishment before their minds—and what should this nourishment be but laws and words of God ?

He had a third reason as follows : just as men 14 when setting out on a long voyage do not begin to provide sails and rudders and tillers when they have embarked and left the harbour, but equip themselves with enough of the gear needed for the voyage while they are still staying on shore, so Moses did not think it good that they should just take their portions and settle in cities and then go in quest of laws to regulate their civic life, but rather should first provide themselves with the rules for that life and gain practice ἐνασκηθέντας οἷς ἔμελλον οἱ δῆμοι κυβερνασθαι σωτηρίως τηρικαῦτα εἰσοικίζεσθαι, χρησομένους εὐθύς ταῖς τῶν δικαίων παρασκευαῖς ἐν ὁμοιοῖα καὶ κοινωνίᾳ καὶ διανομῇ τῶν ἐπιβαλλόντων ἐκάστοις.

PHILO

- 15 IV. Φασὶ δέ τινες καὶ τετάρτην αἰτίαν οὐκ ἀπωδὸν ἀλλ' ἐγγυτάτω τῆς ἀληθείας· ἐπειδὴ γὰρ ἔδει πίστιν ἐγγενέσθαι ταῖς διανοαῖς περὶ τοῦ μὴ εὐρήματα ἀνθρώπου τοὺς νόμους ἀλλὰ θεοῦ χρησμούς σαφεστάτους εἶναι, πορρωτάτω τῶν πόλεων ἀπήγαγε τὸ ἔθνος εἰς ἐρήμην βαθείαν καὶ ἄγονον οὐ μόνον ἡμέρων καρπῶν ἀλλὰ καὶ ποτίμου
- 16 ὕδατος, ἢν', εἰ ἐν σπάνει γενόμενοι τῶν ἀναγκαίων καὶ δίψει καὶ λιμῶ διαφθαρῆναι προσδοκήσαντες ἕξαπιναίως ἀφθονίαν τῶν ἐπιτηδείων ἀπαυτοματι-σθέντων ἀνευρίσκωσιν, οὐρανοῦ μὲν ὕοντος τροφὰς τὸ καλούμενον μάννα, προσόψημα δὲ τροφῶν ἀπ'<sup>1</sup> ἀέρος ὀρτυγομήτρας φοράν, ὕδατος δὲ πικροῦ γλυκαινομένου πρὸς τὸ πότιμον, πέτρας δὲ ἀκροτόμου πηγὰς ἀνομβρούσης, μηκέτι θαυμάζωσιν,
- [183] εἰ λόγια θεοῦ συμβέβηκεν | εἶναι τοὺς νόμους, ἐναργεστάτην βάσανον εἰληφότες ἐκ τῶν χορηγιῶν,
- 17 ἃς ἐξ ἀπόρων ἔσχον οὐκ ἐλπίσαντες. ὁ γὰρ πρὸς τὸ ζῆν ἀφθονίαν δούς καὶ τὰς πρὸς τὸ εὖ ζῆν ἀφορμὰς ἐδωρεῖτο· πρὸς μὲν οὖν τὸ ζῆν σιτίων ἔδει καὶ ποτῶν, ἅπερ ἀνεύρισκον οὐχ ἔτοιμασάμενοι, <sup>1</sup> So mss. and Cohn. But I should prefer with Mangey to omit ἀπ'. I do not know of any case in which οὐρανός includes the lower air, as the text implies, while on the other hand the index gives thirteen examples where heaven, air, water, earth are named as the four parts of the universe. See Spec. Leg. iii. 111, and cf. ibid. 152. With ἀπ' omitted each of the four makes its contribution, earth being given by πέτρας.

THE DECALOGUE, 14-17

in all that would surely enable the communities to steer their course in safety, and then settle down to follow from the first the principles of justice lying ready for their use, in harmony and fellowship of spirit and rendering to every man his due.

IV. Some too give a fourth reason which is not out of keeping with the truth but agrees very closely with it. As it was necessary to establish a belief in their minds that the laws were not the inventions of a man but quite clearly the oracles of God, he led the nation a great distance away from cities into the depths of a desert, barren not only of cultivated fruits but also of water fit for drinking, in order that, if after lacking the necessaries of life and expecting to perish from hunger and thirst they suddenly found abundance of sustenance self-produced—when heaven rained the food called manna and the shower of quails from the air to add relish to their food—when the bitter water grew sweet and fit for drinking and springs gushed out of the steep<sup>a</sup> rock—they should no longer wonder whether the laws were actually the pronouncements of God, since they had been given the clearest evidence of the truth in the supplies which they had so unexpectedly received in their destitution. For He who gave abundance of the means of life also bestowed the wherewithal of a good life ; for mere life they needed food and drink which they found without making provision ; for the good life <sup>a</sup> Or "hard," "flinty." Here, as in Mos. i. 210-211, Philo does not stress the connexion of the word (taken from Deut. viii. 15), with ἀκρός as he does elsewhere. See note on Mos. i. 210. The events alluded to are found in Ex. xv. and xvi.

PHILO

πρὸς δὲ τὸ εὖ ζῆν νόμων καὶ διαταγμάτων, οἷς βελτιοῦσθαι τὰς ψυχὰς ἔμελλον.

- 18 V. Αἰδ' εἰσὶν ἐν στοχασμοῖς εἰκόσιν αἰτίαι λεγόμεναι περὶ τοῦ διαπορηθέντος· τὰς γὰρ ἀληθεῖς οἶδεν ὁ θεὸς μόνος. εἰπὼν δ' ἄπερ ἤρμωτε περὶ τούτων ἐξῆς αὐτοὺς ἀκριβώσω τοὺς νόμους, ἐκεῖνο κατὰ τὸ ἀναγκαῖον προμηνύσας, ὅτι τῶν νόμων οὓς μὲν αὐτὸς ὁ θεὸς οὐ προσχρησάμενος ἄλλῳ δι' ἑαυτοῦ μόνου θεσπίζειν ἠξίωσεν, οὓς δὲ διὰ προφήτου Μωυσέως, ὃν ἀριστίνδην ἐκ πάντων ὡς ἐπι-
- 19 τηδειότατον ἱεροφάντην ἐπελέξατο. τοὺς μὲν οὖν αὐτοπροσώπως θεσπισθέντας δι' αὐτοῦ μόνου συμβέβηκε καὶ νόμους εἶναι καὶ νόμων τῶν ἐν μέρει κεφάλαια, τοὺς δὲ διὰ τοῦ προ-
- 20 φήτου πάντας ἐπ' ἐκείνους ἀναφέρεσθαι. VI. λέξω δ', ὡς ἂν οἶός τε ᾧ, περὶ ἐκατέρων καὶ πρότερόν γε τῶν κεφαλαιωδεστέρων· ᾧν εὐθέως ἄξιον θαυμάσαι τὸν ἀριθμὸν δεκάδι τῇ παντελείᾳ περατουμένων, ἣ πάσας μὲν ἀριθμῶν διαφορὰς ἀρτίων καὶ περιττῶν καὶ ἀρτιοπερίττων, ἀρτίων μὲν δυοῖν, περιττῶν δὲ τριῶν, ἀρτιοπερίττων δὲ ἕξ,<sup>1</sup> πάσας δὲ λόγων τῶν ἐν ἀριθμοῖς πολυπλασιῶν καὶ ἐπιμερῶν καὶ ὑποεπιμερῶν περιέχει,
- 21 πάσας δ' ἀναλογίας, τὴν τε ἀριθμητικὴν, ἣ τῷ

<sup>1</sup> MSS. πέντε and so Cohn by an oversight afterwards corrected in a note to Treitel's translation. This must be a mistake of the scribe. Philo could not possibly have made it; cf. Spec. Leg. ii. 58, and the more elaborate explanation of the even-odds in De Op. 13.

THE DECALOGUE, 17-21

they needed laws and ordinances which would bring improvement to their souls.

V. These are the reasons suggested to answer the 18 question under discussion: they are but probable surmises; the true reasons are known to God alone. Having said what was fitting on this subject, I will proceed to describe the laws themselves in order, with this necessary statement by way of introduction, that some of them God judged fit to deliver in His own person alone without employing any other, and some through His prophet Moses whom He chose as of all men the best suited to be the revealer of verities.

Now we find that those which 19 He gave in His own person and by His own mouth alone include both laws and heads summarizing the particular laws, but those in which He spoke through the prophet all belong to the former class. VI. I will 20 deal with both to the best of my ability, taking those which are rather of the nature of summaries first.

Here our admiration is at once aroused by their number, which is neither more nor less than is the supremely perfect,<sup>a</sup> Ten. Ten contains all different kinds of numbers,<sup>b</sup> even as 2, odd as 3, and even-odd as 6, and all ratios, whether of a number to its multiples or fractional, when a number is either increased or diminished by some part of itself.<sup>c</sup> So too it contains all the analogies or progressions, the 21 arithmetical where each term in the series is greater

<sup>a</sup> For the Pythagorean origin of the term πεντέκων as applied to ten see note on De Abr. 244.

<sup>b</sup> This does not seem to mean more than that all the properties and mysteries of numbers must necessarily fall within the decimal system, for "round ten as a turning-point the unlimited series of numbers wheel and retrace their steps," De Op. 47.

<sup>c</sup> i.e. improper or proper fractions.

PHILO

ἰσαριθμῶ ὑπερέχει καὶ ὑπερέχεται, οἷον ἐπὶ τοῦ ἕν καὶ δύο καὶ τρία, καὶ τὴν γεωμετρικὴν, καθ' ἣν οἶος ὁ λόγος πρὸς τὸν πρῶτον τοῦ δευτέρου, τοιοῦ-τος καὶ ὁ πρὸς τὸν δεύτερον τοῦ τρίτου, ὡς ἔχει ἐπὶ τοῦ ἕν καὶ δύο καὶ τέσσαρα, ἕν τε διπλασίους καὶ τριπλασίους καὶ συνόλως πολυπλασίους καὶ πάλιν ἕν ἡμιολίους καὶ ἐπιτρίτους καὶ τοῖς παρα-πλησίους, ἔτι μέντοι καὶ τὴν ἀρμονικὴν, καθ' ἣν ὁ μέσος τῶν ἄκρων τῷ ἴσῳ μορίῳ ὑπερέχει τε καὶ ὑπερέχεται, ὡς ἔχει ἐπὶ τοῦ τρίτου καὶ τετάρτου 22 καὶ ἕκτου. περιέχει δὲ ἡ δεκάς καὶ τὰς τῶν τριγώνων καὶ τετραγώνων καὶ τῶν ἄλλων πολυγώνων ἐμφαινομένας ἰδιότητας καὶ τὰς τῶν συμφωνιῶν, τὴν τε διὰ τεσσάρων ἐν ἐπιτρίτῳ [184] λόγῳ, τῷ τέσσαρα | πρὸς τρία, καὶ τὴν διὰ πέντε ἐν ἡμιολίῳ, τῷ τρία πρὸς δύο, καὶ τὴν διὰ πασῶν ἐν διπλασίῳ, τῷ δύο πρὸς ἕν, καὶ τὴν δις διὰ πασῶν 23 ἐν τετραπλασίῳ, τῷ ὀκτὼ πρὸς δύο. παρὸ μοι δοκοῦσι καὶ οἱ πρῶτοι τὰ ὀνόματα τοῖς πράγμασι θέμενοι—σοφοὶ γὰρ ἦσαν—εἰκότως αὐτὴν προσ-αγορεῦσαι δεκάδα, ὡσανεὶ δεκάδα οὔσαν, παρὰ τὸ δέχεσθαι καὶ κεχωρηκέσαι τὰ γένη πάντα τῶν ἀριθμῶν καὶ λόγων τῶν κατ' ἀριθμὸν καὶ ἀναλογιῶν ἀρμονιῶν τε αὐτῶν καὶ συμφωνιῶν.

24 VII. τὴν μέντοι δεκάδα πρὸς τοῖς εἰρημένοις καὶ διὰ ταῦτα εἰκότως ἂν τις θαυμάσειε περιέχουσιν τὴν τε ἀδιάστατον φύσιν καὶ τὴν διαστηματικὴν· ἡ μὲν οὖν ἀδιάστατος τάττεται κατὰ σημεῖον μόνον, ἡ δὲ διαστηματικὴ κατὰ τρεῖς ἰδέας γραμμῆς 25 καὶ ἐπιφανείας καὶ στερεοῦ· τὸ μὲν γὰρ δυσὶ σημείοις περατούμενόν ἐστι γραμμῆ, τὸ δ' ἐπὶ δύο διαστατὸν ἐπιφάνεια, ῥυείσης ἐπὶ πλάτος

THE DECALOGUE, 21-25

than the one below and less than the one above by the same amount,<sup>a</sup> as for example 1 2 3; the geometrical where the ratio of the second to the first term is the same as that of the third to the second, as with 1 2 4, and this is seen whether the ratio is double or treble or any multiple, or again fractional as 3 to 2, 4 to 3, and the like; once more the harmonic in which the middle term exceeds and is exceeded by the extremes on either side by the same fraction, as is the case with 3, 4, 6.<sup>b</sup> Ten 22 also contains the properties observed in triangles, quadrilaterals and other polygons, and also those of the concords, the fourth, fifth, octave and double octave intervals, where the ratios are respectively  $1\frac{1}{3}$ , i.e. 4 : 3,  $1\frac{1}{2}$ , i.e. 3 : 2, doubled, i.e. 2 : 1, fourfold, i.e. 8 : 2. Consequently it seems to me that those 23 who first gave names to things did reasonably, wise men that they were, in giving it the name of decad, as being the dechad, or receiver, because it receives and has made room for every kind of number and numerical ratio and progressions and also concords and harmonies. VII. But indeed apart 24 from what has been said, the decad may reasonably be admired because it embraces Nature as seen both with and without extension in space. Nature exists without extension nowhere except in the point; with extension in three forms, line, surface, solid. For space as limited by two points is a line, but, 25 where there are two dimensions, we have a surface,

<sup>a</sup> Lit. "which exceeds and is exceeded by the same number." See App. p. 609.

<sup>b</sup> See the more detailed explanation in De Op. 109, where the example given is that 6, 8, 12 are in harmonic progression because 8 exceeds 6 by  $\frac{1}{3}$  of 6, and is exceeded by 12 by  $\frac{1}{3}$  of 12. Here as often the ordinal is used for the cardinal.

PHILO

γραμμῆς, τὸ δ' ἐπὶ τρία στερεόν, μήκους καὶ πλάτους βάθος προσλαβόντων, ἐφ' ὧν ἴσταται ἡ φύσις· πλείους γὰρ τριῶν διαστάσεις οὐκ ἐγέννησεν.
 26 ἀρχέτυποι δὲ τούτων ἀριθμοὶ τοῦ μὲν ἀδιαστάτου σημείου τὸ ἓν, τῆς δὲ γραμμῆς τὰ δύο, καὶ ἐπιφανείας μὲν τρία, στερεοῦ δὲ τέσσαρα, ὧν ἡ σύνθεσις ἑνὸς καὶ δυοῖν καὶ τριῶν καὶ τεσσάρων ἀποτελεῖ δεκάδα παραφαίνουσαν τοῖς ὄρατικοῖς 27 καὶ ἕτερα κάλλη· σχεδὸν γὰρ ἡ ἀπειρία τῶν ἀριθμῶν ταύτῃ μετρεῖται, διότι οἱ συστήσαντες αὐτὴν ὄροι τέσσαρές εἰσιν, ἓν καὶ δύο καὶ τρία καὶ τέτταρα, οἱ δ' ἴσοι ὄροι ἑκατοντάδα γεννώσιν ἐκ δεκάδων—δέκα γὰρ καὶ εἴκοσι καὶ τριάκοντα καὶ τεσσαράκοντα γίνονται ἑκατόν—, ὁμοίως δὲ καὶ χιλιάδα ἐξ ἑκατοντάδων καὶ μυριάδα ἐκ χιλιάδων, μονὰς δὲ καὶ δεκάς καὶ ἑκατοντάς καὶ χιλιάς 28 τέσσαρες ὄροι οἱ δεκάδα γεννῶντες· ἦτις δίχα τῶν πρόσθεν εἰρημένων καὶ ἐτέρας ἀριθμῶν ἐμφαίνει διαφοράς, τὸν τε πρῶτον κόσμον, ὃς μονάδι μόνῃ μετρεῖται, οὗ παράδειγμα ὁ τρεῖς, ὁ πέντε, ὁ ἑπτὰ, καὶ τὸν τετράγωνον, τὸν τέσσαρα, τὸν ἰσάκις ἴσον, καὶ μὲν δὴ τὸν κύβον, τὸν ὀκτώ, ὃς ἐστὶν ἰσάκις ἴσος ἰσάκις, καὶ τὸν τέλειον, τὸν ἕξ, ἰσούμενον τοῖς [185] 29 ἑαυτοῦ μέρεσι, τρισὶ καὶ δυσὶ καὶ ἐνί. VIII. | τί δὲ δεῖ καταλέγεσθαι τὰς δεκάδος ἀρετὰς ἀπίρους τὸ πλῆθος, πάρεργον ποιουμένους ἔργον μέγιστον, ὃ καθ' αὐτὸ συμβέβηκεν αὐταρκεστάτην εἶναι ὑπόθεσιν τοῖς περὶ τὰ μαθήματα διατρίβουσι;

<sup>a</sup> This seems to be the meaning, though both ὄροι and γεννάω are used in a different sense from what they have in the earlier part of the sentence, where the ὄροι generate by addition to each

THE DECALOGUE, 25-29

as the line has expanded into breadth ; where there are three, we have a solid, as length and breadth have acquired depth, and here Nature comes to a halt, for she has not produced more than three dimensions. All these have numbers for their archetypes, 26 1 for the non-extended point, 2 for the line, 3 for the surface, 4 for the solid, and these one, two, three, four added together make the ten which gives a glimpse of other beauties also to those who have eyes to see. For we may say that the infinite series 27 of numbers is measured by ten, because its constituent terms are the four, 1, 2, 3, 4, and the same terms produce the hundred out of the tens, since 10, 20, 30, 40 make a hundred, and similarly the thousand is produced out of the hundreds and the ten thousand or myriad out of the thousands, and these, the unit, the ten, the hundred and the thousand are the four starting-points from each of which springs a ten.<sup>a</sup> And again, this same ten, apart from what has already 28 been said, reveals other differences in numbers ; the order of prime numbers divisible by the unit alone having for its pattern three, five, seven : the square, that is four, the cube, eight, the products respectively of two and three equal numbers, and the perfect number six equal to the sum <sup>b</sup> of its factors 3, 2 and 1. VIII. But why enumerate the 29 virtues of Ten, which are infinite in number, and thus treat perfunctorily a task of supreme greatness which by itself is found to be an all-sufficing subject for other. Presumably the μυριάς is not named as a new starting-point, because Greek has no special term for ten myriads or beyond.

<sup>b</sup> Or perhaps "both the product and sum," cf. De Op. 13. But the essence of "perfection" lies in the sum, as exemplified by 28, cf. Mos. ii. 84 and note.

PHILO

- τὰς μὲν οὖν ἄλλας ὑπερθετέον, μιᾶς δ' οὐκ ἄτοπον ἴσως ἐπιμνησθῆναι δείγματος ἔνεκα.
- 30 τὰς γὰρ ἐν τῇ φύσει λεγομένας κατηγορίας δέκα μόνας εἶναί φασιν οἱ ἐνδιατριβόντες τοῖς τῆς φιλοσοφίας δόγμασιν· οὐσίαν, ποιόν, ποσόν, πρὸς τι, ποιεῖν, πάσχειν, ἔχειν, κείσθαι, τὰ ὧν οὐκ
- 31 ἄνευ <πάντα>, χρόνον καὶ τόπον. οὐδὲν γὰρ ἐστὶ τούτων ἀμέτοχον· οἷον ἐγὼ μετέχω μὲν οὐσίας δανεισάμενος ἀφ' ἐκάστου τῶν στοιχείων, ἐξ ὧν ἀπετελέσθη ὄδε ὁ κόσμος, γῆς καὶ ὕδατος καὶ ἀέρος καὶ πυρός, τὰ πρὸς τὴν ἐμὴν σύστασιν αὐτἀρκέστατα· μετέχω δὲ καὶ ποιότητος, καθ' ἣν ἄνθρωπός εἰμι, καὶ ποσότητος, ἣ πηλίκος· γίνομαι δὲ καὶ πρὸς τι, ὅταν μου πρὸς δεξιοῖς τις ἢ πρὸς εὐωνύμοις ἦ· ἀλλὰ καὶ ποιῶ, τρίβων τι ἢ κείρων,<sup>1</sup> καὶ πάσχω, κειρόμενος ἢ τριβόμενος ὑφ' ἑτέρων· κὰν τῷ ἔχειν ἐξετάζομαι, ἢ περιβεβλημένος ἢ ὠπλισμένος, κὰν τῷ κείσθαι, σχέδην<sup>2</sup> τι καθεζό-μενος ἢ κατακεκλιμένος· εἰμὶ δὲ πάντως κὰν τόπῳ καὶ χρόνῳ, τῶν προειρημένων οὐδενὸς δυναμένου χωρὶς ἀμφοῖν ὑφίστασθαι.
- 32 IX. Ταυτὶ μὲν οὖν ἀποχρώντως λελέχθω, συν-υφαίνειν δ' ἀναγκαῖον τὰ ἀκόλουθα. τοὺς δέκα λόγους ἢ χρησμούς, νόμους ἢ θεσμούς πρὸς ἀλήθειαν ὄντας, ἀθροισθέντος τοῦ ἔθνους ἀνδρῶν ὁμοῦ καὶ γυναικῶν εἰς ἐκκλησίαν, ὁ πατὴρ τῶν ὄλων ἐθέσπισεν. ἀρά γε φωνῆς τρόπον προέμενος

<sup>1</sup> mss. καίων. Clearly it must correspond with the passive following. But Aristotle in Categ. has καίω and καίομαι as his examples.

<sup>2</sup> So Mangey with most mss.: Cohn σχεδόν with M. Though the addition of τι may perhaps rather point to σχεδόν I do not see what it can mean here. σχεδὴν regarded as the students of mathematics? But while we must leave unnoticed the rest, there is one which may without impropriety be mentioned as a sample. Those who study the doctrines of philosophy say <sup>30</sup> that the categories <sup>a</sup> in nature, as they are called, are ten only, substance, quality, quantity, relation, activity, passivity, state, position and the indispensable for all existence, time and place. There <sup>31</sup> is nothing which does not participate in these categories. I have substance, for I have borrowed what is all-sufficient to make me what I am from each of the elements out of which this world was framed, earth, water, air and fire. I have quality in so far as I am a man, and quantity as being of a certain size. I become relative when anyone is on my right hand or my left, I am active when I rub or shave <sup>b</sup> anything, or passive when I am rubbed or shaved. I am in a particular state when I wear clothing or arms and in a particular position when I sit quietly or am lying down, and I am necessarily both in place and time since none of the above conditions can exist without these two.

THE DECALOGUE, 29-32

IX. These points have been sufficiently discussed <sup>32</sup> and may now be left. We must proceed to carry on the discussion to embrace what follows next. The ten words or oracles, in reality laws or statutes, were delivered by the Father of All when the nation, men and women alike, were assembled together. Did He do so by His own utterance in the form of a

<sup>a</sup> On the categories see App. pp. 609-610.

<sup>b</sup> Or "shear." κείρω seems to have been a favourite word for exemplifying the force of the three voices. See note on De Cher. 79.

---

adverb of σχέσις, often used by Philo in contrast with κίνησις (see particularly De Sobr. 34), seems quite appropriate here.

PHILO

- αὐτός; ἄπαγε, μηδ' εἰς νοῦν ποτ' ἔλθοι τὸν ἡμέτερον· οὐ γὰρ ὡς ἄνθρωπος ὁ θεός, στόματος 33 καὶ γλώττης καὶ ἀρτηριῶν δεόμενος. ἀλλὰ γέ μοι δοκεῖ κατ' ἐκείνον τὸν χρόνον ἱεροπρεπέστατόν τι θαυματοργῆσαι κελεύσας ἦχον ἀόρατον ἐν ἀέρι δημιουργηθῆναι, πάντων ὀργάνων θαυμασιώτερον, ἀρμονίαις τελείαις ἡρμοσμένον, οὐκ ἄψυχον ἀλλ' οὐδ' ἐκ σώματος καὶ ψυχῆς τρόπον ζώου συνεστηκότα,<sup>1</sup> ἀλλὰ ψυχὴν λογικὴν ἀνάπλεων<sup>2</sup> σαφηνείας καὶ τρανότητος, ἣ τὸν ἀέρα σχηματίσασα καὶ ἐπιτείναςα καὶ πρὸς πῦρ φλογοειδὲς μεταβαλοῦσα καθάπερ πνεῦμα διὰ σάλπιγγος φωνὴν τοσαύτην [186] ἐναρθρον ἐξήχησεν, ὡς τοῖς ἔγγιστα τοὺς πορρω-34 τάτω κατ' ἴσον ἀκροᾶσθαι δοκεῖν. ἀνθρώπων μὲν γὰρ αἱ φωναὶ πρὸς μήκιστον ἀποτεινόμεναι πεφύκασιν ἐξασθενεῖν, ὡς ἀριδῆλους τοῖς μακρὰν ἀφεστηκόσι μὴ γίνεσθαι τὰς ἀντιλήψεις ταῖς ἐπεκτάσεσιν ἐκ τοῦ κατ' ὀλίγον ἀμαυρουμένας, 35 ἐπειδὴ καὶ τὰ ὄργανα φθαρτά· τὴν δὲ κεκαιουργημένην φωνὴν ἐπιπνέουσα θεοῦ δύναμις ἤγειρε καὶ ἐξωπύρει καὶ ἀναχέουσα πάντη τὸ τέλος τῆς ἀρχῆς ἀπέφαινε τηλαυγέστερον, ἀκοὴν ἐτέραν πολὺ βελτίω τῆς δι' ὧτων ταῖς ἐκάστων ψυχαῖς ἐντιθεῖσα· ἣ μὲν γὰρ βραδυτέρα πως οὖσα αἰσθησις ἀτρεμίζει, μέχρις ἂν ὑπ' ἀέρος πληχθεῖσα διακινηθῆ, φθάνει δ' ἣ τῆς ἐνθέου διανοίας ὀξυτάτῳ τάχει προὑπαντῶσα τοῖς λεγομένοις.
- 36 X. Φωνῆς μὲν δὴ τῆς θείας περὶ τοσαῦτα.
 δεόντως δ' ἂν τις ἀπορήσαι, τοῦ χάριν, πλείστων

<sup>1</sup> mss. συνεστηκῶς or -ὸς or -ότα.

<sup>2</sup> Cohn prints ἀνάπλεω, which appears in one ms., but I cannot discover any authority for this form of the acc.

THE DECALOGUE, 32-36

voice ? Surely not : may no such thought ever enter our minds, for God is not as a man needing mouth and tongue and windpipe. I should suppose that 33 God wrought on this occasion a miracle of a truly holy kind by bidding an invisible sound to be created in the air more marvellous than all instruments and fitted with perfect harmonies, not soulless, nor yet composed of body and soul like a living creature, but a rational soul full of clearness and distinctness, which giving shape and tension to the air and changing it to flaming fire, sounded forth like the breath through a trumpet an articulate voice so loud that it appeared to be equally audible to the farthest as well as the 34 nearest. For it is the nature of men's voices if carried to a great distance to grow faint so that persons afar off have but an indistinct impression which gradually fades away with each lengthening of the extension, since the organism which produces them also is subject to decay.<sup>a</sup> But the new miraculous voice 35 was set in action and kept in flame by the power of God which breathed upon it and spread it abroad on every side and made it more illuminating in its ending than in its beginning by creating in the souls of each and all another kind of hearing far superior to the hearing of the ears. For that is but a sluggish sense, inactive until aroused by the impact of the air, but the hearing of the mind possessed by God makes the first advance and goes out to meet the spoken words with the keenest rapidity.

X. So much for the divine voice. But we may 36 properly ask why, when all these many thousands were <sup>a</sup> Or perhaps "just as musical instruments (and therefore the sounds which they make) are subject to decay."

PHILO

- ὅσων μυριάδων εἰς ἓν ἠθροισμένων χωρίον, ἕκαστον θεσπίζειν τῶν δέκα λογίων ἠξίωσεν ὡς οὐχὶ πρὸς πλείους ἀλλ' ὡς πρὸς ἓνα, “ οὐ μοιχεύσεις ” λέγων, “ οὐ φονεύσεις, ” “ οὐ κλέψεις ” καὶ τὰ
- 37 ἄλλα ταύτη. λεκτέον οὖν ἐν μέν, ὅτι βούλεται κάλλιστον ἀναδιδάξαι μάθημα τοὺς ἐντυγχάνοντας ταῖς ἱεραῖς γραφαῖς, ὡς ἄρα καθ' αὐτὸν εἰς ἕκαστος, ὅταν ἦ νόμιμος καὶ θεῶ καταπειθής, ἰσότημός ἐστιν ὅλω ἔθνει πολυανθρωποτάτῳ, μᾶλλον δὲ καὶ πᾶσιν ἔθνεσιν, εἰ δὲ δεῖ περαιτέρω προελθόντα εἰπεῖν,
- 38 καὶ παντὶ τῷ κόσμῳ. διόπερ ἐν ἑτέροις ἐπαινῶν τινα δίκαιον ἄνδρα φησίν· “ ἐγὼ εἰμι ὁ θεὸς σός ”· ὁ δ' αὐτὸς ἦν καὶ κόσμου θεός, ὡς τοὺς ὑπηκόους τὴν αὐτὴν τεταγμένους τάξιν καὶ ὁμοίως εὐαρεστοῦντας τῷ ταξιάρχῳ τῆς ἴσης ἀποδοχῆς καὶ τιμῆς μεταλαμβάνειν.
- 39 Δεύτερον δέ, ὅτι κοινῇ μὲν ὡς πλήθει τις ἐκκλησιάζων οὐκ ἐξ ἀνάγκης διαλέγεται ἐνί, ὅτε δὲ προστάτων ἢ ἀπαγορευῶν ἰδία ὡς ἐνὶ ἐκάστῳ, τῶν ἐμφερομένων εὐθύς ἂν δόξαι τὰ πρακτέα καὶ κοινῇ πᾶσιν ἀθροῖς ὑφηγεῖσθαι· εὐπειθέστερος δὲ ὁ τὰς παραινέσεις αὐτοπροσώπως δεχόμενος, ὁ δὲ συλλήβδην μεθ' ἑτέρων κεκώφεται τὸν ὄχλον ἀφηγιασμοῦ παρακάλυμμα ποιούμενος.
- 40 Τρίτον, ἵνα μηδεὶς ποτε βασιλεὺς ἢ τύραννος ἀφανοῦς ἰδιώτου καταφρονήσῃ γεμισθεὶς ἀλαζονείας

<sup>a</sup> Gen. xvii. 1 LXX; E.V. “ I am God Almighty.”

<sup>b</sup> I have punctuated and translated this sentence in the only way which seems to me possible, if the text is to stand, i.e. I have placed a comma after ἐκάστῳ instead of (as Cohn) after ἀπαγορευῶν, and understand ἐκκλησιάζει or διαλέγεται after ὅτε δὲ and take τῶν ἐμφερομένων as partitive after collected in one spot, He thought good in proclaiming His ten oracles to address each not as to several persons but as to one, Thou shalt not commit adultery, Thou shalt not kill, Thou shalt not steal, and so too with the rest. One answer which must 37 be given is that He wishes to teach the readers of the sacred scriptures a most excellent lesson, namely that each single person, when he is law-abiding and obedient to God, is equal in worth to a whole nation, even the most populous, or rather to all nations, and if we may go still farther, even to the whole world. And therefore elsewhere, when He praises a certain 38 just man, He says, I am thy God,<sup>a</sup> though He was also the God of the world. And thus we see that all the rank and file who are posted in the same line and give a like satisfaction to their commander, have an equal share of approbation and honour.

THE DECALOGUE, 36-40

A second reason is that a speaker who harangues 39 a multitude in general does not necessarily talk to any one person, whereas if he addresses his commands or prohibitions as though to each individual separately, the practical instructions given in the course of his speech are at once held to apply to the whole body in common also.<sup>b</sup> If the exhortations are received as a personal message, the hearer is more ready to obey, but if collectively with others, he is deaf to them, since he takes the multitude as a cover for disobedience.

A third reason is that He wills that no king or 40 despot swollen with arrogance and contempt should despise an insignificant private person but should study πρακτέα = "among the contents of his speech." But it is exceedingly awkward and some corruption is probable. For further discussion see App. p. 610.

PHILO

- καὶ ὑπεροψίας, ἀλλ' εἰς τὰ τῶν ἱερῶν νόμων [187] διδασκαλεῖα φοιτήσας | χαλάσῃ τὰς ὀφρῦς, ἀπομαθῶν οἴησιν εἰκότι μᾶλλον δ' ἀληθεῖ λογισμῶ.
 41 εἰ γὰρ ὁ ἀγένητος καὶ ἄφθαρτος καὶ αἰδῖος καὶ οὐδενὸς ἐπιδεῆς καὶ ποιητῆς τῶν ὄλων καὶ εὐεργέτης καὶ βασιλεὺς βασιλέων καὶ θεὸς θεῶν οὐδὲ τὸν ταπεινότατον ὑπεριδεῖν ὑπέμεινεν, ἀλλὰ καὶ τοῦτον εὐωχῆσαι λογίων καὶ θεσμῶν ἱερῶν ἠξίωσεν, ὡς μόνον ἐστῖαν μέλλων καὶ μόνῳ τὸ συμπόσιον εὐτρεπίζεσθαι πρὸς ψυχῆς ἀνάχυσιν ἱεροφαντου-μένης, ἣ θέμις τὰς μεγάλας τελείσθαι τελετάς, ἐμοὶ τῷ θνητῷ τί προσῆκον ὑψαυχενεῖν καὶ πεφυ-σῆσθαι φρουαττομένῳ πρὸς τοὺς ὁμοίους, οἳ τύχαις μὲν ἀνίσοις ἴση δὲ καὶ ὁμοία συγγενεῖα κέχρηται 42 ἀνθρώπων φύσιν; εὐπρόσιτον οὖν καὶ εὐέντευκτον ἔμαντὸν παρέξω, κἂν τὸ τῆς γῆς καὶ τῆς θαλάττης κράτος ἀνάψωμαι, τοῖς ἀπορωτάτοις καὶ ἀδοξοτάτοις καὶ οἰκειοτάτης συμμαχίας ἐρήμοις, ἑκατέρου τῶν γονέων ὀφανοῖς καὶ γυναιξὶ χηρεῖαν ὑπομενούσαις καὶ πρεσβύταις ἢ μὴ παιδοποιη-σαμένοις τὸ παράπαν ἢ ἀποβαλοῦσιν ὠκυμόρους 43 οὓς ἐγέννησαν. ἄνθρωπος γὰρ ὢν ὄγκον καὶ σεμνότητα τετραγωδημένην οὐ δικαίῳσω προσ-ἴεσθαι, μενῶ δ' ἐντὸς τῆς φύσεως τοὺς ὄρους αὐτῆς μὴ ὑπερβαίνων, ἀλλ' ἐθίζων τὴν ἔμαντοῦ διάνοιαν ἀνθρωποπαθεῖν, οὐ μόνον διὰ τὰς ἀδήλους πρὸς τὰναντία μεταβολὰς καὶ τῶν εὐπραττόντων καὶ τῶν ἐν κακοπραγίαις, ἀλλὰ καὶ διὰ τὸ ἀρμόττειν, κἂν ἀτρέπτως καὶ βεβαίως παραμένῃ τὸ εὐτυχεῖν, μὴ ἐπιλανθάνεσθαι τινα ἑαυτοῦ.

THE DECALOGUE, 40-43

in the school of the divine laws and abate his supercilious airs, and through the reasonableness or rather the assured truth of their arguments unlearn his self-conceit. For if the Uncreated, the Incorruptible, the 41 Eternal, Who needs nothing and is the maker of all, the Benefactor and King of kings and God of gods could not brook to despise even the humblest, but deigned to banquet him on holy oracles and statutes, as though he should be the sole guest, as though for him alone the feast was prepared to give good cheer to a soul instructed in the holy secrets and accepted for admission to the greatest mysteries, what right have I, the mortal, to bear myself proud-necked, puffed-up and loud-voiced, towards my fellows, who, though their fortunes be unequal, have equal rights of kinship because they can claim to be children 42 of the one common mother of mankind, nature? So then, though I be invested with the sovereignty of earth and sea, I will make myself affable and easy of access to the poorest, to the meanest, to the lonely who have none close at hand to help them, to orphans who have lost both parents, to wives on whom widowhood has fallen, to old men either childless from the first or bereaved by the early death of those whom they begot. For as I am a man, I shall not deem it 43 right to adopt the lofty grandeur of the pompous stage, but make nature my home and not overstep her limits. I will inure my mind to have the feelings of a human being, not only because the lot both of the prosperous and the unfortunate may change to the reverse we know not when, but also because it is right that even if good fortune remains securely established, a man should not forget what he is.

PHILO

διὰ ταῦτά μοι δοκεῖ τοὺς χρησμοὺς ἐνικῶς ἀποτεινάμενος ὡς πρὸς ἓνα θεσπίζειν ἐθελήσαι.

- 44 XI. Πάντα δ' ὡς εἰκὸς τὰ περὶ τὸν τόπον ἐθαυματοουργεῖτο, κτύποις βροντῶν μειζόνων ἢ ὥστε χωρεῖν ἀκοάς, ἀστραπῶν λάμψεσιν αὐγοειδεστάταις, ἀοράτου σάλπιγγος ἡχῆ πρὸς μήκιστον ἀποτεινούση, καθόδω νεφέλης, ἢ κίονος τρόπον τὴν μὲν βάσιν ἐπὶ γῆς ἡρήρειστο, τὸ δ' ἄλλο σῶμα πρὸς αἰθέριον ὕψος ἀνέτεινε, πυρὸς οὐρανόφωρον καπνῶ βαθεῖ τὰ ἐν κύκλῳ συσκιάζοντος· ἔδει γὰρ θεοῦ δυνάμεως ἀφικνουμένης μηδὲν τῶν τοῦ κόσμου μερῶν ἡσυχάζειν, ἀλλὰ πάντα πρὸς [188] ὑπηρεσίαν | συγκεκινῆσθαι. παρειστῆκει δὲ ὁ
- 45 λεὼς ἀγνεύσας ὀμιλιῶν τῶν πρὸς γυναικας καὶ πασῶν ἡδονῶν ἔξω τῶν πρὸς τροφὰς ἀναγκαίων ἀποσχόμενος, λουτροῖς τε καὶ περιρραντηρίοις καθηράμενος ἐκ τριῶν ἡμερῶν, ἔτι καὶ τὰς ἐσθήτας ἀποπλυνάμενος, ἐν τοῖς μάλιστα λευχείμων, ἀκροβατῶν καὶ ἀνωρθιακῶς τὰ ὦτα, Μωυσέως προδηλώσαντος εὐτρεπίζεσθαι πρὸς ἐκκλησίαν· ἔγνω γὰρ αὐτὴν ἐσομένην, ἡνίκα μόνος ἀνακληθεὶς
- 46 ἐχρησμοδεῖτο. φωνὴ δ' ἐκ μέσου τοῦ ῥύεντος ἀπ' οὐρανοῦ πυρὸς ἐξήχει καταπληκτικωτάτη, τῆς φλογὸς εἰς διάλεκτον ἀρθρουμένης τὴν συνήθη τοῖς ἀκρωμένοις, ἢ τὰ λεγόμενα οὕτως ἐναργῶς ἐτρανοῦτο, ὡς ὄραν αὐτὰ μᾶλλον ἢ ἀκούειν δοκεῖν.
- 47 ἐγγυᾶται δέ μοι τὸν λόγον ὁ νόμος, ἐν ᾧ γέγραπται· “ πᾶς ὁ λαὸς ἑώρα τὴν φωνήν ”· ἐμφαντικώτατα·

<sup>a</sup> For this and the next section see Ex. xx. 14-19.

<sup>b</sup> So LXX, Ex. xix. 18, cf. De Mig. 47, Mos. ii. 213.

THE DECALOGUE, 43-47

Such was the reason, as it seems to me, why he willed to word the series of his oracles in the singular form, and delivers them as though to one alone.

XI.<sup>a</sup> It was natural that the place should be the 44 scene of all that was wonderful, claps of thunder louder than the ears could hold, flashes of lightning of surpassing brightness, the sound of an invisible trumpet reaching to the greatest distance, the descent of a cloud which like a pillar stood with its foot planted on the earth, while the rest of its body extended to the height of the upper air, the rush of heaven-sent fire which shrouded all around in dense smoke. For when the power of God arrives, needs must be that no part of the world should remain inactive, but all move together to do Him service. Near by stood the people. They had kept pure from 45 intercourse with women and abstained from all pleasures save those which are necessary for the sustenance of life. They had cleansed themselves with ablutions and lustrations for three days past, and moreover had washed their clothes. So in the whitest of raiment they stood on tiptoe with ears pricked up in obedience to the warning of Moses to prepare themselves for a congregation which he knew would be held from the oracular advice he received when he was summoned up by himself. Then from 46 the midst of the fire that streamed from heaven there sounded forth to their utter amazement a voice, for the flame became articulate speech in the language familiar to the audience, and so clearly and distinctly were the words formed by it that they seemed to see rather than hear them. What I say is vouched for 47 by the law in which it is written, "All the people saw the voice,"<sup>b</sup> a phrase fraught with much meaning,

PHILO

τὴν μὲν γὰρ ἀνθρώπων ἀκουστὴν εἶναι συμβέβηκεν, ὁρατὴν δὲ ὡς ἀληθῶς τὴν θεοῦ. διὰ τί; ὅτι ὅσα ἂν λέγῃ ὁ θεός, οὐ ῥήματά ἐστιν ἀλλ' ἔργα, ἅπερ 48 ὀφθαλμοὶ πρὸ ὤτων δικάζουσι. παγκάλως μέντοι καὶ θεοπρεπῶς εἴρηται ἐκ τοῦ πυρὸς ἢ φωνῆ προέρχεσθαι· ἠκρίβωται γὰρ καὶ βεβασάνισται τὰ 49 τοῦ θεοῦ λόγια καθάπερ χρυσὸς πυρί. μηνύει δὲ καὶ διὰ συμβόλου τι τοιοῦτον· ἐπειδὴ τοῦ πυρὸς τὸ μὲν φωτίζειν τὸ δὲ καίειν πέφυκεν, οἱ μὲν τοῖς χρησιμοῖς ἀξιούντες εἶναι καταπειθεῖς ὡς ἐν ἀσκήῳ φωτὶ τὸν αἰὶ χρόνον βιώσονται τοὺς νόμους αὐτοῦς ἀστέρας ἔχοντες ἐν ψυχῇ φωσφοροῦντας, ὅσοι δ' ἀφηγιασταί, καιόμενοι καὶ κατακαιόμενοι διατελοῦσιν ὑπὸ τῶν ἔνδον ἐπιθυμιῶν, αἱ φλογὸς τρόπον πορθήσουσι τὸν σύμπαντα τῶν ἐχόντων βίον.

50 XII. Ἄ μὲν οὖν ἀναγκαῖον ἦν προδηλῶσαι, ταῦτ' ἐστίν. ἐπ' αὐτὰ δὲ ἤδη τρεπτέον τὰ λόγια καὶ πάντα τὰ ἐν τούτοις ἐρευνητέον διάφορα. δέκα τοίνυν ὄντα διένειμεν εἰς δύο πεντάδας, ἃς δυσὶ στήλαις ἐνεχάραξε, καὶ ἡ μὲν προτέρα πεντὰς τὰ πρωτεῖα ἔλαχεν, ἡ δ' ἑτέρα δευτερείων ἠξιοῦτο· καλαὶ δ' ἀμφοτέραι καὶ βιωφελεῖς, εὐρείας ὁδοὺς καὶ λεωφόρους ἐνὶ τέλει περατουμένας ἀναστέλλουσαι πρὸς ἀπταιστον ψυχῆς ἐφιεμένης αἰὶ

51 τοῦ βελτίστου πορείαν. ἡ μὲν οὖν ἀμείνων πεντὰς τοιαύδε ἦν· περὶ μοναρχίας, ἣ μοναρχεῖται ὁ κόσμος· περὶ ξοάνων καὶ ἀγαλμάτων καὶ συνόλως ἀφιδρυμάτων χειροκμητῶν· περὶ τοῦ μὴ λαμβάνειν ἐπὶ ματαίῳ θεοῦ πρόσρησιν· περὶ τοῦ τὴν ἱερὰν |

[189] ἐβδόμην ἄγειν ἱεροπρεπῶς· περὶ γονέων τιμῆς καὶ ἰδία ἑκατέρου καὶ ἀμφοτέρων κοινῆ· ὡς εἶναι τῆς

THE DECALOGUE, 47-51

for it is the case that the voice of men is audible, but the voice of God truly visible. Why so? Because whatever God says is not words but deeds, which are judged by the eyes rather than the ears. Admirable 48 too, and worthy of the Godhead, is the saying that the voice proceeded from the fire, for the oracles of God have been refined and assayed as gold is by fire. And it conveys too, symbolically, some such meaning 49 as this: since it is the nature of fire both to give light and to burn, those who resolve to be obedient to the divine utterances will live for ever as in unclouded light with the laws themselves as stars illuminating their souls, while all who are rebellious will continue to be burnt, aye and burnt to ashes, by their inward lusts, which like a flame will ravage the whole life of those in whom they dwell.

XII. Such are the points which required a preliminary treatment. We must now turn to the oracles themselves and examine all the different matters with which they deal. We find that He divided the ten into two sets of five which He engraved on two tables, and the first five obtained the first place, while the other was awarded the second. Both are excellent and profitable for life; both open out broad highroads leading at the end to a single goal, roads along which a soul which ever desires the best can travel without stumbling. The superior set of five 51 treats of the following matters: the monarchical principle by which the world is governed: idols of stone and wood and images in general made by human hands: the sin of taking the name of God in vain: the reverent observance of the sacred seventh day as befits its holiness: the duty of honouring parents, each separately and both in common.

PHILO

μιᾶς γραφῆς τὴν μὲν ἀρχὴν θεὸν καὶ πατέρα καὶ ποιητὴν τοῦ παντός, τὸ δὲ τέλος γονεῖς, οἱ μιμούμενοι τὴν ἐκείνου φύσιν γεννῶσι τοὺς ἐπὶ μέρους. ἢ δ' ἑτέρα πεντὰς τὰς πάσας ἀπαγορεύσεις περιέχει· μοιχείας, φόνου, κλοπῆς, ψευδομαρτυριῶν, ἐπιθυμιῶν.

- 52 Ἐπισκεπτέον δὲ μετὰ πάσης ἀκριβείας τῶν λογίων ἕκαστον μηδὲν πάρεργον αὐτῶν ποιούμενους. ἀρχὴ δ' ἀρίστη πάντων μὲν τῶν ὄντων θεός, ἀρετῶν δ' εὐσέβεια· περὶ ὧν ἀναγκαιότατον πρῶτον διεξελεῖν. πλάνος τις οὐ μικρὸς τὸ πλείστον τῶν ἀνθρώπων γένος κατέσχηκε περὶ πράγματος, ὅπερ ἢ μόνον ἢ μάλιστα ἦν εἰκὸς ἀπλανέστατον ταῖς ἐκάστων διανοίαις ἐνιδρῦσθαι.
- 53 ἐκτεθειώκασι γὰρ οἱ μὲν τὰς τέσσαρας ἀρχάς, γῆν καὶ ὕδωρ καὶ ἀέρα καὶ πῦρ, οἱ δ' ἥλιον καὶ σελήνην καὶ τοὺς ἄλλους πλανήτας καὶ ἀπλανεῖς ἀστέρας, οἱ δὲ μόνον τὸν οὐρανόν, οἱ δὲ τὸν σύμπαντα κόσμον· τὸν δ' ἀνωτάτω καὶ πρεσβύτατον, τὸν γεννητὴν, τὸν ἄρχοντα τῆς μεγαλοπόλεως, τὸν στρατάρχην τῆς ἀηττήτου στρατιᾶς, τὸν κυβερνήτην, ὃς οἰκονομεῖ σωτηρίως αἰεὶ τὰ σύμπαντα, παρεκαλύψαντο ψευδωνύμους προσήσεις ἐκείνοις ἐπι-
- 54 φημίσαντες ἑτέρας ἕτεροι. καλοῦσι γὰρ οἱ μὲν τὴν γῆν Κόρην, Δήμητραν, Πλούτωνα, τὴν δὲ θάλατταν Ποσειδῶνα, δαίμονας ἐναλίους ὑπάρχους αὐτῷ προσαναπλάττοντες καὶ θεραπείας ὁμίλους μεγάλους ἀρρένων τε καὶ θηλειῶν, Ἦραν δὲ τὸν ἀέρα καὶ τὸ πῦρ Ἐφαιστον καὶ ἥλιον Ἀπόλλωνα καὶ σελήνην Ἄρτεμιν καὶ ἑωσφόρον Ἀφροδίτην

THE DECALOGUE, 51-54

Thus one set of enactments begins with God the Father and Maker of all, and ends with parents who copy His nature by begetting particular persons. The other set of five contains all the prohibitions, namely adultery, murder, theft, false witness, covetousness or lust.

We must examine with all care each of the pro- 52 nouncements, giving perfunctory treatment to none. The transcendent source of all that exists is God, as piety is the source of the virtues, and it is very necessary that these two should be first discussed.

A great delusion has taken hold of the larger part of mankind in regard to a fact which properly should be established beyond all question in every mind to the exclusion of, or at least above, all others. For some have deified the four elements, 53 earth, water, air and fire, others the sun, moon, planets <sup>a</sup> and fixed stars, others again the heaven by itself, others the whole world. But the highest and the most august, the Begetter, the Ruler of the great World-city, the Commander-in-Chief of the invincible host, the Pilot who ever steers all things in safety, Him they have hidden from sight by the misleading titles assigned to the objects of worship mentioned above. Different people give them different names : some 54 call the earth Korē or Demeter or Pluto, and the sea Poseidon, and invent marine deities subordinate to him and great companies of attendants, male and female. They call air Hera <sup>b</sup> and fire Hephaestus, the sun Apollo, the moon Artemis, the morning-star

<sup>a</sup> Greek "the other planets," the sun and moon being regarded as planets.

<sup>b</sup> See App. p. 610.

PHILO

- 55 καὶ στίλβοντα Ἑρμῆν· καὶ τῶν ἄλλων ἀστέρων ἐκάστου τὰς ἐπωνυμίας μυθογράφοι<sup>1</sup> παρέδοσαν, οἱ πρὸς ἀπάτην ἀκοῆς εὖ τετεχνασμένα πλάσματα συνυφήναντες ἔδοξαν περὶ τὴν τῶν ὀνομάτων θέσιν
- 56 κεκομψεῦσθαι· τὸν τε οὐρανὸν εἰς ἡμισφαίρια τῷ λόγῳ διχῆ διανείμαντες, τὸ μὲν ὑπὲρ γῆς, τὸ δ' ὑπὸ γῆς, Διοσκόρους ἐκάλεσαν τὸ περὶ τῆς ἕτερουμέρου ζωῆς αὐτῶν προστερατευσάμενοι διήγημα.
- 57 τοῦ γὰρ οὐρανοῦ συνεχῶς καὶ ἀπαύστως αἰεὶ κύκλῳ περιπολοῦντος, ἀνάγκη τῶν ἡμισφαιρίων ἐκάτερον ἀντιμεθίστασθαι παρ' ἡμέραν ἄνω τε καὶ κάτω γινόμενον ὅσα τῷ δοκεῖν· ἄνω γὰρ καὶ κάτω πρὸς ἀλήθειαν οὐδὲν ἐν σφαίρᾳ, πρὸς δὲ τὴν ἡμετέραν |
- [190] σχέσιν αὐτὸ μόνον εἴωθε λέγεσθαι τὸ μὲν ὑπὲρ 58 κεφαλῆς ἄνω, κάτω δὲ τοῦναντίον. τῷ δὴ φιλοσοφεῖν ἀνόθως ἐγνωκότε καὶ ἀδόλου καὶ καθαρᾶς εὐσεβείας μεταποιοιμένῳ κάλλιστον καὶ ὀσιώτατον ὑφηγεῖται παράγγελμα, μηδὲν τῶν τοῦ κόσμου μερῶν αὐτοκρατῆ θεὸν ὑπολαμβάνειν εἶναι· καὶ γὰρ γέγονε, γένεσις δὲ φθορᾶς ἀρχή, καὶ προνοία τοῦ πεποιηκότος ἀθανατίζεται, καὶ ἦν ποτε χρόνος, ὅτε οὐκ ἦν· θεὸν δὲ πρότερον οὐκ ὄντα καὶ ἀπὸ τινος χρόνου γενόμενον καὶ μὴ διαιωνίζοντα
- 59 λέγειν οὐ θεμιτόν. XIII. ἀλλὰ γὰρ ἔνιοι περὶ τὰς κρίσεις ἀπονοία τῶσαύτη κέχρηται, ὡς οὐ μόνον τὰ εἰρημένα θεοὺς νομίζειν, ἀλλὰ καὶ ἕκαστον αὐτῶν μέγιστον καὶ πρῶτον θεόν, τὸν

<sup>1</sup> MSS. μυθογράφοις or -οις.

<sup>a</sup> Or "sparkler," "twinkler." For these non-mythological names of the planets see Quis Rerum 224.

THE DECALOGUE, 55-59

Aphrodite and the glitterer <sup>a</sup> Hermes, and each of the 55 other stars have names handed down by the myth-makers, who have put together fables skilfully contrived to deceive the hearers and thus won a reputation for accomplishment in name-giving. So too in 56 accordance with the theory by which they divided the heaven into two hemispheres, one above the earth and one below it, they called them the Dioscuri and invented a further miraculous story of their living on alternate days.<sup>b</sup> For indeed as heaven is 57 always revolving ceaselessly and continuously round and round, each hemisphere must necessarily alternately change its position day by day and become upper or lower as it appears, though in reality there is no upper or lower in a spherical figure, and it is merely in relation to our own position that we are accustomed to speak of what is above our heads as upper and the opposite to this as lower.

Now to one who is determined to follow a genuine 58 philosophy and make a pure and guileless piety his own, Moses gives this truly admirable and religious command that he should not suppose any of the parts of the universe to be the omnipotent God. For the world has become what it is, and its becoming is the beginning of its destruction, even though by the providence of God it be made immortal, and there was a time when it was not. But to speak of God as "not being" at some former time, or having "become" at some particular time and not existing for all eternity is profanity. XIII. But 59

there are some whose views are affected with such folly that they not only regard the said objects as gods but each of them severally as the greatest and <sup>b</sup> Od. xi. 303. See App. p. 610.

PHILO

- ὄντα ὄντως ἢ οὐκ εἰδότες ἀδιδάκτω τῇ φύσει ἢ οὐ σπουδάζοντες μαθεῖν, ἔνεκα τοῦ μηδὲν ἔξω τῶν αἰσθητῶν ἀόρατον καὶ νοητὸν αἴτιον ὑπολαμβάνειν εἶναι, καίτοι σαφειστάτης ἐγγύς παρακειμένης
- 60 πίστεως. ψυχῇ γὰρ ζῶντες καὶ βουλευόμενοι καὶ πάνθ' ὅσα κατὰ τὸν ἀνθρώπινον βίον δρῶντες οὐδέποτε ψυχὴν ὀφθαλμοῖς σώματος ἴσχυσαν θεάσασθαι, καίτοι φιλοτιμηθέντες ἂν πάσας φιλοτιμίας, εἴ πως ἰδεῖν οἶόν τε ἦν τὸ ἄγαλμα τὸ πάντων ἱεροπρεπέστατον, ἀφ' οὗ κατὰ μετάβασιν εἰκὸς ἦν ἐννοίαν τοῦ ἀγενήτου καὶ αἰδίου λαβεῖν, ὃς ἅπαντα τὸν κόσμον ἠνιοχῶν σωτηρίως ἀόρατος
- 61 ὦν κατευθύνει. καθάπερ οὖν τοῦ μεγάλου βασιλέως τὰς τιμὰς εἴ τις τοῖς ὑπάρχοις σατράπαις ἀπένειμεν, ἔδοξεν ἂν οὐκ ἀγνωμονέστατος μόνον ἀλλὰ καὶ ῥησοκινδυνότατος εἶναι χαριζόμενος τὰ δεσπότητος δούλοις, τὸν αὐτὸν τρόπον [ἂν] τοῖς αὐτοῖς εἴ τις γεραίρει τὸν πεποηκότα τοῖς γεγονόσιν, ἴστω πάντων ἀβουλότατος ὦν καὶ ἀδικώτατος, ἴσα διδοὺς ἀνίσιοις οὐκ ἐπὶ τιμῇ τῶν ταπεινότερων ἀλλ'
- 62 ἐπὶ καθαιρέσει τοῦ κρείττονος. εἰσὶ δ' οἱ καὶ προσυπερβάλλουσιν ἀσεβεία μηδὲ τὸ ἴσον ἀποδιδόντες, ἀλλὰ τοῖς μὲν τὰ πάντα τῶν ἐπὶ τιμῇ χαριζόμενοι, τῷ δ' οὐδὲν νέμοντες ἀλλ' οὐδέ μνήμην, τὸ κοινότατον· ἐπιλήθονται γὰρ οὐ μόνον
- [191] μεμνήσθαι προσῆκον ἦν, | ἐπιτηδεύοντες οἱ βαρυ-
- 63 δαίμονες ἐκούσιον λήθην. ἔνιοι δὲ καὶ στομάργω κατεχόμενοι λύττη τὰ δείγματα τῆς ἐνιδρυμένης ἀσεβείας εἰς μέσον προφέροντες βλασφημεῖν ἐπι-<sup>a</sup> So, I think, rather than as Mangey "utique solius" or Treitel "ausschliesslich," which would rather be μόνου.

THE DECALOGUE, 59-63

primal God. Incapacity for instruction or indifference to learning prevents them from knowing the truly Existent because they suppose that there is no invisible and conceptual cause outside what the senses perceive, though the clearest possible proof lies ready at their hand. For while it is with the soul that they live and plan and carry out all the affairs of human life, they can never see the soul with the eyes of the body, though every feeling of ambition might well have been aroused in the hope of seeing that most august of all sacred objects, the natural stepping-stone to the conception of the Uncreated and Eternal, the invisible Charioteer who guides in safety the whole universe. So just as anyone who rendered to the subordinate satraps the honours due to the Great King would have seemed to reach the height not only of unwisdom but of foolhardiness, by bestowing on servants what belonged to their master, in the same way anyone who pays the same tribute to the creatures as to their Maker may be assured that he is the most senseless and unjust of men in that he gives equal measure to those who are not equal, though he does not thereby honour the meaner many but deposes the one superior.

And there are some who in a further excess of impiety do not even give this equal payment, but bestow on those others all that can tend to honour, while to Him they refuse even the commonest of all tributes, that of remembering Him. Whom duty bids them remember, if nothing more, Him they forget, a forgetfulness deliberately practised to their lasting misery. Some again, seized with a loud-mouthed frenzy, publish abroad samples of their deep-seated impiety and attempt to blas-

PHILO

- χειροῦσι τὸ θεῖον, ἀκονησάμενοι κακῆγορον γλώτταν, ἅμα καὶ λυπεῖν ἐθέλοντες τοὺς εὐσεβοῦντας, οἷς ἄλεκτον καὶ ἀπαρηγόρητον εὐθύς εἰσδύεται πένθος τὴν ὄλην πυρπολοῦν ψυχὴν δι' ὧτων· ἡ γὰρ τῶν ἀνοσίων ἐλέπολις τοῦτ' ἐστίν, ᾧ μόνῳ τοὺς φιλοθέους ἐπιστομίζουσι νομίζοντας ὑπὲρ τοῦ μὴ παροξύνειν ἐν τῷ παρόντι κάλλιστον ἡσυχίαν.
- 64 XIV. πᾶσαν οὖν τὴν τοιαύτην τερθρείαν ἀπωσάμενοι τοὺς ἀδελφοὺς φύσει μὴ προσκυνῶμεν, εἰ καὶ καθαρωτέρας καὶ ἀθανατωτέρας οὐσίας ἔλαχον—ἀδελφὰ δ' ἀλλήλων τὰ γενόμενα καθὸ γέγονεν, ἐπεὶ καὶ πατήρ ἀπάντων εἰς ὁ ποιητῆς τῶν ὄλων ἐστίν,—ἀλλὰ καὶ διανοία καὶ λόγῳ καὶ πάσῃ δυνάμει τῇ τοῦ ἀγενήτου καὶ αἰδίου καὶ τῶν ὄλων αἰτίου θεραπείᾳ σφόδρα εὐτόνως καὶ ἐρρωμένως ἐπαποδυνώμεθα, μὴ ὑποκατακλινόμενοι μηδ' ὑπείκοτες ταῖς τῶν πολλῶν ἀρεσκειαῖς, ὑφ' ὧν
- 65 καὶ οἱ δυνάμενοι σῶζεσθαι διαφθείρονται. πρῶτον μὲν οὖν παράγγελμα καὶ παραγγελμάτων ἱερώτατον στηλιτεύσωμεν ἐν ἑαυτοῖς, ἕνα τὸν ἀνωτάτω νομίζειν τε καὶ τιμᾶν θεόν· δόξα δ' ἡ πολύθεος μηδ' ὧτων ψαυέτω καθαρῶς καὶ ἀδόλως ἀνδρὸς εἰωθότος ζητεῖν ἀλήθειαν.
- 66 Ἄλλ' ὅσοι μὲν ἡλίου καὶ σελήνης καὶ τοῦ σύμπαντος οὐρανοῦ τε καὶ κόσμου καὶ τῶν ἐν αὐτοῖς ὀλοσχερεστάτων μερῶν ὡς θεῶν πρόπολοί τε καὶ θεραπευταί, διαμαρτάνουσι μὲν—πῶς γὰρ οὔ;—τοὺς ὑπηκόους πρὸ τοῦ ἄρχοντος ἀποσεμνύνοντες, ἦττον δὲ τῶν ἄλλων ἀδικοῦσι τῶν ξύλα καὶ λίθους ἄργυρόν τε

---

<sup>a</sup> Mangey strangely says that the brothers are the angels. But clearly they are the heavenly bodies, which are "souls divine and without blemish throughout" (De Gig. 8, where pheme the Godhead, and when they whet the edge of their evil-speaking tongue they do so in the wish to grieve the pious who feel at once the inroad of a sorrow indescribable and inconsolable, which passing through the ears wastes as with fire the whole soul. For this is the battery of the unholy, and is in itself enough to curb the mouths of the devout who hold that silence is best for the time being to avoid giving provocation. XIV. Let us then reject all such im- 64 posture and refrain from worshipping those who by nature are our brothers,<sup>a</sup> even though they have been given a substance purer and more immortal than ours, for created things, in so far as they are created, are brothers, since they have all one Father, the Maker of the universe. Let us instead in mind and speech and every faculty gird ourselves up with vigour and activity to do the service of the Uncreated, the Eternal, the Cause of all, not submitting nor abasing ourselves to do the pleasure of the many who work the destruction even of those who might be saved. Let us, then, engrave deep in our hearts this as the 65 first and most sacred of commandments, to acknowledge and honour one God Who is above all, and let the idea that gods are many never even reach the ears of the man whose rule of life is to seek for truth in purity and guilelessness.

THE DECALOGUE, 63-66

<sup>b</sup> But while all who give worship and service to sun 66 and moon and the whole heaven and universe or their chief parts as gods most undoubtedly err by magnifying the subjects above the ruler, their offence is less than that of the others who have given shape to stocks (see note), though elsewhere, as in De Op. 144, admitted to have bodies. Philo always, I think, distinguishes them from angels.

<sup>b</sup> Here begins the Second Commandment.

PHILO

- καὶ χρυσὸν καὶ τὰς παραπλησίους ὕλας μορφωσάντων ὡς φίλον ἐκάστοις, εἴτ' ἀγαλμάτων καὶ ξοάνων καὶ τῶν ἄλλων χειροκμήτων, ὧν πλαστικῇ καὶ ζωγραφία δημιουργοὶ μεγάλα ἔβλαψαν τὸν 67 βίον τὸν ἀνθρώπινον, καταπλησάντων τὴν οἰκου-[192] μένην. τὸ γὰρ κάλλιστον ἔρεισμα τῆς | ψυχῆς ἐξέκοψαν, τὴν περὶ τοῦ ζῶντος αἰὲ θεοῦ προσἤκουσαν ὑπόληψιν, ὥσπερ τε ἀνερμάτιστα σκάφη σαλεύουσιν ὧδε κἀκέισε διαφερόμενοι τὸν αἰῶνα, μηδέποτ' εἰς λιμένα καταῤραι μηδ' ἐνορμίσασθαι βεβαίως ἀληθείᾳ δυνάμενοι, τυφλώττοντες περὶ τὸ θέας ἄξιον, πρὸς ὃ μόνον ὀξυδορκεῖν ἀναγκαῖον 68 ἦν. καὶ μοι δοκοῦσι τῶν τὰς τοῦ σώματος ὄψεις πεπηρωμένων ἀθλιώτερον ζῆν· ἐκεῖνοι μὲν γὰρ ἀκουσίως ἐβλάβησαν ἢ νόσον ὀφθαλμῶν χαλεπὴν ὑποστάντες ἢ πρὸς ἐχθρῶν ἐπιβουλευθέντες, οἱ δ' ἐκουσίῳ γνώμῃ τὸ τῆς ψυχῆς ὄμμα οὐκ ἠμαύρωσαν μόνον ἀλλὰ καὶ παντελῶς ἀποβαλεῖν ἠξίωσαν.
 69 ὅθεν τοῖς μὲν ἔλεος ὡς ἡτυχηκόσι, τοῖς δὲ κόλασις ὡς μοχθηροῖς ἔπεται δικαίως, οἱ μετὰ τῶν ἄλλων οὐδὲ τὸ προχειρότατον ἐνενόησαν, ὃ καὶ παῖς “ ἔγνω νήπιος,” ὅτι τοῦ τεχνιτευθέντος ὁ τεχνίτης ἀμείνων, καὶ χρόνῳ—πρεσβύτερος γὰρ καὶ τρόπον τινὰ τοῦ δημιουργηθέντος πατήρ—καὶ δυνάμει· τὸ γὰρ δρῶν τοῦ πάσχοντος ἐπικυδέστερον.
 70 καὶ δέον, εἴπερ ἄρα ἐξημάρτανον, τοὺς ζωγράφους αὐτοὺς καὶ ἀνδριαντοποιοὺς ὑπερβολαῖς τιμῶν ἐκτεθειωκέναι, τοὺς μὲν εἶασαν ἀφανεῖς οὐδὲν πλέον παρασχόντες, τὰ δ' ὑπ' ἐκείνων δημιουρ-

---

<sup>a</sup> Cf. Iliad, xvii. 32, and Hesiod, Op. 218 παθὼν δέ τε νήπιος ἔγνω, quoted as a proverb Plato, Symp. 222 b.

THE DECALOGUE, 66-70

and stones and silver and gold and similar materials each according to their fancy and then filled the habitable world with images and wooden figures and the other works of human hands fashioned by the craftsmanship of painting and sculpture, arts which have wrought great mischief in the life of mankind. For these idolaters cut away the most excellent 67 support of the soul, the rightful conception of the Ever-living God. Like boats without ballast they are for ever tossed and carried about hither and thither, never able to come to harbour or to rest securely in the roadstead of truth, blind to the one thing worthy of contemplation, which alone demands keen-sighted vision. To my mind they live a more miserable life 68 than those who have lost the sight of the body, for those have been disabled through no wish of their own but either through suffering from some grievous disease of the eyes or through the malice of their enemies, but these others have of deliberate purpose not only dimmed but without scruple cast away entirely the eye of the soul. And therefore pity for 69 their misfortune waits upon the former, punishment for their depravity quite justly on the latter. In their general ignorance they have failed to perceive even that most obvious truth which even "a witless infant knows,"<sup>a</sup> that the craftsman is superior to the product of his craft both in time, since he is older than what he makes and in a sense its father, and in value, since the efficient element is held in higher esteem than the passive effect. And while if they 70 were consistent in their sin, they should have deified the sculptors and painters themselves and given them honours on a magnificent scale, they leave them in obscurity and bestow no favour on them, while they

PHILO

- 71 γηθέντα πλάσματα καὶ ζωγραφήματα θεοὺς ἐνόμισαν. καὶ οἱ μὲν τεχνῖται πολλάκις ἄποροι καὶ ἄδοξοι κατεγήρασαν ἀτυχίαις ἐπαλλήλοις ἐναπο-θανόντες, τὰ δὲ τεχνιτευθέντα πορφύρα καὶ χρυσῶ καὶ ταῖς ἄλλαις πολυτελείαις, ἃς πλοῦτος χορηγεῖ, σεμνοποιεῖται καὶ θεραπεύεται, οὐ πρὸς ἔλευθέρων μόνον ἀλλὰ καὶ εὐπατριδῶν καὶ τὸ σῶμα καλλίστων· ἱερέων γὰρ καὶ τὸ γένος ἐξετάζεται μετὰ πάσης ἀκριβείας, εἰ ἀνεπίληπτον, καὶ ἡ κοινωνία τῶν τοῦ σώματος μερῶν, εἰ σύμπασα 72 ὀλόκληρος. καὶ οὕτω τοῦτο δεινόν, καίτοι δεινὸν ὄν, ἀλλ' ἐκεῖνο παγχάλεπον· ἤδη γάρ τινες οἶδα τῶν πεποιηκῶτων τοῖς πρὸς ἑαυτῶν γεγονόσιν εὐχομένους τε καὶ θύοντας, οἷς πολὺ βέλτιον ἦν ἑκατέραν τῶν χειρῶν προσκυνεῖν, εἰ δὲ μὴ βούλοιντο δόξαν φιλαυτίας ἐκτρεπόμενοι, σφύρας γούν καὶ ἄκμονας καὶ γραφίδας καὶ καρκίνους καὶ 73 τὰ ἄλλα ἐργαλεῖα, δι' ὧν ἐμορφώθησαν αἱ ὕλαι.
 [193] XV. | καίτοι πρὸς τοὺς οὕτως ἀπονοηθέντας ἄξιον παρρησιασαμένους εἰπεῖν· εὐχῶν ἀρίστην εἶναι συμβέβηκεν, ὧ γενναῖοι, καὶ τέλος εὐδαιμονίας τὴν 74 πρὸς θεὸν ἐξομοίωσιν. εὐχεσθε οὖν καὶ ὑμεῖς ἐξομοιωθῆναι τοῖς ἀφιδρύμασιν, ἵνα τὴν ἀνωτάτω καρπώσησθε εὐδαιμονίαν, ὀφθαλμοῖς μὴ βλέποντες, ὡσὶ μὴ ἀκούοντες, μυκτῆρσι μῆτε ἀναπνέοντες μῆτε ὀσφραϊνόμενοι, στόματι μὴ φωνοῦντες μηδὲ γευόμενοι, χερσὶ μῆτε λαμβάνοντες μῆτε διδόντες μῆτε δρῶντες, ποσὶ μὴ βαδίζοντες, μηδ' ἄλλω τινὶ τῶν μερῶν ἐνεργοῦντες, ἀλλ' ὥσπερ ἐν εἰρκτῇ τῷ ἱερῷ φρουρούμενοι καὶ φυλαττόμενοι, μεθ' ἡμέραν τε καὶ νύκτωρ τὸν ἀπὸ τῶν θυομένων ἀεὶ καπνὸν

THE DECALOGUE, 70-74

regard as gods the figures and pictures made by their workmanship. The artists have often grown 71 old in poverty and disesteem, and mishap after mishap has accompanied them to the grave, while the works of their art are glorified by the addition of purple and gold and silver and the other costly embellishments which wealth supplies, and are served not merely by ordinary freemen but by men of high birth and great bodily comeliness. For the birth of priests is made a matter for the most careful scrutiny to see whether it is unexceptionable, and the several parts which unite to form the body whether they make a perfect whole.

Horrible as all 72 this is, we have not reached the true horror. The worst is still to come. We have known some of the image-makers offer prayers and sacrifices to their own creations though they would have done much better to worship each of their two hands, or if they were disinclined for that because they shrank from appearing egotistical, to pay their homage to the hammers and anvils and pencils and pincers and the other tools by which their materials were shaped. XV. Surely to persons so demented we might well say 73 boldly, " Good sirs, the best of prayers and the goal of happiness is to become like God. Pray you there- 74 fore that you may be made like your images and thus enjoy supreme happiness with eyes that see not, ears that hear not, nostrils which neither breathe nor smell, mouths that never taste nor speak, hands that neither give nor take nor do anything at all, feet that walk not, with no activity in any parts of your bodies,<sup>a</sup> but kept under watch and ward in your temple-prison day and night, ever drinking in the smoke of the <sup>a</sup> Philo clearly has in mind Ps. cxv. 5-8 ; cf. Spec. Leg. ii. 256.

PHILO

σπῶντες· ἐν γὰρ μόνον τοῦτ' ἀγαθὸν προσανα-75 πλάττετε τοῖς ἀφιδρύμασιν. ἀλλ' ἔγωγε νομίζω ταῦτα ἀκούοντας οὐχ ὡς ἐπ' εὐχαῖς ἀλλ' ὡς ἐπὶ κατάραις ἀγανακτήσῃν καὶ τρέψεσθαι<sup>1</sup> πρὸς λοιδορίας ἄμυναν ἀντικατηγοροῦντας· ὁ μέγιστον ἂν εἶη τεκμήριον τῆς ἐπιπολαζούσης ἀσεβείας ἀνθρώπων θεοὺς νομιζόντων, οἷς ὁμοιοὶ ποτε τὰς φύσεις 76 ἀπεύξαιντ' ἂν γενέσθαι. XVI. μηδεὶς οὖν τῶν ἔχόντων ψυχὴν ἀψύχῳ τινὶ προσκυνεῖτω· πάνυ γὰρ τῶν ἀτόπων ἐστὶ τὰ φύσεως ἔργα πρὸς θεραπείαν τετράφθαι τῶν χειροκμητῶν.

Αἰγυπτίοις<sup>2</sup> δ' οὐ μόνον τὸ κοινὸν ἔγκλημα χώρας ἀπάσης, ἀλλὰ καὶ ἕτερον ἐξαιρέτον ἐπάγεται δεόν-τως· πρὸς γὰρ ξοάνοις καὶ ἀγάλμασιν ἔτι καὶ ζῶα ἄλογα παραηόχασιν εἰς θεῶν τιμάς, ταύρους καὶ κριοὺς καὶ τράγους, ἐφ' ἑκάστῳ μυθικόν τι πλάσμα 77 τετρατευμένοι. καὶ ταῦτα μὲν ἴσως ἔχει τινὰ λόγον, ἡμερώτατα γὰρ καὶ ὠφελιμώτατα τῷ βίῳ· ἄροτῆρ ὁ βουὸς αὐλακας ἀνατέμνει καιρῷ σπορᾶς, ἀλοῆσαι πάλιν, ὅταν δέῃ τὸν καρπὸν καθαίρεσθαι, δυνατώτατος· ὁ κριὸς τὸ κάλλιστον τῶν σκεπασμά-των, ἐσθῆτα, παρέχει· γυμνὰ γὰρ ἂν τὰ σώματα διεφθείρετο ῥαδίως, ἢ διὰ θάλπος ἢ διὰ κρύος ἄμετρον, τοτὲ μὲν τῷ ἀφ' ἡλίου φλογμῷ, τοτὲ 78 δὲ τῇ ἀπ' ἀέρος περιψύξει. νυνὶ δὲ προσυπερ-

<sup>1</sup> mss. τρέψασθαι.

<sup>2</sup> So Cohn from the αιγυπτίων of some authorities. The αιγύπτω of the majority agrees well with χώρας, though not so well with the plurals which follow.

<sup>a</sup> Rather a strange phrase for mankind, but justified by

THE DECALOGUE, 74-78

victims. For this is the one good which you imagine your idols to enjoy." As a matter of fact I expect 75 that such advice would be received with indignation as savouring of imprecations rather than of prayers and would call forth abusive repudiations and retorts, and this would be the strongest proof of the wide extent of impiety shown by men who acknowledge gods of such a nature that they would abominate the idea of resembling them. XVI. Let no one, then, who 76 has a soul worship a soulless thing, for it is utterly preposterous that the works of nature<sup>a</sup> should turn aside to do service to what human hands have wrought.

But the Egyptians are rightly charged not only on the count to which every country is liable, but also on another peculiar to themselves. For in addition to wooden and other images, they have advanced to divine honours irrational animals,<sup>b</sup> bulls and rams and goats, and invented for each some fabulous legend of wonder. And with these perhaps 77 there might be some reason, for they are thoroughly domesticated and useful for our livelihood. The ox is a plougher and opens up furrows at seed-time and again is a very capable thresher when the corn has to be purged; the ram provides the best possible shelter, namely, clothing, for if our bodies were naked they would easily perish, either through heat or through intense cold, in the first case under the scorching of the sun, in the latter through the refrigeration caused by the air. But actually the 78 Egyptians have gone to a further excess and chosen the antithesis to χειρόκμητα. Possibly our "brethren," the stars, which would also have to worship the images, if they were worthy of worship, are included.

<sup>b</sup> For other references to Egyptian animal worship see App. pp. 610-611.

PHILO

βάλλοντες καὶ τῶν ἀνημέρων τὰ ἀγριώτατα καὶ ἀπιθασώτατα, λέοντας καὶ κροκοδείλους καὶ ἐρπετῶν τὴν ἰοβόλον ἀσπίδα, γεραίρουσιν ἱεροῖς καὶ τεμένεσι θυσίαις τε καὶ πανηγύρεσι καὶ πομπαῖς καὶ τοῖς παραπλησίοις· ἀφ' ἑκατέρου γὰρ τῶν εἰς [194] χρήσιν δοθέντων | ἀνθρώποις ὑπὸ θεοῦ, γῆς καὶ ὕδατος, διερευνησάμενοι τὰ ἀγριώτατα οὔτε <τῶν> χερσαίων λέοντος θηριωδέστερον ἀνεῦρον οὔτε κροκοδείλου τῶν ἐνύδρων ἀγριώτερον, ἃ σέβουσι
 79 καὶ τιμῶσι. πολλὰ μέντοι καὶ ἄλλα ζῶα, κύνας, αἰλούρους, λύκους, καὶ πτηνὰ ἰβιδας καὶ ἰέρακας, καὶ πάλιν ἰχθύων ἢ ὅλα τὰ σώματα ἢ μέρη τούτων ἐκτεθειώκασιν· ὧν τί ἂν γένοιτο καταγελαστότερον; 80 καὶ δὴ τῶν ξένων οἱ πρῶτον εἰς Αἴγυπτον ἀφικόμενοι, πρὶν τὸν ἐγχώριον τύφον εἰσοικίσασθαι ταῖς διανοαῖς, ἐκθηήσκουσι χλευάζοντες· ὅσοι δὲ παιδείας ὀρθῆς ἐγεύσαντο, τὴν ἐπ' ἀσέμνοις πράγμασι σεμνοποιίαν καταπλαγέντες οἰκτιρίζονται τοὺς χρωμένους, ἀθλιωτέρους, ὅπερ εἰκός, ὑπολαμβάνοντες εἶναι τῶν τιμωμένων, μεταβεβληκότας εἰς ἐκεῖνα τὰς ψυχάς, ὡς ἀνθρωποειδῆ θηρία περινοστεῖν 81 δοκεῖν. ἀνελὼν οὖν ἐκ τῆς ἱερᾶς νομοθεσίας πᾶσαν τὴν τοιαύτην ἐκθέωσιν ἐπὶ τὴν τοῦ πρὸς ἀλήθειαν ὄντος θεοῦ τιμὴν ἐκάλεσεν, ἑαυτοῦ τιμῆς οὐ προσδεόμενος—οὐ γὰρ ἑτέρου χρεῖος ἦν ὁ αὐταρκέστατος ἑαυτῶ—, βουλόμενος δὲ τὸ γένος τῶν ἀνθρώπων ἀνοδίαις πλαζόμενον εἰς ἀπλανεστάτην ἄγειν ὁδόν, ἵν' ἐπόμενον τῇ φύσει τὸ ἄριστον εὔρηται τέλος, ἐπιστήμην τοῦ ὄντως ὄντος, ὅς ἐστι τὸ πρῶτον ἀγαθὸν καὶ τελεώτατον, ἀφ' οὗ τρόπον

THE DECALOGUE, 78-81

the fiercest and most savage of wild animals, lions and crocodiles and among reptiles the venomous asp, all of which they dignify with temples, sacred precincts, sacrifices, assemblies, processions and the like. For after ransacking the two elements given by God to man for his use, earth and water, to find their fiercest occupants, they found on land no creature more savage than the lion nor in water than the crocodile and these they reverence and honour. Many other 79 animals too they have deified, dogs, cats, wolves and among the birds, ibises and hawks; fishes too, either their whole bodies or particular parts. What could be more ridiculous than all this? Indeed strangers on their first arrival in Egypt 80 before the vanity of the land has gained a lodgement in their minds are like to die with laughing at it, while anyone who knows the flavour of right instruction, horrified at this veneration of things so much the reverse of venerable, pities those who render it and regards them with good reason as more miserable than the creatures they honour, as men with souls transformed into the nature of those creatures, so that as they pass before him, they seem beasts in human shape. So 81

then He gave no place in His sacred code of laws to all such setting up of other gods, and called upon men to honour Him that truly is, not because He needed that honour should be paid to Him, for He that is all-sufficient to Himself needs nothing else, but because He wished to lead the human race, wandering in pathless wilds, to the road from which none can stray, so that following nature they might win the best of goals, knowledge of Him that truly is, Who is the primal and most perfect good, from

PHILO

πηγῆς ἄρδεται τῷ κόσμῳ καὶ τοῖς ἐν αὐτῷ τὰ ἐπὶ μέρους ἀγαθὰ.

- 82 XVII. Διειλεγμένοι καὶ περὶ τῆς δευτέρας παρ-αινέσεως ὅσα οἶόν τε ἦν, τὴν ἐπομένην κατὰ τὸ ἐξῆς ἀκριβώσωμεν· ἔστι δὲ μὴ λαμβάνειν ὄνομα θεοῦ ἐπὶ ματαίῳ. τὰ μὲν οὖν τῆς τάξεως γνώριμα τοῖς τὴν διάνοιαν ὀξυδορκοῦσιν· ὄνομα γὰρ αἰεὶ δεύτερον 83 ὑποκειμένου πράγματος, σκιᾶ παραπλήσιον, ἢ παρἔπεται σώματι. προειπὼν οὖν περὶ τῆς ὑπάρξεως καὶ τιμῆς τοῦ αἰεὶ ὑπάρχοντος, ἐπομένως τῷ τῆς ἀκολουθίας εἰρμῷ τὰ πρέποντα καὶ περὶ τῆς κλήσεως εὐθὺς παρήγγειλε· πολύτροποι γὰρ καὶ 84 ἁμαρτῖαι. κάλλιστον δὴ καὶ βιωφελέστατον καὶ ἀρμόττον λογικῇ φύσει τὸ ἀνώμοτον, [195] οὕτως | ἀληθεύειν ἐφ' ἐκάστου δεδιδαγμένη, ὡς τοὺς λόγους ὄρκους εἶναι νομίζεσθαι. δεύτερος δέ, φασί, πλοῦς τὸ εὐορκεῖν· ἤδη γὰρ ὁ γε ὀμνὺς 85 εἰς ἀπιστίαν ὑπονοεῖται. μελλητῆς οὖν ἔστω καὶ βραδύς, εἴ πως ἐνδέχοιτο ταῖς ὑπερθέσεσιν ἀπ-ώσασθαι τὸν ὄρκον· εἰ δέ τις ἀνάγκη βιάζοιτο, περισκεπτέον οὐ παρέργως ἕκαστα τῶν ἐμφερομένων· τὸ γὰρ πρᾶγμα οὐ μικρόν, εἰ καὶ τῷ 86 ἔθει καταφρονεῖται. μαρτυρία γὰρ ἔστι θεοῦ περὶ πραγμάτων ἀμφισβητουμένων ὄρκος· μάρτυρα δὲ καλεῖν ἐπὶ ψεύδει θεὸν ἀνοσιώτατον. ἴθι γάρ, εἰ βούλει, τῷ λόγῳ διάκυψον εἰς τὴν τοῦ μέλλοντος ὀμνύναι διάνοιαν ἐπὶ ψεύδει· θεάσῃ γὰρ αὐτὴν οὐκ

---

<sup>a</sup> See note on De Som. i. 44.

THE DECALOGUE, 81-86

Whom as from a fountain is showered the water of each particular good upon the world and them that dwell therein.

XVII. We have now discussed as fully as possible 82 the second commandment. Let us proceed to examine carefully the next in order, not to take God's name in vain. Now the reason for the position of this commandment in the list will be understood by those who have clear-sighted minds, for the name always stands second to the thing which it represents as the shadow which follows the body. So after speaking 83 first about the existence of the Ever-existent and the honour due to Him as such, He follows it at once in orderly sequence by giving a commandment on the proper use of His title, for the errors of men in this part of their duty are manifold and multiform.

To swear not at all is the best course 84 and most profitable to life, well suited to a rational nature which has been taught to speak the truth so well on each occasion that its words are regarded as oaths; to swear truly is only, as people say, a "second-best voyage,"<sup>a</sup> for the mere fact of his swearing casts suspicion on the trustworthiness of the man. Let him, then, lag and linger in the hope 85 that by repeated postponement he may avoid the oath altogether.

But, if necessity be too strong for him, he must consider in no careless fashion all that an oath involves, for that is no small thing, though custom makes light of it. For an oath is an 86 appeal to God as a witness on matters in dispute, and to call Him as witness to a lie is the height of profanity. Be pleased, I beg you, to take a look with the aid of your reason into the mind of the intending perjurer. You will see there a mind not at ἡρεμοῦσαν, ἀλλὰ θορύβου καὶ ταραχῆς μεστήν, κατηγορουμένην καὶ πάσας ὕβρεις καὶ βλασφημίας 87 ὑπομένουσαν. ὁ γὰρ ἐκάστη ψυχῇ συμπεφυκῶς καὶ συνοικῶν ἔλεγχος, οὐδὲν εἰωθῶς παραδέχεσθαι τῶν ὑπαιτίων, μισοπονήρῳ καὶ φιλαρέτῳ χρώμενος ἀεὶ τῇ φύσει, κατήγορος ὁμοῦ καὶ δικαστῆς ὁ αὐτὸς ὢν, διακινηθεὶς ὡς μὲν κατήγορος αἰτιᾶται, κατηγορεῖ, δυσωπεῖ, πάλιν δ' ὡς δικαστῆς διδάσκει, νουθετεῖ, παραινεῖ μεταβάλλεσθαι· κἂν μὲν ἰσχύση πείσαι, γεγηθῶς καταλλάττεται, μὴ δυνηθεὶς δὲ ἄσπονδεὶ πολεμεῖ μήτε μεθ' ἡμέραν μήτε νύκτωρ ἀφιστάμενος, ἀλλὰ κεντῶν καὶ τιτρώσκων ἀνιάτα, μέχρῃς ἂν τὴν ἀθλίαν καὶ ἐπάρατον ζῶν ἀπορρήξῃ.

PHILO

88 XVIII. τί λέγεις, εἵπομι' ἂν πρὸς τὸν ἐπίορκον, τολμήσεις τινὶ τῶν σεαυτοῦ γνωρίμων φάναι προσελθῶν· ὦ οὗτος, ἃ μὴτ' εἶδες μὴτ' ἤκουσας, ὡς ἰδῶν, ὡς ἀκούσας, ὡς παρηκολουθηκῶς ἅπασιν, ἀφικόμενός μοι μαρτύρησον; ἐγὼ μὲν γε<sup>1</sup> οὐκ οἶμαι· μανίας γὰρ ἀθεραπέυτου τὸ ἔργον.
 89 ἐπεὶ τίσιν ὀφθαλμοῖς νήφων καὶ ἐν σεαυτῷ δοκῶν εἶναι προσιδῶν τὸν φίλον ἐρεῖς· διὰ τὴν ἑταιρίαν ἀδικοπράγει, παρανόμει, συνασέβει μοι; δῆλον γὰρ ὡς, εἰ ταῦτ' ἀκούσαι, πολλὰ χαίρειν φράσας ἑταιρίᾳ τῇ νομιζομένη καὶ κακίσας αὐτόν, ὅτι τὴν ἀρχὴν ἀνδρὶ τοιούτῳ φιλίας ἐκοινώνησεν, ἀποπηθήσεται καθάπερ ἀπὸ θηρὸς ἀγριαίνοντος καὶ 90 λελυττηκότος. εἶτα, πρὸς ἃ μὴδὲ φίλον ἄγειν τολμήσεις, ἐπὶ ταῦτα θεὸν μάρτυρα καλῶν οὐκ ἐρυθρίας, τὸν πατέρα καὶ ἡγεμόνα τοῦ κόσμου;

<sup>1</sup> See App. p. 611.

<sup>a</sup> For this double function of "Conviction" or the "Inward Monitor" cf. Quod Deus 135 ff.

THE DECALOGUE, 86-90

peace but full of uproar and confusion, labouring under accusation, suffering all manner of insult and reviling. For every soul has for its birth-fellow 87 and house-mate a monitor<sup>a</sup> whose way is to admit nothing that calls for censure, whose nature is ever to hate evil and love virtue, who is its accuser and its judge in one. If he be once roused as accuser he censures, accuses and puts the soul to shame, and again as judge, he instructs, admonishes and exhorts it to change its ways. And if he has the strength to persuade it, he rejoices and makes peace. But if he cannot, he makes war to the bitter end, never leaving it alone by day or night, but plying it with stabs and deadly wounds until he breaks the thread of its miserable and ill-starred life.

XVIII. How 88
now! I would say to the perjurer, will you dare to accost any of your acquaintance and say, "Come, sir, and testify for me that you have seen and heard and been in touch throughout with things which you did not see nor hear." My own belief is that you would not, for it would be the act of a hopeless lunatic. If you are sober and to all appearance in your right 89 mind, how could you have the face to say to your friend, "For the sake of our comradeship, work iniquity, transgress the law, join me in impiety"? Clearly if he hears such words, he will turn his back upon his supposed comradeship, and reproaching himself that there should ever have been the tie of friendship between him and such a person, rush away from him as from a savage and maddened beast. Can it be, then, that on a matter on which you would 90 not dare to cite even a friend you do not blush to call God to witness, God the Father and Ruler of the

PHILO

[196] <sup>91</sup> πότερον ἐπιστάμενος, ὅτι πάνθ' ὄρα καὶ πάντων ἀκούει, ἢ τοῦτ' ἀγνοῶν; | εἰ μὲν οὖν ἀγνοῶν, ἄθεός τις εἶ, πηγὴ δὲ πάντων ἀδικημάτων ἀθεότης· πρὸς δὲ τῷ ἀθέῳ καὶ καταστρατηγεῖς τὸν ὄρκον, ὁμνῶν κατὰ τοῦ μὴ προσέχοντος ὡς ἐπιμελουμένου τῶν ἀνθρωπείων πραγμάτων· εἰ δ' ὅτι προνοεῖ σαφῶς οἶδας, ὑπερβολὴν ἀσεβείας οὐκ ἀπολέλοιπας λέγων, εἰ καὶ μὴ στόματι καὶ γλώττῃ, τῷ γοῦν συνειδότι πρὸς θεόν· τὰ ψευδῆ μοι μαρτύρει, συγκακούργει, συρραδιούργει· μία μοι τοῦ παρ' ἀνθρώποις εὐδοκιμεῖν ἐλπίς τὸ παρακαλύψασθαί σε τὴν ἀλήθειαν· ὑπὲρ ἑτέρου πονηρὸς γενοῦ, ὑπὲρ τοῦ χείρονος ὁ κρείττων, ὑπὲρ ἀνθρώπου καὶ ταῦτα μοχθηροῦ θεοῦ ὁ πάντων ἄριστος.

92 XIX. εἰσὶ δ' οἱ μὴδὲ κερδαίνειν τι μέλλοντες ἕθει πονηρῷ κατακόρως καὶ ἀνεξετάστως ὁμνύουσιν ἐπὶ τοῖς τυχοῦσιν, οὐδενὸς ἀμφισβητουμένου τὸ παράπαν, γὰ κενὰ τῶν<sup>1</sup> ἐν τῷ λόγῳ προσαναπληροῦντες ὄρκοις, ὡς οὐκ ἄμεινον ὄν ἀποκοπὴν ῥημάτων μᾶλλον δὲ καὶ ἀφωνίαν ὑποστῆναι παντελεῖ· φύεται world? Do you do so with the knowledge that He sees and hears all things or in ignorance of this? If in ignorance, you are an atheist, and atheism is 91 the source of all iniquities, and in addition to your atheism you cut the ground from under the oath, since in swearing by God you attribute a care for human affairs to one who in your view has no regard for them. But if you are convinced of His providence as a certainty, there is no further height of impiety which remains for you to reach when you say to God, if not with your mouth and tongue, at any rate with your conscience, "Witness to a falsehood for me, share my evil-doing and my knavery. The one hope I have of maintaining my good name with men is that Thou shouldest disguise the truth. Be wicked for the sake of another, the superior for the sake of the inferior, the Divine, the best of all, for a man, and a bad man to boot."

93 γὰρ ἐκ πολυορκίας ψευδορκία καὶ ἀσέβεια. διὸ χρὴ τὸν μέλλοντα ὁμνῦναι πάντ' ἐπιμελῶς ἐξητακέναι καὶ σφόδρα περιττῶς, τὸ πρᾶγμα, εἰ εὐμέγεθες καὶ εἰ γέγονεν ὄντως καὶ εἰπραχθὲν κατείληφε παγίως, ἑαυτόν, εἰ καθαρεύει ψυχὴν καὶ σῶμα καὶ γλώτταν, τὴν μὲν παρανομίας, τὸ δὲ μαισμάτων, τὴν δὲ βλασφημιῶν· οὐ γὰρ ὅσιον, δι'

<sup>1</sup> So Cohn by a later correction for ms. τὰ μὲν αὐτῶν. See App. p. 611.

THE DECALOGUE, 90-93

XIX. There are some who without even any gain in 92 prospect have an evil habit of swearing incessantly and thoughtlessly about ordinary matters where there is nothing at all in dispute, filling up the gaps in their talk with oaths, forgetting that it were better to submit to have their words cut short or rather to be silenced altogether, for from much swearing springs false swearing and impiety. Therefore one who is 93 about to take an oath should have made a careful and most punctilious examination, first of the matter in question, whether it is of sufficient importance, whether it has actually happened, and whether he has a sound apprehension of the facts; secondly, of himself, whether his soul is pure from lawlessness, his body from pollution, his tongue from evil-speaking, for it would be sacrilege to employ the mouth by

PHILO

- οὐ στόματος τὸ ἱερώτατον ὄνομα προφέρεται τις, 94 διὰ τούτου φθέγγεσθαι τι τῶν αἰσχυρῶν. ἐρευνάτω δὲ καὶ τόπον καὶ καιρὸν ἐπιτήδειον· οἶδα γὰρ οἶδά τινας ἐν βεβήλοις καὶ ἀκαθάρτοις χωρίοις, ἐν οἷς οὔτε πατὸς οὔτε μητρὸς ἀλλ' οὐδὲ τῶν ὀθνείων πρεσβύτου τινὸς εὖ βεβιωκότος ἄξιον μεμνήσθαι, διομνυμένους καὶ ὅλας ῥήσεις ὄρκων συνείροντας, τῷ τοῦ θεοῦ πολυωνύμῳ καταχρησαμένους ὀνόματι 95 ἔνθα μὴ δεῖ πρὸς ἀσέβειαν. ὁ δὲ τῶν λεχθέντων ὀλιγώρως ἔχων ἴστω τὸ μὲν πρῶτον μαρὸς καὶ ἀκάθαρτος ὢν, εἶθ' ὡς αἰεὶ αἰὶ μέγιστα τῶν τιμωριῶν ἐφεδρεύουσιν αὐτῷ, τῆς ἐφόρου τῶν ἀνθρωπειῶν δίκης ἀτρέπτως καὶ ἀπαρηγορήτως ἐπὶ τοῖς οὕτω μεγάλοις ἀδικήμασιν ἐχούσης, ἥτις, ὅταν μὴ παραχρήμα κολάζειν ἄξιοι, ἐπὶ πολλῷ [197] δανείζειν ἔοικε τὰς τιμωρίας, | ἄς, ὅταν ἦ καιρὸς, ἀναπράττει μετὰ τοῦ κοινῆ συμφέροντος.
- 96 XX. Τέταρτόν ἐστι παράγγελμα τὸ περὶ τῆς ἱερᾶς ἐβδόμης, ἣν' εὐαγῶς καὶ ὁσίως ἀγῆται. ταύτην ἔναι μὲν τῶν πόλεων ἐορτάζουσιν ἅπαξ τοῦ μηνὸς ἀπὸ τῆς κατὰ σελήνην<sup>1</sup> νουμηνίας διαριθμού-μεναι, τὸ δὲ Ἰουδαίων ἔθνος συνεχῶς <ἡμέρας> ἕξ 97 διαλείποντες αἰεὶ. λόγος δ' ἐστὶν ἀναγραφεῖς ἐν τοῖς κατὰ τὴν κοσμοποιίαν, περιέχων αἰτίαν ἀναγκαίαν· ἐν γὰρ ἕξ ἡμέραις φησὶ κτισθῆναι τὸν κόσμον, τῇ δ' ἐβδόμῃ παυσάμενον τῶν ἔργων τὸν 98 θεὸν ἄρξασθαι τὰ γεγονότα καλῶς θεωρεῖν. ἐκέλευσεν οὖν καὶ τοὺς μέλλοντας ἐν ταύτῃ ζῆν τῇ πολιτεῖᾳ καθάπερ ἐν τοῖς ἄλλοις καὶ κατὰ τοῦθ'

<sup>1</sup> Other mss. θεόν, which Cohn prints, though later he declared for σελήνην, which appears in R. See App. p. 611.

<sup>a</sup> See App. p. 611.

THE DECALOGUE, 93-98

which one pronounces the holiest of all names, to utter any words of shame. And let him seek for a 94 suitable time and place. For I know full well that there are persons who, in profane and impure places where it would not be fitting to mention either a father or mother or even any good-living elder outside his family, swear at length and make whole speeches consisting of a string of oaths and thus, by their misuse of the many forms of the divine name in places where they ought not to do so, show their impiety. Anyone who treats what I have said with 95 contempt may rest assured, first, that he is polluted and unclean, secondly, that the heaviest punishments are waiting to fall upon him. For justice, who surveys human affairs, is inflexible and implacable towards such grave misdeeds, and when she thinks well to refrain from immediate chastisement, be sure that she does but put out her penalties to loan at high interest, only to exact them when the time comes to the common benefit of all.

XX. The fourth commandment deals with the 96 sacred seventh day, that it should be observed in a reverent and religious manner. While some states celebrate this day as a feast once a month,<sup>a</sup> reckoning it from the commencement as shown by the moon, the Jewish nation never ceases to do so at continuous intervals with six days between each. There is an 97 account recorded in the story of the Creation containing a cogent reason for this : we are told that the world was made in six days and that on the seventh God ceased from His works and began to contemplate what had been so well created, and therefore He bade those who should live as citizens under this 98 world-order follow God in this as in other matters.

PHILO

ἔπεσθαι θεῶ, πρὸς μὲν ἔργα τρεπομένους ἐφ' ἡμέρας ἕξ, ἀνέχοντας δὲ τῇ ἐβδόμῃ καὶ φιλοσοφούντας καὶ θεωρίαις μὲν τῶν τῆς φύσεως σχολάζοντας, ἐπισκοποῦντας δὲ καὶ εἴ τι μὴ καθαρῶς ἐν ταῖς προτέραις ἐπράχθη, λόγον καὶ εὐθύνας ὧν εἶπον ἢ ἔδρασαν παρ' ἑαυτῶν λαμβάνοντας ἐν τῷ τῆς ψυχῆς βουλευτηρίῳ, συνεδρευόντων καὶ συνεξεταζόντων τῶν νόμων εἰς τε τὴν τῶν παροραθέντων κατόρθωσιν καὶ πρὸς τὴν τοῦ μηδὲν

99 αὔθις ἐξαμαρτάνειν προφυλακὴν. ἀλλ' ὁ μὲν θεὸς ἅπαξ κατεχρήσατο ταῖς ἕξ ἡμέραις πρὸς τὴν τοῦ κόσμου τελειώσιν μήκους χρόνων οὐ προσδεόμενος· ἀνθρώπων δ' ἕκαστος ἄτε θνητῆς φύσεως μετέχων καὶ μυρίων ἐνδεῆς ὧν πρὸς τὰς ἀναγκαίας τοῦ βίου χρείας ὀφείλει μὴ κατοκνεῖν ἐκπορίζειν τὰ ἐπιτήδεια μέχρι τελευτῆς τοῦ βίου διαναπαυόμενος

100 τὰς ἱεράς ἑβδομάδας. ἄρ' οὐ παγκάλῃ παραίνεσις καὶ πρὸς πᾶσαν ἀρετὴν ἰκανωτάτῃ προτρέψασθαι καὶ διαφερόντως εἰς εὐσέβειαν; “ἔπου” φησὶν “αἰεὶ θεῶ· παράδειγμα προθεσμίας ἔστω σοι πράξεων ἐν ἑξαήμερον<sup>1</sup> αὐταρκέστατον, ἐν ᾧ τὸν κόσμον ἐδημιούργει· παράδειγμα καὶ τοῦ δεῖν φιλοσοφεῖν ἢ ἐβδόμῃ, καθ' ἣν ἐπιδεῖν λέγεται ἃ εἰργάσατο, ὅπως καὶ αὐτὸς ἐπιθεωρῆς τὰ φύσεως καὶ τὰ ἴδια ὅσα συντείνει πρὸς εὐδαιμονίαν.”

101 τοιοῦτον οὖν ἀρχέτυπον τῶν ἀρίστων βίων, πρακτικῶ τε καὶ θεωρητικῶ, μὴ παρέλθωμεν, ἀλλ' αἰεὶ πρὸς αὐτὸ βλέποντες ἐναργεῖς εἰκόνας καὶ τόπους ταῖς ἑαυτῶν διανοίαις ἐγχαράττωμεν ἐξομοιοῦντες θνητὴν φύσιν ὡς ἔνεστιν ἀθανάτῳ κατὰ <sup>1</sup> MSS. ἐν ἑξάμετρον οἱ ἕξ ἄς μέτρον.

THE DECALOGUE, 98-101

So He commanded that they should apply themselves to work for six days but rest on the seventh and turn to the study of wisdom, and that while they thus had leisure for the contemplation of the truths of nature they should also consider whether any offence against purity had been committed in the preceding days, and exact from themselves in the council-chamber of the soul, with the laws as their fellow-assessors and fellow-examiners, a strict account of what they had said or done in order to correct what had been neglected and to take precaution against repetition of any sin. But while God once for all made a final 99 use of six days for the completion of the world and had no further need of time-periods, every man being a partaker of mortal nature and needing a vast multitude of things to supply the necessaries of life ought never to the end of his life to slacken in providing what he requires, but should rest on the sacred seventh days. Have we not here a most admirable 100 injunction full of power to urge us to every virtue and piety most of all? "Always follow God," it says, "find in that single six-day period in which, all-sufficient for His purpose, He created the world, a pattern of the time set apart to thee for activity. Find, too, in the seventh day the pattern of thy duty to study wisdom, that day in which we are told that He surveyed what He had wrought, and so learn to meditate thyself on the lessons of nature and all that in thy own life makes for happiness." Let us not then 101 neglect this great archetype of the two best lives, the practical and the contemplative, but with that pattern ever before our eyes engrave in our hearts the clear image and stamp of them both, so making mortal nature, as far as may be, like the immortal by saying

PHILO

[198] τὸ λέγειν καὶ πράττειν ἅ χρή. πῶς δὲ | λέγεται ἐν ἑξ ἡμέραις γεγενῆσθαι τὸν κόσμον ὑπὸ θεοῦ τοῦ μηδὲ χρόνων εἰς τὸ ποιεῖν δεομένου, μεμῆνυται διὰ τῶν ἀλληγορηθέντων ἐν ἑτέροις.

102 XXI. Τὴν μέντοι προνομίαν, ἧς ἐν τοῖς οὖσιν ἑβδομὰς ἡξίωται, δηλοῦσιν οἱ περὶ τὰ μαθήματα διατρίψαντες, ἐπιμελῶς πάνυ καὶ πεφροντισμένως αὐτὴν ἐξιχνεύσαντες. ἥδε γὰρ ἐστὶν ἡ ἐν ἀριθμοῖς παρθένος, ἡ ἀμήτωρ φύσις, ἡ μονάδος οικειοτάτη καὶ ἀρχῆς, ἡ ἰδέα τῶν πλανήτων, ἐπεὶ καὶ τῆς ἀπλανοῦς σφαίρας μονάς· ἐκ γὰρ μονάδος καὶ ἑβδομάδος οὐρανοῦ ὁ ἀσώματος, τὸ παράδειγμα

103 τοῦ ὄρατοῦ. πέπηγε δ' ὁ οὐρανοῦ ἕκ τε τῆς ἀμερίστου φύσεως καὶ τῆς μεριστῆς· ἡ μὲν οὖν ἀμέριστος τὴν πρώτην καὶ ἀνωτάτω καὶ ἀπλανῆ περιφορὰν εἴληχεν, ἣν μονὰς ἐπισκοπεῖ, ἡ δὲ μεριστὴ τὴν καὶ δυνάμει καὶ τάξει δευτέραν, ἧς ἐπιτροπεύει ἑβδομάς, ἣτις ἐξαχῆ διανεμηθεῖσα τοὺς ἐπικαλουμένους ἐπὶ τὰ πλάνητας εἰργάσατο·

104 οὐκ ἐπειδὴ πεπλάνηταί τι τῶν κατὰ τὸν οὐρανὸν θείας καὶ μακαρίας καὶ εὐδαίμονος φύσεως μετ-εσχηκότων, οἷς πᾶσι τὸ ἀπλανὲς οικειότατον—τὴν γοῦν ἐν ὁμοίῳ ταυτότητα σώζοντα δολιχεύει τὸν

<sup>a</sup> i.e. in Leg. All. i. 2-4: "Moses wished to exhibit things mortal and immortal as having been formed in a way corresponding to their proper numbers" (§ 4). The reason why six is the appropriate number for mortal things, as seven for immortal, is given just before.

<sup>b</sup> For the Pythagorean origin of these epithets see note on Mos. ii. 210.

<sup>c</sup> Or "archetype."

<sup>d</sup> For the mystical identity of One and Seven cf. De Post. 64, Quod Deus 11, and § 159 below.

<sup>e</sup> This whole section, like its parallel, De Cher. 22, is based

THE DECALOGUE, 101-104

and doing what we ought. But in what sense the world is said to have been created by God in six days when no time-period of any kind was needed by Him for his work has been explained elsewhere in our allegorical expositions.<sup>a</sup>

XXI. As for the number seven, the precedence 102 awarded to it among all that exists is explained by the students of mathematics, who have investigated it with the utmost care and consideration. It is the virgin <sup>b</sup> among the numbers, the essentially motherless, the closest bound to the initial Unit, the "idea" <sup>c</sup> of the planets, just as the unit is of the sphere of the fixed stars, for from the Unit and Seven springs the incorporeal heaven which is the pattern of the visible.<sup>d</sup>

Now the substance from which the 103 heaven has been framed is partly undivided and partly divided. To the undivided belongs the primal, highest and undeviating revolution presided over by the unit; to the divided another revolution, secondary both in value and order, under the governance of Seven, and this by a sixfold partition has produced the seven so-called planets, or wanderers.<sup>e</sup> Not that 104 any of the occupants of heaven wander, for sharing as they do in a blessed and divine and happy nature, they are all intrinsically free from any such tendency. In fact they preserve their uniformity unbroken and upon Plato, Timaeus 36 c-d, where the heaven is conceived of as consisting of two revolving circles, the exterior, the sphere of the fixed stars, and the interior subdivided into seven concentric circles, one for each planet. "The exterior motion he called the motion of the Same (ταυτόν, cf. Philo's ταυτότης), the interior the motion of the Other" (so in De Cher.). The terms for "undivided" and "he divided" are ἄσχιστος and σχίσσας, but Plato has ἀμέριστος and μεριστή οὐσία a little before (35 A).

PHILO

αἰῶνα μηδεμίαν ἐνδεχόμενα τροπὴν καὶ μεταβολὴν —, ἀλλ' ὅτι περιπολοῦνται ὑπεναντίως τῇ ἀμερίστῳ καὶ ἐξωτάτῳ σφαίρα, πλάνητες ὠνομάσθησαν οὐ κυρίως ὑπ' ἀνθρώπων εἰκαιοτέρων, οἱ τὴν ἰδίαν πλάνην τοῖς οὐρανίοις ἐπεφήμισαν, ἃ τὴν τοῦ θεοῦ 105 στρατοπέδου τάξιν οὐδέποτε λείπει. διὰ μὲν δὴ ταῦτα καὶ ἔτι πλείω τετίμηται ἢ ἑβδομάς· ἐπ' οὐδενὶ δ' οὕτω προνομίας ἔτυχεν ἢ τῷ μάλιστα τὸν ποιητὴν καὶ πατέρα τῶν ὄλων ἐμφαίνεσθαι δι' αὐτῆς· ὡς γὰρ διὰ κατόπτρου φαντασιοῦται ὁ νοῦς θεὸν δρῶντα καὶ κοσμοποιοῦντα καὶ τῶν ὄλων ἐπιτροπεύοντα.

106 XXII. Μετὰ δὲ τὰ περὶ τῆς ἑβδόμης παραγγέλλει πέμπτον παράγγελμα τὸ περὶ γονέων τιμῆς τάξιν αὐτῷ δούς τὴν μεθόριον τῶν δυοῖν πεντάδων· τελευταῖον γὰρ ὃν τῆς προτέρας, ἐν ἣ τὰ ἱερώτατα προστάττεται,<sup>1</sup> συνάπτει καὶ τῇ δευτέρῃ περιεχούσῃ 107 τὰ πρὸς ἀνθρώπους δίκαια. αἴτιον δ' ὡς οἶμαι τόδε· τῶν γονέων ἢ φύσις ἀθανάτου καὶ θνητῆς οὐσίας ἔοικεν εἶναι μεθόριος, θνητῆς μὲν διὰ τὴν [199] πρὸς | ἀνθρώπους καὶ τὰ ἄλλα ζῶα συγγένειαν κατὰ τὸ τοῦ σώματος ἐπίκηρον, ἀθανάτου δὲ διὰ τὴν τοῦ γεννᾶν πρὸς θεὸν τὸν γεννητὴν τῶν ὄλων 108 ἕξομοίωσιν. ἤδη μὲν οὖν τινες τῇ ἐτέρῃ μερίδι προσκληρώσαντες ἑαυτοὺς ἔδοξαν τῆς ἐτέρας ὀλιγωρεῖν· ἄκρατον γὰρ ἐμφορησάμενοι τὸν εὐσεβείας πόθον, πολλὰ χαίρειν φράσαντες ταῖς ἄλλαις

<sup>1</sup> So Cohn for ms. πρὸς τὰ πέντε. See App. pp. 611-612.

THE DECALOGUE, 104-108

run their round to and fro for all eternity admitting no swerving or alteration. It is because their course is contrary to that of the undivided and outermost sphere that the planets gained their name which was improperly applied to them by the more thoughtless people, who credited with their own wanderings the heavenly bodies which never leave their posts in the divine camp.<sup>a</sup> For these reasons and many 105 others beside Seven is held in honour. But nothing so much assures its predominance as that through it is best given the revelation of the Father and Maker of all, for in it, as in a mirror, the mind has a vision of God as acting and creating the world and controlling all that is.

XXII. After dealing with the seventh day, He 106 gives the fifth commandment on the honour due to parents. This commandment He placed on the border-line between the two sets of five; it is the last of the first set in which the most sacred injunctions are given and it adjoins the second set which contains the duties of man to man. The reason I consider is 107 this: we see that parents by their nature stand on the border-line between the mortal and the immortal side of existence, the mortal because of their kinship with men and other animals through the perishableness of the body; the immortal because the act of generation assimilates them to God, the generator of the All. Now we have known some 108 who associate themselves with one of the two sides and are seen to neglect the other. They have drunk of the unmixed wine of pious aspirations and turning their backs upon all other concerns devoted their <sup>a</sup> Cf. Plato, Laws 821 c-d, where the name of "wanderers" is said to be a blasphemy.

PHILO

- πραγματείαις ὄλον ἀνέθεσαν τὸν οἰκέιον βίον θερα-109 πεία θεοῦ. οἱ δ' οὐδὲν ἕξω τῶν πρὸς ἀνθρώπους δικαιωμάτων ἀγαθὸν ὑποτοπήσαντες εἶναι μόνην τὴν πρὸς ἀνθρώπους ὁμιλίαν ἡσπάσαντο, τῶν τε ἀγαθῶν τὴν χρῆσιν ἐξ ἴσου πᾶσι παρέχοντες διὰ κοινωνίας ἴμερον καὶ τὰ δεινὰ κατὰ δύναμιν 110 ἐπικουφίζειν ἀξιοῦντες. τούτους μὲν οὖν φιλο-ανθρώπους, τοὺς δὲ προτέρους φιλοθέους ἐνδίκως ἂν εἴποι τις, ἡμιτελεῖς τὴν ἀρετὴν· ὀλόκληροι γὰρ οἱ παρ' ἀμφοτέροις εὐδοκιμοῦντες. ὅσοι δὲ μήτ' ἐν τοῖς πρὸς ἀνθρώπους ἐξετάζονται, συνηδόμενοι μὲν ἐπὶ τοῖς κοινοῖς ἀγαθοῖς, συναλγοῦντες δ' ἐπὶ τοῖς ἐναντίοις, μήτ' εὐσεβείας καὶ ὁσιότητος περι-ἔχονται, μεταβεβληκέναι δόξαιεν ἂν εἰς θηρίων φύσιν· ὧν τῆς ἀγριότητος οἴσονται τὰ πρωτεῖα οἱ γονέων ἀλογοῦντες, ἑκατέρας μερίδος ὄντες ἐχθροὶ καὶ τῆς πρὸς θεὸν καὶ τῆς πρὸς ἀνθρώπους.
 111 XXIII. ἐν δυσὶν οὖν δικαστηρίοις, ἃ δὴ μόνα ἐστὶν ἐν τῇ φύσει, μὴ ἀγνοεῖτωσαν ἐάλωκότες, ἀσεβείας μὲν ἐν τῷ θείῳ, διότι τοὺς ἐκ τοῦ μὴ ὄντος εἰς τὸ εἶναι παραγαγόντας καὶ κατὰ τοῦτο μιμησαμένους θεὸν οὐ περιέπουσι, μισανθρωπίας δ' ἐν τῷ κατ' 112 ἀνθρώπους. τίνα γὰρ ἕτερον εὖ ποιήσουσιν οἱ τῶν συγγενεστάτων καὶ τὰς μεγίστας παρασχομένων δωρεὰς ὀλιγωροῦντες, ὧν ἔνιαι δι' ὑπερβολὴν οὐδ' ἀμοιβὰς ἐνδέχονται; πῶς γὰρ ἂν ὁ γεννηθεὶς ἀντιγεννηῆσαι δύναίτο τοὺς σπείραντας, κλῆρον ἐξαίρετον τῆς φύσεως χαρισαμένης πρὸς παῖδας γονεῦσιν εἰς ἀντίδοσιν ἔλθειν οὐ δυνάμενον; ὅθεν

THE DECALOGUE, 109-112

personal life wholly to the service of God. Others 109 conceiving the idea that there is no good outside doing justice to men have no heart for anything but companionship with men. In their desire for fellowship they supply the good things of life in equal measure to all for their use, and deem it their duty to alleviate by anything in their power the dreaded hardships. These may be justly called lovers of 110 men, the former sort lovers of God. Both come but halfway in virtue ; they only have it whole who win honour in both departments. But all who neither take their fit place in dealings with men by sharing the joy of others at the common good and their grief at the reverse, nor cling to piety and holiness, would seem to have been transformed into the nature of wild beasts. In such bestial savagery the first place will be taken by those who disregard parents and are therefore the foes of both sides of the law, the godward and the manward.
XXIII. Let them not then fail to understand that 111 in the two courts, the only courts which nature has, they stand convicted ; in the divine court, of impiety because they do not show due respect to those who brought them forth from non-existence to existence and in this were imitators of God ; in the human court, of inhumanity. For to whom else will they show 112 kindness if they despise the closest of their kinsfolk who have bestowed upon them the greatest boons, some of them far exceeding any possibility of repayment ? For how could the begotten beget in his turn those whose seed he is, since nature has bestowed on parents in relation to their children an estate of a special kind which cannot be subject to the law

PHILO

- καὶ σφόδρα προσῆκεν ἀγανακτεῖν, εἰ μὴ πάντα ἔχοντες ἀντιχαρίζεσθαι μηδὲ τὰ κουφότατα ἐθε-113 λήσουσιν. οἷς δεόντως ἂν εἴποιμι· τὰ θηρία πρὸς ἀνθρώπους<sup>1</sup> ἡμεροῦσθαι δεῖ· καὶ πολλάκις ἔγνων ἡμερωθέντας λέοντας, ἄρκτους, | [200] παρδάλεις, οὐ μόνον πρὸς τοὺς τρέφοντας διὰ τὴν ἐπὶ τοῖς ἀναγκαίοις χάριν, ἀλλὰ καὶ πρὸς τοὺς ἄλλους, ἕνεκά μοι δοκῶ τῆς πρὸς ἐκείνους ὁμοιότητος· καλὸν γὰρ αἰεὶ τῷ κρείττονι τὸ 114 χεῖρον ἀκολουθεῖν διὰ βελτιώσεως ἐλπίδα. νυνὶ δ' ἀναγκασθήσομαι τάναντία λέγειν· μιμηταὶ θηρίων ἐνίων, ἄνθρωποι, γίνεσθε. τοὺς ὠφεληκότας ἀντ-ὠφελεῖν ἐκεῖνα οἶδε καὶ πεπαιδευταί· κύνες οἰκουροὶ προασπίζουσι καὶ προαποθνήσκουσι τῶν δεσποτῶν, ὅταν κίνδυνός τις ἐξαπιναίως καταλάβῃ· τοὺς δ' ἐν ταῖς ποίμναις φασὶ προαγωνιζομένους τῶν θρεμμάτων ἄχρι νίκης ἢ θανάτου παραμένειν ὑπὲρ 115 τοῦ διατηρῆσαι τοὺς ἀγελάρχας ἀζημίους. εἴτ' οὐκ αἰσχυρῶν ἐστὶν αἰσχιστον, ἐν χαρίτων ἀμοιβαῖς ἄνθρωπον ἡττηθῆναι κυνός, τοῦ θηρίων θραυστάτου τὸ ἡμερώτατον ζῶον; ἀλλ' εἰ μὴ τοῖς χερσαίοις ἀναδιδασκόμεθα, πρὸς τὴν πτηνὴν καὶ ἀεροπόρον μετίωμεν φύσιν ἢ χρὴ παρ' αὐτῆς 116 μαθησόμενοι. τῶν πελαργῶν οἱ μὲν γηραιοὶ καταμένουσιν ἐν ταῖς νεοττιαῖς ἀδυνατοῦντες ἵπτασθαι, οἱ δὲ τούτων παῖδες ὀλίγου δέω φάναι γῆν καὶ

<sup>1</sup> MSS. ἀνθρώπων.

---

<sup>a</sup> Clearly an allusion to the Attic law by which a citizen nominated to perform a "leiturgia" might call upon a person not so nominated whom he considered to be wealthier than himself to exchange properties with him. Here, as often,

THE DECALOGUE, 112-116

of "exchange" <sup>a</sup>? And therefore the greatest indignation is justified if children, because they are unable to make a complete return, refuse to make even the slightest. Properly, <sup>b</sup> I should say to them, 113

"beasts ought to become tame through association with men." Indeed I have often known lions and bears and panthers become tame, not only with those who feed them, in gratitude for receiving what they require, but also with everybody else, presumably because of the likeness to those who give them food. <sup>c</sup> That is what should happen, for it is always good for the inferior to follow the superior in hope of improvement. But as it is I shall be forced to say the opposite 114 of this, "You men will do well to take some beasts for your models." They have been trained to know how to return benefit for benefit. Watch-dogs guard and die for their masters when some danger suddenly overtakes them. Sheep-dogs, they say, fight for their charges and hold their ground till they conquer or die, in order to keep the herdsmen unscathed. Is it 115 not, then, a very scandal of scandals that in returning kindnesses a man should be worsted by a dog, the most civilized of living creatures by the most audacious of brutes?

But, if we cannot learn from the land animals, let us turn for a lesson in right conduct to the winged tribe that ranges the air. Among the storks <sup>d</sup> the old birds stay in the nests 116 when they are unable to fly, while their children fly, I might almost say, over sea and land, gathering Philo shews his knowledge of Attic law, as he found it in Demosthenes.

<sup>b</sup> The sense is "the natural and proper thing is for beasts to learn from men; in this case men have to learn from beasts."

<sup>c</sup> i.e. these animals come to associate the human form with kindness.

<sup>d</sup> See App. p. 612.

PHILO

- θάλατταν ἐπιποτώμενοι πανταχόθεν ἐκπορίζουσι 117 τοῖς γονεῦσι τὰ ἐπιτήδεια· καὶ οἱ μὲν ἀξίως τῆς ἡλικίας ἡρεμοῦντες ἐν ἀφθονίᾳ διατελοῦσι τῇ πάσῃ τρυφῶντες, οἱ δὲ τὰς εἰς τὸν πορισμὸν κακοπαθείας ἐπελαφριζόμενοι τῷ εὐσεβεῖν καὶ τῷ προσδοκᾶν ἐν γῆρα τὰ αὐτὰ πείσεσθαι ὑπὸ τῶν ἐκγόνων ἀναγκαῖον ὄφλημα ἀντεκτίνουσιν, ἐν καιρῷ καὶ λαβόντες αὐτὸ καὶ ἀνταποδιδόντες, ὅτ' οὐδέτεροι τρέφειν αὐτοὺς δύνανται, παῖδες μὲν ἐν ἀρχῇ τῆς γενέσεως, γονεῖς δ' ἐπὶ τελευτῇ τοῦ βίου· ὅθεν αὐτοδιδάκτῳ τῇ φύσει νεοττοτροφηθέντες γηρο-118 τροφοῦσι χαίροντες. ἄρ' οὐκ ἄξιον ἐπὶ τούτοις ἀνθρώπους, ὅσοι γονέων ἀμελοῦσιν, ἐγκαλύπτεσθαι καὶ κακίζειν ἑαυτοὺς, ὠλιγωρηκότας ὧν ἢ μόνων ἢ πρὸ τῶν ἄλλων ἀναγκαῖον ἦν πεφροντικέαι, καὶ ταῦτ' οὐ διδόντας μᾶλλον ἢ ἀποδιδόντας; παίδων γὰρ ἴδιον οὐδέν, ὃ μὴ γονέων ἐστίν, ἢ οἴκοθεν ἐπιδεδωκότων ἢ τὰς αἰτίας 119 τῆς κτήσεως παρασχομένων. εὐσέβειαν δὲ καὶ ὀσιότητα, τὰς ἀρετῶν ἡγεμονίδας, ἄρα γ' ἐντὸς ὄρων ἔχουσι τῶν ψυχῶν; ὑπερορίου μὲν οὖν ἀπεληλάκασι καὶ πεφυγαδεύκασι· θεοῦ γὰρ ὑπηρέται [201] πρὸς | τέκνων σπορὰν οἱ γονεῖς· ὃ δ' ὑπηρέτην 120 ἀτιμάζων συνατιμάζει καὶ τὸν ἄρχοντα. τῶν δ' εὐτολμοτέρων ἀποσεμνύνοντες τὸ γονέων ὄνομά φασί τινες, ὡς ἄρα πατῆρ καὶ μήτηρ ἐμφανεῖς εἰσι θεοί, μιμούμενοι τὸν ἀγένητον ἐν τῷ ζωοπλαστεῖν·

<sup>a</sup> See App. p. 612.

THE DECALOGUE, 116-120

from every quarter provision for the needs of their parents; and so while they in the inactivity justified by their age continue to enjoy all abundance of luxury, the younger birds making light of the hardships sustained in their quest for food, moved by piety and the expectation that the same treatment will be meted to them by their offspring, repay the debt which they may not refuse—a debt both incurred and discharged at the proper time—namely that in which one or other of the parties is unable to maintain itself, the children in the first stage of their existence, the parents at the end of their lives. And thus without any teacher but their natural instinct they gladly give to age the nurture which fostered their youth.

With this example before them may not human beings, who take no thought for their parents, deservedly hide their faces for shame and revile themselves for their neglect of those whose welfare should necessarily have been their sole or their primary care, and that not so much as givers as repayers of a due? For children have nothing of their own which does not come from their parents, either bestowed from their own resources or acquired by means which originate from them. Piety and religion are the queens among the virtues. Do they dwell within the confines of such souls as these? No, they have driven them from the realm and sent them into banishment. For parents are the servants of God for the task of begetting children, and he who dishonours the servant dishonours also the Lord. Some bolder spirits,<sup>a</sup> glorifying the name of parenthood, say that a father and a mother are in fact gods revealed to sight who copy the Uncreated in His work as the Framers of life. He, ἀλλὰ τὸν μὲν εἶναι τοῦ κόσμου θεόν, τοὺς δὲ μόνων ὦν ἐγέννησαν. ἀμήχανον δ' εὐσεβεῖσθαι τὸν ἀόρατον ὑπὸ τῶν εἰς τοὺς ἐμφανεῖς καὶ ἐγγύς ὄντας ἀσεβούντων.

PHILO

- 121 XXIV. Τοσαῦτα καὶ περὶ γονέων τιμῆς φιλοσοφήσας τέλος ἐπιτίθησι τῇ ἑτέρα καὶ θειοτέρα πεντάδι. τὴν δ' ἑτέραν ἀναγραφάμενος περιέχουσιν ἀπαγορεύσεις τῶν πρὸς ἀνθρώπους ἀπὸ μοιχείας ἄρχεται, μέγιστον ἀδικημάτων τοῦτ' εἶναι ὑπο-
- 122 λαβῶν. πρῶτον μὲν γὰρ πηγὴν ἔχει φιληδονίαν, ἣ καὶ τὰ σώματα θρύπτει τῶν ἐχόντων καὶ τοὺς τῆς ψυχῆς ἐκλύει τόνους καὶ τὰς οὐσίας διαφθείρει πάντα δίκην ἀσβέστου πυρὸς ὧν ἂν προσάψῃται καταφλέγουσα καὶ μηδὲν σῶον ἀπολείπουσα τῶν
- 123 κατὰ τὸν ἀνθρώπινον βίον. ἔπειτ' ἀναπείθει τὸν μοιχὸν οὐκ ἀδικεῖν μόνον ἀλλὰ καὶ διδάσκειν συναδικεῖν ἐν ἀκοινωνήτοις πράγμασι κοινωνίαν τιθέμενον· οἷστρου γὰρ [τοῦ]<sup>1</sup> κατασχόντος, ἀμήχανον λαβεῖν τέλος δι' ἑνὸς μόνου τὰς ὀρέξεις, ἀλλὰ δεῖ πάντως δύο κοινοπραγῆσαι, τὸν μὲν ὑψηλοῦ τὸν δὲ γνωρίμου τάξιν λαβόντα, πρὸς ἀκρασίας καὶ λαγνείας βεβαίωσιν, αἰσχίστων
- 124 κακῶν. οὐδὲ γὰρ τοῦτ' ἔνεστιν εἰπεῖν, ὡς τὸ σῶμα μόνον διαφθείρεται τῆς μοιχευομένης γυναικός, ἀλλ', εἰ δεῖ τἀληθὲς εἰπεῖν, ἣ ψυχὴ πρὸ τοῦ σώματος εἰς ἀλλοτρίωσιν ἐθίζεται διδασκομένη πάντα τρόπον ἀποστρέφεισθαι καὶ μισεῖν τὸν ἄνδρα.
- 125 καὶ ἦττον ἂν ἦν δεινόν, εἰ τὸ μῖσος ἐπεδείκνυτο ἐμφανές—τὰ γὰρ ἐν περιόπτῳ ῥᾶον φυλάξασθαι—νυνὶ δὲ δυσυπονόητον καὶ δυσθῆρατόν

<sup>1</sup> Or, as Mangey, read τούτου.

THE DECALOGUE, 120-125

they say, is the God or Maker of the world, they of those only whom they have begotten, and how can reverence be rendered to the invisible God by those who show irreverence to the gods who are near at hand and seen by the eye ?

XXIV. With these wise words on honouring 121 parents He closes the one set of five which is more concerned with the divine. In committing to writing the second set which contains the actions prohibited by our duty to fellow-men, He begins with adultery, holding this to be the greatest of crimes. For in the 122 first place it has its source in the love of pleasure which enervates the bodies of those who entertain it, relaxes the sinews of the soul and wastes away the means of subsistence, consuming like an unquenchable fire all that it touches and leaving nothing wholesome in human life. Secondly, it persuades the 123 adulterer not merely to do the wrong but to teach another to share the wrong by setting up a partnership in a situation where no true partnership is possible. For when the frenzy has got the mastery, the appetites cannot possibly gain their end through one agent only, but there must necessarily be two acting in common, one taking the position of the teacher, the other of the pupil, whose aim is to put on a firm footing the vilest of sins, licentiousness and lewdness.
We cannot even say that it is only the body of the 124 adulteress which is corrupted, but the real truth is that her soul rather than her body is habituated to estrangement from the husband, taught as it is to feel complete aversion and hatred for him.
And the matter would be less terrible if the hatred 125 were shown openly, since what is conspicuous is more easily guarded against, but in actual fact it easily

PHILO

- ἔστι, πανούργοις τέχναις συσκιαζόμενον καὶ τὴν ἐναντίαν ἔστιν ὅτε τοῦ φιλεῖν δόξαν ἐμποιοῦν
- 126 γοητείας τισὶ καὶ ἀπάταις. ἀναστάτους γε μὴν τρεῖς ἀποδείκνυσιν<sup>1</sup> οἴκους, τόν τε τοῦ παρασπονδουμένου ἀνδρός, ὃς τὰς ἐπὶ γάμοις εὐχὰς καὶ τὰς ἐπὶ γνησίοις παισὶν ἐλπίδας περικόπτεται, καὶ δύο δ' ἐτέρους τόν τε τοῦ μοιχοῦ καὶ τὸν τῆς γυναικός, καὶ γὰρ τούτων ἑκάτερος ὕβρεως καὶ ἀτιμίας καὶ τῶν μεγίστων ὄνειδῶν ἀναπίμπλαται.
- 127 κὰν πολυάνθρωποι μὲν τύχῳσιν αἱ συγγένειαι διὰ τὰς ἐπιγαμίας καὶ τὰς ἄλλων πρὸς ἄλλους ἐπιμιξίας, αἴψεται καὶ τῆς πόλεως ἀπάσης ἐν κύκλῳ
- 128 βαδίζον τὰδίκημα. παγχάλεπόν γε μὴν
- [202] | καὶ ὁ τῶν τέκνων ἐπαμφοτερισμός· μὴ γὰρ ἀγνευούσης γυναικός, ἀμφίδοξον καὶ ἄδηλον, τὰ ἀποκυόμενα τίνος ἔστι τῇ ἀληθείᾳ πατρός· εἶτα λαυθάνοντος τοῦ πράγματος, οἱ μοιχίδιοι τὴν τῶν γνησίων παρασπασάμενοι τάξιν ἄλλοτρίαν γενεὰν νοθεύουσι καὶ κλῆρον ὅσον τῷ δοκεῖν πατρῶον
- 129 οὐδὲν προσήκοντα διαδέξονται. καὶ ὁ μὲν μοιχὸς ἐφυβρίσας καὶ ἐναπερυγῶν τὸ πάθος, ἐπίληπτον σπορὰν σπείρας, ὅταν ἀποπλησθῇ τῆς ἐπιθυμίας, οἰχῆσεται καταλιπῶν, γέλωτα θέμενος τὴν τοῦ παρανομηθέντος ἄγνοιαν· ὁ δ' οἷα τυφλὸς μηδὲν τῶν ὑποικουρημένων ἐπιστάμενος ὡς οἰκειότατα ἔκγονα τὰ ἐκ τῶν πολεμιωτάτων θεραπεύειν
- 130 ἀναγκασθῆσεται. φανερόν δ' εἰ γένοιτο τὰδίκημα, κακοδαιμονέστατοι γένοιντ' ἂν οἱ μηδὲν ἡδικηκότες

<sup>1</sup> Cohn with some mss. ἀποδεικνύουσιν, but the ms. authority is almost as good for the singular, which seems better suited

THE DECALOGUE, 125-130

eludes suspicion and detection, shrouded by artful knavery and sometimes creating by deceptive wiles the opposite impression of affection. Indeed it makes 126 havoc of three families : of that of the husband who suffers from the breach of faith, stripped of the promise of his marriage-vows and his hopes of legitimate offspring, and of two others, those of the adulterer and the woman, for the infection of the outrage and dishonour and disgrace of the deepest kind extends to the family of both. And if their connexions include 127 a large number of persons through intermarriages and widespread associations, the wrong will travel all round and affect the whole State. Very 128 painful, too, is the uncertain status of the children, for if the wife is not chaste there will be doubt and dispute as to the real paternity of the offspring. Then if the fact is undetected, the fruit of the adultery usurp the position of the legitimate and form an alien and bastard brood and will ultimately succeed to the heritage of their putative father to which they have no right. And the adulterer having in 129 insolent triumph vented his passions and sown the seed of shame, his lust now sated, will leave the scene and go on his way mocking at the ignorance of the victim of his crime, who like a blind man knowing nothing of the covert intrigues of the past will be forced to cherish the children of his deadliest foe as his own flesh and blood. On the other hand, if 130 the wrong becomes known, the poor children who have done no wrong will be most unfortunate, unable to the context than the plural, which would presumably have ἀπάραι or τέχναι for its subject. The sequel refers to adultery in general rather than the deceptions which usually accompany it.

---

PHILO

- ἄθλιοι παῖδες, μηδετέρῳ γένει προσνεμηθῆναι δυνάμενοι, μήτε τῷ τοῦ γήμαντος μήτε τῷ τοῦ 131 μοιχοῦ. τοιαύτας συμφορὰς ἀπεργαζομένης τῆς ἐκνόμου μίξεως, εἰκότως στυγητὸν καὶ θεομίσητον πρᾶγμα, μοιχεία, πρῶτον ἀδικημάτων ἀνεγράφη.
- 132 XXV. Δεύτερον δὲ πρόσταγμα μὴ ἀνδροφονεῖν. ἀγελαστικὸν γὰρ καὶ σύννομον ζῶον τὸ ἡμερώτατον ἄνθρωπον ἢ φύσις γεννήσασα πρὸς ὁμόνοιαν καὶ κοινωνίαν ἐκάλεσε, λόγον δοῦσα συναγωγὸν εἰς ἁρμονίαν καὶ κρᾶσιν ἡθῶν. ὁ δὲ κτείνων τινὰ μὴ ἀγνοεῖτω νόμους φύσεως καὶ θεσμοὺς ἀνατρέπων
- 133 καλῶς καὶ συμφερόντως ἅπασι γραφέντας. ἴστω μέντοι καὶ ἱεροσυλίας ἔνοχος ὢν τὸ ἱερώτατον τῶν τοῦ θεοῦ κτημάτων σεσυληκῶς· τί γὰρ σεμνότερον ἢ ἀγιώτερον ἀνάθημα ἀνθρώπου; χρυσὸς μὲν καὶ ἄργυρος καὶ λίθοι πολυτελεῖς καὶ ὅσαι ἄλλαι τιμαλφέσταται ὕλαι κόσμος οἰκοδομημάτων ἐστίν,
- 134 ἄψυχος ἀψύχων· ἄνθρωπος δὲ, ζῶον ἄριστον κατὰ τὸ κρεῖττον τῶν ἐν αὐτῷ, τὴν ψυχὴν, συγγενέστατος τῷ καθαρωτάτῳ τῆς οὐσίας οὐρανῷ, ὡς δ' ὁ τῶν πλείστων λόγος, καὶ τῷ τοῦ κόσμου πατρί, τῶν ἐπὶ γῆς ἀπάντων οἰκειότατον ἀπεικόνισμα καὶ μίμημα τῆς αἰδίου καὶ εὐδαίμονος ἰδέας τὸν νοῦν λαβῶν.
- 135 XXVI. Τρίτον δ' ἐστὶ τῆς δευτέρας πεντάδος παράγγελμα μὴ κλέπτειν. ὁ γὰρ τοῖς ἀλλοτρίοις ἐπικεχηνῶς κοινὸς πόλεως ἐχθρὸς, βουλήσει μὲν τὰ πάντων δυνάμει δὲ τὰ τινῶν ὑφαιρούμενος, τῷ τὴν μὲν πλεονεξίαν ἐπὶ μήκιστον ἐκτείνεσθαι, τὸ

---

<sup>a</sup> Literally "blending of temperaments or characteristics." See note on Mos. ii. 256.

THE DECALOGUE, 130-135

to be classed with either family, either the husband's or the adulterer's. Such being the disasters wrought 131 by illicit intercourse, naturally the abominable and God-detested sin of adultery was placed first in the list of wrongdoing.

XXV. The second commandment is to do no 132 murder. For nature, who created man the most civilized of animals to be gregarious and sociable, has called him to shew fellowship and a spirit of partnership by endowing him with reason, the bond which leads to harmony and reciprocity of feeling.<sup>a</sup> Let him, then, who slays another know full well that he is subverting the laws and statutes of nature so excellently enacted for the well-being of all. Further, 133 let him understand that he is guilty of sacrilege, the robbery from its sanctuary of the most sacred of God's possessions. For what votive offering is more hallowed or more worthy of reverence than a man? Gold and silver and costly stones and other substances of highest price serve as ornaments to buildings which are as lifeless as the ornaments themselves. But man, the best of living creatures, through that 134 higher part of his being, namely, the soul, is most nearly akin to heaven, the purest thing in all that exists, and, as most admit, also to the Father of the world, possessing in his mind a closer likeness and copy than anything else on earth of the eternal and blessed Archetype.

XXVI. The third commandment in the second 135 five forbids stealing, for he who gapes after what belongs to others is the common enemy of the State, willing to rob all, but able only to filch from some, because, while his covetousness extends in-

PHILO

- δ' ἀσθενὲς ὑστερίζον εἰς βραχὺ στέλλεσθαι καὶ [203] μόνον | φθάνειν ἐπ' ὀλίγους. ὅσοι τοίνυν τῶν 136 κλεπτῶν ἰσχὺν προσέλαβον ὅλας συλῶσι πόλεις ἀλογοῦντες τιμωριῶν διὰ τὸ ἐπικυδέστεροι τῶν νόμων εἶναι δοκεῖν· οὗτοι δ' εἰσὶν οἱ ὀλιγαρχικοὶ τὰς φύσεις, οἱ τυραννίδων καὶ δυναστειῶν ἐπιθυμοῦντες, οἱ τὰς μεγάλας ἐργαζόμενοι κλοπὰς, σεμνοῖς ὀνόμασι τοῖς ἀρχῆς καὶ ἡγεμονίας ἐπι-137 κρύπτοντες ληστείαν τάληθές ἔργον. ἐκ πρώτης οὖν ἡλικίας ἀναδιδασκέσθω τις μηδὲν λάθρα τῶν ἀλλοτρίων ὑφαιρῆσθαι, κἂν βραχύτατον ἦ, διότι ἐγχρονίζον ἔθος φύσεως κραταιότερόν ἐστι καὶ τὰ μικρὰ μὴ κωλυόμενα φύεται καὶ ἐπιδίδωσι πρὸς μέγεθος συναυξανόμενα.
- 138 XXVII. Κλέπτειν δ' ἀπειπῶν ἐξῆς ψευδομαρτυρεῖν ἀπαγορεύει, πολλοῖς καὶ μεγάλοις καὶ πᾶσι χαλεποῖς τοὺς ψευδομάρτυρας ἐνόχους εἰδώς. τὸ μὲν γὰρ πρῶτον φθείρουσι τὴν σεμνὴν ἀλήθειαν, ἥς οὐκ ἔστιν ἐν βίῳ κτῆμα ἱερώτερον,<sup>1</sup> ἡλίου τρόπον φῶς τοῖς πράγμασι περιτιθείσης, ἵνα μηδὲν αὐτῶν 139 ἐπισκιάζηται. δεύτερον δὲ πρὸς τῷ ψεύδεσθαι καὶ τὰ πράγματα οἷα νυκτὶ καὶ σκότῳ βαθεῖ περι-ἀμπίσχοι καὶ συμπράττουσι μὲν τοῖς ἀμαρτάνοις, ἐπιτίθενται δὲ τοῖς ἀδικουμένοις, ἃ μὴτ' εἶδον μὴτ' ἤκουσαν μὴτ' ἴσασι παγίως εἰδέναι καὶ σφόδρα κατειληφέναι διαβεβαιούμενοι.
- 140 προσεξεργάζονται δὲ καὶ τρίτον παρανόμημα τῶν προτέρων ἀργαλέωτερον· ὅταν γὰρ σπάνις ἀποδείξεων ἢ διὰ λόγων ἢ διὰ γραμμάτων, ἐπὶ μάρ-

THE DECALOGUE, 135-140

definitely, his feebler capacity cannot keep pace with it but restricted to a small compass reaches only to a few. So all thieves who have acquired the strength 136 rob whole cities, careless of punishment because their high distinction seems to set them above the laws. These are oligarchically-minded persons, ambitious for despotism or domination, who perpetrate thefts on a great scale, disguising the real fact of robbery under the grand-sounding names of government and leadership. Let a man, then, learn from 137 his earliest years to filch nothing by stealth that belongs to another, however small it may be, because custom in the course of time is stronger than nature, and little things if not checked grow and thrive till they attain to great dimensions.

XXVII. Having denounced theft, he next pro- 138 ceeds to forbid false witness, knowing that false witnesses are guilty under many important heads, all of them of a grave kind. In the first place, they corrupt truth, the august, the treasure as sacred as anything that we possess in life, which like the sun pours light upon facts and events and allows none of them to be kept in the shade. Secondly, apart from 139 the falsehood, they veil the facts as it were in night and profound darkness, take part with the offenders and against those who are wronged, by affirming that they have sure knowledge and thorough apprehension of things which they have neither seen nor heard. And indeed they commit a 140 third transgression even more heinous than the first two. For when there is a lack of proofs, either verbal or written, disputants have resort to

---

<sup>1</sup> So R, other MSS. ιερώτατον: Cohn proposes as an alternative <κάλλιον>, ιερώτατον agreeing with φῶς.

PHILO

- τυρας καταφεύγουσιν οἱ τὰς ἀμφισβητήσεις ἔχοντες, ὧν τὰ ρήματα κανόνες εἰσὶ τοῖς δικασταῖς περὶ ὧν μέλλουσιν ἀποφαίνεσθαι· μόνοις γὰρ τούτοις ἐπανεχέειν ἀνάγκη, μηδενὸς ὄντος ἐτέρου τῶν εἰς ἔλεγχον· ἐξ οὗ συμβαίνει, τοὺς μὲν καταμαρτυρομένους ἀδικεῖσθαι νικᾶν δυναμένους, τοὺς δὲ προσέχοντας δικαστὰς ἀδίκους καὶ παρανόμους
- 141 ψήφους ἀντὶ νομίμων καὶ δικαίων γράφειν. τὸ μέντοι πανούργημα φθάνει καὶ πρὸς ἀσέβειαν· οὐ γὰρ ἀνωμότοις δικάζειν ἔθος, ἀλλὰ μετὰ φρικωδεστάτων ὄρκων, οὓς παραβαίνουσι πρὸ τῶν ἀπατωμένων οἱ φενακίζοντες, ἐπειδὴ τῶν μὲν τὸ σφάλμα οὐ κατὰ γνώμην, οἱ δ' ἐπιστήμη καταστρατηγοῦσι καὶ ἐκ προνοίας ἀμαρτάνοντες καὶ τοὺς κυρίου τῆς ψήφου συνεξαμαρτάνειν ἀναπείθοντες οὐκ εἰδότας ὃ δρῶσιν ἐπὶ τιμωρίᾳ τῶν
- [204] οὐδεμιᾶς ἀξίων κολάσεως. | διὰ μὲν δὴ ταυτὰ μοι δοκεῖ ψευδομαρτυρίαν ἀπειπεῖν.
- 142 XXVIII. Τελευταῖον δ' ἐπιθυμεῖν ἀπαγορεύει νεωτεροποιὸν καὶ ἐπίβουλον τὴν ἐπιθυμίαν εἰδώς. πάντα μὲν γὰρ τὰ ψυχῆς πάθη χαλεπά, κινουῦντα καὶ σείοντα αὐτὴν παρὰ φύσιν καὶ ὑγιαίνειν οὐκ ἐῶντα, χαλεπώτατον δ' ἐπιθυμία· διὸ τῶν μὲν ἄλλων ἕκαστον θύραθεν ἐπεισιὸν καὶ προσπίπτον <sup>1</sup> Perhaps read, as Cohn later, διότι. See note d.

<sup>a</sup> i.e. the jurymen.

<sup>b</sup> Perhaps understand the jurymen, but the analogy of § 91 points rather to "oaths."

<sup>c</sup> It will be seen that Philo extends the meaning of the word from covetousness of what is another's to desire in general, and this enables him to enter on a disquisition on the four passions of the Stoics. Driver notes that the Hebrew

THE DECALOGUE, 140-142

witnesses whose words are taken by the jurymen as standards in determining the verdicts they are about to give, since they are obliged to fall back on these alone if there is no other means of testing the truth. The result is that those against whom the testimony is given suffer injustice when they might have won their case, and the judges who listen to the testimony record unjust and lawless instead of just and lawful votes. In fact, the knavery of the action amounts to impiety, for it is the rule that jurymen must be put on their oaths and indeed oaths of the most terrific character which are broken not so much by the victims<sup>a</sup> as by the perpetrators of the deception, since the former do not err intentionally, while the latter with full knowledge set the oaths at nought.<sup>b</sup> They deliberately sin themselves and persuade those who have control of the voting to share their sin and, though they know not what they do, punish persons who deserve no chastisement. It was for these reasons, I believe, that He forbade false witness. 141

XXVIII. The last commandment is against covetousness or desire<sup>c</sup> which he knew to be a subversive and insidious enemy. For all the passions of the soul which stir and shake it out of its proper nature and do not let it continue in sound health are hard to deal with, but desire is hardest of all. And therefore<sup>d</sup> while each of the others seems to be involuntary, an 142 word also is general and only gets its bad sense from the context. For some analogies with Stoic phraseology see App. p. 612.

<sup>a</sup> The logic of "therefore" is not at all clear; neither, however, is Cohn's later substitute of "because." Perhaps however χάλεπά may be taken = "baneful" or "evil," and Philo is, as so often, insisting on the difference in guilt between voluntary and involuntary sins.

PHILO

- ἔξωθεν ἀκούσιον εἶναι δοκεῖ, μόνη δ' ἐπιθυμία τὴν ἀρχὴν ἐξ ἡμῶν αὐτῶν λαμβάνει καὶ ἔστιν ἐκούσιος.
- 143 τί δ' ἔστιν ὃ λέγω; τοῦ παρόντος καὶ νομισθέντος ἀγαθοῦ φαντασία διεγείρει καὶ διανίστησι τὴν ψυχὴν ἡρεμοῦσαν καὶ σφόδρα μετέωρον ἐξαίρει καθάπερ ὀφθαλμοὺς φῶς ἀναστράψαν· καλεῖται δὲ τουτὶ τὸ πάθος αὐτῆς ἡδονή.
- 144 τὸ δ' ἐναντίον ἀγαθῷ κακόν, ὅταν εἰσβιασάμενον<sup>1</sup> πληγὴν ἐπενέγκῃ καίριον, συννοίας καὶ κατηφείας εὐθύς αὐτὴν ἀναπίμπλησιν ἄκουσαν· ὄνομα δὲ
- 145 [καὶ] τούτῳ τῷ πάθει λύπη. ὅταν δὲ τὸ κακὸν μήπω μὲν εἰσωκισμένον θλίβῃ, μέλλῃ δ' ἀφικνεῖσθαι καὶ παρεντρεπίζηται, πτοίαν καὶ ἀγωνίαν, ἀποφράδας ἀγγέλους, προεκπέμπει δειματοῦντας· φόβος δὲ προσαγορεύεται τὸ πάθος.
- 146 ἐπειδὰν δὲ λαβῶν τις ἔννοιαν ἀγαθοῦ μὴ παρόντος ὀρέγεται τυχεῖν αὐτοῦ, πρὸς μήκιστον τὴν ψυχὴν ἐλαύνων<sup>2</sup> καὶ ἐπὶ πλείστον ἐκτείνων, ψαῦσαι τοῦ ποθομένου γλιχόμενος, ὥσπερ ἐπὶ τροχοῦ κατατείνεται, σπεύδων μὲν συλλαβεῖν, ἐφικνεῖσθαι δ' ἀδυνατῶν καὶ ταῦτὸν πεπονθῶς τοῖς τοὺς ἐξαναχωροῦντας διώκουσιν ἐλάττονι μὲν τάχει προθυμία δ' ἀνανταγωνίστῳ.
- 147 ὅμοιον δέ τι καὶ περὶ τὰς αἰσθήσεις ἔοικε συμβαίνειν· ὀφθαλμοί τε γὰρ πολλάκις ὄρατοῦ τινος πάνυ μακρὰν ἀφεστῶτος εἰς κατάληψιν ἔλθεῖν ἐπειγόμενοι, τείνοντες αὐτούς, εὖ μάλα καὶ πλέον τῆς δυνάμεως ἐνεχθέντες, ὠλισθον κατὰ κενοῦ περὶ τὴν ἀκριβῆ τοῦ ὑποκειμένου γινῶσιν σφαλέντες καὶ

<sup>1</sup> So Cohn by a later correction for ἐκβιασάμενον, in which the prefix seems very inappropriate. One ms. gives ἐμβ-. No

THE DECALOGUE, 142-147

extraneous visitation, an assault from outside, desire alone originates with ourselves and is voluntary.

What is it that I mean? The presenta- 143 tion to the mind of something which is actually with us and considered to be good, arouses and awakes the soul when at rest and like a light flashing upon the eyes raises it to a state of great elation. This sensation of the soul is called pleasure. And 144 when evil, the opposite of good, forces its way in and deals a home thrust to the soul, it at once fills it all against its will with depression and dejection. This sensation is called grief, or pain. When 145 the evil thing is not yet lodged inside nor pressing hard upon us but is on the point of arriving and is making its preparation, it sends in its van trepidation and distress, messengers of evil presage, to sound the alarm. This sensation is called fear. But 146

when a person conceives an idea of something good which is not present and is eager to get it, and propels his soul to the greatest distance and strains it to the greatest possible extent in his avidity to touch the desired object, he is, as it were, stretched upon a wheel, all anxiety to grasp the object but unable to reach so far and in the same plight as persons pursuing with invincible zeal, though with inferior speed, others who retreat before them. We 147 also find a similar phenomenon in the senses. The eyes are often eager to obtain apprehension of some very far off object. They strain themselves and carry on bravely and indeed beyond their strength, then hit upon a void and there slip, failing to get an accurate knowledge of the object in question, such verb is known to the dictionaries, but it has the analogy of ἐμβάλλω.<sup>2</sup> MSS. ἐλαύνει.

---

PHILO

προσέτι τὴν ὄψιν τῷ βιαίῳ καὶ συντόνῳ τῆς ἀτενοῦς προσβολῆς ἀσθενήσαντες ἀμαυροῦνται.<sup>1</sup> 148 καὶ θροῦ πάλιν ἀσαφοῦς ἐκ μακροῦ διαστήματος φερομένου, τὰ ὦτα ἀνεγερθέντα καὶ ἐπουρίσαντα ἴεται καὶ σπεύδει προσελθεῖν εἰ οἶόν τε ἐγγυτέρω, πόθῳ τοῦ τρανωθῆναι ταῖς ἀκοαῖς 149 τὸν ἦχον· ὁ δ'—ἔτι γὰρ ἀμαυρὸς ὡς ἔοικε προσπίπτει—οὐδὲν τῶν εἰς γνώσιν τηλαυγέστερον ἐπιδίδωσιν, ὡς ἔτι μᾶλλον τὸν ἀνήνυτον καὶ ἀ-διεξίτητον ἐπιτείνεσθαι τοῦ καταλαβεῖν ἡμερον, Ταντάλειον τιμωρίαν ἐπιφερούσης τῆς ἐπιθυμίας· ἐκεῖνός τε γὰρ ὦν ὀρεχθείη πάντων ὁπότε μέλλοι ψαύσειν, ἀπετύγχανεν, ὃ τε κρατηθεῖς ἐπιθυμία, [205] | διψῶν ἀεὶ τῶν ἀπόντων, οὐδέποτε πληροῦται περὶ 150 κενὴν ἰλυσπώμενος τὴν ὄρεξιν. ὥσπερ τε τὰ ἐρπηνώδη τῶν νοσημάτων, εἰ μὴ προανακρουσθεῖη τομαῖς ἢ καύσεσιν, ἐπιθέοντα σύμπασαν ἐν κύκλῳ καταλαμβάνει τὴν τοῦ σώματος κοινωνίαν οὐδὲν ἀπαθὲς μέρος ἐῶντα, οὕτως, εἰ μὴ λόγος ὁ κατὰ φιλοσοφίαν ἰατροῦ δίκην ἀγαθοῦ ρέουσας τὴν ἐπιθυμίαν ἐπίσχοι, πάντ' ἐξ ἀνάγκης τὰ τοῦ βίου πράγματα κινηθήσεται παρὰ φύσιν· οὐδὲν γὰρ ἔστιν ὑπεξηρημένον ὃ διαφεύγει τὸ πάθος, ἀλλ' ὅταν ἄδειαν λάβῃ καὶ ἐκεχειρίαν, ἐπινέμεται καὶ 151 σίνεται<sup>2</sup> πάντα διὰ πάντων. εὐήθες ἴσως μακρηγορεῖν ἔστι περὶ τῶν οὕτως ἐμφανῶν, ἃ τίς ἀνὴρ ἢ πόλις ἀγνοεῖ καθ' ἐκάστην οὐχ ἡμέραν μόνον ἀλλὰ καὶ ὥραν ὡς ἔπος εἰπεῖν ἔλεγχον ἐναργῆ παριστάντα; χρημάτων ἔρως ἢ γυναικὸς ἢ δόξης ἢ τινος ἄλλου τῶν ἡδονῆν ἀπεργαζομένων

<sup>1</sup> For text see App. p. 613.

<sup>2</sup> MSS. γίνεται.

THE DECALOGUE, 147-151

and furthermore they lose strength and their power of sight is dimmed by the intensity and violence of their steady gazing. And again when an in- 148 distinct noise is carried from a long distance the ears are roused and pressed forward at high speed<sup>a</sup> and are eager to go nearer if they could, in their longing to have the sound made clear to the hearing. The 149 noise however, whose impact evidently continues to be dull, does not shew any increase of clearness which might make it knowable, and so a still greater intensity is given to the ceaseless and indescribable longing for apprehension. For desire entails the punishment of Tantalus ; as he missed everything that he wished for just when he was about to touch it, so the person who is mastered by desire, ever thirsting for what is absent remains unsatisfied, fumbling around his baffled appetite. And just as 150 diseases of the creeping type, if not arrested in time by the knife or cautery, course round all that unites to make the body and leave no part uninjured, so unless philosophical reasoning, like a good physician, checks the stream of desire, all life's affairs will be necessarily distorted from what nature prescribes. For there is nothing so secreted that it escapes from passion, which when once it finds itself in security and freedom spreads like a flame and works universal destruction.

It may perhaps be foolish 151 to dilate at this length on facts so obvious, for what man or city does not know that they provide clear proof of their truth, not only every day but almost every hour? Consider the passion whether for money or a woman or glory or anything else that produces <sup>a</sup> For the use of ἐπrouπιζω (here intransitive) see note on De Ab. 20 and Mos. i. 283.

PHILO

ἀρά γε μικρῶν καὶ τῶν τυχόντων αἴτιος γίνεται 152 κακῶν; οὐ διὰ τοῦτον<sup>1</sup> συγγένειαι μὲν ἀλλοτριοῦνται τὴν φυσικὴν εὐνοίαν μεθαρμοζόμεναι πρὸς ἀνήκε-στον ἔχθραν, χῶραι δὲ μεγάλαι καὶ πολυάνθρωποι στάσεσιν ἐμφυλίοις ἐρημοῦνται, γῆ δὲ καὶ θάλαττα πληροῦται τῶν καινουργομένων αἰεὶ συμφορῶν 153 ναυμαχίαις<sup>2</sup> καὶ πεζαῖς στρατιαῖς; οἱ γὰρ Ἑλλήνων καὶ βαρβάρων πρὸς τε ἑαυτοὺς καὶ πρὸς ἀλλήλους τραγωδηθέντες πόλεμοι πάντες ἀπὸ μιᾶς πηγῆς ἐρρήσαν, ἐπιθυμίας ἢ χρημάτων ἢ δόξης ἢ ἡδονῆς· περὶ γὰρ ταῦτα κηραίνει τὸ τῶν ἀνθρώπων γένος.
 154 XXIX. Ἄλις μὲν δὴ τούτων. χρῆ δὲ μηδ' ἐκείνο ἀγνοεῖν, ὅτι οἱ δέκα λόγοι κεφάλαια νόμων εἰσὶ τῶν ἐν εἴδει παρ' ὄλην τὴν νομοθεσίαν ἐν ταῖς 155 ἱεραῖς βίβλοις ἀναγραφέντων. ὁ μὲν πρῶτος τῶν περὶ μοναρχίας· οὗτοι δὲ δηλοῦσιν, ὅτι ἐν αἴτιον τοῦ κόσμου καὶ ἡγεμῶν καὶ βασιλεὺς εἷς ὁ ἡνιοχῶν καὶ κυβερνῶν τὰ ὅλα σωτηρίως, ὀλιγαρχίαν ἢ ὀχλοκρατίαν, ἐπιβούλους πολιτείας φυομένας παρ' ἀνθρώποις τοῖς κακίστοις ἐξ ἀταξίας καὶ πλεον-εξίας, ἐξεληλακῶς ἐκ τοῦ καθαρωτάτου τῆς 156 οὐσίας, οὐρανοῦ. ὁ δὲ δεῦτερος κεφάλαιόν ἐστι πάντων, ὅσα περὶ χειροκμήτων ἐνομοθετεῖτο, ἀγάλματα καὶ ξόανα καὶ συνόλως ἀφιδρύματα, ὧν γραφικὴ καὶ πλαστικὴ βλαβεραὶ δημιουργοί, κατασκευάζειν οὐκ ἐὼν οὐδ' ὅσα μύθων πλάσματα προσίεσθαι, θεογαμίαν καὶ θεο-[206] γονίαν καὶ τὰς ἀμφοτέραις ἐπομένας | ἀμυθήτους

<sup>1</sup> MSS. τοῦτο.

<sup>2</sup> Cohn (in note to Treitel's translation) ναυμαχικαῖς. But,

THE DECALOGUE, 151-156

pleasure : are the evils which it causes small or casual? Is it not the cause why kinsmen become 152 estranged and change their natural goodwill to deadly hatred, why great and populous countries are desolated by internal factions, and land and sea are filled with ever-fresh calamities wrought by battles on sea and campaigns on land? For all the 153 wars of Greeks and barbarians between themselves or against each other, so familiar to the tragic stage, are sprung from one source, desire, the desire for money or glory or pleasure. These it is that bring disaster to the human race.

XXIX. Enough on this subject, but also we must 154 not forget that the Ten Covenants are summaries of the special laws which are recorded in the Sacred Books and run through the whole of the legislation. The first summarizes the laws on God's monarchical 155 rule. These laws declare that there is one First Cause of the World, one Ruler and King, Who guides the chariot and steers the bark of the universe in safety, and has expelled from the purest part of all that exists, namely heaven, those mischievous forms of government, oligarchy and mob-rule, which arise among the vilest of men, produced by disorder and covetousness.

The second sums 156 up all the enactments made concerning the works of men's hands. It forbids the making of images or wooden busts and idols in general produced by the baneful craftsmanship of painting and sculpture, and also the acceptance of fabulous legends about the marriages and pedigrees of deities and the numberless and very grave scandals associated with both even if the word exists, which seems doubtful, I see no reason for the change.

---

PHILO

- 157 καὶ ἀργαλεωτάτας κήρας. τῷ δὲ τρίτῳ ὑποστέλλει τά τε ἀνώμοτα πάντα καὶ ἐφ' οἷς ὀμνύναι δεῖ καὶ ὁπότε καὶ ὅπου χρή καὶ τίνα καὶ πῶς ἔχοντα κατὰ τε ψυχὴν καὶ σῶμα καὶ ὅσα ἐπ' εὐόρκους καὶ τούναντίον ἐχρήσθη.
- 158 XXX. Τὸ δὲ τέταρτον, τὸ περὶ τῆς ἑβδομάδος, οὐδὲν ἄλλ' ἢ κεφάλαιον νομιστέον ἑορτῶν καὶ τῶν διατεταγμένων εἰς ἐκάστην ἀγνευτικῶν, περιρραντηρίων τε αἰσιῶν καὶ ἐπηκόων εὐχῶν καὶ θυσιῶν
- 159 τελείων, αἷς ἢ λατρεία ἐγένετο. ἑβδόμην δὲ λέγω καὶ τὴν σὺν ἐξάδι τῇ γονιμωτάτῃ καὶ τὴν ἄνευ ἐξάδος, ἐπιπροσθούσαν αὐτῇ, μονάδι ὁμοιουμένην, ὧν ἑκατέρη τὰς ἑορτὰς παραριθμεῖ· μονάδι μὲν τὴν τε ἱερομηνίαν, ἣν σάλπιγγιν ὑποσημαίνουσι, καὶ νηστείαν, ἐν ἣ σιτίων καὶ ποτῶν ἀποχὴ διεύρηται, καὶ ἣν Ἑβραῖοι πατρίῳ γλώττῃ Πάσχα προσαγορεύουσιν, ἐν ἣ θύουσι πανδημεῖ αὐτῶν<sup>1</sup> ἕκαστος τοὺς ἱερεῖς αὐτῶν οὐκ ἀναμένοντες, ἱερωσύνην τοῦ νόμου χαρισαμένου τῷ ἔθνει παντὶ

<sup>1</sup> Cohn suggests αὐτὸς on the ground that the stress lies on each man sacrificing himself.

<sup>a</sup> Or "the number seven." See App. p. 613.

<sup>b</sup> Six is the most creative of numbers, because its factors 2 and 3 represent the odd (or male) and the even (or female) principle. See De Op. 13.

<sup>c</sup> The seventh (or seven) which does not include six, seems to mean that in view of the mystical identity of seven and one (see on § 102) a feast which occupies one day only may be regarded as coming under the law of the seventh day.

<sup>d</sup> Or perhaps "supersedes it." The verb, derived from the adverb ἐπίπροσθεν, seems to be used of a thing which gets in front of something else and obscures it (Spec. Leg. iv. 52). So here the idea may be that the unit or monad does not need six to make it equivalent to seven.

THE DECALOGUE, 157-159

of these. Under the third he includes 157 directions as to all the cases where swearing is for-bidden and as to the time, place, matters, persons, state of soul and body which justify the taking of an oath, and all pronouncements concerning those who swear truthfully or the reverse.

XXX. The fourth, which treats of the seventh day,<sup>a</sup> 158 must be regarded as nothing less than a gathering under one head of the feasts and the purifications ordained for each feast, the proper lustrations and the acceptable prayers and flawless sacrifices with which the ritual was carried out. By the seventh I mean 159 both the seventh which includes the most creative of numbers, six,<sup>b</sup> and that which does not include it<sup>c</sup> but takes precedence of it<sup>d</sup> and resembles the unit.
Both these are employed by him in reckoning the feast-times.<sup>e</sup> The unit is taken in the case of the holy-month-day<sup>f</sup> which they announce with trumpets, and the fast-day on which abstinence from food and drink is commanded, and the day called by the Hebrews in their own tongue the Pasch on which the whole people sacrifice, every member of them, without waiting for their priests, because the law has granted to the whole nation for <sup>a</sup> The seven feasts which follow are enumerated again in Spec. Leg. ii. 41 and described at length in the following sections. They appear there, however, in the order in which they occur in the year and are not classified according to the number of days observed. Also there are three which do not appear in this list, the Sabbath itself, the feast of "Every Day" and the monthly New Moon. The first of these is of course implied here, and the omission of the second is not unnatural, but it is curious that the New Moon should be left out. Has τὴν νομηνίαν fallen out before τὴν τε ἱερομηνίαν?

<sup>f</sup> Or opening of the holy month, see App. pp. 613-614.

PHILO

- κατὰ<sup>1</sup> μίαν ἡμέραν ἐξαίρετον ἀνὰ πᾶν ἔτος εἰς 160 αὐτουργίαν θυσιῶν· καὶ ἔτι τὴν ἐν ἣ προσφέρεται δράγμα χαριστήριον εὐγονίας καὶ φορᾶς τῆς πε-διάδος δι' ἀσταχύων πληρώσεως· καὶ τὴν ἀπὸ ταύ-τῆς καταριθμουμένην ἑπτὰ ἑβδομάσι πεντηκοστὴν ἡμέραν, ἐν ἣ προσάγειν ἄρτους ἔθος, οἳ καλοῦνται πρωτογεννημάτων ἐτύμως, ἐπειδὴ περ εἰσὶν ἀπαρχὴ γεννημάτων καὶ καρπῶν ἡμέρου τροφῆς, ἣν ἀνθρώπῳ τῷ ἡμερωτάτῳ ζῶων ἀπένειμεν ὁ θεός.
 161 ἑβδομάδι δὲ τὰς μεγίστας καὶ πολυημέρους ἑορτὰς προσέειμε κατὰ τὰς τοῦ ἔτους ἰσημερίας, ἑαρινὴν καὶ μετοπωρινήν, δύο δυσὶν ἀναθείς, ἑκατέραν ἐφ' ἡμέρας ἑπτὰ, τὴν μὲν κατὰ τὸ ἕαρ ἐπὶ τελειώσει τῶν σπειρομένων, τὴν δὲ μετοπωρινὴν ἐπὶ συγκομιδῇ καρπῶν ἀπάντων, οὓς καὶ τὰ δένδρα ἤνεγκεν· ἑπτὰ δ' ἡμέραι ἀπενεμήθησαν εἰκότως ἑπτὰ μῆσι τῆς ἰσημερίας ἑκατέρας, ἵνα μὴν ἕκαστος λαμβάνῃ γέρας ἐξαίρετον μίαν ἱερὰν ἡμέραν· ἑορτώδη πρὸς εὐθυμίαν καὶ ἀπόλαυσιν 162 ἑκεχειρίας. ἐμφέρονται δὲ καὶ ἄλλοι νόμοι πάνυ καλῶς τεθέντες, εἰς ἡμερότητα καὶ κοινωνίαν ἀτυφίαν τε καὶ ἰσότητα προκαλούμενοι· τούτων οἱ μὲν εἰσι περὶ τοῦ λεγομένου ἑβδοματικοῦ,<sup>2</sup> καθ' [207] ὃ διείρηται πᾶσαν ἀργὴν | τὴν χώραν ἕαν μῆτε σπεύροντας μῆτε ἀρουντας μῆτε δένδρα διακαθ-αίροντας ἢ τέμνοντας ἢ ὅσ' ἄλλα τῶν κατὰ γεωργίαν 163 ἐπιτελοῦντας· ἕξ γὰρ ἐνιαυτοῖς τὴν τε πεδιάδα

<sup>1</sup> MSS. καί.

<sup>2</sup> Perhaps, as Mangey suggests, ἔτους (or ἐνιαυτοῦ) has fallen out. Cf. Josephus, Ant. xi. 8. 6 τὸ ἑβδοματικὸν ἔτος . . . οὐδὲ γὰρ αὐτοὺς σπεύρειν ἐν αὐτῷ. But why add λεγομένου? It sug-

THE DECALOGUE, 159-163

one special day in every year the right of priesthood and of performing the sacrifices themselves. Also the day on which a sheaf is brought as a 160 thanksgiving for fertility and for the produce of the lowlands as shown in the full corn in the ear ; then by reckoning seven sevens after this the fiftieth day, when it is the custom to bring loaves the nature of which is properly described by their title of " loaves of the first-products," as they are the sample of the crops and fruits produced by civilized cultivation which God has assigned for his nourishment to man, the most civilized of living things. To seven he gives 161 the chief feasts prolonged for many days, two feasts,<sup>a</sup> that is, for the two equinoxes, each lasting for seven days, the first in the spring to celebrate the ripeness of the sown crops, the second in the autumn for the ingathering of all the tree-fruits ; also seven days were naturally assigned to the seven months of each equinox,<sup>b</sup> so that each month may have, as a special privilege, one festal day consecrated to cheerfulness and enjoyment of leisure. Other laws, too, come 162 under the same head, admirable enactments exhorting men to gentleness and fellowship and simplicity and equality. Some of them deal with the hebdomadal year, as it is called, in which the land is ordered to be left entirely idle without any sowing or ploughing or purging or pruning of trees or any other operation of husbandry. For when both the lowlands and 163 gests rather that the simple τὸ ἐβδ. had become a recognized phrase for the sabbatical year.

<sup>a</sup> i.e. Unleavened Bread and Tabernacles, but the latter had eight days. See Spec. Leg. ii. 211.

<sup>b</sup> According to the ordinary inclusive reckoning each equinox occurs in the 7th month after the preceding.

---

PHILO

- καὶ τὴν ὄρεινὴν εἰς καρπῶν γένεσιν καὶ δασμῶν ἐτήσιον φορὰν πονηθείσας ἀνέσεως ἠξίωσε τοῦ διαπνεῦσαι χάριν καὶ ἀπελευθεριάσαι χρησαμένας<sup>1</sup>
- 164 ἀνεπικελεύστω τῇ φύσει. ἕτεροι δ' εἰσὶ περὶ τοῦ πεντηκοστοῦ ἔτους, ἐν ᾧ τὰ τε λεχθέντα ἀρτίως ἐπιτελεῖται καὶ—τὸ ἀναγκαιότατον—τῶν κληρουχῶν ἀποκατάστασις εἰς τοὺς ἐξ ἀρχῆς λαχόντας οἴκους, πρᾶγμα φιλανθρωπίας καὶ δικαιοσύνης μεστόν.
- 165 XXXI. Τὸ δὲ πέμπτον, τὸ περὶ γονέων τιμῆς, πολλοὺς καὶ ἀναγκαίους νόμους ὑπαινίττεται, τοὺς ἐπὶ πρεσβύταις καὶ νέοις ἀναγραφέντας, τοὺς ἐπ' ἄρχουσι καὶ ὑπηκόοις, τοὺς ἐπ' εὐεργέταις καὶ εὖ πεπονθόσι, τοὺς ἐπὶ δούλοις καὶ δεσπόταις.
- 166 γονεῖς μὲν γὰρ ἐν τῇ κρείττονι τῶν εἰρημένων εἰσὶ τάξει, ἐν ἣ ἡ πρεσβύτεροι, ἡγεμόνες, εὐεργέται, δεσπότες, παῖδες δὲ ἐν τῇ καταδεεστέρα, ἐν ἣ
- 167 νεώτεροι, ὑπήκοοι, εὖ πεπονθότες, δούλοι. πολλὰ δὲ καὶ ἄλλα προστέτακται, νέοις μὲν εἰς ἀποδοχὴν γήρωσ, πρεσβύταις δ' εἰς ἐπιμέλειαν νεότητος, καὶ ὑπηκόοις μὲν εἰς πειθαρχίαν ἡγεμόνων, ἡγεμόσι δ' εἰς ὠφέλειαν τῶν ἀρχομένων, καὶ εὖ μὲν πεπονθόσιν εἰς χαρίτων ἀμοιβάς, ἄρξασιν δὲ δωρεῶν εἰς τὸ μὴ ζητεῖν καθάπερ ἐν δανείοις ἀπόδοσιν, καὶ θεράπουσι μὲν εἰς ὑπηρεσίαν φιλοδέσποτον, δεσπότες δ' εἰς ἡπιότητα καὶ πραότητα, δι' ὧν ἐξισοῦται τὸ ἄνισον.
- 168 XXXII. Καὶ ἡ μὲν προτέρα πεντὰς ἐν τούτοις περατοῦται<sup>2</sup> κεφαλαιώδη τύπον περιέχουσα, τῶν δ' ἐν εἴδει νόμων οὐκ ὀλίγος ἀριθμὸς. τῆς δ' ἑτέρας πρῶτόν ἐστι κεφάλαιον τὸ κατὰ μοιχῶν, ᾧ ὑπο<sup>1</sup> MSS. χρησάμενος.

<sup>2</sup> MSS. περαιούται.

THE DECALOGUE, 163-168

the uplands have been worked for six years to bring forth fruits and pay their annual tribute, he thought well to give them a rest to serve as a breathing-space in which they might enjoy the freedom of undirected nature. And there are other laws about the fiftieth 164 year which is marked not only by the course of action just related, but also by the restoration of inheritance to the families which originally possessed them, a very necessary procedure abounding in humanity and justice.

XXXI. In the fifth commandment on honouring 165 parents we have a suggestion of many necessary laws drawn up to deal with the relations of old to young, rulers to subjects, benefactors to benefited, slaves to masters. For parents belong to the superior class 166 of the above-mentioned pairs, that which comprises seniors, rulers, benefactors and masters, while children occupy the lower position with juniors, subjects, receivers of benefits and slaves. And there are many 167 other instructions given, to the young on courtesy to the old, to the old on taking care of the young, to subjects on obeying their rulers, to rulers on promoting the welfare of their subjects, to recipients of benefits on requiting them with gratitude, to those who have given of their own initiative on not seeking to get repayment as though it were a debt, to servants on rendering an affectionate loyalty to their masters, to masters on showing the gentleness and kindness by which inequality is equalized.

XXXII. The first set having each of them the form 168 of a summary contains these five and no more, while the number of the special laws is considerable. In the other set the first head is that against adultery,

PHILO

- τέτακται πλείστα διατάγματα, τὸ κατὰ φθορέων, τὸ κατὰ παιδεραστῶν, τὸ κατὰ τῶν λαγνίστερον βιούντων ὀμλίαις τε καὶ μίξεσιν ἐκνόμοις καὶ 169 ἀκολάστοις χρωμένων. τὰς δὲ ἰδέας ἀναγέγραφεν [208] οὐχ ὑπὲρ τοῦ μνηῦσαι τὸ | πολύχουν καὶ πολύτροπον τῆς ἀκρασίας, ἀλλ' ὑπὲρ τοῦ τοὺς ἀσχημόνως ζῶντας ἐμφανέστατα δυσωπεῖν ἐπαντλοῦντα<sup>1</sup> τοῖς ὡσὶν αὐτῶν ἀθρόα ὀνειδίη, δι' ὧν ἐρυθριάσουσι.
- 170 δεῦτερον δὲ κεφάλαιον ἢ τοῦ μὴ ἀνδροφονεῖν ἀπαγόρευσις, ὑφ' ἣν εἰσι πάντες οἱ περὶ βιαίων, ὕβρεως, αἰκίας, τραυμάτων, πηρώσεως ἀναγκαῖοι νόμοι καὶ σφόδρα κοινωφελεῖς.
- 171 τρίτον δὲ τὸ περὶ τοῦ μὴ κλέπτειν, ᾧ ὑποτέτακται τὰ ἐπὶ χρεωκοπίας ὀρισθέντα καὶ ἐξάρνοις παρακαταθηκῶν καὶ ἀκοινωνήτῳ κοινωνίᾳ καὶ ἀναισχύντοις ἀρπαγαῖς καὶ συνόλως πλεονεξίαις, ὑφ' ὧν πείθονται τινες φανερώς ἢ λάθρα τὰλλότρια
- 172 νοσφίζεσθαι. τέταρτον δὲ τὸ περὶ τοῦ μὴ ψευδομαρτυρεῖν, ᾧ πολλὰ ἐμφέρεται, τὸ μὴ ἀπατᾶν, τὸ μὴ συκοφαντεῖν, τὸ μὴ τοῖς ἐξαμαρτάνουσι συμπράττειν, τὸ μὴ ποιεῖσθαι προκάλυμμα πίστιν ἀπιστίας, ἐφ' οἷς ἅπασιν νόμοι προσήκοντες
- 173 ἐτέθησαν. πέμπτον δὲ τὸ ἀνεῖργον τὴν τῶν ἀδικημάτων πηγὴν, ἐπιθυμίαν, ἀφ' ἧς ρέουσιν αἱ παρανομώταται πράξεις, ἴδιαι καὶ κοιναί, μικραὶ καὶ μεγάλαι, ἱεραὶ<sup>2</sup> καὶ βέβηλοι, περὶ τε σώματα

<sup>1</sup> So Cohn for ms. ἐπαντλοῦντας. But strict grammar requires ἐπαντλῶν.

<sup>2</sup> Mangey corrected to ἀνίερα (ἀνίεροι?), "neque sane actiones ἱεραὶ possunt ab impuro fonte cupiditatis profluere." But an antithesis is clearly required and the deed may remain "sacred" though done from an impure motive.

<sup>a</sup> I understand this to refer to cases where a man repays a

THE DECALOGUE, 168-173

under which come many enactments against seducers and pederasty, against dissolute living and indulgence in lawless and licentious forms of intercourse. The 169 characteristics of these he has described, not to show the multiform varieties which incontinence assumes, but to bring to shame in the most open way those who live a disreputable life by pouring into their ears a flood of reproaches calculated to make them blush.

The second head forbids murder, and 170 under it come the laws, all of them indispensable and of great public utility, about violence, insult, outrage, wounding and mutilation.

The third is 171 that against stealing under which are included the decrees made against defaulting debtors, repudiations of deposits, partnerships which are not true to their name, shameless robberies and in general covetous feelings which urge men openly or secretly to appropriate the possessions of others.

The 172 fourth against bearing false witness embraces many prohibitions. It forbids deceit, false accusation, co-operation with evil-doers and using honesty as a screen for dishonesty,<sup>a</sup> all of which have been the subjects of appropriate laws.

The fifth blocks that fount of injustice, desire, from 173 which flow the most iniquitous actions, public and private, small and great, dealing with things sacred or things profane, affecting bodies and souls and what small sum or returns a small deposit in order to induce the other party to entrust him with something greater which he can embezzle. Philo has referred to this form of dishonesty in De Cher. 14 and De-Plant. 101. One would expect it to come under the head of stealing, but Philo notes it in Spec. Leg. iv. 67 under the ninth commandment. Possibly, however, it may refer more generally to the false assumption of a truthful air.

PHILO

- καὶ ψυχὰς καὶ τὰ λεγόμενα ἔκτός· διαφεύγει γὰρ οὐδέν, ὡς καὶ πρότερον ἐλέχθη, τὴν ἐπιθυμίαν, ἀλλ' οἷα φλόξ ἐν ὕλῃ νέμεται δαπανῶσα πάντα
- 174 καὶ φθείρουσα. πολλὰ δὲ καὶ τῶν ὑποπιπτόντων αὐτῇ διατέτακται πρὸς τε νουθεσίας ἐπανόρθωσιν ἐνδεχομένων καὶ πρὸς κόλασιν ἀφηνιαστῶν ὅλον τὸν βίον ἐνδεδωκότων τῷ πάθει.
- 175 XXXIII. Τοσαῦτα καὶ περὶ τῆς δευτέρας πεντάδος ἀποχρώντως λέλεκται πρὸς ἐκπλήρωσιν τῶν δέκα λογίων, ἅπερ ἱεροπρεπῶς ἔχρησεν αὐτὸς ὁ θεός. ἦν γὰρ ἀρμόττον αὐτοῦ τῇ φύσει, κεφάλαια μὲν τῶν ἐν εἴδει νόμων αὐτοπροσώπως θεσπίσαι, νόμους δὲ τοὺς ἐν τῷ μέρει διὰ τοῦ τελειοτάτου τῶν προφητῶν, ὃν ἐπικρίνας ἀριστίνδην καὶ ἀναπλήσας ἐνθέου πνεύματος ἐρμηνέα τῶν χρησιμωδουμένων εἴλετο.
- 176 Μετὰ δὲ ταῦτα λέγωμεν τὴν αἰτίαν, δι' ἣν τοὺς δέκα λόγους ἢ νόμους ἀπεφήνατο ψιλαῖς προστάξεσι καὶ ἀπαγορεύσεσι κατὰ τῶν παραβησομένων, ὡς ἔθος νομοθέταις, μηδὲν ὀρίσας ἐπιτίμιον· θεὸς ἦν, εὐθύς δὲ κύριος ἀγαθός, μόνων ἀγαθῶν αἴτιος,
- 177 κακοῦ δ' οὐδενός. οἰκειότατον οὖν ὑπολαβὼν αὐτοῦ τῇ φύσει τὰ σωτήρια κελεύειν ἀμυγῇ καὶ ἀμέτοχα
- [209] τιμωρίας, ἵνα μὴ πως | φόβῳ τις ἄφρονι συμβούλῳ χρησάμενος ἄκων ἀλλ' ἔμφρονι λογισμῷ καθ' ἐκούσιον γνώμην αἰρήται τὰ βέλτιστα, μετὰ

<sup>a</sup> Or "fuel."

<sup>b</sup> I do not think that Treitel and Mangey bring out the full sense of this. The essential characteristic of God as θεός is goodness, cf. e.g. Spec. Leg. i. 307. It is in His other aspect of κύριος that He gives the commandments, and is indeed the κολαστικὴ δύναμις, but the goodness of θεός is so are called external things. For nothing escapes desire, and as I have said before, like a flame in the forest,<sup>a</sup> it spreads abroad and consumes and destroys everything. And there are many ordinances which 174 come under this head intended for the admonition of those who are capable of reformation and the punishment of the rebellious who have made a life-long surrender to passion.

THE DECALOGUE, 173-177

XXXIII. This is all that need be said regarding 175 the second five to complete our account of the ten oracles which God gave forth Himself as well befitted His holiness. For it was in accordance with His nature that the pronouncements in which the special laws were summed up should be given by Him in His own person, but the particular laws by the mouth of the most perfect of the prophets whom He selected for his merits and having filled him with the divine spirit, chose him to be the interpreter of His sacred utterances.

Next let us pass on to give the reason why He ex- 176 pressed the ten words or laws in the form of simple commands or prohibitions without laying down any penalty, as is the way of legislators, against future transgressors. He was God, and it follows at once that as Lord<sup>b</sup> He was good, the cause of good only and of nothing ill. So then He judged that it was 177 most in accordance with His being to issue His saving commandments free from any admixture of punishment, that men might choose the best, not involuntarily, but of deliberate purpose, not taking senseless fear but the good sense of reason for their counsellor.

far extended to κύριος that the execution of punishment, and indeed here the sentencing, is entrusted to subordinates. For a similar thought to this cf. De Fuga 66.

PHILO

κολάσεως οὐκ ἠξίωσε θεσπίζειν, οὐκ ἀουλίαν τοῖς ἀδικοπραγοῦσι διδούς, ἀλλ' εἰδὼς τὴν παρέδρον αὐτῷ δίκην καὶ τῶν ἀνθρωπίνων ἔφορον πραγμάτων οὐκ ἠρεμήσουσιν ἄτε φύσει μισοπόνηρον καὶ ὥσπερ τι συγγενὲς ἔργον ἐκδεξομένην τὴν κατὰ 178 τῶν ἁμαρτανόντων ἄμυναν. ἐμπρεπὲς γὰρ ὑπερέταις μὲν καὶ ὑπάρχοις θεοῦ καθάπερ τοῖς πολέμου στρατηγοῖς ἐπὶ λιποτάκταις οἱ λείπουσι τὴν τοῦ δικαίου τάξιν ἀμυντηρίοις χρῆσθαι, τῷ δὲ μεγάλῳ βασιλεῖ τὴν κοινὴν ἀσφάλειαν ἐπιγεγράφθαι τοῦ παντός, εἰρηνοφυλακοῦντι καὶ τὰ τῆς εἰρήνης ἀγαθὰ πάντα τοῖς πανταχοῦ πᾶσιν αἰεὶ πλουσίως καὶ ἀφθόνως χορηγοῦντι· τῷ γὰρ ὄντι ὁ μὲν θεὸς πρῦτανις εἰρήνης, οἱ δ' ὑποδιάκονοι πολέμων ἡγεμόνες εἰσίν.

THE DECALOGUE, 177-178

He therefore thought right not to couple punishment with His utterances, though He did not thereby grant immunity to evil-doers, but knew that justice His assessor, the surveyor of human affairs, in virtue of her inborn hatred of evil, will not rest, but take upon herself as her congenital task the punishment of sinners. For it befits the servants and lieutenants of 178 God, that like generals in war-time they should bring vengeance to bear upon deserters who leave the ranks of justice. But it befits the Great King that the general safety of the universe should be ascribed to Him, that He should be the guardian of peace and supply richly and abundantly the good things of peace, all of them to all persons in every place and at every time. For indeed God is the Prince of Peace while His subalterns are the leaders in war.

THE SPECIAL LAWS
(DE SPECIALIBUS LEGIBUS)

INTRODUCTION TO DE SPECIALIBUS LEGIBUS, I

This treatise opens with a discussion of circumcision and its hygienic value (1-7), followed by its allegorical interpretation as signifying the excision of voluptuousness and conceit (8-11). The treatment of the First Commandment which follows (12-20) is much on the lines of that in De Dec., as also is that of the Second (21-31) with the addition that it interprets "idols" symbolically also, as representing the vain things, such as wealth, which humanity worships.

In 32-35 the proof of God's existence, and in 36-50 the value of meditation on the Divine nature, inscrutable though it is, are set forth. While proselytes are to be welcomed, apostates must be put to death without mercy, as in the story of Phinehas (51-57). The prohibition of divination and like practices, for which the prophetic gift is the divinely-assigned substitute, concludes what he has to say about the laws which inculcate a proper conception of God (58-65). The rest of the treatise down to 298 is concerned with regulations of worship.

These begin with the Temple itself; the reasons that there is but one (66-70), a general description of it (71-75), its revenues (76-78); then the priests and Levites, the bodily qualifications required of them (79-81), their dress (82-83), and that of the high priest with the spiritual lessons symbolized by it (84-97), their abstinence from intoxicants while officiating (98-100), rules about their marriage, including some special rules applying only to the high priest (101-111), restrictions as to contact with dead bodies (112-116), and use of the sacrificial meats (117-130).

The revenues of the priests consist partly of tithes, including the ransom of the first-born (131-144), and the portions of the sacrifices allotted to them (145-155), similarly the revenues of the Levites or temple-attendants include the tithes as well as their forty-eight cities (156-161).

The animals allowed for sacrifices are doves, pigeons, sheep, goats, and oxen, all of which must be flawless (162-167). The various offerings follow as prescribed, daily or on the Sabbath (168-176), on the new moons (177-179), on the other feasts (180-189). There is also required on each occasion a he-goat as a sin-offering (190-193). These sacrifices may be classified as (a) whole-burnt-offerings, (b) 'preservation' (or "peace") offerings, (c) sin-offerings

THE SPECIAL LAWS, I

(194-197). The first class, whose motive is the honouring of God, is described in detail with full explanation of its symbolism (198-211). So, too, the second, which is a prayer for human betterment, with some reflections on the significance of the parts of the victim (212-223), and on a subdivision of them called "praise-offering" (224-225). The third, the sin-offering, which asks for pardon of the past, varies with the class of person offering it and whether the sin is voluntary or involuntary (226-246). Finally, we have an account of the special case of the Nazirite or "great" vow in which the offering of the Self partakes of the nature of all the three described above (247-254). In all these the offering has been given by laymen, but the priests also must make their oblation of fine flour (255-256).

What is required of the worshipper himself? Purity of soul (257-260), also of the body, but the method used of sprinkling with hyssop dipped in water poured on the ashes of a heifer is really a symbol of soul-purification (261-272). The same is shown by the superiority assigned to the altar of incense as against that on which animals are immolated (273-279), and by the prohibition of bringing the harlot's hire into the temple (280-284), and the high qualities required in the altar of the worshipper's soul are shown by the fire maintained on the altar (285-288), and the order that salt should always and honey and leaven never be used in the oblation (289-295). The next point, that the lamp on the sacred candlestick is to be kept alight all night as a thank-offering for the blessings of sleep seems somewhat irrelevant (296-298).

The spiritual lessons given above are all conveyed in the form of symbolical ritual. We pass on to the exhortations to virtue given in Deuteronomy (299-318). This leads him on to ibid. xxiii. 18, which he understands to be directed against "mysteries" as opposed to open preaching of righteousness (319-323), and then to ibid. 1-3, where various classes are excluded from the congregation (324-326).

A long allegory concludes the treatise. The five classes which he finds there symbolized are (a) the deniers of the Platonic Forms or Ideas (327-329), (b) atheists (330), (c) polytheists (331-332), (d) those who honour the human mind (333-336), or (e) human senses (337-343), rather than God, to whom the true disciple of Moses looks (344-345).

For Cohn's Numeration of Chapters see Gen. Int. p. xvii.

ΠΕΡΙ ΤΩΝ ΕΝ ΜΕΡΕΙ ΔΙΑΤΑΓΜΑΤΩΝ

ΠΕΡΙ ΤΩΝ ΑΝΑΦΕΡΟΜΕΝΩΝ ΕΝ ΕΙΔΕΙ ΝΟΜΩΝ ΕΙΣ ΔΥΟ ΚΕΦΑΛΑΙΑ ΤΩΝ ΔΕΚΑ ΛΟΓΙΩΝ, ΤΟ ΤΕ ΜΗ ΝΟΜΙΖΕΙΝ ΕΞΩ ΤΟΥ ΕΝΟΣ ΘΕΟΥΣ ΕΤΕΡΟΥΣ ΑΥΤΟΚΡΑΤΕΙΣ ΚΑΙ ΤΟ ΜΗ ΧΕΙΡΟΚΜΗΤΑ ΘΕΟΠΛΑΣ- ΤΕΙΝ

[210]

<sup>1</sup> I. Τὰ μὲν γένη τῶν ἐν εἴδει νόμων, οἱ προσαγορευόμενοι δέκα λόγοι, διὰ τῆς προτέρας ἠκρίβωνται συντάξεως, τὰ δ' ἐν μέρει διατάγματα κατὰ τὴν τῆς γραφῆς ἀκολουθίαν νῦν ἐπισκεπτέον. ἄρξομαι δ' <sup>2</sup> ἀπὸ τοῦ γελωμένου παρὰ τοῖς πολλοῖς. γελᾶται δέ ἡ τῶν γεννητικῶν περιτομή. πρᾶγμα σπουδαζόμενον οὐ μετρίως καὶ παρ' ἑτέροις ἔθνεσι καὶ μάλιστα τῷ Αἰγυπτιακῷ, ὃ καὶ πολυανθρωπότατον καὶ ἀρχαιότατον καὶ φιλοσοφώτατον εἶναι δοκεῖ.
<sup>3</sup> παρὸ καὶ προσῆκον ἦν παιδικὴν χλεύην μεθεμένους φρονιμώτερον καὶ σεμνότερον ἀναζητῆσαι τὰς αἰ-

---

<sup>a</sup> Or "gods with absolute powers," see § 13.

<sup>b</sup> In the mss. this chapter is headed Περὶ περιτομῆς.

<sup>c</sup> Or (as Mangey and Heinemann) "in the order indicated in the scriptures," i.e. though the laws are not actually grouped in the Pentateuch under the Ten Commandments, such an order is suggested by the Decalogue. γραφῆ, however, in this sense seems to be regularly coupled with ἱερά.

THE SPECIAL LAWS

BOOK I

ON THE SPECIAL LAWS WHICH FALL UNDER THE TWO HEADS OF THE TEN COMMANDMENTS, ONE OF WHICH IS DIRECTED AGAINST THE ACKNOWLEDGEMENT OF OTHER SOVEREIGN GODS <sup>a</sup> SAVE THE ONE, AND THE OTHER AGAINST GIVING HONOURS TO THE WORKS OF MEN'S HANDS

I. <sup>b</sup> The Ten Words, as they are called, the main 1 heads under which are summarized the Special Laws, have been explained in detail in the preceding treatise. We have now, as the sequence of our dissertation <sup>c</sup> requires, to examine the particular ordinances. I will begin with that which is an object of ridicule among many people. Now the practice 2 which is thus ridiculed, namely the circumcision of the genital organs, is very zealously observed by many other nations, particularly by the Egyptians, a race regarded as pre-eminent for its populousness, its antiquity and its attachment to philosophy.<sup>d</sup> And 3 therefore it would be well for the detractors to desist from childish mockery and to inquire in a wiser and more serious spirit into the causes to which the

For the meaning given in the translation cf. De Ebr. 1, De Som. i. 1.

<sup>a</sup> For circumcision in Egypt see App. p. 615.

PHILO

τίας, ὧν χάριν ἐκράτησε τὸ ἔθος, καὶ μὴ προεξαναστάντας καταγινώσκειν μεγάλων ἔθνων εὐχέρειαν, [211] λογιζομένους, ὡς εἰκός,<sup>1</sup> τοσαύτας | μυριάδας καθ' ἐκάστην γενεὰν ἀποτέμεσθαι, μετὰ χαλεπῶν ἀλγυδόνων ἀκρωτηριαζούσας τὰ τε ἑαυτῶν καὶ τῶν οἰκειοτάτων σώματα, πολλὰ δ' εἶναι τὰ προτρέποντα τὴν εἰσῆγησιν τῶν παλαιῶν διατηρεῖν καὶ 4 ἐπιτελεῖν, τὰ δ' ἀνωτάτω τέτταρα· ἐν μὲν χαλεπῆς νόσου καὶ δυσιάτου, ποσθῆνης,<sup>2</sup> ἀπ-αλλαγῆν, ἣν ἄνθρακα καλοῦσιν, ἀπὸ τοῦ καίειν ἐν-τυφόμενον, ὡς οἶμαι, ταύτης τῆς προσηγορίας τυ-χόντα, ὅπερ εὐκολώτερον τοῖς ἀκροποσθίας ἔχουσιν 5 ἐγγίνεται· δεύτερον δὲ τὴν δι' ὄλου τοῦ σώματος καθαριότητα πρὸς τὸ ἀρμόττον τάξει ἱερωμένη, παρὸ καὶ ξυρῶνται τὰ σώματα προσυπερβάλλοντες οἱ ἐν Αἰγύπτῳ τῶν ἱερέων· ὑποσυλλέγεται γὰρ καὶ ὑποστέλλει καὶ θριξὶ καὶ ποσθίαις ἔνια τῶν ὀφει- 6 λόντων καθαίρεσθαι· τρίτον δὲ τὴν πρὸς καρδίαν ὁμοιότητα τοῦ περιτμηθέντος μέρους· πρὸς γὰρ γένεσιν ἄμφω παρεσκευάσται, τὸ μὲν ἐγκάρδιον πνεῦμα νοημάτων, τὸ δὲ γόνιμον ὄργανον ζώων·

<sup>1</sup> So Cohn with some mss. in preference to the ὡς οὐκ εἰκός of the better mss. This would mean "reflecting that it is not likely that so many nations would," etc. (without some good reason). But this last can hardly be understood, and Mangey suggests the insertion of μάτην.

<sup>2</sup> Perhaps, as Cohn suggests, read πόσθης. See Hermes, 1908, p. 185. The suggestion of ποσθαίνης (H. Grégoire, Hermes, 1909, p. 319) is open to the objection that the names

THE SPECIAL LAWS, I. 3-6

persistence of this custom is due, instead of dismissing the matter prematurely and impugning the good sense of great nations. Such persons might naturally reflect that all these thousands in every generation undergo the operation and suffer severe pains in mutilating the bodies of themselves and their nearest and dearest, and that there are many circumstances which urge the retention and performance of a custom introduced by the men of old. The principal reasons are four in number. One <sup>4</sup> is that it secures exemption from the severe and almost incurable malady of the prepuce called anthrax or carbuncle, so named, I believe, from the slow fire <sup>a</sup> which it sets up and to which those who retain the foreskin are more susceptible. Secondly, it pro- <sup>5</sup> motes the cleanliness of the whole body as befits the consecrated order, and therefore the Egyptians carry the practice to a further extreme and have the bodies of their priests shaved. For some substances which need to be cleared away collect and secrete themselves both in the hair and the foreskin. Thirdly, it assimilates <sup>b</sup> the circumcised member to the <sup>6</sup> heart. For as both are framed to serve for generation, thought being generated by the spirit force in the heart, <sup>c</sup> living creatures by the reproductive organ,

<sup>a</sup> Or "inward and secret fire." Lit. "burns smouldering." Heinemann less accurately, I think, "stark brennt." Mangey "urit cum inflammatione."

<sup>b</sup> Lit. "the likeness," not meaning that they are naturally alike, but that they are made so by circumcision, for ὁμοιότητα, like ἀπαλλαγὴν and καθαριότητα above, must give the result of the process.

<sup>c</sup> See App. p. 615.

---

of diseases in -αινα, like φλύκταινα and γάγγραινα, do not seem to be formed like the names in -ιτις from the part attacked. The text is very confused in the different mss.

PHILO

- ἔδικαίωσαν γὰρ οἱ πρῶτοι τῷ ἀφανεῖ καὶ κρείττονι, δι' οὗ τὰ νοητὰ συνίσταται, τὸ ἐμφανὲς καὶ ὄρατόν, ᾧ τὰ αἰσθητὰ γεννᾶσθαι πέφυκεν, ἕξομοιωσαι·
- 7 τέταρτον δὲ καὶ ἀναγκαϊότατον τὴν πρὸς πολυγονίαν παρασκευήν· λέγεται γὰρ ὡς εὐδοεῖ τὸ σπέρμα μήτε σκιδνάμενον μήτε περιρρέον εἰς τοὺς τῆς ποσθίας κόλπους· ὅθεν καὶ τὰ περιτεμνόμενα τῶν ἔθνῶν πολυγονώτατα καὶ πολυανθρωπότατα εἶναι δοκεῖ.
- 8 II. Ταῦτα μὲν οὖν εἰς ἀκοὰς ἤλθε τὰς ἡμετέρας, ἀρχαιολογούμενα παρὰ θεσπεσίοις ἀνδράσιν, οἱ τὰ Μωυσέως οὐ παρέργως διηρεύνησαν. ἐγὼ δὲ πρὸς τοῖς εἰρημένοις καὶ σύμβολον ἡγοῦμαι τὴν περι-
- 9 τομὴν δυοῖν εἶναι τοῖν ἀναγκαιοτάτοι· ἐνὸς μὲν ἡδονῶν ἐκτομῆς, αἱ καταγοητεύουσι διάνοιαν· ἐπειδὴ γὰρ τὰ νικητήρια φέρεται τῶν ἐν ἡδοναῖς φίλτρων ἢ ἀνδρὸς πρὸς γυναῖκα συνουσία, τὸ ὑπηρετοῦν ταῖς τοιαύταις ὁμιλίαις ὄργανον ἀκρωτηριάζειν ἔδοξε τοῖς νομοθέταις, αἰνιτιτομένοις περιτομὴν περιττῆς ἐκτομὴν καὶ πλεοναζούσης ἡδονῆς, οὐ μιᾶς, ἀλλὰ διὰ μιᾶς τῆς βιαστικωτάτης καὶ τῶν
- 10 ἄλλων ἀπασῶν· ἑτέρου δὲ τοῦ γυνῶναί τινα ἑαυτὸν καὶ τὴν βαρεῖαν νόσον, οἴησιν, ψυχῆς ἀπώσασθαι· ἐνιοὶ γὰρ ὡς ἀγαθοὶ ζωοπλάσται ζώων τὸ κάλλιστον, ἄνθρωπον, ἠῦχθησαν δύνασθαι δημιουργεῖν καὶ φυσηθέντες ὑπ' ἀλαζονείας ἑαυτοὺς
- [212] ἕξεθειώσαν, | τὸν ὡς ἀληθῶς αἴτιον γενέσεως ὄντα θεὸν παρακαλυψάμενοι, καίτοι γε ἐκ τῶν συνήθων <sup>a</sup> Lit. "For the earliest men." Here as often in Philo γὰρ refers to the sentence before the last, and gives the reason why they adopted circumcision. For the attribution of wisdom to the πρῶτοι cf. De Dec. 23 σοφοὶ γὰρ ἦσαν, though there, as in De Op. 133, it is concerned with the giving of names to things. In De Plant. 49 it is as here more general.

THE SPECIAL LAWS, I. 6-10

the earliest men <sup>a</sup> held that the unseen and superior element to which the concepts of the mind owe their existence should have assimilated to it the visible and apparent, the natural parent of the things perceived by sense. The fourth and most vital reason is its <sup>7</sup> adaptation to give fertility of offspring, for we are told that it causes the semen to travel aright without being scattered or dropped into the folds of the fore-skin, and therefore the circumcised nations appear to be the most prolific and populous.

II. These are the explanations handed down to us <sup>8</sup> from the old-time studies of divinely gifted men who made deep research into the writings of Moses. To these I would add that I consider circumcision to be a symbol of two things most necessary to our well-being. One is the excision of pleasures which be- <sup>9</sup> witch the mind. For since among the love-lures of pleasure the palm is held by the mating of man and woman, the legislators thought good to dock the organ which ministers to such intercourse, thus making circumcision the figure of the excision of excessive <sup>b</sup> and superfluous pleasure, not only of one pleasure but of all the other pleasures signified by one, and that the most imperious. <sup>10</sup> The other reason is that a man should know himself and banish from the soul the grievous malady of conceit. For there are some who have prided themselves on their power of fashioning as with a sculptor's cunning the fairest of creatures, man, and in their braggart pride assumed godship, closing their eyes to the Cause of all that comes into being, though they might find <sup>b</sup> The equation of περιτομή with περιττῆς ἔκτομή is of course an intentional play upon words; or even perhaps an etymology.

PHILO

- 11 ἐπανορθώσασθαι τὴν ἀπάτην δυνάμενοι· πολλοὶ μὲν γὰρ παρ' αὐτοῖς εἰσιν ἄνδρες ἄγονοι, πολλαὶ δὲ στεῖραι γυναικες, ὧν ἀτελεῖς αἱ ὀμιλῖαι καταγγρασάντων ἐν ἀπαιδία. πονηρὰν οὖν δόξαν ἐκμητέον τῆς διανοίας καὶ τὰς ἄλλας ὅσαι μὴ φιλόθεοι.
- 12 Τούτων μὲν δὴ πέρι τοσαῦτα· τρεπτέον δ' ἐπὶ τοὺς κατὰ μέρος ἤδη νόμους καὶ πρώτους, ἀφ' ὧν ἀρχεσθαι καλόν, τοὺς περὶ μοναρχίας ὀρισθέντας.
- [213] 13 III. Τινὲς ἥλιον καὶ σελήνην καὶ τοὺς ἄλλους ἀστέρας ὑπέλαβον εἶναι θεοὺς αὐτοκράτορας, οἷς τὰς τῶν γινομένων ἀπάντων αἰτίας ἀνέθεσαν. Μωυσεῖ δ' ὁ κόσμος ἔδοξεν εἶναι καὶ γενητὸς καὶ καθάπερ πόλις ἢ μεγίστη, ἄρχοντας ἔχουσα καὶ ὑπηκόους, ἄρχοντας μὲν τοὺς ἐν οὐρανῷ πάντας ὅσοι πλάνητες καὶ ἀπλανεῖς ἀστέρες, ὑπηκόους δὲ τὰς μετὰ σελήνην ἐν ἀέρι καὶ περιγεῖους φύσεις·
- 14 τοὺς δὲ λεχθέντας ἄρχοντας οὐκ αὐτεξουσίους, ἀλλ' ἐνὸς τοῦ πάντων πατρὸς ὑπάρχους, οὗ μιμουμένους τὴν ἐπιστασίαν κατορθοῦν πρυτανεύοντος<sup>1</sup> κατὰ δίκην καὶ νόμον ἕκαστον τῶν γεγονότων· τοὺς δὲ μὴ βλέποντας τὸν ἐπιβεβηκότα ἠνίοχον τοῖς ὑπεξευγμένοις ὡς αὐτουργοῖς τῶν ἐν τῷ κόσμῳ γινομένων ἀνάψαι τὰς αἰτίας. ὧν τὴν ἄγνοιαν ὁ ἱερώτατος νομοθέτης εἰς ἐπιστήμην μεθαρμόζεται λέγων ὧδε· “ μὴ ἰδὼν τὸν ἥλιον καὶ τὴν σελήνην καὶ τοὺς ἀστέρας καὶ πάντα τὸν κόσμον τοῦ οὐρανοῦ

<sup>1</sup> The variant πρυτανεύοντας is adopted by Heinemann, but see § 207.

<sup>a</sup> At this point the mss. insert the heading Οἱ περὶ μοναρχίας νόμοι, i.e., the laws about the sole sovereignty (of God), and the chapters which follow down to the end of § 65 are treated by

THE SPECIAL LAWS, I. 11-15

in their familiars a corrective for their delusion. For 11 in their midst are many men incapable of begetting and many women barren, whose matings are ineffective and who grow old childless. The evil belief, therefore, needs to be excised from the mind with any others that are not loyal to God.

So much for these matters. We must now turn 12 to the particular laws, taking those first with which it is well to begin, namely those the subject of which is the sole sovereignty of God.

III. <sup>a</sup> Some have supposed that the sun and moon 13 and the other stars were gods with absolute powers and ascribed to them the causation of all events.
But Moses held that the universe was created and is in a sense the greatest of commonwealths, having magistrates and subjects ; for magistrates, all the heavenly bodies, fixed or wandering ; for subjects, such beings as exist below the moon, in the air or on the earth. The said magistrates, however, in his view 14 have not unconditional powers, but are lieutenants of the one Father of All, and it is by copying the example of His government exercised according to law and justice over all created beings that they acquit themselves aright ; but those who do not descry the Charioteer mounted above attribute the causation of all the events in the universe to the team that draw the chariot as though they were sole agents.
From this ignorance our most holy lawgiver would 15 convert them to knowledge with these words : “ Do not when thou seest the sun and the moon and the stars and all the ordered host of heaven go astray and Mangey and others as a separate treatise. Cohn observes this in his numeration of the chapters but not of the sections ; see Gen. Introd. p. xviii.

PHILO

πλανηθεῖς προσκυνήσης αὐτοῖς.” εὐθυβόλως πάνυ καὶ καλῶς πλάνον εἶπε τὴν τῶν εἰρημένων ὡς θεῶν 16 ἀποδοχὴν. οἱ γὰρ ἰδόντες ἡλίου μὲν προσόδοις καὶ ἀναχωρήσεσι τὰς ἐτησίους ὥρας συνισταμένας, ἐν [214] αἷς αἰ | ζώων καὶ φυτῶν καὶ καρπῶν γενέσεις ὠρισμέναις χρόνων περιόδοις τελεσφοροῦνται, σε-λήνην δ’ ὑπηρέτιν καὶ διάδοχον ἡλίου νύκτωρ τὴν ἐπιμέλειαν καὶ προστασίαν ἀνειληφύϊαν ὦν μεθ’ ἡμέραν ἡλιος, καὶ τοὺς ἄλλους ἀστέρας κατὰ τὴν πρὸς τὰ ἐπίγεια συμπάθειαν μυρία τῶν ἐπὶ διαμονῇ τοῦ παντὸς ἐνεργοῦντάς τε καὶ δρῶντας, πλάνον ἐπλανήθησαν ἀνήνυτον μόνους εἶναι τούτους θεοὺς 17 ὑποτοπήσαντες. εἰ δ’ ἐσπούδασαν διὰ τῆς ἀπλανοῦς βαδίζειν ὁδοῦ, κἂν εὐθύς ἔγνωσαν ὅτι, καθάπερ αἴσθησις ὑποδιάκονος νοῦ γέγονε, τὸν αὐτὸν τρόπον καὶ οἱ αἰσθητοὶ πάντες ὑπηρέται τοῦ νοητοῦ κατέστησαν, ἀγαπήσαντες εἰ δευτερείων 18 ἐφίξονται. παγγέλοιον γὰρ οἶεσθαι, ὅτι ὁ μὲν νοῦς ὁ ἐν ἡμῖν βραχύτατος ὦν καὶ ἀόρατος ἡγεμῶν τῶν αἰσθητικῶν ὀργάνων ἐστίν, ὁ δὲ τοῦ παντὸς ὁ μέγιστος καὶ τελειότατος οὐχὶ βασιλεὺς βασιλέων 19 εἶναι πέφυκε, βλεπομένων οὐ βλεπόμενος. πάντας οὖν τοὺς κατ’ οὐρανὸν οὓς αἴσθησις ἐπισκοπεῖ θεοὺς οὐκ αὐτοκρατεῖς νομιστέον, τὴν ὑπάρχων τάξιν εἰληφότας, ὑπευθύνους μὲν φύσει γεγονότας, ἔνεκα 20 δ’ ἀρετῆς εὐθύνας οὐχ ὑφέζοντας. ὥσθ’ ὑπερβάντες τῷ λογισμῷ πᾶσαν τὴν ὁρατὴν οὐσίαν ἐπὶ τὴν τοῦ αἰδοῦς καὶ ἀοράτου καὶ μόνῃ διανοίᾳ καταληπτοῦ τιμὴν ἴωμεν, ὃς οὐ μόνον θεὸς θεῶν ἐστὶ νοητῶν τε

<sup>a</sup> Deut. iv. 19.

THE SPECIAL LAWS, I. 15-20

worship them.”<sup>a</sup> Well indeed and aptly does he call the acceptance of the heavenly bodies as gods a going astray or wandering. For those who see the sun 16 with its advances and retreats producing the yearly seasons in which the animals and plants and fruits are brought at fixed periods of time from their birth to maturity, and the moon as handmaid and successor to the sun taking over at night the care and supervision of all that he had charge of by day, and the other stars in accordance with their sympathetic affinity to things on earth acting and working in a thousand ways for the preservation of the All, have wandered infinitely far in supposing that they alone are gods. But if they had been at pains to walk in 17 that road where there is no straying, they would at once have perceived that just as sense is the servitor of mind, so too all the beings perceived by sense are the ministers of Him who is perceived by the mind. It is enough for them if they gain the second place. For it is quite ridiculous to deny that if the mind in 18 us, so exceedingly small and invisible, is yet the ruler of the organs of sense, the mind of the universe, so transcendently great and perfect, must be the King of kings who are seen by Him though He is not seen by them. So all the gods which sense describes in 19 Heaven must not be supposed to possess absolute power but to have received the rank of subordinate rulers, naturally liable to correction, though in virtue of their excellence never destined to undergo it. Therefore carrying our thoughts beyond all the realm 20 of visible existence let us proceed to give honour to the Immaterial, the Invisible, the Apprehended by the understanding alone, who is not only God of gods, whether perceived by sense or by mind, but καὶ αἰσθητῶν ἀλλὰ καὶ πάντων δημιουργός. ἐὰν δέ τις τὴν τοῦ αἰδίου καὶ ποιητοῦ θεραπείαν ἄλλω προσνέμῃ νεωτέρῳ καὶ γενητῷ, φρενοβλαβῆς ἀναγεγράφθω καὶ ἔνοχος ἀσεβείᾳ τῇ μεγίστῃ.

PHILO

- 21 IV. Εἰσὶ δέ τινες οἱ χρυσὸν καὶ ἄργυρον ἀνδριαντοποιοῖς ὡς θεοπλαστῆν ἱκανοῖς παρέδωσαν· οἱ δὲ λαβόντες ἀργὴν ὕλην θνητῷ παραδείγματι προσχρησάμενοι, τὸ παραλογώτατον, θεοὺς ὅσα τῷ δοκεῖν ἐμόρφωσαν· καὶ νεῶς κατασκευάσαντες καὶ ἰδρυσάμενοι βωμοὺς ἐδείμαντο<sup>1</sup> θυσίαις τε καὶ πομπαῖς καὶ ταῖς ἄλλαις ἱεουργίαις τε καὶ ἀγιστεῖαις ἐπιμελῶς πάννυ καὶ πεφροντισμένως γεραίρουσιν, ἱερέων τε καὶ ἱερείων τὸν περὶ ταῦτα τῦφον ὡς ἐνὶ μάλιστα
- 22 σεμνοποιούντων. οἷς ὁ τῶν ὄλων πατήρ προαγορεύει λέγων· “οὐ ποιήσετε μετ’ ἐμοῦ<sup>2</sup> θεοὺς ἄργυροῦς καὶ χρυσοῦς,” μόνον οὐκ ἄντικρυς ἀναδιδάσκων, ὅτι οὐδ’ ἐξ ἑτέρας ὕλης χειρόκμητον οὐδὲν τὸ παράπαν θεοπλαστήσετε διακωλυθέντες ἐκ τῶν ἀρίστων· ἄργυρος γὰρ καὶ χρυσὸς τὰ πρωτεῖα
- 23 τῶν ἐν ὕλαις φέρονται. δίχα δὲ τῆς ῥητῆς ἀπαγορεύσεως καὶ ἕτερον αἰνίττεσθαί μοι δοκεῖ τῶν πρὸς ἡθοποιῶν μάλιστα συντεινόντων, διελέγχων
- [215] οὐ μετρίως τοὺς φιλοχρημάτους, | οἱ πανταχόθεν μὲν ἀργύριον καὶ χρυσίον ἐκπορίζουσι, τὸ δὲ

<sup>1</sup> Perhaps omit ἐδείμαντο; the sentence is clearer without it.

<sup>2</sup> mss. μετ’ ἐμέ or ἐμοί or ὑμῖν or omit. Cohn’s adoption of μετ’ ἐμοῦ is based on Leg. All. i. 51, where the verse is quoted in most mss. with μετ’ ἐμοῦ, but in one μετ’ ἐμέ. The LXX has ὑμῖν αὐτοῖς. In this uncertainty I print Cohn’s text, but cannot follow his reasoning. Philo does not by any means always keep the same form in his quotations.

<sup>a</sup> Here Philo begins the consideration of the second commandment, though no special heading is given in the mss.

THE SPECIAL LAWS, I. 20-23

also the Maker of all. And if anyone renders the worship due to the Eternal, the Creator, to a created being and one later in time, he must stand recorded as infatuated and guilty of impiety in the highest degree.

IV. <sup>a</sup> There are some who put gold and silver in the hands of sculptors as though they were competent to fashion gods; and the sculptors taking the crude material and furthermore using mortal form for their model, to crown the absurdity shape gods, as they are supposed to be. And after erecting and establishing temples they have built altars and in their honour hold sacrifices and processions with other religious rites and ceremonies conducted with the most elaborate care, and the vain shew is treated by priests and priestesses with the utmost possible solemnity. Such idolaters are warned by the Ruler of All in these words: "Ye shall not make with Me gods of silver and gold," and the lesson conveyed is little less than a direct command,<sup>b</sup> "Neither shall ye make gods the work of your hands from any other material if you are prevented from using the best," for silver and gold hold first place among the sculptor's materials.

But apart from the literal prohibition, He seems to me to suggest another thought of great value for the promotion of morality,<sup>c</sup> and to condemn strongly the money-lovers who procure gold and silver coins from every side and treasure their hoard like a

<sup>b</sup> Ex. xx. 23. The argument appears to be "if gold and silver idols are forbidden, still more are idols of inferior materials."

<sup>c</sup> i.e. in the sphere of human conduct, as opposed to our relation to God, to which the commandment in the literal sense belongs. Cf. the antithesis of ἠθικὴ and φυσικὴ (in the sense of theological), Mos. ii. 96.

PHILO

πορισθὲν ὡς ἄγαλμα θεῖον ἐν ἀδύτοις θησαυροφυλακοῦσιν, ἀγαθῶν αἴτιον καὶ τῆς συμπάσης εὐ-24 δαιμονίας τοῦτ' εἶναι νομίζοντες. καὶ ὅσοι μέντοι τῶν ἀπόρων κεκράτηνται χαλεπῇ νόσῳ, φιλαργυρία, οὐκ ἔχοντες ἴδιον πλοῦτον, ὃν θεραπείας ἀξιώσουσι, τὸν τῶν πλησίον τεθηπότες καὶ προσκυνοῦντες ἔωθεν εἰς τὰς τῶν περιουσιαζόντων οἰκίας ἀφικνουῦν-ται καθάπερ εἰς ἱερὰ μέγιστα, προσευξόμενοι καὶ τὰγαθὰ παρὰ τῶν δεσποτῶν ὡς θεῶν αἰτησόμενοι.
 25 πρὸς οὓς καὶ ἐν ἑτέροις φησὶν· “οὐκ ἐπακολου-θήσετε εἰδώλοις καὶ θεοὺς χωνευτοὺς οὐ ποιήσετε,” διὰ συμβόλων ἀναδιδάσκων, ὅτι πλοῦτῳ τιμὰς ἰσοθέους ἀπονέμειν οὐ προσήκει· πλοῦτου γὰρ αἱ περιβόητοι ὕλαι χρυσὸς καὶ ἄργυρος χεῖσθαι<sup>1</sup> πεφύκασιν, αἷς ἀκολουθοῦσιν οἱ πολλοὶ τὰ τοῦ λεγομένου τυφλοῦ πλοῦτου μόνα ἢ μάλιστα εὐδαιμονίας αἴτια 26 νομίζοντες. τὰδ' ἐστὶν ἃ φησὶν “εἶδωλα,” σκιαῖς ἐοικότα καὶ φάσμασιν, οὐδενὸς ἡρτημένα ἰσχυροῦ καὶ βεβαίου· φέρεται γὰρ πνεύματος τρόπον ἀ-στάτου τροπὰς καὶ μεταβολὰς παντοίας ἐνδεχόμενα. σημεῖον δ' ἐστὶ τούτων ἐναργές· μὴ προλαβόντων ἐξαπιναιῶς ἔστιν ὅτε προσέπτῃ, παγίως ἐνεληφθαι νομιζόντων πάλιν ἀπεπήδησε, καὶ ὅτε μέντοι πάρεστι, καθάπερ τὰ διὰ τῶν κατόπτρων εἶδωλα φαντάζεται τὴν αἴσθησιν ἀπατῶντα καὶ καταγοη-

<sup>1</sup> This is the reading of two out of four mss. supported by κείσθαι of the other two. Cohn, relying on the superior authority of R, on which see Gen. Introd. pp. xv f., prints εἶναι. I have retained χεῖσθαι, as it seems to me needed to bring out the full sense.

<sup>a</sup> Lev. xix. 4.

THE SPECIAL LAWS, I. 23-26

divine image in a sanctuary, believing it to be a source of blessing and happiness of every kind. And <sup>24</sup> further, all the needy who are possessed by that grievous malady, the desire for money, though they have no wealth of their own on which they may bestow worship as its due, pay awe-struck homage to that of their neighbours, and come at early dawn to the houses of those who have abundance of it as though they were the grandest temples, there to make their prayers and beg for blessing from the masters as though they were gods. To such he says <sup>25</sup> elsewhere "Ye shall not follow idols and ye shall not make molten gods,"<sup>a</sup> thus teaching them in a figure that it is not fitting to assign divine honours to wealth. For it is the nature of the far-famed materials of wealth, gold and silver, to melt,<sup>b</sup> and they are followed by the multitude who think that what "blind"<sup>c</sup> wealth has to give is the sole or the chief source of happiness. It is these that he calls "idols," like to <sup>26</sup> shadows and phantoms, with nothing firm or strong to which they can cling. They are borne along like a restless wind, subject to every kind of change and alteration. And of this we have a clear proof. Sometimes they suddenly light on one who has never owned them ere now: then again, when he thinks that they are firmly grasped, they spring away. And indeed when they are present, the apparition is like idols or images seen through mirrors, deceiving and <sup>b</sup> The argument is "since gold and silver, substances which melt, are the chief materials of the phantom wealth, idols (i.e. phantoms) and molten gods may be understood to indicate riches." If εἶναι is read instead of χεῖσθαι, the point of χωνευρούς is lost.

<sup>c</sup> The addition of λεγομένου indicates that the phrase is proverbial or a quotation. See App. pp. 615-616.

PHILO

- τεύοντα καὶ ὡς ἂν ὑφειστηκότα τὰ μὴ ὑπομένοντα.
- 27 καὶ τί δεῖ τὸν ἀνθρώπινον πλοῦτον ἢ τύφον, ὃν ἀναζωγραφοῦσιν αἱ κεναὶ δόξαι, δηλοῦν ὡς ἔστιν ἀβέβαιος; ἤδη γάρ τινες καὶ τὰ ἄλλα πάντα ζῶα καὶ φυτά, ὧν γένεσις ἔστι καὶ φθορά, συνεχῶς μὲν καὶ ἀπαύστως φασὶ ρεῖσθαι, τῆς δ' ἀπορροίας ἀδηλοτέραν αἴσθησιν εἶναι, αἰεὶ νικώσης τῆς περὶ τὴν ῥύσιν<sup>1</sup> ὀξύτητος τὴν δι' ὄψεως ἀκριβῆ προσβολήν.
- 28 V. Ἄλλ' οὐ μόνον πλοῦτος καὶ δόξα καὶ τὰ τοιοῦτα εἶδωλα καὶ ἀμενηναὶ σκιαί, ἀλλὰ καὶ<sup>2</sup> πάντες, οὓς οἱ μυθογράφοι διαπλάσαντες ἐξετύφωσαν ἐπιτειχίσαντες τὰς ψευδεῖς δόξας κατὰ τῆς ἀληθείας, θεοὺς καινοὺς ὥσπερ ἀπὸ μηχανῆς εἰσαγαγόντες ἔνεκα τοῦ τὸν αἰδίων καὶ ὄντα ὄντως θεὸν λήθη παραδοθῆναι. πρὸς δὲ τὸ εὐπαράγωγον μέλεσι καὶ ῥυθμοῖς καὶ μέτροις ἐνηρμόσαντο τὸ ψεῦδος, νομίζοντες ῥαδίως καταγοητεύσειν τοὺς
- 29 ἐντυγχάνοντας. οὐ μὴν ἀλλὰ καὶ πλαστικὴν καὶ [216] ζωγραφίαν συνεργοὺς τῆς ἀπάτης | προσπαρέλαβον, ἵνα χρωμάτων καὶ σχημάτων καὶ ποιότητων εὐδεδημιουργημέναις ιδέαις ὑπαγάγωνται τοὺς ὄρωντας καὶ τὰς ἡγεμονίδας αἰσθήσεις ὄψιν καὶ ἀκοὴν δελεάσαντες, τὴν μὲν ἀψύχοις εὐμορφίαις, τὴν δ' εὐφωνία ποιητικῇ, συναρπάσωσι τὴν ψυχὴν ἀ-
- 30 βέβαιον καὶ ἀνίδρυτον αὐτὴν ἀπεργασάμενοι. διὰ

<sup>1</sup> mss. φύσιν or φορὰν.

<sup>2</sup> Cohn suggests (μῦθοι) πάντες, and so apparently Heinemann. It seems to me needless and less forcible. Cf. ii. 164 θεῶν . . . οὓς τὸ ποιητικὸν γένος ἐμύθευσε. Mangey reads with two mss. ἄλλαι ἀπάται ἀς.

<sup>a</sup> Particularly Heracleitus and his followers. See App. p. 616.

THE SPECIAL LAWS, I. 26-29

bewitching the sense and seeming to subsist when they have no abiding substance. And why need we 27 prove that human riches or human vanity, which empty-headed thinking paints in such bright colours, are unstable? For we know that some<sup>a</sup> assert that all other living creatures and plants which are born and perish are in a constant and ceaseless state of flux, though our perception of the effluence is indistinct, because the swiftness of its course always defeats the efforts of the eyesight to observe it with exactness.

V. But not only wealth and glory and the like 28 are idols and unsubstantial shadows, but also all those personages, which the myth-makers have invented and spread delusion therewith, building up their false imaginations into a stronghold to menace the truth, and staging as by machinery<sup>b</sup> new gods, in order that the eternal and really existing God might be consigned to oblivion. And to promote the seductiveness they have fitted the falsehood into melody, metre and rhythm,<sup>c</sup> thinking to cajole their audience thereby. Further, too, they have brought 29 in sculpture and painting to co-operate in the deception, in order that with the colours and shapes and artistic qualities wrought by their fine workmanship they may enthrall the spectators and so beguile the two leading senses, sight and hearing—sight through lifeless shapes of beauty, hearing through the charm of poetry and music—and thus make the soul unsteady and unsettled and seize it for their prey.

<sup>b</sup> I do not know how to translate this phrase. It is said to denote "a sudden or unexpected event," but this seems to me inadequate. See App. p. 616.

<sup>c</sup> The regular triple division of music. See note on De Som. i. 205.

PHILO

- τουτ' ἐπιστάμενος ἐπὶ μέγα δυνάμει προεληλυθότα τὸν τύφον καὶ δορυφορούμενον ὑπὸ τοῦ πλείστου γένους ἀνθρώπων οὐκ ἐξ ἀνάγκης ἀλλ' ἐκουσίοις γνώμαις, εὐλαβηθεὶς μὴ ποτε καὶ οἱ ζηλωταὶ τῆς ἀδεκάστου καὶ ἀληθοῦς εὐσεβείας καθάπερ ὑπὸ χειμάρρου παρασυρῶσιν, ἐνσφραγίζεται βαθεῖς τύπους ταῖς διανοαῖς ἐγχαράττων ὀσιότητος, ὑπὲρ τοῦ μὴ συγχυθέντας ἢ ἐπιλεανθέντας ἀμαυρωθῆναί ποτε χρόνῳ, καὶ συνεχῶς ἐπάδει ποτὲ μὲν λέγων ὅτι θεὸς εἰς ἔστι καὶ κτίστης καὶ ποιητὴς τῶν ὄλων, ποτὲ δὲ ὅτι κύριος τῶν γεγονότων, ἐπειδὴ τὸ βέβαιον καὶ πάγιον καὶ τὸ
- 31 κῦρος ὡς ἀληθῶς περὶ αὐτὸν μόνον πέφυκε. λέλεκται δ' ὅτι "οἱ προσκείμενοι τῷ ὄντι θεῷ ζῶσι πάντες." ἄρ' οὐχ οὗτός ἐστιν ὁ τρισμακάριος καὶ τρισευδαίμων βίος, ἀγαπητικῶς ἔχεισθαι τῆς θεραπείας τοῦ πρεσβυτάτου πάντων αἰτίου καὶ μὴ τοὺς ὑποδιακόνοισι καὶ πυλωροῖσι πρὸ τοῦ βασιλέως θεραπεύειν ἀξιῶν; ἀθάνατος ἦδε ἢ ζωὴ καὶ μακραίων ἐν ταῖς τῆς φύσεως στήλαις ἀναγράφεται· ταυτὶ δὲ τὰ γράμματα τῷ κόσμῳ συνδιαιωνίζει ἀναγκαῖον.
- 32 VI. Δυστόπαστος μὲν οὖν καὶ δυσκατάληπτος ὁ πατὴρ καὶ ἡγεμὼν τῶν συμπάντων ἐστίν, ἀλλ' οὐ διὰ τοῦτ' ἀποκνητέον τὴν ζήτησιν αὐτοῦ. δύο δ' ἐν ταῖς περὶ θεοῦ ζητήσεσι τὰ ἀνωτάτω ταυτ' ἐπαπορεῖ ἢ διάνοια τοῦ φιλοσοφοῦντος ἀνόθως· ἐν μὲν εἰ ἔστι τὸ θεῖον, ἔνεκα τῶν ἐπιτηδευσάντων ἀθεότητα, κακιῶν τὴν μεγίστην· ἕτερον δὲ τὸ τί ἐστι κατὰ τὴν οὐσίαν. τὸ μὲν οὖν πρότερον οὐ

---

<sup>a</sup> Deut. iv. 4. The meaning of the original is that all those

THE SPECIAL LAWS, I. 30-32

Therefore knowing that vanity had attained high 30 power and was championed by the greater part of the human race, not under compulsion but of their own free will, and fearing lest the devotees of piety, true and incorruptible, might be swept away as by a torrent, he stamped upon their minds as with a seal deep imprints of holiness, so that no fusion or smoothing in the course of years should ever blur their distinctness. This lesson he continually repeats, sometimes saying that God is one and the Framer and Maker of all things, sometimes that He is Lord of created beings, because stability and fixity and lordship are by nature vested in Him alone. We are 31 told, too, that "those who cling to the God that is all live."<sup>a</sup> Is not this the thrice-happy and thrice-blessed life, to cling lovingly to the service of the most ancient Cause of all and to reject the thought of serving the menials and the door-keepers rather than the King? This true life stands inscribed on the tables of nature as deathless and agelong, and the writing that records it must endure with the universe to all eternity.

VI. Doubtless hard to unriddle and hard to ap- 32 prehend is the Father and Ruler of all, but that is no reason why we should shrink from searching for Him. But in such searching two principal questions arise which demand the consideration of the genuine philosopher. One is whether the Deity exists, a question necessitated by those who practise atheism, the worst form of wickedness, the other is what the Deity is in essence. Now to answer the first question who took God's side when the others followed Baal Peor are still alive. Philo has given the same extension of the meaning in De Fuga 56, and again in § 345 below.

PHILO

- πολὺς πόνος ἰδεῖν, τὸ δὲ δεύτερον οὐ χαλεπὸν μόνον ἀλλὰ καὶ ἴσως ἀδύνατον. ἐπισκεπτέον δ' ἑκάτερον.
- 33 αἰεὶ τοίνυν γνωρίσματα τῶν δημιουργῶν πέφυκέ πως εἶναι τὰ δημιουργηθέντα· τίς γὰρ ἀνδριάντας ἢ γραφὰς θεασάμενος οὐκ εὐθὺς ἐνενόησεν ἀνδριαντοποιὸν ἢ ζωγράφον; τίς δὲ ἐσθῆτας ἢ ναῦς ἢ οἰκίας ἰδὼν οὐκ ἔννοιαν ἔλαβεν ὑφάντου καὶ ναυπηγοῦ καὶ οἰκοδόμου; παρελθὼν δέ τις εἰς πόλιν εὐνομον, ἐν ἣ τὰ τῆς πολιτείας σφόδρα καλῶς διακεκόσμηται, τί ἕτερον ὑπολήφεται ἢ ὅτι ἐπ-[217] ιστατεῖται ἤδε ἡ πόλις ὑπ' ἀρχόντων | ἀγαθῶν;
- 34 τὸν οὖν ἀφικόμενον εἰς τὴν ὡς ἀληθῶς μεγαλόπολιν, τόνδε τὸν κόσμον, καὶ θεασάμενον τὴν ὄρεινὴν καὶ πεδιάδα βρίθουσιν<sup>1</sup> ζώων καὶ φυτῶν καὶ ποταμῶν αὐθιγενῶν καὶ χειμάρρων φορὰς καὶ πελαγῶν ἀναχύσεις καὶ εὐκρασίας ἀέρος καὶ τῶν ἔτησίων ὠρῶν τροπάς, εἶτα ἥλιον καὶ σελήνην, τοὺς ἡμέρας καὶ νυκτὸς ἡγεμόνας, καὶ τὰς τῶν ἄλλων πλανήτων τε καὶ ἀπλανῶν καὶ τοῦ σύμπαντος οὐρανοῦ περιπολήσεις καὶ χορείας, οὐκ εἰκότως, μᾶλλον δὲ ἀναγκαίως, ἔννοιαν λήψεσθαι δεῖ τοῦ ποιητοῦ καὶ 35 πατρὸς καὶ προσέτι ἡγεμόνος; οὐδὲν γὰρ τῶν τεχνικῶν ἔργων ἀπαιτοματίζεται· τεχνικώτατον δὲ καὶ ἐπιστημονικώτατον ὄδε ὁ κόσμος, ὡς ὑπὸ τινος τὴν ἐπιστήμην ἀγαθοῦ καὶ τελειοτάτου πάντως δεδημιουργῆσθαι. τοῦτον τὸν τρόπον ἔννοιαν ἐλάβομεν ὑπάρξεως θεοῦ.
- 36 VII. Τὴν δ' οὐσίαν, εἰ καὶ δυσθήρατον καὶ

<sup>1</sup> So Cohn from R in preference to the πλήθουσιν or πληθύνουσιν of the other mss. It seems to me doubtful. βρίθω more especially = "laden with," and so Philo, De Op. 85 κριοὶ βρίθοντες βαθέσι μαλλοῖς.

THE SPECIAL LAWS, I. 32-36

does not need much labour, but the second is not only difficult but perhaps impossible to solve. Still, both must be examined. <sup>a</sup> We see then that any 33 piece of work always involves the knowledge of a workman. Who can look upon statues or painting without thinking at once of a sculptor or painter? Who can see clothes or ships or houses without getting the idea of a weaver and a shipwright and a house-builder? And when one enters a well-ordered city in which the arrangements for civil life are very admirably managed, what else will he suppose but that this city is directed by good rulers? So then 34 he who comes to the truly Great City, this world, and beholds hills and plains teeming with animals and plants, the rivers, spring-fed or winter torrents, streaming along, the seas with their expanses, the air with its happily tempered phases, the yearly seasons passing into each other,<sup>b</sup> and then the sun and moon ruling the day and night, and the other heavenly bodies fixed or planetary and the whole firmament revolving in rhythmic order, must he not naturally or rather necessarily gain the conception of the Maker and Father and Ruler also? For none of the works 35 of human art is self-made, and the highest art and knowledge is shewn in this universe, so that surely it has been wrought by one of excellent knowledge and absolute perfection. In this way we have gained the conception of the existence of God.

VII. As for the divine essence, though in fact it is 36

<sup>a</sup> For illustration of the argument in this and the next section see App. p. 616.

<sup>b</sup> For this use of τροπαί for the transitions of the four seasons rather than for the two solstices cf. τροπᾶς τέσσαρας Mos. ii. 124.

PHILO

δυσκατάληπτον εἶναι συμβέβηκεν, ὅμως καθ' ὅσον ἐνδέχεται διερευνητέον. ἄμεινον γὰρ οὐδὲν τοῦ ζητεῖν τὸν ἀληθῆ θεόν, κὰν ἡ εὕρεσις αὐτοῦ δια-φεύγη δύναμιν ἀνθρωπίνην, ἐπειδὴ καὶ ἡ περὶ τὸ βούλεσθαι μαθεῖν σπουδὴ καθ' αὐτὴν ἀλέκτους 37 ἡδονὰς καὶ εὐφροσύνας ἐργάζεται. μάρτυρες δὲ οἱ μὴ χεῖλεσιν ἄκροισ γευσάμενοι φιλοσοφίας, ἀλλὰ τῶν λόγων καὶ δογμάτων αὐτῆς ἐπὶ πλεόν ἐστια-θέντες· τούτων γὰρ ὁ λογισμὸς ἀπὸ γῆς ἄνω μετέωρος ἀρθεῖς αἰθεροβατεῖ καὶ συμπεριπολῶν ἡλίῳ καὶ σελήνῃ καὶ τῷ σύμπαντι οὐρανῷ, τὰκέῃ πάντα γλιχόμενος ἰδεῖν, ἀμυδροτέραις χρῆται ταῖς προσβολαῖς, ἀκράτου καὶ πολλοῦ φέγγους ἐκχεομένου, ὡς τὸ τῆς ψυχῆς ὄμμα ταῖς μαρμαρυγαῖς 38 σκοτοδιναῖαν. ἀλλ' οὐ διὰ τοῦτο προκαμῶν ἀπ-αγορεύει, γνώμη δ' ἀηττήτῳ πρὸς τὴν ἐνδεχομένην θέαν ἴεται, καθάπερ ἐν ἄθλοις δευτερείων μεταποιούμενος, ἐπειδὴ τῶν πρώτων ἐσφάλῃ. φαντασίας δ' ἀληθοῦς δευτέρα ἐστὶν εἰκασία καὶ στοχασμὸς καὶ ὅσα εἰς τὴν τῶν εὐλόγων καὶ πιθανῶν ἰδέαν 39 ἀνάγεται. καθάπερ οὖν οἶός ἐστι τῶν ἀστέρων ἕκαστος κατὰ τὴν οὐσίαν εἰλικρινῶς οὔτ' εἰδότες οὔτε δυνάμενοι σαφῶς διαγνῶναι ζητεῖν ὅμως προθυμούμεθα, τερπόμενοι τοῖς εἰκόσι λόγοις ἕνεκα 40 τοῦ φύσει φιλομαθοῦς, τὸν αὐτὸν τρόπον, εἰ καὶ τῆς κατὰ τὸν ὄντως ὄντα θεὸν ἐναργοῦς φαντασίας ἀμοιροῦμεν, ὀφείλομεν μὴ ἀπολείπεσθαι τῆς ζητή-σεως αὐτοῦ, διὰ τὸ τὴν σκέψιν καὶ ἄνευ τῆς εὐρέσεως καθ' αὐτὴν τριπόθητον εἶναι, ἐπεὶ καὶ τοὺς [218] τοῦ | σώματος ὀφθαλμοὺς οὐδεὶς αἰτιᾶται, παρόσον ἡλίον αὐτὸν ἰδεῖν ἀδυνατοῦντες τὴν φερομένην ἀπόρροιαν τῶν ἀκτίνων ἐπὶ γῆν ὀρώσω, ἡλιακῶν

THE SPECIAL LAWS, I. 36-40

hard to track and hard to apprehend, it still calls for all the inquiry possible. For nothing is better than to search for the true God, even if the discovery of Him eludes human capacity, since the very wish to learn, if earnestly entertained, produces untold joys and pleasures. We have the testimony of those who 37 have not taken a mere sip of philosophy but have feasted more abundantly on its reasonings and conclusions. For with them the reason soars away from earth into the heights, travels through the upper air and accompanies the revolutions of the sun and moon and the whole heaven and in its desire to see all that is there finds its powers of sight blurred, for so pure and vast is the radiance that pours therefrom that the soul's eye is dizzied by the flashing of the rays. Yet it does not therefore faintheartedly give up the 38 task, but with purpose unsubdued presses onwards to such contemplation as is possible, like the athlete who strives for the second prize since he has been disappointed of the first. Now second to the true vision stands conjecture and theorizing and all that can be brought into the category of reasonable probability. So then just as, though we do not know 39 and cannot with certainty determine what each of the stars is in the purity of its essence, we eagerly persist in the search because our natural love of learning makes us delight in what seems probable, so too, 40 though the clear vision of God as He really is is denied us, we ought not to relinquish the quest. For the very seeking, even without finding, is felicity in itself, just as no one blames the eyes of the body because when unable to see the sun itself they see the emanation of its rays as it reaches the earth, which is but the extremity of the brightness which the beams of

PHILO

- 41 αὐγῶν ἔσχατον φέγγος. VIII. εἰς ἅπερ ἀπιδὼν ὁ ἱεροφάντης καὶ θεοφιλέστατος Μωυσῆς ἰκετεύει τὸν θεὸν λέγων· “ ἐμφάνισόν μοι σαυτόν,” μόνον οὐ κατασχεθεὶς καὶ ἐκβοῶν ἄντικρυς, ὅτι “ τοῦ μὲν εἶναί σε καὶ ὑπάρχειν διδάσκαλος καὶ ὑφηγητῆς μοι γέγονεν ὅδε ὁ κόσμος, καὶ ὡς υἱὸς ἀναδιδάξας με περὶ τοῦ πατρὸς καὶ ὡς ἔργον περὶ τοῦ τεχνίτου· τίς δὲ κατὰ τὴν οὐσίαν τυγχάνεις ὧν διαγνῶναι ποθῶν οὐδένα τούτου τοῦ μαθήματος ὑφηγητὴν ἐν οὐδενὶ τῶν τοῦ παντὸς μερῶν ἀν-
- 42 ευρίσκω. διὸ δὴ δέομαι καὶ ποτνιῶμαι προσέσθαι τὴν ἰκεσίαν ἀνδρὸς ἰκέτου καὶ φιλοθέου καὶ μόνον σὲ θεραπεύειν ἀξιούντος· ὡς γὰρ τὸ φῶς ὑφ’ ἑτέρου μὴ γνωριζόμενον αὐτὸ ἑαυτοῦ γνώρισμά ἐστιν, οὕτως καὶ σὺ σεαυτὸν μόνος ἂν φῆναι δύναιο. διὸ συγγνώμης ἀξιώ τυχεῖν, εἰ σπάνει τοῦ διδάξοντος ἐπὶ σὲ καταφυγεῖν ἐθάρρησα περὶ σοῦ σπεύδων
- 43 μαθεῖν.” ὁ δὲ “ τὴν μὲν προθυμίαν ” φησὶν “ ἐπαινετὴν οὖσαν ἀποδέχομαι, τὸ δ’ αἴτημα οὐδενὶ τῶν εἰς γένεσιν ἠκόντων ἐφαρμόζει. χαρίζομαι δ’ ἐγὼ τὰ οἰκεία τῷ ληψομένῳ· οὐ γὰρ ὅσα μοι δοῦναι ῥάδιον καὶ ἀνθρώπῳ λαβεῖν δυνατόν· ὅθεν ὀρέγω τῷ χάριτος ἀξίῳ πάσας ὅσας ἂν οἶός τε ἦ δέξασθαι
- 44 δωρεάς. τὴν δ’ ἐμὴν κατάληψιν οὐχ οἶον ἀνθρώπου φύσις ἀλλ’ οὐδ’ ὁ σύμπας οὐρανός τε καὶ κόσμος

---

<sup>a</sup> §§ 41-50 are a meditation on Ex. xxxiii. 13-23. The divine answer to the first petition, “Reveal thyself to me” (v. 13), is not reproduced by Philo, but the words of § 43, “I freely bestow,” etc., are an interpretation of part of God’s answer to the second petition, “I will be gracious to whom I will be gracious, and will shew mercy on whom I will shew the sun give forth. VIII. It was this 41 which Moses the sacred guide, most dearly beloved of God, had before his eyes when he besought God with the words, "Reveal Thyself to me."<sup>a</sup> In these words we may almost hear plainly the inspired cry "This universe has been my teacher, to bring me to the knowledge that Thou art and dost subsist. As Thy son, it has told me of its Father, as Thy work of its contriver. But what Thou art in Thy essence I desire to understand, yet find in no part of the All any to guide me to this knowledge. Therefore I pray and 42 beseech Thee to accept the supplication of a suppliant, a lover of God, one whose mind is set to serve Thee alone ; for as knowledge of the light does not come by any other source but what itself supplies, so too Thou alone canst tell me of Thyself. Wherefore I crave pardon if, for lack of a teacher, I venture to appeal to Thee in my desire to learn of Thee." He replies, "Thy zeal I approve as praiseworthy, but 43 the request cannot fitly be granted to any that are brought into being by creation. I freely bestow what is in accordance with the recipient ; for not all that I can give with ease is within man's power to take, and therefore to him that is worthy of My grace I extend all the boons which he is capable of receiving.

 But the apprehension of Me is something more than 44 human nature, yea even the whole heaven and mercy." In the second petition (v. 18), which Philo reads, in accordance with some mss. of the LXX, as "Shew me thy glory" (so also E.V.), glory is interpreted to mean the Powers as distinguished from the Self-existent, and God's answer, "Thou shalt see the things behind me," LXX τὰ ὀπίσω μου (A.V. "my back parts," R.V. "my back"), is taken to mean "Thou shalt see what lies behind the Powers, i.e. their manifestation in the sensible world." The same interpretation of the verse is given in De Fuga 165, De Mut. 9, De Post. 169.

PHILO

δυνήσεται χωρήσαι. γνώθι δὴ σαυτὸν καὶ μὴ συνεκφέρου ταῖς ὑπὲρ δύνάμιν ὄρμαῖς καὶ ἐπιθυμίαις, μηδέ σε τῶν ἀνεφίκτων ἔρως αἰρέτω καὶ μετεωρίζετω· τῶν γὰρ ἐφικτῶν οὐδενὸς ἀμοιρή-45 σεις.” ταῦτα ἀκούσας ἐπὶ δευτέραν ἰκεσίαν ἦλθε καὶ φησι· “πέπεισμαι μὲν ταῖς σαῖς ὑφηγήσειςιν, ὅτι οὐκ ἂν ἴσχυσα δέξασθαι τὸ τῆς σῆς φαντασίας ἐναργὲς εἶδος. ἰκετεύω δὲ τὴν γοῦν περὶ σέ δόξαν θεάσασθαι· δόξαν δὲ σὴν εἶναι νομίζω τὰς περὶ σέ δορυφορούσας δυνάμεις, ὧν διαφεύγουσα ἢ κατάληψις ἄχρι τοῦ παρόντος οὐ μικρὸν ἐνεργάζεται 46 μοι πόθον τῆς διαγνώσεως.” ὁ δὲ ἀμείβεται καὶ φησιν· “ὡς ἐπιζητεῖς δυνάμεις εἰσὶν ἀόρατοι καὶ νοηταὶ πάντως ἐμοῦ τοῦ ἀοράτου καὶ νοητοῦ· λέγω δὲ νοητὰς οὐχὶ τὰς<sup>1</sup> ἤδη ὑπὸ νοῦ καταλαμβανόμενας, ἀλλ’ ὅτι εἰ καταλαμβάνεσθαι οἰαί τε εἶεν, οὐκ ἂν αἰσθησις αὐτὰς ἀλλ’ ἀκραιφνέστατος νοῦς κατα-47 λαμβάνοι. πεφυκυῖαι δ’ ἀκατάληπτοι κατὰ τὴν οὐσίαν ὅμως παραφαίνουσιν ἐκμαγεῖόν τι καὶ ἀπεικόνημα τῆς ἑαυτῶν ἐνεργείας· οἷαι αἱ παρ’ ὑμῖν σφραγίδες—ὅταν (γὰρ) προσενεχθῆ κηρὸς ἢ τις ὁμοιότροπος ὕλη, μυρίους ὄσους τύπους ἐναπομάτ-[219] τονται, μηδὲν ἀκρωτηριασθεῖσαι μέρος, | ἀλλ’ ἐν ὁμοίῳ μένουσαι,—τοιαύτας ὑποληπτέον καὶ τὰς περὶ ἐμέ δυνάμεις περιποιούσας ἀποίοις ποιότητας καὶ μορφὰς ἀμόρφους καὶ μηδὲν τῆς αἰδίου φύσεως 48 μῆτ’ ἀλλαττομένας μῆτε μειουμένας. ὀνομάζουσι

<sup>1</sup> For οὐχὶ τὰς I suggest οὐχ ὡς. See note a.

<sup>a</sup> This must be the meaning if the text is to stand, but what are “the powers which are now discerned by mind”? The universe will be able to contain. Know thyself, then, and do not be led away by impulses and desires beyond thy capacity, nor let yearning for the unattainable uplift and carry thee off thy feet, for of the obtainable nothing shall be denied thee." When 45

THE SPECIAL LAWS, I. 44-47

Moses heard this, he addressed to Him a second petition and said, "I bow before Thy admonitions, that I never could have received the vision of Thee clearly manifested, but I beseech Thee that I may at least see the glory that surrounds Thee, and by Thy glory I understand the powers that keep guard around Thee, of whom I would fain gain apprehension, for though hitherto that has escaped me, the thought of it creates in me a mighty longing to have knowledge of them." To this He answers, "The powers which 46 thou seekest to know are discerned not by sight but by mind even as I, Whose they are, am discerned by mind and not by sight, and when I say 'they are discerned by mind' I speak not of those<sup>a</sup> which are now actually apprehended by mind but mean that if these other powers could be apprehended it would not be by sense but by mind at its purest. But while in their 47 essence they are beyond your apprehension, they nevertheless present to your sight a sort of impress and copy of their active working. You men have for your use seals which when brought into contact with wax or similar material stamp on them any number of impressions while they themselves are not docked in any part thereby but remain as they were. Such you must conceive My powers to be, supplying quality and shape to things which lack either and yet changing or lessening nothing of their eternal nature.

sense to be expected is "I do not mean that they are now discerned," and so Heinemann and Mangey.

PHILO

δ' αὐτὰς οὐκ ἀπὸ σκοποῦ τινες τῶν παρ' ὑμῖν ἰδέας, ἐπειδὴ ἕκαστα τῶν ὄντων εἰδοποιοῦσι<sup>1</sup> τὰ ἄτακτα τάττουσαι καὶ τὰ ἄπειρα καὶ ἀόριστα καὶ ἀσχημάτιστα περατοῦσαι καὶ περιορίζουσαι καὶ σχηματί-ζουσαι καὶ συνόλως τὸ χεῖρον εἰς τὸ ἄμεινον 49 μεθαρμοζόμεναι. μήτ' οὖν ἐμὲ μήτε τινὰ τῶν ἐμῶν δυνάμεων κατὰ τὴν οὐσίαν ἐλπίσης ποτέ δυνήσεσθαι καταλαβεῖν. τῶν δ' ἐφικτῶν, ὡς εἶπον, ἐτοιμῶς καὶ προθύμῶς μεταδίδωμι· ταῦτα δ' ἐστὶν ἐπὶ τὴν τοῦ κόσμου καὶ τῶν ἐν αὐτῷ καλέσαι θέαν, ἣν οὐ σώματος ὀφθαλμοῖς ἀλλὰ τοῖς διανοίας ἀκοιμήτοις ὄμμασι συμβαίνει καταλαμβάνεσθαι.
 50 μόνον ὁ σοφίας ἕμερος συνεχῆς ἔστω καὶ πυκνός, ἣ δογμάτων ἀοιδίμων καὶ περικαλλεστάτων ἀναπίμπλησι τοὺς φοιτητὰς καὶ γνωρίμους αὐτῆς."· ταῦτα ἀκούσας οὐκ ἐπαύσατο τῆς ἐπιθυμίας, ἀλλ' ἔτι τὸν ἐπὶ τοῖς ἀοράτοις πόθον ἐζωπύρει.
 51 IX. Καὶ πάντας τοὺς ὁμοιοτρόπους εἴτ' οὖν φύντας ἐξ ἀρχῆς εἴτε καὶ ἐκ τοῦ μεταβάλλεσθαι πρὸς τὴν ἀμείνω τάξιν κρείττους γεγονότας ἀποδέχεται, τοὺς μὲν ὅτι τὴν εὐγένειαν οὐ κατέλυσαν, τοὺς δ' ὅτι πρὸς εὐσέβειαν ἠξίωσαν μεθορμίσασθαι<sup>2</sup> —τούτους δὲ καλεῖ προσηλύτους ἀπὸ τοῦ προσεληλυθέναι καινῇ καὶ φιλοθέῳ πολιτείᾳ,—οἱ μυθικῶν μὲν ἀλογοῦσι πλασμάτων, περιέχονται δὲ ἀκραιφ-

<sup>1</sup> Or, as some mss., ἰδιοποιοῦσι, "give individuality." It would be quite in Philo's way to associate ἴδιος with ἰδέα.

<sup>2</sup> mss. μεθαρμόσασθαι, a word less suitable here and often confused in mss. with μεθορμίσω. See Cohn, Hermes, 1908, p. 186.

THE SPECIAL LAWS, I. 48-51

Some among you call them not inaptly 'forms' or 48
'ideas,'<sup>a</sup> since they bring form into everything that is, giving order to the disordered, limit to the unlimited, bounds to the unbounded, shape to the shapeless, and in general changing the worse to something better.
Do not, then, hope to be ever able to apprehend Me 49 or any of My powers in Our essence. But I readily and with right goodwill will admit you to a share of what is attainable. That means that I bid you come and contemplate the universe and its contents, a spectacle apprehended not by the eye of the body but by the unsleeping eyes of the mind.<sup>b</sup> Only let there 50 be the constant and profound longing for wisdom which fills its scholars and disciples with verities glorious in their exceeding loveliness." When Moses heard this, he did not cease from his desire but kept the yearning for the invisible aflame in his heart.

IX. All of like sort to him, all who spurn idle fables 51 and embrace truth in its purity, whether they have been such from the first or through conversion to the better side have reached that higher state, obtain His<sup>c</sup> approval, the former because they were not false to the nobility of their birth, the latter because their judgement led them to make the passage to piety.
These last he calls "proselytes," or newly-joined, because they have joined the new and godly common-

<sup>a</sup> This and § 323 below seem to be the only places where Philo definitely identifies the δυνάμεις with the Platonic ιδέαι, though perhaps De Cher. 51 αἱ τυπούσαι δυνάμεις τὰ ἐν μέρει may imply it.

<sup>b</sup> i.e. the contemplation must be philosophical, "looking through nature to nature's God."

<sup>c</sup> The subject of ἀποδέχεται is certainly God, but that of καλεῖ and the verbs that follow is more likely Moses. Rapid changes of this kind are not, I think, unusual in Philo.

PHILO

52 νοῦς ἀληθείας. ἰσοτιμίαν γοῦν ἅπασιν ἐπηλύταις διδοὺς καὶ χαρισάμενος ὅσα καὶ τοῖς αὐτόχθοσι παραινεῖ τοῖς εὐπατρίδαις, μὴ μόνον αὐτοὺς τιμαῖς γεραίρειν ἀλλὰ καὶ ἐξαιρέτῳ φιλία καὶ εὐνοία περιττῇ. καὶ μήποτ' εἰκότως· “ἀπολελοιπότες” φησὶ “πατρίδα καὶ φίλους καὶ συγγενεῖς δι' ἀρετὴν καὶ ὁσιότητα μὴ ἀμοιρεῖτῶσαν ἑτέρων πόλεων καὶ οἰκείων<sup>1</sup> καὶ φίλων, ἀλλ' ἕστωσαν ἔφεδροι καταφυγαὶ τοῖς πρὸς εὐσέβειαν αὐτομολοῦσι· φίλτρον γὰρ ἀνυσιμώτατον καὶ δεσμὸς ἄλυτος εὐνοίας ἐνωτικῆς ἢ τοῦ ἐνὸς θεοῦ τιμῆ.”

53 προστάττει δὲ μὴ, παρόσον αὐτοῖς ἰσονομίαν καὶ ἰσοτέλειαν [ἐπηλύταις]<sup>2</sup> παρέχει κατ-εγνωκόσι τοῦ πατρώου καὶ προγονικοῦ τύφου, στομαργία χρῆσασθαι καὶ ἀχαλίνῳ γλώσση βλασφημοῦντας οὓς ἕτεροι νομίζουσι θεούς, ἵνα μὴ κάκεῖνοι διακινηθέντες ἂ μὴ θέμις φθέγγωνται κατὰ

[220] τοῦ ὄντως ὄντος· ἀγνοία γὰρ τῆς | διαφορᾶς, ἅτε τὸ ψεῦδος ὡς ἀληθές προμαθόντες ἐκ παίδων καὶ σύντροφον ἔχοντες, ἐξαμαρτήσονται.

54 Τῶν δ' ἀπὸ τοῦ ἔθνους εἰ τινες καθυφίενται τὴν

<sup>1</sup> mss. οἰκιῶν.

<sup>2</sup> So Cohn: Mangey on the other hand expunges αὐτοῖς, which is absent in three mss., and retains ἐπηλύταις. Against Cohn it may be said that it is not clear why the order which follows should be addressed to the proselytes instead of to Israel (unless on the ground that converts or perverts are apt to be particularly severe to their former co-religionists). If ἐπηλύταις is retained a fair sense can be obtained. The honours awarded by God to converts from the outside religions might naturally be regarded as a signal evidence of the abhorrence which these religions deserve.

<sup>a</sup> See Lev. xix. 33, 34; Deut. x. 18, 19; E.V. “strangers.”

THE SPECIAL LAWS, I. 52-54

wealth.<sup>a</sup> Thus, while giving equal rank 52 to all in-comers with all the privileges which he gives to the native-born, he exhorts the old nobility to honour them not only with marks of respect but with special friendship and with more than ordinary goodwill.<sup>b</sup> And surely there is good reason for this ; they have left, he says, their country, their kinsfolk and their friends for the sake of virtue and religion. Let them not be denied another citizenship or other ties of family and friendship, and let them find places of shelter standing ready for refugees to the camp of piety. For the most effectual love-charm, the chain which binds indissolubly the goodwill which makes us one is to honour the one God.

Yet he 53 counsels them that they must not, presuming on the equal privilege and equal rank which He grants them because they have denounced the vain imaginings of their fathers and ancestors, deal in idle talk or revile with an unbridled tongue the gods whom others acknowledge,<sup>c</sup> lest they on their part be moved to utter profane words against Him Who truly is. For they know not the difference, and since the falsehood has been taught to them as truth from childhood and has grown up with them, they will go astray.

But if any members of the nation betray the honour 54

The word of course does not imply conversion to the religion of Israel, as Philo might have seen from "ye were proselytes in Egypt."

<sup>b</sup> "Thou shalt love him as thyself," Lev. xix. 34.

<sup>c</sup> This is no doubt mainly based on Ex. xxii. 28, "Thou shalt not revile God," where the LXX has θεός. See Mos. ii. 203 and note, with references to Josephus. But that passage shews that he gave the same interpretation to Lev. xxiv. 15, "whosoever curseth God shall bear the guilt of his sin," on the grounds that as this is treated as a lesser sin than naming the name of the Lord, it could not refer to the true God.

PHILO

τοῦ ἐνὸς τιμῆν, ὡς λιπόντες τὴν ἀναγκαιοτάτην τάξιν εὐσεβείας καὶ ὁσιότητος ταῖς ἀνωτάτω τι-μωρίαις ὀφείλουσι κολάζεσθαι, σκότος αἰρούμενοι πρὸ ἀγνοειδεστάτου φωτὸς καὶ τυφλὴν ἀπεργαζό-55 μνοι διάνοιαν ὀξὺ καθορᾶν δυναμένην. καὶ ἐπιτετράφθαι δὲ καλὸν ἅπασιν τοῖς ζῆλον ἔχουσιν ἀρετῆς ἐκ χειρὸς ἀναπράττειν ἀνυπερθέτως τὰς τιμωρίας, μήτ' εἰς δικαστήριον μήτ' εἰς βουλευτή-ριον μήτε συνόλως ἐπ' ἀρχὴν ἄγοντας, ἀλλὰ τῷ παραστάντι μισοπονήρῳ πάθει καὶ φιλοθέῳ καταχρησθαι πρὸς τὰς τῶν ἀσεβῶν ἀπαραιτήτους κολά-σεις, νομίσαντας αὐτοὺς ὑπὸ τοῦ καιροῦ τὰ πάντα γεγενῆσθαι, βουλευτάς, δικαστάς, στρατηγούς, ἐκκλησιαστάς, κατηγορούς, μάρτυρας, νόμους, δῆμον, ἵνα μηδενὸς ὄντος ἐμποδῶν ἄφοβοι σὺν ἀδείᾳ πολλῇ 56 προαγωνίζονται ὁσιότητος.

X. ἀνα-γέγραπται τις ἐν τοῖς νόμοις τὸ καλὸν τοῦτο τόλμημα τολμήσας. ἐπειδὴ γὰρ ἐθεάσατό τινας ἄλλοφύλοις συνόντας γυναιξὶ καὶ ἔνεκα τῶν πρὸς αὐτὰς φίλτρων ἀλογοῦντας μὲν τῶν πατριῶν, τελουμένους δὲ τὰς μυθικὰς τελετάς, ἕνα τὸν ἕξαρχον καὶ ἡγεμόνα τῆς παρανομίας καταθαρροῦντα ἤδη παρεπιδείκνυσθαι δημοσίᾳ τὸ ἀνοσιούργημα καὶ θυσίας ἀγάλμασι καὶ ξοάνοις ἀθύτους<sup>1</sup> φανερώς ἐπιτελοῦντα παρόντος ἅπαντος τοῦ πλήθους ἐνθουσιῶν, ἀνείρξας τοὺς παρ'

<sup>1</sup> MSS. ἀθύτοις.

---

<sup>a</sup> For this section cf. Deut. xiii. 12 ff., and xvii. 6 ff., though there a stricter inquiry is enjoined than what is suggested here. On this and Jewish lynching in general see App. pp. 616-618.

THE SPECIAL LAWS, I. 54-56

due to the One they should suffer the utmost penalties. They have abandoned their most vital duty, their service in the ranks of piety and religion, have chosen darkness in preference to the brightest light and blindfolded the mind which had the power of keen vision. <sup>a</sup>And it is well that all who have a zeal for <sup>55</sup> virtue should be permitted to exact the penalties offhand and with no delay, without bringing the offender before jury or council or any kind of magistrate at all, and give full scope to the feelings which possess them, that hatred of evil and love of God which urges them to inflict punishment without mercy on the impious. They should think that the occasion has made them councillors, jurymen, high sheriffs,<sup>b</sup> members of assembly, accusers, witnesses, laws, people, everything in fact, so that without fear or hindrance they may champion religion in full security.

X. There is recorded in the Laws <sup>56</sup> the example of one who acted with this admirable courage.<sup>c</sup> He had seen some persons consorting with foreign women and through the attraction of their love-charms spurning their ancestral customs and seeking admission to the rites of a fabulous religion. One in particular he saw, the chief ringleader of the backsliding, who had the audacity to exhibit his unholy conduct in public and was openly offering sacrifices, a travesty of the name, to images of wood and stone in the presence of the whole people. So, seized with inspired fury, keeping back the throng of spectators

<sup>b</sup> Or "governor (of a nome)." See note on De Ios. 3. Goodenough, "Roman magistrates."

<sup>c</sup> See Num. xxv. ff. The story of Phinehas, used for allegorical purposes in De Post. 182 ff., De Ebr. 73 ff., De Conf. 57, has been given in much the same terms as here, though more fully, in Mos. i. 301 ff.

PHILO

- ἐκάτερα ἐπὶ τὴν θεάν ἠθροισμένους, οὐδὲν εὐλαβηθεῖς ἀναιρεῖ σὺν τῇ γυναικί, τὸν μὲν ἔνεκα τῆς εὐμαθείας <τῶν> ἃ λυσιτελὲς ἀπομανθάνειν, τὴν δ' 57 ὅτι διδάσκαλος κακῶν ἐγένετο. τουτὶ τὸ ἔργον ἐξαίφνης δρασθὲν ἐν θερμῷ παραστήματι μυρίους ἐνουθέτησε τῶν ἐπὶ ταῦτα παρασκευαζομένων. ἐπαινέσας οὖν ὁ θεὸς τὴν ἀριστείαν αὐτοκελεύστω καὶ ἐθελουργῶ σπουδῇ γενομένην διτταῖς αὐτὸν ἀναστέφει δωρεαῖς, εἰρήνη καὶ ἱερωσύνη, τῇ μὲν κρίνας ἄξιον ἀπολέμου μεταποιεῖσθαι βίου τὸν ἀράμενον τοὺς ὑπὲρ θεοῦ τιμῆς ἀγῶνας, τῇ δ' ὅτι γέρας οἰκειότατον εὐσεβοῦς ἀνδρὸς ἱερωσύνη θεραπείαν ἐπαγγελλομένη τοῦ πατρός, ᾧ τὸ δουλεύειν οὐκ ἐλευθερίας μόνον ἀλλὰ καὶ βασιλείας ἄμεινον.
- 58 ἔνιοι δὲ τοσαύτῃ κέχρηται μανίας ὑπερβολῇ, ὥστ' οὐδ' ἀναχώρησιν αὐτοῖς εἰς μετά-[221] νοιαν | ἀπολείποντες ἵενται πρὸς δουλείαν τῶν χειροκμήτων, γράμμασιν αὐτὴν ὁμολογοῦντες, οὐκ ἐν χαρτιδίοις, <ἀλλ'>, ὡς ἐπὶ τῶν ἀνδραπόδων ἔθος, [ἀλλ'] ἐν τοῖς σώμασι καταστίζοντες αὐτὰ σιδήρῳ πεπυρωμένῳ πρὸς ἀνεξάλειπτον μονήν· οὐδὲ γὰρ χρόνῳ ταῦτα ἀμαυροῦται.
- 59 XI. Τὴν δ' ὁμοίαν προαίρεσιν ὁ ἱερώτατος Μωυσῆς καὶ ἐπὶ τῶν ἄλλων ἅπαξ ἀπάντων σώζειν ἔοικεν ἀληθείας ἐραστῆς ὧν καὶ διδάσκαλος, ἣν καὶ πᾶσι τοῖς γνωρίμοις ἐγχαράττειν καὶ ἐνσφραγίζεσθαι ποθεῖ τὰς ψευδεῖς δόξας μακρὰν τῆς διανοίας

<sup>a</sup> The allusion is to Lev. xix. 28 (cf. ib. xxi. 5, Deut. xiv. 1), "Ye shall not make any cuttings in your flesh for the dead (LXX ἐπὶ ψυχῇ), nor print any marks upon you," which Philo takes to refer to idolatrous practices. Such connexion as there is with the preceding section lies in the antithesis between bondage to God and bondage to idols. See App. p. 618.

THE SPECIAL LAWS, I. 56-59

on either side, he slew without a qualm him and her, the man because he listened to lessons which it were a gain to unlearn, the woman because she had been the instructor in wickedness. This deed suddenly wrought in the heat of excitement acted as a warning to multitudes who were preparing to make the same apostasy. So then God, praising his high achievement, the result of zeal self-prompted and whole-hearted, crowned him with a twofold award, the gifts of peace and priesthood, the first because He judged the champion who had battled for the honour of God worthy to claim a life free from war, the second because the guerdon most suitable to a man of piety is the priestly office which professes the service of the Father, bondage to Whom is better not only than freedom but also than kingship. <sup>a</sup> But some labour under a madness carried to such an extravagant extent that they do not leave themselves any means of escape to repentance, but press to enter into bondage to the works of men and acknowledge it by indentures not written on pieces of parchment, but, as is the custom of slaves, branded on their bodies with red-hot iron. And there they remain indelibly, for no lapse of time can make them fade.

XI. The like principle <sup>b</sup> is clearly maintained in the case of everything else by the most holy Moses, who loves and teaches the truth which he desires to engrave and stamp on all his disciples, dislodging and banishing false opinions to a distance from their <sup>b</sup> Not very clear. It obviously cannot refer to the preceding section, nor very appropriately to §§ 56, 57. For Philo does not go on to suggest that the persons now described should be lynched or even judicially executed, but merely excluded, though Lev. xx. 6 and 27 sanction the penalty of death. See App. p. 618.

PHILO

- 60 αὐτῶν ἀποικίζων. ἐπιστάμενος γοῦν τῷ πλάνῳ τῶν πολλῶν βίῳ συμπράττουσαν οὐ μετρίως εἰς ἀνοδίαν μαντικῆν, οὐδενὶ τῶν εἰδῶν αὐτῆς ἐᾶ χρησθαι, πάντας δὲ τοὺς κολακεύοντας αὐτὴν ἐλαύνει τῆς ἰδίου<sup>1</sup> πολιτείας, θύτας, καθαρτάς, οἰωνοσκοπούς, τερατοσκοπούς, ἐπάδοντας, κλη-
- 61 δόσιν ἐπανέχοντας. στοχασταὶ γὰρ πάντες οὗτοι πιθανῶν καὶ εἰκότων, ἄλλοτε ἄλλας ἀπὸ τῶν αὐτῶν φαντασίας λαμβάνοντες, διὰ τὸ μήτε τὰ ὑποκείμενα φύσιν ἔχειν πάγιον μήτε τὴν διάνοιαν ἀκριβῆ βάσανον περιπεποιῆσθαι, ἢ βασανισθήσεται τὰ
- 62 δόκιμα. παρασκευαὶ δὲ πάντα ταῦτ' εἰσὶν ἀσεβείας· διὰ τί; ὅτι ὁ προσέχων καὶ πειθόμενος αὐτοῖς ἀλογεῖ τοῦ πάντων αἰτίου μόνα ταῦθ' ὑπολαμβάνων ἀγαθῶν εἶναι καὶ κακῶν αἴτια, καὶ οὐκ αἰσθάνεται τὰς τοῦ βίου φροντίδας ἐξάπτων ἀβεβαιοτάτων πεισμάτων, ὀρνίθων καὶ πτερῶν καὶ φορᾶς ἐν ἀέρι τῆς ὠδε κάκεισε καὶ χαμαιζήλων ἐρπετῶν, ἃ τῶν φωλεῶν ἀνέρπει πρὸς ζήτησιν τροφῆς, ἔτι δὲ σπλάγχνων καὶ αἵματος καὶ νεκρῶν σωμάτων, ἃ στερόμενα ψυχῆς εὐθύς ἐπισυμπίπτει καὶ συγχεῖται καὶ ἑτεροιούμενα τὰς οικείας φύσεις ἐξαλλάττει
- 63 πρὸς τὴν χεῖρω μεταβολήν. ἀξιοὶ γὰρ τὸν ἐγγραφόμενον τῇ κατὰ τοὺς νόμους πολιτεία "τέλειον" εἶναι, μὴ ἐν οἷς οἱ πολλοὶ πεπαιδοτριβήνται, μαντείας καὶ κληδόσι καὶ πιθαναῖς εἰκασίαις, ἀλλ'

<sup>1</sup> mss. ιδίας or mostly αἰδίου. The adjective has -os, -a, -on or -os, -on indifferently.

<sup>a</sup> These terms are largely drawn from Deut. xviii. 10 f. where we have περικαθαίρων τὸν υἱὸν ἐν πυρὶ, κληδονίζόμενος, οἰωνιζόμενος, φαρμακὸς ἐπαιδῶν ἐπαιδῆν, τερατοσκοπός. Philo's καθαρητής, which Heinemann translates by "Sühnepriester,"

THE SPECIAL LAWS, I. 60-63

understanding. Thus, knowing that the erring life 60 of the multitude is greatly helped on its way into the wilds by the art of divination, he forbids them to use any of its forms and expels from his own commonwealth all its fawning followers, haruspices, purificators, augurs, interpreters of prodigies, incantators,<sup>a</sup> and those who put their faith in sounds and voices.
For all these are but guessing at what is plausible and 61 probable, and the same phenomena present to them ideas which differ at different times because the things on which they are based have no natural stability nor has the understanding acquired any accurate touchstone by which the genuine can be tested and approved. All these pave the way for 62 impiety. Why so? Because he who pays attention and puts confidence in them is spurning the Cause of all in his belief that they are the sole causes of good and evil and fails to perceive that the anchors on which he moors his life and its cares are utterly insecure, such as birds and wings and their flight hither and thither through the air, and grovelling reptiles which crawl out of their holes to seek their food; and again entrails and blood and corpses which deprived of life at once collapse and decompose and in this process exchange their natural properties for others of worse condition. Moses demands that 63 one who is registered in the commonwealth of the laws should be perfect not in the lore, in which the many are schooled, of divination and voices and evidently corresponds to the περικαθαίρων of Deut. (E.V. "makes his son to pass through fire"). κληδόσι, cf. Mos. i. 287, may mean "omens" generally. The "haruspex" naturally has no place in Deut., as the O.T., I believe, shews no trace of divining by entrails of victims. θύτης is given in L. & S. revised as "diviner," but is clearly more specific.

PHILO

- ἐν τοῖς πρὸς θεὸν οὐδὲν ἔχουσιν ἐπαμφοτερίζον ἢ ἀμφίβαλον ἀλλ' ἀνευδοίαστον καὶ γυμνὴν ἀλήθειαν.
- 64 ἐπεὶ δὲ πᾶσιν ἀνθρώποις ἔρως τῆς τῶν μελλόντων ἐπιστήμης ἐνίδρυνται καὶ διὰ τὸν ἔρωτα τοῦτον ἐπὶ θυτικὴν καὶ τὰ ἄλλα εἶδη τρέπονται μαντικῆς, ὡς δι' αὐτῶν τὸ σαφὲς ἀνευρήσοντες, τὰ δ' ἀσαφείας γέμει πολλῆς καὶ ἐξ ἑαυτῶν αἰεὶ διελέγχεται, τούτοις μὲν σφόδρα εὐτόνως ἐπακολουθεῖν ἀπαγορεύει, φησὶ δ' ὅτι, εἰ ἀκλινῶς [222] εὐσεβῶσιν, οὐκ | ἀμοιρήσουσι τῆς τῶν μελλόντων 65 ἐπιγνώσεως, ἀλλὰ τις ἐπιφανεῖς ἐξαπιναιῶς προφήτης θεοφόρητος θεσπιεῖ καὶ προφητεύσει, λέγων μὲν οἰκείον οὐδέν—οὐδὲ γάρ, εἰ λέγει, δύναται καταλαβεῖν ὃ γε κατεχόμενος ὄντως καὶ ἐνθουσιῶν, —ὅσα δ' ἐνηχεῖται, διελεύσεται καθάπερ ὑποβάλ-λοντος ἐτέρου· ἐρμηνεῖς γάρ εἰσιν οἱ προφήται θεοῦ καταχρωμένου τοῖς ἐκείνων ὄργανοις πρὸς δῆλωσιν ὧν ἂν ἐβελήσῃ. ταῦτα καὶ τὰ τούτοις παραπλήσια περὶ τῆς τοῦ ἐνὸς θεοῦ καὶ ὄντως ὄντος ἐννοίας ὑπειπῶν, ὃν χρῆ τρόπον ἀπονέμειν αὐτῷ τὰς τιμὰς ἐξῆς ὑπογράφει.
- 66 XII.<sup>1</sup> Τὸ μὲν ἀνωτάτω καὶ πρὸς ἀλήθειαν ἱερὸν θεοῦ νομίζειν τὸν σύμπαντα χρῆ κόσμον εἶναι, νεῶ μὲν ἔχοντα τὸ ἀγιώτατον τῆς τῶν ὄντων οὐσίας μέρος, οὐρανόν, ἀναθήματα δὲ τοὺς ἀστέρας, ἱερέας δὲ τοὺς ὑποδιακόνους αὐτοῦ τῶν δυνάμεων ἀγγέλους, ἀσω-μάτους ψυχάς, οὐ κράματα ἐκ λογικῆς καὶ ἀλόγου

<sup>1</sup> Here the mss. insert the heading Περὶ ἱεροῦ.

<sup>a</sup> See Deut. xviii. 15-18.

<sup>b</sup> So (v. 18), "I will put my words in his mouth and he shall speak unto them all that I shall command him."

<sup>c</sup> For the idea of insistence and reiteration in ἐνηχεῖν (in

THE SPECIAL LAWS, I. 63-66

plausible conjectures, but in his duties towards God in which there is nothing doubtful or ambiguous but undoubted, naked truth. <sup>a</sup> But since a 64 longing to know the future is ingrained in all men, which longing makes them turn to haruspication and the other forms of divination in the prospect of finding certainty thereby, though actually they are brimful of uncertainty and constantly convict themselves of falsehood—while he very earnestly forbids them to follow such, yet he tells them that if they do not swerve from piety they will not be denied the full knowledge of the future. A prophet possessed 65 by God will suddenly appear and give prophetic oracles.<sup>b</sup> Nothing of what he says will be his own, for he that is truly under the control of divine inspiration has no power of apprehension when he speaks but serves as the channel for the insistent<sup>c</sup> words of Another's prompting. For prophets are the interpreters of God, Who makes full use of their organs of speech to set forth what He wills. These and the like are his injunctions as to the conception of the one truly existing God. Having opened with them, he next proceeds to indicate how the honours due to Him should be paid.

XII.<sup>d</sup> The highest, and in the truest sense the holy, 66 temple of God is, as we must believe, the whole universe, having for its sanctuary the most sacred part of all existence, even heaven, for its votive ornaments the stars, for its priests the angels who are servitors to His powers, unbodied souls, not compounds colloquial English "to drum or din into one") see note on De Mut. 57. For the general sense of the passage cf. Quis Rerum 265 f.

<sup>d</sup> The mss. insert the heading "Of the temple," and Cohn begins a fresh numeration of chapters.

PHILO

φύσεως, οἷας τὰς ἡμετέρας εἶναι συμβέβηκεν, ἀλλ' ἐκτετμημένας τὸ ἄλογον, ὅλας δι' ὄλων νοεράς, 67 λογισμοὺς ἀκραιφνεῖς, μονάδι ὁμοιουμένας. τὸ δὲ χειρόκμητον· ἔδει γὰρ ὁρμὰς ἀνθρώπων μὴ ἀνακόψαι φορὰς τὰς εἰς εὐσέβειαν συντελούντων καὶ θυσίαις βουλομένων ἢ ἐπὶ τοῖς συμβαίνουσιν ἀγα-

[223] τοῖς εὐχαριστεῖν ἢ ἐφ' οἷς | ἂν ἀμαρτάνωσι συγγνώμην καὶ παραίτησιν αἰτεῖσθαι. προϋνόησε δ' ὡς οὔτε πολλαχόθι οὔτ' ἐν ταύτῳ πολλὰ κατασκευασθήσεται ἱερά, δικαιοῦσας, ἐπειδὴ εἰς ἔστιν ὁ

68 θεός, καὶ ἱερόν ἐν εἶναι μόνον. εἶτα τοῖς βουλομένοις ἐν ταῖς οἰκίαις αὐτῶν ἱεουργεῖν οὐκ ἐφήσιν, ἀλλ' ἀνισταμένους ἀπὸ περάτων γῆς εἰς τοῦτ' ἀφικνεῖσθαι κελεύει, ἅμα καὶ τῶν τρόπων ἀναγκαιοτάτην λαμβάνων βάσανον· ὁ γὰρ μὴ μέλλων θύειν εὐαγῶς οὐκ ἂν ὑπομείναι ποτέ πατρίδα καὶ φίλους καὶ συγγενεῖς ἀπολιπὼν ξενιτεύειν, ἀλλ' ἔοικεν ὑπὸ δυνατωτέρας ὀλκῆς ἀγόμενος τῆς πρὸς εὐσέβειαν ὑπομένειν τῶν συνηθεστάτων καὶ φιλιτάτων ὥσπερ τινῶν ἠνωμένων μερῶν ἀπαρτᾶσθαι.

69 καὶ τοῦδε σαφεστάτη πίστις τὰ γινόμενα· μυριοὶ γὰρ ἀπὸ μυρίων ὄσων πόλεων, οἱ μὲν διὰ γῆς, οἱ δὲ διὰ θαλάττης, ἐξ ἀνατολῆς καὶ δύσεως καὶ ἄρκτου καὶ μεσημβρίας καθ' ἐκάστην ἑορτὴν εἰς τὸ ἱερόν καταίρουσιν οἷά τινα κοινὸν ὑπόδρομον καὶ καταγωγὴν ἀσφαλῆ πολυπράγμονος καὶ ταραχωδεστάτου βίου, ζητοῦντες εὐδῖαν εὐρεῖν καὶ φροντίδων ἀνεθέντες, αἷς ἐκ πρώτης ἡλικίας καταζεύγνυνται καὶ πιέζονται, βραχύν τινα διαπνεύ-

70 σαντες χρόνον ἐν ἰλαραῖς διάγειν εὐθυμίαις· ἐλπίδων <sup>a</sup> Cf. Mos. ii. 288.

THE SPECIAL LAWS, I. 66-70

of rational and irrational nature, as ours are, but with the irrational eliminated, all mind through and through, pure intelligences, in the likeness of the monad.<sup>a</sup> There is also the temple made by hands; for 67 it was right that no check should be given to the forwardness of those who pay their tribute to piety and desire by means of sacrifices either to give thanks for the blessings that befall them or to ask for pardon and forgiveness for their sins. But he provided that there should not be temples built either in many places or many in the same place, for he judged that since God is one, there should be also only one temple.<sup>b</sup> Further, he does not consent to those who wish to 68 perform the rites in their houses, but bids them rise up from the ends of the earth and come to this temple. In this way he also applies the severest test to their dispositions. For one who is not going to sacrifice in a religious spirit would never bring himself to leave his country and friends and kinsfolk and sojourn in a strange land, but clearly it must be the stronger attraction of piety which leads him to endure separation from his most familiar and dearest friends who form as it were a single whole with himself.

And we have the surest proof of this in what actually 69 happens. Countless multitudes from countless cities come, some over land, others over sea, from east and west and north and south at every feast. They take the temple for their port as a general haven and safe refuge from the bustle and great turmoil of life, and there they seek to find calm weather, and, released from the cares whose yoke has been heavy upon them from their earliest years, to enjoy a brief breathing-space in scenes of genial cheerfulness. Thus filled 70 <sup>b</sup> See Deut. xii. 5-7, 11-14, 17-18. See also App. p. 618.

PHILO

τε χρηστῶν γεμισθέντες σχολάζουσι τὴν ἀναγκαιοτάτην σχολὴν ὁσιότητι καὶ τιμῇ θεοῦ, φιλίαν καὶ πρὸς τοὺς τέως ἀγνοουμένους συντιθέμενοι καὶ κρᾶσι ἡθῶν ἐπὶ θυσιῶν καὶ σπονδῶν εἰς βεβαιοτάτην πίστιν ὁμονοίας ποιούμενοι.

- 71 XIII. Τούτου τοῦ ἱεροῦ ὁ μὲν ἐξωτάτω περίβολος καὶ μήκει καὶ πλάτει μέγιστος ὢν τέσσαρσι στοαῖς εἰς πολυτέλειαν ἡσκημέναις ὠχύρωται· διπλῆ δ' ἐστὶν αὐτῶν ἐκάστη, ξύλων καὶ λίθων ὕλαις καὶ χορηγίαις ἀφθόνοις καὶ δημιουργῶν ἐμπειρίαις καὶ τῶν ἐφεστηκότων ἐπιμελείαις κατεσκευασμένη, τελειότατον ἔργον· οἱ δ' εἴσω βραχύτεροι μὲν,
- 72 αὐστηροτέραν δ' ἔχοντες τὴν κατασκευὴν. κατὰ δὲ τὸ μεσαίτατον αὐτὸς ὁ νεὸς παντὸς λόγου κρείττων, ὡς ἐκ τῶν φαινομένων ἔστι τεκμήρασθαι· τὰ γὰρ ἔνδον ἀόρατα παντί τῳ πλὴν ἐνὶ τῷ ἀρχιερεῖ, καὶ τούτῳ μέντοι, δι' ἔτους ἐπιτετραμμένον ἅπαξ εἰσιέναι, πάντ' ἐστὶν ἀθέατα· πυρεῖον γὰρ ἀνθράκων πλήρες καὶ θυμιαμάτων εἰσκομίζει, πολλῆς δ' ἀναδιδομένης ὡς εἰκὸς ἀτμίδος κατέχεται τὰν κύκλῳ πάντα καὶ ἡ ὄψις ἐπισκιάζεται καὶ ἀνακοπὴν ἴσχει
- 73 πρόσω χωρεῖν ἀδυνατοῦσα. μέγιστος δὲ ὢν καὶ

<sup>a</sup> Lit. "they are at leisure with the most necessary leisure." For this use of ἀναγκαῖος cf. § 54 above. Possibly, however, "the leisure which they are compelled by the nature of the circumstances to have," and so perhaps Heinemann ("unentbehrlicher"). But the cognate accusative, as used by Philo, seems to me to point clearly to the rendering in the translation.

<sup>b</sup> Here the mss. insert a heading Περὶ τοῦ ἱεροῦ, and Cohn begins a fresh numeration of the chapters, as in § 12. For a note on the description which follows see App. pp. 618-619.

<sup>c</sup> i.e. with two rows of pillars (so Heinemann).

THE SPECIAL LAWS, I. 70-73

with comfortable hopes they devote the leisure, as is their bounden duty,<sup>a</sup> to holiness and the honouring of God. Friendships are formed between those who hitherto knew not each other, and the sacrifices and libations are the occasion of reciprocity of feeling and constitute the surest pledge that all are of one mind.

XIII. <sup>b</sup>This temple is enclosed by an outermost 71 wall of very great length and breadth, which gains additional solidity by four porticos so adorned as to present a very costly appearance. Each of them is twofold,<sup>c</sup> and the stone and timber used as its materials and supplied in abundance, combined with the skill of experienced craftsmen and the care bestowed on it by the master-builders, have produced a very perfect piece of work. The inner walls are smaller and in a severer style of architecture. Right in the very middle stands the sanctuary itself 72 with a beauty baffling description, to judge from what is exposed to view. For all inside is unseen except by the high priest alone, and indeed he, though charged with the duty of entering once a year, gets no view of anything.<sup>d</sup> For he takes with him a brazier full of lighted coals and incense,<sup>e</sup> and the great quantity of vapour which this naturally gives forth covers everything around it, beclouds the eyesight and prevents it from being able to penetrate to any distance. The huge size and height of the 73

<sup>a</sup> See Lev. xvi. 34 and cf. Hebrews ix. 7, and in Philo, De Ebr. 136, De Gig. 52. Philo, however, seems to make a strange mistake, as it is only "the holy place within the veil" to which this applies. In § 274 and § 296 below he clearly states that the other priests had access to the rest of the sanctuary.

<sup>e</sup> See Lev. xvi. 12, 13.

PHILO

ὑψηλότατος, καίτοι<sup>1</sup> ἐν χθαμαλωτέρῳ κείμενος, τῶν [224] περιμηκεστάτων ὄρων οὐδενὸς | ἀποδεῖ. τὰ μὲν οὖν ἐν οἰκοδομαῖσι ὑπερβολὰς ἔχοντα περίβλεπτά τ' ἐστὶ καὶ θαυμάζεται πρὸς τῶν ὄρώντων καὶ μάλιστα τῶν ἐπιφοιτῶντων ξένων, οἱ συγκρίνοντες ταῖς οἰκῶν δημοσίων κατασκευαῖς ἐκπλήττονται τό τε 74 κάλλος ὁμοῦ καὶ τὴν πολυτέλειαν. ἄλλος δὲ οὐδὲν ἐστὶν ἐν τῷ περιβόλῳ προστάξει νόμον, διὰ πολλὰ· πρῶτον μὲν ὅτι οὐχ ἡδονὴν καὶ τέρψιν εὐδιάγωγον ἐπιζητεῖ τὸ πρὸς ἀλήθειαν ἱερὸν ἀλλ' αὐστηρὰν ἀγιστείαν· δεύτερον δ' ὅτι τὰ συντείνοντα πρὸς τὴν τῶν δένδρων χλόην οὐ θέμις εἰσκομίζεσθαι, τὰ δ' ἐστὶν ἀνθρώπων καὶ ζῶων ἀλόγων περιπτώματα· τρίτον δ' ὅτι τὰ μὲν τῆς ἀγρίας ὕλης πρὸς οὐδὲν ὄφελος, “ ἄχθος ” δ' ὡς οἱ ποιηταὶ φασὶ “ γῆς,” τὰ δὲ τῆς ἡμέρου, καρπῶν ἡμέρων οἰστικά, μεθέλξει τοὺς ὀλιγόφρονας ἀπὸ τῆς περὶ τὴν 75 ἱερουργίαν σεμνότητος. πρὸς δὲ τούτοις λάσια χωρία καὶ δρυμοὶ βαθεῖς κακούργων εἰσὶν ἐνδαιτή-ματα τὴν ἐκ τοῦ συσκιάζεσθαι ποριζομένων ἀσφά-λειαν καὶ τὰς ἐξ ἐνέδρας καθ' ὧν ἂν ἐθελήσωσιν αἰφνιδίους ἐπιθέσεις. αἱ δ' εὐρυχωρίαὶ καὶ τὸ ἀναπεπταμένον καὶ τὸ ἀνειμένον πάντῃ, μηδενὸς τὰς ὄψεις ἐμποδίζοντος, πρὸς τὴν τῶν εἰσιόντων καὶ ἐνδιατριβόντων ἀκριβῆ θεῶν ἱερῶ πρεπωδέστατον.<sup>2</sup>

<sup>1</sup> MSS. καὶ.

<sup>2</sup> MSS. ἱεροπρεπωδέστατον.

---

<sup>a</sup> See Deut. xvi. 21. LXX ἄλλος, R.V. Asherah. Hecataeus in his description of the temple (see on § 274) notes the absence of anything like a grove.

THE SPECIAL LAWS, I. 73-75

sanctuary make it in spite of its comparatively low situation as prominent an object as any of the highest mountains. In fact, so vast are the buildings that they are seen conspicuously and strike the eye with admiration, especially in the case of foreign visitors, who compare them with the architecture of their own public edifices and are amazed both at their beauty and magnificence.

But there is no grove within the walled area by 74 order of the law, for many reasons. <sup>a</sup> First, because the temple which is truly holy does not seek to provide pleasure and hours of easy enjoyment but the austerity of religion; secondly, because the means used to promote the verdure of trees, being the excrements of men and irrational animals, cannot be brought in there without profanity; thirdly, because the plants of the wild kind of vegetation are of no use, but only, as the poets say, "a burden to the soil,"<sup>b</sup> while those of the cultivated variety which produce fruits of the same quality will distract the weak-minded from the solemnity of the sacred rites. Furthermore, overgrown places and 75 dense thickets are the resort of malefactors, who use their obscurity for their own safety and as an ambush whence they can suddenly attack whomsoever they wish. Broad spaces and openness and absence of restriction on every side, where there is nothing to hinder the sight, are most suitable to a temple, to enable those who enter and spend their time there to have an accurate view.

<sup>b</sup> Ibid. xviii. 104, Od. xx. 379; in both cases ἄχθος ἀρούρης. Plato, however, has the form γῆς ἄχθη, Theaet. i. 176 D. In all these cases it is applied to human beings, and so by Philo, Mos. i. 30, De Cong. 171; but see Spec. Leg. iii. 50.

PHILO

- 76 XIV. Προσόδους δ' ἔχει τὸ ἱερὸν οὐ μόνον ἀποτομὰς γῆς ἀλλὰ καὶ πολὺ μείζους ἑτέρας, αἱ μὴδενὶ χρόνῳ φθαρῆσονται· ἐφ' ὅσον γὰρ τὸ ἀνθρώπων γένος διαμενεῖ—διαμενεῖ δ' εἰς αἰεῖ,—καὶ αἱ πρόσοδοι τοῦ ἱεροῦ φυλαχθήσονται συνδιαγωνίζουσαι
- 77 παντὶ τῷ κόσμῳ. προστέτακται γὰρ ἕκαστον ἀνὰ πᾶν ἔτος ἀπαρχὰς εἰσφέρειν ἀπὸ εἰκοσαετίας ἀρξάμενον. αἱ δ' εἰσφοραὶ “λύτρα” προσονομάζονται· διὸ καὶ προθυμώτατα ποιοῦνται τὰς ἀπαρχάς, φαιδροὶ καὶ γεγηθότες, ὡς ἅμα τῇ καταθέσει μέλλοντες ἢ δουλείας ἀπαλλαγὴν ἢ νόσων ἄκεσιν εὐρίσκεσθαι καὶ βεβαιοτάτην ἐλευθερίαν ὁμοῦ καὶ
- 78 σωτηρίαν εἰς ἅπαν καρποῦσθαι. πολυανθρωποτάτου δ' ἔθνους ὡς εἰκὸς καὶ τὰς ἀπαρχὰς ἀφθονωτάτας εἶναι συμβέβηκε· σχεδὸν γοῦν ἀνὰ πᾶσαν πόλιν ταμεῖα τῶν ἱερῶν χρημάτων ἐστίν, εἰς ἃ παραγινόμενοις ἔθος ἀπάρχεσθαι· καὶ χρόνοις ὠρισμένοις ἱεροπομποὶ τῶν χρημάτων ἀριστίνδην ἐπικριθέντες, ἐξ ἑκάστης οἱ δοκιμώτατοι, χειροτονοῦνται, σώους τὰς ἐλπίδας ἐκάστων παραπέμφοντες· ἐν γὰρ ταῖς νομίμοις ἀπαρχαῖς αἱ τῶν εὐσεβούντων ἐλπίδες εἰσίν.
- [225] XV. |<sup>1</sup> Φυλαὶ μὲν εἰσι τοῦ ἔθνους δώδεκα, μία δ' 79 ἐκ πασῶν ἀριστίνδην ἐπικριθεῖσα ἱεράται, γέρας ἀνδραγαθίας καὶ φιλοθέου σπουδῆς τουτὶ λαβοῦσα, καθ' ὃν καιρὸν ἔδοξεν ἢ πληθὺς ἀμαρτεῖν ἀπ-

<sup>1</sup> Here the mss. insert the heading Περὶ ἱερέων.

<sup>a</sup> See Ex. xxx. 12-16, where the “ransom” is to be paid at the census to avert the plague, which might be expected to follow such a proceeding (see Driver).

<sup>b</sup> Here the mss. give the heading “Of the priests,” but Cohn does not begin a new numeration of chapters.

<sup>c</sup> The allusion is of course to the slaughter of the Calf-

THE SPECIAL LAWS, I. 76-79

XIV. The revenues of the temple are derived not 76 only from landed estates but also from other and far greater sources which time will never destroy. For as long as the human race endures, and it will endure for ever, the revenues of the temple also will remain secure co-eternal with the whole universe. For it is 77 ordained that everyone, beginning at his twentieth year, should make an annual contribution of first-fruits.<sup>a</sup> These contributions are called "ransom money," and therefore the first-fruits are given with the utmost zeal. The donors bring them cheerfully and gladly, expecting that the payment will give them release from slavery or healing of diseases and the enjoyment of liberty fully secured and also complete preservation from danger. As the nation is 78 very populous, the offerings of first-fruits are naturally exceedingly abundant. In fact, practically in every city there are banking places for the holy money where people regularly come and give their offerings. And at stated times there are appointed to carry the sacred tribute envoys selected on their merits, from every city those of the highest repute, under whose conduct the hopes of each and all will travel safely. For it is on these first-fruits, as prescribed by the law, that the hopes of the pious rest.

XV.<sup>b</sup> The nation has twelve tribes, but one out 79 of these was selected on its special merits for the priestly office, a reward granted to them for their gallantry and godly zeal on an occasion<sup>c</sup> when the multitude was seen to have fallen into sin through worshippers by the Levites in Ex. xxxii. As to the statement that the Levites received their consecration as a reward for this, a statement made by Philo also in his longer account of the event in Mos. ii. 160 f. and repeated in Spec. Leg. iii. 125 f., see App. p. 619.

PHILO

ακολουθήσασα γνώμαις ἐνίων ἀγνώμοσιν, οἱ τὴν Αἰγυπτιακὴν ἔπεισαν ζηλοῦν ἡλιθιότητα καὶ τὸν ἐγχώριον τύφον, ὃν ἐπ' ἀλόγοις ζώοις καὶ μάλιστα ταύροις μυθοπλαστοῦσι· τοὺς γὰρ ἡγεμόνας τῆς ἀπονοίας ἅπαντας ἠβηδὸν αὐτοκέλευστοι κατακτείναντες εὐαγὲς ἔδοξαν ἔργον εἰργάσθαι, τοὺς ὑπὲρ εὐσεβείας ἀγῶνας διαθλήσαντες.

- 80 XVI. Νόμοι δὲ ἱερέων εἰσὶν οἷδε. παντελῆ καὶ ὀλόκληρον εἶναι τὸν ἱερέα προστέτακται, μηδεμίαν ἐν τῷ σώματι λώβην ἔχοντα, μήτε κατ' ἔνδειαν ἐπιλείποντος ἢ ἀκρωτηριασθέντος μέρους μήτε κατὰ πλεονασμὸν ἅμα τῇ γενέσει περιττεύσαντος ἢ ὕστερον ἐκ νόσου προσφύντος μήτε τῆς χροᾶς μεταβαλούσης εἰς λέπραν ἢ λειχήνας ἀγρίους ἢ μυρμηκίας ἢ τινὰς ἄλλας ἐξανθημάτων ἐκφύσεις· ἅ μοι δοκεῖ πάντα σύμβολα τῆς περὶ ψυχὴν εἶναι
- 81 τελειότητος. εἰ γὰρ τὸ φύσει θνητὸν σῶμα τοῦ ἱερέως ἐπισκεπτέον, ἵνα περὶ μηδὲν ἀτύχημα κηραίνῃ, πολὺ πλεον ψυχὴν τὴν ἀθάνατον, ἣν φασὶ τυπωθῆναι κατὰ τὴν εἰκόνα τοῦ ὄντος· λόγος δ' ἐστὶν εἰκῶν θεοῦ, δι' οὗ σύμπας ὁ κόσμος ἐδημιουργεῖτο.
- 82 Μετὰ δὲ τὴν ἐξ εὐπατριδῶν εὐγένειαν καὶ παντέλειαν τὴν ἐν τε σώμασι καὶ ψυχαῖς περὶ ἐσθῆτος, ἣν ἀναλαμβάνειν χρὴ τὸν ἱερέα μέλλοντα λειτουργεῖν τὰς ἱερὰς λειτουργίας, νενομοθέτηται. ἢ δ' ἐσθῆς ἐστὶ χιτῶν λινοῦς καὶ περιζῶμα, τὸ μὲν εἰς αἰδοίων σκέπην, ἃ μὴ πρὸς τῷ θυσιαστηρίῳ γυ-

---

<sup>a</sup> See Lev. xxi. 17-21 and xxii. 4. On "redundant" see App. p. 619.

THE SPECIAL LAWS, I. 79-83

following the ill-judged judgement of some who persuaded them to emulate the foolishness of Egypt and the vainly imagined fables current in that land, attached to irrational animals and especially to bulls. For the men of this tribe at no bidding but their own made a wholesale slaughter of all the leaders of the delusion and thus carrying to the end their championship of piety were held to have done a truly religious deed.

XVI. With regard to the priests there are the 80 following laws. It is ordained that the priest should be perfectly sound throughout, without any bodily deformity.<sup>a</sup> No part, that is, must be lacking or have been mutilated, nor on the other hand redundant, whether the excrescence be congenital or an after-growth due to disease. Nor must the skin have been changed into a leprous state or into malignant tetter or warts or any other eruptive growth. All these seem to me to symbolize perfection of soul. For if 81 the priest's body, which is mortal by nature, must be scrutinized to see that it is not afflicted by any serious misfortune, much more is that scrutiny needed for the immortal soul, which we are told was fashioned after the image of the Self-existent.<sup>b</sup> And the image of God is the Word through whom the whole universe was framed.

After providing for his pure descent from a noble 82 stock and his perfection both of body and soul, the legislation deals with the dress which the priest must assume when he is about to carry out the sacred rites. It consists of a linen tunic and short breeches, the 83 latter to cover the loins, which must not be exposed <sup>b</sup> Gen. i. 27. See note on § 171.

PHILO

μνουσθαι θέμις, ὁ δὲ χιτῶν ἔνεκα τῆς πρὸς τὴν ὑπηρεσίαν ὀξύτητος· ἀνείμονες γὰρ ἐν μόνοις χιτωνίσκοις τά τε ἱερέια καὶ τὰς εὐχὰς<sup>1</sup> καὶ τὰς σπονδὰς καὶ ὅσα ἄλλα θυσίαις χρήσιμα προσ-84 ἀγουσιν εἰς ἀνυπέρθετον τάχος ἡσκημένοι. τῷ δ' ἀρχιερεὶ διείρηται μὲν τὴν παραπλησίαν ἐσθῆτα ἀναλαμβάνειν, ἡνίκα ἂν εἰς τὰ ἄδυτα ἐπιθυμιάσων εἰσῆ, διὰ τὸ τὴν ὀθόνην ἐκ μηδενὸς τῶν ἀποθη-σκόντων ὥσπερ τὰ ἔρια γεννᾶσθαι, προστέτακται δὲ καὶ ἑτέρα χρῆσθαι πάνυ ποικίλην ἐχούσῃ κατα-σκευήν, ὡς ἀπεικόνισμα καὶ μίμημα τοῦ κόσμου 85 δοκεῖν εἶναι. σαφῆς δὲ πίστις ἡ κατασκευῆ. πρῶτον μὲν γὰρ ἔνδυμα περιφερές ἐστιν, ὅλον δι' ὄλων ὑακίνθινον, ποδήρης χιτῶν, ἀέρος σύμβολον, ἐπειδήπερ ὁ ἀήρ καὶ φύσει μέλας ἐστὶ καὶ τρόπον τινὰ ποδήρης, ἄνωθεν ἀπὸ τῶν μετὰ σελήνην [226] | τόπων ταθεῖς ἄχρι τῶν κατωτάτω γῆς μυχῶν.
 86 εἶθ' ὕφασμα θωρακοειδὲς ἐπὶ τούτῳ, σύμβολον οὐρανοῦ· δύο τε γὰρ ἐπὶ τῶν ἀκρωμίων λίθοι σμαράγδου τῆς τιμαλφεστάτης ὕλης εἰσίν, ὁ μὲν ἔνθεν, ὁ δ' ἔνθεν, εἰς ἐκατέρωθεν, περιφερεῖς, δειγ-ματα τῶν ἡμισφαιρίων, ὧν τὸ μὲν ὑπὲρ γῆν τὸ δ'

<sup>1</sup> καὶ τὰς εὐχὰς is omitted in the other mss. and appears in R as καὶ τὰς followed by a word which Cohn prints as εὐχὰς?. He does not say anything about the Armenian. See App. p. 620.

<sup>a</sup> See Ex. xxviii. 40-43.

<sup>b</sup> For the word ἀνείμονες see note on De Som. i. 99.

<sup>c</sup> See App. p. 620.

<sup>d</sup> Lev. xvi. 4. The linen garment worn on this special occasion is not mentioned in the account of Mos. ii. 109 ff.,

THE SPECIAL LAWS, I. 83-86

at the altar, while the tunic is to make them nimble in their ministry.<sup>a</sup> For in this undress,<sup>b</sup> with nothing more than the short tunics, they are attired so as to move with unhampered rapidity when they bring the victims and the votive offerings<sup>c</sup> and the libations and all other things needed for the sacrifices. The high priest is bidden to put on a similar dress<sup>d</sup> when he enters the inner shrine to offer incense, because its fine linen is not, like wool, the product of creatures subject to death, and also to wear another, the formation of which is very complicated.<sup>e</sup> In this it would seem to be a likeness and copy of the universe. This is clearly shewn by the design. In the first place, it is a circular garment of a dark blue colour throughout, a tunic with a full-length skirt, thus symbolizing the air, because the air is both naturally black and in a sense a full-length robe stretching from the sublunar region above to the lowest recesses of the earth. Secondly, on this is set a piece of woven work in the shape of a breastplate, which symbolizes heaven. For on the shoulder-points there are two emerald stones, a kind of substance which is exceedingly valuable. There is one of these on each side and both are circular, representing the hemispheres, one of which is above and one under but its significance is pointed out at length in De Ebr. 86 ff. Cf. Leg. All. ii. 56.

<sup>e</sup> §§ 84-94. This account and interpretation of the long robe (see Ex. xxviii.) follow closely that of Mos. ii. 109-135, and the differences, mainly in the treatment of the two mysterious objects called in the LXX Clear shewing and Truth (E.V. Urim and Thummim), § 88, and of the Bells, § 93, were, together with a comparison of the interpretation of the Bells in De Mig. 102 f., discussed in the note in Vol. VI. p. 609, and the discussion need not be repeated here.

PHILO

- 87 ὑπὸ γῆν ἔστιν. εἶτα πρὸς τοῖς στέρνοις δώδεκα λίθοι πολυτελεῖς τὰς χροὰς διαφέροντες, ἐκ τριῶν τεταγμένοι τετραστοιχεί, πρὸς παράδειγμα τοῦ ζωδιακοῦ τυπωθέντες· καὶ γὰρ ἐκεῖνος ἐκ δώδεκα συνεστῶς ζωδίων τὰς ἐτησίους τέτταρας ὥρας ἀπο-
- 88 τελεῖ τρία νέϊμας εἰς ἐκάστην. σύμπας δ' ὁ τόπος καλεῖται λογεῖον ἐτύμως, ἐπειδὴ τὰ ἐν οὐρανῷ πάντα λόγοις καὶ ἀναλογίαις δεδημιούργηται καὶ συντέτακται· τῶν γὰρ ἐκεῖ τὸ παράπαν ἄλογον οὐδέν. ἐπὶ δὲ τοῦ λογεῖου διττὰ ὑφάσματα καταποικίλλει προσαγορεύων τὸ μὲν δήλωσιν, τὸ δὲ
- 89 ἀλήθειαν. αἰνίττεται δὲ διὰ μὲν τῆς ἀληθείας, ὅτι οὐρανοῦ τὸ παράπαν ψεῦδος ἐπιβαίνειν οὐ θεμιτόν, ἀλλὰ τοῦθ' ἅπαν εἰς τὸν περίγειον πεφυγάδευται χῶρον ψυχαῖς ἐναγῶν ἀνθρώπων εἰσοικιζόμενον, διὰ δὲ τῆς δηλώσεως, ὅτι αἱ κατ' οὐρανὸν φύσεις ἕκαστα δηλοῦσι τῶν παρ' ἡμῖν, ἃ καθ' αὐτὰ πάντως
- 90 ἂν ἦν ἄγνωστα. σημεῖον δ' ἐναργέστατον· εἰ μὴ φῶς ἡλίου<sup>1</sup> ἀνέλαμψε, πῶς ἂν αἱ τῶν σωμάτων ἀμύθητοι ποιότητες διεφάνησαν, πῶς δ' ἂν αἱ πολύμορφοι τῶν χρωμάτων καὶ σχημάτων ἰδέαι; ἡμέρας δὲ καὶ νύκτας μῆνάς τε καὶ ἐνιαυτοὺς καὶ συνόλως χρόνον τίς ἀνέδειξεν ὅτι μὴ σελήνης καὶ ἡλίου καὶ τῶν ἄλλων ἀστέρων αἱ ἐναρμόνιοι καὶ
- 91 παντὸς λόγου κρείττους περιφοραί; τίς δὲ τὴν

<sup>1</sup> So R and the Armenian. The other mss. have φῶς ἡλιος or φῶς ἡλιος δ'. Cohn prints φῶς, ἡλίου ἡλιος, appealing to § 279 below, but there the "sun's sun" is God. He also cites (Hermes, 1908, p. 187) De Op. 31 as representing light as the source of the sun, but that light is the φῶς νοητόν, an idea which is not, I think, suited to this passage. For further discussion see App. p. 620.

THE SPECIAL LAWS, I. 87-91

the earth. Then on the breast there are twelve 87 precious stones of different colours, arranged in four rows of three each, set in this form on the model of the zodiac, for the zodiac consisting of twelve signs makes the four seasons of the year by giving three signs to each.

<sup>a</sup>This part of the dress as 88 a whole is significantly called the reason-seat, because heaven and its contents are all framed and ordered on rational principles and proportions, for nothing there is irrational. On the reason-seat he embroidered two pieces of woven work, one of which he called Clear Shewing and the other Truth. By 89 Truth he suggests the thought that no falsehood is allowed to set foot in heaven but has been banished entirely to the earthly regions and has its lodging in the souls of accursed men : by Clear Shewing that the heavenly beings make clear all things that we are or do, which in themselves would be altogether unknown. Here is a self-evident proof. If the light 90 of the sun had never shone, how could the numberless qualities of bodily things have been perceived ? Or the multiform varieties of colours and shapes ? <sup>b</sup>Who else could have shewn us nights and days and months and years and time in general except the revolutions, harmonious and grand beyond all description, of the sun and the moon and the other stars ? How but 91

<sup>a</sup> If I understand Philo aright, this description of the dress identifies what in Mos. ii. 109 is called the ἐπωμίς (there translated "ephod") with the λογεῖον or "oracle of judgment" (for the translation "reason-seat" see note on Mos. ii. 112), while there the λογεῖον is attached by chains to the ἐπωμίς.

<sup>b</sup> For the general sense of what follows cf. De Op. 58-62 ; also the eulogy of sight, De Abr. 158, 159, all of them deriving originally from Plato, Ti-maeus 47.

PHILO

ἀριθμοῦ φύσιν εἰ μὴ τὰ λεχθέντα κατὰ τὰς τῶν μερῶν τοῦ χρόνου συνθέσεις; τίς δὲ τὰς ἐν θαλάσση καὶ τοσοῦτοις πελάγεσιν ὁδοὺς ἀνέτεμε καὶ διέδειξε πλωτήρσιν εἰ μὴ αἱ τῶν ἀστέρων στροφαι 92 καὶ περίοδοι; σοφοὶ δ' ἄνδρες καὶ μυρία ἄλλα παρατηρήσαντες ἀνέγραψαν, ἐκ τῶν οὐρανίων σημειωσάμενοι νηνεμίας καὶ βίας πνευμάτων, φορὰς καὶ ἀφορίας καρπῶν, ἀνειμένα καὶ φλογωδέστατα θέρη, χειμῶνας ἐξαισίους καὶ ἐαρίζοντας, αὐχμοὺς καὶ ἐπομβρίας, εὐγονίας ζώων καὶ φυτῶν καὶ τούναντίον ἐκατέρων ἀγονίας καὶ ὅσα τοιουτότροπα πάντων γὰρ ἐστηλίτευται τῶν ἐπὶ γῆς ἐν οὐρανῶ τὰ σημεῖα.

93 XVII. Πρὸς δὲ τοῖς κατωτάτω μέρεσι τοῦ ποδῆρους ἀπηύρηται χρυσοὶ ῥοῖσκοι κώδωνές τε καὶ ἄνθινα· τὰ δ' ἐστὶ σύμβολα γῆς καὶ ὕδατος, γῆς μὲν τὰ ἄνθινα, παρόσον βλαστάνει καὶ ἀνθεῖ πάντα ἐκ ταύτης, ὕδατος δὲ οἱ ῥοῖσκοι λεχθέντες ἐτύμως παρὰ τὴν ῥύσιν, τὴν δ' ἁρμονίαν καὶ συμφωνίαν καὶ συνήχησιν τῶν τοῦ κόσμου μερῶν οἱ κώδωνες 94 ἐμφαίνουσιν. εὐ δ' ἔχει καὶ ἡ θέσις· ἀνωτάτω μὲν, ἐν ᾧ οἱ λίθοι, τὸ καλούμενον περιστήθιον, οὐρανοῦ μίμημα, διότι καὶ ὁ οὐρανὸς ἀνωτάτω, ὁ δὲ ποδῆρης [227] ὑπ' αὐτῶ, ὄλος δι' ὄλων ὑακίνθινος, ἐπειδὴ | καὶ ὁ ἀῆρ μέλας ὦν τὴν μετ' οὐρανὸν δευτέραν τάξιν κεκλήρωται, τὰ δ' ἄνθινα καὶ οἱ ῥοῖσκοι πρὸς τοῖς ἐσχάτοις, διότι γῆ καὶ ὕδωρ τὴν κατωτάτω τοῦ 95 παντός μοῖραν ἔλαχον. ἡ δ' ἐστὶν ἡ τῆς ἱεράς ἐσθῆτος κατασκευή, μίμημα τοῦ παντός, θαυμάσιον

THE SPECIAL LAWS, I. 91-95

through the same heavenly bodies teaching us to compute the divisions of time could we have learnt the nature of number? Who could have opened and shewn to the voyager his path through the seas and all the expanses of the deep had not the stars as they wheel and revolve in their courses done the work? Numberless other phenomena have been observed and 92 recorded by wise men who by study of the heavenly bodies have marked the signs of calm weather and stormy winds, of plentifulness and scarcity of crops, of mild and scorching summers, of sinister and spring-like winters, of droughts and rainy seasons, of fecundity in animals and plants and on the other hand of sterility in both and all other matters of the same kind. For of all the things that happen upon earth, the signs are graven in the face of heaven.

XVII. At the very lowest part of the skirt there 93 are appended golden pomegranates and bells and flower-work, symbols of earth and water: the flower patterns of earth because they grow and flower out of it, the pomegranate or flowing fruit, of water, the name preserving its derivation from "flowing," while the bells shew forth the harmony and concord and unison of the parts of the universe. The order in 94 which the parts are arranged is also admirable. At the very top is what he calls the breastpiece in which are placed the stones, a copy of heaven because heaven also is at the top. Then under it the full-length skirt, dark blue right through because the air also is black and occupies the second position below the heaven, and the flower-work and pomegranates at the extremities because to earth and water is allotted the lowest place in the universe. Such is 95 the form in which the sacred vesture was designed,

PHILO

- ἔργον καὶ ὀφθῆναι καὶ νοηθῆναι· καὶ γὰρ ὄψιν ἔχει καταπληκτικωτάτην οἷαν οὐδέν ὕφασμα τῶν παρ' ἡμῖν ἔνεκα ποικιλίας ὁμοῦ καὶ πολυτελείας καὶ
- 96 νόησιν τὴν περὶ τῶν αὐτῆς μερῶν φιλόσοφον. βούλεται γὰρ τὸν ἀρχιερέα πρῶτον μὲν εἰκόνα τοῦ παντὸς ἔχειν ἐμφανῆ περὶ ἑαυτόν, ἵν' ἐκ τῆς συνεχοῦς θεᾶς ἄξιον παρέχη τὸν ἴδιον βίον τῆς τῶν ὅλων φύσεως, ἔπειθ' ὅπως ἐν ταῖς ἱερουργίαις συλλειτουργῇ πᾶς ὁ κόσμος αὐτῷ· προπρωδέστατον δὲ τὸ τὸν ἱερωμένον τῷ τοῦ κόσμου πατρὶ καὶ τὸν υἱόν, τὸ πᾶν,<sup>1</sup> ἐπάγεσθαι πρὸς θεραπείαν τοῦ δε-
- 97 δημιουργηκότος καὶ γεγεννηκότος. ἔστι δὲ καὶ τρίτον τι τῆς ἱερᾶς ἐσθῆτος σύμβολον ἀναγκαῖον μὴ ἡσυχασθῆναι· τῶν μὲν γὰρ ἄλλων αἱ ἱερεῖς ὑπὲρ οἰκειῶν καὶ φίλων καὶ πολιτῶν αὐτὸ μόνον εἰώθασιν τὰς τε εὐχὰς καὶ θυσίας ἐπιτελεῖν, ὁ δὲ τῶν Ἰουδαίων ἀρχιερεὺς οὐ μόνον ὑπὲρ ἅπαντος ἀνθρώπων γένους ἀλλὰ καὶ ὑπὲρ τῶν τῆς φύσεως μερῶν, γῆς, ὕδατος, ἀέρος, πυρός, τὰς τε εὐχὰς καὶ τὰς εὐχαριστίας ποιεῖται, τὸν κόσμον, ὅπερ ἐστὶ ταῖς ἀληθείαις, ἑαυτοῦ πατρίδα εἶναι νομίζων, ὑπὲρ ἧς ἰκεσίαις καὶ λιταῖς εἴωθεν ἐξευμενίζεσθαι τὸν ἡγεμόνα ποτνιώμενος τῆς ἐπιεικοῦς καὶ ἰλεω φύσεως αὐτοῦ μεταδιδόναι τῷ γενομένῳ.
- 98 XVIII. Ταῦθ' ὑπειπὼν προσνομοθετεῖ κελεύων τὸν προσιόντα τῷ βωμῷ καὶ ψαύοντα θυσιῶν, ἐν ᾧ χρόνῳ τέτακται τὰς ἱερὰς λειτουργίας ἐπιτελεῖν, μήτ' οἶνον μήτε τι ἄλλο μέθυσμα πίνειν, τεττάρων <sup>1</sup> So Cohn combining the τὸν υἱὸν of some authorities with the τὸ πᾶν of others. On ἱερωμένον see App. p. 620.

<sup>a</sup> See Lev. x. 8-11, and cf. De Ebr. 130 f.

THE SPECIAL LAWS, I. 95-98

a copy of the universe, a piece of work of marvellous beauty to the eye and the mind. To the eye it presents a most amazing appearance transcending any woven work that we possess in variety and costliness, to the mind the philosophical conceptions which its parts suggest. For it expresses the wish first 96 that the high priest should have in evidence upon him an image of the All, that so by constantly contemplating it he should render his own life worthy of the sum of things, secondly that in performing his holy office he should have the whole universe as his fellow-ministrant. And very right and fit it is that he who is consecrated to the Father of the world should take with him also that Father's son, the universe, for the service of the Creator and Begetter.

There is also a third truth symbolized 97 by the holy vesture which must not be passed over in silence. Among the other nations the priests are accustomed to offer prayers and sacrifices for their kinsmen and friends and fellow-countrymen only, but the high priest of the Jews makes prayers and gives thanks not only on behalf of the whole human race but also for the parts of nature, earth, water, air, fire. For he holds the world to be, as in very truth it is, his country, and in its behalf he is wont to propitiate the Ruler with supplication and intercession, beseeching Him to make His creature a partaker of His own kindly and merciful nature.

XVIII.<sup>a</sup> After saying this by way of prelude, he 98 proceeds to lay down another statute commanding that he who approaches the altar and handles the sacrifices should not during the time in which it is his duty to perform the sacred rites drink wine or any other intoxicant, and this for four most cogent reasons :

PHILO

- ἔνεκα τῶν ἀναγκαιοτάτων, ὅκνου καὶ λήθης καὶ 99 ὕπνου καὶ ἀφροσύνης. ἄκρατος γὰρ τὰς μὲν τοῦ σώματος δυνάμεις ἀνιείς δυσκινητότερα τὰ μέλη ποιεῖ καὶ ὀκνηροτέρους ἀπεργάζεται καὶ βία καταδαρθάνειν ἀναγκάζει, τοὺς δὲ τῆς ψυχῆς τόνους ἐπιχαλῶν λήθης ὁμοῦ καὶ ἀφροσύνης αἴτιος γίνεται· νήφοντος δὲ τὰ τε μέρη τοῦ σώματος ἐπελαφρι-ζόμενα εὐκίνητοτερα αἶ τε αἰσθήσεις καθαρώτεραι καὶ εἰλικρινέστεραι ὅ τε νοῦς ἐξυωπέστερος, ὡς καὶ προιδέσθαι πράγματα δύνασθαι καὶ ἂ πρότερον 100 εἶδεν ἀπομνημονεῦσαι. συνόλως μὲν οὖν τὴν οἴνου χρῆσιν ἅπασιν τοῖς κατὰ τὸν βίον ἀλυσιτελεστάτην ὑποληπτέον, ψυχῆς πιεζομένης, αἰσθήσεων ἀμανρουμένων, βαρυνομένου σώματος—ἐλεύθερον γὰρ καὶ ἄφετον οὐδὲν ἐᾷ τῶν παρ' ἡμῖν, ἀλλ' ἐκάστω πρὸς ὃ πέφυκεν ἐμπόδιός ἐστιν,—ἐν δὲ ταῖς ἀγι-[228] στείαις καὶ ἱερουργίαις τὸ βλάβος | ἀργαλεώτερον, ὅσω καὶ τὸ περὶ θεὸν ἐξαμαρτεῖν τοῦ περὶ ἄνθρωπον ἀφορητότερον. ὅθεν εἰκότως προστέτακται νηφαλίου<sup>1</sup> θύειν, “ εἰς διαστολὴν καὶ διάκρισιν ἀγίων καὶ βεβήλων καὶ καθαρῶν καὶ ἀκαθάρτων ” καὶ νομίμων καὶ παρανόμων.
- 101 XIX. Ἐπεὶ δ' ὁ ἱερεὺς πολὺ πρότερον ἀνὴρ ἐστὶ καὶ ταῖς πρὸς συνουσίαν ὁρμαῖς ἐξ ἀνάγκης ὀφείλει χρῆσθαι, γάμον αὐτῷ μνάται παρθένου καθαρᾶς καὶ ἐκ καθαρῶν γονέων καὶ πάππων καὶ προγόνων εἰς τε καλοκάγαθίαν καὶ εὐγένειαν ἀριστίνδην ἐπι-<sup>1</sup> MSS. νηφάλια.

THE SPECIAL LAWS, I. 98-101

the dangers of slackness, forgetfulness, sleep and foolish behaviour. For strong drink enervates the 99 bodily faculties, and makes the limbs more difficult to move, increases the tendency to sluggishness in a man, and irresistibly forces him to fall asleep, while by relaxing the sinews of the soul it produces both forgetfulness and foolish conduct. When he is sober, his bodily parts are buoyant and easier to move, the senses are clearer and brighter and the mind keener-sighted, so that it can foresee events and recount what it has seen in the past. In general, indeed, wine 100 must be regarded as very unprofitable for every side of life, since it presses hard upon the soul, dulls the senses and weighs down the body, leaving none of our faculties free and untrammelled but hampering the natural activity of each. But in religious rites and ceremonies the mischief is graver in the same degree as it is more intolerable to offend against our duty to God than our duty to man. Thus it is a very proper enactment that the officiants at the sacrifice should fast from wine, "to discern and distinguish between holy and profane, clean and unclean," lawful and unlawful.<sup>a</sup>

XIX. Since a priest is a man well before he<sup>b</sup> is 101 a priest and must and should feel the instinct for mating, Moses arranges for his marriage with a pure virgin whose parents and grandparents and ancestors are equally pure, highly distinguished for the excel-quotation of Lev. x. 10, but the addition "lawful and unlawful," also represents v. 11 "to teach the sons of Israel all the statutes" (Lxx νόμιμα).

<sup>b</sup> Or "primarily a man, and only secondarily a priest," πολὺ πρότερον not indicating time or even importance, but that the genus comes before the species.

PHILO

- 102 κριθέντων. πόρνη μὲν γὰρ καὶ βεβήλω σῶμα καὶ ψυχὴν οὐδὲ προσελθεῖν<sup>1</sup> ἔα, κἂν τὴν ἐργασίαν ἀποθεμένη σχῆμα κόσμιον καὶ σῶφρον ὑποδύηται, διὰ τὸ τὴν ἀρχαίαν προαίρεσιν ἀνίερον αὐτῇ γενέσθαι. αὕτη δὲ πρὸς μὲν τὰ ἄλλα ἐπιτιμίαν ἔχέτω σπουδάσασα μiasμάτων καθαρεῦσαι· μετάνοια γὰρ ἀδικημάτων ἐπαινετόν· καὶ μηδεὶς ἕτερος αὐτὴν ἄγεσθαι κεκωλύσθω, ἱερεὶ δὲ μὴ προσίτω· τὰ γὰρ ἱερωσύνης ἐξαιρέτα δίκαια συμφωνίαν ἐπιζητούσης τὴν ἀπὸ γενέσεως [ἀρχῆς] ἄχρι τελευτῆς ἀνυπαίτιον.
- 103 εὐήθες γὰρ διὰ μὲν τὰς ἐκ τῶν τραυμάτων ἐπιγενομένας οὐλὰς ἐν τοῖς σώμασιν εἶργεσθαί τινας ἱερωσύνης, αἱ σύμβολον ἀτυχίας, οὐ μοχθηρίας, εἰσί, τὰς δὲ μὴ κατ' ἀνάγκην μόνον ἀλλ' ἔστιν ὅτε καὶ ἔκουσίους γνώμας πεπρακυίας τὴν ἰδίαν ὄραν, ἐπειδήπερ ὀψέ καὶ μόλις μετέγνωσαν, εὐθύς ἀπὸ ἐραστῶν ἱερεῦσιν ἀρμόξεσθαι καὶ ἀπὸ χαμαιτυπείων εἰς ἱερὰ χωρία μετοικίξεσθαι· μένουσι γὰρ οὐδὲν ἦττον ἐν ταῖς ψυχαῖς τῶν μετανοούντων οὐλαί
- 104 καὶ τύποι τῶν ἀρχαίων ἀδικημάτων. εὖ καὶ παγκάλως ἐν ἑτέροις διείρηται “μηδὲ μίσθωμα πόρνης εἰσκομίζειν εἰς τὸ ἱερόν”· καίτοι τό γε νόμισμα καθ' αὐτὸ οὐκ ἔνοχον, ἀλλὰ διὰ τὴν λαβοῦσαν καὶ τὴν πράξιν ἐφ' ἣ δέδοται. σχολῆ γ'

<sup>1</sup> MSS. προσιδεῖν.

---

<sup>a</sup> See Lev. xxi. 7 (not as Cohn, 13, 14, which refer to the high priest), “They shall not take a woman that is a harlot or profane, or a woman put away from her husband.” By a “pure virgin” Philo, as appears from § 108, means that if she is unmarried she must be pure. The instruction to inquire into her lineage has no scriptural authority. But Josephus, Contra Apion. i. 31, entirely supports it as a

THE SPECIAL LAWS, I. 102-104

lence of their conduct and lineage.<sup>a</sup> For a harlot is 102 profane in body and soul, even if she has discarded her trade and assumed a decent and chaste demeanour, and he is forbidden even to approach her, since her old way of living was unholy. Let such a one indeed retain in other respects her civic rights as she has been at pains to purge herself from her defilements, for repentance from wrongdoing is praiseworthy.
Nor let anyone else be prevented from taking her in marriage, but let her not come near to the priest.
For the rights and duties of the priesthood are of a special kind, and the office demands an even tenor of blamelessness from birth to death. It would be 103 foolish if, while the bodily scars which wounds leave behind them, marks of misfortune and not of depravity, preclude one from the priesthood, the women who have sold their personal charms not only under compulsion but sometimes by free and deliberate choice, should just because of a belated and reluctant repentance pass straight from their lovers to wedlock with the priests and exchange the stews for a lodging in holy ground. For in the souls of the repentant there remain, in spite of all, the scars and prints of their old misdeeds.<sup>b</sup> It is well and admirably said in 104 another place,<sup>c</sup> "Neither shall the hire of a harlot be brought into the Temple," though the coins are not guilty in themselves but only because of the recipient and the business for which it was given her. Surely practice, "He must inquire into her pedigree, obtaining the genealogy from the archives and producing a number of witnesses." Josephus goes on to say that the practice is observed among the Jews of Egypt, Babylonia, and elsewhere, as much as in Palestine.

<sup>b</sup> See App. p. 620.

<sup>c</sup> Deut. xxiii. 18.

PHILO

ἂν ἔτι προσοῖτό τις εἰς κοινωνίαν ἱερέων γυναῖκας, ὧν καὶ τὰ χρήματα βέβηλα καὶ παράσημα, εἰ καὶ ταῖς ὕλαις καὶ τοῖς χαρακτῆρσι δόκιμα.

- 105 XX. Τὰ μὲν οὖν περὶ γάμον οὕτως ἠκρίβωται τῷ ἀρχιερεῖ, ὥστ' οὐδὲ χήραν ἐφέϊται γαμῆν αὐτῷ, οὔτε τετελευτηκότος ἀνδρὸς μονωθεῖσαν οὔτε ἀπ-ηλλαγμένην ἔτι ζῶντος, ἵνα πρῶτον μὲν εἰς ἄβατον καὶ καθαρὰν ἄρουραν ὁ ἱερὸς σπόρος χωρῆ καὶ μηδεμίαν κρᾶσιν αἰ γοναὶ πρὸς ἑτέραν οἰκίαν λαμβάνωσιν, εἶτα δ' ὅπως ἀκακωτάταις καὶ ἀδιαστρόφοις ταῖς ψυχαῖς συνερχόμενοι ραδίως δια-[229] πλάττωσι τὰ | ἦθη καὶ τοὺς τρόπους αὐτῶν· ὄλκοι γὰρ καὶ εὐάγωγοι διάνοιαι παρθένων πρὸς ἀρετήν, 106 εἰς διδασκαλίαν ἐτοιμότεται· ἢ δ' ἑτέρου πείραν ἀνδρὸς λαβοῦσα κατὰ τὸ εἶκὸς ἀπειθεστέρα πρὸς μάθησιν, ἅτε τὴν ψυχὴν ἀκραιφνεστάτην οὐκ ἔχουσα καθάπερ τινὰ λελειασμένον κηρὸν εἰς τρανότητα τῶν ἐγγραφησομένων δογμάτων, ἀλλὰ τραχεῖαν ὑπὸ τῶν προεγχαραχθέντων τύπων, οἱ δυσεξάλειπτοι παραμένοντες ἢ οὐ παραδέχονται σφραγίδας ἑτέρας ἢ παραδεξάμενοι συγχέουσι ταῖς ἑαυτῶν ἀνωμα-107 λίαις. παρθένον οὖν ὁ ἀρχιερεὺς ἀγέσθω γάμων ἀγνήν· λέγω δὲ παρθένον οὐ μόνον ἢ μὴ ἕτερος ὠμίλησεν, ἀλλὰ καὶ ἐφ' ἣ μὴδεις ἄλλος ἀνήρ ὠνομάσθη διὰ τινων ὁμολογιῶν, κἂν ἀγνεύῃ τὸ σῶμα.

<sup>a</sup> Lev. xxi. 13, 14.

<sup>b</sup> i.e. successive high priests. The use of the plural is odd and might suggest that it refers to the couple; and so

THE SPECIAL LAWS, I. 104-107

one would not care to admit to partnership with the priests the women whose very money is profane and regarded as base, even though the metal and the stamp is true.

XX. <sup>a</sup> So strict are the regulations laid down for the 105 marriage of the high priest that he is not even permitted to marry a widow, whether her isolation is due to the death of her husband or divorce from him while still alive. This is laid down first in order that the holy seed may pass into pure and untrodden soil and the issue receive no admixture with another family.

Secondly, that by mating with souls entirely innocent and unperverted they <sup>b</sup> may find it easy to mould the characters and dispositions of their wives, for the minds of virgins are easily influenced and attracted to virtue and very ready to be taught. But she who has had experience of another husband 106 is naturally less amenable to instruction. For her soul is not one of the completely simple kind like a sheet of wax levelled to show clearly the lessons to be inscribed upon it, but rather like one roughened by the imprints already scored upon it, which resist effacement and either do not yield to the dint of other seals or, if they do, confuse them with their own indentations. Let the high priest then take a virgin 107 who is innocent of marriage. And when I say "virgin" I exclude not only one with whom another man has had intercourse but also one with whom any other has been declared to have an agreement of betrothal, even though her body is that of a maid intact.<sup>c</sup> apparently Heinemann takes it, but it seems to me impossible that Philo should be supposing that the high priest's character is moulded by his wife.

<sup>c</sup> See on Spec. Leg. iii. 72 (App.).

PHILO

- 108 XXI. Τοῖς δὲ κατὰ μέρος ἱερεῦσι τὰ μὲν ἄλλα περὶ γάμων διατέτακται ταῦτ' ἂ καὶ τοῖς τὴν μεγίστην ἔχουσιν ἱερωσύνην, ἐφεῖται δ' οὐ μόνον παρθένους ἀλλὰ καὶ χήρας, οὐ πάσας ἀλλ' ὧν τετελευτήκασιν ἄνδρες, μετ' ἀδείας ἄγεσθαι. φιλο-νεικίας γὰρ καὶ στάσεις ἐκ τοῦ βίου τῶν ἱερέων οἶεται δεῖν ὁ νόμος ἀναιρεῖν· πρὸς μὲν οὖν τοὺς ζῶντας γένοιτ' ἂν ἴσως ἔριδες ἐκ πάθους γυναικείου, ζηλοτυπίας, τοῖς δ' ἀποθανοῦσι συναποθνή-σκει καὶ τὰ τῆς πρὸς τοὺς δευτέρους ἄνδρας ἔχθρας.
- 109 ἄλλως τε τὸν ἀρχιερέα πλείονος ἐδικαίωσεν ἀγι-στείας καὶ καθάρσεως ὥσπερ ἐν ἅπασιν τοῖς ἄλλοις καὶ ἐν γάμου κοινωνίᾳ μεταλαχεῖν, οὐκ ἔασας ὅτι μὴ κόρην ἄγεσθαι· τοῖς δὲ τῆς δευτέρας τάξεως ὑπανῆκε τὰ περὶ συνόδους γυναικῶν, ἐφίεις καὶ πεπειραμένους ἐτέρων ἀνδρῶν ἐγγυᾶσθαι.
- 110 XXII. πρὸς δὲ τούτῳ καὶ τὸ γένος ἠκρίβωσε τῶν μελλουσῶν γαμείσθαι, προστάξας τῷ μὲν ἀρχιερεῖ μῶσθαι μὴ παρθένον μόνον ἀλλὰ καὶ ἱέρειαν ἐξ ἱερέων, ἢ ἐκ μιᾶς οἰκίας καὶ τρόπον τινὰ τοῦ αὐτοῦ αἵματος ὧσι νυμφίος τε καὶ νύμφη πρὸς ἀρμονίαν ἐπιδειξάμενοι παρ' ὄλον τὸν βίον κρᾶσιν
- 111 ἡθῶν βεβαιοτάτην. ἐπετράπη δὲ τοῖς ἄλλοις καὶ

---

<sup>a</sup> Or "ordinary." So Heinemann; Mangey "privatis." But all these are strange uses for the phrase which should mean the several or particular priests, like οἱ κατὰ μέρος νόμοι. Possibly it means the priests who stood by themselves as a μέρος of the whole class, the other μέρος being the high priest, and so almost = "as a class." So perhaps ἀρχοντος ἐν μέρει, § 226.

<sup>b</sup> Lev. xxi. 7. The permission is reasonably deduced from the prohibition to marry the divorced.

THE SPECIAL LAWS, I. 108-111

XXI. As for the subordinate<sup>a</sup> priests, while the 108 other marriage regulations are the same for them as for those who hold the highest priesthood, they are permitted to wed with immunity not only virgins but widows,<sup>b</sup> though only such as have lost their husbands by death. This limitation is due to the desire of the law to remove animosities and feuds from the lives of the priests. While the first husband lives, quarrels might be engendered by the feminine proclivity to jealousy.<sup>c</sup> His death carries with it the death of any hostility to the second husband. As for 109 the distinction between priests and high priests, the view of the law was that the greater sanctity and purity required of the latter in all other matters should be extended to his choice of a partner in marriage, and therefore it forbade him to take to wife any but a maiden. But to those of the second rank it made concessions as to their relations with women and permitted them to espouse such as had had experience of other husbands.

XXII. Further, it made clear distinctions as to the 110 birth of the intended wives. The high priest must not propose marriage save to one who is not only a virgin but a priestess descended from priests,<sup>d</sup> so that bride and bridegroom may be of one house and in a sense of the same blood and so, harmoniously united, shew a lifelong blending of temperament firmly established. But the rest are permitted to marry 111

<sup>c</sup> As the jealousy is clearly that felt by one or both of the husbands, I do not see the point of "feminine" unless it means that such a feeling is natural in a woman, but disgraceful to a man. Some word expressing "excited by a passion for women," like γυναικομανούς, seems to be wanted.

<sup>d</sup> So Philo interprets Lev. xxi. 14 ἐκ τοῦ γένους αὐτοῦ and in the next verse, ἐκ τοῦ λαοῦ αὐτοῦ (E.V. "of his own people").

PHILO

μη ἱερέων γαμεῖν θυγατέρας, τῇ μὲν ὅτι μικρὰ τούτων καθάρσια, τῇ δ' ὅτι τὸ ἔθνος οὐκ ἐβουλήθη γενεᾶς εἰς ἅπαν ἱερατικῆς ἀμοιρῆσαι τε καὶ παντελῶς ἀπεξευχθαι.<sup>1</sup> δι' ἣν αἰτίαν οὐκ ἐκώλυσε τοὺς ἄλλους ἱερέας ἐπιγαμίας ποιεῖσθαι πρὸς τοὺς ἀπὸ [230] τοῦ ἔθνους, | αἴπερ εἰσὶ δεύτεραι συγγένειαι· γαμβροὶ γὰρ ἀνθ' υἱῶν πενθεροῖς καὶ ἀντὶ πατέρων γαμβροῖς πενθεροί.

112 XXIII. Τὰ μὲν δὴ περὶ γάμου ταῦτα καὶ τὰ τούτοις ὅμοια χάριν παίδων γενέσεως. ἐπεὶ δ' ἔπεται γενέσει φθορά, καὶ τοὺς ἐπὶ τελευταῖς ἀνέγραψε τοῖς ἱερεῦσι νόμους, κελεύσας μὴ ἐφ' ἅπασιν αὐτοὺς μιαίνεσθαι τοῖς ὅπως οὖν ἢ κατὰ φιλίαν ἢ κατὰ συγγένειαν ὠκειωμέναις, ἀλλ' ἐπὶ μόνοις πατράσι καὶ μητράσιν, υἰοῖς καὶ θυγατράσιν, 113 ἀδελφοῖς καὶ ἀδελφαῖς παρθέναις. τὸν δ' ἀρχιερέα παντὸς πένθους ὑπεξείλετο· καὶ μήποτ' εἰκότως· τὰς μὲν γὰρ τῶν ἄλλων ἱερέων ὑπηρεσίας ἀνθ' ἑτέρων ἕτεροι λειτουργεῖν δύνανται, ὡς, κἂν πενθῶσί τινες, μηδὲν τῶν ἐξ ἔθνους ὑστερίζειν, τὰς δὲ τοῦ ἀρχιερέως οὐδενὶ δρᾶν ἐφεῖται. παρ' ἣν αἰτίαν ἀμίαντος αἰεὶ διατελείτω μὴ προσαπτόμενος νεκροῦ σώματος, ὅπως τὰς ὑπὲρ τοῦ ἔθνους εὐχὰς καὶ θυσίας ἕτοιμος ὢν ἐν καιροῖς τοῖς προσήκουσιν 114 ἀκωλύτως ἐπιτελῆ. καὶ γὰρ ἄλλως προσκεκληρωμένος θεῷ καὶ τῆς ἱερᾶς τάξεως γεγωνὸς ταξίαρχος ὀφείλει πάντων ἀλλοτριουῖσθαι τῶν ἐν γενέσει, μὴ

<sup>1</sup> MSS. ἀποξευξαι.

<sup>a</sup> Deduced from the absence of the prohibition which Philo believes to be imposed on the high priest.

<sup>b</sup> καθάρσια usually means purificatory rites, but here, like

THE SPECIAL LAWS, I. 111-114

the daughters of others than priests <sup>a</sup> partly because the restrictions required to <sup>b</sup> maintain their purity are slight, partly because the law did not wish that the nation should be denied altogether a share in the priestly clanship or be entirely excluded from it. This was the reason why he did not forbid the other priests to intermarry with the laity of the nation, for intermarriage is kinship in the second degree. Sons-in-law are sons to their fathers-in-law, and the latter are fathers to the former.

XXIII. These and similar regulations as to marriage are intended to promote the generation of children, but since generation is followed by dissolution, he has laid down laws for the priests dealing with deaths. <sup>c</sup> In these he ordains that they should not incur defilement for all connected with them by friendship or kinship whatever the degree, but only for fathers and mothers, sons and daughters, brothers and maiden sisters. But the high priest is precluded from all outward mourning and surely with good reason. <sup>d</sup> For the services of the other priests can be performed by deputy, so that if some are in mourning none of the customary rites need suffer. But no one else is allowed to perform the functions of a high priest and therefore he must always continue undefiled, never coming in contact with a corpse, so that he may be ready to offer his prayers and sacrifices at the proper time without hindrance on behalf of the nation. Further, since he is dedicated to God and has been made captain of the sacred regiment, he ought to be estranged from all the ties of birth and

κάθαρσις in § 109, seems to be used of what keeps a person pure.

<sup>c</sup> See Lev. xxi. 1-3.

<sup>d</sup> See Lev. xxi. 10-12.

PHILO

- γονέων, μὴ τέκνων, μὴ ἀδελφῶν εὐνοίας οὕτως ἠττώμενος, ὡς ἢ παρελθεῖν ἢ ὑπερθέσθαι τι τῶν
- 115 ὁσίων, ὃ πραχθῆναι πάντως αὐτίκα ἄμεινον. κελεύει δὲ μήτε τὰ ἱμάτια περιρρήττειν ἐπὶ τοῖς οἰκειοτάτοις ἀποθανοῦσι μήτε ἀφαιρεῖν ἀπὸ τῆς κεφαλῆς τὰ παράσημα τῆς ἱερωσύνης μήτε συνόλως ἐκ τῶν ἀγίων ἐξιέναι κατὰ πρόφασιν πένθους, ἵνα καὶ τὸν τόπον αἰδούμενος καὶ τὰ περὶ ἑαυτὸν προκοσμῆματα οἷς ἀνέστεπται, κρείττων οἴκτου γενόμενος, ἄλυπος εἰς αἰεὶ διατελῆ. βούλεται γὰρ αὐτὸν ὁ νόμος μείζονος μεμοιρᾶσθαι φύσεως ἢ κατ' ἀνθρώπων, ἐγγυτέρω προσιόντα τῆς θείας, μεθόριον, εἰ δεῖ τάληθές λέγειν, ἀμφοῖν, ἵνα διὰ μέσου τινὸς ἀνθρώποι μὲν ἰλάσκωνται θεόν, θεὸς δὲ τὰς χάριτας ἀνθρώποις ὑποδιακόνῳ τινὶ χρώμενος ὀρέγῃ καὶ χορηγῆ.
- 117 XXIV. Ταῦτ' εἰπὼν ἐξῆς εὐθύς<sup>1</sup> νομοθετεῖ περὶ τῶν χρησομένων ταῖς ἀπαρχαῖς. εἰάν οὖν τις, φησί, τῶν ἱερέων ὀφθαλμοὺς ἢ χεῖρας ἢ βάσεις ἢ τι μέρος ἄλλο πηρωθῆ τοῦ σώματος ἢ καὶ τινα μῶμον ἐνδέξεται, λειτουργιῶν μὲν ἀνεχέτω διὰ τὰς ἐγγενομένας κῆρας, τὰ δὲ κοινὰ τῶν ἱερέων γέρα
- 118 καρπούσθω διὰ τὴν ἀνυπαίτιον εὐγένειαν. εἰάν μέντοι λέπραι τινὸς ἐξανθήσασαι κατάσχωσιν ἢ καὶ γονορρυῆς τις γένηται τῶν ἱερέων, μήτε τραπέζης ἱερᾶς ψαυέτω μήτε τῶν προκειμένων ἄθλων τῷ γένει, μέχρῃς ἂν ἢ τε ῥύσις ἐπίσχη καὶ ἢ λέπρα μεταβαλοῦσα τῷ τῆς ὑγιοῦς σαρκὸς ἐξομοιωθῆ

<sup>1</sup> Some mss. ἐξῆς, others εὐθύς.

<sup>a</sup> Cf. De Som. ii. 188.

<sup>b</sup> See Lev. xxi. 17 f., already cited on § 80. Here the stress

THE SPECIAL LAWS, I. 114-118

not be so overcome by affection to parents or children or brothers as to neglect or postpone any one of the religious duties which it were well to perform without any delay. He forbids him also either to rend his garments for his dead, even the nearest and dearest, or to take from his head the insignia of the priesthood, or on any account to leave the sacred precincts under the pretext of mourning. Thus, showing reverence both to the place and to the personal ornaments with which he is decked, he will have his feeling of pity under control and continue throughout free from sorrow. For the law desires him to be endued with a nature higher than the merely human and to approximate to the Divine, on the border-line,<sup>a</sup> we may truly say, between the two, that men may have a mediator through whom they may propitiate God and God a servitor to employ in extending the abundance of His boons to men. 115 116

XXIV. These rules are followed directly by his legislation on those who are to share in the first-fruits. <sup>b</sup> If any of the priests, he tells us, has lost the use of his eyes or hands or feet or any part of his body, or suffers from any defect, he must refrain from officiating because of the afflictions which have befallen him, but he may enjoy the privileges common to the priests because his pure lineage still remains without reproach. <sup>c</sup> If, however, leprous eruptions appear upon him or he is suffering from seminal issue, the priest must not touch the holy table or any of the prizes to which his clan is entitled until in the one case the issue has ceased, in the other the leprosy is converted into a resemblance to the hue of healthy flesh. 117 118 is on v. 22 "the gifts of God are most holy and he shall eat of the holy" (LXX). <sup>c</sup> See Lev. xxii. 4-7.

PHILO

- 119 χρώματι. κὰν προσάψῃται μέντοι τις ὅτου δήποτε [231] τῶν | ἀκαθάρτων ἱερέως ἢ καὶ νύκτωρ, οἶα φιλεῖ πολλάκις, ὄνειρώξῃ, τὴν ἡμέραν ἐκείνην μηδὲν προσφερέσθω τῶν καθιερωθέντων, λουσάμενος δ' ἐπιγενομένης ἑσπέρας χρῆσθαι μὴ κεκωλύσθω.
 120 πάροικος δ' ἱερέως καὶ μισθωτὸς εἰργέσθω τῶν ἀπαρχῶν, ὁ μὲν πάροικος, ἐπειδὴ γείτονες τὰ πολλὰ<sup>1</sup> συνέστιοι καὶ ὁμοτράπεζοι· δέος γάρ, μὴ προῆταιί τις τὰ καθιερωθέντα προφάσει καταχρησάμενος εἰς ἀσέβειαν ἀκαίρῳ φιλανθρωπία· μεταδοτέον γὰρ οὐ πᾶσι πάντων, ἀλλὰ τῶν ἐφαρμοζόντων τοῖς ληψομένοις· εἰ δὲ μὴ, τὸ κάλλιστον καὶ λυσιτελέστατον τῶν ἐν τῷ βίῳ, τάξις, ἀναιρεθήσεται ὑπὸ τοῦ 121 βλαβερωτάτου παρενημερηθεῖσα, συγχύσεως. εἰ γὰρ ἴσον μὲν μέρος<sup>2</sup> ἐν ὀλκάσιν οἴσονται ναῦται κυβερνήταις, ἴσον δὲ ἐν ταῖς μακραῖς τριήρεσι τριηράρχοις<sup>3</sup> καὶ ναυάρχοις ἐρέται καὶ τὸ ἐπιβατικόν, ἐν δὲ στρατοπέδοις ἴσον ἰππεῖς μὲν ἰππάρχοις, ὀπλίται δὲ ταξιάρχοις, λοχαγοὶ δὲ στρατηγοῖς, ἐν δὲ πόλεσι κρινόμενοι δικασταῖς καὶ βουλευταὶ προβούλοις καὶ συνόλως ἄρχουσιν ἰδιῶται, ταραχαὶ καὶ στάσεις γενήσονται καὶ ἡ <διὰ> λόγων ἰσότης τὴν δι' ἔργων ἀνισότητα γεννήσει· τὸ γὰρ τοῖς τὰς ἀξίας ἀνομοίοις ὅμοια ἀπονέμειν ἄνισον, τὸ δ' ἄνισον 122 πηγὴ κακῶν. οὗ χάριν καὶ τὰ γέρα τῶν ἱερέων οὐ δοτέον ὥσπερ ἄλλοις οὐδὲ τοῖς παροίκοις ἔνεκα τοῦ

<sup>1</sup> Some mss. μὴ πάντες γείτονες, and so Mangey, who perhaps understood it to mean that if the neighbour is one who habitually shared the table of the priest, the danger would be avoided.

<sup>2</sup> Some mss. omit μὲν, the others μέρος.

<sup>3</sup> Some mss. omit τριήρεσι, the others τριηράρχοις.

THE SPECIAL LAWS, I. 119-122

Further, if a priest touches any impure object or, as 119 often happens, has an emission during the night, he must not during that day partake of consecrated food but bathe himself, and after sundown he should not be debarred from its use. But the first-fruits must 120 be kept out of the hands of a dweller near the priest<sup>a</sup> or his hired servant ; the first is mentioned because board and hospitality are usually given to neighbours, and there is a danger that the consecrated meats may be profaned<sup>b</sup> through an untimely generosity abused as a pretext for impiety. For we must not share everything with everyone, but restrict our gifts to what are suitable to the recipient. Otherwise the most excellent and valuable thing which life possesses, order, will be destroyed, vanquished by its most mischievous foe, confusion. For if sailors on merchant vessels 121 were remunerated equally with the pilots, or oarsmen and marines on men-of-war with captains and admirals, or cavalry soldiers in armies with their commanders, or rank and file with their officers, or regimental captains with generals, or in cities litigants with judges, councillors with their chairmen, or in general private individuals with rulers, disturbances and factions would arise and the nominal equality would engender an actual inequality. For like pay for unlike worth is inequality, and inequality is the fountain of evil. On the same principle the general 122 law against giving away the prerogatives of the priests should be extended to the neighbours also. Otherwise they will be handling the forbidden meats

<sup>a</sup> See Lev. xxii. 10. Philo evidently takes πάρουκος = "neighbour" (a sense which the word no doubt can bear). E.V. "sojourner," presumably meaning a stranger residing temporarily (?) with the priest.

<sup>b</sup> Lit. "lest one throw away."

PHILO

- γεινιᾶν ἐφαρμομένοις ὧν οὐ θέμις· οὐ γὰρ οἰκίας 123 ἀλλὰ γένους ἔστιν ἡ τιμή. XXV. ὁμοίως μέντοι μηδὲ μισθωτῷ μηδεὶς παρεχέτω μήτε μισθὸν μήθ' ὑπηρεσίας ἀμοιβὴν ἱερὸν γέρας· χρήσεται γὰρ ὁ λαβὼν ἔστιν ὅτε πρὸς ἅ μὴ δεῖ, βέβηλα τὰ τῆς εὐγενείας ἄθλα καὶ τῆς περὶ τὸν νεῶν λειτουργίας 124 ἀπεργασάμενος. δι' ἣν αἰτίαν οὐδ' ἄλλογενεῖ συνόλως ὁ νόμος ἐπιτρέπει μεταλαμβάνειν τῶν ἀγίων, κἂν εὐπατρίδης ὧν τυγχάνη τῶν αὐτοχθόνων καὶ πρὸς ἀνδρῶν καὶ πρὸς γυναικῶν ἀνεπλήπτος [ὧν], ἵνα αἱ τιμαὶ μὴ νοθεύωνται, μένωσι δ' ἐν τῇ 125 ἱερατικῇ τάξει βεβαίως φυλαττόμεναι. καὶ γὰρ ἄτοπον τὰς μὲν θυσίας καὶ ἱεουργίας καὶ ὅσα ἄλλα περὶ τὸν βωμὸν ἀγιστεύεται μὴ πᾶσιν ἀλλὰ τοῖς ἱερεῦσι μόνοις ἐπιτετράφθαι, τὰ δὲ ἀντὶ τούτων ἄθλα κοινὰ γίνεσθαι καὶ τῶν ἐπιτυχόντων, ὡς δέον μὲν πόνοις πολλοῖς καὶ καμάτοις καὶ ταῖς μεθ' ἡμέραν καὶ νύκτωρ φροντίσιν ἀποτρύχειν τοὺς ἱερέας, τὰ δ' ἄθλα κοινὰ καὶ τοῖς ἀργουσίσι ἀπο-126 φαίνειν. οἰκογενεῖ δέ, φησίν, καὶ ἀργυρωνήτῳ μεταδιδότῳ δεσπότης ἱερεὺς σιτίων καὶ ποτῶν ἐκ τῶν ἀπαρχῶν· πρῶτον μὲν ὅτι θεράποντι πόρος εἰς ὃ δεσπότης, ὃ δὲ τοῦ δεσπότου κληῖρος αἱ ἱεραὶ φιλανθρωπίαι, ἐξ ὧν ἀνάγκη τὸν δούλον 127 τρέφεσθαι· δεύτερον δ' ὅτι τὰ γενησόμενα πάντως ἀνάγκη δρᾶν ἐκόντας· οἱ δ' οἰκέται, κἂν μὴ θέλωμεν, ἅτε αἰεὶ συνόντες καὶ συνδιαιτώμενοι, σιτία

---

<sup>a</sup> See Lev. xxii. 10: LXX ἄλλογενής, E.V. "stranger," meaning "one who is not a priest." The word might mean "foreigner," but as the LXX uses the same word in v. 12, where Philo interprets it as a non-priest (§ 129), he probably means the same here.

THE SPECIAL LAWS, I. 122-127

just because they live in the vicinity. For the privilege belongs not to a dwelling-house, but to a caste. XXV. In the same way no one 123 must bestow the sacred prerogative on a hired servant, either as his hire or in exchange for his service. For he will sometimes use the gift for improper purposes, thus profaning the rewards attached to pure lineage and the ministry of the sanctuary. This is the 124 reason why no one at all of alien race,<sup>a</sup> even though he be nobly born and of the original stock, without flaw either on the male or the female line, is permitted by the law to share in the sacred things, in order that the privileges may not be tainted with bastardy but remain the securely guarded possessions of the priestly order. For it would be preposterous 125 that while the sacrifices and sacred rites and all the ceremonies of the altar are committed not to all but to the priests alone, the rewards assigned to these offices should become common property and at the service of chance comers, as though it were right to wear out the priests with toil and labour and the cares that beset them night and day and at the same time to allow their rewards to be shared by idlers.

<sup>b</sup> But the home-bred or purchased slave, he proceeds, 126 should be given his share in food and drink from the first-fruits by the priest, his master. First, because the servant has no resources but his master, and that master's estate consists of the sacred gifts of charity by which the slave must necessarily be maintained. Secondly, what is sure to come to pass anyhow should 127 most certainly be done voluntarily. Our domestics are always with us and share our lives. They prepare

<sup>b</sup> See Lev. xxii. 11.

- [232] | τε καὶ ποτὰ καὶ ὄψα τοῖς δεσπόταις προευτρεπιζόμενοι καὶ τραπέζαις ἐφειστώτες καὶ τὰ λείψανα ἐκκομίζοντες, κἂν μὴ φανερώς λαμβάνωσι, λάθρα γοῦν ὑφαιρήσονται, κλέπτειν ὑπὸ τῆς ἀνάγκης βιασθέντες, ὡς ἀνθ' ἐνὸς ἐγκλήματος, εἶπερ ἐστὶν ἀδίκημα τὸ ἐκ τῶν δεσποτικῶν τρέφεσθαι, καὶ ἕτερον προσκατασκευάζεσθαι, κλοπῆν, ἵνα οἶα φῶρες πρὸ τῶν<sup>1</sup> ἀνυπαιτίως ζώντων ἀπολαύσωσι
- 128 τῶν καθιερωθέντων, ὅπερ ἐστὶν ἀτοπώτατον· τρίτον κἀκεῖνο χρῆ λογίζεσθαι, ὅτι τὰ τῶν ἀπαρχῶν οὐ παρόσον ἐπινέμεται τοῖς οἰκέταις ὀλιγωρηθήσεται, διὰ τὸν δεσποτικὸν φόβον· ἰκανὸς γὰρ οὗτος ἐπιστομίζειν τὴν τιμῶν εὐχέρειαν ραθυμεῖν οὐκ ἐφίεις.
- 129 XXVI. Ταῦθ' ὑπειπὼν φιλανθρωπίας μεστὸν νόμον ἐξῆς ἀναγράφει. ἐὰν θυγάτηρ, φησὶν, ἱερέως γημαμένη μὴ ἱερεῖ χηρεύσῃ, τελευτήσαντος ἀνδρὸς ἢ καὶ ἔτι ζώντος, ἅπαις καταλειφθεῖσα, πάλιν ἐπὶ τὸν πατρῶον οἶκον ἐπανερχέσθω μεταληψομένη τῶν ἀπαρχῶν, ὧν καὶ ἡνίκα παρθένος ἦν ἐκοινώνει· τρόπον γάρ τινα καὶ νῦν ἐστὶ δυνάμει παρθένος ἢ καὶ ἀνδρὸς καὶ παίδων ἔρημος, οὐδεμίαν ἑτέραν
- 130 ἔχουσα καταφυγὴν ὅτι μὴ τὸν πατέρα. υἱῶν δὲ ὄντων ἢ θυγατέρων, ἀνάγκη τὴν μητέρα τοῖς τέκνοις συντετάχθαι· υἱοὶ γὰρ<sup>2</sup> καὶ θυγατέρες τῆς τοῦ γεννήσαντος οἰκίας ὄντες εἰς ταύτην συνεφέλκονται καὶ τὴν μητέρα.<sup>3</sup>
- 131 XXVII. Τοῖς ἱερεῦσιν οὐκ ἀπένειμε χώρας ἀπο-

<sup>1</sup> MSS. πρὸς τῶν οἰ τὸν τρόπον.

<sup>2</sup> MSS. δέ.

<sup>3</sup> Here the mss. insert the heading Γέρα ἱερέων.

<sup>a</sup> i.e. if the sacred meats are pilfered and eaten on the sly, they would be treated irreverently; but if they are eaten openly and under supervision, this danger is avoided.

THE SPECIAL LAWS, I. 127-131

the ordinary food and drink and additional dishes for their masters, stand by the table and carry out the remains. Whether we wish it or not, they will even if they do not take them openly, pilfer them on the sly. Thus they are compelled perforce to steal and instead of a single indictment, if indeed it is an offence to feed off the master's viands, a second is provided, namely, stealing, with the result that the enjoyment of the consecrated meats appears to fall to thieves instead of to those who live a blameless life, which is the height of absurdity. There is a third point for consideration. The dignity of the first-fruits will not be brought into contempt because they are shared by the servants. The fear of the master will prevent this, for by keeping them from idle habits he is able to check any light conduct on their part.<sup>a</sup> 128

XXVI. As a sequel to this he proceeds to lay down a law full of humane feeling.<sup>b</sup> If the daughter of a priest, he says, is widowed after marrying one who is not a priest, either by his death or divorce during his lifetime, and left without children, she should return to her father to regain the share in the first-fruits which she enjoyed as a virgin. For she is still in a sense virtually a virgin, destitute as she is of both husband and children and with no refuge except her father. But if there are sons or daughters, the mother must take her place with her children.<sup>c</sup> For sons and daughters belong to the house of the male parent and carry with them into it the mother also.<sup>d</sup> 130

XXVII. The priests were not allotted a section of 131

<sup>b</sup> See Lev. xxii. 13.

<sup>c</sup> A reasonable deduction from the above.

<sup>d</sup> Here the mss. give the heading "Privileges of the Priests." In Cohn a fresh numeration of chapters.

PHILO

τομὴν ὁ νόμος, ἵν' ὡς ἕτεροι τὰς ἀπὸ τῆς γῆς καρπούμενοι προσόδους τῶν ἀναγκαίων εὐπορώσιν, ἀλλ' ὑπερβολῇ χρησάμενος τιμῆς τὸν θεὸν ἔφη κλῆρον αὐτῶν εἶναι, κατ' ἀναφορὰν τὴν ἐπὶ τὰ καθιερούμενα, δυεῖν ἔνεκα, τῆς τε ἀνωτάτω τιμῆς, ἐπεὶ κοινωνοὶ τῶν κατ' εὐχαριστίαν ἀπονεμομένων γίνονται θεῷ, καὶ τοῦ περὶ μόνα πραγματεύεσθαι δεῖν τὰ περὶ τὰς ἀγιστείας ὡσπερ τινὰς κλήρων [233] ἐπιμελητάς. ἃ δὲ | προτίθησιν ἄθλα καὶ ἀριστεία 132 ταῦτ' ἐστί. πρῶτον μὲν ἄπονον καὶ ἀταλαίπωρον τροφήν ἐτοίμη· κελεύει γὰρ τοὺς σιτοπονοῦντας ἀπὸ παντὸς στέατός τε καὶ φυράματος ἄρτον ἀφαιρεῖν ἀπαρχὴν εἰς ἱερέων χρῆσιν, προνοούμενος ἅμα καὶ τῆς εἰς εὐσέβειαν ἀγούσης ὁδοῦ νομίμω 133 διδασκαλία τῶν ἀφαιρούντων. ἐθιζόμενοι γὰρ αἰεὶ καὶ τῆς ἀναγκαίας τροφῆς ἀπάρχεσθαι τὴν θεοῦ μνήμην ἄληστον ἔξουσιν, οὗ μείζον ἀγαθὸν οὐκ ἔστιν εὐρεῖν. πολυανθρωποτάτου δ' ἔθνους ἀναγκαιὸν εἶναι καὶ τὰς ἀπαρχὰς ἀφθόνους, ὡς καὶ τὸν ἀπορώτατον τῶν ἱερέων ἔνεκα περιουσίας τροφῶν

---

<sup>a</sup> The reference is to Deut. xviii. 1, 2, "The priests shall have no part nor inheritance with Israel. The offerings (καρπώματα) of the Lord shall be their inheritance, they shall eat them, and they shall have no inheritance among their brethren. The Lord Himself is their inheritance." Philo sees that in this text "the offerings of the Lord are their inheritance" is equivalent to "the Lord is their inheritance," and explains the latter phrase as meaning (1) they share the territory by the law so that like the others they might reap the proceeds of the land and have abundance of their requisites therefrom. Instead, when referring to the consecrated offerings, it paid them the transcendent honour of saying that God was their inheritance.<sup>a</sup> He is their inheritance for two reasons. One is the supreme honour conferred by sharing with God in the thank-offering rendered to Him. The other is the obligation to concern themselves only with the sacred rites, thus becoming in a sense trustees of inheritances. The prizes and guerdons which the law offers are as follows. <sup>b</sup> First, a main- 132 tenance ready to hand and entailing no labour or trouble. For he commands that from all dough of wheat or other grain,<sup>c</sup> the bakers should set apart a loaf as a first portion for the use of the priests. In this he is also thinking of the avenue to piety provided by the lesson which the law of setting apart gives to those who obey it. For through being accustomed to make this offering 133 out of their necessary food, they will have God in indelible recollection and no greater blessing can be gained than this. As the nation is very populous, the first-fruits are necessarily also on a lavish scale, so that even the poorest of the priests has so superabundant a maintenance that he seems exceedingly offerings with the Lord; (2) as consecrating the offerings they are trustees and managers of the "inheritances." ἐπιμεληταὶ τῶν κλ. seems to be a technical term for the commoner ἐπίτροποι = "executors." Cf. Diog. Laert. v. 55, 56. In De Plant. 63 he explains the phrase "the Lord is their inheritance," which occurs also in Num. xviii. 20 and Deut. x. 9, as meaning simply the priesthood.

THE SPECIAL LAWS, I. 131-133

<sup>b</sup> See Num. xv. 18-20.
<sup>c</sup> i.e. στέαρ is wheaten flour made into dough, φύραμα dough in general.

PHILO

- 134 εὐπορώτατον δοκεῖν εἶναι. δεύτερον δὲ προστάττει καὶ ἀπὸ τῆς ἄλλης ἀπάσης κτήσεως ἀπάρχεσθαι, καθ' ἑκάστην μὲν ληνὸν οἶνον, καθ' ἑκάστην δ' ἄλωνα σίτον τε καὶ κριθήν, ὁμοίως δ' ἐξ ἔλαιων ἔλαιον καὶ ἀπὸ τῶν ἄλλων ἀκροδρύων ἡμέρους καρπούς, ἵνα μὴ τὰναγκαῖα μόνον ἔχοντες αὐχμηρότερον ἀποζῶσιν, ἀλλὰ καὶ τῶν πρὸς ἀβροδίαιτον βίον εὐποροῦντες ἰλαρώτερον ἐξ ἀφθόνων τρυφῶσι μετὰ κόσμου τοῦ προσήκοντος.
- 135 τρίτον ἐστὶ γέρας τὰ πρωτότοκα ἀρρενικὰ πάντα τῶν χερσαίων ὅσα πρὸς ὑπηρεσίαν καὶ χρῆσιν ἀνθρώπων· ταῦτα γὰρ κελεύει διαδίδοσθαι τοῖς ἱερεῦσι, βοῶν μὲν καὶ προβάτων καὶ αἰγῶν αὐτὰ τὰ ἔκγονα, μόσχους καὶ κριοὺς καὶ χιμάρους, ἐπειδὴ καθαρὰ καὶ πρὸς ἔδωδὴν καὶ πρὸς θυσίας ἐστὶ τε καὶ νενόμισται, λύτρα δὲ τῶν ἄλλων κατατιθέναι, ἵππων καὶ ὄνων καὶ καμήλων καὶ τῶν παρα-
- 136 πλησίων, μὴ μειοῦντας τὴν ἀξίαν. ἔστι δὲ καὶ ταῦτα παμπληθῆ· κτηνοτροφοῦσι γὰρ καὶ ζωοτροφοῦσιν ἐν τοῖς μάλιστα οἱ ἀπὸ τοῦ ἔθνους αἰπόλια καὶ βουκόλια καὶ ποιμένας καὶ μυρίας ἄλλας ἀγέλας
- 137 παντοδαπῶν ζώων ἐκνέμοντες. ἤδη μέντοι καὶ προσυπερβάλλων ὁ νόμος οὐ μόνον ἀπὸ τῆς κτήσεως καθ' ἑκάστην ἰδέαν ἀπάρχεσθαι προστάττει, ἀλλὰ καὶ ἀπὸ τῶν οἰκείων ψυχῶν τε καὶ σωμάτων· μέρη γὰρ διαιρετὰ γονέων παῖδες εἰσιν, εἰ δὲ δεῖ τάληθές εἰπεῖν, ἀδιαίρετα, συγγενικῶ αἵματι καὶ λόγοις προγόνων, ἀοράτοις εἶδεσιν, εἰς

---

<sup>a</sup> There is some dispute as to the texts to which Philo refers. See notes in Heinemann (Translation, pp. 49, 50); Bildung, pp. 35, 36. The references given in Cohn are Ex. xxii. 29, xxxiv. 26, Num. xviii. 13, Deut. xviii. 4, xxvi. 2 ff.

THE SPECIAL LAWS, I. 134-137

well-to-do. <sup>a</sup> Secondly, he ordains that 134 first-fruits should be paid of every other possession ; wine from every winepress, wheat and barley from every threshing-floor, similarly oil from olives, and fruits from the other orchard-trees, so that the priests may not have merely bare necessities, just keeping themselves alive in comparatively squalid conditions, but enjoy abundance of the luxuries of life and pass their days amid cheerful and unstinted comfort in the style which befits their position.

A third requisite is the first- 135 born males of all land animals suitable for the use and service of men.<sup>b</sup> These he orders to be distributed to the priests : in the case of kine and sheep and goats the actual offspring, male calves and lambs and kids, since they are " clean " for the purposes both of eating and sacrificing, and are recognized as such.
For the others, horses and asses and camels and the like, compensation is to be paid without chaffering about the value. All these are very numerous, for 136 the men of the nation are noted particularly as graziers and stock-breeders, and keep flocks and herds of goats and oxen and sheep and of every kind of animal in vast numbers.

And this is not all. We 137 find the laws carrying the principle to a further extent by commanding that first-fruits should be paid not only from possessions of every kind but also from their own souls and bodies. For children are separable parts of their parents, or rather to speak more truly, inseparable parts, joined to them by kinship of blood, by the thoughts and memories of ancestors, invisible presences still alive among their descendants, <sup>b</sup> See Ex. xxii. 30, Num. xviii. 15-20.

PHILO

ἐκγόνους διήκουσι φίλτροις τε ἐνωτικῆς εὐνοίας καὶ 138 φύσεως δεσμοῖς ἀλύτοις ἡρμοσμένοι. ἀλλ' ὅμως καὶ τούτων τοὺς πρωτοτόκους ἄρρενας τρόπον ἀπαρχῆς καθιεροῖ, χαριστήρια εὐτεκνίας καὶ εὐ-γονίας οὔσης τε καὶ ἐλπιζομένης, καὶ ἅμα βουλόμενος οὐ μόνον ἀμέμπτους ἀλλὰ καὶ σφόδρα ἐπαινετοὺς εἶναι τοὺς γάμους. ἐξ ὧν ὁ πρῶτος βλαστήσας καρπὸς καθιεροῦται· ὅπερ χρῆ λογιζομένους καὶ ἄνδρας καὶ γυναῖκας σωφροσύνης καὶ οἰκουρίας καὶ ὁμονοίας περιέχεσθαι καὶ συμπνέοντας ἀλλήλοις ἔν τε λόγῳ καὶ ἔργῳ τὴν λεγομένην 139 κοινωνίαν ἀληθείᾳ παγίως<sup>1</sup> βεβαιοῦσθαι. τῆς δὲ [234] τῶν πρωτοτόκων | υἱῶν καθιέρωσης,<sup>2</sup> ὑπὲρ τοῦ μήτε γονεῖς τέκνων μήτε τέκνα γονέων διαζεύγνυσθαι, τιμᾶται τὴν ἀπαρχὴν ἀργυρίῳ ῥητῶ, προσ-τάξας ἴσον εἰσφέρειν καὶ πένητα καὶ πλούσιον, οὐ πρὸς ἀξίωμα τῶν εἰσφερόντων οὐδὲ πρὸς εὐεξίαν καὶ κάλλος τῶν γεννηθέντων ἀπιδῶν, ἀλλ' ὅσον δυνατὸν εἰσενεγκεῖν καὶ τῷ λίαν ἀπόρῳ σταθμησά-140 μενος. ἐπειδὴ γὰρ ἡ παίδων γένεσις ἐν ἴσῳ καὶ τοῖς λαμπροτάτοις καὶ τοῖς ἀφανεστάτοις εἴωθε συμβαίνειν, ἴσῃν ἐδικαίωσε καὶ τὴν εἰσφορὰν νομοθετῆσαι στοχασάμενος, ὡς ἔφην, μάλιστα τοῦ

<sup>1</sup> MSS. παγίῳ (= παγίῳ).

<sup>2</sup> Cohn considers this genitive as impossible, and following καθιέρωσιν in F and the apparent insertion of ἀλλά before τιμᾶται in the Armenian, suggests τὴν . . . καθιέρωσιν <οὐ δέχεται> . . . <ἀλλά> τιμᾶται. See Hermes, 1908, p. 189. I

THE SPECIAL LAWS, I. 137-140

by the love-ties of the affection which unites them, by the indissoluble bonds of nature.<sup>a</sup> Yet even 138 parents have their first-born male children consecrated as a first-fruit, a thank-offering for the blessings of parenthood realized in the present and the hopes of fruitful increase in the future. At the same time he shews his wish that the marriages, the first produce of which is a fruit sacred to His service, should be not only blameless but worthy of the highest praise. And reflection on this should lead both husbands and wives to cherish temperance and domesticity and unanimity, and by mutual sympathy shewn in word and deed to make the name of partnership a reality securely founded on truth. <sup>b</sup> But to 139 prevent the parents being separated from the children and the children from their parents, he assessed the first-fruit arising from the consecration of the first-born sons at a fixed sum of money, and ordered rich and poor to make the same contribution. He did not take into consideration either the dignity of the contributors or the good condition and beauty of the offspring, but fixed the payment at an amount which was within the power of even the very poor. For 140 since the birth of children is an event equally common with the grandest and the meanest, he considered it just to enact that the contribution should be equal also, aiming, as I have said, as nearly as possible at a

<sup>a</sup> See Ex. xiii. 2, xxii. 29.

<sup>b</sup> See Num. xviii. 15, 16, where "the fixed sum of money" is given as five shekels.

---

see no great difficulty in taking καθιερώσεως either as a genitive of respect or as depending on ἀπαρχήν.

- 141 pāsi δυνατοῦ. XXVIII. μετὰ δὲ ταῦτα καὶ ἄλλον πόρον οὐ βραχὺν ἐπινέμει τοῖς ἱερεῦσιν, ἕκαστον τῶν προσόδων ἀπάρχεσθαι κελεύσας, ἀπό τε σίτου καὶ οἴνου καὶ ἐλαίου καὶ ἔτι θρεμμάτων ἐπιγονῆς κατὰ τε ποιμένας καὶ βουκόλια καὶ αἰπόλια καὶ τὰς ἄλλας ἀγέλας. ὅση δὲ καὶ τούτων ἐστὶν ἀφθονία, τεκμήραιτ' ἂν τις ἐκ τῆς περὶ τὸ ἔθνος 142 πολυανθρωπίας. ἐξ ὧν ἀπάντων δῆλόν ἐστιν, ὅτι βασιλέων σεμνότητα καὶ τιμὴν περιάπτει τοῖς ἱερεῦσιν ὁ νόμος· ὡς γοῦν ἡγεμόσι φόρους ἀπὸ παντὸς μέρους κτήσεως δίδοσθαι κελεύει, καὶ δίδονται τὸν ἐναντίον τρόπον ἢ ὃν αἱ πόλεις τοῖς 143 δυνάσταις εἰσφέρουσιν· αἱ μὲν γὰρ ἐξ ἀνάγκης καὶ μόλις, ἐπιστένουσαι, τοὺς ἐκλογεῖς τῶν χρημάτων ὡς κοινούς λυμεῶνας ὑποβλεπόμεναι καὶ προφάσεις ἄλλοτε ἄλλοίαις σκηπτόμεναι καὶ τῶν προθεσμιῶν ἀλογοῦσαι τὰ ὀρισθέντα τέλη καὶ δασμούς κατα-144 τιθέασιν· οἱ δ' ἀπὸ τοῦ ἔθνους [τὰ ἱερατικά] γεγηθότες, χαίροντες, τοὺς αἰτοῦντας φθάνοντες, τὰς προθεσμίας ἐπιτέμνοντες, λαμβάνειν ἄλλ' οὐ διδόναι νομίζοντες, μετ' εὐφημίας καὶ εὐχαριστίας καθ' ἐκάστην τῶν ἐτησίων ὥρων ποιοῦνται τὰς εἰσφοράς, ἄνδρες ὁμοῦ καὶ γυναῖκες, αὐτοκελεύστω προθυμία καὶ ἐτοιμότητι καὶ σπουδῇ παντὸς λόγου κρίπτουσι.
- 145 XXIX. Καὶ ταῦτα μὲν ἀπὸ τῆς ἐκάστου κτήσεως ἐπινέμεται· ἄλλαι δὲ εἰσὶν ἐξαίρετοι πρόσοδοι

---

<sup>a</sup> Cohn gives Num. xviii. 12 as the reference for this tax which appears to differ from those of §§ 134 and 135 in being paid not as a first-fruit on each form of produce in its first stage or on the first-born of the animals, but on the final

THE SPECIAL LAWS, I. 141-145

sum within the means of all. XXVIII. 141

<sup>a</sup> After that he assigns another considerable source of wealth to the priests when he commands everyone to give first-fruits of his revenues from corn and wine and oil, and again of the increase of their livestock levied on their flocks and herds, of sheep and oxen and goats and other animals, and how great an abundance the nation possesses of these may be judged from the magnitude of the population. From 142 all this it is clear that the law invests the priests with the dignity and honours of royalty. Thus he commands that tribute should be given from every part of a man's property as to a ruler, and the way in which the tribute is paid is a complete contrast to the spirit in which the cities make their payments to their potentates. The cities pay under compulsion and 143 reluctantly and groan under the burden. They look askance at the tax-collectors as general agents of destruction. They trump up different excuses to suit the occasion, and when they discharge the appointed dues and assessments they do so without regard to the time limits allowed. But our people 144 pay gladly and cheerfully. They anticipate the demand, abridge the time limits and think that they are not giving but receiving. And so at each of the yearly seasons they make their contributions with benediction and thankfulness, men and women alike, and with a zeal and readiness which needs no prompting and an ardour which no words can describe.

XXIX. These are the contributions levied on the 145 personal possessions of every individual, but the priests have also other special incomings drawn very harvest or property as a whole. For further discussion see Heinemann ad loc.

PHILO

- πρεπωδέσταιται ἱερεῦσιν αἱ ἀπὸ τῶν ἀναγομένων θυσιῶν. παντὸς γὰρ ἱερείου προστέτακται δύο τοῖς ἱερεῦσιν ἀπὸ θυεῖν δίδοσθαι μελῶν, βραχίονα μὲν ἀπὸ χειρὸς δεξιᾶς, ἀπὸ δὲ τοῦ στήθους ὅσον πῖον, τὸ μὲν ἰσχύος καὶ ἀνδρείας καὶ πάσης νομίμου πράξεως ἐν τε τῷ δίδοναι καὶ λαμβάνειν καὶ ἐν-εργεῖν σύμβολον, τὸ δὲ τῆς περὶ τὸν θυμὸν ἴλεω 146 πραότητος. ἐνοικεῖν γὰρ αὐτὸν λόγος ἔχει τοῖς στήθεσιν, ἐπειδὴ χωρίον οἰκειότατον ἢ φύσις ἀπἐνειμε τὰ στέρνα θυμῷ πρὸς ἐνδιαίτησιν, ὧ καθάπερ στρατιώτῃ περιέβαλεν εἰς τὸ δυσάλωτον ἔρκος ὀχυρώτατον, τὸν ἐπικαλούμενον θώρακα, ὃν ἐκ πολλῶν καὶ συνεχῶν καὶ κραταιοτάτων ὀστέων [235] ἀπειργάσατο | σφίγγας αὐτὸν εὖ μάλα νεύροις 147 ἀρραγέσιν. ἀπὸ δὲ τῶν ἔξω τοῦ βωμοῦ θυομένων ἔνεκα κρεωφαγίας τρία προστέτακται τῷ ἱερεῖ δίδοσθαι, βραχίονα καὶ σιαγόνας καὶ τὸ ἔνυστρον καλούμενον, τὸν μὲν βραχίονα διὰ τὴν ὀλίγω πρότερον εἰρημένην αἰτίαν, τὰς δὲ σιαγόνας τοῦ τε κυριωτάτου τῶν μελῶν, κεφαλῆς, καὶ λόγου τοῦ κατὰ προφορὰν ἀπαρχήν, οὗ τὸ νᾶμα ρεῖν ἔξω δίχα τῆς τούτων κινήσεως οὐκ ἂν δύναίτο· σειομένων γὰρ —ἀφ' οὗ καὶ προσωνομάσθησαν ἐτύμως—ὅταν πληχθῶσιν ὑπὸ γλώττης, ἅπασα ἢ τῆς φωνῆς 148 ὄργανοποιῖα συνηχεῖ. τὸ δὲ ἔνυστρον ἔκφυσις κοιλίας ἐστί· κοιλίαν δὲ φάττην ἀλόγου θρέμματος,

<sup>a</sup> Lev. vii. 31-34 (LXX 21-24). There, however, the fat on the breast is to be burnt, and not, as here implied, taken as a perquisite by the priest. (This discrepancy is not noticed by Cohn or Heinemann, and there may perhaps be some explanation of it.)

<sup>b</sup> Or "needed to control" (the θυμός). For a similar thought as to the breast being the seat of θυμός cf. Leg. All.

THE SPECIAL LAWS, I. 145-148

appropriately from the sacrifices offered. <sup>a</sup> It is ordained that with every victim two gifts should be presented to the priest from two of its parts, the arm or shoulder from the right side and all the fat from the breast, the former as a symbol of strength and manliness and of all lawful operations in giving and receiving and general activity, the latter of gentle mildness applied to the spirited element.<sup>b</sup> For it is <sup>146</sup> held that this element resides in the breast, since nature has appointed the chest as the most suitable place for its mansion and girded it like a soldier armed against attack with the stoutest of fenceworks called the thorax, or breastplate, which she has formed of a number of bones one upon another, strong and hard, and bound them tight with unbreakable sinews. But <sup>147</sup> of animals sacrificed away from the altars as meat for private consumption, three portions are appointed to be given to the priests, the shoulder and the jaws and the maw, as it is called.<sup>c</sup> The shoulder for the reason mentioned a little above, the jaws both as belonging to that master-limb, the head, and as a first-fruit of the uttered word which needs their movement to make possible the outflow of its stream. The jaws are shaken—and thence the derivation of their name<sup>d</sup>—when the tongue strikes upon them and then the whole vocal mechanism joins with them in producing sound. The maw is an excrescence of the <sup>148</sup> belly, and it is the fate of the belly to be the manger

iii. 115. Since gentleness is brought into play by being needed to control θυμός, it also is placed in the breast. In much the same way, as reason is needed to curb high spirit, the λογεῖον or reason-seat is placed on Aaron's breast (ibid. 119). See further App. pp. 620-621.

<sup>c</sup> See Deut. xviii. 3.

<sup>d</sup> i. e. σιαγώνης derived from σεῖω.

PHILO

- ἐπιθυμίας, εἶναι συμβέβηκεν, ἥτις ὑπ' οἰνοφλυγίας καὶ ὀψοφαγίας ἀρδομένη τροφαῖς ἐπαλλήλοις σιτίων ὁμοῦ καὶ ποτῶν αἰὲ κατακλύζεται καὶ σὺς τρόπον ἐν βορβόρῳ διαιτωμένη χαίρει· παρὸ καὶ τόπος ἀπενεμήθη σφόδρα οἰκειότατος ὁ τῶν περιττωμάτων ἀκολάστῳ καὶ ἀπρεπεστάτῳ θρέμματι.
- 149 ἀντίπαλον δὲ ἐπιθυμίας ἐγκράτεια, ἣν ἀσκητέον καὶ διαπονητέον καὶ σπουδαστέον μηχανῇ πάσῃ περιποιεῖσθαι ὡς μέγιστον ἀγαθὸν καὶ τελειότατον ἴδια
- 150 τε καὶ κοινῇ συμφέρον. ἐπιθυμία μὲν οὖν βέβηλος καὶ ἀκάθαρτος καὶ ἀνίερος οὔσα πέρα τῶν ἀρετῆς ὄρων ἐλήλαται καὶ πεφυγάδευται δεόντως· ἐγ-κράτεια δέ, καθαρὰ καὶ ἀκηλίδωτος ἀρετῆ, πάντων ὅσα πρὸς βρῶσιν καὶ πόσιν ἀλογοῦσα καὶ ἐπάνω τῶν γαστρὸς ἡδονῶν αὐχοῦσα ἴστασθαι, βωμῶν ἱερῶν ψαυέτω καὶ<sup>1</sup> τὴν πρόσφυσιν ἐπιφερομένη τῆς κοιλίας, ὑπόμνημα τοῦ καταφρονητικῶς ἔχειν ἀπληστίας καὶ λαιμαργίας καὶ πάντων ὅσα τὰ εἰς
- 151 τὰς ἐπιθυμίας ἀναφλέγει. XXX. ἐφ' ἅπασιν μέντοι καὶ τὰς τῶν ὀλοκαυτωμάτων—ἀμύθητα δὲ ταῦτ' ἐστί—δορὰς προστάττει τοὺς ὑπηρετοῦντας ταῖς θυσίαις ἱερεῖς λαμβάνειν, οὐ βραχεῖαν ἀλλ' ἐν τοῖς μάλιστα πολυχρήματον δωρεάν. ἐξ ὧν δῆλόν ἐστιν, ὅτι κληρὸν ἓνα μὴ παρασχὼν τῇ ἱερωμένῃ φυλῇ κατὰ ταῦτὰ ταῖς ἄλλαις τοῦ πασῶν ἔδωκε σεμνό-τερον πόρον<sup>2</sup> καὶ ἀγιώτερον, κατὰ πρόφασιν ἀπ-αρχῶν τῶν ἐξ ἅπαντος θυσίας εἵδους.

<sup>1</sup> Perhaps omit καί.

<sup>2</sup> MSS. τρόπον (OR τόπον).

---

<sup>a</sup> The phrase is taken from Plato, Timaeus 70 E "They (i.e. God's agents) constructed the part between the midriff and the navel as a manger (φάτνη), for the sustenance of the

THE SPECIAL LAWS, I. 148-152

of that irrational animal, desire,<sup>a</sup> which drenched by wine-bibbing and gluttony, is perpetually flooded with relays of food and drink administered to it, and like a sow rejoices to make its home in the mire. And therefore the place of dregs and leavings has been assigned as by far the fittest for a licentious and most unseemly animal. But the opposite of desire is continence, the acquisition of which is a task to be practised and pressed forward by every possible means as the greatest and most perfect of blessings promoting personal and public welfare alike. So then desire, profane, impure and unholy, has been expelled outside the confines of virtue and well deserved is its banishment. But let continence, that pure and stainless virtue which disregards all concerns of food and drink and claims to stand superior to the pleasures of the stomach, touch the holy altars and bring with it the appendage of the belly as a reminder that it holds in contempt gluttony and greediness and all that inflames the tendencies to lust. XXX. <sup>b</sup> In addition to all the rest it ordains that the priests who minister at the holy sacrifices should receive the hides of the whole-burnt-offerings, the number of which is incalculable, and this is no small gift, but represents a very large sum of money. From these things it is clear that the law did not provide the consecrated tribe with a single portion, like the others, but gave it, under the guise of first-fruits from every kind of sacrifice, a source of revenue of greater dignity and sanctity than that of them all put together. But that none of the body, and then they chained it (i.e. the part of the soul which lusts after meat and drink) like a wild beast" (κατέδησαν ὡς θρέμμα ἄγριον).

<sup>b</sup> See Lev. vii. 8 (LXX vi. 38).

PHILO

- 152 ὑπὲρ δὲ τοῦ μηδένα τῶν διδόντων ὄνειδίξειν τοῖς λαμβάνουσι, κελεύει τὰς ἀπαρχὰς εἰς τὸ ἱερόν [236] κομίζεσθαι πρότερον, εἴτ' | ἐνθένδε τοὺς ἱερεῖς λαμβάνειν· ἤρμωτε γὰρ θεῷ μὲν τοὺς εὐεργετου-μένους ἐν ἅπασιν τοῖς κατὰ τὸν βίον χαριστηρίους ἀνάγειν ἀπαρχὰς, τὸν δὲ ἅτε μηδενὸς ἐπίδεᾷ τοῖς ἀμφὶ τὸ ἱερόν ὑπηρέταις καὶ λειτουργοῖς χαρίζεσθαι μετὰ σεμνότητος καὶ τιμῆς τῆς ἀπάσης· τὸ γὰρ μὴ παρ' ἀνθρώπων ἀλλὰ παρὰ τοῦ πάντων εὐεργέτου δοκεῖν λαμβάνειν ἀδυσώπητον ἔχει δωρεάν.
- 153 XXXI. Τοσοῦτων οὖν προκειμένων ἄθλων, ἐάν τινες ἀπορῶσι τῶν ἱερέων κοσμίως καὶ ἀνυπαιτίως ζῶντες, τῆς ἡμετέρας παρανομίας ἐφεστᾶσι κατἡγοροί, κἂν ἡσυχάζωσιν· εἰ γὰρ ἐπιθηρχοῦμεν τοῖς κελευσθεῖσι καὶ τὰς ἀπαρχὰς ἐποιούμεθα ἢ προστέτακται, οὐκ ἂν μόνον ἐκείνοι τῶν ἀναγκαίων εὐπόρουσιν, ἀλλὰ καὶ τῶν ἄλλων ὅσα πρὸς ἀβροδιαί-154 τους χορηγίας ἀνεπίμπλαντο. κἂν ἄρα ποτὲ αὐθις ἢ φυλὴ τῶν ἱερέων ἐν ἅπασιν τοῖς κατὰ τὸν βίον ἀφθόνοις ἐξετάζηται, μέγα δεῖγμα γενήσεται τοῦτο κοινῆς ὁσιότητος καὶ τῆς τῶν νομίμων ἐπ' ἀκριβὲς εἰς ἅπαν φυλακῆς. ἀλλ' ἢ τινων ὀλιγωρία—ἅπαντας γὰρ οὐκ ἀσφαλὲς αἰτιᾶσθαι—γέγονεν αἰτία πενίας τοῖς ἱερωμένοις, εἰ δὲ δεῖ τάληθὲς εἰπεῖν, καὶ αὐτοῖς 155 ἐκείνοις. τὸ γὰρ παρανομεῖν ἐπιζήμιον τοῖς παρανομοῦσι, κἂν πρὸς ὀλίγον δελεάζῃ χρόνον· τὸ δὲ ἔπεσθαι τοῖς τῆς φύσεως νόμοις ὠφελιμώτατον, κἂν παραντικά αὐστηρὸν ἢ καὶ μηδὲν προσηγνὲς ἐμ-φαίνῃ.

---

<sup>a</sup> Deduced from the language of Num. xviii. 8-19, particularly v. 19, where the offerings described in detail are said to be the gift of God to the priests.

THE SPECIAL LAWS, I. 152-155

donors should taunt the recipients, it ordered the first-fruits to be first brought into the temple and then taken thence by the priests.<sup>a</sup> It was the proper course that the first-fruits should be brought as a thank-offering to God by those whose life in all its aspects is blessed by His beneficence, and then by Him, since He needs nothing at all, freely bestowed with all dignity and honour on those who serve and minister in the temple. For if the gift is felt to come not from men but from the Benefactor of all, its acceptance carries with it no sense of shame.

XXXI. Since, then, the prospective rewards are so 153 great, if any of the priests who live a decent and blameless life are in need, they confront us as accusers of our disobedience to the law, even though they bring no charge. For if we obeyed the commandment and gave the first-fruits as it is ordained, they would have not only abundance of mere necessities but a full measure of all else that the luxurious can require. And on the other hand if the priestly tribe 154 shall in the course of the future be found to possess all the means of life in abundance, it will be strong evidence that the practice of religion is general and the law carefully observed in all respects. But the neglectfulness of some<sup>b</sup>—for it would not be safe to accuse all—has brought about the impoverishment of the consecrated class and indeed, it is true to say, of the defaulters themselves. Disobedience to the 155 law, for all its short-lived seductiveness, recoils upon the disobedient. But in compliance with the laws of nature, though for the moment it is stern and wears a grim aspect, there is the greatest of rewards.

<sup>b</sup> This rather modifies the glowing statement of § 144.

PHILO

- 156 XXXII. Τοσαύτας προσόδων ἀφορμὰς χαρισάμενος τοῖς ἱερεῦσιν οὐδὲ τῶν ἐν τῇ δευτέρᾳ τάξει κατωλιγώρησεν· εἰσὶ δὲ νεωκόροι. τούτων οἱ μὲν ἐπὶ θύραις ἴδρυνται παρ' αὐταῖς ταῖς εἰσόδοις πυλωροί, οἱ δ' εἴσω κατὰ τὸ πρόναον ὑπὲρ τοῦ μή-τινα ὦν οὐ θέμις ἐκόντα ἢ καὶ ἄκοντα ἐπιβῆναι, οἱ δ' ἐν κύκλῳ περινοστοῦσιν ἐν μέρει διακληρωσάμενοι νύκτα καὶ ἡμέραν, ἡμεροφύλακες καὶ νυκτο-φύλακες, ἕτεροι δὲ τὰς στοὰς καὶ τὰ ἐν ὑπαίθρῳ κοροῦντες τὸν φορυτὸν ἐκκομίζουσιν ἐπιμελούμενοι καθαριότητος· οἷς ἅπασι μισθὸς ὠρίσθησαν αἱ 157 δεκάται, κλῆρος γὰρ νεωκόρων οὗτος. οὐ πρότερον γοῦν εἴασεν ὁ νόμος αὐταῖς χρῆσθαι τοὺς λαβόντας ἢ πάλιν ἄλλας δεκάτας ὡς ἀπὸ κτημάτων ἰδίων ἀπάρξασθαι καὶ δοῦναι τοῖς τῆς ἀμείνονος τάξεως ἱερεῦσι· τηνικαῦτα γὰρ ἐφῆκεν ἀπολαύειν, πρότερον 158 δ' οὐκ ἔα. ἀπένειμε δὲ καὶ πόλεις αὐτοῖς ὀκτώ πρὸς ταῖς τεσσαράκοντα καὶ καθ' ἐκάστην προάστεια εἰς δισχιλίους πήχεις ἐν κύκλῳ πρὸς νομὰς θρεμμάτων καὶ τὰς ἄλλας ὦν δεῖ πόλεσιν ἀναγκαίας ὑπηρεσίας. ἐκ δὲ τούτων ἀπεκληρώθησαν ἕξ, αἱ μὲν ἐκτὸς αἱ δὲ ἐντὸς Ἰορδάνου τοῦ ποταμοῦ, τρεῖς ἐκατέρωθεν, εἰς καταφυγὴν τοῖς 159 ἀκούσιον φόνον δράσασιν. ἐπειδὴ γὰρ | τὸν ὄπω-[237] σοῦν γενόμενον ἀνθρώπῳ τελευτῆς παραίτιον οὐκ ἦν εὐαγὲς εἴσω περιρραντηρίων παρέρχεσθαι χρώ-μενον πρὸς ἀσφάλειαν καταφυγῇ τῷ ἱερῷ, τὰς εἰρημένας ἀνῆκε πόλεις, ἱερὰ δεύτερα, πολλήν

<sup>a</sup> See Num. xviii. 21.

<sup>b</sup> See Num. xviii. 26-28.

<sup>c</sup> See Num. xviii. 32, "ye shall not bear sin by reason of it (i.e. eating the fruits), because ye shall have offered an offering of first-fruits from it." (LXX.)

THE SPECIAL LAWS, I. 156-159

XXXII. After bestowing these great sources of 156 revenue on the priests, he did not ignore those of the second rank either, namely the temple attendants.
Some of these are stationed at the doors as gatekeepers at the very entrances, some within in front of the sanctuary to prevent any unlawful person from setting foot thereon, either intentionally or unintentionally.
Some patrol around it turn by turn in relays by appointment night and day, keeping watch and guard at both seasons. Others sweep the porticoes and the open court, convey away the refuse and ensure cleanliness. <sup>a</sup> All these have the tithes appointed as their wages, this being the portion settled on them as temple attendants. <sup>b</sup> It should be noted 157 that the law does not allow them to avail themselves of these tithes until they have rendered other tithes from them treated as their own property as firstfruits to the priests of the superior class. <sup>c</sup> Only when this condition has been fulfilled are they allowed to enjoy their income. <sup>d</sup> He also assigned 158 them forty-eight cities with a frontage of land each to the depth of 2000 cubits to graze their cattle and carry on other kinds of business necessary for the service of the cities. <sup>e</sup> Of these there were six allotted, three on the near side and three on the far side of the river Jordan, as a refuge for the perpetrators of involuntary homicide. For since it would be sacrilege 159 for a person responsible for the death of a man, however it was caused, to come within the sacred precincts, and use the temple as a refuge from danger, he made over to them the aforesaid cities as secondary

<sup>a</sup> See Num. xxxv. 2-8.

<sup>e</sup> For the sequel to the end of § 161 see Num. xxxv. 9-28.

PHILO

ἀσυλίαν ἐχούσας ἔνεκα τῆς περὶ τοὺς οἰκήτορας προνομίας τε καὶ τιμῆς, οἱ τοὺς ἰκέτας διασώζουσιν ἔμελλον, εἰ βιάζοιτό τις ἐχυρωτέρα δύναμις, οὐ παρασκευαῖς ταῖς εἰς πόλεμον οὐσαις, ἀλλ' ἀξιώ-160 μασι καὶ προνομίαις, ἅπερ ἐκ τῶν νόμων διὰ τὴν σεμνότητα τῆς ἱερωσύνης εἶχον. ὁ δὲ φυγὰς ἐντὸς ὄρων τῆς πόλεως, εἰς ἣν πεφυγάδευται, κατα-κεκλείσθω διὰ τοὺς ἐφέδρους κολαστάς, οἱ γένει προσήκοντες τῷ τεθνεῶτι πόθῳ τοῦ συγγενοῦς, κἄν μὴ ὑφ' ἐκόντος ἀναιρεθῆ, κατὰ τοῦ κτείναντος φονῶσι, νικῶντος τοῦ οἰκείου πάθους τὸν ἀκριβῆ τῶν δικαίων λογισμόν. ἔξω δὲ προῖων ἐπ' ὀλέθρῳ ἀνευδοιάστῳ προελευσόμενος ἴστω· λήσεται γὰρ οὐδένα τῶν ἀφ' αἵματος, ὑφ' ὧν αὐτίκα λίνους καὶ 161 πάγαις σαγηνευθεῖς οἰχῆσεται. προθεσμία δ' ἔστω τῆς φυγῆς ὁ βίος τοῦ μεγάλου ἱερέως, οὗ τελευτή-σαντος ἀμνηστίας ἀξιωθεῖς κατίτω.

Ταῦτα καὶ τὰ τούτοις παραπλήσια νομοθετήσας περὶ τῶν ἱερέων ἐξῆς ἀναδιδάσκει περὶ ζώων, ἃ 162 πρὸς θυσίας ἐστὶν ἐπιτήδεια. XXXIII. <sup>1</sup> τῶν εἰς τὰς ἱερουργίας ζώων τὰ μὲν ἐστὶ χερσαῖα, τὰ δὲ ἀεροπόρα. τὰ μὲν οὖν τῶν πτηνῶν ἔθνη μυρία ὅσα παρελθὼν δύο μόνα ἐξ ἀπάντων εἴλετο, περιστερὰν καὶ τρυγόνα, διότι περιστερὰ μὲν τῶν [238] φύσει | τιθασῶν καὶ ἀγελαστικῶν ἡμερώτατον,

<sup>1</sup> Here the mss. insert a new heading Περὶ ζώων τῶν εἰς ἱερουργίας καὶ τίνα τῶν θυσιῶν τὰ εἶδη.

<sup>a</sup> A new heading in mss., "Of the sacrificial animals and 190

THE SPECIAL LAWS, I. 159-162

temples, well secured from violation through the privileged and honourable position of the inhabitants, who, if any stronger power should attempt to use force against the suppliants, would keep them safe, not with warlike preparations, but through the dignities and privileges conferred on them by the laws in virtue of the reverence attached to the priestly office. But the fugitive must remain shut up within the confines of the city to which he has come as a refuge because of the avengers waiting at the door, whose relationship to the dead makes them seek the blood of the slayer in their bitterness at the loss of their kinsman, even though the fatal act was involuntary. For strong family feeling overpowers the sense of justice which strict reason would give. But if he advances outside he must understand that his movements will entail certain destruction, for they will not be unobserved by any member of the family, and enmeshed in their nets and snares he will be a lost man. The time limit of his banishment is to coincide with the life of the high priest, at whose death he may return with immunity assured as his due. 160

After making these and other similar enactments he next proceeds to give instructions as to the animals suitable for sacrifice. XXXIII. <sup>a</sup> Of the animals used for this purpose some are confined to the dry land and others travel in the air. The winged creatures are divided into numberless tribes, all of which he ignored except two, the pigeon and the turtle-dove, <sup>b</sup> the pigeon because it is the gentlest of those whose nature is tame and gregarious, the dove 162 the different kinds of sacrifice." Cohn begins a fresh numeration of chapters.

<sup>b</sup> See Lev. i. 14.

PHILO

- τρυγῶν δὲ τῶν φύσει μονωτικῶν τιθασώτατον.
 163 τὰς δὲ τῶν χερσαίων ἀμυθήτους ἀγέλας, ὧν οὐδ' ἀριθμὸν εὐρεῖν εὐπορον, ὑπερβὰς τρεῖς ἀριστίνδην ἐπέκρινε, βοῶν καὶ προβάτων καὶ αἰγῶν· ἡμερώτатаὶ γὰρ αὐταὶ καὶ χειροθηέσταται· βουκόλια γοῦν μεγάλα καὶ ποιμνία καὶ αἰπόλια πρὸς ἑνὸς ἄγεται τοῦ τυχόντος, οὐκ ἀνδρὸς μόνον ἀλλὰ καὶ κομιδῇ νηπίου παιδός, εἷς τε νομῆν ἐξιόντα καὶ ὁπότε δέοι πάλιν εἰς σηκοὺς ὑποστρέφοντα ἐν 164 κόσμῳ. τῆς δ' ἡμερότητος πολλὰ μὲν καὶ ἄλλα σημεῖα, σαφέστατα δὲ ταυτί· τό τε πάντα εἶναι χλοηφάγα καὶ μηδὲν αὐτῶν σαρκοβόρον καὶ τὸ μήτε γαμβροὺς ἔχειν ὄνυχας μήτε τὴν ἔκφυσιν τῶν ὀδόντων παντελεῖ· τὸ γὰρ ἀνωτέρω φάτιον οὐκ ὀδοντοφυεῖ, ἀλλ' ὅσοι τομῖαι τῶν ὀδόντων κατ' 165 αὐτὸ ἐπιλελοίπασιν. πρὸς δὲ τούτοις καὶ βιωφελέστατα τῶν ζώων ἐστί· κριοὶ μὲν εἰς ἐσθήτας, τὴν ἀναγκαιοτάτην σκέπην σωμάτων, βόες δὲ εἰς τὸ ἀρόσαι γῆν καὶ προετοιμάσασθαι πρὸς σπόρον καὶ τὸν γενόμενον ἀλοῆσαι καρπὸν εἰς μετουσίαν καὶ ἀπόλαυσιν τροφῆς, αἰγῶν δὲ αἱ τρίχες καὶ δοραὶ συνυφαινόμεναί τε καὶ συρραπτόμεναι φορηταὶ γεγόνασιν ὄδοιπόροις οἰκίαι καὶ μάλιστα τοῖς ἐν στρατείαις, οὓς ἔξω πόλεως ἐν ὑπαίθρῳ τὰ πολλὰ 166 διατρίβειν ἀναγκάζουσιν αἱ χρεῖαι. XXXIV. πάντα δ' ὀλόκληρα, περὶ μηδὲν μέρος κηραίνοντα τοῦ σώματος, ὅλα δι' ὅλων ἀσινῆ, μώμων ἀμέτοχα· τοσαύτη γοῦν ἐστὶ πρόνοια, οὐ μόνον τοῖς ἀνάγουσι <sup>a</sup> Oxen, Lev. i. 3 f.; sheep and goats, i. 10 f.

<sup>b</sup> See Lev. xxii. 19-24.

<sup>c</sup> No scriptural authority is quoted for this. As Cohn

THE SPECIAL LAWS, I. 162-166

because it is the tamest of those which are naturally fond of solitude. The land animals collect in vast 163 multitudes and the number of their varieties is almost incalculable. All these he passed over after selecting three as of superior merit, namely, oxen, sheep and goats.<sup>a</sup> For these are the gentlest and the most docile. We see great herds and flocks of each kind led by a single person, it matters not who. He may even be not a grown man, but the merest child, and under his guidance they go out to the pasture and when required return back in order to their pens.
This tameness is shewn by many other indications, 164 but most clearly by the following facts. All of them are eaters of grass, none eat flesh ; none of them have crooked talons nor a full supplement of teeth, for the upper gum does not lend itself to the growth of teeth, but all the incisors are missing there. Further- 165 more, in the whole animal kingdom they are the most serviceable for human life. The rams produce raiment, the indispensable shelter for the body, the ox ploughs the soil and prepares it for the seed, and when the crop is produced threshes it, thus making it into food which can be shared and enjoyed, while the skin and hair of the goat, when woven or sewn together, supply portable houses for travellers and particularly for campaigners who are compelled by the exigencies of their life to spend most of their time outside the city and in the open air. XXXIV. 166 <sup>b</sup> All the animals selected must be perfect, with no affliction troubling any part of their body, scathless throughout and free from fault or flaw. <sup>c</sup> In fact, so great is the forethought exercised not only by those suggests, Philo may be relying on personal observation (or hearsay?).

PHILO

- τὰς θυσίας ἀλλὰ καὶ τοῖς ἱερωμένοις, ὥστε οἱ δοκιμώτατοι τῶν ἱερέων ἀριστίνδην ἐπικριθέντες εἰς τὴν τῶν μύμων ἐπίσκεψιν ἀπὸ κεφαλῆς ἄχρι ποδῶν ἄκρων ἐρευνῶσιν ὅσα τε ἐμφανῆ καὶ ὅσα ὑπὸ γαστρὶ καὶ μηροῖς ἀποκέκρυπται, μὴ που τις βραχεῖα λώβη
- 167 διαλέληθε. τὸ δ' ἀκριβὲς καὶ περιττὸν τῆς ἐξετάσεως οὐχ ἔνεκα τῶν καταθυομένων ἀλλὰ τοῦ περὶ τοὺς καταθύοντας ἀνυπαιτίου γίνεται· βούλεται γὰρ αὐτοὺς ἀναδιδάξαι διὰ συμβόλων, ὅποτε προσέρχονται βωμοῖς ἢ εὐξόμενοι ἢ εὐχαριστήσοντες, μηδὲν ἀρρώστημα ἢ νόσημα ἢ πάθος ἐπιφέρεισθαι τῇ ψυχῇ, πειρᾶσθαι δ' ὄλην δι' ὄλων ἀκηλίδωτον ἀγιάζειν, ὡς ἰδόντα μὴ ἀποστραφῆναι θεόν.
- 168 XXXV. Ἐπεὶ δὲ τῶν θυσιῶν αἱ μὲν εἰσιν ὑπὲρ ἅπαντος τοῦ ἔθνους, εἰ δὲ δεῖ τάληθὲς εἰπεῖν, ὑπὲρ [239] ἅπαντος ἀνθρώπων γένους, αἱ δ' ὑπὲρ ἐκάστου | τῶν ἱερουργεῖν ἀξιούντων, λεκτέον πρότερον περὶ τῶν κοινῶν. θαυμαστὴ τούτων ἡ τάξις ἐστίν· αἱ μὲν γὰρ ἀνάγονται καθ' ἐκάστην ἡμέραν, αἱ δὲ ταῖς ἐβδόμαις, οἱ δὲ νομηνιαῖς καὶ ἱερομηνιαῖς, αἱ δὲ 169 νηστειαῖς, αἱ δὲ τρισὶ καιροῖς ἑορτῶν. καθ' ἐκάστην μὲν οὖν ἡμέραν δύο ἄμνους ἀνάγειν διείρηται, τὸν μὲν ἅμα τῇ ἔω, τὸν δὲ δείλης ἑσπέρας, ὑπὲρ εὐχαριστίας ἐκάτερον, τὸν μὲν ὑπὲρ τῶν μεθ' ἡμέραν, τὸν δ' ὑπὲρ τῶν νύκτωρ εὐεργεσιῶν, ἃς ἀπαύστως καὶ ἀδιαστάτως ὁ θεὸς τῷ γένει τῶν 170 ἀνθρώπων χορηγεῖ. ταῖς δ' ἐβδόμαις διπλασιάζει

---

<sup>a</sup> See Num. xxviii. 3, 4. They are offered ἐνδελεχῶς, and in v. 6 are called a ὀλοκαύτωμα ἐνδελεχισμού, whence Philo's νδελεχεία in § 170.

THE SPECIAL LAWS, I. 166-170

who bring the sacrifices but also by the officiants, that the most highly approved of the priests, selected as most suitable for such inspection, examine them from the head to the extremities of the feet, both the visible parts and those which are concealed under the belly and thighs, for fear that some small blemish has passed unobserved. The examination is carried 167 out with this excessive minuteness in consideration not of the victims offered but of the innocence of those who offer them. For the law would teach them under this symbol that when they approach the altar to offer either prayers or thanks they must come with no infirmity or ailment or evil affection in the soul, but must endeavour to have it sanctified and free throughout from defilement, that God when He beholds it may not turn away His face from the sight.

XXXV. But since the sacrifices are of two kinds, 168 some offered for the whole nation, or rather, it would be correct to say, for all mankind, others for each separate individual among those whose sense of duty makes them worshippers, we must first speak of those which are general. The system on which they are arranged is admirable. Some are offered 169 daily, others on the seventh days, others at the new moons or the beginnings of the sacred month, others at the fasts, others at the three festal seasons. <sup>a</sup> Every day two lambs are to be brought to the altar, one at dawn, the other towards dusk. Both these are thank-offerings, one for the benefactions of the day-time, the other for those of the night, given to the human race ceaselessly and constantly by the bounty of God. <sup>b</sup> On the seventh days he doubles the number 170

<sup>b</sup> See Num. xxviii. 9, 10.

- τὸν τῶν ἱερείων ἀριθμόν, ἴσα προστιθεὶς ἴσοις, ἰσότιμον ἡγούμενος αἰῶνι τὴν ἐβδόμην, ἣν καὶ γενέθλιον τοῦ κόσμου παντὸς ἀνέγραψεν· οὐδ' χάριν τὴν τῆς ἐβδόμης θυσίαν ἐξομοιωσαὶ τῇ “ ἐνδε-171 λεχεία ” τῶν ἡμερησίων ἀμνῶν διενότηθη. δις δὲ καθ' ἐκάστην ἡμέραν ἐπιθυμιᾶται τὰ πάντων εὐ-ωδέστατα θυμιαμάτων εἴσω τοῦ καταπετάσματος, ἀνίσχοντος ἡλίου καὶ δυομένου, πρό τε τῆς ἑωθινῆς θυσίας καὶ μετὰ τὴν ἑσπερινήν, ὡς εἶναι τὰ μὲν ἔναιμα εὐχαριστίαν ὑπὲρ ἡμῶν τῶν ἐναίμων, τὰ δὲ θυμιάματα ὑπὲρ τοῦ ἡγεμονικοῦ, τοῦ ἐν ἡμῖν λογικοῦ πνεύματος, ὅπερ ἐμορφώθη πρὸς ἀρχέ-172 τυπον ἰδέαν εἰκόνοσ θείας. ἄρτοι δὲ προτίθενται ταῖς ἐβδόμαις ἐπὶ τῆς ἱερᾶσ τραπέζης ἰσ-αριθμοὶ τοῖς μηνσὶ τοῦ ἐνιαυτοῦ, δυσὶ θέμασιν ἀνὰ ἕξ, [δώδεκα,] κατὰ τὸν λόγον τῶν ἰσημεριῶν ἐκάτερα—δύο γάρ εἰσιν ἀνὰ πᾶν ἔτος, ἑαρινή τε καὶ μετοπωρινή, αἱ μηνσὶν ἕξ καταριθμοῦνται—δι' ἣν αἰτίαν * * * <ἑαρινῇ μὲν><sup>1</sup> τὰ σπαρτὰ πάντα τελειογονεῖται, καθ' ὃν χρόνον τὰ δένδρα γεννᾶν ἄρχεται, μετοπωρινῇ δὲ καὶ ὁ τῶν δένδρων καρπὸς τελεσφορεῖται, ἐν ᾧ καιρῷ πάλιν ἀρχὴ σποράσ. οὕτως δολιχεύουσα ἡ φύσις τὸν αἰῶνα ἄλλας ἐπ' ἄλλαισ ἀμείβει δωρεὰσ ἀνθρώπων γένει, ὧν εἰσὶ σύμβολα 173 αἱ διτταὶ τῶν προκειμένων ἄρτων ἐξάδες. αἰνίτ-τονται δὲ καὶ τὴν ὠφελιμωτάτην τῶν ἀρετῶν

<sup>1</sup> There is clearly a lacuna after δι' ἣν αἰτίαν, which must have ended with ἑαρινῇ μὲν or something like it. For Cohn's suggestion for filling it see App. p. 621.

<sup>a</sup> See on Spec. Leg. ii. 59.

<sup>b</sup> See Ex. xxx. 7, 8, and note on § 276 below.

<sup>c</sup> i.e. the lower part of the ψυχή, cf. Quis Rerum 55 with its quotation of Lev. xvii. 11 ψυχή πάσης σαρκὸσ αἱμά ἐστιν,

THE SPECIAL LAWS, I. 170-173

of the victims. He makes this addition of a number equal to the original because he considers the seventh day, called also in his records the birthday of the whole world,<sup>a</sup> to be of equal value to eternity, and therefore he purposes to assimilate the sacrifice of the seventh day to the "perpetuity" of the daily offering of lambs.

<sup>b</sup>Twice too every day the perfume of the most fragrant 171 kinds of incense is exhaled within the veil at sunrise and at sunset, both before the morning and after the evening sacrifice. Thus the blood offerings serve as thanksgivings for the blood elements in ourselves<sup>c</sup> and the incense offerings for our dominant part, the rational spirit-force within us which was shaped according to the archetypal form of the divine image.<sup>d</sup>

<sup>e</sup>But on each seventh day loaves are 172
exposed on the holy table equal in number to the months of the year in two layers of six each, each layer corresponding to the equinoxes. For there are two equinoxes in each year, in spring and autumn, with intervals, the sum of which is six months. For this reason * * * At the spring equinox all the seed crops come to their fulness just when the trees begin to produce their fruit, and at the autumn equinox that same fruit is brought to maturity and it is the season when the sowing begins again. Thus nature running its agelong round alternates its gifts to the human race, symbolized by the two sets of six loaves exposed upon the table. They are also emblematic 173 of that most profitable of virtues, continence, which rather than as Heinemann "our bodies." Possibly, however, τῶν ἐναίμων agrees with ἡμῶν, i.e. "the animals with blood are for us who share it with them."

<sup>a</sup> i.e. the Logos, which, being the εἰκὼν of God, becomes the ἀρχέτυπος ἰδέα of the human spirit. Cf. § 81 above and note on De Som. ii. 45.

<sup>e</sup> See Lev. xxiv. 5-8.

PHILO

- ἐγκράτειαν, ἣ δορυφορεῖται πρὸς εὐτελείας καὶ εὐκολίας καὶ ὀλιγοδείας, διὰ τὸν ἐξ ἀκολασίας καὶ πλεονεξίας βλαβερώτατον ἐπιτειχισμόν· ἄρτος γὰρ ἔραστῆ σοφίας διαρκῆς τροφή, παρέχουσα καὶ τὰ σώματα ἄνοσα καὶ τὸν λογισμόν ὑγιῆ καὶ ἐν τοῖς
- 174 μάλιστα νηφάλιον· ὄψα δὲ καὶ μελίπηκτα καὶ ἡδύσματα καὶ ὅσα σιτοπόνων καὶ ὄψαρτυτῶν περιεργίαι τεχνιτεύουσι καταγοητεύουσαι τὴν ἄμουσον καὶ ἀφιλόσοφον καὶ ἀνδραποδωδεστάτην τῶν αἰσθήσεων γεύσιν, ὑπηρετοῦσαν καλῶ μὲν οὐδενὶ θεάματι ἢ ἀκούσματι, γαστρὸς δὲ τῆς ταλαίνης ἐπιθυμίαις, νόσους σώματι καὶ ψυχῇ κατασκευάζει
- 175 πολλάκις ἀνιάτους. συνεπιτίθεται δὲ τοῖς ἄρτοις [240] λιβανωτὸς καὶ | ἄλες, ὁ μὲν σύμβολον τοῦ μηδὲν ἡδυσμα εὐωδέστερον ὀλιγοδείας εἶναι καὶ ἐγκρατείας παρὰ σοφίᾳ δικαζούση, οἱ δ' ἄλες διαμονῆς τε τῶν συμπάντων—οἷς γὰρ ἂν παραπασθῶσι δια-
- 176 τηροῦσι—καὶ ἱκανοῦ προσοψήματος. οἶδ' ὅτι γέλωτα καὶ χλεύην ταῦτα θήσονται οἱ περὶ τὰ συμπόσια καὶ τὰς εὐωχίας πραγματευόμενοι καὶ πολυτελεῖς τραπέζας μεταδιώκοντες, οἱ ὀρνέων καὶ ἰχθύων καὶ κρεῶν καὶ τῆς ὁμοιοτρόπου φλυαρίας ἄθλιοι δοῦλοι, μηδ' ὄναρ ἀληθοῦς ἐλευθερίας γεύσασθαι δυνάμενοι. ὧν ὀλίγα φροντιστέον τοῖς κατὰ θεὸν καὶ πρὸς τὴν τοῦ ὄντως ὄντος ἀρέσκειαν ζῆν ἐγνωκόσιν, οἱ τῶν σαρκὸς ἀλογεῖν ἡδονῶν πεπαιδευμένοι τὰς διανοίας χαρὰς καὶ εὐπαθείας θεωρία τῶν τῆς φύσεως ἐνασκούμενοι μεταδιώκουσι.

---

<sup>a</sup> For the general sense of the next sections cf. De Som. ii. 48-51.

THE SPECIAL LAWS, I. 173-176

has simplicity and contentment and frugality for its bodyguard against the baleful assaults engineered by incontinence and covetousness. <sup>a</sup> For bread to a lover of wisdom is sufficient sustenance, making the body proof against disease and the reason sound and sober in the highest degree. But dainty dishes and honey-<sup>174</sup> cakes and relishes and all the elaborate preparations with which the skill of pastrycooks and other experts at the art bewitches the taste, that most slavish of all the senses, a stranger to culture and philosophy, a servant not to things beautiful to see or hear but to the lusts of the wretched belly, create distempers of soul and body which are often past all cure. On <sup>175</sup> the loaves there are placed also frankincense and salt,<sup>b</sup> the former as a symbol that in the court of wisdom no relish is judged to be more sweet-savoured than frugality and temperance, the salt to shew the permanence of all things, since it preserves whatever it is sprinkled on, and its sufficiency as a condiment. All this I know will excite the mockery and ridicule <sup>176</sup> of those to whom banquetings and high feasting are a matter of much concern, who run in search of richly laden tables, miserable slaves to birds and fishes and fleshpots and similar trash, unable even in their dreams to taste the flavour of true freedom. All these things should be held in little account by those who are minded to live with God for their standard and for the service of Him that truly is—men who, trained to disregard the pleasures of the flesh and practised in the study of nature's verities, pursue the joys and sweet comforts of the intellect.

<sup>b</sup> So LXX, Lev. xxiv. 7. Not in the Hebrew, cf. Mos. ii. 104.

PHILO

- 177 Ταῦτα περὶ τῆς ἐβδόμης διαταξάμενος ταῖς νομηνίαις φησὶ δεῖν θύειν ὀλόκαυτα δέκα τὰ σύμπαντα· μόσχους δύο, κριὸν ἓνα, ἀμνοὺς ἑπτὰ. ἐπειδὴ γὰρ ὁ μὴν τέλειος, ἐν ᾧ σελήνη τὸν ἑαυτῆς κύκλον περατοῦται,<sup>1</sup> τέλειον ἀριθμὸν ζώων ἠξίωσεν
- 178 ἱερουργεῖσθαι. ἡ δεκάς δὲ παντελὴς ἀριθμὸς, ὃν εὖ μάλα διένειμεν εἰς τὰ λεχθέντα, τοὺς μὲν δύο μόσχους, ἐπειδὴ δύο κινήσεις εἰσὶ σελήνης αἰεὶ διαυλοδρομούσης, ἡ μὲν κατ' αὔξησιν ἄχρι πλησιφαοῦς, ἡ δὲ κατὰ μείωσιν ἄχρι συνόδου, τὸν δ' ἓνα κριόν, ἐπειδὴ λόγος εἰς ἔστι, καθ' ὃν αὔξεται τε καὶ μειοῦται τοῖς ἴσοις διαστήμασι καὶ φωτιζομένη καὶ ἐπιλείπουσα, τοὺς δὲ ἑπτὰ ἀμνοὺς, ὅτι καθ' ἐβδομάδας ἐπιδέχεται τοὺς τελείους σχηματισμούς, πρώτη μὲν ἐβδομάδι τῇ ἀπὸ συνόδου τὸν διχότομον, δευτέρα δὲ τὸν πλησιφαῆ, καὶ ὅταν ἀνακάμπτη πάλιν, εἰς διχότομον τὸ πρῶτον, ἔπειτ' εἰς σύνοδον
- 179 ἀπολήγει. μετὰ δὲ τῶν ἱερείων σεμίδαλιν ἀναδεδευμένην ἐλαίῳ προσφέρειν καὶ οἶνον εἰς σπονδάς μέτροις (ῥιτισμέν)οις<sup>2</sup> διατάξατο, διότι καὶ ταῦτα σελήνης περιόδοις κατὰ τὰς ἑτησίους ὥρας τελεσφορεῖται διαφερόντως τοὺς καρποὺς πεπαινούσης, σίτος δὲ καὶ οἶνος καὶ ἔλαιον, βιωφελέσταται οὐσίαι καὶ πρὸς χρῆσιν ἀνθρώποις ἀναγκαιόταται, πάσαις εἰκότως θυσίαις συγκαθιεροῦνται.

<sup>1</sup> So Cohn: mss. περαιοῦται. I feel very doubtful about the correction. The use of περαιοῦμαι for "cross," "pass over" is common enough, and the association with a cycle, if rather strange, is not impossible. On the other hand, while περατοῦσθαι in a passive sense is common, I have not seen any example of its use as a transitive middle.

<sup>2</sup> So Cohn. Perhaps μέτροις οἷς <εἶδει or δεῖ> διατάξατο.

<sup>a</sup> See Num. xxviii. 11-14.

THE SPECIAL LAWS, I. 177-179

Having given these orders with regard to the 177 seventh days, he deals with the new moons. <sup>a</sup>At these times whole-burnt-offerings must be sacrificed, ten in all, two calves, one ram, and seven lambs. For since the month in which the moon fulfils its cycle is a complete or perfect whole,<sup>b</sup> he considered that the number of animals to be sacrificed should be perfect. Now ten is a perfect number, and he dis- 178 tributed it excellently among the above-mentioned items ; two calves because the moon as she runs for ever her race forwards and backwards has two motions, one as she waxes till she becomes full, one as she wanes to her conjunction with the sun ; one ram because there is one law or principle by which she waxes and wanes at equal intervals, both when her light grows and when it fails ; seven lambs because the complete changes of form to which she is subject are measured in sevens.<sup>c</sup> In the first seven from the conjunction we have the half moon, in the second the full moon, and when she is reversing her course she passes first into the half moon and then dies away into the conjunction. With the victims 179 he ordered that fine meal, soaked in oil, should be brought, and wine for libations in stated quantities, because these also are brought to their fullness by the revolutions of the moon at the various seasons of the year, and especially by its effect upon the ripening of the fruits, and corn, oil and wine are things possessing qualities most profitable to life and most necessary for human use and therefore are naturally consecrated with all the sacrifices.

<sup>b</sup> Or "since the month (i.e. the past month) is completed," and so Heinemann, but the context suggests that it is the month which is coming which is under consideration.

<sup>c</sup> Cf. De Op. 101.

- 180 Τῇ δ' ἱερομηνία διττὰ θύματα προσάγεται προσηκόντως, ἐπεὶ καὶ διττὸς ὁ περὶ αὐτῆς λόγος, ὁ μὲν ὡς νομηνίας, ὁ δὲ ὡς ἱερομηνίας. ἡ μὲν οὖν νομηνία, τὰ ἴσα ταῖς ἄλλαις ἱεουργεῖσθαι δι-εῖρηται, ἡ δὲ καὶ ἱερομηνία, διπλασιάζεται τὰ δῶρα, δίχα τῶν μόσχων· εἰς γὰρ ἀντὶ δυεῖν προσάγεται, τοῦ βραβευτοῦ δικαιώσαντος ἀδιαίρετῳ φύσει μονάδος πρὸ διαιρετῆς δυάδος χρήσασθαι ἐν ἀρχῇ τοῦ ἐνιαυτοῦ.
- 181 Ἐν δὲ τῷ πρώτῳ καιρῷ—πρῶτον δὲ καιρὸν τὴν ἔαρινην ὥραν καὶ ἰσημερίαν καλεῖ—προστάξας ἑπτὰ ἡμέρας ἑορτὴν ἄγειν τὴν ἐπικαλουμένην τῶν ἀζύμων ἰσοτίμους ἀπέφηνε πάσας ἐν ταῖς ἱεουργίαις· δέκα γὰρ ὅσα καὶ ταῖς νομηνίαις θύειν καθ' ἐκάστην κελεύει, τὰ σύμπαντα ὀλόκαυτα, δίχα τῶν
- 182 περὶ πλημμελείας, ἀριθμὸν ἑβδομήκοντα. τὸν γὰρ αὐτὸν ἔχειν ᾤήθη λόγον πρὸς μῆνα νομηνίαν ὃν πρὸς ἰσημερίαν ἑβδόμῳ μηνὶ γινομένην τὰς ἑπτὰ τῆς ἑορτῆς ἡμέρας, ἢ ἀποφήνη καὶ τὴν ἀρχὴν ἐκάστου μηνὸς ἱερὰν καὶ ἀθρόων τῶν ἑπτὰ τὰς ἰσαριθμους ταῖς νομηνίαις ἡμέρας.
- 183 Μεσοῦντος δὲ ἔαρος ἄμητος ἐνίσταται, καθ' ὃν καιρὸν χαριστήρια μὲν ἀνάγεται τῷ θεῷ τῆς πεδιά-

<sup>a</sup> See Num. xxix. 1-6. On the term ἱερομηνία see on De Dec. 159 (App.).

<sup>b</sup> See App. p. 621.

<sup>c</sup> See Num. xxviii. 17-24.

<sup>d</sup> Implied though not actually stated in Ex. xxiii. 14, "Three times (καιρούς) in the year keep a feast for Me." Then after enumerating the three great feasts "three times (καιρούς) shall all thy males appear before the Lord thy God."

<sup>e</sup> In § 172 Philo based the number of sacrifices on the six months between the equinoxes; here on the fact that each equinox occurs in the seventh month before the next.

THE SPECIAL LAWS, I. 180-183

<sup>a</sup>At the beginning of the sacred month double 180 sacrifices are offered in accordance with its double aspect, first as new moon simply, secondly as the opening of the sacred month. Regarding it as new moon, the sacrifices ordered are the same as those of other new moons. Taking it as a sacred-month-day the oblations are doubled except in the case of the calves : only one of these is offered, the awarder having judged that at the beginning of the year<sup>b</sup> the monad whose nature is indivisible is preferable to the divisible dyad.

<sup>c</sup>At the first season, which name<sup>d</sup> he gives to the 181 springtime and its equinox, he ordained that what is called the feast of unleavened bread should be kept for seven days, all of which he declared should be honoured equally in the ritual assigned to them. For he ordered ten sacrifices to be offered each day as at the new moons, whole-burnt-offerings amounting to seventy in all apart from the sin-offerings. He 182 considered, that is, that the seven days of the feast bore the same relation to the equinox which falls in the seventh month<sup>e</sup> as the new moon does to the month. Thus he assigned the same sanctity both to the beginning of each month considered singly and to the seven days of the feast, which being of the same number as the new moons represented them collectively.

<sup>f</sup>In the middle of the spring comes the corn harvest. 183 At this season thank-offerings are brought for the

<sup>f</sup> See for the Feast of Weeks Lev. xxiii. 15 ff.-Num. xxviii. 26 ff. There is some discrepancy as to the details. The name πρωτογεννημάτων and the lambs for the "preservation-offering" (E.V. "peace-offering") come from the former. The name πρωτ. is also given to it in Ex. xxiii. 16.

PHILO

- dos ἐπὶ τῷ πλήρῃ τὸν καρπὸν ἐννοχέται καὶ τὰ θέρη συγκομίζεσθαι, δημοτελεστάτῃ δ' ἄγεται ἑορτὴ προσαγορευομένη πρωτογεννημάτων ἐτύμως ἀπὸ τοῦ συμβεβηκότος, ἐπειδὴ τῶν γεννημάτων τὰ 184 πρῶτα, αἱ ἀπαρχαί, τότε καθιεροῦνται. προστέτακται δ' ἀνάγειν θυσίας μόσχους δύο, κριὸν ἓνα καὶ ἑπτὰ ἄμνους, ταῦτα μὲν δέκα ἱερεῖα ὀλόκαντα, δύο δ' ἄμνους εἰς βρώσιν ἱερέων, οὓς ἐπικαλεῖ σωτηρίου διὰ τὸ τὰς τροφὰς ἀνθρώποις ἐκ πολλῶν καὶ παντο-दाπῶν διασεσῶσθαι· φθοραὶ γὰρ εἰώθασιν καταλαμβάνειν, αἱ μὲν ἐπομβρίαῖς, αἱ δ' αὐχμοῖς, αἱ δ' ἄλλαις ἀμυθήτοις νεωτεροποιῖαις, αἱ δ' αὖ χειροποιήτοι κατ' ἐφόδους ἐχθρῶν τὴν τῶν πέλας γῆν 185 δροῦν ἐπιχειρούντων. εἰκότως οὖν τὰ σώστρα τῷ πάσας ἀποσκεδάσαντι τὰς ἐπιβουλάς ἀνάγεται χαρι-στήρια καὶ ἀνάγεται ἄρτοις, οὓς προσενεγκόντες τῷ βωμῷ καὶ ἄνω πρὸς οὐρανὸν ἀνατείναντες ἐπιδιανέμουσι τοῖς ἱερεῦσι μετὰ τῶν κρεῶν τῆς τοῦ σωτηρίου θυσίας εἰς ἱεροπρεπεστάτην εὐωχίαν.
 186 Ὅταν δ' ὁ τρίτος ἐνστή καιρὸς ἐν τῷ ἑβδόμῳ μηνὶ κατ' ἰσημερίαν μετοπωρινήν, ἐν ἀρχῇ μὲν ἱερομηνία ἄγεται προσαγορευομένη σαλπύγγων, περὶ ἧς ἐλέχθη πρότερον, δεκάτῃ δ' ἡ νηστεία, περὶ ἣν ἐσπουδάκασιν οὐ μόνον οἷς ζῆλος εὐσεβείας καὶ ὀσιότητος, ἀλλὰ καὶ οἷς κατὰ τὸν ἄλλον βίον εὐαγὲς οὐδὲν δρᾶται· πάντες γὰρ ἡττώμενοι τοῦ περὶ αὐτὴν

<sup>a</sup> i.e. in § 180. For the name "feast of trumpets" see Lev. xxiii. 24 E.V. "a memorial of blowing of trumpets" (LXX μνημόσυνον σαλπύγγων).

<sup>b</sup> For the "Fast" or "Day of Atonement" see Num. xxix. 7-11.

THE SPECIAL LAWS, I. 183-186

lowlands because they have borne fruit in full and the summer crops are being gathered in. This feast, which is universally observed, is called the feast of first-products, a name which expresses the facts, because the first specimens of the produce, the sample oblations, are then consecrated. The sacrifices 184 ordered on this occasion are two calves, one ram and seven lambs, these ten as victims to be entirely consumed by fire, and also two lambs to be eaten by the priests. These last he calls preservation-offerings because mankind has had its food preserved from many vicissitudes of every kind. For that food is commonly subject to destructive forces, sometimes rain-storms, sometimes droughts, or numberless other violent changes in nature, sometimes again from human activities through the invasions of enemies who attempt to lay waste the land of their neighbours. Naturally, therefore, the thank-offerings for preserva- 185 tion are brought to Him Who has scattered all the forces which threatened mischief. They are also brought in the form of loaves which the worshippers carry to the altar and after holding them with outstretched arms up to heaven distribute to the priests together with the flesh of the preservation-offering to regale them in a way well worthy of their sacred office.

When the third special season has come in the 186 seventh month at the autumnal equinox there is held at its outset the sacred-month-day called trumpet day, of which I have spoken above.<sup>a</sup> On the tenth day is the fast,<sup>b</sup> which is carefully observed not only by the zealous for piety and holiness but also by those who never act religiously in the rest of their life. For all stand in awe, overcome by the sanctity of the

PHILO

- ἱεροπρεποῦς τεθήπασι καὶ οἱ χεῖρους τοῖς βελτίοσι τότε γοῦν εἰς ἐγκράτειαν καὶ ἀρετὴν ἀμιλλῶνται.
- 187 διττοὺς δ' ἔχει λόγους τὸ ἀξίωμα τῆς ἡμέρας, τοὺς μὲν ὡς ἑορτῆς, τοὺς δὲ ὡς καθάρσεως καὶ φυγῆς ἀμαρτημάτων, ἐφ' οἷς ἀμνηστία δέδοται χάρισι τοῦ ἴλεω θεοῦ μετάνοιαν ἐν ἴσῳ τῷ μηδὲ<sup>1</sup> ἀμαρτάνειν
- 188 τετιμηκότος. τὰς μὲν οὖν ὡς ἑορτῆς θυσίας ἰσ-αρίθμους ἀπέφηνε ταῖς τῶν ἱερομηνιῶν, μόσχον καὶ κριὸν καὶ ἑπτὰ ἄρνας, ἀνακερασάμενος μονάδα ἑβδομάδι καὶ πρὸς ἀρχὴν τὸ τέλος ἀπευθύνας—τέλος μὲν γὰρ ἔργων ἑβδομάς, ἀρχὴν δὲ μονὰς κεκλήρωται,—τὰς δ' ὡς καθάρσεως (τρεις). προστάττει γὰρ δύο χιμάρους ἀνάγειν καὶ κριόν, εἰτά φησι δεῖν τὸν μὲν ὀλοκαυτοῦν, διακληροῦν δὲ τοὺς χιμάρους, καὶ τὸν μὲν λαχόντα τῷ θεῷ θύειν, τὸν δ' ἕτερον εἰς ἀτριβῆ καὶ ἄβατον ἐρημίαν ἐκπέμπειν ἐφ' ἑαυτῷ κομίζοντα τὰς ὑπὲρ τῶν πλημμελησάντων ἀράς, οἱ μεταβολαῖς ταῖς πρὸς τὸ βέλτιον ἐκαθάρθησαν, εὐνομία καινῇ παλαιὰν ἀνομίαν ἐκνυψάμενοι.
- 189 Τῇ δὲ πεντεκαιδεκάτῃ τῆς πλησιφαοῦς σελήνης ἄγεται ἢ ἐπικαλουμένη σκηνῶν ἑορτή, καθ' ἣν πλείους εἰσὶν αἱ χορηγίαι τῶν θυσιῶν καταθύονται γὰρ ἐφ' ἡμέρας ἑπτὰ μόσχοι μὲν ἑβδομήκοντα, κριοὶ δὲ τέσσαρες καὶ δέκα, ἄρνες δὲ δυοῖν δεόντων ἑκατόν, ἅπαντα ζῶα ὀλόκαυτα. προστέτακται δὲ καὶ τὴν ὀγδόην ἱερὰν νομίζειν, περὶ ἧς ἀκριβωτέον, <sup>1</sup> mss μηδέν. Cohn's correction is perhaps due to a feeling that τὸ μηδέν ἀμαρτεῖν would indicate complete sinlessness, which is not possible for the ordinary man. Cf. De Virt.

 177, De Fuga 157.

THE SPECIAL LAWS, I. 186-189

day, and for the moment the worse vie with the better in self-denial and virtue. The high dignity of this 187 day has two aspects, one as a festival, the other as a time of purification and escape from sins, for which indemnity is granted by the bounties of the gracious God Who has given to repentance the same honour as to innocence from sin. Treating it as a festival day, he made the sacrifices of the same number as those of the sacred-month-days, namely a calf and a ram and seven lambs, thus blending the one with the seven and putting the completion in a line with the beginning. For to seven belongs the completion of actions, to one their beginning. Treating it as a 188 purification, he added three more and bade them bring two kids and a ram, ordering that the last-named should be consumed entirely by fire and that a lot should be cast for the kids. <sup>a</sup>The one on whom the lot fell was to be sacrificed to God, the other was to be sent out into a trackless and desolate wilderness bearing on its back the curses which had lain upon the transgressors who have now been purified by conversion to the better life and through their new obedience have washed away their old disobedience to the law.

<sup>b</sup>On the fifteenth day of this month at the full moon 189 is held the feast of tabernacles, as it is called, and on this the supply of sacrificial offerings is on a larger scale, for during seven days there are sacrificed seventy calves, fourteen rams and ninety-eight lambs. All these animals are consumed entirely by fire. <sup>c</sup>It is also commanded that the eighth day is to be observed as holy. This last must be treated in detail when

<sup>a</sup> See Lev. xvi. 9, 10.

<sup>b</sup> See Num. xxix. 12-34.

<sup>c</sup> See Num. xxix. 36.

PHILO

- ὅταν σύμπας ὁ περὶ τῶν ἑορτῶν ἐξετάζηται λόγος, ἐν ἣ ἑορτάζεται ὅσα καὶ ἐν ταῖς ἱερομηνίαις.
- 190 Αἱ μὲν οὖν ὑπὲρ τοῦ ἔθνους ἢ κυριώτερον εἰπεῖν ὑπὲρ παντὸς ἀνθρώπων γένους κοιναὶ καὶ ὀλόκαυτοι θυσαίαι κατ' ἐμὴν δύναμιν εἴρηνται. ταῖς δ' ὀλοκαύτοις καθ' ἐκάστην ἡμέραν ἑορτῆς παρέπεται χίμαρος, ὃς καλεῖται μὲν περὶ ἁμαρτίας, καταθύεται δὲ εἰς ἁμαρτημάτων ἄφεσιν, οὗ τὰ κρέα τοῖς
- 191 ἱερεῦσιν εἰς ἔδωδὴν ἀπονέμεται. τίς οὖν αἰτία;<sup>1</sup> ἢ ὅτι ἑορτὴ καιρὸς ἐστὶν εὐφροσύνης, ἢ δ' ἀψευδῆς καὶ πρὸς ἀλήθειαν εὐφροσύνη φρόνησις ἐστὶν ἐνιδρυμένη ψυχῇ βεβαίως, φρόνησιν δ' ἀκλινῇ λαβεῖν οὐκ ἔνεστιν ἄνευ θεραπείας ἁμαρτημάτων καὶ παθῶν ἐκτομῆς; ἄτοπον γὰρ ἕκαστον μὲν τῶν ὀλακαντουμένων ἀσινὲς καὶ ἀβλαβὲς ἀνευρισκόμενον καθιεροῦσθαι, τὴν δὲ τοῦ θύοντος διάνοιαν μὴ οὐ κεκαθάρθαι πάντα τρόπον καὶ πεφαιδρύνθαι λουτροῖς καὶ περιρραντηρίοις χρησαμένην, ἅπερ ὁ τῆς φύσεως ὀρθὸς λόγος δι' ὑγιαίνοντων καὶ ἀδια-
- 192 φθόρων ὤτων ψυχαῖς φιλοθέοις ἐπαντλεῖ. πρὸς δὲ τούτῳ κἀκεῖνο δεόντως ἂν λέγοιτο· αἱ ἑορτώδεις ἀνέσεις αὗται καὶ ἐκεχειρίαι μυρίας ἤδη πολλάκις ἁμαρτημάτων ὁδοὺς ἀνέτεμον· ἄκρατος γὰρ καὶ αἱ μετ' οἰνοφλυγίας ὀψοφαγίαι τὰς γαστροὺς ἀκορέστοὺς ἐπιθυμίας ἐγείρουσαι προσαναφλέγουσι καὶ τὰς ὑπὸ γαστέρα, καὶ ρέουσαι καὶ χεόμεναι πάντη φορὰν ἀμυθήτων ἀπεργάζονται κακῶν τὸ τῆς

<sup>1</sup> So Cohn punctuates. Better perhaps τίς οὖν αἰτία ἢ ὅτι, "What is the cause but that . . .?" Cf. iii. 34.

<sup>a</sup> See ii. 211.

<sup>b</sup> The mention of the sin-offering occurs regularly in Num.

THE SPECIAL LAWS, I. 189-192

the subject of the feasts as a whole comes up for discussion.<sup>a</sup> The number of offerings brought are the same as on the sacred-month-days.

The general sacrifices in the form of burnt-offerings 190 performed on behalf of the nation or, to speak more correctly, on behalf of the human race, have now been described to the best of my ability. But these burnt-offerings are accompanied on each day of a feast by the sacrifice of a kid called the sin-offering offered for the remission of sins, its flesh being put aside to be eaten by the priests.<sup>b</sup> What is the reason for this 191 addition? Is it that a feast is a season of joy, and the true joy in which there is no illusion is wisdom firmly established in the soul, and the wisdom that is stable cannot be acquired without applying medicine to the sin and surgery to the passions? For it would be a strange inconsistency if, while each of the victims consumed in the burnt-offering is only dedicated when found to be free from mischief and blemish, the mind of the worshipper should not be purified in every way and washed clean and fair by the ablutions and lustrations, which the right reason of nature pours into the souls of those who love God through ears that are sound in health and free from corruption. But be- 192 sides this something else may be justly said. These festal occasions of relaxation and cessation from work have often ere now opened up countless avenues to transgressions. For strong drink and gross eating accompanied by wine-bibbing, while they awaken the insatiable lusts of the belly, inflame also the lusts seated below it, and as they stream along and overflow on every side they create a torrent of evils inxxviii. and xxix. for the separate occasions (xxviii. 15, 22, 30; xxix. 5, 11, 22, 25, 28, 31, 34, 38).

PHILO

193 έορτής άδεές όρμητήριον έχουσαι και προς τό μηδέν παθείν καταφυγήν. άπερ συνιδών ούκ έφήκε κατά τά αυτά τοίς άλλοις έορτάζειν, άλλ' έν αυτώ τώ τής εύφροσύνης καιρώ πρώτον μέν έκέλευσεν άγνεύειν έπιστομιζοντας τās έφ' ήδονήν όρμάς, είτα είς τό ίερόν έπί μετουσίαν ύμνων και εύχών και θυσιών έκάλεσεν, ίνα κάκ τοϋ τόπου κάκ τών όρωμένων και λεγομένων δια τών κυριωτάτων αισθήσεων, όψεως και άκοής, έγκρατείας άμα και εύσεβείας έρασθωσιν, είτ' έπί πάσιν ύπέμνησε τοϋ μη άμαρτάνειν δια τής θυσίας τοϋ περι άμαρτίας· ό γάρ άμνησίαν έφ' οίς ήμαρτεν αίτούμενος ούχ οϋτως έστι κακοδαίμων ώστ' έν ώ χρόνω παλαιών άδικημάτων αίτεΐται λύσιν έτερα καινοτομείν.

194 XXXVI. Τοσαυτα περι τούτων διαλεχθείς άρχεται διαιρείν τά τών θυσιών γένη και τέμνων είς είδη τρία τά άνωτάτω τό μέν όλόκαντον καλεί, τό δέ σωτήριον, τό δέ περι άμαρτίας· είθ' έκαστον τοίς άρμόττουσιν έπικοσμεί τοϋ πρόποντος άμα και

195 εύαγοϋς οϋ μετρίως στοχασάμενος. παγκάλη δέ και προσφυστάτη τοίς πράγμασιν ή διαίρεισις ακολουθίαν έχουσα και είρμόν· εί γάρ βούλοϊτό τις έξετάζειν άκριβώς τās αίτίας, ών ένεκα τοίς πρώτοις έδοξεν ανθρώποις έπί τās δια θυσιών εύχαριστίας όμοϋ και λιτάς έλθειν, εύρήσει δύο τās άνωτάτω· μίαν μέν τήν προς θεόν τιμήν, τήν άνευ τινός έτέρου δι' αυτόν μόνον γινομένην ώς αναγκαϊον <και> καλόν, έτέραν δέ τήν τών θυόντων

THE SPECIAL LAWS, I. 192-195

numerable, because they have the immunity of the feast for their headquarters and refuge from retribution. All this the lawgiver observed and therefore 193 did not permit his people to conduct their festivities like other nations, but first he bade them in the very hour of their joy make themselves pure by curbing the appetites for pleasure. Then he summoned them to the sanctuary to take their part in hymns and prayers and sacrifices, that the place and the spectacles there presented and the words there spoken, working through the lordliest of the senses, sight and hearing, may make them enamoured of continence and piety. Last of all by the sin-offering he warned them against continuing in sin, for he who asks for absolution of the sins he has committed is not so lost a wretch as to embark on other new offences at the very time when he asks for remission of the old.

XXXVI. After having discoursed to this extent 194 on these subjects he begins to classify the kinds of sacrifices. He divides them into three principal classes which he calls respectively the whole-burnt-offering, the preservation-offering and the sin-offering. To each of these he adds the adornment of suitable ritual, in which he succeeds admirably in combining decorum with reverence. His classification is quite 195 excellent and perfectly fits the facts to which it shews a logical sequence. For if anyone cares to examine closely the motives which led men of the earliest times to resort to sacrifices as a medium of prayer and thanksgiving, he will find that two hold the highest place. One is the rendering of honour to God for the sake of Him only and with no other motive, a thing both necessary and excellent. The other is the signal benefit which the worshipper

PHILO

- προηγουμένην ὠφέλειαν· διττή δ' ἐστίν, ἡ μὲν ἐπὶ 196 μετουσίᾳ ἀγαθῶν, ἡ δὲ ἐπὶ κακῶν ἀπαλλαγῇ. τῇ μὲν οὖν κατὰ θεὸν καὶ δι' αὐτὸν μόνον γινομένη προσήκουσαν ὁ νόμος ἀπένειμε θυσίαν τὴν ὀλόκαυτον, ὀλοκλήρῳ καὶ παντελεῖ μηδὲν ἐπιφερομένη τῆς θνητῆς φιλαυτίας ὀλόκληρον καὶ παντελεῆ· τὴν δὲ χάριν ἀνθρώπων, ἐπειδὴ διαίρεσιν ἐπεδέχετο ἡ δόξα, καὶ αὐτὸς διείλε, κατὰ μὲν τὴν μετουσίαν τῶν ἀγαθῶν ὀρίσας θυσίαν ἣν ὠνόμασε σωτήριον, τῇ δὲ 197 φυγῇ τῶν κακῶν ἀπονείμας τὴν περὶ ἁμαρτίας. ὡς τρεῖς εἶναι δεόντως ἐπὶ τρισί, τὴν μὲν ὀλόκαυτον δι' [241] αὐτὸν μόνον τὸν | θεόν, ὃν καλὸν τιμᾶσθαι, μὴ δι' ἕτερον, τὰς δ' ἄλλας δι' ἡμᾶς, τὴν μὲν σωτήριον ἐπὶ σωτηρίᾳ καὶ βελτιώσει τῶν ἀνθρωπίνων πραγμάτων, τὴν δὲ περὶ ἁμαρτίας ἐπὶ θεραπείᾳ ὧν ἐπλημμέλησεν ἡ ψυχή.
- 198 XXXVII. Λεκτέον δὲ περὶ ἐκάστης τὰ νομο-θετηθέντα τὴν ἀρχὴν ποιησαμένους ἀπὸ τῆς ἀρίστης· ἀρίστη δ' ἐστίν ἡ ὀλόκαυτος. ἔστω δὴ, φησί, πρῶτον μὲν τὸ ἱερεῖον ἄρρεν, ἐκ τῶν πρὸς τὰς θυσίας ἀριστίνδην ζώων ἐπικριθέντων, μόσχος ἢ ἀμνὸς ἢ ἔριφος· ἔπειτα δ' ἀπονιψάμενος ὁ προσάγων 199 τὰς χεῖρας ἐπιφερέτω τῇ τοῦ ἱερείου κεφαλῇ· καὶ μετὰ ταῦτα λαβὼν τις τῶν ἱερέων καταθνέτω καὶ φιάλην ἕτερος ὑποσχὼν καὶ δεξάμενος τοῦ αἵματος ἐν κύκλῳ περιῶν τὸν βωμὸν ἐπιρραινέτω, καὶ τὸ ἱερεῖον ἀποδαρὲν εἰς ὀλόκληρα μέλη<sup>1</sup> διανεμέσθω, κοιλίας ἀποπλυνομένης καὶ ποδῶν· εἶτα σύμπαν τῷ ἱερῷ πυρὶ τοῦ βωμοῦ παραδιδόσθω, γεγονὸς καὶ ἐξ

<sup>1</sup> MSS. μέρη.

<sup>a</sup> See Lev. i. 3 ff.

THE SPECIAL LAWS, I. 195-199

receives, and this is twofold, on one side directed to obtaining a share in blessings, on the other to release from evils. To the God-ward motive which has Him alone in view he assigned the whole-burnt-offering, for, whole and complete in itself as it is, it fits in well with the same qualities in the motive which carries with it no element of mortal self-interest ; but where human interests were concerned, since the idea admitted of division, the lawgiver also made a division, and appointed what he called a preservation-offering to correspond to the aspiration for participation in blessings, while he assigned the sin-offering for avoidance of evils. Thus very properly there are three offerings for three objects, the whole-burnt-offering having no other in view but God Himself alone Whom it is good to honour, the other two having ourselves in view, the preservation-offering for the safe preserving and bettering of human affairs, the sin-offering for the healing of the trespasses which the soul has committed.

XXXVII. We must now describe the ordinances dealing with each of these sacrifices, beginning with the best, which is the whole-burnt-offering. <sup>a</sup> First of all, he says the victim must be a male specimen of the animals selected as best for the purpose, namely, a calf or lamb or kid. Secondly, the giver must wash his hands and lay them on the head of the victim, and after this one priest must take and slay it while another priest holds a vial below and after catching some of the blood goes all round the altar and sprinkles it thereon. The victim after being flayed must be divided into parts complete in themselves, while the belly and feet are washed, and then the whole must be given over to the sacred fire of the altar. Thus

PHILO

- 200 ἐνὸς πολλὰ καὶ ἐκ πολλῶν ἔν. ταῦτα μὲν ἡ ῥητὴ πρόσταξις περιέχει. μνηύεται δὲ καὶ νοῦς ἕτερος αἰνιγματώδη λόγον ἔχων τὸν διὰ συμβόλων· σύμβολα δ' ἐστὶ τὰ λεχθέντα φανερὰ ἀδήλων καὶ ἀφανῶν. ἄρρεν εὐθέως τὸ ὀλόκαιτον ἱερεῖον, ἐπειδὴ τοῦ θήλεος καὶ τελειότερον καὶ ἡγεμονικώτερον καὶ συγγενέστερον αἰτίῳ δραστηκῶ· τὸ γὰρ θήλυ ἀτελές, ὑπήκοον, ἐν τῷ πάσχειν
- 201 μᾶλλον ἢ ποιεῖν ἐξεταζόμενον. δυοῖν δ' ὄντων, ἐξ ὧν ἡ ἡμετέρα ψυχὴ συνέστη, λογικοῦ τε καὶ ἀλόγου, τὸ μὲν λογικὸν τῆς ἄρρενος γενεᾶς ἐστίν, ὅπερ νοῦς καὶ λογισμὸς κεκλήρωται, τὸ δ' ἄλογον τῆς πρὸς γυναικῶν, ὅπερ ἔλαχεν αἴσθησις. νοῦς δὲ αἰσθήσεως, ὡς ἀνὴρ γυναικός, καθ' ὅλον γένος ἀμείνων, ὃς ἄμωμος ὢν καὶ καθαρθεὶς καθάρσει ταῖς ἀρετῆς τελείας<sup>1</sup> αὐτός ἐστιν ἡ εὐαγεστάτη θυσία καὶ ὅλη
- 202 δι' ὅλων εὐάρεστος θεῷ. τὰς δὲ ἐπιτιθεμένας τῇ τοῦ ζώου κεφαλῇ χεῖρας δεῖγμα σαφέστατον εἶναι συμβέβηκε πράξεων ἀνυπαιτίων καὶ βίου μηδὲν ἐπιφερομένου τῶν εἰς κατηγορίαν ἀλλὰ τοῖς τῆς φύσεως νόμοις καὶ θεσμοῖς συνάδοντος.
- 203 βούλεται γὰρ τοῦ θύοντος πρῶτον μὲν τὸν νοῦν ὠσιῶσθαι γνώμαις ἀγαθαῖς καὶ συμφερούσαις ἐνασκούμενον, ἔπειτα δὲ τὸν βίον ἐξ ἀρίστων συνεστάναι πράξεων, ὡς ἅμα τῇ τῶν χειρῶν ἐπιθέσει δύνασθαί τινα παρρησιασάμενον ἐκ καθαροῦ τοῦ
- 204 συνειδότος τοιαῦτα εἰπεῖν· αἱ χεῖρες αὐται οὔτε δῶρον ἐπ' ἀδίκους ἔλαβον οὔτε τὰς ἐξ ἀρπαγῆς καὶ [242] πλεονεξίας διανομὰς οὔτε αἵματος | ἀθώου προσ-

<sup>1</sup> MSS. τελείαις.

THE SPECIAL LAWS, I. 199-204

the one in it has become many and the many one.<sup>a</sup> These are the contents of the ordinance taken 200 literally. But another meaning also is indicated of the mystical character which symbols convey ; words in their plain sense are symbols of things latent and obscure.

In the first place the victim of the whole-burnt-offering is a male because the male is more complete, more dominant than the female, closer akin to causal activity, for the female is incomplete and in subjection and belongs to the category of the passive rather than the active. So 201 too with the two ingredients which constitute our life-principle, the rational and the irrational ; the rational which belongs to mind and reason is of the masculine gender, the irrational, the province of sense, is of the feminine. Mind belongs to a genus wholly superior to sense as man is to woman ; unblemished and purged, as perfect virtue purges, it is itself the most religious of sacrifices and its whole being is highly pleasing to God.

In the 202 laying of hands on the head of the animal we find the clearest possible type of blameless actions and of a life saddled with nothing that leads to censure but in harmony with the laws and statutes of nature. For 203 the law desires, first, that the mind of the worshipper should be sanctified by exercise in good and profitable thoughts and judgements ; secondly, that his life should be a consistent course of the best actions, so that as he lays his hands on the victim, he can boldly and with a pure conscience speak in this wise : " These hands have taken no gift to do injustice, nor 204 shared in the proceeds of plunder or overreaching, nor been soiled with innocent blood. None have ήσαντο, οὐ πήρωσιν, οὐχ ὕβριν, οὐ τραῦμα, οὐ βίαν ἐξεργάσαντο, οὐκ ἄλλο τὸ παράπαν οὐδὲν τῶν κατηγορίαν καὶ ψόγον ἐχόντων ὑπηρέτησαν, ἀλλ' ὑποδιάκονοι πάντων ἐγένοντο τῶν καλῶν καὶ συμφερόντων, ἃ παρὰ σοφία καὶ νόμοις καὶ σοφοῖς καὶ νομίμοις ἀνδράσι τετίμηται. XXXVIII.

<sup>a</sup> Cf. § 208.

PHILO

205 τὸ δ' αἷμα κύκλω προσχεῖται τῷ βωμῷ, διότι κύκλος σχημάτων (τὸ) τελειότατον καὶ ὑπὲρ τοῦ μέρος μηδὲν ἔρημον καὶ κενὸν ἀπολειφθῆναι ψυχικῆς σπονδῆς· ψυχῆς γὰρ κυρίως εἰπεῖν ἐστὶ σπονδὴ τὸ αἷμα. συμβολικῶς οὖν ἀναδιδάσκει τὴν διάνοιαν ὅλην δι' ὅλων ἐν κύκλω χορεύουσιν ἐν πάσαις ἰδέαις λόγων καὶ βουλευμάτων καὶ ἔργων ἐπιδείκνυσθαι τὴν πρὸς τὸν θεὸν ἀρέσκειαν.

206 ἀποπλύνεσθαι δὲ κοιλίαν καὶ πόδας διείρηται, πάννυ συμβολικῶς· διὰ μὲν γὰρ τῆς κοιλίας αἰνίττεται τὴν ἐπιθυμίαν, ἣν ἐκνίπτεσθαι συμφέρον κηλίδων καὶ μiasμάτων καὶ μέθης καὶ παροιτίας μεστήν, κακὸν βλαβερώτατον ἐπὶ λύμῃ τοῦ βίου τῶν ἀνθρώπων

207 συγκροτούμενόν τε καὶ συνασκούμενον· διὰ δὲ τοῦ τοὺς πόδας ἀπολούεσθαι τὸ μηκέτι βαίνειν ἐπὶ γῆς, ἀλλ' αἰθεροβατεῖν· ἡ γὰρ τοῦ φιλοθέου ψυχὴ πρὸς ἀλήθειαν ἀπὸ γῆς ἄνω πρὸς οὐρανὸν πηδᾶ καὶ πτερωθεῖσα μετεωροπολεῖ συντάττεσθαι γλιχομένη καὶ συγχορεύειν ἡλίῳ καὶ σελήνῃ καὶ τῇ τῶν ἄλλων ἀστέρων ἱερωτάτῃ καὶ παναρμονίῳ στρατιᾷ, ταξι-αρχοῦντος καὶ ἡγεμονεύοντος τοῦ θεοῦ τοῦ τὴν ἀνανταγώνιστον καὶ ἀναφαίρετον βασιλείαν ἔχοντος,

208 δι' ἧς ἐνδίκως ἕκαστα πρυτανεύεται. ἡ δὲ εἰς μέλη τοῦ ζώου διανομὴ δηλοῖ, ἥτοι ὡς ἐν τᾷ <sup>a</sup> i.e. the ψυχή in its lower sense (cf. § 177) is an apposite symbol of the higher ψυχή, "the mind."

THE SPECIAL LAWS, I. 204-208

they maimed or wounded, no deed of outrage or violence have they wrought. They have done no service of any other kind at all which might incur arraignment or censure, but have made themselves humble ministers of things excellent and profitable, such as are held in honour in the sight of wisdom and law and wise and law-abiding men."

XXXVIII. The blood is poured in a circle round the 205 altar because the circle is the most perfect of figures, and in order that no part should be left destitute of the vital oblation. For the blood may truly be called a libation of the life-principle. So, then, he teaches in this symbol that the mind, whole and complete, should, as it moves with measured tread passing circle-wise through every phase of word and intention and deed, shew its willingness to do God's service.<sup>a</sup>

The direction to wash the belly and the 206 feet is highly symbolical. Under the figure of the belly he signifies the lust which it is well to clean away, saturated as it is with stains and pollutions, with wine-bibbing and sottishness, a mighty force for ill, trained and drilled to work havoc in the life of men. By the washing of the feet is meant that his 207 steps should be no longer on earth but tread the upper air. For the soul of the lover of God does in truth leap from earth to heaven and wing its way on high, eager to take its place in the ranks and share the ordered march of sun and moon and the all-holy, all-harmonious host of the other stars, marshalled and led by the God Whose kingship none can dispute or usurp, the kingship by which everything is justly governed. The division of the animal 208 into its limbs indicates either that all things are one

PHILO

πάντα ἢ ὅτι ἐξ ἑνός τε καὶ εἰς ἓν, ὅπερ οἱ μὲν κόρον καὶ χρημοσύνην ἐκάλεσαν, οἱ δ' ἐκπύρωσιν καὶ διακόσμησιν, ἐκπύρωσιν μὲν κατὰ τὴν τοῦ θερμοῦ<sup>1</sup> δυναστείαν τῶν ἄλλων ἐπικρατήσαντος, διακόσμησιν δὲ κατὰ τὴν τῶν τεττάρων στοιχείων 209 ἰσονομίαν, ἣν ἀντιδιδόασιν ἀλλήλοις. ἐμοὶ δὲ εὐθυβολώτερον σκοπουμένῳ δοκεῖ τοῦτο δηλοῦσθαι· ἢ τιμῶσα ψυχὴ τὸ ὄν δι' αὐτὸ τὸ ὄν ὀφείλει μὴ ἀλόγως μὴδ' ἀνεπιστημόνως ἀλλὰ σὺν ἐπιστήμῃ καὶ λόγῳ τιμᾶν. ὁ δὲ περὶ αὐτοῦ λόγος τομὴν ἐπιδέχεται καὶ διαίρεσιν καθ' ἐκάστην τῶν θείων δυνάμεων καὶ ἀρετῶν· ὁ γὰρ θεὸς ἀγαθὸς τέ ἐστι καὶ ποιητὴς καὶ γεννητὴς τῶν ὄλων καὶ προνοητικὸς ὧν ἐγέννησε, σωτὴρ τε καὶ εὐεργέτης, μακαριότητος καὶ πάσης εὐδαιμονίας ἀνάπλεως· ὧν ἕκαστον καὶ καθ' αὐτὸ ἰδίᾳ σεμνὸν καὶ ἐπαινετὸν καὶ μετὰ τῶν ὁμογενῶν ἐξεταζόμενον.
210 ἔχει δὲ καὶ τὰ ἄλλα ταύτη. ὅταν | βουλευθῆς, ὦ [243] διάνοια, εὐχαριστήσαι περὶ γενέσεως κόσμου θεῷ, καὶ περὶ τοῦ ὅλου ποιοῦ τὴν εὐχαριστίαν καὶ περὶ τῶν ὀλοσχερεστάτων αὐτοῦ μερῶν ὡς ἂν ζῶου

<sup>1</sup> So R. The one other ms. which contained the sentence had θεοῦ, which was the accepted reading before the discovery of R, and it is so quoted by Arnim and others. Presumably they understood it as expressing the view of Heraclitus that the Deity was fire.

<sup>a</sup> The terms belong to the philosophy of Heraclitus, cf. Leg. All. iii. 7 and note. Whatever Heraclitus meant by them, Philo clearly here equates κόρος to ἐκπύρωσις and χρημοσύνη to διακόσμησις.

THE SPECIAL LAWS, I. 208-210

or that they come from and return to one, an alternation which is called by some Fullness and Want,<sup>a</sup> by others a General Conflagration and Reconstruction,<sup>b</sup> the Conflagration being the state when the supremacy of heat has prevailed over the rest, the Reconstruction when the four elements, by concession to each other, obtain equilibrium. My own reflections 209 lead me to think the following a more correct explanation. The soul which honours the Existent having the Existent Himself only in view, ought to honour Him not irrationally nor ignorantly, but with knowledge and reason. And when we reason about Him we recognize in Him partition and division into each of the Divine powers and excellences. For God is good, He is the maker and begetter of the universe and His providence is over what He has begotten; He is a saviour and a benefactor, and has the plenitude of all blessedness and all happiness. Each of these attributes calls for veneration and praise, both separately in itself and when ranked with its congeners. So, too, it is with the rest.<sup>c</sup> 210

When, my mind, thou wishest to give thanks to God for the creation of the universe, give it both for the sum of things and for its principal parts, thinking of them as the limbs of a living creature of the utmost <sup>b</sup> For ἐκπύρωσις see Quis Rerum 228 and note. διακόσμησις should perhaps rather be translated by "disposal" or "distribution," without the "re-". Since fire is the primary substance (τὸ ἐν), creation itself was a διακόσμησις. So too ἐκπύρωσις though regularly translated "general conflagration" is rather "resolution into fire." See further App. p. 621.

<sup>c</sup> Or perhaps ταύτη = "as follows," as not unfrequently; see note on De Mut. 129. By "the rest" he means that the universe and the man himself are to be "divided" in the same way as God's attributes have been in the previous section.

PHILO

- τελειοτάτου μελῶν, οἶον οὐρανοῦ λέγω καὶ ἡλίου καὶ σελήνης, πλανήτων καὶ ἀπλανῶν ἀστέρων, εἶτα γῆς καὶ τῶν ἐν αὐτῇ ζώων καὶ φυτῶν, εἶτα πελαγῶν καὶ ποταμῶν αὐθιγενῶν τε καὶ χειμάρρων καὶ τῶν ἐν αὐτοῖς, ἔπειτα ἀέρος καὶ τῶν κατ' αὐτὸν μεταβολῶν· χειμῶν γὰρ καὶ θέρος, ἕαρ τε καὶ μετόπωρον, αἱ ἐτήσιοι καὶ βιωφελέσταται ὦραι, παθήματα ἀέρος γεγόνασιν ἐπὶ σωτηρία τῶν μετὰ σελήνην
- 211 τρεπομένου. κἂν ἄρα ποτὲ περὶ ἀνθρώπων εὐχαριστῆς, μὴ μόνον περὶ τοῦ γένους ἀλλὰ καὶ περὶ τῶν εἰδῶν καὶ ἀναγκαιοτάτων μερῶν εὐχαρίσται, ἀνδρῶν, γυναικῶν, Ἑλλήνων, βαρβάρων, τῶν ἐν ἡπείροις, τῶν τὰς νήσους εἰληχότων· κἂν περὶ ἐνὸς ἀνδρός, τέμε τῷ λόγῳ τὴν εὐχαριστίαν, μὴ εἰς τὰ λεπτότατα μέχρι τῶν ἐσχάτων, ἀλλὰ εἰς τὰ συνεκτικώτατα, σῶμα καὶ ψυχὴν τὸ πρῶτον, ἐξ ὧν συνέστηκεν, εἶτα εἰς λόγον καὶ νοῦν καὶ αἴσθησιν· οὐ γὰρ ἂν γένοιτο ἀναξία θεοῦ ἀκοῆς καὶ ἡ ὑπὲρ ἐκάστου τούτων εὐχαριστία καθ' αὐτήν.
- 212 XXXIX. Ἀπόχρη τοσαῦτα περὶ τῆς ὀλοκαύτου θυσίας λελέχθαι. τὴν δὲ τοῦ σωτηρίου λεγομένην ἐξῆς ἐπισκεπτέον. ἐπὶ ταύτης ἀδιαφορεῖ, ἐάν τε ἄρρεν ἢ τὸ ἱερεῖον ἐάν τε καὶ θῆλυ. σφαγέντος δὲ τρία ταῦτα ὑπεξαιρεῖται τῷ βωμῷ, τὸ στέαρ καὶ λοβὸς ἥπατος καὶ νεφροὶ δύο· τὰ δ' ἄλλα τῷ κατα-
- 213 θύσαντι εὐωχία. διὰ τί δὲ τὰ μέρη ταῦτα τῶν ἐντοσθιδίων καθιεροῦται, μετὰ ἀκριβείας ἐπισκεπτέον ἐκεῖνο μὴ παρελθόντας· διαλογιζόμενος ἐν ἔμμαντῷ πολλάκις ταῦτα καὶ διερευνῶμενος ἐπηπό-

<sup>a</sup> E.V. "peace-offering." See Lev. iii. 1 ff.

<sup>b</sup> E.V. "the caul upon the liver."

THE SPECIAL LAWS, I. 210-213

perfection. Such parts are heaven and sun and moon and the planets and fixed stars ; then again earth and the living creatures or plants thereon, then the sea and rivers, whether spring-fed or winter courses, and all they contain : then the air and its phases, for winter and summer, spring and autumn, those seasons which recur annually and are so highly beneficial to our life, are different conditions in the air which changes for the preservation of sublunar things. And if thou givest 211 thanks for man, do not do so only for the whole genus but for its species and most essential parts, for men and women, for Greeks and barbarians, for dwellers on the mainland and those whose lot is cast in the islands. And if it is for a single person, divide the thanksgiving as reason directs, not into every tiny part of him down to the very last, but into those of primary importance, first of all into body and soul of which he is composed, then into speech and mind and sense. For thanks for each of these will by itself be not unworthy to obtain audience with God.

XXXIX. Enough has now been said on the whole 212 burnt-offering. We must now consider in its turn the preservation-offering.<sup>a</sup> In this case it is a matter of indifference whether the victim is male or female. When it has been slain these three, the fat, the lobe<sup>b</sup> of the liver and the two kidneys, are set apart for the altar, while the rest serves as a feast to be enjoyed by the person who has offered the sacrifice. But why 213 these parts of the inwards are consecrated must be carefully considered, not neglecting the following point. In the course of my reflections I have often pondered deeply on this question also ; what could

PHILO

- ρησα, τί δήποτε λοβὸν μὲν ἥπατος καὶ νεφροὺς καὶ στέαρ ἀπαρχὰς τῶν καταθυομένων ζώων ὑπεξείλετο ὁ νόμος, οὔτε δὲ καρδίαν οὔτε ἐγκέφαλον, τοῦ 214 ἡγεμονικοῦ τῷ ἑτέρῳ τούτων ἐνδιαιωμένου. τὸ δ' αὐτὸ νομίζω καὶ ἄλλους οὐκ ὀλίγους τῶν διανοία μᾶλλον ἢ ὀφθαλμοῖς ταῖς ἱεραῖς γραφαῖς ἐντυγχανόντων ἐπιζητήσῃ· ἐὰν μὲν οὖν ἐπισκεψάμενοι πιθανωτέραν αἰτίαν εὕρωσιν, ἑαυτοὺς τε καὶ ἡμᾶς ὠφελήσουσιν· εἰ δὲ μή, τὴν ἐπινοηθείσαν ὑφ' ἡμῶν ἐπικρινάτωσαν, εἰ δόκιμος. ἔστι δὲ ἦδε· τὸ ἡγε-μονικὸν μόνον τῶν ἐν ἡμῖν ἀφροσύνην καὶ ἀδικίαν καὶ δειλίαν καὶ τὰς ἄλλας κακίας δέχεται<sup>1</sup> τε καὶ 215 [244] χωρεῖ· τούτου δὲ οἶκος τὸ ἕτερον τῶν λεχθέντων 215 ἐστίν, | ἐγκέφαλος ἢ καρδία. ἐδικαίωσεν οὖν ὁ ἱερός λόγος τῷ τοῦ θεοῦ βωμῷ, δι' οὗ πάντων ἀμαρτημάτων καὶ παρανομημάτων ἀπολύσεις γίνονται καὶ παντελεῖς ἀφέσεις, μὴ προσφέρειν ἀγγεῖον, ἐν ᾧ ποτε φωλεύσας ὁ νοῦς ἐπὶ τὴν ἀδικίας καὶ ἀσεβείας ἀνοδίαν ἐχώρησεν ἐκτραπόμενος τὴν ἐπ' ἀρετὴν καὶ καλοκάγαθίαν ἄγουσαν ὁδόν· εὐηθες γὰρ τὰς θυσίας ὑπόμνησιν ἀμαρτημάτων ἀλλὰ μὴ λήθην αὐτῶν κατασκευάζειν. τοῦτ' αἴτιον εἶναί μοι δοκεῖ τοῦ μηδέτερον τῶν ἡγεμονίαν ἐχόντων, ἐγκέφαλον ἢ καρδίαν, προσφέρεσθαι.
- 216 "Α δὲ διείρηται, λόγον ἔχει προσήκοντα· τὸ μὲν στέαρ, ὅτι καὶ πιότατον καὶ τῶν σπλάγχχνων φυ-λακτήριον—ἐπαμπίσχει γὰρ αὐτὰ καὶ πιαίνει καὶ τῇ μαλακότητι τῆς ἐπαφῆς ὠφελεῖ—, οἱ δὲ νεφροὶ

<sup>1</sup> MSS. δύναται.

<sup>a</sup> See the very similar passage in De Sac. 136, and the note there on the question whether τὸ ἡγεμονικόν resided in the brain or in the heart.

THE SPECIAL LAWS, I. 213-216

be the reason why the law, when setting apart the lobe of the liver and the kidneys and the fat as a tribute reserved from the animals sacrificed, did not include either the heart or the brains, since the dominant principle resides in one or other of them.<sup>a</sup> And I expect the same question will present itself to not a few of those who read the holy scriptures with their understanding rather than with their eyes. If such persons after examination find a more convincing reason, they will benefit both themselves and me ; if not I beg them to consider whether that which has commended itself to my mind will stand the test. It is as follows. The dominant principle is the only part of us which admits and retains folly and injustice and cowardice and the other vices, and the home of this principle is one or other of the two just mentioned, namely, the brain and the heart. The holy word, therefore, thought good that the altar of God, by which is given absolution and complete remission of all sins and transgressions, should not be approached by the container in which mind had its lair when it came forth to tread the pathless wilds of injustice and impiety, turning away from the road which leads to virtue and noble conduct. For it would be foolish to have the sacrifices working remembrance instead of oblivion of sin. This seems to me the reason why neither of the parts which hold the pre-eminence, the brain or the heart, is brought to the altar. 214

As for the parts which are actually prescribed, appropriate reasons can be given for the choice. The fat is the richest part and acts as a protection to the inwards, serving as a covering and a source of richness to them and benefiting them by the softness of its contact. The kidneys are chosen because of their 215

PHILO

διὰ τοὺς παραστάτας καὶ τὰ γεννητικά, οἷς παροικουῦντες ἀγαθῶν τρόπον γειτόνων βοηθοῦσι καὶ συμπράττουσιν, ὅπως ὁ τῆς φύσεως σπόρος εὐδοῖη, μηδενὸς τῶν πλησίον ἐμποδίζοντος—αὐτοὶ μὲν γὰρ αἰμοειδεῖς εἰσι δεξαμεναί, οἷς ἡ τῶν περιττωμάτων ὑγρὰ κάθαρσις ἀποκρίνεται, οἱ δὲ παραστάται πλησίον, δι' ὧν ἄρδεται ὁ σπόρος—, λοβὸς δ' ἥπατος τοῦ κυριωτάτου τῶν σπλάγγων ἐστὶν ἀπαρχή, δι' οὗ τὴν τροφήν ἐξαιματοῦσθαι συμβέβηκε καὶ ἐπ-οχετευομένην τῇ καρδίᾳ φέρεσθαι διὰ φλεβῶν εἰς τὴν 217 τοῦ ὅλου σώματος διαμονήν. στόμαχος μὲν γὰρ παρακείμενος τῇ καταπόσει τὴν ὑπὸ τῶν ὀδόντων τμηθεῖσαν πρότερον καὶ λεανθεισαν αὐθις τροφήν ὑποδέχεται καὶ προκατεργάζεται κοιλία· κοιλία δὲ παρὰ στομάχου λαμβάνουσα τὴν δευτέραν ὑπηρε-σίαν ἐπιτελεῖ, πρὸς ἣν ὑπὸ φύσεως ἐτάχθη, χύλωσιν ἀπεργαζομένη τῆς τροφῆς· αὐλοὶ δὲ δύο τῆς κοιλίας σωληνοειδεῖς ἐκπεφύκασιν εἰς ἥπαρ ἐπαντλοῦντες 218 ταῖς διαπεφυκυῖαις ἐν αὐτῷ δεξαμεναῖς. ἔχει δὲ διττὴν δύναμιν ἥπαρ, διακριτικὴν τε καὶ τὴν πρὸς ἐξαιμάτωσιν· ἡ μὲν οὖν διακριτικὴ πᾶν ὅσον ἀ-τέραμνον καὶ δυσκατέργαστον εἰς τὸ παρακείμενον χολῆς ἀγγεῖον ἀποκρίνει, ἡ δ' ἕτερα τὸ καθαρὸν καὶ διηθημένον τῷ περὶ αὐτὴν φλογμῷ τρέπει μὲν εἰς αἷμα ζωτικώτατον, ἀναθλίβει δ' εἰς καρδίαν, ἀφ' ἧς ὡς ἐλέχθη ταῖς φλεψὶν ἐποχετευόμενον διὰ παντὸς εἰλείται τοῦ σώματος γινόμενον αὐτῷ τροφή.

THE SPECIAL LAWS, I. 216-218

relation to the testicles and generative organs ; situated beside them they give them neighbourly assistance, and co-operate in promoting the easy passage of nature's seed unimpeded by any of the adjacent parts. For the kidneys themselves are blood-coloured receptacles in which the moist off-scouring of the excrement is secreted, and contiguous to them are the testicles which create the stream of the semen. The lobe is a sample tribute from the most important of the inwards, the liver, by which the food is converted into blood and then being sluiced into the heart, is conveyed through the veins for the conservation of the whole body. For the 217 orifice of the stomach being adjacent to the gullet receives the food which has been first bitten off by the teeth and afterwards masticated, and by its action prepares it for the stomach itself. This receives it from the orifice and performs the second office to which it has been appointed by nature, by turning it into juice. And from the stomach there are two pipe-shaped channels extending to the liver and draining the food into the receptacles which lie at intervals therein. Now the liver has two properties : 218 it acts both as a sifter and a creator of blood. As a sifter it secretes all the hard and callous stuff into the adjacent bile-vessel, while in its other capacity by means of the heat which it contains it turns the pure liquid which has been strained off into blood full of life-giving powers, then presses this blood into the heart, whence, as we have said, it is sluiced into the veins, and coursing through the whole body becomes

- 219                    πρόσεστι δὲ κακείνο τοῖς εἰρημένοις· τὴν τοῦ ἥπατος φύσιν μετέωρον καὶ λειοτάτην οὖσαν [καὶ] διὰ λειότητα φανοτάτου κατόπτρου λόγον ἔχειν συμβέβηκεν, ἵν' ἐπειδὰν τῶν ἡμερινῶν φροντίδων ἀναχωρήσας ὁ νοῦς, ὕπνω μὲν παρ-[245] | ἴσταμένης ἐμποδῶν, ἀνακυκλεῖν αὐτὸν ἄρξῃται καὶ τὰ νοήματα καθαρῶς ἐφ' αὐτοῦ σκοπεῖν, οἷα εἰς κάτοπτρον ἀποβλέπων τὸ ἥπαρ ἕκαστα εἰλικρινῶς καταθεᾶται τῶν νοητῶν καὶ περιβλεπόμενος ἐν κύκλῳ τὰ εἶδωλα, μὴ τι πρόσεστιν αἰσχος, [ἵνα] τὸ μὲν φύγη, τὸ δ' ἐναντίον ἔλθῃται, καὶ πάσαις ταῖς φαντασίαις εὐαρεστήσας προφητεύῃ διὰ τῶν ὀνειρων τὰ μέλλοντα.
- 220 XL. Δυσὶ δὲ νόμοις ἡμέραις ἐπιτρέπει τὴν χρῆσιν τῆς τοῦ σωτηρίου θυσίας ποιεῖσθαι μηδὲν εἰς τὴν τρίτην ἀπολείποντας, πολλῶν χάριν· ἐνὸς μὲν ὅτι τὰ τῆς ἱερᾶς τραπέζης πάντα καιρίως δεῖ προσφέρε-σθαι σπουδῆν ποιουμένους, ὡς μὴ μεταβάλλῃ μήκει χρόνου· κρεῶν δὲ ἐώλων εὐσηπτὸς ἢ φύσις, κἄν 221 ἡδύσμασι παραρτυθῇ. ἑτέρου δ' ὅτι τὰς θυσίας

<sup>a</sup> This section is based on Plato, Timaeus 71 (see Archer-Hind's translation), and certainly reproduces the main idea of that curious passage, that the liver acts as a mirror "which receives outlines of the thoughts from the brain and exhibits reflections from them," sometimes of a bitter nature, while sometimes "the part of the soul settled about the liver is enabled to secure a sober amusement at night, enjoying divination during sleep in recompense for its deprivation of intelligence and wisdom." Whether Philo has otherwise understood Plato correctly I do not presume to say.

<sup>b</sup> I do not understand what Philo means by μετέωρος ("high up"). Plato's description of the liver is that God set it in the dwelling-place of the lusting (ἐπιθυμητικόν) part of the soul and made it "dense and smooth and bright, with a share of its sustenance. <sup>a</sup>There is another point to 219 be added to these statements. The liver has been made so as to lie high <sup>b</sup> and be exceedingly smooth, and in virtue of its smoothness it plays the part of a mirror of the utmost brightness. In consequence when the mind withdrawing from its daytime cares, with the body paralyzed in sleep and the obstruction of every sense removed, begins to turn itself about and concentrate upon the pure observation of its concepts, it looks into the liver as into a mirror where it gains a lucid view of all that mind can perceive and, while its gaze travels round the images to see whether they contain any ugly defect, it eschews all such and selects their opposites, and so, well satisfied <sup>c</sup> with all the visions presented to it, prophesies future events through the medium of dreams.

THE SPECIAL LAWS, I. 219-221

XL. <sup>d</sup>Two days only are allowed for the use of the 220 preservation-offering as food, and nothing is to be left over till the third day. This for several reasons.
 One is, that all the meats of the sacred table must be eaten without undue delay, care being taken that they should not deteriorate through lapse of time.
 It is the nature of stale flesh to decay rapidly, even though seasoned with spices as preservatives. Another 221 bitterness." Some stress is laid on its position, but there is nothing corresponding to μετέωρος. Can the word mean here "with changing moods," "temperamental," and refer to the mixture of sweetness and bitterness ascribed to it by Plato?

<sup>e</sup> So Mangey and Heinemann for εὐαρεστήσας. This use of the verb, however, seems later. Its common meaning is "well-pleasing to," and so apparently always elsewhere in Philo (εὐαρεστητέον in De Praem. 34 may be the verbal of εὐαρεστοῦμαι). This regular meaning is perhaps not altogether impossible here, "it has become a satisfactory medium for all the (good) visions."

<sup>d</sup> See Lev. xix. 5, 6.

PHILO

ἀταμιεύτους εἶναι προσήκει καὶ πᾶσιν εἰς μέσον προκείσθαι τοῖς δεομένοις· εἰσὶ γὰρ οὐκέτι τοῦ τεθυκότος, ἀλλ' ᾧ τέθυται τὸ ἱερεῖον, ὃς εὐεργέτης καὶ φιλόδωρος ὢν κοινωνὸν ἀπέφηνε τοῦ βωμοῦ καὶ ὁμοτράπεζον τὸ συμπόσιον τῶν τὴν θυσίαν ἐπιτελούντων, οἷς παραγγέλλει μὴ νομίζειν ἐστιᾶν· ἐπίτροποι γὰρ εὐωχίας εἰσὶν, οὐχ ἐστιάτορες, ὁ δ' ἐστιάτωρ ἐστὶν οὗ συμβέβηκεν εἶναι καὶ τὴν παρασκευὴν, ἣν οὐ θέμις ἀποκρύπτειν φειδωλίαν, ἀνελεύθερον κακίαν, φιλανθρωπίας, ἀρετῆς εὐγενοῦς, 222 προκρίνοντας. τελευταίου δ' ὅτι τὴν τοῦ σωτηρίου θυσίαν ὑπὲρ δυεῖν προσάγεσθαι συμβέβηκε, ψυχῆς τε καὶ σώματος, ὧν ἑκατέρῳ μίαν ἡμέραν ἀπένειμεν εἰς εὐωχίαν τῶν κρεῶν· ἤρμοττε γὰρ ἰσάριθμον χρόνον ὀρισθῆναι τοῖς πεφυκόσι σῶζεσθαι τῶν ἐν ἡμῖν, ὡς τῇ μὲν προτεραίᾳ λαμβάνειν ἅμα τῇ βρώσει τῆς ψυχικῆς σωτηρίας ὑπόμνησιν, τῇ δ' 223 ὑστεραίᾳ τῆς κατὰ τὸ σῶμα ὑγείας. ἐπεὶ δὲ τρίτον οὐδὲν ἦν ὃ κυρίως πέφυκε σωτηριᾶν ἐνδέχεσθαι, τὴν εἰς τὴν τρίτην ἡμέραν χρῆσιν ἀνὰ κράτος ἀπηγόρευσε προστάξας, εἰ καὶ τύχοι τι κατ' ἄγνοιαν ἢ λήθην ἀπολειφθέν, εὐθύς ἀναλίσκεσθαι πυρί. τὸν δὲ γευσάμενον αὐτὸ μόνον ἔνοχον ἀποφαίνει καὶ φησιν αὐτῷ· τεθυκέναι νομίζων, ᾧ καταγέλαστε, οὐ τέθυκας· οὐ προσηκάμην<sup>1</sup> ἀθύτων, ἀνιέρων, βε-<sup>1</sup> προσηκάμην followed by a genitive is irregular, and Cohn proposes some insertion, e.g. θοίνην.

---

<sup>a</sup> See Lev. xix. 7, 8. Philo's close following of the text should be noticed, LXX εἰς δὲ βρώσει βρωθῆ . . . ἄθυτόν (E.V. "abomination") ἐστίν, οὐ δεχθήσεται. His γευσάμενον αὐτὸ μόνον interprets βρώσει βρωθῆ ("be eaten at all"), though else- 228

THE SPECIAL LAWS, I. 221-223

reason is, that the sacrificial meals should not be hoarded, but be free and open to all who have need, for they are now the property not of him by whom but of Him to Whom the victim has been sacrificed, He the benefactor, the bountiful, Who has made the convivial company of those who carry out the sacrifices partners of the altar whose board they share. And He bids them not think of themselves as the entertainers, for they are the stewards of the good cheer, not the hosts. The Host is He to Whom the material provided for the feast has come to belong, and this must not be stowed away out of sight, and niggardliness, the vice of the slave, preferred to kindness, the virtue of gentle birth. The final reason is, that the preservation-offering is in fact made in behalf of two, 222 namely soul and body, to each of which he assigned one day for feasting on the flesh. For it was meet that an equal space of time should be appointed for those elements of our nature which are capable of being preserved, so that on the first day as we eat we obtain a reminder of the soul's preservation, on the morrow of the body's good health. And since there 223 is no third thing which, properly speaking, could be the subject of preservation, he strictly forbade the use of the oblation as food on the third day, and commanded that if anything was left over through ignorance or inadvertence, it should immediately be consumed by fire. "Even him who had tasted it and nothing more he declares to be guilty. "Poor fool," he says to him, "thou thinkest to have sacrificed, though thou hast not done so. Sacrilegious, unholy, profane, impure, is the meat which thou hast dressed.

where he does not seem to understand the Hebrew idiom thus rendered in Greek.

PHILO

βήλων, ἀκαθάρτων, ὧν ἤψηκας κρεῶν, ὧ γαστρίμαργε, θυσιῶν οὐδ' ὄναρ ἐψηθημένος.

- 224 XLI. Τῆς δὲ τοῦ σωτηρίου θυσίας ἐν εἶδει περιλαμβάνεται ἡ λεγομένη τῆς αἰνέσεως, ἣτις λόγον ἔχει τοιόνδε· ὁ μηδενὶ τὸ παράπαν ἀβουλῆτῳ περιπεσῶν, μήτε κατὰ σῶμα μήτε κατὰ τὰ ἐκτός, ἀλλ' ἀπολέμῳ καὶ εἰρηρικῶ βίῳ χρώμενος ἐν εὐπαθείαις τε καὶ εὐτυχίαις ἐξεταζόμενος, ἀπήμων καὶ ἄπταιστος ὧν καὶ τὸ μακρὸν τοῦ βίου πέλαγος εὐθύνων ἐν εὐδία καὶ γαλήνῃ πραγμάτων, ἐπι-[246] πνεούσης αἰὲ κατ' οἰάκων εὐπραγίας, | ἀναγκαίως ὀφείλει τὸν κυβερνήτην θεὸν καὶ ἄνοσον μὲν σωτηριαν ἀζημίους δ' ὠφελείας καὶ συνόλως ἀμιγῆ κακῶν τὰ ἀγαθὰ δωρούμενον ὕμνοις τε καὶ εὐδαι-μονισμοῖς καὶ εὐχαῖς θυσίαις τε καὶ ταῖς ἄλλαις εὐχαριστίαις εὐαγῶς ἀμείβεσθαι· ἃ δὴ πάντα ἀθρόα 225 συλλήβδην ἐν ὄνομα τὸ αἰνέσεως ἔλαχε. ταύτην τὴν θυσίαν οὐχ ὥσπερ τὴν προτέραν τοῦ σωτηρίου δυσὶν ἡμέρας ἀναλίσκεσθαι προστάττει, μιᾷ δ' αὐτῷ μόνον, ἵν' οἱ ἐπιτυχόντες ἐτοιμῶν καὶ προχείρων εὐεργεσιῶν ἐτοιμῆν καὶ ἀνυπέρθετον ποιῶνται τὴν μετάδοσιν.

- 226 XLII. Ταῦτα μὲν ἐπὶ τοσοῦτον. τὴν δὲ τρίτην ἐξῆς ἐπισκεπτέον, ἣ καλεῖται περὶ ἁμαρτίας. αὕτη τέτμηται πολλαχῆ, κὰν τοῖς προσώποις κὰν τοῖς τῶν ἱερείων εἶδεσι, προσώποις μὲν ἀρχιερέως καὶ

---

<sup>a</sup> See Lev. vii. 2 f. (E.V. 12 f.). It is embraced in the preservation-offering because it is called θυσία αἰνέσεως σωτηρίου (E.V. "the sacrifice of his peace-offerings for thanksgiving").

THE SPECIAL LAWS, I. 223-226

I accept it not, base glutton, who even in thy dreams hast caught no glimpse of what sacrifice means.”

XLI. Under the head of the preservation-offering <sup>224</sup> is embraced what is called the praise-offering.<sup>a</sup> The principle of this is as follows. He who has never at all met with any untoward happening, either of soul or body or things external, who lives a life of peace undisturbed by war, placed in an environment of every comfort and good fortune, free from disaster and cause of stumbling, sailing in straight course over the long sea of life amid the sunshine and calm of happy circumstances, with the breeze of prosperity ever behind the helm, has as his bounden duty to requite God his pilot, Who gives him safety untouched by disease, benefits carrying no penalty and in general good unmixed with evil—requite Him, I say, with hymns and benedictions and prayers and sacrifices and the other expressions of gratitude as religion demands. All these collected and summed up have obtained the single name of praise. <sup>b</sup> For the con- <sup>225</sup>sumption of this sacrifice one day only is allowed, not two as in the former case of the preservation-offering, that those into whose hands benefits have fallen so readily should make repayment with readiness and without delay.

XLII. So much for these. We must next examine <sup>226</sup> the third kind of sacrifice which bears the name of sin-offering. <sup>c</sup> Here we have several divisions, both according to the persons concerned and the kinds of victims. As to persons, the high priest is distin-

<sup>b</sup> See Lev. vii. 5 (E.V. 15).

<sup>c</sup> See Lev. iv. for the high priest (E.V. “anointed priest”), v. 3; for the nation, v. 13; for the ruler, v. 22; for the commoner, v. 27.

PHILO

τοῦ σύμπαντος ἔθνους καὶ ἄρχοντος ἐν μέρει καὶ ἰδιώτου, ἱερείοις δὲ μόσχου καὶ χιμάρου καὶ χι-227 μαίρας ἢ ἀμνάδος. διακέκριται δὲ καὶ μάλιστ' ἦν ἀναγκαῖον διακεκρίσθαι τὰ θ' ἐκούσια καὶ ἀκούσια, τροπὰς λαμβανόντων τὰς πρὸς τὸ βέλτιον τῶν δοξάντων ἀμαρτεῖν καὶ κακιζόντων μὲν αὐτοὺς ἐφ' οἷς ἐπλημμέλησαν, μεθορμιζομένων δὲ πρὸς ζωὴν 228 ἀνυπαίτιον. τὰ μὲν οὖν τοῦ ἀρχιερέως ἀμαρτήματα καὶ τοῦ ἔθνους ἰσοτίμῳ καθαίρεται ζῶψ—μόσχον γὰρ ἀνάγεσθαι περὶ ἐκατέρου προστέτακται—, τὰ δὲ τοῦ ἄρχοντος ἐλάττονι μὲν, ἄρρени δὲ καὶ τούτῳ—χίμαρος γὰρ ἐστὶ τὸ ἱερεῖον—, τὰ δὲ τοῦ ἰδιώτου καταδεεστέρῳ τὸ εἶδος—θῆλυ γὰρ ἄλλ' οὐκ ἄρρени 229 θῦμα, χίμαιρα,<sup>1</sup> καταθύεται—. ἔδει γὰρ ἰδιώτου μὲν πλεον ἄρχοντα φέρεσθαι καὶ ταῖς ἱεουργίαις, ἄρχοντος δὲ τὸ ἔθνος, ἐπεὶ τὸ ὅλον τοῦ μέρους αἰεὶ κρεῖττον εἶναι δεῖ, τὸν δ' ἀρχιερέα τῷ ἔθνει τῆς αὐτῆς ἡξιώσθαι προνομίας ἐν τῷ καθαίρεσθαι καὶ παρὰ τῆς ἰλεω τοῦ θεοῦ δυνάμεως ἀμνηστίαν ἀδικημάτων αἰτεῖσθαι· τὸ δ' ἰσότιμον οὐ δι' αὐτόν, ὡς εἴοικε, καρποῦται μᾶλλον ἢ διότι τοῦ ἔθνους ὑπηρέτης ἐστὶ τὰς κοινὰς ὑπὲρ ἀπάντων ποιούμενος εὐχαριστίας ἐν ταῖς ἱερωτάταις εὐχαῖς καὶ ἐν ταῖς 230 εὐαγεστάταις θυσίαις. σεμνὴ δὲ καὶ θαυμάσιος καὶ ἡ περὶ ταῦτα διάταξις· “ἐὰν” φησὶν “ὁ ἀρχιερεὺς ἄκων ἀμάρτη,” καὶ προστίθῃσιν “ὥστε τὸν λαὸν

<sup>1</sup> Some mss. θῦμα only, the others χίμαιρα only.

<sup>a</sup> Philo finds the term ἄρχων in the LXX, and does not attempt to explain it. For ἐν μέρει see on κατὰ μέρος, § 208. Possibly it may mean here, “ruler over some particular part,” i.e. of the whole nation.

THE SPECIAL LAWS, I. 226-230

guished from the whole nation and the rulers<sup>a</sup> as a class from the men of the common people. As to victims, they may be a male calf, a he-goat, a she-goat or ewe-lamb. Another distinction made is one 227 which is most essential between voluntary and involuntary sins. For those who have acknowledged their sin are changing their way for the better, and while they reproach themselves for their errors are seeking a blameless life as their new goal. The sins, 228 then, of the high priest and those of the whole nation are purged with an animal of the same value ; in both cases it is directed that a male calf should be brought. For the sins of the ruler one of less value is ordered, though this too is a male, namely a he-goat ; for the sins of the commoner, one still more inferior in kind, a female offering instead of a male, that is, a she-goat. For it was proper that in matters of sacrifice the ruler 229 should fare better than the commoner and the nation than the ruler, since the whole should always be superior to the part ; also that the high priest should be adjudged the same precedence as the nation in their purification and supplication for forgiveness of wrongdoings from the merciful power of God. But the equality of honour which the high priest enjoys is evidently not so much on his own account as because he is the servant of the nation also, giving thanks in common for all through the holiest of prayers and the purest of sacrifices. Deeply and wonderfully 230 impressive is the form of command in this matter. <sup>b</sup> "If the high priest," it says, "sins involuntarily," and then adds, "so that the people sin," words which <sup>b</sup> See Lev. iv. 3. A.V. "according to the sin of the people." R.V. "so as to bring guilt on the people." The LXX has not got ἀκων in this verse, but Philo infers it from ἀκουσίως (R.V. "unwittingly") in v. 2.

PHILO

ἀμαρτεῖν," μόνον οὐκ ἄντικρυς ἀναδιδάσκων, ὅτι ὁ πρὸς ἀλήθειαν ἀρχιερεὺς καὶ μὴ ψευδώνυμος ἀμέτοχος ἀμαρτημάτων ἐστίν, εἰ δ' ὀλισθήσοι ποτέ, πείσεται τοῦτο οὐ δι' αὐτόν, ἀλλὰ διὰ κοινὸν τοῦ ἔθνους σφάλμα· τὸ δὲ σφάλμα οὐκ ἀνίατον, ἀλλὰ

231 ῥαδίως τὴν θεραπείαν ἐνδεχόμενον. ὅταν οὖν σφαγιασθῇ ὁ μόσχος, κελεύει τοῦ αἵματος ἐπιρραίνειν ἐπτάκις τῷ δακτύλῳ ἀντικρὺ τοῦ πρὸς τοῖς ἀδύτοις καταπετάσματος, ἐσωτέρῳ τοῦ προτέρου, καθ' ὃν τόπον ἴδρυται τὰ ἱερώτατα σκευή, κἄπειτα

[247] <τὰ> τοῦ | θυμιατηρίου τέτταρα κέρατα—τετράγωνον γάρ ἐστι—χρίειν καὶ ἐπαλείφειν, τὸ δ' ἄλλο αἶμα προσχεῖν παρὰ τῇ βάσει τοῦ ἐν ὑπαίθρῳ

232 βωμοῦ· ἐφ' ὃν ἀναφέρειν τρία διείρηται, στέαρ καὶ λοβὸν ἥπατος καὶ διττοὺς νεφρούς, κατὰ τὴν ἐπὶ τοῦ σωτηρίου διάταξιν, δορὰν δὲ καὶ κρέα καὶ σύμπαν ἀπὸ κεφαλῆς ἄχρι ποδῶν τὸ ἄλλο σῶμα τοῦ μόσχου μετὰ τῶν ἐντοσθιδίων προφέρειν<sup>1</sup> ἔξω καὶ κατακαίειν ἐν χωρίῳ καθαρῷ, ἔνθα τὴν ἱερὰν ἀπὸ τοῦ βωμοῦ τέφραν ἐκκομίζεσθαι συμβέβηκε. τὰ δ' αὐτὰ νομοθετεῖ καὶ περὶ παντὸς τοῦ ἔθνους ἀμαρ-

233 τόντος. εἰ δέ τις ἄρχων πλημμελήσειε, χιμάρῳ ποιεῖται τὴν κάθαρσιν, ὡς εἶπον, ἔαν δὲ ἰδιώτης, χιμαῖρα ἢ ἀμνάδι· τῷ μὲν γὰρ ἄρρεν, τῷ δ' ἰδιώτη θῆλυ ζῶον ἀπένειμε, τὰ δ' ἄλλα διαταξάμενος ἐπ' ἀμφοῖν ὅμοια, χρίσαι τὰ κέρατα τοῦ ἐν ὑπαίθρῳ βωμοῦ τῷ αἵματι, στέαρ καὶ λοβὸν ἥπατος καὶ διττοὺς νεφρούς ἀνενεγκεῖν, τὰ δ' ἄλλα τοῖς ἱερεῦσι

<sup>1</sup> MSS. προσφέρειν.

<sup>a</sup> See Lev. iv. 6-12.

THE SPECIAL LAWS, I. 230-233

almost amount to a plain statement from which we may learn that the true high priest who is not falsely so-called is immune from sin, and if ever he slips, it will be something imposed on him not because of what he does himself, but because of some lapse common to the nation. And that lapse is not incurable but admits easily of healing treatment. "So 231 when the calf has been slaughtered he bids the priest to sprinkle some of the blood with his finger seven times over against the veil at the inner shrine, beyond the first veil, at the place where the most sacred chattels have been set, and then anoint and smear the four horns of the altar of incense, corresponding to its four sides, and pour the rest of the blood at the foot of the altar in the open air. To this altar he 232 is commanded to bring three things, the fat and the lobe of the liver and the two kidneys, as in the ordinance of the preservation-offering. But the skin and the flesh and all the rest of the body of the calf from head to foot, with the inwards, are to be carried outside and burnt in a clear and open space<sup>b</sup> whither the holy ashes from the altar also are conveyed. The same rules are laid down by law in the case where the sin lies with the whole nation. But if a trespass is 233 committed by a ruler, he purges himself with a he-goat, as I have said; if by one of the common people, with a she-goat or a ewe-lamb. For he assigned the male animal to the ruler, the female to the commoner, while the other regulations which he made are similar for both persons, namely, that the horns of the open-air altar should be anointed with the blood, the fat and the lobe of the liver and the two kidneys offered at the altar and the rest given to the priests to eat.

<sup>b</sup> Or as E.V. "a clean place." See on § 268.

PHILO

- 234 παρασχέιν ἐδωδήν. XLIII. ἐπεὶ δὲ τῶν ἀμαρτημάτων τὰ μὲν εἰς ἀνθρώπους, τὰ δ' εἰς ἱερά καὶ ἅγια δρᾶται, περὶ μὲν τῶν εἰς ἀνθρώπους γινομένων ἀκουσίως διείλεκται, τὴν δ' ἐπὶ τοῖς ἱεροῖς κάθαρσιν<sup>1</sup> ἰλάσκεσθαι κριῶ νομοθετεῖ, πρότερον ἀποτίσαντας ἐκείνο περὶ ὃ γέγονεν ἡ πλημμέλεια, τὸ πέμπτον προσεπιτιθέντας τῆς ἀξίας τιμῆς.
- 235 Ταῦτα καὶ τὰ τούτοις ὅμοια νομοθετήσας ἐπὶ τοῖς ἀκουσίοις καὶ περὶ τῶν ἐκουσίων ἐξῆς διατάττεται. εἴαν τις, φησί, ψεύσῃται περὶ κοινωνίας ἢ περὶ παρακαταθήκης ἢ ἀρπαγῆς ἢ εὐρέσεως ὧν ἀπώλεσεν ἕτερος καὶ ὑπονοηθεῖς, ὄρκου προταθέντος, ὁμόση καὶ δόξας ἐκπεφευγέναι τὸν ἀπὸ τῶν κατηγορῶν ἔλεγχον αὐτὸς ἑαυτοῦ γένηται κατήγορος, ἔνδον ὑπὸ τοῦ συνειδότος ἐλεγχθεῖς, καὶ κακίση μὲν ἑαυτὸν ὧν ἠρνήσατο καὶ ἐπιώρκησεν, ὁμολογῶν δ' ἀντικρυς τὸπραχθὲν ἀδίκημα συγγνώμην αἰτῆται,
- 236 κελεύει τῷ τοιούτῳ παρέχειν ἀμνηστίαν, ἐπαληθεύσαντι τὴν μετάνοιαν οὐχ ὑποσχέσει ἀλλ' ἔργοις, ἀποδόσει τῆς παρακαταθήκης καὶ ὧν ἤρπασεν ἢ εὖρεν ἢ συνόλως ἐσφετερίσατο τοῦ πλησίον, προσ-237 αποτίσας<sup>2</sup> καὶ τὸ ἐπίπεμπτον εἰς παρηγορίαν τοῦ πλημμεληθέντος. ὅταν δὲ ἰλάσῃται τὸν ἠδικημένον πρότερον, ἴτω, φησί, μετὰ ταῦτα καὶ εἰς τὸ ἱερόν αἰτησόμενος ὧν ἐξήμαρτεν ἄφεσιν, ἐπαγόμενος

<sup>1</sup> A very strange expression, unless κάθαρσιν can be regarded as a sort of cognate accusative. Cohn suggests ἀμαρτίαν. Possibly ἀκαθαρσίαν.

<sup>2</sup> This ungrammatical nominative is either a slip or should be corrected to -σαντι.

<sup>a</sup> See Lev. v. 15, 16.

XLIII. <sup>a</sup>But since sins are sometimes committed 234 against men, sometimes against things sacred and holy, besides the regulations already stated for dealing with involuntary offences against men, he lays down that in the case of the holy things the purificatory propitiation should be made with a ram, the offenders having first made full compensation for the subject of the trespass with the addition of a fifth part of its proper value.

These and similar regulations for involuntary 235 offences are followed by his ordinances for such as are voluntary.<sup>b</sup> “If,” he says, “a man lies about a partnership or a deposit or a robbery or as to finding the lost property of someone else, and, being suspected and put upon his oath, swears to the falsehood —if then after having apparently escaped conviction by his accusers he becomes, convicted inwardly by his conscience, his own accuser, reproaches himself for his disavowals and perjuries, makes a plain confession of the wrong he has committed and asks for pardon—then the lawgiver orders that forgiveness be 236 extended to such a person on condition that he verifies his repentance not by a mere promise but by his actions, by restoring the deposit or the property which he has seized or found or in any way usurped from his neighbour, and further has paid an additional fifth as a solatium for the offence. And when he has thus 237 propitiated the injured person he must follow it up, says the lawgiver, by proceeding to the temple to ask for remission of his sins, taking with him as his <sup>b</sup> See Lev. vi. 2-7. Where, however, it is not suggested that the offender has made a voluntary confession, Philo as also Josephus, Ant. iii. 232, and indeed modern commentators, infers it from the probability that the convicted criminal would not get off so lightly.

PHILO

- παράκλητον οὐ μεμπτόν τὸν κατὰ ψυχὴν ἔλεγχον, ὃς ἀνιάτου συμφορᾶς αὐτὸν ἐρρύσατο τὴν θανα-τοῦσαν<sup>1</sup> νόσον ἀνεῖς καὶ πρὸς ὑγίαν παντελῆ μετα-238 βαλών. κριὸν δ' εἶναι<sup>2</sup> καὶ τούτῳ διείρηται σφάγιον, [248] καθὰ | καὶ τῷ πρὸς τὰ ἅγια πλημμελήσαντι· τὸ γὰρ ἐν τοῖς ἁγίοις ἀκούσιον ἀμάρτημα ἰσότημον ἀπέφηνε τῷ περὶ τὰ ἀνθρώπινα ἔκουσίῳ, εἰ μὴ ἄρα καὶ τοῦτ' ἐστὶ τι ἅγιον, ἐπειδὴ προσγένονεν ὄρκος, ὃν οὐκ ἐφ' ὑγιεῖ γενόμενον ἐπηνωρθώσατο τροπῇ τῇ πρὸς τὸ βέλτιον.
- 239 Παρατηρητέον δ' ὅτι τὰ μὲν ἐπιφερόμενα τῷ βωμῷ ἐκ τοῦ περὶ ἀμαρτίας ἱερείου ταῦτά ἐστιν ἅ καὶ ἐπὶ τῆς τοῦ σωτηρίου θυσίας, λοβὸς ἥπατος καὶ στέαρ καὶ νεφροί· τρόπον γάρ τινα καὶ ὁ μετανοῶν σῶζεται, τὴν χαλεπωτέραν τῶν ἐν τῷ σώματι 240 παθῶν νόσον ψυχῆς ἐκτρεπόμενος. τὰ δ' ἄλλα μέρη τοῦ ζώου πρὸς ἔδωδὴν ἀπονέμεται δια-φερόντως. ἐν τρισὶ δ' ἡ διαφορὰ· τόπῳ, χρόνῳ, τοῖς λαμβάνουσι· τόπος μὲν οὖν τὸ ἱερόν, χρόνος δὲ ἀντὶ δυεῖν ἡμερῶν μία, οἱ δὲ μεταλαμβάνοντες ἱερεῖς, 241 ἀλλ' οὐχ ὧν ἐστὶν ἡ θυσία, καὶ ἱερέων ἄρσενες. ἕξω μὲν οὖν οὐκ ἐὰ τοῦ ἱεροῦ προφέρειν βουλόμενος, εἴ τι τῷ μετανοοῦντι πρότερον ἡμάρτηται, μὴ περίφημον εἶναι βασκάνων καὶ φιλαπεχθημόνων γνώμαις ἀγνώμοσι καὶ στόμασιν ἀχαλίνοις, ἐπ' ὄνειδει καὶ

<sup>1</sup> So Cohn for ms. θανατῶσαν or θανατώσασαν. See note on Spec. Leg. iii. 102 (App.).

<sup>2</sup> mss.: so Cohn: κριὸν δεῖν R ("ut videtur" adds Cohn), κριὸν ἀναγαγεῖν F: κριὸν δ' ἄγειν κελεύει, καὶ τοῦτο A.H.

<sup>a</sup> See Lev. vi. 25, 26, 29. But there is no order there that it should be eaten in one day. (So also Jos. Ant. iii. 232 αὐθημερόν.)

THE SPECIAL LAWS, I. 237-241

irreproachable advocate the soul-felt conviction which has saved him from a fatal disaster, allayed a deadly disease, and brought him round to complete health. For him, too, the sacrifice prescribed is a ram, as also 238 for the offender in sacred matters. For the lawgiver rated the involuntary sin in the sacred sphere as equal to voluntary sin in the human, though indeed this last also is perhaps a desecration, since it is supplemented by an oath sworn under dishonest conditions, though rectified by the man's conversion to the better course.

It must be noticed, however, that while the parts of the sin-offering laid upon the altar are the same 239 as in the case of the preservation-offering, namely the lobe of the liver, the fat and the kidneys—a natural arrangement because the penitent also is preserved or saved by escape from the soul-sickness which is more grievous than any which affects the body—the 240 conditions under which the other parts of the animal are appointed to serve for food are different. The difference is threefold, in the place, in the time and in the recipients.<sup>a</sup> The place is the temple, the time one day instead of two, and the participants are priests, not those who offer the sacrifices : also they are male priests.<sup>b</sup> The prohibition against carrying the flesh 241 outside the temple is due to his wish that any sin which the penitent has previously committed should not be made notorious through the ill-judged judgments and unbridled tongues of malicious and acrimonious persons, and blazed abroad as a subject for <sup>b</sup> This seems to me to indicate that Philo rightly or wrongly takes "every male among the priests," to mean that apart from this prohibition the women of the priestly clan would be entitled to eat it. In § 110 he has called them "priestesses."

PHILO

διαβολαῖς ἐκδεδομένον, ἀλλ' ἐντὸς ὄρων ἱερῶν, ἐν 242 οἷς καὶ ἡ κάθαρσις γέγονεν, εἶναι. XLIV. τοῖς δ' ἱερεῦσιν εὐωχεῖσθαι τὴν θυσίαν κελεύει διὰ πολλά· πρῶτον<sup>1</sup> μὲν ἵνα τιμήσῃ τοὺς τεθυκότας, ἡ γὰρ τῶν ἐστιωμένων ἀξίωσις ἐπικοσμεῖ τοὺς ἐστιάτορας· δεύτερον δὲ ἵνα βεβαιοτάτα πιστεύσωσιν, ὅτι οἷς ἀμαρτημάτων εἰσέρχεται μεταμέλεια ἴλω τὸν θεὸν ἔχουσιν· οὐ γὰρ ἂν τοὺς προσπόλους αὐτοῦ καὶ θεράποντας ἐπὶ μετουσίαν τῆς τοιαύτης τραπέζης ἐκάλεσεν, εἰ μὴ παντελῆς ἐγεγένητο ἀμνηστία· τρίτον δ' ὅτι λειτουργεῖν οὐδενὶ τῶν ἱερέων ἕξεστιν, ὃς ἂν μὴ ὀλόκληρος ᾖ· καὶ γὰρ τῷ βραχυτάτῳ 243 μῶμῳ σκορακίζεται. παρηγορεῖ δὴ τοὺς μηκέτι τὴν τῶν ἀδικημάτων ὁδὸν ἰόντας ὡς ἱερατικοῦ γένους ἔνεκα προαιρέσεως καθαρᾶς μεταλαχόντας καὶ πρὸς ἱερέων ἰσοτιμίαν ἐπαχθέντας. ὅθεν καὶ μιᾷ ἡμέρᾳ τὸ περὶ ἀμαρτίας ἱερεῖον ἀναλίσκεται, ὡς δέον ὑπερτίθεσθαι μὲν τὸ ἀμαρτάνειν μέλλοντας ἀεὶ πρὸς αὐτὸ καὶ βραδύνοντας, πρὸς δὲ τὸ κατορθοῦν 244 ἐπεσπευσμένῳ τάχει χρῆσθαι. τὰ δ' ὑπὲρ τοῦ ἀρχιερέως ἢ τοῦ ἔθνους ἔνεκα πλημ-μελείας σφαγιαζόμενα πρὸς μὲν ἔδωδὴν οὐ σκευά-ζεται, κατακαίεται δ' ἐπὶ τῆς ἱερᾶς τέφρας, ὡς ἐλέχθη· κρείττων γὰρ οὐδεὶς ἀρχιερέως ἢ τοῦ ἔθνους ἐστίν, ὃς ἀμαρτησάντων γενήσεται παρ-245 αιτητῆς. εἰκότως οὖν ἀναλίσκεται τὰ κρέα πυρί,

<sup>1</sup> MSS. πρότερον.

<sup>a</sup> The point presumably is that the exclusion of the priests who suffer from defects and therefore cannot have taken part contumelious and censorious talk, but be confined within the sacred precincts which have also been the scene of the purification. XLIV. The command that 242 the sacrifice should serve as a feast for the priests is due to several reasons. First, to do honour to the givers of the sacrifice, for the dignity of the guests reflects glory on their entertainers ; secondly, to secure them firmly in the belief that the graciousness of God extends to those who feel remorse for their sin. For He would never have called His servitors and ministers to share the hospitality of such a table if full pardon had not been given. Thirdly, because none of the priests is permitted to perform the rites if he is not wholly sound, for the slightest blemish causes him to be thrust from office.<sup>a</sup> In fact he encourages those 243 who no longer tread the path of wrongdoing with the thought that their resolution to purify themselves has given them a place in the sacerdotal caste and advanced them to equal honour with the priest. For a similar reason the flesh of the sin-offering is consumed in a single day, showing that in sin we should procrastinate and be slow and dilatory in approaching it, but when the achievement of righteousness is our goal, act with speed and promptitude.

THE SPECIAL LAWS, I. 241-245

The victims immolated in behalf of the high priest 244 or the nation as atonement for trespassing are not dressed to serve as food but are consumed by fire on the sacred ashes, as I have said. <sup>b</sup>For there is no one superior to the high priest or the nation to act as intercessor for the sinners. It is natural therefore 245 that the flesh should be consumed by fire in imitation in the sacrifice enhances the honour of the providers of the feast. But see App. p. 621.

<sup>b</sup> i.e. in § 232.

PHILO

- κατὰ μίμησιν τῶν ὀλοκαυτουμένων, ἐπὶ τιμῇ τῶν προσώπων, οὐχ ὅτι πρὸς ἀξίωσιν αἱ ἱεραὶ γίνονται κρίσεις, ἀλλ' ὅτι τῶν τὰς ἀρετὰς μεγάλων καὶ ὡς ἀληθῶς ἀγίων ἀμαρτήματα τοιαυτὰ ἔστιν, ὡς
- 246 ἑτέρων κατορθώματα νομίζεσθαι. καθάπερ γὰρ ἡ [249] βαθεῖα καὶ | ἀρετῶσα πεδιάς, κὰν ἀφορήσῃ ποτέ, τῆς λυπρόγεω φύσει καρπὸν φέρει πλείονα, τὸν αὐτὸν τρόπον καὶ τῶν σπουδαίων καὶ φιλοθέων συμβαίνει τὰς πρὸς καλοκάγαθίαν ἀφορίας ἀμείνους εἶναι ὧν ἐκ τύχης οἱ φαῦλοι κατορθοῦσι· γνώμη γὰρ οὐδὲν ὑγιᾶς δρᾶν ὑπομένουσι.
- 247 XLV. Ταῦτα διαταξάμενος περὶ ἐκάστης ἰδέας τῶν θυσιῶν ἐν μέρει, τῆς τε ὀλοκαύτου καὶ σωτηρίου καὶ περὶ ἀμαρτίας, ἄλλην προσνομοθετεῖ κοινὴν τῶν τριῶν, ἵνα ταύτας ἐπιδείξῃ φίλας καὶ συγγενεῖς οὔσας· ἡ δὲ συναγωγὸς αὐτῶν εὐχὴ μεγάλη κα-
- 248 λεῖται. διὰ τί δὲ ταύτης ἔτυχε τῆς προσρήσεως, λεκτέον· ὅταν ἀπάρξωνταί τινες ἀπὸ παντὸς μέρους κτήσεως, πυρούς, κριθάς, ἔλαιον, οἶνον, τὰ κάλλιστα τῶν ἀκροδρύων, ἔπειτα τῶν ζώων τὰ πρωτότοκα ἀρρενικά, τὰ μὲν ἐκ τῶν καθαρῶν καθιερώσαντες, τὰ δ' ἐκ τῶν μὴ καθαρῶν κατ' ἀξίαν τιμησάμενοι, μηκέτ' ἔχοντες ὕλας, ἐν αἷς διαθήσονται τὴν εὐσέβειαν, αὐτοὺς ἀνατιθέασιν καὶ καθιεροῦσιν, ἄλεκτον ἐπιδεικνύμενοι ὁσιότητα καὶ ὑπερβολὴν τινα γνώμης φιλοθέου. διὸ καὶ μεγάλη

<sup>a</sup> Such actions would hardly be κατορθώματα in the strict Stoic sense. See note on Quod Deus 100.

<sup>b</sup> See Num. vi. 1-12. The "Great Vow" is the name regularly applied to the vow of the Nazirite from v. 2, ὅς ἄν 242

THE SPECIAL LAWS, I. 245-248

of the whole-burnt-offerings to do honour to the persons concerned, not because God's holy judgments are given by considerations of position but because the sins of the greatly virtuous and the truly sacred are such as to be regarded as acts of righteousness if done by others. For as the fields where the soil is deep and rich, even if they are sometimes unproductive, bear more fruit than those where it is naturally thin and poor, so too we find in virtuous and God-loving persons that their unproductiveness of positive goodness is better than the fortuitous righteous actions<sup>a</sup> of the bad whose nature does not allow them ever to act intentionally in an honest way. 246

XLV. After laying down these ordinances about each particular kind of sacrifice, whole-burnt-offering, preservation-offering and sin-offering, he institutes rules for another which partakes of the three, to shew the friendship and kinship which exists between them. This connecting link between them is called the Great Vow.<sup>b</sup> I must explain why it has acquired this name. 247
When people have paid first-fruits of every part of their property, in wheat, barley, oil, wine and their finest orchard-fruits and also in the first-born males of their livestock, consecrated in the case of the clean species and valued at an adequate compensation in the case of the unclean, as they have no more material resources with which to give a pledge of their piety, they dedicate and consecrate themselves, thus shewing an amazing sanctification and a surpassing devotion to God. And therefore it is fitly called the Great Vow, μεγάλως εὔξεται εὐχὴν ἀφαγνίσασθαι ἀγνεῖαν (E.V. "made a special vow, the vow of a Nazirite, to separate himself"). The allegorical meaning, as Philo understood it, has been given on special details in several places, and more fully in Quod Deus 87 ff.

PHILO

- προσηκόντως εὐχή καλεῖται· κτημάτων γὰρ τὸ μέγιστον αὐτός τις ἐστὶν αὐτῶ· οὐδ' παραχωρεῖ καὶ
- 249 ἐξίσταται. ποιησαμένῳ δὲ τὴν εὐχὴν τάδε διαγορεύει· πρῶτον μὲν ἄκρατον μὴ προσφέρεσθαι μηδ' " ὅσα ἐκ σταφυλῆς κατεργάζεται " μηδ' ἄλλο τι μέθυσμα πίνειν ἐπὶ καθαιρέσει λογισμοῦ, νομίζοντα τὸν χρόνον ἐκείνον ἱεῖσθαι· καὶ γὰρ τοῖς λειτουργοῖς τῶν ἱερέων δύσαν ἀκουμένοις ὕδατι τὰ
- 250 περὶ μέθην ἀπειρήται· δεύτερον δὲ τὰς τρίχας τῆς κεφαλῆς μὴ ἀποκείρεσθαι, σύμβολον ἐναργές τοῖς ὀρώσι παρέχοντα<sup>1</sup> τοῦ μὴ παρακόπτειν τὸ νόμισμα τῆς εὐχῆς· τρίτον δὲ τὸ σῶμα φυλάττειν καθαρὸν καὶ ἀμίαντον, ὡς μὴ γονεύσιν ἐπεισιέναι τετελευτηκόσι μηδ' ἀδελφοῖς, τὴν φυσικὴν εὐνοίαν καὶ συμπάθειαν πρὸς τὰ οἰκεία καὶ φίλτατα νικώσης εὐσεβείας, ἣν αἰεὶ νικᾶν καλὸν ὁμοῦ καὶ συμφέρον.
- 251 XLVI. ἡκούσης δὲ τῆς προθεσμίας, τρία ζῶα κελεύει προσάγειν ἐπὶ λύσει τῆς εὐχῆς, ἄρνα καὶ ἀμνάδα καὶ κριόν, τὸν μὲν εἰς ὀλοκαύτωςιν, τὴν δὲ περὶ ἁμαρτίας, τὸν δὲ κριὸν εἰς θυσίαν
- 252 τοῦ σωτηρίου. πᾶσι γὰρ τούτοις ἐμφέρεται<sup>2</sup> πως ὁ εὐξάμενος, τῇ μὲν ὀλοκαύτῳ θυσία διὰ τὸ μὴ τῶν ἄλλων μόνον ἀπαρχῶν ἀλλὰ καὶ ἑαυτοῦ παραχωρεῖν, τῇ δὲ περὶ ἁμαρτίας διὰ τὸ ἄνθρωπος εἶναι—καὶ γὰρ ὁ τέλειος ἢ γενητὸς οὐκ ἐκφεύγει τὸ διαμαρτάνειν—, τῇ δὲ τοῦ σωτηρίου, διότι τὸν σωτῆρα ὄντως θεὸν ἐπιγέγραπται τῆς σωτηρίας

<sup>1</sup> MSS. παρέχοντας.

<sup>2</sup> If this reading is right, we may suppose that the verb takes the meaning of the common adjective ἐμφερής = "like," but I do not know of any parallel. The other reading συμφέρεται, i.e. "corresponds with," has less ms. authority, but seems otherwise more suitable.

THE SPECIAL LAWS, I. 248-252

for his own self is the greatest possession which anyone has, and this self he forgoes and puts himself outside it. When he has made the vow, the lawgiver 249 gives him the following instructions. First, he must not take any strong drink nor anything " which he makes from the grape " nor drink any other intoxicant to the overthrow of his reason, but hold himself to be serving as priest during that time. For indeed such priests as are performing the rites have to quench their thirst with water and are forbidden intoxicants. Secondly, he must not shave the hairs of his head, thus 250 giving a clear symbol to the eye that he does not debase the sterling coinage of his vow. Thirdly, he must keep his body pure and undefiled to the extent of abstaining from contact with parents or brothers after death, thus letting his kindly affection and fellow-feeling with the closest and dearest yield to piety that victory which it is both honourable and profitable that it should always win.

<sup>a</sup> XLVI. When the final day as appointed has come, 251 the law bids him bring, to release him from his vow, three animals, a he-lamb, a ewe-lamb and a ram, the first for a whole-burnt-offering, the ewe-lamb as a sin-offering, and the ram as a preservation-offering. For all these find their likeness in the maker of the vow: 252 the whole-burnt-offering, because he surrenders not only the other first-fruits and gifts but also his own self; the sin-offering, because he is a man, since even the perfect man, in so far as he is a created being, never escapes from sinning; the preservation-offering, because he has acknowledged and adopted the real preserver, God, as the author of his preservation <sup>a</sup> See Num. vi. 13 f.

PHILO

αἴτιον, ἀλλ' οὐκ ἰατροὺς καὶ τὰς παρ' αὐτοῖς [250] δυνάμεις· οἱ | μὲν γὰρ ἐπίκηροι καὶ θνητοὶ μηδ' αὐτοῖς ὑγείαν ἱκανοὶ παρασχεῖν, αἱ δ' οὔτε πάντα οὐτ' αἰεὶ τοὺς αὐτοὺς ὠφελούσιν, ἀλλ' ἔστιν ὅτε καὶ μέγα βλάπτουσιν, ἐπειδὴ τὸ κῦρος ἕτερος ἀνήπται καὶ τῶν δυνάμεων καὶ τῶν χρωμένων αὐταῖς.

253 ἐκπλήττει δέ με τὸ τῶν τριῶν ζώων προσαγομένων εἰς διαφερούσας θυσίας μηδὲν εἶναι ἕτερογενές, ἀλλὰ ταύτου γένους τὰ πάντα, κριὸν καὶ ἄρνα καὶ ἀμνάδα· βούλεται γάρ, ὅπερ ἔφην μικρῶ πρότερον, διὰ τούτου παραστήσαι, ὅτι ἀδελφαὶ καὶ συγγενεῖς εἰσιν αἱ τρεῖς ἰδέαι τῶν θυσιῶν, τῷ καὶ τὸν μετανοοῦντα σώζεσθαι καὶ τὸν σωζόμενον ἐκ τῶν ψυχικῶν ἀρρωστημάτων μετανοεῖν καὶ ἐκάτερον σπεύδειν πρὸς ὀλόκληρον καὶ παντελεῆ διάθεσιν, ἧς ἡ ὀλόκαυτος θυσία σύμβολον.

254 ἐπεὶ δ' αὐτὸν ηὔξατο προσαγαγεῖν, τὸν δ' ἱερὸν βωμὸν οὐ θέμις αἵματι ἀνθρωπίνῳ μιαίνεισθαι, ἔδει δέ τι πάντως μέρος ἱεουργηθῆναι, μέρος ἐσπούδασε λαβεῖν, ὅπερ ἀφαιρεθὲν οὐτ' ἀλγηδόνας οὔτε λῶβην ἀπεργάζεται· τοῦ γὰρ κατὰ τὸ σῶμα φυτικού καθάπερ δένδρου περιττοὺς κλάδους τὰς τῆς κεφαλῆς τρίχας ἀπέκειρε καὶ παρέδωκε πυρί, ᾧ τὰ κρέα τῆς τοῦ σωτηρίου θυσίας ἔψεται· προσηκόντως, ἵνα τι τῶν τοῦ εὐξαμένου μέρος, ὃ μὴ

<sup>a</sup> Lit. "the part of the body which has 'growth' like a tree," φύσις in this special sense being opposed on the one hand to ἔξις ("cohesion") as in stones, and on the other to ψυχή ("life").

THE SPECIAL LAWS, I. 252-254

instead of the physicians and their faculties of healing. For the physicians are mortals ready to perish, unable to secure health even for themselves, and their faculties are not beneficial to all persons nor always to the same persons, but sometimes do great harm : there is Another who is invested with lordship over such faculties and those who exercise them.

I note, and it is a very striking point, that in the three 253 animals brought for the different sacrifices there is no difference of species. They are all of the same species, a ram, a he-lamb and a ewe-lamb. For the law wishes to show in this way what I mentioned a little before, that the three kinds of sacrifice are sisters of one family, because the penitent is preserved and the person preserved from the maladies of his soul repents, and both of them are pressing forward to that perfect and wholly sound frame of mind of which the whole-burnt-offering is a symbol.

Another point—the votary has vowed to bring him- 254 self, and while it would be sacrilege that the altar should be defiled by human blood, it was quite necessary that some part of him should be sacrificially offered. The part, therefore, which his zeal prompted him to take was one which can be removed without causing either pain or mutilation. He cut off the hairs of his head, which are to the body like the superfluous branches in the vegetation of a tree,<sup>a</sup> and gave them to the fire in which the flesh of the preservation-offering is cooked, a fitting proceeding to secure that at least some part of the votary's self which cannot be

Cf. Leg. All. ii. 22, with note giving references to S.V.F. ii. 457-460. There we had δύναμις ἐκτικῆ, φυτικῆ, ψυχικῆ, and Philo goes on to say that our bones have ἕξις, and our nails and hair φύσις. Cf. also the fuller explanation of the terms in Quod Deus 35 ff.

PHILO

ἐπιφέρειν ἕξεισι τῷ βωμῷ, θυσίας γοῦν εἶδει συνανακραθῆ, γενόμενον ὕλη φλογὸς ἱεράς.

- 255 XLVII. Ταῦτα μὲν κοινὰ τῶν ἄλλων. ἔδει δὲ καὶ τοὺς ἱερεῖς ἀπάρξασθαι τι τῷ βωμῷ, μὴ νομίσαντας ἀσυλίαν εὐρῆσθαι τὰς ὑπηρεσίας καὶ λειτουργίας ἐφ' ὧν ἐτάχθησαν. ἢ δ' ἀπαρχὴν πρέπουσα ἱερεῦσιν ἀπ' οὐδενὸς τῶν ἐναίμων, ἀλλ' ἀπὸ 256 τοῦ καθαρωτάτου τῆς ἀνθρωπίνης τροφῆς· σεμίδαλις γάρ ἐστιν ἢ ἐνδελεχῆς αὐτῶν θυσία, μέτρου ἱεροῦ τὸ δέκατον καθ' ἐκάστην ἡμέραν, οὗ τὸ μὲν ἡμισυ πρωΐας, τὸ δὲ ἡμισυ δείλης προσάγεται, ταγηνισθὲν ἐν ἐλαίῳ, μηδενὸς εἰς βρώσιν ὑπο-λειφθέντος· χρησμὸς γάρ ἐστι, πᾶσαν θυσίαν ἱερέως ὀλόκαυτον εἶναι καὶ μηδὲν αὐτῆς εἰς ἔδωδὴν ἀπο-νέμεσθαι.

Εἰρηκότες οὖν, ὡς οἶόν τε ἦν, τὰ περὶ θυσιῶν ἐξῆς καὶ περὶ τῶν θυόντων λέξομεν.

- [251] XLVIII. | <sup>1</sup> Βούλεται τὸν ἀνάγοντα θυσίας ὁ 257 νόμος καθαρὸν εἶναι σῶμα καὶ ψυχὴν, ψυχὴν μὲν ἀπὸ τε τῶν παθῶν καὶ νοσημάτων καὶ ἀρρωστη-μάτων καὶ κακιῶν τῶν ἐν τε λόγοις καὶ πράξεσι, 258 τὸ δὲ σῶμα ἀφ' ὧν ἔθος αὐτῷ μαινεσθαι. κάθαρσιν δ' ἐπενόησεν ἐκατέρῳ τὴν προσήκουσαν, ψυχῇ μὲν διὰ τῶν πρὸς τὰς θυσίας εὐτρεπιζομένων ζώων, σώ-ματι δὲ διὰ λουτρῶν καὶ περιρραντηρίων, περὶ ὧν μικρὸν ὕστερον ἐροῦμεν· ἄξιον γὰρ τῷ κρείττονι καὶ ἡγεμονικωτέρῳ τῶν ἐν ἡμῖν, ψυχῇ, καὶ τὰ τῶν

<sup>1</sup> Here the mss. insert the heading Περὶ τῶν θυόντων.

<sup>a</sup> The Greek phrase is vague. Heinemann "mit einem Stück des Opfers sich vermischte"; Mangey only "sacrificia admiscetur." I understand it to mean that it comes to belong to the same eidos or species as an ordinary sacrifice.

lawfully brought to the altar should be merged in and share the nature of sacrifice <sup>a</sup> by serving as fuel to a holy flame.

XLVII. These rules apply to the laity in common, <sup>255</sup> but the priests also had to make offerings of first-fruits to the altar, and not suppose that the services and ministrations to which they were appointed entitled them to immunity. <sup>b</sup> The first-fruits suitable for the priest are not taken from any animal with blood in its veins, but from the purest form of human food. Fine flour constitutes their perpetual <sup>256</sup> sacrifice, a tenth part of the sacred measure for every day, half offered in the morning and half in the evening. It is fried in oil and none of it is left over to be eaten. For it is a divine command that every sacrifice offered by a priest should be wholly consumed by fire and none of it set apart for food.

We have described to the best of our ability the regulations for sacrifices and will next proceed to speak of those who offer them.

XLVIII. <sup>c</sup> The law would have such a person pure <sup>257</sup> in body and soul, the soul purged of its passions and distempers and infirmities and every viciousness of word and deed, the body of the defilements which commonly beset it. For each it devised the purification which befitted it. For the soul it used the animals which the worshipper is providing <sup>d</sup> for sacrifice, for the body sprinklings and ablutions of which we will speak a little later. For precedence in speech as well as elsewhere must be given to the higher and

<sup>b</sup> See Lev. vi. 20-22. For "perpetual" see on § 170.

<sup>c</sup> Heading in mss. "Of those who sacrifice," and fresh numeration of chapters in Cohn.

<sup>d</sup> The stress is on ἐντρεπιζομένων. The fact of his providing the victims shews the purity of his motives.

PHILO

- 259 λόγων ἀπονεῖμαι πρεσβεῖα. τίς οὖν ἡ ταύτης κάθαρσις; ἴδε, φησίν, ὦ οὗτος, ὁ προσάγεις ἱερεῖον, ὡς ἔστιν ὀλόκληρον καὶ παντελῶς μύμων ἀμέτοχον, ἐπικριθὲν ἐκ πολλῶν ἀριστίνδην διανοίαις μὲν ἀδεκάστοις ἱερέων ὀξυωπεστάταις δ' αὐτῶν ὄψεσι καὶ τῷ συνεχεῖ τῆς ἀσκήσεως συγκεκροτημένας εἰς ἀνυπαίτιον ἐπίσκεψιν· ἐὰν γὰρ μὴ τοῖς ὀφθαλμοῖς μᾶλλον ἢ τῷ λογισμῷ τοῦτο κατίδης, ἐκνήψῃ τὰ ἀμαρτήματα καὶ ὅσας ἐν ἅπαντι τῷ βίῳ κηλίδας ἀπεμάξω,<sup>1</sup> τὰ μὲν ἀβουλήτοις συντυχίαις,
- 260 τὰ δὲ καθ' ἐκούσιον γνώμην. εὐρήσεις γὰρ τὴν τοσαύτην περὶ τὸ ζῶον ἀκριβολογίαν αἰνιττομένην διὰ συμβόλου τὴν τῶν σῶν βελτίωσιν ἡθῶν· οὐ γὰρ ὑπὲρ ἀλόγων ὁ νόμος, ἀλλ' ὑπὲρ τῶν νοῦν καὶ λόγον ἐχόντων, ὥστε οὐ τῶν θυομένων φροντίς ἔστιν, ἵνα μηδεμίαν ἔχη λώβην, ἀλλὰ τῶν θυόντων, ἵνα περὶ
- 261 μηδὲν πάθος κηραίνωσι. τό γε μὴν σῶμα, ὡς εἶπον, λουτροῖς καὶ περιρραντηρίοις καθαίρει καὶ οὐκ ἔῃ περιρρανάμενον εἰς ἅπαξ ἢ ἀπολουσάμενον εὐθύς εἴσω περιβόλων ἱερῶν παρέρχεσθαι, ἀλλὰ ἐπτά ἡμέρας ἔξω διατρίβειν κελεύει καὶ δις περιρραίνεσθαι τῇ τρίτῃ καὶ ἐβδόμῃ καὶ μετὰ ταῦτα λουσαμένῳ παρέχει τὰς τε εἰσόδους καὶ τὰς
- 262 [252] ἱερουργίας ἀδεεῖς. XLIX. | ὅσον δὲ κὰν τούτῳ τὸ προμηθὲς καὶ φιλόσοφον, ἐπισκεπτέον. οἱ μὲν ἄλλοι σχεδὸν ἅπαντες ἀμιγεῖ ὕδατι περιρραίνονται, θαλάττῃ μὲν οἱ πολλοί, τινὲς δὲ ποταμοῖς, οἱ δὲ καὶ κάλπεσιν ἐκ πηγῶν ἀρυόμενοι· Μωυσῆς δὲ τέφραν προετοιμασάμενος ὑπολειφθεῖσαν ἐξ ἱεροῦ

<sup>1</sup> MSS. ἀνεμάξω.

<sup>a</sup> See Num. xix. 11 f.

<sup>b</sup> See Num. xix. 17, 18.

THE SPECIAL LAWS, I. 259-262

more dominant element in ourselves, the soul. How 259 then is the soul purified? "Note, friend," says the lawgiver, "how perfect and utterly free from blemish is the victim which you bring selected as the best of many by the priests with all impartiality of mind and clearness of vision, the result of the continued practice which has trained them to faultless discrimination. For if you observe this with your reason rather than with your eyes you will proceed to wash away the sins and defilements with which you have besmeared your whole life, some involuntary and accidental, some due to your own free will. For 260 you will find that all this careful scrutiny of the animal is a symbol representing in a figure the reformation of your own conduct, for the law does not prescribe for unreasoning creatures, but for those who have mind and reason. It is anxious not that the victims should be without flaw but that those who offer them should not suffer from any corroding passion.

<sup>a</sup> As for the body, it purifies it 261 with ablutions and sprinklings and does not allow the person to be sprinkled and washed once for all and then pass straightway within the sacred precincts, but bids him stay outside for seven days and be twice sprinkled on the third and seventh day, and after that, when he has bathed himself, it gives him full security to come within and offer his sacrifice.
XLIX. The following regulation also shews a far- 262 sighted wisdom which should be noted. In almost all other cases men used unmixed water for the sprinkling. By most people it is taken from the sea, by others from the rivers, and by others it is drawn in ewers from the wells.<sup>b</sup> But Moses first provided ashes, the remnants of the sacred fire, obtained in a

PHILO

- πυρὸς—ὄν δὲ τρόπον, αὐτίκα δηλωθήσεται—ἀπὸ ταύτης φησὶ δεῖν ἀναιρεῖσθαι καὶ ἐμβάλλοντας εἰς ἀγγεῖον αὐθις ὕδωρ ἐπιφέρειν, εἶτα ἐκ τοῦ κράματος βάπτοντας ὑσώπου κλάδους τοῖς καθαιρομένοις
- 263 ἐπιρραίνειν. αἰτία δ' οὐκ ἀπὸ σκοποῦ λέγοιτ' ἂν ἤδε· βούλεται τοὺς ἐπὶ τὴν τοῦ ὄντος θεραπείαν ἰόντας γνῶναι πρότερον ἑαυτοὺς καὶ τὴν ἰδίαν οὐσίαν· ὁ γὰρ ἀνεπιστήμων ἑαυτοῦ πῶς ἂν δυνηθεῖη καταλαβεῖν τὴν ἀνωτάτω καὶ πάνθ' ὑπερβάλλουσαν
- 264 θεοῦ δύναμιν; ἔστιν οὖν ἡμῶν ἢ κατὰ τὸ σῶμα οὐσία, γῆ καὶ ὕδωρ, ἧς ὑπομιμνήσκει διὰ τῆς καθάρσεως, αὐτὸ τοῦθ' ὑπολαμβάνων εἶναι τὴν ὠφελιμωτάτην κάθαρσιν, τὸ γνῶναι τινα ἑαυτὸν καὶ ἐξ οἷων ὡς οὐδεμιᾶς σπουδῆς ἀξίων, τέφρας καὶ
- 265 ὕδατος, συνεκράθη. τοῦτο γὰρ ἐπιγνοὺς τὴν ἐπίβουλον οἴησιν εὐθύς ἀποστραφήσεται καὶ καθελὼν τὸ ὑπέραυχον εὐαρεστήσει θεῷ καὶ μεταποιήσεται τῆς ἰλεω δυνάμεως αὐτοῦ (τοῦ) μισοῦντος ἀλαζονείαν. εἴρηται γάρ που καλῶς, ὅτι ὁ ἐγχειρῶν ὑπεραύχοις ἢ λόγοις ἢ ἔργοις οὐκ ἀνθρώπους μόνον ἀλλὰ καὶ “θεὸν παροξύνει” τὸν ἰσότητος καὶ
- 266 παντὸς τοῦ ἀρίστου δημιουργόν. ἐν οὖν τῷ περιρραίνεσθαι πληττομένοις καὶ διεγειρομένοις μόνον οὐκ ἀντικρυς αὐτὰ τὰ στοιχεῖα, γῆ καὶ ὕδωρ, φωνὴν ἀφιέντα φησίν· ἡμεῖς ἔσμεν ἢ τοῦ σώματος ὑμῶν οὐσία, ἡμᾶς ἢ φύσις κερασαμένη θεία τέχνη διέπλασεν εἰς ἀνθρωπόμορφον ἰδέαν, ἐξ ἡμῶν παγέντες, ὅτε ἐγένεσθε, πάλιν εἰς ἡμᾶς ἀναλυθήσεσθε, ὅταν δέη θηήσκειν· οὐδὲν γὰρ εἰς τὸ

---

<sup>a</sup> See Num. xv. 30 καὶ ψυχὴ ἧτις ποιήση ἐν χειρὶ ὑπερηφανίας . . . τὸν θεὸν οὗτος παροξύνει (LXX).

THE SPECIAL LAWS, I. 262-266

manner which will be explained shortly. Some of these, he says, are to be taken and thrown into a vessel and afterwards have water poured upon them. Then the priests are to dip branches of hyssop in the mixture and sprinkle with it those who are being purged. The reason for this may be aptly stated as follows. Moses would have those who come to serve Him that is first know themselves and of what substance these selves are made. For how should he who has no knowledge of himself be able to apprehend the power of God which is above all and transcends all? Now the substance of which our body consists is earth and water, and of this he reminds us in the rite of purging. For he holds that the most profitable form of purification is just this, that a man should know himself and the nature of the elements of which he is composed, ashes and water, so little worthy of esteem. For if he recognizes this, he will straightway turn away from the insidious enemy, self-conceit, and abasing his pride become well-pleasing to God and claim the aid of His gracious power Who hates arrogance. For that is a good text<sup>a</sup> which tells us that he who sets his hand to words and deeds of pride "provokes" not only men, but also "God," the author of equality and all that is most excellent. So then, whilst they are being thus sprinkled, deeply moved and roused as they are, they can almost hear the voice of the elements themselves, earth and water, say plainly to them, "We are the substance of which your body consists: we it is whom nature blended and with divine craftsmanship made into the shape of human form. Out of us you were framed when you came into being and into us you will be resolved again when you have to die. For nothing is so made μη ὄν φθειρεσθαι πέφυκεν, ἀλλ' ἐξ ὧν ἡ ἀρχή, πρὸς ταῦτα καὶ τὸ τέλος.

PHILO

- 267 L. "Ἦδη δ' ἀναγκαῖον καὶ τὴν ὑπόσχεσιν ἀποδοῦναι τῆς περὶ τὴν τέφραν ταύτην ιδιότητος· ἔστι γὰρ οὐ ξύλων αὐτὸ μόνον δαπανηθέντων ὑπὸ πυρός, ἀλλὰ καὶ ζώου πρὸς τὴν τοιαύτην κάθαρσιν ἐπι-268 τηδείου. κελεύει γὰρ δάμαλιν πυρρὰν ἄζυγον ἄμωμον ἀχθεῖσαν σφαγιασθῆναι μὲν ἔξω πόλεως, τὸν δ' ἀρχιερέα λαμβάνοντα ἀπὸ τοῦ αἵματος ἐπτάκις ἐπιρραίνειν ἀντικρὺ τοῦ νεῶ πάντα, εἶθ' ὄλην κατακαίειν σὺν δορᾷ καὶ κρέασι καὶ αἵματι καὶ πλήρει τῇ κοιλίᾳ περιπτωμάτων· ἦδη δ' ὑπο-
[253] μαραινομένης τῆς φλογὸς εἰς τὸ μεσαίτατον | τρία ταῦτα ἐμβάλλειν, ξύλον κέδρινον καὶ ὕσσωπον καὶ κόκκινον, κελεύει, εἶτ' ἐὰν ἀποσβεσθῆ, τὴν τέφραν συλλέγειν καθαρὸν ἄνθρωπον καὶ ἀποτιθέναι πάλιν 269 ἔξω πόλεως ἐν χωρίῳ καθαρῷ. τίνα δὲ διὰ τούτων ὡς διὰ συμβόλων αἰνίττεται, δι' ἐτέρων ἠκριβώσαμεν ἀλληγοροῦντες. ἀναγκαῖον οὖν τοὺς μέλλοντας φοιτᾶν εἰς τὸ ἱερὸν ἐπὶ μετουσίᾳ θυσίας τό τε σῶμα φαιδρύνεσθαι καὶ τὴν ψυχὴν πρὸ τοῦ σώματος· δεσπότις γὰρ καὶ βασιλὶς καὶ ἐν ἅπασιν κρείττων ἅτε θειοτέρας φύσεως μεταλαχοῦσα. τὰ δὲ φαιδρύνοντα διάνοιάν ἐστι σοφία καὶ τὰ σοφίας δόγματα πρὸς τὴν θεωρίαν τοῦ κόσμου καὶ τῶν ἐν αὐτῷ ποδηγετοῦντα καὶ ὁ τῶν ἄλλων ἀρετῶν ἱερός χορὸς καὶ αἱ κατ' ἀρετὰς καλαὶ καὶ σφόδρα ἐπαινε-

<sup>a</sup> See Num. xix. 2-9.

<sup>b</sup> Here the juxtaposition of the clean man shews that Philo must have taken καθαρῷ χωρίῳ as "clean," and not as "open," though it does not follow that he did so in the passages cited in the note on Mos. ii. 72, or even in § 232 above.

<sup>c</sup> No such account survives. Heinemann suggests that it as to disappear into non-existence. Whence it came in the beginning, thither will it return in the end.”

THE SPECIAL LAWS, I. 266-269

L. I must now also fulfil my promise to describe 267 the special qualities of these ashes. They are not merely the ashes of wood consumed by fire but also of a living creature well-suited to a rite of purification such as this. <sup>a</sup> He orders a red heifer which has never 268 been yoked and without blemish to be taken outside the city and there slaughtered. Then the high priest is to take of the blood and sprinkle it seven times over everything in front of the sanctuary, then burn it wholly to ashes with the skin and flesh and blood and the belly filled with its ordure. When the flame is dying down, he is to cast right into the middle these three things, cedar wood and hyssop and scarlet wool. Then if it is quite extinguished, a clean man is to collect the ashes and deposit them outside the city in a clean place.<sup>b</sup> What these things sym- 269 bolically indicate has been described in full elsewhere where we have expounded the allegory.<sup>c</sup> So we see that they who mean to resort to the temple to take part in sacrifice must needs have their bodies made clean and bright,<sup>d</sup> and before their bodies their souls.
For the soul is queen and mistress, superior to the body in every way because a diviner nature has been allotted to it. The mind is cleansed by wisdom and the truths of wisdom's teaching which guide its steps to the contemplation of the universe and all that is therein, and by the sacred company of the other virtues and by the practice of them shewn in noble belongs to the Quaestiones of which we have nothing beyond Exodus.

<sup>a</sup> φαιδρύνω is more than simply “clean,” in colloquial English to make “smart” or “spick and span,” = διακεκοσμημένος in § 270.

PHILO

- 270 ταὶ πράξεις. ὁ μὲν οὖν τούτοις διακεκοσμημένος ἴτω θαρρῶν εἰς οἰκειότατον αὐτῷ τὸν νεῶν, ἐνδιαίτημα πάντων ἄριστον, ἱερεῖον ἐπιδειξόμενος αὐτόν· ὅτω δ' ἐγκάθηνται καὶ ἔλλοχῶσιν αἱ πλεονεξίαὶ καὶ ἐπιθυμῖαι τῶν ἀδικιῶν, ἐγκαλυψάμενος ἡρεμείτω τὴν ἀναίσχυντον ἀπόνοιαν καὶ τὸ λίαν θράσος ἐν οἷς εὐλάβεια λυσιτελὲς ἐπισχών· τὸ γὰρ τοῦ ὄντως 271 ὄντος ἱερὸν ἀνιέροις ἄβατον.<sup>1</sup> θυσίαις, εἶπομ' ἄν, ὦ γενναῖε, ὁ θεὸς οὐ χαίρει, κἂν ἑκατόμβας ἀνάγη τις· κτήματα γὰρ αὐτοῦ τὰ πάντα, κεκτημένος ὁμῶς<sup>2</sup> οὐδενὸς δεῖται· χαίρει δὲ φιλοθέοις γνώμαις καὶ ἀνδράσιμ ἀσκηταῖς ὁσιότητος, παρ' ὧν ψαιστὰ καὶ κριθὰς καὶ τὰ εὐτελέστατα ὡς τιμιώτατα πρὸ 272 τῶν πολυτελεστάτων ἄσμενος δέχεται· κἂν μέντοι μηδὲν ἕτερον κομίζωσιν, αὐτοὺς φέροντες πλήρωμα καλοκαγαθίας τελειότατον τὴν ἀρίστην ἀνάγουσι θυσίαν, ὕμνοις καὶ εὐχαριστίαις τὸν εὐεργέτην καὶ σωτῆρα θεὸν γεραίροντες, τῇ μὲν διὰ τῶν φωνητη-ρίων ὀργάνων, τῇ δὲ ἄνευ γλώττης καὶ στόματος, μόνη ψυχῇ τὰς νοητὰς ποιούμενοι διεξόδους καὶ ἐκβοήσεις, ὧν ἐν μόνον οὐδ' ἀντιλαμβάνεται τὸ θεῖον· αἱ γὰρ τῶν ἀνθρώπων οὐ φθάνουσιν ἀκοαὶ συναισθῆσθαι.
- 273 LI. Ὡς δ' ἀψευδῆς ἐστὶν οὗτος ὁ λόγος καὶ οὐκ ἐμὸς ἀλλὰ τῆς φύσεως, μαρτυρεῖ μὲν πως καὶ ἡ

<sup>1</sup> Cohn punctuates with full stop after θυσίαις. I follow Heinemann's punctuation. εἶπομ' ἄν in cases like this generally, if not always, is inserted parenthetically, e.g. ii. 96.

<sup>2</sup> Cohn (Hermes, 1908, p. 190) thinks that ὁμῶς makes no sense and suggests κεκτημένος δ' οὐδ' ὄλως; but see note a.

<sup>a</sup> I understand the connexion of thought to be "though He possesses all, He needs it not, and therefore how much more are the gifts of men unneeded."

THE SPECIAL LAWS, I. 270-273

and highly praiseworthy actions. He, then, who is adorned with these may come with boldness to the sanctuary as his true home, the best of all mansions, there to present himself as victim. But anyone whose heart is the seat of lurking covetousness and wrongful cravings should remain still and hide his face in confusion and curb the shameless madness which would rashly venture where caution is profitable. For the holy place of the truly Existent is closed ground to the unholy. To such a one I would say, "Good sir, God does not rejoice in sacrifices even if one offer hecatombs, for all things are His possessions, yet though He possesses <sup>a</sup> He needs none of them, but He rejoices in the will to love Him and in men that practise holiness, and from these He accepts plain meal or barley,<sup>b</sup> and things of least price, holding them most precious rather than those of highest cost." And indeed though the worshippers bring nothing else, in bringing themselves they offer the best of sacrifices, the full and truly perfect oblation of noble living,<sup>c</sup> as they honour with hymns and thanksgivings their Benefactor and Saviour, God, sometimes with the organs of speech, sometimes without tongue or lips, when within the soul alone their minds recite the tale or utter the cry of praise. These one ear only can apprehend, the ear of God, for human hearing cannot reach to the perception of such.

LI. That what I have said above is true and is the word not of myself but of nature is attested not only

<sup>b</sup> Or "barley ground or unground."

<sup>c</sup> Or, taking πλήρωμα in apposition with αυτούς, "when bringing themselves, that is, the full oblation," etc. In either case "bringing themselves" is explained in the next few words as the heartfelt thanksgiving of the lips and soul.

PHILO

ἐνάργεια τρανήν παρέχουσα πίστιν τοῖς μὴ διὰ τὸ φιλόνεικον ἐπιτηδεύουσιν ἀπιστίαν, μαρτυρεῖ δὲ καὶ ὁ νόμος προστάξας δύο κατασκευασθῆναι βωμοὺς καὶ ταῖς ὕλαις καὶ τοῖς τόποις καὶ ταῖς χρεῖαις 274 διαφέροντας· ὁ μὲν γὰρ ἐκ λίθων λογάδων ἀτμήτων συνωκοδόμηται καὶ ἐν ὑπαίθρῳ παρὰ ταῖς τοῦ νεῶ προσβάσεσιν ἰδρυται καὶ γέγονε πρὸς χρεῖαν τὴν τῶν ἐναίμων· ὁ δὲ χρυσοῦ μὲν τοῦ καθαρωτάτου κατεσκευάσται, ἰδρυται δ' ἐν ἀδύτοις εἴσω τοῦ προτέρου καταπετάσματος, ὃς οὐδενὶ τῶν ἄλλων [245] ἐστὶν | ὁρατὸς ὅτι μὴ τοῖς ἀγνεύουσι τῶν ἱερέων καὶ 275 γέγονε πρὸς χρεῖαν τὴν τῶν θυμιαμάτων. ἐξ οὗ δηλόν ἐστιν, ὅτι καὶ βραχύτατον λιβανωτὸν παρ' ἀνδρὸς ὀσίου τιμώτερον ὁ θεὸς νομίζει μυρίων θρεμμάτων, ὅσα ἂν τις ἱερουργῇ μὴ σφόδρα ἀστείως ὦν· ὅσω γάρ, οἶμαι, λίθων μὲν εἰκαίων ἀμείνων χρυσός, τὰ δ' ἐν ἀδύτοις τῶν ἐκτὸς ἀγιώτερα, τοσοῦτῳ κρείττων ἢ διὰ τῶν ἐπιθυμιωμένων εὐ-276 χαριστία τῆς διὰ τῶν ἐναίμων. ὅθεν οὐ μόνον ὕλης πολυτελεία καὶ κατασκευῇ καὶ τόπῳ τετίμηται ὁ τῶν θυμιαμάτων βωμός, ἀλλὰ καὶ τῷ πρότερον καθ' ἐκάστην ἡμέραν ὑπηρετεῖν ταῖς πρὸς θεὸν ἀνθρώπων εὐχαριστίας· οὐ γὰρ ἐφέϊται τὴν ὀλόκαυτον θυσίαν ἔξω προσαγαγεῖν, πρὶν ἔνδον περὶ βαθῶν

<sup>a</sup> The two altars are described respectively in Ex. xxvii. and xxx. There, however, they are both made of acacia wood, LXX ἄσηπτον, "incorruptible," though the second is overlaid with gold. The "unhewn stones" seems to be

THE SPECIAL LAWS, I. 273-276

by its self-evident certitude which provides clear grounds of belief to those who do not out of contentiousness cultivate disbelief, but also by the law which commanded two altars to be constructed differing in materials and situations and in the use to which they were applied.<sup>a</sup> For one of these was 274 built of stones picked up and left unhewn, and it was set in the open air beside the avenues to the sanctuary and was to be used for blood-offerings. The other was formed of the purest gold ; it was set in the inner shrine within the first veil, not to be seen by any except such priests as were in a state of purity,<sup>b</sup> and it was to be used for frankincense-offerings. This 275 clearly shews that even the least morsel of incense offered by a man of religion is more precious in the sight of God than thousands of cattle sacrificed by men of little worth. For as gold is better than casual stones and all in the inner shrine more sacred than what stands outside, so and in the same measure is the thank-offering of incense superior to that of the blood of beasts. And therefore the altar of incense 276 receives special honour, not only in the costliness of its material, its construction and its situation, but by taking every day the earlier place in subserving the thanksgiving which men render to God. For it is not permitted to bring the victim of the whole-burnt-offering outside until the incense has been offered drawn from Ex. xx. 25, " And if thou make me an altar of stone thou shalt not build it of hewn stones." Philo's description may be derived from personal observation, for Josephus, Contra Apion. i. 198 quotes a passage ascribed to Hecataeus (4th-3rd century B.C.), in which he states, when speaking of the temple at Jerusalem, that the altar is built of heaped up stones unhewn and unwrought. But see App. pp. 621-622.

<sup>b</sup> And therefore permitted to officiate.

PHILO

- 277 ὄρθρον ἐπιθυμᾶσαι. τὸ δ' ἐστὶ σύμβολον οὐχ ἑτέρου τινὸς ἢ τοῦ παρὰ θεῷ μὴ τὸ πλήθος τῶν καταθυομένων εἶναι τίμιον, ἀλλὰ τὸ καθαρώτατον τοῦ θύοντος πνεῦμα λογικόν· εἰ μὴ ἄρα δικαστῆς μὲν, ᾧ μέλει τῆς ὀσίας κρίσεως, παρά τινος τῶν κρινομένων οὐκ ἂν λάβοι δῶρα ἢ λαβῶν ἔνοχος ἔσται δωροδοκία, οὐδ' ἀνὴρ ἀστείος παρὰ μοχθηροῦ τινος, ἄνθρωπος παρ' ἀνθρώπου πλουτοῦντος αὐτὸς ἴσως δεόμενος, σὺ δ' ὠήθης τὸν θεὸν δεκάξεσθαι, τὸν αὐταρκέστατον ἑαυτῷ καὶ μηδενὸς τῶν ἐν γενέσει χρεῖον, ὅστις ὦν τὸ πρῶτον ἀγαθόν, τὸ τελειότατον, ἢ ἀένας πηγὴ φρονήσεως καὶ δικαιοσύνης καὶ πάσης ἀρετῆς, ἀποστρέφεται τὰς
- 278 παρὰ τῶν ἀδίκων δωρεάς. ὁ δὲ κομίζων οὐ πάντων ἀναισχυντότατος ἐξ ὧν ἔκλεψεν ἢ ἤρπασεν ἢ ἠρνήσατο ἢ ἀπεστέρησε μέρος ὡς κοινωνῶ τῆς ἑαυτοῦ κακίας καὶ πλεονεξίας διδούς; πάντων κακοδαιμονέστατε, εἴποισ' ἂν τῷ τοιούτῳ, δυοῖν θάτερον ἢ λήσεσθαι προσδοκᾶς ἢ καταφανήσεσθαι·
- 279 λήσεσθαι μὲν οὖν ὑπολαμβάνων ἀνεπιστήμων εἰ θεοῦ δυνάμεως, καθ' ἣν ἅμα πάντα ὄρα καὶ πάντων ἀκούει· νομίζων δ' ἐμφανήσεσθαι θρασύτατος εἰδέον ἐφ' οἷς ἡμαρτες ἐγκαλύπτεσθαι, προφέρεις εἰς μέσον τὰ δείγματα ὧν ἠδίκησας καὶ ἐπισεμννόμενος διανέμη πρὸς θεόν, ἀπαρχὰς αὐτῷ κομίζων

---

<sup>a</sup> The same statement has been made in § 171. See Ex. xxx. 7, where the LXX says that the incense-offering is to be made πρωτὶ πρωτῷ, which Philo presumably takes as = βαθὺς ὄρθρος, and earlier than the πρωτῷ of Ex. xxix. 39 and Num. xxviii. 4 (which he renders here and in § 169 by ἅμα τῇ ἔω). The statement in § 171 that the evening incense-offering was inside at the first glimpse of day.<sup>a</sup> The 277 symbolical meaning is just this and nothing else : that what is precious in the sight of God is not the number of victims immolated but the true purity of a rational spirit in him who makes the sacrifice. Can you think that if the judge whose heart is set on giving righteous judgement will not take gifts from any of the litigants, or if he does take them will be open to the charge of bribery ; if again the good man will not receive them from the bad, though both are men, and the one perhaps in need and the other rich—can you think, I say, that God can be corrupted, God Who is absolutely sufficient to Himself and needs nothing of anything created, and being as He is the primal good, the consummation of perfection, the perennial fountain of wisdom and justice and every virtue, turns His face from the gifts of the unjust ?

THE SPECIAL LAWS, I. 277-279

And is not he who proffers them the most shameless 278 of men when he gives to God a share of the profits of his thefts or robbery or denial of a just debt or refusal to pay it, and treats Him as a partner in his wickedness and greed ? To such a one I would say “ Most miserable of wretches, there are only two alternatives : You expect that your conduct will either be unobserved by God or patent to Him. If 279 the former, you little know the power by which He sees all and hears all : if the latter, your audacity is beyond measure. When you should hide your face in shame for the sins you have committed, you make an open show of the outward signs of your iniquity and, priding yourself on them, assign a share to God.
You bring Him the first-fruits of unholiness and have

after the evening sacrifice would seem to be opposed to the argument in this passage.

PHILO

ἀνοσίους, καὶ οὐκ ἐλογίσω τοῦθ' ὅτι οὔτε νόμος ἀνομίαν παραδέχεται οὔτε φῶς ἡλιακὸν σκότος. ὁ δὲ θεὸς καὶ νόμων ἐστὶ παράδειγμα ἀρχέτυπον καὶ ἡλίου ἥλιος, νοητὸς αἰσθητοῦ, παρέχων ἐκ τῶν ἀοράτων πηγῶν ὄρατὰ φέγγη τῷ βλεπομένῳ.

- [264] 1 Πάνυ καλῶς ἐν ταῖς ἱεραῖς τοῦ νόμου στήλαις 280 κακὲῖνο ἀναγράφεται, μίσθωμα πόρνης εἰς τὸ ἱερὸν μὴ κομίζειν πεπρακυίας τὴν ἰδίαν ὥραν, ἐλομένης 281 ἔνεκα λημμάτων αἰσχροῦν ἐπονείδιστον βίον. εἰ δὲ τὰ παρὰ γυναικὸς ἡταιρηκυίας δῶρα ἀνίερα, πῶς οὐχὶ μᾶλλον τὰ παρὰ ψυχῆς πεπορνευμένης, ἣτις
[265] παρέρριψεν | ἑαυτὴν ἐπ' αἰσχύνῃ καὶ ὕβρεσι ταῖς ἐσχάταις, οἰνοφλυγίαις, ὀψοφαγίαις, φιλαργυρίαις, φιλοδοξίαις, φιληδονίαις, ἄλλαις μυρίαις παθῶν τε αὐτῶν καὶ νοσημάτων καὶ κακιῶν ιδέαις; ὧν τὰ μιάσματα ἐκεῖνα τίς ἂν ἐκνίψαι χρόνος; ἔγωγε οὐκ 282 οἶδα. τῶν μὲν γὰρ ἑταιρῶν τὴν ἐργασίαν κατέλυσε πολλάκις γῆρας, ἐπειδὴπερ ἐξώροις γενομέναις οὐδεὶς ἔτι πρόσεισιν, ἀπομαρανθείσης ὥσπερ τινῶν ἀνθῶν τῆς ἀκμῆς· ψυχῆς δὲ πορνείαν ἀκολασία συντρόφῳ καὶ συνήθει πεπαιδοτριβημένης τίς ἂν αἰὼν μεταβάλῃ πρὸς εὐκοσμίαν; αἰὼν μὲν οὐ, θεὸς δὲ μόνος, ᾧ δυνατὰ τὰ παρ' ἡμῶν ἀδύνατα.
283 δεῖ δὴ τὸν μέλλοντα θύειν σκέπτεσθαι, μὴ εἰ τὸ

<sup>1</sup> At this R has the heading Περὶ τοῦ μίσθωμα πόρνης εἰς τὸ ἱερὸν μὴ κομίζειν, though A and H transfer it with the five sections that follow to the end of this treatise, and make them the introduction to a separate treatise, composed of the material already printed in Vol. II. pp. 106-119, De Sac. 20-33. See Introduction to that treatise, p. 93.

<sup>a</sup> The heading here introduced in mss., "Of bringing the hire of a harlot into the temple," is of course in copies which do not transfer these sections as described in note 1; quite not reflected that the law does not admit of lawlessness nor sunlight of darkness. But God is the archetype on which laws are modelled : He is the sun of the sun, in the realm of mind what that is in the realm of sense, and from invisible fountains He supplies the visible beams to the sun which our eyes behold."

THE SPECIAL LAWS, I. 279-283

<sup>a</sup> There is a very excellent ordinance inscribed in 280 the sacred tables of the law, that the hire of a harlot should not be brought into the temple ; <sup>b</sup> the hire, that is, of one who has sold her personal charms and chosen a scandalous life for the sake of the wages of shame. But if the gifts of one who has played the 281 harlot are unholy, surely more unholy still are the gifts of the soul which has committed whoredom, which has thrown itself away into ignominy and the lowest depths of outrageous conduct, into wine-bibbing and gluttony, into the love of money, of reputation, of pleasure, and numberless other forms of passion and soul-sickness and vice. What length of time can purge away the stains of these ? None, to my knowledge. The harlots' traffic indeed is 282 often brought to a close by old age, since when the freshness of their charm is passed, all cease to seek them now that their bloom is faded like the bloom of flowers. But as for the soul, when by constant familiarity with incontinence it has been schooled into harlotry, what age-long stretch of years can convert it to decent living ? Not even the longest, but only God, with Whom that is possible which is impossible with us. So he who intends to sacrifice 283 must consider not whether the victim is unblemished absurd. The point of the harlot's hire is merely introduced as an illustration of the moral enforced.

<sup>b</sup> See Deut. xxiii. 18.

PHILO

ιερείον ἄμμων, ἀλλ' εἰ ἡ διάνοια ὀλόκληρος αὐτῶ καὶ παντελῆς καθέστηκε. διερευνάτω μέντοι καὶ τὰς αἰτίας, ὧν ἔνεκα ἀνάγειν ἀξιοῖ θυσίας· ἦτοι γὰρ εὐχαριστῶν ἐπὶ προϋπηργμέναις εὐεργεσίαις ἢ βεβαιότητα παρόντων ἢ μελλόντων κτήσιν ἀγαθῶν αἰτούμενος ἢ κακῶν παρόντων ἢ προσδοκωμένων ἀποτροπήν, ἐφ' οἷς ἅπασιν ὑγείαν καὶ σωτηρίαν 284 ἐκπορίζειν ὀφείλει τῷ λογισμῷ. εἴτε γὰρ ἐπὶ προϋπηργμένοις εὐχαριστεῖ, μὴ ἀχαριστησάτω φαῦλος γενόμενος—σπουδαίω γὰρ ἐδόθησαν αἱ χάριτες—, εἴτε βεβαιούμενος τὰ παρόντα ἀγαθὰ καὶ χρηστὰ περὶ τῶν μελλόντων προσδοκῶν, ἄξιον αὐτὸν παρεχέτω τῶν εὐπραγιῶν ἀστείως ὧν, εἴτε κακῶν τινων φυγὴν αἰτούμενος, μὴ δράτω κολάσεων ἐπάξια καὶ τιμωριῶν.

[254] LII. <sup>1</sup> Πῦρ, φησὶν, ἐπὶ τοῦ θυσιαστηρίου καυθή-285 σεται διὰ παντὸς ἄσβεστον· εἰκότως, οἶμαι, καὶ προσηκόντως· ἐπειδὴ γὰρ αἱ τοῦ θεοῦ χάριτες ἀέναοι καὶ ἀνελλιπεῖς καὶ ἀδιάστατοι, ὧν μεθ' ἡμέραν καὶ νύκτωρ οἱ ἄνθρωποι τυγχάνουσιν, καὶ τὸ σύμβολον τῆς εὐχαριστίας, ἡ ἱερὰ φλόξ, ζωπυρεί-[255] σθω καὶ αἰεὶ ἄσβεστος | ἔστω. τάχα μέντοι καὶ διὰ 286 τοῦδε<sup>2</sup> βούλεται τὰς παλαιὰς ταῖς νέαις θυσίαις ἀρμόσασθαι καὶ ἐνώσαι τῇ μονῇ καὶ παρουσίᾳ τοῦ αὐτοῦ πυρός, ᾧ πᾶσαι καθιεροῦνται, πρὸς ἔνδειξιν

<sup>1</sup> Here the mss. interpolate the heading Τὰ ἄλλα περὶ τὸ θυσιαστήριον (or τὸν βωμόν).

<sup>2</sup> mss. τόδε. Perhaps καὶ διὰ τόδε βούλεται, as Heinemann suggests, citing § 309.

---

<sup>a</sup> The heading here introduced, "Of the other matters concerning the altar," which, as no later heading is given, presumably extends to the rest of the treatise, is almost as 264

THE SPECIAL LAWS, I. 283-286

but whether his own mind stands free from defect and imperfection. Further, let him examine the motives which determine him to make the offering. For either he is giving thanks for benefits already received or is asking for security in his tenure of present blessings or for acquisition of others to come, or for deliverance from evils, either present or expected, and all these demand that he should put himself into a condition of mental health and safety. For if he is offering thanks for what has already been granted, let him not shew ingratitude by falling from the state of virtue in which he received these boons. Or if he is securing present blessings or has bright expectations for the future, let him shew himself by good conduct worthy of such happy events. Or if he is seeking to escape from some ills, let none of his actions be deserving of chastisement and punishment.

LII. <sup>a</sup>The fire on the altar, he tells us, will burn continuously and not be extinguished.<sup>b</sup> That, I think, is natural and fitting, for since the gracious gifts of God granted daily and nightly to men are perennial, unailing and unceasing, the symbol of thankfulness also, the sacred flame, should be kept alight and remain unextinguished for ever. Perhaps also he wishes in this way to employ the abiding presence of the same fire by which all the sacrifices are consecrated to unite them, old and new alike,<sup>c</sup> and thus shew that they carry out perfectly the duty absurd as the last. At the best it only serves for a description of §§ 285-295. In §§ 296-298 we pass on to the lamps, and after that to general reflections on the morality enjoined in the cult. Cohn ignores both this and the preceding heading in his numeration of chapters.

<sup>b</sup> See Lev. vi. 9, 12, 13.

<sup>c</sup> i.e. those of the past, and those of the present and future.

PHILO

- τοῦ τελείας ἐν εὐχαριστίαις εἶναι, κἂν ἀπὸ μυρίων ὄσων ἀφορμῶν γίνωνται κατὰ περιουσίας ἀφθόνοους ἢ τοῦναντίον ἐνδείας τῶν προσαγομένων.<sup>1</sup>
- 287 τὰ μὲν ῥητὰ ταῦτα [σύμβολα νοητῶν], τὰ δὲ πρὸς διάνοιαν τοῖς τῆς ἀλληγορίας κανόσιν ἐπισκεπτέον· πρὸς ἀλήθειαν τοῦ θεοῦ θυσιαστήριόν ἐστιν ἢ εὐχάριστος τοῦ σοφοῦ ψυχὴ παγεῖσα ἐκ τελείων ἀρετῶν ἀτμήτων καὶ ἀδιαιρέτων· οὐδὲν γὰρ μέρος ἀρετῆς ἀχρεῖον. ἐπὶ ταύτης αἰὲ τὸ ἱερόν φῶς ἀνακαίεται φυλαττόμενον ἄσβεστον· διανοίας δὲ φῶς ἐστὶ σοφία, ἐπεὶ καὶ τοῦναντίον σκότος ψυχῆς ἀφροσύνη· ὅπερ γὰρ αἰσθητὸν φῶς ὀφθαλμοῖς<sup>2</sup> πρὸς κατάληψιν σωμάτων, τοῦτ' ἐπιστήμη λογισμῶ πρὸς θεωρίαν τῶν ἀσωμάτων καὶ νοητῶν, ἧς αἰὲ τὸ φέγγος ἐπιλάμπει μηδέποτε ἀμαυρούμενον <ἢ> σβεννύμενον.<sup>3</sup>
- 289 LIII. Μετὰ ταῦτά φησιν· “ ἐπὶ παντὸς δώρου προσοίσετε ἅλα,” δι' οὗ, καθάπερ καὶ πρότερον εἶπον, τὴν εἰς ἅπαν διαμονὴν αἰνίττεται· φυλακτήριον γὰρ οἱ ἅλες σωμάτων, τετιμημένοι ψυχῆς δευτερείοις· ὡς γὰρ αἰτία τοῦ μὴ διαφθειρεσθαι τὰ σώματα ψυχῆ, καὶ οἱ ἅλες ἐπὶ πλείστον αὐτὰ
- 290 συνέχοντες καὶ τρόπον τινὰ ἀθανατίζοντες. διὸ καὶ κέκληκε θυσιαστήριον, ἴδιον καὶ ἐξαιρετικὸν ὄνομα θέμενος αὐτῷ παρὰ τὸ διατηρεῖν, ὡς ἔοικε, τὰς θυσίας, καίτοι τῶν κρεῶν ἀναλισκομένων ὑπὸ πυρός. ὡς εἶναι σαφεστάτην πίστιν, ὅτι οὐ τὰ ἱερεῖα θυσίαν ἀλλὰ τὴν διάνοιαν καὶ προθυμίαν ὑπο-

<sup>1</sup> Cohn (Hermes, 1908, pp. 190, 191) corrects to προσαγόντων. It is certainly more natural, but does not seem to me necessary.

<sup>2</sup> mss. εἰς ὀφθαλμοὺς.

<sup>3</sup> R ἀμαυρούμενον only. The others σβεννύμενον only.

THE SPECIAL LAWS, I. 286-290

of giving thanks, however numberless are the differences in the resources on which they are based, according as the oblations are lavishly abundant or on the other hand scanty. This is the 287 literal account : the inner meaning must be observed by the laws of allegory. The true altar of God is the thankful soul of the Sage, compacted of perfect virtues unsevered<sup>a</sup> and undivided, for no part of virtue is useless. On this soul-altar the sacred light is ever 288 burning and carefully kept unextinguished, and the light of the mind is wisdom, just as the darkness of the soul is folly. For knowledge is to the reason what the light of our senses is to the eye : as that gives the apprehension of material things, so does knowledge lead to the contemplation of things immaterial and conceptual, and its beam shines for ever, never dimmed nor quenched.

LIII. After this he says, " On every gift ye shall offer salt,"<sup>b</sup> by which he signifies, as I have said before, complete permanence. Salt acts as a preservative to bodies, ranking in this as second in honour to the life-principle. For just as the life-principle causes bodies to escape corruption, so does salt, which more than anything else keeps them together and makes them in a sense immortal. From the same point of 290 view he called the altar a sacrifice-keeper,<sup>c</sup> evidently giving it that special and distinctive name from its preserving the sacrifices, though the flesh is consumed by fire. And thus we have the clearest proof that he holds the sacrifice to consist not in the victims but in the offerer's intention and his zeal which derives

<sup>a</sup> An allusion to the unhewn stones of which the altar was built; see § 274.

<sup>b</sup> See Lev. ii. 13.

<sup>c</sup> τηρεῖν = "keep," θυσίας = "sacrifices." Cf. Mos. ii. 106.

PHILO

λαμβάνει τοῦ καταθύοντος εἶναι, ἐν ἧ τὸ μόνιμον 291 καὶ βέβαιον ἐξ ἀρετῆς. προσέτι κάκεινο προσνομοθετεῖ, κελεύων πᾶσαν θυσίαν δίχα ζύμης καὶ μέλιτος προσάγεσθαι, μηδέτερον ἀξιῶν ἀναφέρειν ἐπὶ τὸ θυσιαστήριον· μέλι μὲν ἴσως, ἐπειδήπερ ἡ συναγωγὸς αὐτοῦ μέλιττα ζῶόν ἐστιν οὐ καθαρὸν, ἐκ σήψεως καὶ φθορᾶς νεκρῶν, ὡς ὁ λόγος, βοῶν γεννώμενον, καθὰ καὶ οἱ σφήκες ἐξ ἱππέων σω-292 μάτων· ἢ κατὰ σύμβολον τοῦ πᾶσαν ἀνίερρον εἶναι τὴν περιττὴν ἡδονήν, τὰ μὲν περὶ τὴν κατάποσιν γλυκαίνουσαν, πικρὰς δὲ καὶ δυσιάτους αὔθις ἐπι-φέρουσαν ἀλγηδόνας, ὑφ' ὧν ἀνάγκη τὴν ψυχὴν σείεσθαι καὶ κλονεῖσθαι παγίως ἰδρυθῆναι μὴ 293 δυναμένην· ζύμην δὲ διὰ τὴν γινομένην ἔπαρσιν ἐξ [256] αὐτῆς, πάλιν συμβολικῶς, | ἵνα μηδεὶς προσιῶν τῷ θυσιαστηρίῳ τὸ παράπαν ἐπαίρηται φυσηθεὶς ὑπ' ἀλαζονείας, ἀλλ' εἰς τὸ τοῦ θεοῦ μέγεθος ἀποβλέπων αἰσθησιν λαμβάνη τῆς περὶ τὸ γενητὸν ἀσθενείας, καὶν εὐτυχίαις ἐτέρων διαφέρη, καὶ τὸν εἰκότα ποιησάμενος λογισμὸν στέλλη τὸ τοῦ φρονήματος 294 ὑπέραυχον ὕψος, τὴν ἐπίβουλον οἴησιν καθαιρῶν. εἰ γὰρ ὁ τῶν ὄλων κτίστης καὶ ποιητῆς καὶ πάντων ἀνεπιδεῆς ὧν ἐγέννησεν, οὐ πρὸς τὰς ὑπερβολὰς τοῦ κράτους αὐτοῦ καὶ τῆς ἐξουσίας ἀπιδῶν ἀλλὰ πρὸς τὴν σὴν ἀσθένειαν, μεταδίδωσί σοι τῆς ἴλεω δυνάμεως αὐτοῦ τὰς ἐνδείας ἀναπληρῶν αἰς κέχρησαι, σὲ τί ποιεῖν ἀρμόττει πρὸς ἀνθρώπους τοὺς φύσει συγγενεῖς καὶ ἀπὸ τῶν αὐτῶν στοιχείων σπαρέντας, τὸν μηδὲν εἰς τὸν κόσμον ἀλλὰ μηδὲ σαυτὸν εἰς-295 ἐνηνοχότα; γυμνὸς μὲν γάρ, θαυμάσιε, ἦλθες,

THE SPECIAL LAWS, I. 290-295

its constancy and permanence from virtue. He adds, too, a further enactment by which he orders every sacrifice to be offered without honey or leaven.<sup>a</sup> Both these substances he considers unfit to be brought to the altar : honey perhaps because the bee which collects it is an unclean animal, bred from the putrescence and corruption of dead oxen, we are told, just as wasps are from the carcasses of horses<sup>b</sup> ; or else he forbids it as a symbol of the utter unholiness of excessive pleasure which tastes sweet as it passes through the throat but afterwards produces bitter and persistent pains which of necessity shake and agitate the soul and make it unable to stand firmly in its place. Leaven is forbidden because of the rising which it produces. Here again we have a symbol of the truth, that none as he approaches the altar should be uplifted or puffed up by arrogance ; Rather gazing on the greatness of God, let him gain a perception of the weakness which belongs to the creature, even though he may be superior to others in prosperity ; and having been thus led to the reasonable conclusion, let him reduce the overweening exaltation of his pride by laying low that pestilent enemy, conceit. For if the Creator and Maker of the universe, though needing nothing of all that He has begotten, has regard to your weakness and not to the vastness of His might and sovereignty, makes you a partaker in His gracious power and fills up the deficiencies that belong to your life, how ought you to treat other men, your natural kinsfolk, seedlings from the same elements as yourself, you who brought nothing into the world, not even yourself? For naked you came into the world, worthy sir, and naked will

<sup>a</sup> See Lev. ii. 11.

<sup>b</sup> See App. p. 622.

PHILO

γυμνὸς δὲ πάλιν ἄπεις, τὸν μεταξὺ χρόνον γενέσεως καὶ θανάτου παρὰ τοῦ θεοῦ χρήσιν λαβῶν, ἐν ᾧ τί ποιεῖν προσῆκον ἦν ἢ κοινωνίας καὶ ὁμοιοῦς ἰσότητός τε καὶ φιλανθρωπίας καὶ τῆς <ἄλλης> ἀρετῆς ἐπιμελεῖσθαι, ἀποβαλλόμενον τὴν ἄνισον καὶ ἀδικον καὶ ἀσύμβατον κακίαν, ἢ τὸ ἡμερώτατον φύσει ζῶον, ἄνθρωπον, ὠμὸν καὶ ἀτίθασον ἐργάζεται;

- 296 LIV. Πάλιν ἀφ' ἑσπέρας ἕως πρωίας προστάττει καίεσθαι λύχνους ἐπὶ τῆς ἱερᾶς λυχνίας εἴσω τοῦ καταπετάσματος, πολλῶν χάριν· ἑνὸς μὲν ἵνα ἐκ διαδοχῆς τοῦ μεθημερινοῦ φωτὸς καταλάμπηται τὰ ἅγια γινόμενα ἀεὶ σκότους ἀμέτοχα καθ' ὁμοιότητα τῶν ἀστέρων· καὶ γὰρ οὗτοι δύντος ἡλίου τὸ ἴδιον ἀναφαίνουσι φέγγος ἢ ἐτάχθησαν ἐν τῷ κόσμῳ
- 297 τάξιν οὐ λείποντες· ἐτέρου δὲ τοῦ καὶ νύκτωρ ἀδελφόν τι καὶ συγγενὲς ταῖς μεθημεριναῖς θυσίαις ἐπιτελεῖσθαι πρὸς ἀρέσκειαν θεοῦ καὶ μηδένα χρόνον ἢ καιρὸν εὐχαριστίας παραλείπειν· ἐπιτηδειοτάτη δὲ καὶ προσφυσστάτη νυκτὶ τῆς εὐχαριστίας θυσία—θυσίαν γὰρ αὐτὴν ἄξιον καλεῖν—ἢ τοῦ
- 298 ἱερωτάτου φέγγους ἐν τοῖς ἀδύτοις αὐγῇ· τρίτου δὲ καὶ σφόδρα ἀναγκαίου· ἐπειδὴ γὰρ οὐ μόνον ἐργηγορότερες εὖ πάσχομεν ἀλλὰ καὶ καθευδόντες, τοῦ φιλοδώρου θεοῦ μεγάλην ἐπικουρίαν, ὕπνον, τῷ θνητῷ γένει παρασχόντος ἐπ' ὠφελεία σώματός τε καὶ ψυχῆς, τοῦ μὲν σώματος τῶν μεθημερινῶν πόνων ἀφιεμένου, τῆς δὲ ψυχῆς ἐπικουφιζομένης τὰς φροντίδας καὶ ἀναχωρούσης εἰς ἑαυτὴν ἀπὸ τοῦ τῶν αἰσθήσεων ὄχλου καὶ θορύβου καὶ δυναμένης τότε γοῦν ἰδιάξειν καὶ ἐνομιλεῖν ἑαυτῇ, προσ-

<sup>a</sup> See Ex. xxvii. 21, Lev. xxiv. 3, 4.

THE SPECIAL LAWS, I. 295-298

you again depart, and the span of time between your birth and death is a loan to you from God. During this span what can be meet for you to do but to study fellow-feeling and goodwill and equity and humanity and what else belongs to virtue, and to cast away the inequitable, unrighteous and unforgiving viciousness which turns man, naturally the most civilized of creatures, into a wild and ferocious animal !

LIV. Again he commands that the lamps on the sacred candlestick within the veil should be kept burning from evening till early morning.<sup>a</sup> He has several objects in this. One is, that the holy places should be illuminated when the daylight leaves them and thus remain ever exempt from darkness, in this resembling the stars. For they when the sun has set display their own light instead and do not forsake their place in the cosmic order. A second object was, that at night-time also some rites of the same kith and kin as those of the day-time should be performed for the service of God, and that no time or season should omit its thanksgiving. And to shew our thankfulness the sacrificial offering, for sacrificial it may quite properly be called, most suitable and appropriate to the night is the radiance of that most sacred light in the inner shrine. There is a third reason, a very cogent one : Not only in our waking hours do we experience blessings, but also in our slumbers. For God the bountiful has provided our mortal race with a great support in the form of sleep, whereby both body and soul are benefited. The body is released from the labours of the day, the soul relaxes its anxious cares and retreats into itself, away from the press and clamour of the senses, and can then, if at no other time, enjoy privacy and commune ηκόντως ἐδικαίωσεν ὁ νόμος τὰς εὐχαριστίας διακληρώσαι, ὑπὲρ μὲν ἐγγρηγόρσεως διὰ τῶν προσαγομένων ἱερείων, ὑπὲρ δὲ ὕπνου καὶ τῶν ἀπὸ τοῦδε ὠφελειῶν διὰ τῆς τῶν ἱερῶν λύχνων ἐξάψεως.

PHILO

299 LV. | “Α μὲν οὖν πρὸς εὐσέβειαν νομοθετεῖται [257] κατὰ προστάξεις καὶ ἀπαγορεύσεις, ταῦτα καὶ τὰ τούτοις παραπλήσιά ἐστιν· ἃ δὲ κατὰ τὰς φιλο-σόφους ὑποθήκας καὶ παραινέσεις, ὧδε λεκτέον. αἰτεῖται γάρ, φησίν, ὧ διάνοια, παρὰ σοῦ ὁ θεὸς οὐδὲν βαρὺ καὶ ποικίλον ἢ δύσεργον ἀλλὰ ἀπλοῦν 300 πάνυ καὶ ῥάδιον. ταῦτα δ’ ἐστὶν ἀγαπᾶν αὐτὸν ὡς εὐεργέτην, εἰ δὲ μή, φοβεῖσθαι γοῦν ὡς ἄρχοντα καὶ κύριον, καὶ διὰ πασῶν ἰέναι τῶν εἰς ἀρέσκειαν ὁδῶν καὶ λατρεῦειν αὐτῷ μὴ παρέργως ἀλλὰ ὅλη τῇ ψυχῇ πεπληρωμένη γνώμης φιλοθέου καὶ τῶν ἐντολῶν αὐτοῦ περιέχεσθαι καὶ τὰ δίκαια τιμᾶν.

[ἐξ ὧν ἀπάντων αὐτὸς μὲν ἐν ὁμοίᾳ μένει φύσει μὴ τρεπόμενος. τί δὲ<sup>1</sup> τῶν ἄλλων ὅσα κατὰ τὸν κόσμον ἐστί βελτίωσιν ἰσχει, ἥλιος ἢ σελήνη ἢ τὸ πλῆθος τῶν ἄλλων ἀστέρων ἢ ὁ σύμπας οὐρανός ;

<sup>1</sup> Cohn ἔτι δὲ with R (ut videtur), AH εἶ τι δὲ. The Armenian is not stated.

---

<sup>a</sup> Here Philo begins his homily on the moral and religious lessons in Deuteronomy. See Deut. x. 12 f.

<sup>b</sup> That the rest of this section from “Among all these” cannot possibly be in its right place, as it is quite irrelevant to the context, is, as Cohn and Heinemann agree, quite indisputable. But it seems to me that it does not make sense in itself, and that Heinemann’s admission that it is not “ganz klar” understates the facts. As Cohn prints it, as indicated in the textual notes, it appears to state that all the other parts of the universe (except God?) “have betterment,” and to illustrate this we are told that the mountains rise to a very great height, the plains get wider, etc. (In this part it is hard to see why ἢ is used instead of καί.) At the end it appears that with itself. Rightly therefore did the law determine so to apportion the thank-offerings that thankfulness is expressed for our waking time by the victims brought to the altar, for sleep and the benefits which it gives by the lighting of the sacred lamps.

THE SPECIAL LAWS, I. 298-300

LV. These and similar injunctions to piety are 299 given in the law in the form of direct commands and prohibitions. Others which have now to be described are of the nature of homilies giving admonitions and exhortations. Addressing himself to the mind of man he says,<sup>a</sup> "God asks nothing from thee that is heavy or complicated or difficult, but only something quite simple and easy. And this is just to love Him 300 as a benefactor, or failing this to fear Him at least as a ruler and lord, and to tread in every way that will lead thee to please Him, to serve Him not half-heartedly but with thy whole soul filled with the determination to love Him and to cling to His commandments and to honour justice."

<sup>b</sup>[Among all these things God Himself remains with a nature which changes not. But of all else that is in the universe, what is there that changes for the better? Sun or moon or the multitude of the other stars or the whole heaven?

contrary to what has been said (μὲν οὖν) they remain exactly as they were from the first.

The corrections I have made are, apart from the punctuation, very slight, τί δὲ for ἔτι δὲ and πλείον for πλείστον. For R's περιμηκέστερον is, in Cohn's view, as well as, if not better supported, than -τατον. But they seem to me to convey a thought which, however irrelevant to the context, is well worthy of Philo. The preceding words have probably spoken of the perpetual movement and change in the universe, from which God alone is exempt, But does this flux imply βελτίωσις? The ἀρετή of mountains is their height, of the plains their width. Do they grow higher or wider? And so with everything else. The one thing in the universe which is capable of betterment is the soul of man.

PHILO

ἀλλὰ καὶ τῆς γῆς τὰ μὲν ὄρη πρὸς ὕψος αἵρεται περιμηκέστερον,<sup>1</sup> ἢ δὲ πεδιάς ὡσπερ αἱ χυταὶ οὐσίαι ἐπὶ πλείον<sup>2</sup> εὐρύνεται, καὶ ἡ θάλαττα μεταβάλλει πρὸς πότιμον ἢ οἱ ποταμοὶ πελαγῶν ἐξισοῦνται μεγέθεσιν; ἐπὶ μὲν οὖν τῶν αὐτῶν ὄρων ἕκαστον ἰδρυται ἐφ' οἷς εὐθὺς ἐξ ἀρχῆς ὅτε ἐποίησεν ἐτάχθη· σὺ δὲ βελτίων ἔση ζῶν ἀνυπαίτιως.]

- 301 τί δὴ τούτων ἀργαλέον ἐστὶν ἢ ἐπίπονον; οὐκ ἄπλωτα πελάγη δεῖ περαιοῦσθαι καὶ μέσου χειμῶνος κλύδωνι καὶ βίαις ἐναντίων πνευμάτων κλονουμένους<sup>3</sup> ἄνω καὶ κάτω θαλαττεύειν ἢ τραχείας καὶ ἀτριβεῖς πεζεύειν ἀνοδίας, οὐχ ὁδοῦς, ληστῶν ἢ θηρίων ἐφόδους ἀεὶ κατεπτηχότας ἢ τειχοφυλακεῖν ἐν ὑπαίθρῳ νυκτερεύοντας, ἐφεδρευόντων πολεμίων καὶ τοὺς ἀνωτάτω κινδύνους ἀπειλούντων—ἄπαγε, μηδὲν ἐπὶ καλοῖς λεγέσθω τῶν ἀηδῶν· εὐφημητέον
- 302 ἐπὶ τοῖς οὕτω συμφέρουσιν. ἐπινεύσαι μόνον δεῖ τὴν ψυχὴν, καὶ πάρεστιν ἐν ἐτοιμῳ τὰ πάντα. ἢ τοῦτο ἀγνοεῖς, ὅτι τοῦ θεοῦ καὶ ὁ αἰσθητός ἐστιν οὐρανός καὶ ὁ νοητός, ὁ κυρίως, εἶποι τις ἄν, “οὐρανὸς οὐρανοῦ,” καὶ πάλιν ἡ γῆ καὶ τὰ ἐν αὐτῇ καὶ σύμπας ὁ κόσμος, ὃ τε ὄρατός καὶ ὁ ἀόρατος καὶ ἀσώματος, τὸ παράδειγμα τοῦ ὄρατοῦ οὐρανοῦ;
- 303 LVI. ἀλλ' ὁμῶς καὶ ἐξ ἅπαντος ἀνθρώπων γένους τοὺς πρὸς ἀλήθειαν ἀνθρώπους ἀριστίνδην ἐπιλέξας εἴλετο καὶ προνομίας<sup>4</sup> ἠξίωσε τῆς πάσης, ἐπὶ τὴν θεραπείαν καλέσας ἑαυτοῦ, τὴν ἀέναον τῶν καλῶν

<sup>1</sup> So R: Cohn περιμηκέστατον with AH.

<sup>2</sup> MSS. πλείστον. (Cohn places full stops after οὐρανός and μεγέθεσιν instead of the marks of interrogation printed above.)

<sup>3</sup> MSS. κυκλουμένους.

<sup>4</sup> MSS. προνοίας.

<sup>a</sup> Here the homily brings in Deut. xxx. 11-14, but returns in § 302 to Deut. x. 14 f.

THE SPECIAL LAWS, I. 300-303

And on earth do the mountains grow to a loftier height or the lowlands widen forth as liquids spread when poured out? Is the sea converted into fresh water or do the rivers become equal in magnitude to the seas? No, each remains firmly stayed in the same limits in which they were set at the very first when He made them. But thou, by living a blameless life, wilt change for the better.]

<sup>a</sup> Which of these is painful or laborious? You have 301 not to cross great waters where no ship has sailed and in the heart of winter to brave the deep, tossed up and down by the surging of the waves and the violence of opposing winds, or to foot it over rough and untrodden wilds where no road is, in perpetual dread of assault from robbers or wild beasts, or to pass the night unsheltered as a sentry on the walls, threatened with the gravest perils from the enemy ever watchful for their chance. No, away with such thoughts. In good matters let there be no talk of discomfort, nothing but happy words to describe things so profitable. Only must the soul give its assent and every- 302 thing is there ready to your hand. Do you not know that to God belongs both the heaven perceived by sense and that known to thought alone, which may quite properly be called the "heaven of heaven,"<sup>b</sup> again the earth and its contents and all the universe, both the visible and the invisible and immaterial, the pattern of the visible? LVI. Yet out of the whole 303 human race He chose as of special merit and judged worthy of pre-eminence over all, those who are in a true sense men,<sup>c</sup> and called them to the service of Himself, the perennial fountain of things excellent,

<sup>b</sup> So Deut. x. 14, "the heaven and the heaven of heavens."

<sup>c</sup> The selection of Israel in v. 15 is here interpreted as the selection of the worthiest. The meaning thus given to οἱ πρὸς ἀλήθειαν ἄνθρωποι is unusual. Generally "the true man" is the reasonable mind or conscience in the individual man.

PHILO

πηγήν, ἀφ' ἧς καὶ τὰς ἄλλας ὤμβρησεν ἀρετὰς καὶ ἀνέχεεν<sup>1</sup> εἰς ἀπόλαυσιν ὠφελιμωτάτην, νέκταρος 304 μᾶλλον ἢ οὐχ ἦττον ἀθανατίζον ποτόν. οἰκτροὶ δὲ καὶ κακοδαίμονες ὅσοι μὴ τὸν ἀρετῆς πότον εὐωχήθησαν καὶ κακοδαιμονέστατοι διετέλεσαν οἱ εἰς ἅπαν ἄγευστοι καλοκάγαθίας, παρὸν καὶ ἐν-[258] ευφρανθῆναι καὶ | ἐντρυφήσαι δικαιοσύνη καὶ ὁσιότητι· ἄλλ' εἰσὶν ἀπερίτμητοι τὴν καρδίαν, ἣ φησιν ὁ νόμος, καὶ διὰ σκληρότητα τρόπων ἀφ-ηνιασταί, σκιρτῶντες αὐθαδῶς καὶ ἀπαυχενίζοντες· 305 οὐς νουθετεῖ φάσκων· “περιτέμνεσθε τὴν σκληροκαρδίαν,” τὸ δέ ἐστι, τὰς περιττεουσάσας φύσεις τοῦ ἡγεμονικοῦ, ἃς αἱ ἄμετροι τῶν παθῶν ἔσπειράν τε καὶ συνηύξησαν ὄρμαὶ καὶ ὁ κακὸς ψυχῆς γεωργὸς ἐφύτευσεν, ἀφροσύνη, μετὰ σπουδῆς ἀποκείρασθε.
 306 καὶ ὁ τράχηλος, φησὶν, ὑμῶν μὴ σκληρὸς ἔστω, τουτέστι, μὴ ἀκαμπῆς ὁ νοῦς καὶ αὐθαδέστατος, μηδ' ὑπὸ τῆς ἄγαν σκαιότητος ἐπιτηδευέτω τὴν βλαβερωτάτην ἀμαθίαν, ἀλλὰ τὸ φύσει δύσκολον καὶ δύστροπον ἀποθέμενος ὡς ἐχθρὸν μεταβαλλέτω 307 πρὸς τὸ εὐκόλον,<sup>2</sup> πειθαρχήσων νόμοις φύσεως. ἢ οὐχ ὀρᾶς, ὅτι περὶ τὸ ὄν αἱ πρῶται καὶ μέγισται τῶν δυνάμεων εἰσιν, ἣ τε εὐεργέτις καὶ κολαστή-ριος; καὶ προσηγόρευται ἢ μὲν εὐεργέτις θεός, ἐπειδὴ κατὰ ταύτην ἔθηκε καὶ διεκόσμησε τὸ πᾶν, ἣ δὲ ἑτέρα κύριος, καθ' ἣν ἀνήπται τῶν ὄλων τὸ

<sup>1</sup> MSS. ἀνενεχθεῖς.

<sup>2</sup> MSS. εἰκός.

<sup>a</sup> The figure of the divine watering of the soul is perhaps suggested by the promise of the water from heaven to irrigate the land in Deut. viii. 7 and xi. 11.

<sup>b</sup> Or “they,” i.e. those just mentioned.

<sup>c</sup> The phrase comes from Lev. xxvi. 41, though of course

THE SPECIAL LAWS, I. 303-307

from which He sends the shower of the other virtues gushing forth to give drink, delicious and most beneficial, and conferring immortality as much as or more than nectar.<sup>a</sup> Pitiable and miserable are all those 304 who have not feasted to the full on virtue's draught, and greatest is the lasting misery of those who have never tasted the cup of noble living when they might revel in the delights of righteousness and holiness.

But some <sup>b</sup> are uncircumcised in heart, says the law,<sup>c</sup> and through their hardness of temper disobedient to the rein, plunging in unruly fashion and fighting against the yoke. These he admonishes 305 with the words, "Circumcise the hardness of your hearts!" make speed, that is, to prune away from the ruling mind the superfluous overgrowths <sup>d</sup> sown and raised by the immoderate appetites of the passions and planted by folly, the evil husbandman of the soul. And let not your neck be hard, he continues : that is, 306 let not your mind be unbending and exceedingly unruly, nor in its much frowardness pursue that wilful ignorance which is so fraught with mischief, but casting aside as an enemy all that is naturally indocile and intractable, change over to docility, ready to obey the laws of nature. <sup>e</sup> Cannot you see that the primal 307 and chief powers belonging to the Existent are the beneficent and the punitive? And the beneficent is called God because by this He set out <sup>f</sup> and ordered the world ; the other is called Lord, being that by which He is invested with the sovereignty of all that implied in Deut. x. 16, which is the text for the next two sections.

<sup>a</sup> περιτέμνεσθε . . . περιττεουσας. The same play as in § 9.

<sup>e</sup> See Deut. x. 17.

<sup>f</sup> Another allusion to the accepted derivation of θεός from τίθημι. See notes on De Abr. 121 and De Conf. 137 (App.).

PHILO

κράτος. θεὸς δὲ οὐκ ἀνθρώπων μόνον ἀλλὰ καὶ θεῶν ἔστι θεός, καὶ ἄρχων οὐκ ἰδιωτῶν μόνον ἀλλὰ καὶ ἀρχόντων, μέγας τέ ἐστιν ὢν ὄντως καὶ 308 ἰσχυρὸς καὶ κραταῖός. LVII. ἀλλ' ὅμως ὁ τοσοῦτος ἐν ἀρεταῖς καὶ δυνάμεσιν ἔλεον καὶ οἰκτον λαμβάνει τῶν ἐν ἐνδείαις ἀπορωτάτων, οὐκ ἀπαξιῶν γενέσθαι κριτῆς προσηλύτοις ἢ ὄρφανοῖς ἢ χήραις, ἀλλὰ βασιλέων καὶ τυράννων καὶ τῶν ἐν μεγάλας δυναστείαις ὑπεριδῶν τὸ ταπεινὸν τῶν 309 λεχθέντων ἀξιοὶ προνοίας.<sup>1</sup> τῶν μὲν ἐπηλύτων διὰ τόδε· καταλιπόντες οὗτοι τὰ πάτρια οἷς ἐνετράφησαν ψευδῶν πλασμάτων γέμοντα καὶ τύφου, γενόμενοι ἀτυφίας καὶ ἀληθείας ἔρασταὶ γνήσιοι, μετεχώρησαν πρὸς εὐσέβειαν, ἰκέται τε καὶ θεραπευταὶ τοῦ ὄντως ὄντος ἀξίως ὄντες τῆς προνοίας τῆς ἀρμοττοῦσης εἰκότως μεταλαγχά-νουσι, καρπὸν εὐράμενοι τῆς ἐπὶ τὸν θεὸν καταφυγῆς 310 τὴν ἀπ' αὐτοῦ βοήθειαν. ὄρφανῶν δὲ καὶ χηρῶν, ἐπειδὴ κηδεμόνας ἀφήρηνται, οἱ μὲν γονεῖς, αἱ δὲ ἄνδρας, καταφυγὴ δ' οὐδεμία τοῖς οὕτως ἐρήμοις ἐξ ἀνθρώπων ἀπολείπεται· διὸ τῆς μεγίστης ἐλπίδος οὐκ ἀμοιροῦσι, τοῦ θεοῦ, διὰ τὴν ἴλεω φύσιν αὐτοῦ τὴν πρόνοιαν καὶ ἐπιμέλειαν μὴ ἀπο-311 στραφέντος τῶν οὕτως ἐρήμων. ἔστω δὴ, φησί, μόνος θεὸς αὐχημά σου καὶ μέγιστον κλέος, καὶ μήτ' ἐπὶ πλοῦτῳ μήτε δόξῃ μήτε ἡγεμονίᾳ μήτε σώματος εὐμορφίᾳ μήτε ῥώμῃ μήτε τοῖς παραπλη-σίοις, ἐφ' οἷς εἰώθασιν οἱ κενοὶ φρενῶν ἐπαίρεσθαι, σεμνυθῆης, λογισάμενος ὅτι πρῶτον μὲν ἀμέτοχα

<sup>1</sup> MSS. προνομίας.

<sup>a</sup> See Deut. x. 18 f.

THE SPECIAL LAWS, I. 307-311

is. But He is the God not only of men but also of gods, and the ruler not only of commoners but of rulers, and being truly existent, He is great and strong and mighty. LVII. <sup>a</sup> Yet vast as are his excel- 308 lences and powers, he takes pity and compassion on those most helplessly in need, and does not disdain to give judgement to strangers or orphans or widows. He holds their low estate worthy of His providential care, while of kings and despots and great potentates He takes no account.

He provides for 309
the incomers because forsaking the ancestral customs in which they were bred, customs packed with false inventions and vanity, they have crossed over to piety in whole-hearted love of simplicity and truth, and rendering to Him that truly exists the supplication and service which are His right, partake in due course of His protecting care in the measure that fits their case, and gain in the help that He gives the fruit of making God their refuge.

He provides 310
for the orphans and widows because they have lost their protectors, in the first case parents, in the second husbands, and in this desolation no refuge remains that men can give ; and therefore they are not denied the hope that is greatest of all, the hope in God, Who in the graciousness of His nature does not refuse the task of caring for and watching over them in this desolate condition. <sup>b</sup> Let God alone be thy boast 311 and thy chief glory, he continues, and pride thyself neither on riches nor on reputation nor dominion nor comeliness nor strength of body, nor any such thing, whereby the hearts of the empty-minded are wont to be lifted up. Consider in the first place that these things have nothing in them of the nature of the true <sup>b</sup> See Deut. x. 21.

PHILO

ταῦτ' ἐστὶ τῆς <τοῦ> ἀγαθοῦ φύσεως, ἔπειτα δ' ὅτι καιρὸν ὀξύν ἔχει τῆς μεταβολῆς, μαραινόμενα 312 τρόπον τινά, πρὶν ἀνθῆσαι βεβαίως. ὁ δὲ πάγιον καὶ ἄτρεπτον καὶ ἀμετάβλητον ἀγαθὸν μετα-[259] διώκωμεν καὶ τῆς | ἰκεσίας καὶ θεραπείας αὐτοῦ περιεχόμεθα. καὶ μήτε κρατήσαντες ἐχθρῶν ζηλώσωμεν τὰς ἐκείνων ἐν αἷς εὐσεβεῖν δοκοῦσιν ἀσεβείας υἱοῦς καὶ θυγατέρας τοῖς αὐτῶν 313 κατακαίοντες θεοῖς—οὐχ ὅτι τὰ τέκνα πᾶσι τοῖς βαρβάροις ἐμπιμπράναι δι' ἔθους ἐστίν· οὐ γὰρ οὕτως ἐξηγρίωνται τὰς φύσεις, ὡς, ἂ μὴδὲ πολεμίους καὶ ἐχθροὺς ἀσυμβάτους ἐν πολέμῳ, ταῦτα τοὺς φιλότατους καὶ οἰκειοτάτους ἐν εἰρήνῃ δρᾶν ὑπομένειν· ἀλλ' ὅτι τὰς ψυχὰς τῷ ὄντι καταφλέγουσι καὶ διαφθείρουσιν ὧν ἐγέννησαν ἕξ ἔτι σπαρ-γάνων ἀπαλαῖς ἔτι μὴ ἐγχαράττοντες τὰς<sup>1</sup> ἀληθείας δόξας περὶ τοῦ ἐνός καὶ πρὸς ἀλήθειαν ὄντος θεοῦ—μήτ' οὖν ἠττηθέντες ἀναπέσωμεν καὶ ὑπαχθῶμεν ταῖς ἐκείνων εὐτυχίαις ὡς δι' εὐσέβειαν 314 νενικηκότων· πολλοῖς γὰρ ἐπ' ἐνέδρα συμβαίνουσιν αἱ παραυτίκα εὐπραγίαι δέλεαρ σφοδρῶν καὶ ἀνιάτων οὔσαι κακῶν· εἰκὸς δὲ καὶ ἀναξίους ὄντας κατορθοῦν, μὴ δι' ἑαυτοῦς, ἀλλὰ ὑπὲρ τοῦ λυπεῖσθαι καὶ ἀνιάσθαι σφοδρότερον ἡμᾶς οὐχ ὅσια δρῶντας, οἱ γεννηθέντες ἐν πολιτείᾳ φιλοθέω καὶ ἐντραφέντες νόμοις ἐπὶ πᾶσαν ἀρετὴν ἀλείφουσι καὶ ἐκ πρώτης ἡλικίας παιδευόμενοι τὰ κάλλιστα παρὰ θεοσπεσίους ἀνδράσι τῶν μὲν ὀλιγωροῦμεν, τῶν δ' ὡς ἀληθῶς

<sup>1</sup> MSS. τῆς.

<sup>a</sup> See Deut. xii. 29-31.

<sup>b</sup> The warning against misunderstanding the lesson of defeat does not appear to have any clear parallel in Deutero-280

THE SPECIAL LAWS, I. 311-314

good ; secondly, how quickly comes the hour of their passing, how they wither away, as it were, before their flower has come to its strength. Let us follow 312 after the good that is stable, unswerving, unchangeable, and hold fast to our service as His suppliants and worshippers.<sup>a</sup>

So if we are victorious over our enemies, let us not affect their impious ways in which they think to show their piety by burning their sons and daughters to their gods. This does 313 not mean that all the outside nations have a custom of giving their children to the fire. They have not become so savage in nature as to bring themselves to do in peace to their nearest and dearest what they would not do in wartime to their enemies in the field or to the objects of their implacable hatred. Rather the words refer to that consuming fire in which they veritably destroy the souls of their offspring right from the cradle by failing to imprint on their still tender souls truth-giving conceptions of the one, the truly existent God.

<sup>b</sup> Nor yet if defeated let us lose heart or be overcome by their successes as though the victory were due to their piety. To 314 many their temporary pieces of good fortune have proved to be a pitfall, a trap baited with evils vast and fatal. And it may well be that the triumph of the unworthy comes to pass not for their own sake but that we should be more abundantly distressed and afflicted for our unholy deeds ; we who, born as citizens of a godly community, reared under laws which incite to every virtue, trained from our earliest years under divinely gifted men, show contempt for their teaching and cling to what truly deserves our nomy, though there are various passages which threaten foreign conquest or enslavement as the punishment for forsaking God, e.g. xxviii. 49-57.

PHILO

- ὀλιγωρίας ἀξίων περιεχόμεθα, παιδιὰν μὲν τὰ σπουδαῖα, σπουδὴν δὲ τὰ παιδιᾶς ἄξια ἡγούμενοι.
- 315 LVIII. Κἂν μέντοι τις ὄνομα καὶ σχῆμα προφητείας ὑποδύς, ἐνθουσιᾶν καὶ κατέχεσθαι δοκῶν, ἄγῃ πρὸς τὴν τῶν νενομισμένων κατὰ πόλεις θρησκείαν θεῶν, οὐκ ἄξιον προσέχειν ἀπατωμένους ὀνόματι προφήτου· γόης γὰρ ἄλλ' οὐ προφήτης ἐστὶν ὁ τοιοῦτος, ἐπειδὴ ψευδόμενος λόγια καὶ
- 316 χρησμοὺς ἐπλάσατο. κἂν ἀδελφὸς ἢ υἱὸς ἢ θυγάτηρ ἢ γυνὴ ἢ οἰκουρὸς ἢ γνήσιος φίλος ἢ τις ἕτερος εὖνους εἶναι δοκῶν εἰς τὰ ὅμοια ἐνάγῃ προτρέπων συνασμενίζειν<sup>1</sup> τοῖς πολλοῖς καὶ ἐπὶ τὰ αὐτὰ ἱερὰ καὶ τὰς αὐτὰς σπονδάς τε καὶ θυσίας ἀφικνεῖσθαι, κολαστέον ὡς δῆμιον καὶ κοινὸν ἐχθρὸν ὄντα ὀλίγα φροντίσαντας οἰκειότητος καὶ τὰς παραινέσεις αὐτοῦ διαγγελτέον πᾶσι τοῖς εὐσεβείας ἐρασταῖς, οἱ ἀνυπερθέτω τάχει ταῖς κατ' ἀνδρὸς ἀνοσίου τιμωρίαις ἐπίδραμοῦνται κρίνοντες εὐαγὲς τὸ κατ' αὐτοῦ
- 317 φονᾶν. ἔστω γὰρ ἡμῖν μία οἰκειότης καὶ φιλίας ἐν σύμβολον ἢ πρὸς θεὸν ἀρέσκεια καὶ τὸ πάντα λέγειν τε καὶ πράττειν ὑπὲρ εὐσεβείας· αἱ δ' ἐκ προγόνων ἀφ' αἵματος αὐταὶ λεγόμεναι συγγένειαι καὶ αἱ κατ' ἐπιγαμίας ἢ τινὰς ἄλλας ὁμοιοτρόπους αἰτίας οἰκειότητες ἀπορριπτέσθωσαν, εἰ μὴ πρὸς τὸ αὐτὸ τέλος ἐπέιγονται, τὴν τοῦ θεοῦ τιμὴν, ἢ πάσης ἐνωτικῆς εὐνοίας ἄλυτος δεσμὸς ἐστίν· ἀντιλήφονται
- [260] γὰρ οἱ τοιοῦτοι σεμνοτέρας καὶ | ἱεροπρεπεστέρας

<sup>1</sup> MSS. ἐνασμενίζειν.

THE SPECIAL LAWS, I. 314-318

contempt, count the serious side of life as child's-play and what befits the playground as matters of serious import.

LVIII. <sup>a</sup> Further if anyone cloaking himself under 315 the name and guise of a prophet and claiming to be possessed by inspiration lead us on to the worship of the gods recognized in the different cities, we ought not to listen to him and be deceived by the name of prophet. For such a one is no prophet, but an impostor, since his oracles and pronouncements are falsehoods invented by himself. And if a brother or 316 son or daughter or wife or a housemate or a friend however true, or anyone else who seems to be kindly disposed, urge us to a like course, bidding us fraternize with the multitude, resort to their temples, and join in their libations and sacrifices, we must punish him as a public and general enemy, taking little thought for the ties which bind us to him ; and we must send round a report of his proposals to all the lovers of piety, who will rush with a speed which brooks no delay to take vengeance on the unholy man, and deem it a religious duty to seek his death.
For we should have one tie of affinity, one accepted 317 sign of goodwill, namely the willingness to serve God and that our every word and deed promotes the cause of piety. But as for these kinships, as we call them, which have come down from our ancestors and are based on blood-relationship, or those derived from intermarriage or other similar causes, let them all be cast aside if they do not seek earnestly the same goal, namely, the honour of God, which is the indissoluble bond of all the affection which makes us one. For those who are so minded will receive in exchange kinships of greater dignity and sanctity. This 318

PHILO

318 συγγενείας. βεβαιούται δέ μου τὴν ὑπόσχεσιν ὁ νόμος λέγων, ὅτι οἱ “ τὸ ἀρεστὸν ” τῇ φύσει δρῶντες καὶ “ τὸ καλὸν ” υἱοὶ εἰσι τοῦ θεοῦ, φησὶ γάρ· “ υἱοὶ ἔστε κυρίῳ τῷ θεῷ ὑμῶν,” δηλονότι προνοίας καὶ κηδεμονίας ἀξιωθησόμενοι τῆς ὡς ἐκ πατρός· ἡ δὲ ἐπιμέλεια τοσοῦτον διοίσει τῆς<sup>1</sup> ἀπ’ ἀνθρώπων, ὅσον περ, οἶμαι, καὶ ὁ ἐπιμελούμενος διαφέροι.

319 LIX. Πρὸς τούτοις ἔτι τὰ περὶ τελετὰς καὶ μυστήρια καὶ πᾶσαν τὴν τοιαύτην τερθρείαν καὶ βωμολοχίαν ἐκ τῆς ἱερᾶς ἀναιρεῖ νομοθεσίας, οὐκ ἀξιῶν τοὺς ἐν τοιαύτῃ πολιτείᾳ τραφέντας ὀργιάζεσθαι καὶ μυστικῶν πλασμάτων ἐκκρεμαμένους ὀλιγωρεῖν ἀληθείας καὶ τὰ νύκτα καὶ σκότος προσκεκληρωμένα μεταδιώκειν παρέντας τὰ ἡμέρας καὶ φωτὸς ἄξια. μηδεὶς οὖν μήτε τελείτω μήτε τελείσθω τῶν Μωυσέως φοιτητῶν καὶ γνωρίμων· ἐκἄτερον γὰρ καὶ τὸ διδάσκειν καὶ τὸ μαθάνειν 320 τελετὰς οὐ μικρὸν ἀνοσιούργημα. τί γάρ, εἰ καλὰ ταῦτ’ ἐστίν, ὧ μύσται, καὶ συμφέροντα, συγκλεισάμενοι ἑαυτοὺς ἐν σκότῳ βαθεῖ τρεῖς ἢ τέτταρας μόνους ὠφελεῖτε, παρὸν ἅπαντας ἀνθρώπους ἐν <sup>1</sup> mss. ἰδίῳι τοῖς. The correction is stated to be probably supported by the Armenian.

---

<sup>a</sup> See Deut. xiii. 18 and xiv. 1 ἐὰν ἀκούσης τῆς φωνῆς Κυρίου τοῦ Θεοῦ σου . . . ποιεῖν τὸ καλὸν καὶ τὸ ἀρεστὸν ἐναντίον Κυρίου τοῦ θεοῦ σου. υἱοὶ ἔστε Κυρίου τοῦ θεοῦ ὑμῶν. Philo treats promise of mine is confirmed by the law, where it says that they who do "what is pleasing" to nature and what is "good" are sons of God.<sup>a</sup> For it says, "Ye are sons to your Lord God," clearly meaning that He will think fit to protect and provide for you as would a father. And how much this watchful care will exceed that of men is measured, believe me, by the surpassing excellence of Him who bestows it.

THE SPECIAL LAWS, I. 318-320

LIX. Furthermore, he banishes from the sacred 319 legislation<sup>b</sup> the lore of occult rites and mysteries and all such imposture and buffoonery. He would not have those who were bred in such a commonwealth as ours take part in mummeries and clinging on to mystic fables despise the truth and pursue things which have taken night and darkness for their province, discarding what is fit to bear the light of day. Let none, therefore, of the followers and disciples of Moses either confer or receive initiation to such rites. For both in teacher and taught such action is gross sacrilege. For tell me, ye mystics, if these things 320 are good and profitable, why do you shut yourselves up in profound darkness and reserve their benefits for three or four alone, when by producing them in the midst of the market-place you might extend the last six words, which are really the beginning of the new paragraph, as part of the previous sentence. See also App. p. 622.

<sup>c</sup> Philo's authority in Deuteronomy for this section is xxiii. 17, 18, where, after the words "there shall be no harlot of the daughters of Israel, neither shall there be a sodomite (LXX fornicator) of the sons of Israel," the LXX adds, "there shall be no τελεσφόρος among the daughters, nor τελισκόμενος among the sons." L. & S. (1936) give for τελεσφόρος "sorceress," and for τελισκόμενος "initiate" or ιερόδουλος. Whatever the LXX means, Philo clearly understood both words as referring to initiation into the mysteries.

PHILO

ἀγορᾶ μέση τὰ τῆς ὠφελείας προθέντας, ἵνα πᾶσιν ἀδεῶς ἐξῆ βελτίονος καὶ εὐτυχεστέρου κοινωνῆσαι 321 βίου; φθόνος γὰρ ἀρετῆς διώκισται. οἱ μὲν γὰρ τὰ βλαβερὰ πράττοντες αἰσχυνέσθωσαν καὶ καταδύσεις ἐπιζητοῦντες καὶ γῆς μυχοὺς καὶ βαθὺ σκότος ἐπικρυπτέσθωσαν τὴν πολλὴν ἀνομίαν αὐτῶν ἐπισκιάζοντες, ὡς μηδεὶς ἴδοι· τοῖς δὲ τὰ κοινωφελῆ δρῶσιν ἔστω παρρησία καὶ μεθ' ἡμέραν διὰ μέσης ἴτωσαν ἀγορᾶς ἐντευξόμενοι πολυανθρώποις ὁμίλοις, ἡλίῳ καθαρῷ τὸν ἴδιον βίον ἀνταυγάσοντες καὶ διὰ τῶν κυριωτάτων αἰσθήσεων τοὺς συλλόγους ὀνήσοντες, ὀρῶντας μὲν ἡδίστας ὁμοῦ καὶ καταπληκτικωτάτας ὄψεις, ἀκούοντας δὲ καὶ ἔστιωμένους λόγων ποτίμων, οἱ τὰς διανοίας 322 τῶν μὴ σφόδρα ἀμούσων εἰώθασιν εὐφραίνειν. ἢ οὐχ ὄρας, ὅτι καὶ ἡ φύσις τῶν ἑαυτῆς ἀοιδίμων καὶ παγκάλων ἔργων οὐδὲν ἀπέκρυψεν, ἀλλὰ ἀστέρας μὲν καὶ τὸν σύμπαντα οὐρανὸν εἰς τε τὴν δι' ὄψεως τέρψιν καὶ πρὸς φιλοσοφίας ἡμερον ἀπέφηνεν, πελάγη δὲ καὶ πηγὰς καὶ ποταμοὺς καὶ τὰς ἀέρος εὐκρασίας δι' ἀνέμων τε καὶ αὐρῶν<sup>1</sup> εἰς τὰς ἐτησίους ὥρας, φυτῶν τε καὶ ζώων ἔτι δὲ καρπῶν ἀμυθητοὺς ἰδέας εἰς χρῆσιν καὶ ἀπόλαυσιν ἀνθρώ-323 πων; εἴτ' οὐκ ἐχρήην καὶ ἡμᾶς ἐπομένους τοῖς ἐκείνης βουλήμασι πάνθ' ὅσα ἀναγκαῖα καὶ χρήσιμα [261] | προτιθέναι πᾶσι τοῖς ἀξίοις ἐπ' ὠφελεία; νῦν δὲ

<sup>1</sup> Cohn δι' ἀνέμων τε καὶ πνευμάτων: Mangey with A and H ἀνέμων τε. R has διανεμόντες αὐτῶν and, as s' in R is a common symbol for καί, the first word clearly stands for δι' ἀνέμων τε καί. Why, however, Cohn adopted πνευμάτων (for which I have substituted the obvious αὐρῶν to represent R's αὐτῶν), I do not understand. Cf. ii. 172 ἀέρος εὐκρασίαι ζωτικωτάταις αὔραις ἐπιπνέοντος, and much the same in De Virt. 93. See also App. p. 622.

THE SPECIAL LAWS, I. 320-323

them to every man and thus enable all to share in security a better and happier life? For virtue has 321 no room in her home for a grudging spirit.<sup>a</sup> Let those who work mischief feel shame and seek holes and corners of the earth and profound darkness, there lie hid and keep the multitude of their iniquities veiled out of the sight of all. But let those whose actions serve the common weal use freedom of speech and walk in daylight through the midst of the market-place, ready to converse with crowded gatherings, to let the clear sunlight shine upon their own life and through the two most royal senses, sight and hearing, to render good service to the assembled groups, who through the one behold spectacles as marvellous as they are delightful,<sup>b</sup> and through the other feast on the fresh sweet draught of words<sup>c</sup> which are wont to gladden the minds of such as are not wholly averse to learning. Cannot you see that nature also does 322 not conceal any of her glorious and admirable works, but displays the stars and the whole heaven to delight us by the sight and to foster the love of philosophy; so too the seas and fountains and rivers and the air so happily tempered by winds and breezes to make the yearly seasons, and the countless varieties of plants and animals and again of fruits—all for the use and enjoyment of men? Were it not well, then, that we 323 should follow her intentions and display in public all that is profitable and necessary for the benefit of those who are worthy to use it? As it is, we often

<sup>a</sup> Cf. Phaedrus 247 A and ii. 249 below.

<sup>b</sup> The meaning presumably is that a good man's life is a finer spectacle than those which united with the mystic liturgy to charm, and at the same time awe, the initiated.

<sup>c</sup> Cf. Phaedrus 243 A and see App. p. 622.

PHILO

συμβαίνει πολλάκις τῶν μὲν ἀγαθῶν ἀνδρῶν μηδένα μνεῖσθαι, ληστὰς δ' ἔστιν ὅτε καὶ καταποντιστὰς καὶ γυναικῶν θιάσους βδελυκτῶν καὶ ἀκολάστων, ἐπειδὰν ἀργύριον παράσχωσι τοῖς τελούσι καὶ ἱεροφαντοῦσιν. ὑπερόριοι δὴ πάντες οὗτοι φυγαδεύεσθωσαν πόλεως καὶ καταστάσεως, ἐν ἧ τὸ καλὸν καὶ ἡ ἀλήθεια δι' αὐτὰ τιμᾶται. ταῦτα μὲν ἐπὶ τοσοῦτον.

- 324 LX. Κοινωνίας δὲ καὶ φιλανθρωπίας εἰσηγητῆς ὧν ἐν τοῖς μάλιστα ὁ νόμος ἑκατέρας ἀρετῆς τὴν τε ἀξίωσιν καὶ τὴν σεμνότητα διετήρησεν, οὐδενὶ τῶν ἀνιάτως ἐχόντων ἐπιτρέψας καταφυγεῖν ἐπ' αὐτάς,
- 325 ἀλλὰ πορρωτάτω σκορακίσας. ἐπιστάμενος γοῦν ἐν ταῖς ἐκκλησίαις οὐκ ὀλίγους τῶν μοχθηρῶν παρεισρέοντας καὶ διὰ τὸ συνειλεγμένον πλῆθος λανθάνοντας, ἵνα μὴ τοῦτο γένηται, προανείργει πάντας τοὺς ἀναξίους ἱεροῦ συλλόγου τὴν ἀρχὴν ποιούμενος ἀπὸ τῶν νοσοῦντων τὴν θήλειαν νόσον ἀνδρογύνων, οἱ τὸ φύσεως νόμισμα παρακόπτοντες εἰς ἀκολάστων γυναικῶν πάθη καὶ μορφὰς εἰσβιάζονται· θλαδίας γὰρ καὶ ἀποκεκομμένους τὰ γεννητὰ ἐλαύνει τό τε τῆς ὥρας ταμιεύοντας ἄνθος, ἵνα μὴ ῥαδίως μαραίνοιτο, καὶ τὸν ἄρρενα τύπον μεταχαράττοντας εἰς θηλύμορφον ἰδέαν.
- 326 ἐλαύνει δὲ οὐ μόνον πόρνas ἀλλὰ καὶ τοὺς ἐκ πόρνης, ἐπιφερομένους μητρῶν αἰσχος, [καὶ] διότι ἡ πρώτη σπορὰ καὶ γενεαὶς αὐτοῖς κεκιβδήλευται καὶ συγκέχυται διὰ τὸ πλῆθος τῶν ὠμιληκῶτων

THE SPECIAL LAWS, I. 323-326

find that no person of good character is admitted to the mysteries, while robbers and pirates and associations of abominable and licentious women, when they offer money to those who conduct the initiatory rites, are sometimes accepted. Let all such persons, then, be banished from the confines of any State or constitution in which morality and truth are honoured for their own sakes. So much for this subject.

LX. But while the law stands pre-eminent in en- 324 joining fellowship and humanity, it preserves the high position and dignity of both virtues by not allowing anyone whose state is incurable to take refuge with them, but bidding him avaunt and keep his distance. Thus, knowing that in assemblies there 325 are not a few worthless persons who steal their way in and remain unobserved in the large numbers which surround them, it guards against this danger by precluding all the unworthy from entering the holy congregation. It begins with the men who belie their sex and are affected with effemination, who debase the currency of nature and violate it by assuming the passions and the outward form of licentious women. For it expels those whose generative organs are fractured or mutilated,<sup>a</sup> who husband the flower of their youthful bloom, lest it should quickly wither, and restamp the masculine cast into a feminine form.

And it banishes not only harlots, but 326 also the children of harlots<sup>b</sup> who carry with them their mother's shame, because their begetting and their birth has been adulterated at the fountain-head and reduced to confusion through the number of their

---

<sup>a</sup> See Deut. xxiii. 1.

<sup>b</sup> See Deut. xxiii. 2 (E.V. "bastard").

PHILO

- ταῖς μητράσιν, ὡς μὴ δύνασθαι τὸν ἀληθῆ πατέρα διαγνῶναι καὶ διακρίναι.
- 327 Ὁ δὲ τόπος οὗτος, εἰ καὶ τις ἄλλος, ἀλληγορίαν ἐπιδέχεται φιλοσόφου θεωρίας ὧν ἀνάπλεως τῶν γὰρ ἀσεβῶν καὶ ἀνοσιῶν οὐχ εἰς τρόπον, ἀλλὰ πολλοὶ καὶ διαφέροντες. οἱ μὲν γὰρ τὰς ἀσωμάτων ιδέας ὄνομα κενὸν ἀμέτοχον ἀληθοῦς πράγματος εἶναι φασί, τὴν ἀναγκαιοτάτην οὐσίαν ἐκ τῶν ὄντων ἀναιροῦντες, ἥτις ἐστὶν ἀρχέτυπον παράδειγμα πάντων ὅσα ποιότητες οὐσίας, καθ' ἣν
- 328 ἕκαστον εἰδοποιεῖτο καὶ διεμετρεῖτο. τούτους αἱ ἱεραὶ τοῦ νόμου στήλαι μνηύουσι “θλαδίας”. ὡς γὰρ τὸ τεθλασμένον ἀφήρηται τὴν ποιότητα καὶ τὸ εἶδος καὶ οὐδὲν ἕτερόν ἐστιν ἢ κυρίως εἰπεῖν ἄμορφος ὕλη, οὕτως καὶ ἡ ἀναιροῦσα δόξα ιδέας πάντα συγχεῖ καὶ πρὸς τὴν ἀνωτέρω τῶν στοιχείων
- 329 οὐσίαν τὴν ἄμορφον καὶ ἄποιον ἐκείνην ἄγει. οὐ τί γένοιτ' ἂν ἀτοπώτερον; ἐξ ἐκείνης γὰρ πάντ' ἐγέννησεν ὁ θεός, οὐκ ἐφαπτόμενος αὐτός—οὐ γὰρ ἦν θέμις ἀπείρου καὶ πεφυρμένης ὕλης ψαύειν τὸν εὐδαίμονα καὶ μακάριον—, ἀλλὰ ταῖς ἀσωμάτοις δυνάμεσιν, ὧν ἔτυμον ὄνομα αἱ ιδέαι, κατεχρήσατο πρὸς τὸ γένος ἕκαστον τὴν ἀρμόττουσαν λαβεῖν
- [262] μορφήν. ἡ δὲ πολλὴν ἀταξίαν | εἰσηγεῖται καὶ σύγχυσιν· ἀναιροῦσα γὰρ ταῦτα, δι' ὧν αἱ ποιότητες, συναναιρεῖ ποιότητας.
- 330 Ἔτεροι δ' ὡς ἐν ἄθλοις κακίας τὰ ἐπ' ἀσεβείᾳ νικητήρια σπεύδοντες αἵρεσθαι προσυπερβάλλουσιν ἅμα ταῖς ιδέαις καὶ ὑπαρξιν θεοῦ παρακαλυπτό-<sup>a</sup> For some remarks on the relation of the following sections to the philosophers' schools see App. pp. 622-623.

<sup>b</sup> See note on § 48.

THE SPECIAL LAWS, I. 326-330

mother's lovers, so that they cannot recognize or distinguish their real father.

<sup>a</sup> This is a topic peculiarly susceptible of allegorical 327 interpretation and full of matter for philosophical study. For the heads under which the impious and unholy can be characterized are not one, but many and different. Some aver that the Incorporeal Ideas or Forms are an empty name devoid of any real substance of fact, and thus they abolish in things the most essential element of their being, namely the archetypal patterns of all qualities in what exists, and on which the form and dimensions of each 328 separate thing was modelled. These the holy tables of the law speak of as "crushed," for just as anything crushed has lost its quality and form and may be literally said to be nothing more than shapeless matter, so the creed which abolishes the Forms confuses everything and reduces it to the pre-elemental state of existence, that state devoid of shape and quality. Could anything be more preposterous than 329 this? For when out of that confused matter God produced all things, He did not do so with His own handiwork, since His nature, happy and blessed as it was, forbade that He should touch the limitless chaotic matter. Instead He made full use of the incorporeal potencies <sup>b</sup> well denoted by their name of Forms to enable each kind to take its appropriate shape. But this other creed brings in its train no little disorder and confusion. For by abolishing the agencies which created the qualities, it abolishes the qualities also.

There are others who in the arena of wickedness 330 eagerly compete for the first prize in impiety and go to the further extreme of drawing a curtain over the

PHILO

- μενοι ὡς οὐκ ὄντος λεγομένου δ' εἶναι χάριν τοῦ συμφέροντος ἀνθρώποις, οἳ δὴ δι' εὐλάβειαν τοῦ δοκοῦντος πάντῃ παρῆναι καὶ πάντα καθορᾶν ὄμμασιν ἀκοιμήτοις [οἷς] ἔμελλον ἀνέξειν ἀδικημάτων. τούτους ὁ νόμος εὐθυβόλως “ἀποκόπους” προσαγορεύει τὴν περὶ τοῦ πάντα γεννῶντος ἐκτετμημένους ὑπόληψιν, ἀγόνους μὲν σοφίας, ἐπιτηδεύοντας δὲ τὴν μεγίστην κακιῶν, ἀθεότητα.
- 331 Τρίτοι δ' εἰσὶν οἳ τὴν ἐναντίαν ἔτεμον εἰσηγησάμενοι πλῆθος (θεῶν) ἀρρένων τε καὶ θηλειῶν, πρεσβυτέρων τε αὖ καὶ νεωτέρων, πολυαρχίας λόγῳ τὸν κόσμον ἀναπλήσαντες, ἵνα τὴν τοῦ ἑνὸς καὶ ὄντως ὄντος ὑπόληψιν ἐκ τῆς ἀνθρώπων δια-
- 332 νοίας ἐκτέμωσιν. οὗτοι δ' εἰσὶν οἳ συμβολικῶς “ἐκ πόρνης” ὑπὸ τοῦ νόμου προσαγορευόμενοι· καθάπερ γὰρ ὦν μητέρες πόρναι τὸν μὲν ἀληθῆ πατέρα οὔτε ἴσασιν οὔτ' ἐπιγράψασθαι δύνανται, πολλοὺς δὲ καὶ σχεδὸν ἅπαντας τοὺς ἔραστὰς καὶ ὠμιληκότας, τὸν αὐτὸν τρόπον καὶ οἳ ἀγνοοῦντες τὸν ἕνα καὶ ἀληθινὸν θεὸν πολλοὺς καὶ ψευδωνύμους ἀναπλάττοντες περὶ τὸ ἀναγκαιότατον τῶν ὄντων τυφλώττουσιν, ὅπερ ἢ μόνον ἢ πρώτιστον ἐξ αὐτῶν σπαργάνων εἰκὸς ἦν ἀναδιδάσκεσθαι· τί γὰρ μάθημα κάλλιον ἢ τοῦ ὄντως ὄντος θεοῦ;
- 333 LXI. Τετάρτους δὲ καὶ πέμπτους ἐλαύνει πρὸς

---

<sup>a</sup> For the application of ἀποκεκομμένος (there including 292

THE SPECIAL LAWS, I. 330-333

existence of God as well as of the Forms. They assert that God does not exist, but is alleged to exist for the benefit of men who, it was supposed, would abstain from wrongdoing in their fear of Him Whom they believed to be present everywhere and to survey all things with ever-watchful eyes. These are happily called by the law "mutilated,"<sup>a</sup> for they have lost by castration the conception of the Generator of all things. They are impotent to beget wisdom and practise the worst of wickednesses, atheism.

A third class are those who have shaped their 331 course in the opposite direction, and introduced a numerous company of deities male and female, elder and younger. Thus they have infected the world with the idea of a multiplicity of sovereigns in order to geld from the mind of men the conception of the one and truly existent Being. It is these who are 332 figuratively called by the law "the children of a harlot."<sup>b</sup> For as anyone who has a harlot for his mother has no knowledge of, and can claim no affiliation to, his real father, but must accept the paternity of most or practically all her lovers and patrons, so too those who know not the one true God but invent a number of deities, false so-called, are blind to the most essential reality with which they should have been indoctrinated from the cradle to the exclusion of or before anything else. For what better theme for the learner can there be than the Being who truly exists, even God?

LXI. The banishment is extended to a fourth and 333 θλαδίαις) to atheism cf. De Mig. 69. The text is usually applied to unwisdom in general.

<sup>b</sup> For the application of the words to polytheism cf. De Mig. 69, De Dec. 8, De Conf. 144.

PHILO

μὲν τὸ αὐτὸ τέλος ἐπειγομένους, οὐ μὴν ἀπὸ τῶν αὐτῶν βουλευμάτων· ἀμφότεροι γὰρ ζηλωταὶ μεγάλου κακοῦ, φιλαυτίας, ὄντες ὡσπερ τινὰ κοινήν οὐσίαν διενείμαντο τὴν ὅλην ψυχὴν ἐκ λογικοῦ καὶ ἀλόγου μέρους συνεστῶσαν· καὶ οἱ μὲν τὸ λογικόν, ὃ δὴ νοῦς ἐστι, διεκκληρώσαντο, οἱ δὲ τὸ ἄλογον, 334 ὅπερ εἰς τὰς αἰσθήσεις τέμνεται. οἱ μὲν οὖν τοῦ νοῦ προστάται τὴν ἡγεμονίαν καὶ βασιλείαν τῶν ἀνθρωπείων πραγμάτων ἀνάπτουσι<sup>1</sup> αὐτῷ καὶ φασιν ἰκανὸν εἶναι καὶ τὰ παρεληλυθότα μνήμη διασώζειν καὶ τῶν παρόντων ἐρρωμένως ἀντιλαμβάνεσθαι καὶ τὰ μέλλοντα εἰκότι στοχασμῷ 335 φαντασιοῦσθαί τε καὶ λογίζεσθαι. οὗτος γάρ ἐστιν ὁ γῆν τὴν βαθύγειον καὶ ἀρετῶσαν τῆς ὀρεινῆς καὶ πεδιάδος κατασπείρας καὶ καταφυτεύσας καὶ τὴν βιωφελεστάτην γεωργίαν εὐρών· οὗτος ὁ ναῦν κατασκευάσας καὶ τὴν χέρσου<sup>2</sup> φύσιν ἐπινοίαις παντὸς λόγου κρείττοσι πλωτὴν ἀπεργασάμενος καὶ

<sup>1</sup> MSS. ἀνάγουσιν.

<sup>2</sup> Heinemann χερσαῖον. See note a below.

---

<sup>a</sup> i.e. the Ammonites (5th) and the Moabites (4th); see the continuation of the passage quoted from Deut. xxiii. "an Ammonite or a Moabite shall not enter into the assembly of the Lord." Philo does not actually quote the verse, possibly feeling that the arguments which lead him to the identification are too involved for this treatise. But that this is his meaning clearly appears from Leg. All. iii. 81, when, a fifth class also.<sup>a</sup> Both these seek the same goal but have different plans for attaining it. Both classes are votaries of the pestilent vice of self-assertion,<sup>b</sup> but have treated the soul, which is a whole consisting of two parts, the rational and irrational, as if it were a property shared by two persons, and have partitioned it out between them. One class has taken as its portion the rational part, that is the mind, the other has taken the irrational, which is subdivided into the senses.

THE SPECIAL LAWS, I. 333-335

The champions of mind ascribe 334 to it the leadership and sovereignty of human affairs, and aver that it is competent to preserve the past by means of memory, to gain a firm apprehension of the present, and to envisage and calculate the future by prognostication of what may be expected. It is 335 mind, they say, which sowed and planted the deep and fertile soil in the uplands and lowlands and so greatly enriched human life by the invention of agriculture. It is mind which constructed a ship, and by devices admirable beyond description turned what was after noting that Ammon and Moab refused to give food to Israel, he described the Ammonites as deriving their nature from "sense" (αἴσθησις) their mother, and the Moabites from "mind" their father, the latter name being interpreted as ἐκ πατρός (cf. De Som. i. 89 and LXX, Gen. xix. 37, "she called his name Moab, saying ἐκ τοῦ πατρὸς μου"). Philo does not, I think, give any corresponding derivation for Ammon, but Heinemann suggests that he derived it from the Hebrew אִמּוֹן = "mother," see Gen. xix. 38 E.V. "and she called his name Ben-ammi" (LXX ἐκ τοῦ γένους μου). Cf. also De Post. 177. See also App. p. 623 on § 327.

<sup>b</sup> I do not feel that this word (or "self-exaltation") is an adequate word for φιλαυτία in this context, but it seems to me better than "self-love" or "selfishness," both of which are restricted to the love of oneself as an individual, and not as a member of the race.

ὁδοὺς ἐν θαλάττῃ πολυσχιδεῖς ἄχρι λιμένων τῶν κατὰ πόλεις καὶ ὑποδρόμων λεωφόρους ἀνατεμῶν καὶ γνωρίσας ἡπειρώτας νησιώτας οὐκ ἄν ποτ' εἰς ἑαυτοὺς ἐλθόντας, εἰ μὴ σκάφος ἐναυπηγήθη· οὗτος ὁ καὶ τῶν βαναύσων καὶ τῶν γλαφυρωτέρων τεχ-336 νῶν λεγομένων εὐρετής· οὗτος γράμματα καὶ ἀριθμούς καὶ μουσικὴν καὶ τὴν ἐγκύκλιον ἅπασαν παιδείαν ἐπενόησε καὶ συνηύξησε καὶ πρὸς τὸ τέλος ἤγαγεν· οὗτος καὶ τὸ μέγιστον ἀγαθόν, φιλοσοφίαν, ἐγέννησε καὶ δι' ἐκάστου τῶν μερῶν αὐτῆς ὠφέλησε τὸν ἀνθρώπινον βίον, διὰ μὲν τοῦ λογικοῦ πρὸς [263] ἀνεξαπάτητον ἐρμηνείαν, διὰ | δὲ τοῦ ἡθικοῦ πρὸς τὴν τῶν τρόπων ἐπανόρθωσιν, διὰ δὲ τοῦ φυσικοῦ πρὸς ἐπιστήμην οὐρανοῦ τε καὶ κόσμου. καὶ ἄλλα μέντοι παμπληθῆ λέγουσιν ἐγκώμια νοῦ συμφορή-σαντές τε καὶ ἀγείραντες ἔχοντα<sup>1</sup> τὴν ἀναφορὰν ἐπὶ τὰ λεχθέντα ἤδη, περὶ ὧν οὐ καιρὸς ἐνοχλεῖν.
 337 LXII. οἱ δὲ τῶν αἰσθήσεων προστάται τὸν ἔπαινον αὐτῶν εὖ μάλα σεμνοποιοῦσι διανέμοντες τῷ λόγῳ τὰς ἀπ' αὐτῶν ἐγγινομένας χρείας καὶ φασιν, ὅτι δύο μὲν αἴτια τοῦ ζῆν ἐστίν, ὄσφρησις καὶ γεῦσις, δύο δὲ τοῦ καλῶς ζῆν, ὄρασις καὶ ἀκοή.

<sup>1</sup> MSS. ἔχοντες.

<sup>a</sup> Or (reading χερσαῖον as Heinemann, or perhaps χέρσου ἴδιον as suggested by R's χερ . . . διον) "turns the land-creature man into one that floats or swims." Heinemann quotes very appositely Spec. Leg. iv. 155, where, in a passage very similar to this, "the most incredible thing is that ἡ χερσαία φύσις διὰ πλωτῆς οἷα τε ἢ περαιούσθαι," also De Op. 147, where man is said to be χερσαῖον ζῶον on land, and ἐνδρον when he sails in ships. The analogy with Spec. Leg.

THE SPECIAL LAWS, I. 335-337

naturally dry land into a waterway,<sup>a</sup> opened up in the sea routes whose many branches serve as highways to the havens and roadsteads of the different states, and made the inhabitants of the mainland and those of the islands known to each other, who would never have met if a vessel had not been built. It is mind which discovered the mechanical<sup>b</sup> and the finer arts, as they are called, which devised, fostered and brought 336 to their consummation letters and numbers and music and the whole range of school studies. Mind too was the parent of philosophy, the greatest of blessings, and employed each part of it to benefit human life, the logical to produce absolute exactitude of language, the ethical for the amelioration of character, the physical to give knowledge of heaven and the universe.<sup>c</sup> And besides these they collect and accumulate in honour of mind a vast number of 336 tributes to the same effect as those already mentioned, with which we have no occasion to trouble ourselves now.

LXII. The champions of the senses 337 sound their praises in lofty terms. They discuss and classify them according to the purposes which they serve and tell us that two, smell and taste, are the basis of life, and two, sight and hearing, of good life.

is not quite exact as there πλωτῆς is passive, while here it would be on Heinemann's rendering active. His other argument that dry land does not become a waterway might be met by supposing that Philo is thinking of Xerxes' canal through Mount Athos, on which he enlarges in De Som. ii. 118. He may not have known of any similar undertaking, but it is quite in his manner to treat a single historical example as a common occurrence.

<sup>b</sup> Or "vulgar."

<sup>c</sup> For the familiar triple division of philosophy see particularly Diog. Laert. vii. 39, and notes on Leg. All. 157 and De Agr. 14.

PHILO

- 338 διὰ μὲν οὖν γεύσεως αἱ τῶν σιτίων τροφαὶ παραπέμπονται, διὰ δὲ μυκτήρων ὁ ἀήρ, οὐδὲ πᾶν ζῶον ἐξήρηται· τροφή δ' ἐστὶ καὶ οὗτος ἢ συνεχῆς καὶ ἀδιάστατος, ὃς οὐκ ἐρηγορότας μόνον ἀλλὰ καὶ κοιμωμένους διατρέφει τε καὶ διασώζει· σαφῆς δὲ πίστις· εἰ γὰρ κἂν βραχύτατον ὁ τῆς ἀναπνοῆς διάυλος ἐπισχεθεῖη κατὰ τὴν τοῦ πεφυκότος ἕξωθεν ἐποχετεύεσθαι πνεύματος ἀποκοπήν, θάνατος ἀπαρ-
- 339 αἰτήτος ἐξ ἀνάγκης ἐπακολουθήσει. τῶν γε μὴν φιλοσόφων αἰσθήσεων, δι' ὧν περιγίνεται τὸ εὖ ζῆν, ὄρασις μὲν φῶς τὸ κάλλιστον ἐν τοῖς οὐσιν ὄρᾳ, ὄρᾳ δὲ διὰ φωτὸς τᾶλλα πάντα, ἥλιον, σελήνην, ἀστέρας, οὐρανόν, γῆν, θάλατταν, φυτῶν καὶ ζώων ἀμυθήτους διαφοράς, καὶ συνόλως πάντα σώματα καὶ σχήματα καὶ χρώματα καὶ μεγέθη, ὧν ἡ θεὰ περιττὴν φρόνησιν ἐξεργάσατο καὶ πολὺν ἡμερον
- 340 ἐπιστήμης ἐγέννησε. παρέχεται δὲ καὶ ἄνευ τούτων ὠφελείας ὄρασις ἡμῖν τὰς μεγίστας, εἰς τε τὴν οἰκείων καὶ ἄλλοτριῶν καὶ φίλων καὶ ἐχθρῶν διάκρισιν καὶ βλαβερῶν μὲν φυγὴν, αἴρεσιν δὲ τῶν ἐπ' ὠφελείᾳ. γέγονε μὲν οὖν καὶ τῶν ἄλλων ἕκαστον τοῦ σώματος μερῶν πρὸς ἀρμοττούσας χρείας καὶ σφόδρα ἀναγκαίας, ὡς βάσεις μὲν πρὸς περίπατον καὶ δρόμον καὶ τᾶλλα ὅσα διὰ σκελῶν ἐνεργεῖται, χεῖρες δὲ πρὸς τὸ πράξαι τι καὶ δοῦναι καὶ λαβεῖν· ὀφθαλμοὶ δὲ ὡσπερὶ τι κοινὸν ἀγαθὸν τὴν τοῦ δύνασθαι κατορθοῦν αἰτίαν καὶ τούτοις καὶ
- 341 τοῖς ἄλλοις ἅπασιν παρέχουσιν. ἀψευδέστατοι δ' οἱ πεπηρωμένοι μάρτυρες, οἳ μήτε χερσὶ μήτε ποσὶ δύνανται χρῆσθαι κατὰ τὸ βέλτιον τὴν πρόσρησιν <sup>a</sup> Lit. "use them in the better way," i.e. that in which they could be used if supported by sight.

THE SPECIAL LAWS, I. 338-341

Taste acts as a conductor of the sustenance which 338 food gives, and the nostrils do the same for the air on which every created being depends. Air too is a means of sustenance, constant and unceasing, and nourishes and preserves us not only when awake but also while we sleep. We have a clear proof of this ; for if the course of respiration backwards and forwards is stopped ever so little by the interception of the natural influx of breath from outside, death will inexorably and inevitably follow. To 339 turn to the senses which minister to philosophy and secure for us the good life, sight sees the light which is the most beautiful of all that is and by means of the light sees everything else, sun, moon, stars, heaven, earth, sea, the countless varieties of plants and animals, in general, all kinds of bodies, shapes, colours and magnitudes, the contemplation of which creates a subtle intelligence and generates a great thirst for knowledge. But 340 apart from these benefits sight gives us others of the highest value, by enabling us to distinguish between kinsfolk and strangers, friends and enemies, and to shun the harmful and choose the beneficent. And while it is true that each of the other members of the body has its appropriate and very indispensable use, as the feet for walking and running and the other activities to which the legs are instrumental, and the hands for doing and giving and receiving things, the eyes may be said to have a common value and to create the conditions under which these members and all the others can operate successfully. The strongest testimony to this truth 341 is afforded by the blind, who cannot make the proper use <sup>a</sup> of their hands or feet and thus verify the name ἐπαληθεύοντες, ἦν οὐκ ἐπ' ὀνειδίει μᾶλλον ἢ οἴκτω θέσθαι φασὶ τοὺς πρότερον ἀδυνάτους ὀνομάσαντας· ἅμα γὰρ τῇ τῶν ὀμμάτων φθορᾷ καὶ αἱ τοῦ σώ-ματος δυνάμεις οὐχ ὑποσκελίζονται μόνον ἀλλὰ καὶ 342 φθείρονται. θαυμασιώτατον δὲ καὶ ἀκοή χρῆμα, δι' ἧς μέλη καὶ μέτρα καὶ ῥυθμοί, ἔτι δὲ ἁρμονίαι καὶ συμφωνίαι καὶ τῶν γενῶν καὶ συστημάτων αἱ μεταβολαὶ καὶ πάνθ' ὅσα κατὰ μουσικὴν ἐπικρίνεται, καὶ λόγων [τε] τῶν κατὰ διεξόδους [καὶ] παμπληθεῖς ἰδέαι δικανικῶν συμβουλευτικῶν ἐγκω-μαστικῶν, ἔτι δὲ τῶν ἐν ἱστορίαις καὶ διαλόγοις καὶ τῶν ἐν ὀμιλίαις ἀναγκαίαις περὶ τῶν ἐν βίῳ πραγμάτων πρὸς τοὺς ἀεὶ πλησιάζοντας· συνόλως γὰρ διὰ φωνῆς διττὴν ἐχούσης δύναμιν, εἰς τε τὸ λέγειν καὶ τὸ ᾄδειν, ἐκάτερα τὰ ὦτα<sup>1</sup> διακρίνει πρὸς 343 ὠφέλειαν ψυχῆς· ὠδὴ γὰρ καὶ λόγος ὑγιεινὰ καὶ σωτήρια φάρμακα, ἡ μὲν τὰ πάθη κατεπάδουσα καὶ τὸ ἄρρυθμον ἐν ἡμῖν ῥυθμοῖς, τὸ δ' ἐκμελὲς μέλεσι, τὸ δ' ἄμετρον μέτροις ἐπιστομίζουσα—ποικίλον δ' ἐστὶ καὶ παντοδαπὸν ἕκαστον, ὡς μουσικοὶ καὶ [264] ποιηταὶ μαρτυροῦσιν, οἷς | πιστεύειν ἀναγκαῖον ἐπιτήδευμα τοῖς εὖ πεπαιδευμένοις—, ὁ δὲ λόγος ἐπέχων καὶ ἀνακόπτων τὰς ἐπὶ κακίαν ὁρμὰς καὶ τοὺς κεκρατημένους ἀφροσύναις καὶ ἀηδίαῖς ἐκνοσηλεύων, μαλακώτερον μὲν τοὺς ὑπέικοντας,

PHILO

<sup>1</sup> mss. ταῦτα, which Cohn printed but corrected in his Addenda (from the Armenian) to τὰ ὦτα.

<sup>a</sup> i.e. in Attic law. See L. & S. (revised), which gives the reference to Aristotle, 'Ath. Pol. 49. 4, where we have δοκιμάζει 300

THE SPECIAL LAWS, I. 341-343

of incapable<sup>a</sup> given to them in the past, more, we are told, in pity than as a reproach. For when the eyes are destroyed, the capacities of the body are not merely overthrown, but actually perish. In 342 hearing too we have something very marvellous. By means of it we distinguish melodies and metres and rhythm, and with them the harmonies and consonances, and the varieties of genera and systems<sup>b</sup> and all the elements of music ; and again, the multitudinous kinds of set speeches delivered in the law-courts, in the senate, in laudations, as well as the language used in historical narrative and dialogues and discussions of matters of business which we are bound to have with those with whom we come in contact from time to time. For we may say in sum that the voice has a twofold capacity for speech and song. Both these are assessed by the ears to the benefit of the soul. For both are medicaments, health-giving and life- 343 preserving. Song charms away the passions and controls the irregular element in us with its rhythm, the discordant with its melodies, the immoderate with its measures. And each of these three assumes every variety of form, as the musicians and poets testify, belief in whom necessarily becomes habitual in those who have received a good education. Speech checks and hampers impulses to vice and effects the cure of those in whom foolish and distressful thoughts have gained the mastery. It deals more gently with δὲ τοὺς ἀδυνάτους ἢ βουλή. It then appears that the term includes paupers and τοὺς τὸ σῶμα πεπηρωμένους ὥστε μὴ δύνασθαι μηδὲν ἔργον ἐργάζεσθαι. See also the oration of Lysias 24, ὑπὲρ τοῦ ἀδυνάτου, where the defendant argues his right to the privileges.

<sup>b</sup> For the use of these words to translate γένη καὶ συστήματα see note on De Som. i. 28.

PHILO

σφοδρότερον δὲ τοὺς ἀφηνιάζοντας, αἴτιος γίνεται τῶν μεγίστων ὠφελειῶν.

- 344 LXIII. Τοιαῦτα συνέιροντες οἷ τε τοῦ νοῦ θιασῶται καὶ οἱ τῶν αἰσθήσεων οἱ μὲν ἐκείνον οἱ δὲ ταύτας θεοπλαστοῦσιν ὑπὸ φιλαυτίας ἐκλαθόμενοι τοῦ πρὸς ἀλήθειαν ὄντος θεοῦ. διὸ πάντας εἰκότως ἀπήλασεν ἱεροῦ συλλόγου, τοὺς τε τὰς ἰδέας ἀναιρουῦντας, “θλαδίας” ὑπειπῶν, καὶ τοὺς κατὰ τὸ παντελὲς ἀθέους, οἷς ὄνομα οἰκείον τὸ “ἀποκόπων” ἔθετο, καὶ τοὺς ἐξ ἐναντίας εἰσηγητὰς θεογονίας, οὓς ἐκάλεσεν “ἐκ πόρνης,” καὶ ἐπὶ πᾶσι τοὺς φιλαύτους, ὧν οἱ μὲν τὸν λογισμὸν, οἱ δ’ ἐκάστην τῶν αἰσθήσεων ἐξεθείωσαν· ἐπιέγονται γὰρ πάντες οὗτοι πρὸς τὸ αὐτὸ τέλος, εἰ καὶ ἀπὸ διαφερόντων ἄγονται βουλευμάτων, τὸν ἕνα καὶ ὄντως
- 345 ὄντα θεὸν παρησυχάζοντες. ἀλλ’ ἡμεῖς γε οἱ φοιτηταὶ καὶ γνώριμοι τοῦ προφήτου Μωυσέως τὴν τοῦ ὄντος ζήτησιν οὐ μεθυσόμεθα, τὴν ἐπιστήμην αὐτοῦ τέλος εὐδαιμονίας εἶναι νομίζοντες καὶ ζωὴν μακραίωνα, καθὰ καὶ ὁ νόμος φησὶ τοὺς προσκειμένους τῷ θεῷ ζῆν ἅπαντας, δόγμα τιθεὶς ἀναγκαῖον καὶ φιλόσοφον· ὄντως γὰρ οἱ μὲν ἄθεοι τὰς ψυχὰς τεθνάσιν, οἱ δὲ τὴν παρὰ τῷ ὄντι θεῷ τεταγμένοι τάξιν ἀθάνατον βίον ζῶσιν.

---

<sup>a</sup> As their particular name (to distinguish them from the θλάδιαι).

<sup>b</sup> See Deut. iv. 4. The meaning of the original is that the docile, more drastically with the rebellious, and thus becomes the source of the greatest possible benefits.

THE SPECIAL LAWS, I. 343-345

LXIII. Such is the chain of argument which leads 344 the votaries of mind and the votaries of the senses to ascribe divinity to their respective idols, forgetting in their self-assertion the God Who truly exists. And therefore Moses naturally banished them all from the holy congregation, both those who abolish the Forms, who appear under the name of "the crushed," and those who absolutely deny God, to whom he assigned the suitable<sup>a</sup> title of "the mutilated" and those who preach the opposite doctrine of a family of gods, called by him "the children of the harlot," and finally the self-assertive, one party of whom deify the reason, the other each several sense. For these last all press to the same goal, though influenced by different plans for attaining it, and ignore the one and really existing God. But we, the scholars and disciples of Moses, 345 will not forgo our quest of the Existent, holding that the knowledge of Him is the consummation of happiness. It is also agelong life. The law tells us that all who "cleave to God live,"<sup>b</sup> and herein it lays down a vital doctrine fraught with much wisdom. For in very truth the godless are dead in soul, but those who have taken service in the ranks of the God Who only is are alive, and that life can never die.

those who cleave to God when the others followed Baal-Peor are alive to-day. Philo gives this general meaning to the text in De Fug. 56 also.

INTRODUCTION TO DE SPECIALIBUS LEGIBUS, II

The Third Commandment (1-38).

While swearing at all is to be deprecated, since the simple word should be enough, to swear by parents or heaven and the like is better than using God's name (1-5), which many do recklessly (6-8). When swearing is necessary the oath must be performed, if it can be lawfully (9). To call God to witness a falsehood is impious (10-11). Criminal or vindictive oaths, however, should not be performed (12-17). Philo then condemns the arrogant swearing of the extravagant rich and contrasts them with others who though rich live simply (18-23). He discusses vows and particularly the rule by which widows, unlike virgins and wives, cannot cancel a vow (24-25). This is susceptible of an allegorical interpretation (28-31). This is interrupted by 26-27, which returns to the subject of perjury and the penalties for the perjurer and his accomplices. The Pentateuchal regulations for assessing votive offerings are then discussed, when the votary offers (a) himself (32-34), (b) an animal (35-36), (c) a house (37-38).

The Fourth Commandment (39-222).

Philo begins with a sketch of the way in which he proposes to treat the subject (39), followed by some remarks on the sacred number Seven (41), and a list of the ten feasts (41).

The first feast is the feast of every day. This conception, that the ideal life of the true philosopher is one continuous feast, is worked out with much eloquence (42-49). For its scriptural foundation see note on § 45.

The second feast, the Sabbath itself, after some further remarks on the mystical properties of Seven (56-59), is set forth partly as a necessary respite from toil (60), but still more as a time for exercising the soul in contrast to the body (61-64). The prohibition of fire (65), and the extension of the rest to servants (65-68), and to cattle (69-70) are noted. With the Sabbath we may associate other institutions which bear witness to the sanctity of Seven: (a) the cancellation of debts in the seventh year (71-73), and this leads to a denunciation of lending money on interest in general (74-78); (b) liberation of slaves in the same year, which provides an occasion for the lesson of treating slaves humanely (79-85); (c) the same lesson that consideration should be shewn not only by masters to servants, but by rulers to subjects is taught by the "sabbatical year," which leaves the land fallow in the seventh year (86-103), and also by throwing the fields open encourages generosity to the poor (104-109); (d) the same applies to the fiftieth year, in which estates return to the original owners (110-115), with special regulations about houses (116-121) and debtors and purchased slaves (122-123). This is followed by some general remarks (for the connexion see note on § 124) about the laws of inheritance (124-132), and the right of primogeniture (133-139).

THE SPECIAL LAWS, II

The third feast is the New Moon, and some observations on the place of the moon in the system of things is subjoined (140-144). Fourth is the Passover, a feast in which each layman acts as priest, interpreted by Philo as the "Crossing" from the passions to wisdom (145-149). Fifth is "Unleavened Bread," and reasons are given for the time at which it occurs and the nature of the food enjoined (150-161). Sixth, the offering of the "Sheaf," is combined with the two just mentioned. Philo takes this first offering of the harvest in the double aspect of a thank-offering, (a) for the whole world (162-167), and (b) for Israel, acknowledging how much the harvest owes to nature rather than man (168-175).

Seventh is the Feast of Weeks or Pentecost (179-187). Eighth is the opening of the sacred month, or Feast of Trumpets (188-192). Ninth the Fast or Day of Atonement (193-203). Tenth the Feast of Tabernacles (204-214). All these are accompanied by a number of reflections on their origin and significance. Besides these there is the rite of offering the "Basket," for which no date can be fixed (215-222).

The Fifth Commandment (223-241).

The claims of parents are justified on the grounds that their position as Creators is analogous to that of God, and that they are the seniors, the benefactors, the rulers and the absolute masters or owners of their children (223-236). But the commandment also enjoins respect to age in general (237-238), and also the duty of parents to avoid undue indulgence (239-241).

The treatise concludes with declaring death to be the appropriate punishment for disobedience, to the Fifth (242-248), the Fourth (249-251), the Third (252-254), the Second and First (255-256). The rewards for obedience, except the Fifth, for which a definite reward is mentioned, are to be found in the thought that virtue is its own reward (257-262).

For Cohn's Numeration of Chapters see Gen. Int. p. xviii.

ΠΕΡΙ ΤΩΝ ΑΝΑΦΕΡΟΜΕΝΩΝ ΕΝ ΕΙΔΕΙ ΝΟΜΩΝ ΕΙΣ ΤΡΙΑ ΓΕΝΗ ΤΩΝ ΔΕΚΑ ΛΟΓΙΩΝ, ΤΟ ΤΡΙΤΟΝ, ΤΟ ΤΕΤΑΡΤΟΝ, ΤΟ ΠΕΜΠΤΟΝ· ΤΟ ΠΕΡΙ ΕΥΘΡΚΙΑΣ ΚΑΙ ΣΕΒΑΣΜΟΥ ΤΗΣ ΙΕΡΑΣ ΕΒΔΟΜΗΣ ΚΑΙ ΓΟΝΕΩΝ ΤΙΜΗΣ

[270]

1 I. Ἐν μὲν τῇ πρὸ ταύτης συντάξει δύο κεφάλαια ἠκρίβωται τῶν δέκα, τό τε περὶ τοῦ μὴ νομίζειν θεοὺς αὐτοκρατεῖς ἑτέρους καὶ τὸ περὶ τοῦ μηδὲν θεοπλαστεῖν χειρόκμητον· εἴρηται δὲ καὶ τὰ ἑκατέρῳ τῶν κατὰ μέρος διατεταγμένων ἀρμόττοντα νόμιμα. νυνὶ δὲ περὶ τριῶν τῶν κατὰ στοιχον ἑξῆς διαλεξώμεθα πάλιν ἐφαρμόττοντες τὰ προσήκοντα

2 τῶν ἐν εἴδει. πρῶτον δ' ἐστὶ τῶν τριῶν τὸ μὴ θεοῦ ὄνομα λαμβάνειν ἐπὶ ματαίῳ. ὁ γὰρ τοῦ σπουδαίου, φησί, λόγος ὄρκος ἔστω, βέβαιος, ἀκλινής, ἀψευδέστατος, ἐρηρειασμένος ἀληθείᾳ. κἂν εἰ ὀμνῦναι μέντοι βιάζοντο αἱ χρεῖαι, πατρὸς ἢ

[271] μητρὸς ζώντων μὲν ὑγείαν καὶ εὐετηρίαν, | τετελευτηκότων δὲ τὴν μνήμην ὄρκον ποιητέον· ἀπεικονίσματα γὰρ οὗτοί γε καὶ μιμήματα θείας δυνάμεως εἰσι, τοὺς μὴ ὄντας εἰς τὸ εἶναι παραγαγόντες.

BOOK II

ON THE SPECIAL LAWS WHICH FALL UNDER THREE OF THE TEN GENERAL COMMANDMENTS, NAMELY THE THIRD ON THE DUTY OF KEEPING OATHS,<sup>a</sup> THE FOURTH ON REVERENCING THE SEVENTH DAY, AND THE FIFTH ON HONOURING PARENTS

I. In the preceding treatise we have dealt fully 1 with two of the ten heads, one directed against the acknowledgement of other sovereign gods, the other against giving divine honours to any work of men's hands. And we have described such among the particular enactments of the law as may be properly classed under either head. Let us now discuss the three next in the list, again subjoining those of the special ordinances which belong to them.

The first of the three forbids us to take God's name 2 in vain : the good man's word, it means, should be an oath, firm, unswerving, utterly free from falsehood, securely planted on truth. And if indeed occasion should force us to swear, the oath should be by a father and mother, their good health and welfare if they are alive, their memory if they are dead. For parents are copies and likenesses of the divine power, since they have brought the non-existent into exist-<sup>a</sup> As the sequel shews, a very inadequate term to describe §§ 1-38.

PHILO

3 ἀναγέγραπταί τις ἐν τοῖς νόμοις τῶν ἀρχηγετῶν καὶ ἐπὶ σοφία μάλιστα θαυμασθέντων ὀμνύς “κατὰ τοῦ φόβου τοῦ πατρός,” ὑπὲρ ὠφελείας, οἶμαι, τῶν ἔπειτα καὶ διδαχῆς ἀναγκαίας, ἵνα τοὺς γονεῖς ὄν χρῆ τὸν τρόπον τιμῶσι στέργοντες ὡς εὐεργέτας καὶ εὐλαβούμενοι ὡς ὑπὸ φύσεως κατασταθέντας ἄρχοντας καὶ μὴ ῥαδίως ἐπιχειρῶσιν ὀνομάζειν θεόν.
 4 ἄξιον ἐπαινεῖν καὶ τοὺς, εἴ ποτε βιασθεῖεν ὀμνύναι, τῷ μέλλειν καὶ βραδύνειν καὶ ἀποκνεῖν ἐμποιοῦντας δέος οὐ μόνον τοῖς ὄρωσιν ἀλλὰ καὶ τοῖς προκαλουμένοις εἰς τὸν ὄρκον· εἰώθασι γὰρ ἀναφθεγξάμενοι τοσοῦτον μόνον “νῆ τόν” ἢ “μὰ τόν,” μηδὲν προσπααραλαβόντες, ἐμφάσει τῆς ἀποκοπῆς τρανοῦν 5 ὄρκον οὐ γενόμενον. ἀλλὰ καὶ προσπααραλαβέτω τις, εἰ βούλεται, μὴ μέντοι τὸ ἀνωτάτω καὶ πρεσ-βύτατον εὐθύς αἴτιον, ἀλλὰ γῆν, ἥλιον, ἀστέρας, οὐρανόν, τὸν σύμπαντα κόσμον· ἀξιολογώτατα γὰρ ταῦτα ἄτε καὶ πρεσβύτερα τῆς ἡμετέρας γενέσεως καὶ προσέτι ἀγήρω διαιωιοῦντα τῇ τοῦ πεποιη-6 κότος γνώμη. II. τοσαύτη δέ τινες εὐχερεία καὶ ῥαθυμία χρῶνται, ὥστε τὰ ἐν γενέσει πάντα ταῦθ’ ὑπερβάντες ἐπὶ τὸν ποιητὴν καὶ πατέρα τῶν ὄλων ἀνατρέχειν τῷ λόγῳ τολμῶσι, μὴ τόπους εἰ βέβηλοι ἢ ἱεροί, μὴ καιροὺς εἰ ἐπιτήδειοι, μὴ αὐτοὺς εἰ καθαροὶ σῶμα καὶ ψυχὴν, μὴ τὰ πράγματα εἰ μεγάλα, μὴ τὰς χρείας εἰ ἀναγκαῖαι προξετάσαντες, ἀλλά, τὸ λεγόμενον δὴ τοῦτο, <sup>a</sup> i.e. Jacob, see Gen. xxxi. 53. “The fear” really means (see v. 42) the God whom Isaac feared; so in R.V. it is printed “Fear.” Philo evidently takes it to mean Jacob’s own fear of Isaac.

<sup>b</sup> See App. p. 624.

<sup>c</sup> ἐμφάσει is used in the rhetorical sense of the significance

THE SPECIAL LAWS, II. 3-6

ence. In the laws we read of one of our first founders,<sup>a</sup> 3 who are particularly admired for their wisdom, that he swore by the fear of his father, a fact recorded, I believe, for the benefit of posterity and to teach them the necessary lesson that they should honour their parents in the proper way by showing affection to them as benefactors and awe of them as rulers appointed by nature, and should not lightly essay to use the name of God. Those persons too deserve 4 praise whose unwillingness, tardiness and shrinking, if they are ever forced to swear, raise qualms not only in the spectators but even in those who are administering the oath: such people are in the habit of saying "Yes, by —" or "No, by—"<sup>b</sup> and add nothing more, and by thus breaking off suggest<sup>c</sup> the clear sense of an oath without actually making it. But 5 also a person may add to his "Yes" or "No" if he wish, not indeed the highest and most venerable and primal cause, but earth, sun, stars, heaven, the whole universe.<sup>d</sup> For these are worthy of highest respect, since they have precedence in time over our place in creation, and also will remain for ever untouched by age according to the purpose of Him Who made them.

II. But so great is the lightness 6 and heedlessness shown by some that they pass by all these works of creation and allow their words to dash on to the Maker and Father of all, never staying to examine whether the place is profane or holy, whether the occasion is suitable, whether they themselves are pure in body and soul, whether the business is important or the object necessary. Instead, conveyed by the ἀποκοπή. Heinemann's translation "and so suddenly break off their affirmation so that the oath is not actually effected" misses the full meaning.

<sup>a</sup> Contrast Matthew v. 34 f.

PHILO

- “ ἀνίπτοις χερσὶ ” πάντα φύροντες, ὡς δέον, ἐπει-δὴ γλῶτταν ἢ φύσις αὐτοῖς ἔδωρήσατο, λελυμένη 7 χρῆσθαι καὶ ἀχαλινώτῳ πρὸς ἃ μὴ θέμις· οὓς ἐχρῆν ὀργάνων τῷ καλλίστῳ, ᾧ φωνὴ καὶ λόγος τὰ βιωφελέστατα καὶ κοινωνίας αἴτια τετράνωται, πρὸς τιμὴν καὶ σεμνότητα καὶ εὐδαιμονισμόν κατα-8 χρῆσθαι τοῦ πάντων αἰτίου. νυνὶ δ’ ὑπὸ τῆς ἄγαν ἀσεβείας περὶ ὧν ἂν τύχῃ τὰς φρικωδεστάτας ὀνομάζουσι κλήσεις καὶ ἄλλα ἐπ’ ἄλλοις ἐπιφέροντες ὀνόματα σωρηδὸν οὐκ ἐρυθριῶσι, νομίζοντες τῇ πυκνότητι καὶ τῷ συνεχεῖ τῶν ἐπαλλήλων ὄρκων οὐ διανοοῦνται περιέσεσθαι, λίαν ὄντες εὐήθεις· οὐ γὰρ πίστεως ἢ πολυορκία τεκμήριον ἀλλ’ ἀπιστίας ἐστὶ παρὰ τοῖς εὖ φρονοῦσιν.
- 9 III. Ἐὰν δέ τις ἐκβιασθεὶς ὁμόση περὶ παντὸς [272] οὐτινοσοῦν, ὃ μὴ νόμος | ἀπειρήκε, παντὶ σθένει καὶ μηχανῇ πάσῃ τὸν ὄρκον βεβαιούτῳ μηδὲν ἐμποδῶν τιθέμενος εἰς τὴν τοῦ γνωσθέντος τελείωσιν, καὶ μάλιστα ἐπειδὰν μὴ ὄργαι ἀτίθασοι ἢ λελυττηκότες ἔρωτες ἢ ἐπιθυμίαι ἀκάθεκτοι τὴν διάνοιαν ἐκμήνω-σιν, ὡς ἀγνοῆσαι τὰ λεγόμενα καὶ πραττόμενα, λογισμῷ δὲ καὶ διανοίᾳ νηφούση ποιῆται τὸν ὄρκον.
 10 τί γὰρ ἄμεινον ἢ ἀψευδεῖν παρ’ ὄλον τὸν βίον καὶ ταῦτα μάρτυρι θεῷ χρώμενον; ὄρκος γὰρ οὐδὲν

<sup>a</sup> Il. vi. 266 “I fear to pour a libation to Zeus with unwashed hands.”

<sup>b</sup> Lit. “causes” in antithesis to the “cause” below. But in English we can hardly call “words” the “cause of fellowship.” I have introduced “creators” and “created” to preserve something of the antithesis.

<sup>c</sup> καὶ ταῦτα, “and that too,” is difficult. The natural mean-

THE SPECIAL LAWS, II. 6-10

with unwashed hands,<sup>a</sup> as the phrase goes, they make a foul brew of everything, as though Nature's gift of a tongue justified them in using it without restraint or bridle for unlawful purposes, whereas 7 that most excellent of instruments which gives clear expression to voice and words, those great benefactors of human life and creators<sup>b</sup> of a sense of fellowship, should have been employed to the full by them to ascribe honour and majesty and blessedness to the Cause Which has created all things. As it is, so 8 highly impious are they that on any chance matter the most tremendous titles are on their lips and they do not blush to use name after name, one piled upon another, thinking that the continual repetition of a string of oaths will secure them their object. A very foolish delusion. For in the eyes of sensible people much swearing is a proof, not of good faith, but of faithlessness.

III. But if anyone has been absolutely compelled 9 to swear on any matter whatever, so long as it is not forbidden by the law, he should use all his strength and every means in his power to make good his oath, and allow nothing to hinder him from carrying out his decision, particularly when he has taken the oath in a reasonable and sober frame of mind, not distraught by savage tempers or frenzied yearnings or uncontrollable desires, so that he does not know what he says or does. For what is better than to practise 10 a lifelong veracity, and to have God as our witness thereto?<sup>c</sup> For an oath is nothing else than to calling is that having taken God as our witness enhances the excellence of keeping to the truth. But this contradicts what he has said against swearing at all. Perhaps in this sentence he passes for a moment from oaths to vows, i.e. from swearing by God to swearing to God.

PHILO

- ἄλλο ἢ μαρτυρία θεοῦ περὶ πράγματος ἀμφισβητου-μένου· θεὸν δὲ μὴ ἐπ' ἀληθεῖ<sup>1</sup> καλεῖν πάντων ἀν-11 οσιώτατον. ὁ γὰρ τοῦτο ποιῶν μόνον οὐκ ἄντικρυς βοᾷ, κἂν ἡσυχάζειν δοκῇ· “ σοὶ χρῶμαι τοῦ ἀδικεῖν προκαλύμματι· αἰδουμένῳ μοι τὸ δοκεῖν ἀμαρτάνειν συνέργησον, ἀντ' ἐμοῦ πονηρευομένου τὴν αἰτίαν ὑπόστηθι· μέλει γάρ μοι πλημμελοῦντι μὴ φαύλῳ νομίζεσθαι· σὺ δὲ τῆς παρὰ τοῖς πολλοῖς δόξης ἀλογεῖς οὐδὲν εὐφημίας ἐπιστρεφόμενος.” ἄπερ καὶ λέγειν καὶ ἐννοεῖσθαι ἀσεβέστατον· ἀγανακτήσαι γὰρ ἂν οὐχ ὅτι θεὸς ὁ πάσης κακίας ἀ-μέτοχος, ἀλλὰ καὶ πατήρ καὶ ὀθνεῖος ἄνθρωπος μὴ τελείως ἀρετῆς ἄγευστος, εἰ τοιαῦτα ἀκούει.
- 12 Πάντας μὲν οὖν ὄρκους, ὡς ἔφην, βεβαιωτέον, ὅσοι περὶ καλῶν καὶ συμφερόντων γίνονται πρὸς ἐπανόρθωσιν ἰδίων ἢ κοινῶν πραγμάτων, φρονή-σεως καὶ δικαιοσύνης καὶ ὀσιότητος ἡγουμένων.— IV. τούτοις ἐμφέρονται καὶ τῶν εὐχῶν αἱ νομιμώταται διὰ περιουσίαν ἀγαθῶν ἢ παρόντων ἢ προσδοκωμένων γινόμεναι—, τοὺς δ' ἔνεκα τῶν 13 ἐναντίων ἐπικυροῦν οὐκ εὐαγές. εἰσὶ γὰρ οἱ ὁμ-νύουσιν, ἐὰν τύχη, κλοπὰς καὶ ἱεροσυλίας ἢ φθορὰς καὶ μοιχείας ἢ τραύματα καὶ σφαγὰς ἢ τι τῶν ὁμοιοτρόπων κακῶν ἐργάσεσθαι,<sup>2</sup> καὶ ἀνυπερθέτως αὐτὰ δρῶσι ποιούμενοι πρόφασιν τὸ εὐορκεῖν, ὡς οὐκ ἄμεινον<sup>3</sup> καὶ θεῷ κεχαρισμένον μᾶλλον τῆς (οὐ)

<sup>1</sup> mss. ἀληθεία (= ἀληθεία).

<sup>2</sup> mss. ἐργάσασθαι.

<sup>3</sup> ὡς οὐκ ἄμεινον <ὄν> would, I think, be more usual Greek.
 Cf. De Dec. 92.

THE SPECIAL LAWS, II. 10-13

God to bear witness in a disputed matter, but to call God to witness to a falsehood is the very height of profanity. To do so is practically to say outright, 11 even though one appear not to utter a word, "I take Thee as a cloak for my wrongdoing. I am ashamed to appear a sinner, be Thou my accomplice; take the charge of my villainy upon Thyself instead of me. For it is a matter of weight to me in my wickedness not to be thought a rogue, but Thou carest not for the opinion of the multitude and troublest not that men should speak well of Thee." Such words or thoughts are impious in the extreme. To hear them would rouse the indignation, not only of God, Who is exempt from all wickedness, but also of a father or even a stranger who knew anything at all of the flavour of virtue.

So then, as I have said, all oaths must be made good 12 so long as they are concerned with matters honourable and profitable for the better conduct of public or private affairs and are subject to the guidance of wisdom and justice and righteousness, IV. under which head come also the perfectly lawful vows made in acknowledgement of an abundant measure of blessings either present or expected. But when the oaths have objects of the opposite kind in view, religion forbids us to put them into execution. For 13 there are some who swear at random<sup>a</sup> to commit acts of theft and sacrilege or rape and adultery or assaults and murders or other similar crimes and carry them out without hesitation on the pretext that they must be faithful to their oaths, as though it were not better and more pleasing to God to abstain from wrong-

<sup>a</sup> Or "as opportunity offers."

PHILO

- παραβάσεως<sup>1</sup> τῶν ὄρκων τὸ μηδὲν ἀδικεῖν, ἐπεὶ δικαιοσύνη καὶ πᾶσα ἀρετὴ νόμος ἐστὶ πάτριος καὶ θεσμὸς ἀρχαῖος· νόμοι δὲ καὶ θεσμοὶ τί ἕτερον ἢ φύσεως ἱεροὶ λόγοι τὸ βέβαιον καὶ τὸ πάγιον ἐξ 14 αὐτῶν ἔχοντες, ὡς ὄρκων ἀδιαφορεῖν; ἴστω δὴ πᾶς ἐνωμότως ἀδिका δρῶν, ὅτι εὐορκεῖ μὲν οὐ, τὸν δὲ πολλῆς φυλακῆς καὶ ἐπιμελείας ἄξιον ὄρκον ἀνα-τρέπει, ὧ τὰ καλὰ καὶ δίκαια ἐπισφραγίζεται· προστίθησι γὰρ ὑπαίτια ὑπαίτιοις, ἐν οὐ δέοντι [273] γινόμενοις ὄρκοις, οὓς πολὺ | βέλτιον ἦν ἡσυχάζε-15 σθαι, πράξεις παρανόμους. ἀπεχόμενος οὖν τοῦ ἀδικοπραγεῖν ποτνιασθῶ τὸν θεόν, ἵνα μεταδῶ τῆς ἴλεω δυνάμεως αὐτῷ συγγνοὺς ἐφ' οἷς ἀβουλία χρυσάμενος ὤμοσε· διπλάσια γὰρ αἰρεῖσθαι κακά, δυνάμενον τὴν ἡμίσειαν αὐτῶν ἀποφορτίσασθαι, 16 μανία καὶ φρενοβλάβεια δυσίατος. εἰσὶ δ' οἱ τὴν φύσιν ἄμικτοι καὶ ἀκοινωνήτοι δι' ὑπερβολὴν μισανθρωπίας γεγονότες ἢ καὶ ὑπ' ὄργῆς οἷα χαλεπῆς δεσποίνης ἐκβιασθέντες ὄρκῳ τὴν ἀγριό-τητα πιστοῦνται τῶν ἡθῶν, οἵτινες οὐ φασι ὁμοτράπεζον ἢ ὁμωρόφιον ἐξεῖν τὸν δεῖνα ἢ τὸν δεῖνα ἢ πάλιν τῷ δεῖνι μὴ παρέξειν ὠφέλειάν τινα ἢ παρ' ἐκείνου τι λήψεσθαι μέχρι τελευτῆς· ἔστι δ' ὅτε καὶ μετὰ τὴν τελευτὴν τὸ ἀσύμβατον διαφυλάτ<sup>1</sup> Cohn following Mangey prints for the τῆς παραβάσεως of the mss. βεβαιώσεως. I have hesitated in making the correction printed above, because it seems strange that anything so obvious should have escaped Mangey, Cohn, Heinemann and others. But I can see nothing against it. The double negative is rather effective than otherwise. The omission of the negative in the mss. of Philo is common (see in this treatise §§ 129, 132), and Philo was no doubt familiar with the use of οὐ with a substantive, as τὴν τῶν γεφυρῶν . . . οὐ διάλυσιν in Thuc. i. 137 and elsewhere.

THE SPECIAL LAWS, II. 13-16

doing than to abstain from breaking their oaths. Justice and every virtue are commanded by the law of our ancestors and by a statute established of old, and what else are laws and statutes but the sacred words of Nature, possessing intrinsically a fixity and stability which makes them equivalent to oaths? And everyone who commits a wrong because he has 14 sworn to do so may be assured that the act is not one of faithfulness to a pledge but breaks the oath so worthy of all careful observance with which she sets her seal<sup>a</sup> on what is just and excellent. For he adds guilt to guilt when oaths taken for improper purposes which had better have been left unspoken are followed by actions which violate the law. Let him 15 abstain, then, from wrongful conduct and supplicate God, that He may grant him a share of what His gracious power can give and pardon him for what he has sworn so unadvisedly. For to choose a double measure of ill when he could disburden himself of the half of it is the act of one almost hopelessly imbecile and insane.

But there are some who, either 16 because through excessive moroseness their nature has lost the sense of companionship and fellow-feeling or because they are constrained by anger which rules them like a stern mistress, confirm the savagery of their temper with an oath. They declare that they will not admit such and such a person to their board or under their roof, or again, that they will not render assistance to so and so or accept anything from him till his life's-end. Sometimes they carry on their vindictiveness after that end has come and leave <sup>a</sup> I take φύσις to be the subject of ἐπισφραγίζεται. Heine-mann takes the verb as passive, but I can find no example of this.

PHILO

- τουςιν οὐδὲ νεκροῖς τοῖς σώμασιν ἐπιτρέποντες ἐν 17 διαθήκαις<sup>1</sup> τὰ νομιζόμενα παρασχέιν. οἷς παραινεσαίμι ἂν καθάπερ καὶ τοῖς προτέροις, εὐχαῖς καὶ θυσίαις ἐξευμενίζεσθαι τὸν θεόν, ἵνα εὖρωνται τινὰ ψυχικῶν ἀρρωστημάτων θεραπείαν ἀναγκαίαν, ἃ μηδεὶς ἀνθρώπων ἰκανὸς ἰάσασθαι.
- 18 V. "Ἐτεροι δ' εἰσὶ κομπασταὶ τῶν ὑπ' ἀλαζονείας φυσωμένων,<sup>2</sup> οἱ λιμοδοξοῦντες οὐδενὶ τῶν εἰς τὴν ὠφελιμωτάτην ὀλιγοδείαν χρῆσθαι δικαιοῦσιν, ἀλλὰ καὶ προτρέπη τις ἔνεκα τοῦ τὸν ἀφηγιασμὸν τῶν ἐπιθυμιῶν ἀναχαιτίσαι, τὴν νουθεσίαν ὕβριν εἶναι νομίζουσι καὶ πρὸς τὸν ἀβροδίαιτον ὠθούμενοι βίον ἀλογοῦσι τῶν σωφρονιστῶν, γέλωτα καὶ χλεύην τιθέμενοι τὰς φρονήσεως καλὰς ὁμοῦ καὶ λυσιτελε-19 στάτας ὑφηγήσεις. εἰ δὲ δὴ καὶ τύχοι τις εἶναι περιουσία καὶ ἀφθονία τῶν περὶ τὸν βίον, ὄρκοις ἐπισφραγίζονται τὴν χρῆσιν καὶ ἀπόλαυσιν τῶν εἰς πολυτέλειαν· οἷον δὴ τι λέγω· πρῶτην τις τῶν οὐκ ὀλίγα κεκτημένων ὑγρὸν καὶ διαρρέοντα βίον ἀспаσάμενος, ἐπειδὴ πρεσβύτης παρὼν συγγενῆς ἢ πατρικὸς ὡς γ' οἶμαι φίλος ἐνουθέτει πρὸς τὸ σεμνότερον καὶ αὐστηρότερον τὴν δίαιταν παρακαλῶν μεταβαλεῖν, τὴν παραίνεσιν οὐ μετρίως δυσχεράνας ὤμοσεν ἀντιφιλονεικῶν, ἕως ἂν τὰς

<sup>1</sup> Mangey preferred θήκαις. See note a.

<sup>2</sup> Cohn regards τῶν . . . φυσωμένων as corrupt, and Heinemann would expunge κομπασταὶ as a gloss, but see note b.

---

<sup>a</sup> Mangey's suggestion of θήκαις (or ταῖς θήκαις?) for διαθήκαις, i.e. "in the tomb" is tempting. That the implacable man should take steps to insure that when he himself is dead his enemy should suffer after his death, seems rather absurd.

THE SPECIAL LAWS, II. 16-19

directions in their wills<sup>a</sup> against even granting the customary rites to his corpse. To such persons I 17 would give the advice which I gave to the former class, that they should propitiate God with prayers and sacrifices to win from Him what their needs demand, namely, the healing treatment of their spiritual distempers which no human power is competent to cure.

V. But there are others, boastful persons,<sup>b</sup> of the 18 sort that is puffed up by arrogance, who in their craving for high position determine to have nothing to do in any way with the frugal, the truly profitable mode of living. Indeed, if any rebuke them in order to rein in the unruliness of their desires, they regard the admonition as an insult, and as they press forward to a career of luxury disregard their correctors and hold the admirable and also highly valuable instructions of wisdom a matter for laughter and mockery. And if they happen to have some abundance 19 of resources and means of living on a lavish scale, they employ oaths to set the seal on their use and enjoyment of the wealth which enables them to spend so freely. Here is an instance of what I mean. A short time ago a man of considerable property who had found a loose and dissipated style of living to his taste, was in the presence of an elderly person, a relation or old family friend, I believe, who was reproving him and advising him to make a change and conduct himself with more strictness and seriousness. The other strongly resented this reproof and countered the challenge by swearing that so long as <sup>b</sup> Cohn's difficulty seems to me imaginary. I understand the κομπασται to be persons who talk in the truculent manner described below. But this is not necessarily true of all who are "puffed up by arrogance."

PHILO

- χορηγίας ἔχη καὶ παρασκευάς, μηδενὶ χρήσεσθαι τῶν εἰς εὐτέλειαν, μὴ κατὰ πόλιν, μὴ κατ' ἀγρούς, μὴ πλέων, μὴ πεζεύων, ἀλλ' αἰεὶ καὶ πανταχοῦ τὸν πλοῦτον ἐπιδείξεσθαι. πλούτου δὲ ταυθ', ὡς ἔοικεν, ἐπίδειξις οὐκ ἔστι μᾶλλον ἢ ἀλαζονείας καὶ
- 20 ἀκρασίας. καίτοι τῶν ἐν ταῖς μεγάλας ἡγεμονίαις οὐκ ὀλίγοι μέχρι νῦν εἰσιν οἱ παμπληθεῖς ἔχοντες παρασκευὰς καὶ χορηγίας ἀφθόνους, ὥσπερ ἐξ ἀνάου τινὸς πηγῆς πλούτου ρέοντος αὐτοῖς ἀδιαστάτως, ὅμως ἐφ' ᾧ καὶ οἱ πένητες ἡμεῖς ἔστιν ὅτε τρέπονται, κεραμεῶς κύλικας καὶ
- [274] ὀβελίας ἄρτους καὶ ἐλαίας ἢ τυρόν ἢ λάχανα | προσόψημα, καὶ θέρους μὲν περιζῶμα καὶ λεπτήν ὀθόνην, χειμῶνος δὲ χλαῖναν ἄρραγῆ καὶ στιφρὰν καὶ τὰ πρὸς τὴν κοίτην ἔστιν ὅτε χαμαίστρωτα, πολλὰ χαίρειν φράσαντες κλίνας ἐλεφαντίναις ἢ χελώνης ἢ χρυσοῦ πεποιημέναις καὶ στρωμαῖς ἀνθοβαφέσι καὶ ἐσθήσιν ἀλουργίσι καὶ πεμμάτων μελιπήκτων περιεργίαις καὶ τραπεζῶν πολυτελείαις.
- 21 αἴτιον δ' οὐ μόνον, οἶμαι, τὸ φύσεως αὐτοὺς εὐμοίρου λαχεῖν, ἀλλὰ καὶ τὸ παιδείας ὀρθῆς ἐκ πρώτης ἡλικίας ἐφάψασθαι, ἥτις ἀνεδίδαξε πρὸ τῶν ἡγεμονικῶν τὰ ἀνθρώπινα τιμᾶν, ἥτις καὶ ἐνδαιτυμένη τῇ ψυχῇ μόνον οὐ καθ' ἐκάστην ἡμέραν ὑπομνήσκει τῆς ἀνθρωπότητος ἀπὸ τῶν ὑψηλῶν καὶ ὑπερόγκων ἀντισπῶσα καὶ στέλλουσα καὶ τὸ
- 22 ἄνισον ἰσότητι θεραπεύουσα. τοιγαροῦν τὰς πόλεις εὐθηνίας, εὐπορίας, εὐνομίας, εἰρήνης ἀναπεπλή-

<sup>a</sup> For a similar, though much longer, diatribe against luxurious living see De Som. ii. 18 ff.

THE SPECIAL LAWS, II. 19-22

he possessed his incomings and goods in stock he would take no step in the direction of economy, either in town or country, either on shipboard or on the road, but would make display of his wealth always and everywhere. But this is evidently not so much an exhibition of wealth as of arrogance and intemperance.

And yet to this day<sup>20</sup> among those who hold high offices of authority there are not a few who possessing accumulated goods in vast numbers and abundant resources, to whom wealth is ceaselessly flowing in as from a perennial fountain, still sometimes betake themselves to the use of such things as we poor people use.<sup>a</sup> Their cups are earthen, their loaves spit-baked, their extra dishes olives or cheese or greens : in the summer they wear a girdle and a thin shirt and in the winter a stout rent-proof mantle. The floor will sometimes serve for their bedstead : they have nothing to say to beds of ivory-work or made of tortoiseshell and gold, or bedding brocaded with flowers and purple-dyed garments and elaborate honey-cakes and tables spread with costly luxuries. The reason, I take it, is not only that they are blessed<sup>21</sup> with a fine nature, but also that they have been brought under the influence of a right training from their earliest years. That training has taught them to value the interests of the man before those of the ruler. It makes its abode in their souls, and hardly a day passes but it reminds it of their common humanity and draws them away from lofty and overweening thought, reduces their swollen dimensions, and medicines their inequality with equality. And<sup>22</sup> therefore they have filled their cities with plenty and abundance, with order and peace ; of no good thing

PHILO

- κασιν, ἀγαθὸν μὲν οὐδὲν ὑπεξελόμενοι, πάντα δ' ἀφειδῶς καὶ ἀταμιεύτως χαριζόμενοι. τὰ μὲν δὴ τῶν εὐγενῶν καὶ ὡς ἀληθῶς ἡγεμόνων ἔργα ταῦτα 23 καὶ τὰ τούτοις παραπλήσια. τὰ δὲ τῶν νεοπλούτων ἐκεῖνα πλάνω τινὶ τύχης εἰς πολυχρηματίαν περιηκόντων, οἱ τὸν ἀληθῆ καὶ βλέποντα πλοῦτον ἐξ ἀρετῶν τελείων συνεστῶτα καὶ τῶν κατ' ἀρετὰς πράξεων οὐδ' ὄναρ ἴσασι, τῷ δὲ τυφλῷ προσέπταισαν, ἐφ' οὗ σκηριπτόμενοι κατ' ἀναγκαῖον τὴν ἄγουσαν ὁδὸν οὐχ ὀρῶντες εἰς ἀνοδίας ἐκτρέπονται, θαυμάζοντες τὰ μηδεμιᾶς ἄξια σπουδῆς καὶ τὰ φύσει τίμια γελῶντες· οἷς ὁ ἱερὸς λόγος ὄρκον ἐν οὐ δέοντι καιρῷ ποιούμενοις οὐ μετρίως ἐπιτιμᾶ καὶ ὄνειδίζει· δυσκάθαρτοι γὰρ καὶ δυσίατοι, ὡς μηδὲ παρὰ θεῷ τῷ τὴν φύσιν ἴλεω συγγνώμης ἀξιοῦσθαι.
- 24 VI. Παρθένων δὲ καὶ γυναικῶν τὸ περὶ τὰς εὐχὰς αὐτοκρατές ἀφείλετο, τῶν μὲν παρθένων τοὺς πατέρας κυρίους, τῶν δὲ γυναικῶν τοὺς ἄνδρας ἐπιγνώμονας ἀποφήνας εἰς τε βεβαίωσιν τῶν ὄρκων καὶ λύσιν· καὶ μήποτ' εἰκότως· αἱ μὲν γὰρ διὰ νεότητα δύναμιν ὄρκων οὐκ ἴσασι, ὡς χρῆζειν τῶν ἐπικρινούντων, αἱ δὲ πολλάκις ὑπ' εὐχερείας ὁμνύουσιν, ἃ μὴ τοῖς ἀνδράσι συνοίσει· διόπερ αὐτοῖς ἀνέθηκε τὴν ἐξουσίαν τοῦ τὰ ὁμοσθέντα<sup>1</sup> φυλάττειν 25 ἢ τούναντίον. χῆραι δὲ μὴ ῥαδίως ὁμνύτωςαν—οὐ γὰρ ἔχουσι τοὺς παραιτητάς, οὔτε ἄνδρας ὧν δι-

<sup>1</sup> MSS. νομισθέντα οἱ ὀνομασθέντα.

<sup>a</sup> See on i. § 25.

<sup>b</sup> Or "stumbled over," but σκηριπτόμενοι seems to suggest

THE SPECIAL LAWS, II. 22-25

have they mulcted them, all good things have they bestowed freely, unsparingly and unstintedly. These and the like are the actions of noble men, rulers in the true sense. Far different are the 23 actions of the newly rich who have been wafted into opulence by a freak of fortune. They know nothing, have never even dreamt, of the true wealth which has eyes to see,<sup>a</sup> whose substance is the perfect virtues and the actions which conform with them; it is a blind wealth against which they have struck<sup>b</sup> and taking it for their support they fail of necessity to see the road before them and wander away into pathless wilds, admiring what deserves no serious respect and mocking at what nature would bid them honour. Such persons, when they take a mistimed oath, are rebuked and reproached in no gentle terms by the holy word. Hardly can they be purged and healed, so that even the gracious nature of God deems them unworthy of His pardon.

VI. <sup>c</sup> Virgins and wives are not allowed full control 24 of their vows by the law. It puts the virgins in subjection to their fathers and sets the husbands to judge for their wives whether the oaths are to hold good or to be cancelled. That is surely reasonable, for the former, owing to their youth, do not know the value of oaths, so that they need others to judge for them, and the latter often, through want of sense, swear what would not be to their husbands' advantage; and therefore it gave the husbands power to maintain the promise, or the reverse. <sup>d</sup> Widows who have none 25 to intervene on their behalf, neither husbands from a blind person (οὐχ ὁρῶντες) coming into collision with another blind person. Cf. "shall the blind lead the blind?"

<sup>c</sup> Num. xxx. 4 ff.

<sup>d</sup> Num. xxx. 9 ff.

εξεύχθησαν οὔτε πατέρας ἀφ' ὧν μετανέστησαν, ὅτε τὴν πρὸς γάμον ἀποικίαν ἐστέλλοντο—, ἐπειδὴ μένειν τοὺς τούτων ὄρκους ἀναγκαῖον ἐρημίᾳ τῶν 26 κηδομένων βεβαιουμένους.

[275] Ἐὰν δέ τις | ἐπιορκούντ' αἱ τινα εἰδὼς μὴ καταμνήσῃ ἢ ἀπελέγξῃ φιλίᾳ ἢ αἰδοῖ ἢ φόβῳ διδούς πλέον ἢ εὐσεβείᾳ, τοῖς αὐτοῖς ἐπιτιμίῳις ἔνοχος ἔστω· διαφέρει γὰρ τοῦ ἀδικεῖν οὐδὲν τὸ συν-

27 ἐπιγράφεσθαι ἀδικοῦντι. δίκαι δὲ κατ' ἐπιόρκων αἱ μὲν ἀνάκεινται τῷ θεῷ, αἱ δὲ ἀνθρώποις, θεῷ μὲν αἱ ἀνωτάτω καὶ μέγισται—ἴλεως γὰρ οὐ γίνεται τοῖς οὕτως ἀσεβοῦσιν, ἀλλὰ μένειν εἰς αἰεὶ δυσκαθάρτους ἔῃ, δικαίως, οἶμαι, καὶ προσηκόντως· ὁ γὰρ ἀμελήσας τί δεινὸν εἰ ἀν-

28 ἀμεληθήσεται, οἷς δίδωσι τὰ ἴσα καρπούμενος;—αἱ δ' ἀπ' ἀνθρώπων διάφοροι, θάνατος ἢ πληγαί, τῶν μὲν ἀμεινόνων καὶ περιπτῶν εἰς εὐσέβειαν θανάτου δίκας βεβαιούντων, τῶν δὲ μαλακώτερον χρωμένων ὀργαῖς δημοσίᾳ μάστιγι τυπτόντων ἀναφανδὸν ἐν κοινῷ· εἰσὶ δὲ καὶ πληγαὶ τοῖς μὴ δουλοπρεπέσιν οὐκ ἔλαττον δίκης θανάτου.

29 VII. Ταῦτα μὲν οὖν αἱ ῥηταὶ προστάξεις περιέχουσιν. ἔστι δὲ καὶ ἀλληγορηῆσαι τὰ περὶ τὸν

<sup>a</sup> Lev. v. 1. R.V. "If anyone sin in that he heareth the voice of adjuration" (A.V. "swearing") "he being a witness, whether he hath seen or known, if he do not utter it then he shall bear his iniquity." The meaning of "adjuration" apparently is a solemn appeal in the name of God to give witness (as in the bans of marriage). Philo takes the Greek word for adjuration ὄρκισμός as = "(false) swearing."

<sup>b</sup> Probably (as Heinemann), an allusion to the LXX form of the third commandment, "shall not purify," οὐ μὴ καθάρῃσι, for "shall not hold guiltless."

<sup>c</sup> No definite punishments for perjury, as distinguished

THE SPECIAL LAWS, II. 25-29

whom they have been parted, nor fathers whom they left behind them when they set out to find a new home in marriage, should be slow to swear, for their oaths stand beyond repeal, the inevitable result of their lack of protectors.

<sup>a</sup> If anyone knows that another has perjured himself, and influenced by friendship or shame or fear rather than piety, fails to inform against him or bring him to justice, he must be liable to the same penalties as the perjurer. For to range oneself on the side of the wrongdoer is just the same as committing the wrong. As to the penalties of perjury, some proceed from God, others from man. The highest and greatest are from God, Who is not gentle to such impiety, but suffers the guilty to remain for ever in their well-nigh hopeless uncleanness, a just and fitting penalty, I hold.<sup>b</sup> For he who has ignored God, how can he wonder if he is ignored in his turn and is repaid in his own coin? The penalties given by men are different, death or the lash.<sup>c</sup> The better kind whose piety is extra-fervent maintain the penalty of death, while those whose feelings of indignation are not so stern have the offenders scourged by order of the State in a public place and in the sight of all. Indeed except to persons of a servile nature, a flogging is as severe a penalty as death.

VII. Such is the sum and substance of these ordinances<sup>d</sup> taken literally. But we may also allegorize from false witness in general, appear in the Pentateuch. See on § 252.

<sup>d</sup> The allegory which follows only applies to §§ 24 and 25, and not to §§ 26-28. Have these sections been misplaced? The subject of vows which occupies the rest of the treatment of the third commandment differs radically from oaths, and the sudden return to the question of perjury is very awkward.

PHILO

- τόπον ἔχοντα θεωρίαν τὴν διὰ συμβόλων. εἰδέναι τοίνυν προσήκει ὅτι ὁ τῆς φύσεως ὀρθὸς λόγος πατρὸς ὁμοῦ καὶ ἀνδρὸς ἔχει δύναμιν, ἐπινοίας διαφόροις· ἀνδρὸς μὲν, ἐπειδὴ τὸν ἀρετῶν σπόρον ὡσπερ εἰς ἀγαθὴν ἄρουραν τὴν ψυχὴν καταβάλλεται, πατρὸς δ' ὅτι βουλὰς ἀγαθὰς καὶ πράξεις καλὰς καὶ σπουδαίας γεννᾶν ἐπέφυκε καὶ γεννήσας ἐκτρέφει ποτίμοις δόγμασιν, ἃ παιδεία καὶ σοφία
- 30 χορηγοῦσι. διάνοια δ' ἀπεικάζεται τοτὲ μὲν παρθένῳ, τοτὲ δὲ γυναικὶ ἢ χηρευούσῃ ἢ ἀνδρὶ ἔτι ἡρμοσμένη· παρθένος μὲν διάνοια ἀγνήν καὶ ἀδιάφθορον διαφυλάττουσα ἑαυτὴν ἀπὸ τε ἡδονῶν καὶ ἐπιθυμιῶν, ἔτι δὲ καὶ λυπῶν καὶ φόβων, ἐπιβούλων παθῶν, ἧς τὴν προστασίαν ὁ γεννητῆς ἀνήπτει πατήρ· τῆς δ' ὡς γυναικὸς ἀστείῳ λόγῳ τῷ κατ' ἀρετὴν συμβιούσης τὴν ἐπιμέλειαν ὁ αὐτὸς λόγος οὗτος ἐπαγγέλλεται σπείρων ἀνδρὸς τρόπον ἐννοίας
- 31 ἀρίστας. ἢ δ' ἂν ἀπορφανισθῇ ψυχὴ καὶ γενεᾶς τῆς κατὰ τὴν φρόνησιν καὶ ἐπιγαμίας τῆς κατὰ τὸν ὀρθὸν λόγον, χηρεύουσα τῶν καλλίστων καὶ ἔρημος οὐσα σοφίας, ὑπαίτιον ἐλομένη ζωὴν, ἔνοχος ἔστω οἷς ἔγνω καθ' ἑαυτῆς, ἰατρὸν ἀμαρτημάτων οὐκ ἔχουσα οὐθ' ὡς ἀνδρα συμβιωτὴν οὐθ' ὡς πατέρα γεννητὴν τὸν κατὰ σοφίαν λόγον.
- 32 VIII. Τῶν δὲ μὴ μόνον τὰς οὐσίας ἢ μέρη τούτων ἀλλὰ καὶ αὐτοὺς ἀνάθημα ποιησαμένων ἐν εὐχαίς ὤρισε τιμάς, οὐ πρὸς κάλλος ἢ μέγεθος ἢ τι [276] τῶν ὁμοιοτρόπων ἀπιδῶν, | ἀλλὰ πρὸς ἀριθμὸν

<sup>a</sup> For §§ 32-34 see Lev. xxvii. 2-8.

THE SPECIAL LAWS, II. 29-32

such parts of the subject as admit of being studied in a figurative sense. We should know, then, that nature's right reasoning has the functions both of a father and a husband, though the conceptions attached to each are different. It acts as a husband because it deposits the seed of virtue in the soul as in a fertile field. It acts as a father because its nature is to beget good intentions and noble and worthy actions, and then to foster its offspring with the water of the truths which education and wisdom abundantly supply. The mind is likened on the one hand to a virgin, on the other to a woman either in widowhood, or still united to a husband. As a virgin it keeps itself pure and uncorrupted from the malignant passions, pleasures and desires and griefs and fears. Over this virgin mind the father who begat it has assumed authority. But when, like a wife, it dwells with virtuous reasoning as its worthy mate, that same reasoning promises to take charge of it and impregnates it husband-like with thoughts of highest excellence. But the soul, which is bereaved of its birth-tie with sound sense or its marriage-tie with right reasoning, is widowed of all that is most excellent and, deserted by wisdom because it has chosen a life of guilt, must stand bound by the decision which it has made to its own undoing. It has none to heal its errors, no reasoning of wisdom, either to live with it as its husband or to act as its father and begetter.

VIII. <sup>a</sup> In dealing with those who have dedicated votive offerings, not only of their property or parts of it, but of themselves, the law laid down a scale of valuation in which no regard is paid to beauty or stature or anything of the kind, but all are assessed

PHILO

- ἴσον, διακρίνας ἄνδρας αὐτὸ μόνον γυναικῶν καὶ 33 νηπίους τελειῶν. κελεύει γὰρ ἀπὸ μὲν εἰκοσαετίας ἄχρις ἑξήκονταετίας ἄνδρὸς εἶναι τιμὴν δραχμὰς διακοσίας νομίσματος ὀλαργύρου, γυναικὸς δὲ εἴκοσι πρὸς ταῖς ἑκατόν, ἀπὸ δὲ πενταετίας ἄχρις εἰκοσαετίας τοῦ μὲν ἄρρενος δραχμὰς ὀγδοήκοντα, τῆς δὲ θηλείας τεσσαράκοντα, ἀπὸ δὲ βρέφους εἰς πενταετίαν τοῦ μὲν ἄρρενος δραχμὰς εἴκοσι, τοῦ δὲ θήλεος δώδεκα, τῶν δ' ὑπὲρ ἑξήκοντα ἔτη βεβιωκόντων πρεσβυτῶν μὲν δραχμὰς ἑξήκοντα, πρεσβυ-34 τίδων δὲ τεσσαράκοντα. τὰ δ' ἴσα καὶ ἐπ' ἄρρένων καθ' ἡλικίαν ἐκάστην καὶ ἐπὶ θηλειῶν ὁμοίως διατάξατο, τριῶν ἔνεκα τῶν ἀναγκαιοτάτων· ἐνὸς μὲν ὅτι ἴσον ἐστὶ καὶ ὅμοιον τὸ ἀξίωμα τῆς εὐχῆς, εἴαν τε ὑπὸ μεγάλου τινὸς εἴαν τε καὶ ὑπ' εὐτελοῦς γίνηται· δευτέρου δ' ὅτι τοὺς εὐξαμένους ἀρμόττον οὐκ ἦν ταῖς τῶν ἀνδραπόδων ὑποβάλλεσθαι τύχαις —ἐκεῖνα γὰρ πρὸς τὰς τῶν σωμάτων εὐεξίας καὶ εὐμορφίας τιμᾶται ἢ τούναντίον ἐπευωνίζεται—. τρίτου δ' ὃ καὶ ἀναγκαιοτάτον, ὅτι παρὰ μὲν ἡμῖν ἀνισότης, ἰσότης δὲ παρὰ θεῷ τίμιον.
- 35 IX. Ταῦτα μὲν ἐπ' ἀνθρώπων, ἐπὶ δὲ κτηνῶν τάδε νομοθετεῖται· εἴαν τις ἀφορίσῃ κτήνος, εἰ μὲν εἷη καθαρὸν ἔκ τινος γένους τῶν τριῶν, ἅπερ εἰς θυσίαν ἀπενεμήθη, βοῦς ἢ πρόβατον ἢ αἶξ, ἐκεῖνο καταθυέτω μὴ ὑπαλλαττόμενος μήτε χεῖρον κρείτ-τονος μῆτ' ἄμεινον χείρονος· οὐ γὰρ πολυσαρκία καὶ

---

<sup>a</sup> E.V. "50 shekels," LXX "50 didrachma," that is, properly speaking, 100 drachmas, but Philo follows the common valuation by which the didrachmon was held to be worth half a shekel. Cf. Matt. xvii. 24 (where the R.V. translates διδραχμον by "half-shekel"), of the temple-tax based on Ex.

THE SPECIAL LAWS, II. 32-35

equally, the sole distinctions made being between men and women and between children and adults. It ordained that from 20 years to 60 a man should be 33 valued at 200<sup>a</sup> drachmas of pure silver coinage and a woman at 120 ; from 5 to 20 years, a male at 80 and a woman at 40 drachmas ; from infancy to 5 years, a male at 20 and a female at 12 drachmas, while in the case of old persons who have lived beyond 60, the men are valued at 60 drachmas and the women at 40. The order that all males and all females should be 34 assessed equally<sup>b</sup> at every age was made for three most cogent reasons. First, because the worth of one person's vow is equal and similar to that of another, whether it is made by a person of great importance or one of mean estate ; secondly, because it was not seemly that the votaries should be subject to the vicissitudes of slaves who are valued at a high price or on the other hand are rated low accordingly as they have or have not a fine condition of body and comeliness ; thirdly, and this is the most convincing of all, that in the sight of men inequality, in the sight of God equality, is held in honour.

IX. These are the regulations laid down by the law 35 in the case of human beings.<sup>c</sup> For livestock we have the following. If a man sets apart a beast from his stock, if it is a clean specimen of one of the three kinds which are allowed for sacrifice, an ox or sheep or goat, he must sacrifice that particular animal without substituting either a better for a worse or a worse for a better. For God does not delight in the xxx. 13. So too Josephus, Ant. iii. 195, says that the shekel is worth 4 Attic drachmas. The same transvaluation is followed throughout this section.

<sup>b</sup> i.e. irrespective of the other considerations, beauty and stature, mentioned above.

<sup>c</sup> Lev. xxvii. 9-13.

PHILO

- πίοτητι ζῶων χαίρει ὁ θεός, ἀλλ' ἀνυπαιτίῳ τοῦ εὐξάμενου διαθέσει· ἐὰν δὲ ὑπαλλάττηται, δύο ἀνθ' ἐνὸς καθιερούτω, τό τε ἀρχαῖον καὶ τὸ ἀντ' ἐκείνου.
- 36 ἐὰν δέ τις εὐξῆται τι τῶν μὴ καθαρῶν κτηνῶν, ἀγέτω πρὸς τὸν δοκιμώτατον τῶν ἱερέων· ὁ δὲ τιμάσθω μὴ ὑπερβάλλων τὴν ἀξίαν, προσεπιτιθείς τῆς τιμῆς καὶ τὸ πέμπτον, ἴν', εἰ δέοι καθαρὸν ἀντι τούτου ζῶον ἱεουργεῖν, μηδὲν ὑστερίζοι τῆς ἀξίας τιμῆς, καὶ ἄλλως ὑπὲρ τοῦ δυσωπῆσαι τὸν εὐξάμενον, ὅτι τὴν εὐχὴν ἐποίησατο οὐ συλλογισμῶ, τὸ μὴ καθαρὸν ζῶον ὡς γ' οἶμαι τότε νομίσας εἶναι καθαρὸν πλάνῳ διανοίας, κεκρατημένος ὑπὸ πάθους.
- 37 οἰκία δ' εἰ γένοιτο ἀνάθημα, πάλιν ἐχέτω τιμητὴν ἱερέα· οἱ δ' ὠνούμενοι μὴ τὰ ἴσα κατατιθέτωσαν, ἀλλ' εἰ μὲν ὁ εὐξάμενος ἀνακομίζεσθαι προέλοιτο, ἐπιδαιφιλευέσθω τὸ πέμπτον, κολάζων τὴν εὐ-χέρειαν καὶ ἐπιθυμίαν, διττὸν κακόν, ἐν οἷς μὲν
- [277] ἠὔχετο τὴν εὐχέρειαν, | ἐν οἷς δ' ἐφίεται ὦν πρότερον ἐξέστη τὴν ἐπιθυμίαν, εἰ δ' ἕτερος, μηδὲν
- 38 πλέον τῆς ἀξίας κατατιθέτω. ὁ δ' εὐξάμενος μὴ μακροὺς ἐμποιεῖτω χρόνους πρὸς τὴν ὦν ἠὔξατο τελείωσιν· ἄτοπον γὰρ τὰς μὲν πρὸς ἀνθρώπους

---

<sup>a</sup> In Leviticus simply "the priest."

<sup>b</sup> The meaning of the rule seems to be that if the animal cannot be lawfully dedicated, its owner may sell it for the price fixed by the priest, and give the money, but if he redeems it he must pay the extra fifth. The question of providing a clean animal in its stead does not appear to be considered.

<sup>c</sup> Lit. "mastered by passion." But it is strange to find a mistake or delusion of this kind called a πάθος, though perhaps it falls in with the Stoic theory that the passions are κρίσεις. Cf. index in S. V. F. to κρίσις, and note on Leg. All. ii. 6.

THE SPECIAL LAWS, II. 35-38

fleshiness or fatness of animals, but in the blameless intention of the votary. But if he does make any exchange, he must consecrate two instead of one, both the original and its substitute. If he has vowed any <sup>36</sup> of his unclean cattle, he must bring it to the most highly esteemed of the priests,<sup>a</sup> who must assess it not exceeding its proper value and then add a fifth part of that value, so that if a clean animal has to be provided for the sacrifice instead of this one, what is provided may not fall short of the proper value.<sup>b</sup> Further, the intention is to discomfit the votary for having made a vow without reflection under the impression that the impure animal was on this occasion pure, a mistake presumably due to some mental aberration which powerfully affected him.<sup>c</sup> If he <sup>37</sup> dedicates his house, again he should take a priest as assessor, but the sums to be disbursed by the purchasers vary. <sup>d</sup> If the votary determines to redeem the house, he must spend more freely and add a fifth as a punishment for two bad things, thoughtlessness and lust of possession, the former shown in the matter of his vow, the latter in his desire to regain what he had surrendered. If the purchaser is other than the original owner, he should not pay more than the proper value. The votary must not interpose long <sup>38</sup> delay in accomplishing his vow.<sup>e</sup> It would be a strange inconsistency if while in our dealings with <sup>a</sup> Lev. xxvii. 14, 15. Philo omits the regulations about land which follow in vv. 16-25.

<sup>e</sup> Deut. xxiii. 21, "If thou shalt vow a vow to the Lord thy God thou shalt not delay (χρονιείς) to pay it." The meaning of what follows seems to be that we often anticipate our payments to men, because we know they need it. The fact that God does not need them should not make us treat God with less respect than we shew to men.

PHILO

ὁμολογίας ἐπιτέμνειν πειρᾶσθαι, τὰς δὲ πρὸς θεὸν τὸν ἀνεπιδεᾶ καὶ οὐδενὸς χρεῖον ἐκπροθέσμους ἀποφαίνειν, μελλήσει καὶ βραδυτῆτι διελέγχοντας αὐτοὺς ἐπὶ τῷ μεγίστῳ τῶν ἀδικημάτων, ὀλιγωρία τῇ πρὸς αὐτόν, οὗ τὴν θεραπείαν ἀρχὴν καὶ τέλος εὐδαιμονίας εἶναι νομιστέον. ὄρκων μὲν δὴ πέρι καὶ εὐχῶν ἄλις.

- 39 X. <sup>1</sup>Ἐξῆς ἐστὶ κεφάλαιον τὸ περὶ τῆς ἱερᾶς ἐβδόμης, ᾧ μυρία καὶ ἀναγκαῖα ἐμφέρεται, τὰ εἶδη τῶν ἑορτῶν, αἱ τῶν φύσει μὲν ἐλευθέρων διὰ δὲ καιροῦς ἀβουλήτους θητευόντων καθ' ἑβδομον ἐνιαυτὸν ἀφέσεις, αἱ πρὸς χρεώστας τῶν συμβαλλόντων φιλοφροσύνη τὰ δάνεια ἐβδόμῳ ἔτει τοῖς ὁμοφύλοις χαριζομένων, αἱ ἀνάπαυλαι τῆς βαθυγείου πεδιάδος τε καὶ ὄρεινῆς, αἱ γίνονται παρ' ἐξαετίαν, τὰ περὶ τοῦ πεντηκοστοῦ ἔτους νομοθετηθέντα· ὧν καὶ ἡ ἄνευ κόπου ψιλῆ διήγησις ἱκανή τοὺς μὲν εὐφυεῖς τελειῶσαι πρὸς ἀρετὴν, τοὺς δ' ἀφηνιαστὰς καὶ σκληροὺς τὸ ἦθος εὐπειθεστέροους
- 40 ἀπεργάσασθαι. τὰ μὲν οὖν περὶ τῆς ἐν ἀριθμοῖς ἐβδόμης<sup>2</sup> εἴρηται διὰ μακροτέρων πρότερον, ἣν τε ἔχει φύσιν ἐν δεκάδι καὶ ἣν συγγένειαν
- [278] πρὸς τε αὐτὴν δεκάδα καὶ πρὸς τετράδα, | τὴν

<sup>1</sup> At this point the mss. insert the title Περὶ ἐβδόμης.

<sup>2</sup> Mangey ἐβδομαδός.

---

<sup>a</sup> Here begins the fourth commandment. A fresh numeration of the chapters in Cohn. <sup>b</sup> De Op. 90-127.

<sup>c</sup> Or "within the series of the first ten numbers." For this see De Op. 95-100. The properties "outside the decad" men we try to antedate fulfilment of our promises, in dealing with God, Who lacks and needs nothing, we should extend it beyond the appointed time. By such slowness and procrastination we convict ourselves of the greatest of iniquities, contempt of Him whose service we must hold to be the beginning and consummation of happiness. This is enough on this subject of oaths and vows.

THE SPECIAL LAWS, II. 38-40

X. <sup>a</sup>The next head is concerned with the sacred 39 seventh day. Under this head are included a great number of matters of vital importance, the different kinds of feasts; the release in the seventh year of persons who were naturally free but through times of adversity are in servitude; the charity shown by creditors to debtors in cancelling loans to their fellow-nationals, this also in the seventh year; the rest allowed both in the lowlands and the uplands to the fertile soil at intervals of six years; and the laws laid down with respect to the fiftieth year. The mere recital of all these is enough to make the naturally gifted perfect in virtue without any effort on their part and to produce some degree of obedience in the rebellious and hard-natured. Now the 40 part played by seven among the numbers has been described at length in an earlier place,<sup>b</sup> where we have discussed the properties which it possesses within the decad,<sup>c</sup> and its close connexion with ten itself<sup>d</sup> and with four, which is the origin and source of (ibid. 91) are explained as those of the seventh term in a series, as in the geometrical progression mentioned here just below.

<sup>a</sup> I do not see anything in De Op. which corresponds to this. The "kinship" of 7 to 4 is that  $4+3=7$  (ibid. 96), and that 4 is the source of 10, because  $1+2+3+4=10$ , is often brought out, e.g. ibid. 47:

PHILO

δεκάδος ἀρχήν τε καὶ πηγῆν, καὶ ὡς συντεθεῖσα μὲν ἀπὸ μονάδος ἐξῆς γεννᾷ τὸν ὀκτώ καὶ εἴκοσι τέλειον ἀριθμὸν τοῖς αὐτοῦ μέρεσιν ἰσούμενον εἰς δ' ἀναλογίαν ἀχθεῖσα κύβον ὁμοῦ καὶ τετράγωνον ἀποτελεῖ, καὶ ὡς μυρία ἄλλα κάλλη θεωρημάτων ἐξ αὐτῆς ἐπιδείκνυται, περὶ ὧν οὐ καιρὸς μακρηγορεῖν. ἕκαστον δὲ τῶν προκειμένων καὶ ἐμφερομένων εἰδῶν ἐπισκεπτέον, ἀπὸ τοῦ πρώτου τὴν ἀρχὴν ποιησαμένου. ἦν δὲ πρῶτον τὸ περὶ ἑορτῶν.

- 41 XI. <sup>1</sup>Εἰσὶ τοίνυν ἀριθμῶ δέκα ἑορταί, ἃς ἀναγράφει ὁ νόμος· πρώτη μὲν, ἦν ἀκούσας θαυμάσαι τις ἂν ἴσως, αὕτη δ' ἐστὶν ἡμέρα πᾶσα· δευτέρα δὲ ἡ δι' ἐξ ἡμερῶν ἐβδόμη, σάββατον αὐτὴν Ἑβραῖοι πατρίῳ γλώττῃ καλοῦσι· τρίτη δ' ἡ μετὰ σύνοδον τὴν κατὰ σελήνην νέαν νομηνία· τετάρτη δ' ἡ τῶν διαβατηρίων, ἣ καλεῖται Πάσχα· πέμπτη δ' ἡ τῶν ἀσταχύων ἀπαρχή, τὸ ἱερὸν δράγμα· ἕκτη δ' ἄζυμα· μεθ' ἣν ἡ τῶν ἐβδομάδων ὄντως ἐβδόμη· ὀγδόη δὲ ἱερομηνία· ἐνάτη δὲ νηστεία· δεκάτη δὲ ἡ τῶν σκηνῶν, ἣτις ἐστὶ τῶν ἐτησίων ἑορτῶν συμπέρασμα, εἰς τέλειον ἀριθμὸν δεκάδα τελευτῶσα. ἀρκτέον δὲ ἀπὸ τῆς πρώτης.
- 42 XII. Ἐπασαν ἡμέραν ἑορτὴν ἀναγράφει ὁ νόμος

<sup>1</sup> Here a title varying in the mss. is inserted, printed by Cohn as Περὶ τῶν δέκα ἑορτῶν.

THE SPECIAL LAWS, II. 40-42

ten. Also we have shewn how a sevenfold addition of successive numbers beginning with unity produces twenty-eight,<sup>a</sup> a perfect number, equal to the sum of its factors; again, how when brought into a geometrical progression, it produces simultaneously a square and a cube,<sup>b</sup> besides the numberless other beautiful results which the study of it reveals. On these numerical points we must not linger at the present juncture, but we must examine each specific subject which lies before us included under the general head, beginning with the first; and the first subject, as we saw, is the feasts.

XI. There are in all ten feasts which are recorded <sup>41</sup> in the law. The first, the mention of which may perhaps cause some surprise, is the feast of every day. The second is that held on the seventh day with six days between, called by the Hebrews in their native tongue Sabbath. The third is the new moon which follows the conjunction of the moon with the sun. The fourth is the "Crossing" festival called Pascha. The fifth is the offering of the first ears, the sacred Sheaf. The sixth is the Unleavened Bread. Then comes what is emphatically <sup>c</sup> a seventh, being the feast of Sevens or Weeks. Eighth is the Sacred-month-day, ninth is the Fast, tenth the feast of Tabernacles which concludes the yearly festivals and thus ends up with a perfect number ten. We must begin with the first of these.

XII. When the law records that every day is a <sup>42</sup>

<sup>a</sup> i.e.  $1+2 \dots +7=28$ , the factors of which 1, 2, 4, 7, 14 also=28. Cf. De Op. 101.

<sup>b</sup> Cf. ibid. 92, 93, where  $64=4^3$  and  $8^2$ , and  $729=27^2$  and  $9^3$  are given as examples.

<sup>c</sup> Or "truly," i.e. it not only comes seventh in the list, but takes its name from the same number.

PHILO

πρὸς τὸν ἀνεπίληπτον βίον ἀρμοζόμενος ὁσίων<sup>1</sup> ἀνθρώπων ἐπομένων τῇ φύσει καὶ τοῖς ταύτης διατάγμασι. καὶ εἴ γε μὴ παρενημέρησαν αἱ κακίαι καταδυναστεύσασαι τοὺς περὶ τῶν συμφερόντων λογισμοὺς οὓς τῆς ἐκάστων ψυχῆς ἐξώκισαν, ἀλλ' ἔμειναν αἱ τῶν ἀρετῶν δυνάμεις εἰς ἅπαν ἀήττητοι, μία ἂν ἦν ὁ ἀπὸ γενέσεως ἄχρι τελευτῆς χρόνος ἀδιάστατος ἑορτῇ καὶ αἱ τε οἰκίαι καὶ αἱ πόλεις ἐν 43 εὐδίᾳ ἀγούσαι πραγμάτων. νυνὶ δ' αἱ πλεονεξίαι καὶ ἀντεπιθέσεις, ὡς ἄνδρες ὁμοῦ καὶ γυναῖκες μη-χανῶνται κατὰ τε αὐτῶν καὶ κατ' ἀλλήλων, τὸ συνεχὲς τῆς ἰλαρᾶς διέκοψαν εὐθυμίας. ἐμφανῆς 44 δὲ τοῦ λεγομένου πίστις. ὅσοι γὰρ ἢ παρ' Ἑλ-[279] λησιν | ἢ παρὰ βαρβάροις ἀσκηταὶ σοφίας εἰσὶν ἀνεπιλήπτως καὶ ἀνυπαιτίως ζῶντες, μήτε ἀδικεῖσθαι μήτε ἀνταδικεῖν αἰρούμενοι, τὰς τῶν φιλοπραγμόνων ὁμιλίας ἐκτρέπονται<sup>2</sup> καὶ τὰ χωρία, ἐν οἷς ποιοῦνται τὰς διατριβάς, προβέβληνται, δικα-στήρια καὶ βουλευτήρια καὶ ἀγορὰς καὶ ἐκκλησίας καὶ συνόλως ὅπου τις τῶν εἰκαιοτέρων ἀνθρώπων 45 θίασος ἢ σύλλογος, οἷα βίον ἀπόλεμον καὶ εἰρηναῖον ἐξηλωκότες, θεωροὶ τῆς φύσεως καὶ τῶν ἐν αὐτῇ πάντων ἄριστοι, γῆν καὶ θάλατταν καὶ ἀέρα καὶ

<sup>1</sup> MSS. ὡς τῶν, which does not seem to me as impossible as it does to Cohn. See note b.

<sup>2</sup> MSS. ἐκτρέπομενοι.

---

<sup>a</sup> The idea of the feast of every day comes from Num. xxviii, xxix. In xxviii. 2 we have (LXX) "observe to offer me in my feasts, my gifts" etc. followed by the list of the various offerings. This list begins with the daily sacrifices and continues in the same order as in this book, with the sole exception that the Sheaf is not mentioned. Philo utilizes festival,<sup>a</sup> it accommodates itself to the blameless life of righteous men <sup>b</sup> who follow nature and her ordinances. And if only the vices had not conquered and dominated the thoughts in us which seek the truly profitable and dislodged them from each soul—if instead the forces of the virtues had remained unvanquished throughout, the time from birth to death would be one continuous feast, and houses and cities dwelling in security and leisure <sup>c</sup> would have been full of all good things with everything tranquil around them. As it is, the overreaching and the assaults <sup>43</sup> which men and women alike contrive against themselves and each other have cleft a breach in the continuous line of this cheerful gaiety. Here is a clear proof of what I am saying. All who practise wisdom, <sup>44</sup> either in Grecian or barbarian lands, and live a blameless and irreproachable life, choosing neither to inflict nor retaliate injustice, avoid the gathering of busybodies and abjure the scenes which they haunt, such as law-courts, council-chambers, markets, congregations and in general any gathering or assemblage of careless men. Their own aspirations are for a life <sup>45</sup> of peace, free from warring. They are the closest observers of nature and all that it contains; earth, sea, air and heaven and the various forms of being the hint suggested by Numbers to enforce the doctrine, which he bases elsewhere (De Sac. 111) on the same text that only the wise man can keep a feast. It is no doubt a consideration with him that the inclusion serves to make the perfect number ten, but he could have obtained this otherwise by including the "Basket," see §§ 215 f.

<sup>b</sup> If the mss. ὡς τῶν is retained, the meaning will be "the law assumes that men follow nature" etc. (which they seldom do). Cf. §§ 51, 52.

<sup>c</sup> Or perhaps "peace" (cessation of hostilities), ἐκεχειρία being used in its more technical sense.

PHILO

οὐρανὸν καὶ τὰς ἐν αὐτοῖς φύσεις διερευνώμενοι, σελήνη καὶ ἡλίω καὶ τῇ χορείᾳ τῶν ἄλλων ἀστέρων πλανήτων τε καὶ ἀπλανῶν ταῖς διανοαῖς συμπεριπολοῦντες, τὰ μὲν σώματα κάτω πρὸς χέρσον ἰδρυμένοι, τὰς δὲ ψυχὰς ὑποπτέρους κατασκευάζοντες, ὅπως αἰθεροβατοῦντες τὰς ἐκεῖ δυνάμεις περιαθρῶσιν, οἷα χρή τοὺς<sup>1</sup> τῷ ὄντι κοσμοπολίτας γενομένους, οἳ τὸν μὲν κόσμον ἐνόμισαν εἶναι πόλιν, πολίτας δὲ τοὺς σοφίας ὁμιλητάς, ἀρετῆς ἐγγραφούσης, ἣ πεπίστευσαι τὸ κοινὸν πολίτευμα πρυτανεύειν. XIII. γέμοντες οὖν καλοκάγαθίας καὶ τῶν περὶ σῶμα κακῶν καὶ τῶν ἐκτὸς ἀλογεῖν ἐθιζόμενοι καὶ ἐξαδιαφορεῖν τὰ ἀδιάφορα μελετῶντες καὶ κατὰ τῶν ἡδονῶν καὶ ἐπιθυμιῶν ἀλειφόμενοι καὶ συνόλως ἐπάνω τῶν παθῶν ἴστασθαι σπουδάζοντες αἰεὶ καὶ τὸν ἐπιτειχισμὸν αὐτῶν πάσῃ δυνάμει καθαιρεῖν παιδευόμενοι καὶ ταῖς τῆς τύχης μὴ καμπτόμενοι προσβολαῖς διὰ τὸ προεκκλελογίσθαι τὰς ἐπιθέσεις αὐτῆς—ἐπικουφίζει γὰρ καὶ τὰ βαρυτάτα τῶν ἀβουλήτων ἢ πρόληψις, καινὸν οὐδὲν ἔτι τῆς διανοίας τῶν συμβαινόντων ὑπολαμβάνουσης, ἀλλ' ὡς ἐπὶ παλαιοῖς καὶ ἐώλοις ἀμαυρὰν τὴν ἀντίληψιν ποιουμένης—, εἰκότως ἐνευφραϊνόμενοι ταῖς ἀρεταῖς ἅπαντά γε τὸν βίον ἑορτὴν ἄγουσιν.

47 οὗτοι μὲν οὖν ὀλίγος εἰσὶν ἀριθμὸς, ἐμπύρευμα κατὰ πόλεις ὑποτυφόμενον<sup>2</sup> σοφίας, ἔνεκα τοῦ μὴ κατὰ τὸ παντελὲς σβεσθεῖσαν ἀρετὴν ἐκ τοῦ γένους

48 ἡμῶν ἀφανισθῆναι. εἰ δὲ τοῖς ὀλίγοις συνεφρόνησαν οἱ πανταχοῦ καὶ ἐγένοντο, οἷους βούλεται εἶναι ἣ

<sup>1</sup> MSS. χρηστοὺς

<sup>2</sup> MSS. ὑποτυφόμενοι.

THE SPECIAL LAWS, II. 45-48

which inhabit them are food for their research, as in mind and thought they share the ranging of the moon and sun and the ordered march of the other stars fixed and planetary. While their bodies are firmly planted on the land they provide their souls with wings, so that they may traverse the upper air and gain full contemplation of the powers which dwell there, as behoves true "cosmopolitans" who have recognized the world to be a city having for its citizens the associates of wisdom, registered as such by virtue to whom is entrusted the headship of the universal commonwealth. XIII. Such men filled with high 46 worthiness, inured to disregard ills of the body or of external things, schooled to hold things indifferent as indeed indifferent,<sup>a</sup> armed against the pleasures and lusts, ever eager to take their stand superior to the passions in general, trained to use every effort to overthrow the formidable menace which those passions have built up against them, never swerving under the blows of fortune because they have calculated beforehand the force of its assaults, since the heaviest adversities are lightened by anticipation,<sup>b</sup> when the mind ceases to find anything strange in the event and apprehends it but dully as it might some stale and familiar story—such men, we say, in the delight of their virtues, naturally make their whole life a feast. These are indeed but a small number 47 left in their cities like an ember of wisdom to smoulder, that virtue may not be altogether extinguished and lost to our race. But if only everywhere men had 48 thought and felt as these few, and become what

<sup>a</sup> Cf. Quis Rerum 253, where ἐξαδιαφόρησις τῶν ἀδιαφόρων is coupled with other forms of mental and spiritual exercise, and see note.

<sup>b</sup> See App. p. 624.

PHILO

φύσις, ἀνεπίληπτοι καὶ ἀνυπαίτιοι πάντες, ἐρασταὶ φρονήσεως, χαίροντες τῷ καλῷ δι' αὐτὸ τὸ καλὸν καὶ τοῦτο μόνον ἀγαθὸν ἡγούμενοι, τὰ δ' ἄλλα πάντα ὑπήκοα καὶ δοῦλα ὡς ἂν ἄρχοντες, εὐδαιμονίας ἂν αἱ πόλεις ἐγένοντο μεσταί, τῶν μὲν ὅσα λύπης αἷτια καὶ φόβων ἀμέτοχοι, πλήρεις δὲ τῶν ἀπεργαζομένων χαρὰς καὶ εὐπαθείας, ὡς μηδένα [280] καιρὸν ἐλλείπειν ἰλαροῦ | βίου, πάντα δὲ τὸν τοῦ 49 ἐνιαυτοῦ κύκλον εἶναι ἑορτῆν. XIV. διὸ παρ' ἀληθείᾳ δικαζούσῃ τῶν φαύλων οὐδεὶς ἀλλ' οὐδὲ τὸν βραχύτατον χρόνον ἑορτάζει, συνειδήσει τῶν ἀδικημάτων ἀγχόμενος καὶ τῇ ψυχῇ κατηφῶν, εἰ καὶ τῷ προσώπῳ μειδιᾷν καθυποκρίνεται. ποῦ γὰρ ἔχει καιρὸν ἀψευδοῦς εὐφροσύνης κακοβουλό-τατος ὢν καὶ συζῶν ἀφροσύνη καὶ περὶ πάντα ἀκαιρευόμενος, γλῶτταν, γαστέρα, τὰ γεννητικά; 50 δι' ἧς μὲν γὰρ ἐκλαλεῖ τὰ ἀπόρρητα καὶ ἡσυχαστέα, τὴν δὲ ἀκράτου πολλοῦ καὶ ἐδεσμάτων ἀμέτρων ἀναπίμπλησιν ὑπὸ λαιμαργίας, τοῖς δὲ καταχρήται πρὸς ἐκνομωτάτους οἴστρους καὶ μίξεις ἀθέσμους, οὐ μόνον ἀλλοτρίοις γάμοις ἐπιμεμηνῶς, ἀλλὰ καὶ παιδεραστῶν καὶ βιαζόμενος τὸν ἄρρενα τῆς φύσεως χαρακτῆρα παρακόπτειν καὶ μεταβάλ-λειν εἰς γυναικόμορφον ἰδέαν ἔνεκα τοῦ μεμιασμένῳ 51 καὶ ἐπαράτῳ πάθει χαρίσασθαι. δι' ἣν αἰτίαν ὁ πάντα μέγας Μωυσῆς τὰς ὑπερβολὰς τοῦ περὶ τὴν ὄντως ἑορτῆν κάλλους ἰδὼν τελειοτέραν ἢ κατ' ἀνθρωπίνην φύσιν ὑπέλαβεν εἶναι καὶ ἀνέθηκεν αὐτὴν θεῷ φήσας κατὰ λέξιν οὕτως· “ ἑορταὶ κυ-338

THE SPECIAL LAWS, II. 48-52

nature intended them to be, all of them blameless and guiltless and lovers of sound sense, rejoicing in moral excellence just because it is what it is and counting it the only true good and all the other goods but slaves and vassals, subject to their authority, the cities would have been brimful of happiness, utterly free from all that causes grief and fears, and packed with what produces joys and states of well-being, so that each season as it comes would give full opportunity for cheerful living and the whole cycle of the year would be a feast.

XIV. And there-<sup>49</sup> fore in the judgement of truth none of the wicked keeps a feast, even for the shortest time, tormented as he is by consciousness of wrongdoing and depressed in soul, even though he simulates a smile with his face. For where does the wicked man find a season for true rejoicing? He whose every plan is for evil, whose life-mate is folly, with whom everything, tongue, belly and organs of generation, is against what is seasonable. For with the first he blurts out<sup>50</sup> matters of secrecy which call for silence, while in his greed he fills the second with viands unlimited and strong drink in great quantities, and as for the third, he misuses them for abominable lusts and forms of intercourse forbidden by all laws. He not only attacks in his fury the marriage-beds of others, but even plays the pederast and forces the male type of nature to debase and convert itself into the feminine form, just to indulge a polluted and accursed passion. For this reason Moses, great here as ever, seeing how<sup>51</sup> vast was the beauty which belonged to the true feast, held that its perfection was beyond the capacity of human nature to realize, and consecrated it to God with these very words, "The Lord's feasts." For<sup>52</sup>

- 52 ρίου." τὸ γὰρ ἐπίλυπον καὶ περιδεῆς τοῦ ἡμετέρου γένους λογιζόμενος καὶ ὡς ἔστι μυρίων κακῶν μεστόν, ἃ γεννῶσι μὲν αἱ ψυχῆς πλεονεξίαι, γεννῶσι δὲ καὶ αἱ σώματος κῆρες, προσβάλλουσι δὲ αἱ τῆς τύχης<sup>1</sup> ἀνωμαλῖαι καὶ τῶν συνόντων αἱ ἀντεπιθέσεις μυρία κακὰ δρώντων τε καὶ πασχόντων, εἰκότως ἐθαύμαζεν, εἰ δύναται τις ἐν τοσοῦτῳ πελάγει πραγμάτων ἔκουσίων τε καὶ ἀκουσίων φερόμενος καὶ μηδέποτ' ἠρεμῆσαι οἶός τε ὢν μηδ' ἀκινδύνῳ βίῳ μετ' ἀσφαλείας ἐνορμίσασθαι τὴν μὴ λεγομένην ἀλλὰ πρὸς ἀλήθειαν οὔσαν ὄντως ἄγειν ἐορτήν, ἐνευφραϊνόμενος καὶ ἐντρυφῶν θεωρία τε τοῦ κόσμου καὶ τῶν ἐν αὐτῷ καὶ ἀκολουθία φύσεως καὶ ἀρμονία πρὸς ἔργα λόγων καὶ πρὸς λόγους 53 ἔργων. ὅθεν ἀναγκαίως εἶπε τὰς ἐορτὰς εἶναι μόνου θεοῦ· μόνος γὰρ εὐδαίμων καὶ μακάριος, παντὸς μὲν ἀμέτοχος κακοῦ, πλήρης δ' ἀγαθῶν τελείων, μᾶλλον δ', εἰ χρή τάληθές εἰπεῖν, αὐτὸς ὢν τὸ ἀγαθόν, ὃς οὐρανῷ καὶ γῆ τὰ κατὰ μέρος 54 ὤμβρησεν ἀγαθά. παρὸ καὶ τῶν πάλαι τις ἀρετῶσα διάνοια, γαληνιασάντων αὐτῇ τῶν παθῶν, ἐνεμειδίασε χαρᾶς ἐγκύμων καὶ ὑπόπλεως γενομένη· καὶ λογισαμένη παρ' αὐτῇ, μὴ ποτ' ἄρα τὸ μὲν χαίρειν ἰδίον ἔστι μόνου θεοῦ, αὐτὴ δὲ διαμαρτάνει σφετεριζομένη τὰς ὑπὲρ ἀνθρωπον εὐ-[281] παθείας, εὐλαβεῖται τε καὶ τὸν ψυχικὸν | γέλωτα

<sup>1</sup> MSS. ψυχῆς.

<sup>a</sup> Lit. "those who are together"; rather than as Heinemann "our fellowmen."

<sup>b</sup> See Gen. xviii. 11-15. This interpretation of Sarah's laughter and her denial of it, and the answer to that denial
"but thou didst laugh," has already been given in De Abr.
206, where see note. "Her passions now calmed within her"

THE SPECIAL LAWS, II. 52-54

when he considered the sorrowful and terror-stricken condition of our race, how charged it is with numberless evils generated by the greedy desires of the soul and also by the infirmities of the body, increased by the vicissitudes of fortune and the mutual onslaughts of neighbours against neighbours<sup>a</sup> who inflict and suffer countless wrongs, he could not but wonder that anyone, tossed about on so vast a sea of events, whether of his own intending or not, and unable to find tranquility or the secure anchorage of a life kept safe from danger, could really hold a feast, not in the sense in which the word is commonly used, but in the true sense ; and the true sense is, to find delight and festivity in the contemplation of the world and its contents and in following nature and in bringing words into harmony with deeds and deeds with words. And therefore it was 53 a necessary pronouncement that the feasts belonged to God alone, for God alone is happy and blessed, exempt from all evil, filled with perfect forms of good, or rather, if the real truth be told, Himself the good, Who showers the particular goods on heaven and earth.

And so it was that in the days of old 54 a certain mind of rich intelligence, her passions now calmed within her, smiled because joy lay within her and filled her womb.<sup>b</sup> And when, as she considered the matter, it seemed to her that joy might well be the peculiar property of God alone, and that she herself was sinning in taking for her own conditions of well-being above human capacity, she was afraid, and denied the laughter of her soul is the interpretation often (e.g. De Fuga 128) given by Philo of v. 11, "it ceased to be with Sarah after the manner of women."

PHILO

- 55 ἀρνείται μέχρι τοῦ παρηγορηθῆναι· τὸ γὰρ δέος αὐτῆς ἐπικουφίζει ὁ ἴλεως θεὸς χρησμῶ κελεύσας ὁμολογεῖν, ὅτι ἐγέλασεν, ἢν' ἡμᾶς ἀναδιδάξῃ, ὅτι οὐ κατὰ τὸ παντελὲς ἐστέρηται τὸ γενητὸν χαρᾶς, ἀλλ' ἔστιν ἢ μὲν ἀμιγῆς καὶ ἀκραιφνεστάτη, μηδὲν τῶν τῆς ἐναντίας ἐπίδεχομένη φύσεως, ἐξαιρέτος θεοῦ, ἢ δ' ἀπ' ἐκείνης ρυεῖσα μικτή, βραχέσιν ἀνακεκραμένη λυπηροῖς, ἀνδρὸς ἤδη σοφοῦ δωρεὰν μεγίστην λαβόντος τὴν τοιαύτην μίξιν, ἐν ἣ πλειῶν τὰ ἡδέα τῶν ἀηδῶν ἀνακέκρται. ταῦτα μὲν ἐπὶ τοσοῦτον.
